Section 4 (1) itself recognises that a person may be a member of the family although he may not be owning a share in the dwelling house. It confers the right to apply to buy the share transferred on "any member of the family being a share-holder"; the additional qualification of being a share-holder would not be necessary if the intendment of the section was that membership of the family was equivalent to co-ownership of the house. Nor is there anything in the section which disqualifies a member who, having previously alienated his share, has re-acquired it and is owning it at the time he makes his claim under S. 4. The qualification of the applicant has to be judged with reference to his position at the date of the application. A member of the family not himself having a share (e.g. the son of a co-sharer in a Dayabhag family, the father being alive up to the date of the application under S. 4) may for the first time purchase a share from another member of the family, or a share-holder member may sell his share to another member or even to a stranger and may re-purchase it from the vendee, but if he shows that he is a co-sharer member of the family at the date of his application he establishes his competence to make the application.

Hiralal Chakravarti and Rabindra Nath Bhattacharyya — for Appellant.

Apurba Dhan Mukherji and Dwijendra Nath Mukherjee — for Respondents.

P. N. Mitra J.— This is an appeal under Cl. 15, Letters Patent, from a judgment of Chakravartti J. It is on behalf of defendant 1 in a suit for partition of a dwelling house and certain other properties. Our learned brother in concurrence with the Courts below has rejected the appellant's prayer under S. 4, Partition Act, to buy up the plaintiff's share in the dwelling house, and it is the propriety of this decision that is in question before us in this appeal.

[2] The facts, which are not now in dispute, are these. One Fakir Ghose and his three brothers Dwarik, Tarini and Ambika held a raivati holding under a ganti tenure which was owned by one Kalidhan Debi, and their dwelling house stood on a portion of this holding. The ganti tenure was purchased by Fakir. He thereafter died leaving two sons Upen and Nabin as his heirs, who obtained by inheritance each an eight annas share of the ganti and a two annas share of the holding including the homestead. On 12th June 1920. Upen sold his undivided share in both the tenures and the holding including the homestead to one Troilakya who was a stranger to the family. After this sale, Upen left the homestead and Troilakya came to occupy the hut or huts in which Upen used to live. Thereafter, on 11th July 1921, Nabin, the other son of Fakir, sold to the plaintiff Akshoy Kumar Ghosh his undivided share of the tenure and the holding together with the homestead. On 3rd January 1923 Upen, however, repurchased the properties he had sold to Trailokya and came again to live in his old huts in the homestead.

[3] The plaintiff brought the present suit on 4th March 1940, for partition of the tenure and the holding including the dwelling house except certain khas lands which had previously been partitioned between the parties. Upen was then dead and his share had devolved on his sons defendant 1 and his brothers. They were joined as defendants, as also the heirs of the brothers of Fakir. In his written statement defendant 1 made a prayer under S. 4, Partition Act for buying up the plaintiff's share in the dwelling house. The learned Munsif refused it on two grounds. Firstly, he said the plaintiff Akshoy was an agnatic relation of the family and a neighbour and therefore not a stranger to the family, and as such the section could not be invoked against him. Secondly, he held that as Upen had sold away his share to a stranger, defendant 1 as the heir of Upen "cannot claim pre-emption at a subsequent period against the purchaser of another co-sharer's interest, viz. the plaintiff in the present case". On appeal by defendant 1, the lower appellate Court put this ground of rejection of the claim of defendant 1 in this way. It said that as Upen had sold away his share to a stranger, there was no joint family property at the date of the plaintiff's purchase, and re-purchase by Upen of his share subsequently did not convert the property again into joint family property. The lower appellate Court did not allude to the ground that the plaintiff was an agnatic relation of the defendants and therefore not a stranger, but assigned an additional reason of its own that as the co-sharers had separate buts of their own, there was no common dwelling house which could attract the operation of s. 4, Partition Act.

[4] Defendant 1 appealed to this Court. Chakravartti J. pronounced against both the special grounds relied on by the Courts below. Our learned brother held that the fact that the plaintiff was an agnatic relation of the defendants did not exclude the operation of S. 4 as against him, nor did the other fact that the co-sharers had separate buts of their own destroy the integrity of the dwelling house, as the sites of the huts and of the homestead as a whole were undivided property of the co-sharers. Our learned brother, however, elaborated what may be called the common ground relied on by the Courts below and proceeded to affirm their decision on a construction of S. 4, Partition Act, which negatived both the liability of the plaintiff to have any claim made against him and the competence of defendant 1 as the son of Upen to make any claim under it. The appellant has contended before us that properly construed the section is wide enough to embrace both him and the plaintiff within its ambit.

relevant provision, is in these terms:

"Where a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family has been transferred to a person who is not a member of such family and such transferee sues for partition, the Court shall, if any member of the family being a shareholder shall undertake to buy the share of such transferee make a valuation of such share in such manner as it thinks fit and direct the sale of such share to such shareholder, and may give all necessary and proper directions in that behalf."

vartti J. has observed as follows:

"They require that the sale must be of a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family and the offer to buy the share must be made by a member of that family who is himself a share-holder, when the purchaser of that share, not being a member of the family, brings a suit for partition. The right is not given to any other person, nor against the purchaser of a share of any other kind of property."

As Chakravartti J., has pointed out, the section requires that the purchase must have been of a share in a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family, and our learned brother's conclusion is that this requirement is not fulfilled in the present case, because as our learned brother puts it, when the plaintiff purchased the share of Nabin on 11th July 1921, after Upen's sale to Trailokya but before the re-purchase by him, the plaintiff purchased a share of a dwelling house, not belonging to an undivided family but belonging to an undivided family and another person, viz., Trailokya. In our learned brother's view, therefore, the plaintiff is not a person against whom a claim under S. 4 can be made.

[7] This view, it will be seen, makes the plaintiff immune from any claim being made against him not merely by defendant 1 but also by the other co sharer members of the family.

But our learned brother has observed :

"I am, however, prepared to hold, as was held in the Allahabad case of Masitullah v. Umrao, A. I. R. (16) 1929 AU. 414: (119 I. C. 523) and the Patna case of Sheodhar Prasad Singh v. Kishun Prasad Singh, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 4: (190 I. C. 117), that after a member of an undivided family has sold off his share in the family dwelling house, the remainder of the house can still be regarded as a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family, such family being constituted of the remaining members. This view of the section would make the sale by Nabin a sale of a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family, but it would still not warrant a claim by defendant 1, a son of Upen, to purchase the plaintiff's share. Under this view, the dwelling house of which a share was sold to the plaintiff would be the house minus Upen's share, and the undivided family to which the house belonged would be the family minus Upen and his heirs. Since a claim against the purchaser could be maintained only by 'any member of the family, being a share-holder' it could be maintained by a member of the residuary family owning the residue of the house, who had himself a share, but no claim can be maintained by defendant I who is not a member of that family and who has no share in the residue of the house which, in the present view, must be taken to be the dwelling house."

[8] This view of a dwelling house minus Upen's share belonging to a family minus Upen, therefore, leads to this result that while it confers a right on the remaining co-sharer members of the family to make a claim against the plaintiff and in that sense brings him within the terms of the section, it at the same time puts Upen and his heirs outside its ambit disqualifies them from making any application under it. This view, however, is incompatible with the position that the plaintiff purchased a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family and another person. The plaintiff is either a person who has purchased a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family, or he is not such a person. The plaintiff cannot, in our opinion, be once regarded as not being such a person for the purpose of shutting out the claim of defendant 1, and again regarded as being such a person for the purpose of admitting against him the claim of the other co-sharer members of the family.

[9] The facts in the two cases referred to by our learned brother were that in one of them the stranger purchaser of a share and in the other some members of the family had actually got his or their share partitioned off by metes and bounds from the rest of the house which was left undivided amongst the remaining cosharers. It could be truly said in those cases that after the partition the rest of the house constituted a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family. Those cases, in our opinion, do not lend any countenance to the fiction of a notional dwelling house from which a share not actually partitioned off is to be regarded as separated.

[10] This notion of a residuary dwelling house belonging to a residuary family, therefore, does not commend itself to us, and putting it aside, we have to consider whether the proposition laid down by our learned brother that the plaintiff is not the purchaser of a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family and is, therefore, not amenable to the jurisdiction under S. 4, is correct.

[11] The question turns upon what meaning is to be attributed to the expression "share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family." It may be pointed out that this expression was used in Para. 2 of S. 44, T. P. Act and seems to have been adopted from there into S. 4, Partition Act which takes up the law from where the former section leaves it. The expression, therefore, presumably has, or ought to have, the same meaning in the two enactments.

[12] As has been pointed out by Chakravartti J. the word "family" as used in this expression. has been held not to be limited to a body of persons who are descended from a common ancestor, but to include a group of persons, related in blood, who live in one house or under a common management, Khirode Chandra Ghoshal v. Sarada Prosad Mitter, 12 O. L. J. 525 : (7 I. C. 436). Our learned brother has also pointed out that "undivided family" has been held to mean simply a family not divided qua the dwelling house, in other words, a family which owns a dwelling house and has not divid. ed it. It does not mean Hindu joint family or even joint family. The members need not be joint in mess (Latifannessa Bibi v. Abdul Rah. man, 38 C. W. N. 46: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Cal. 202) and the cases cited therein). The essence of the matter, therefore, is that the house itself should! be undivided amongst the members of the family who are its owners. The emphasis is really on the undivided character of the house, and it is this attribute of the house which imparts to the family its character of an undivided family. For the members of the family may have partitioned all their other joint properties and may have separated in mess and worship, but they would still be an undivided family in relation to the dwelling house so long as they have not divided it amongst themselves.

[13] If in this state of things a member of the family transfers his share in the dwelling house to a stranger, the position that arises is that Para. 2 of S. 44, T. P. Act comes into operation and the transferee does not become entitled to joint possession or other common or part enjoy. ment of the house, although he would have the right to enforce a partition of his share. The object of this provision is to prevent the intrusion of strangers into the family residence which is allowed to be possessed and enjoyed by the members of the family alone in spite of the transfer of a share to a stranger. The factual position then is that it is still an undivided dwelling house, the possession and enjoyment of which are confined to the members of the family, the stranger transferee being debarred by law from exercising his right to joint possession which is one of the main incidents of co-ownership of property. Such a dwelling house can in our opinion still be looked upon as a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family, because the members of the family have not divided it amongst themselves and are in sole enjoyment and possession of it to the exclusion of the stranger transferee who has only a right to partition. And so long as the dwelling house has not been completely alienated to strangers as was the case in Vaman Vishnu v. Vasudeo Norbhat, 23 Bom. 73, successive transfers by other co-sharer members of the family do not alter the factual position in this respect, because the remaining member or members of the family have the right to hold exclusive possession to the exclusion of the stranger alienees. So long as that situation lasts, the dwelling house, in our opinion, continues to be a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family. The other view that as soon as a co sharer transfers his share to a stranger the dwelling house ceases to be a house belonging to an undivided family would lead to this result that as against a purchaser in the position of the present plaintiff the prohibition contained in Para. 2 of S. 44, T. P. Act against joint possession of the house by a stranger purchaser would be rendered nugatory, because he could claim that what he had purchased was not a share in a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family and that he did not, therefore, come within the mischief of the section at all.

If, then, for the purposes of S. 44, T. P. Act, the expression "share in a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family" has to be interpreted in the way we have construed it above, we do not think there would be any justification for placing a different interpretation upon the self-same expression when used in the piece of complementary legislation enacted in S. 4, Partition Act. As we have said before, S. 4, Partition Act, carries forward the law laid down in S. 44, T. P. Act, and after the latter section has protected the family dwelling house from the intrusion of strangers into it, the former steps in to secure that no portion of it may pass into the possession of a stranger by giving an opportunity to the members of the family to buy him up and keep it for themselves when a suit is brought for partition of the house.

[14] The Courts have not hesitated to put a liberal construction upon the Partition Act and to interpret its provisions in such a way as would promote and fulfil the object of this piece of legislation which is to preserve the integrity of the family dwelling house and to enable the members of the family to keep it for themselves as far as possible. A good illustration is the case of Satyabhama v. Jatindra Mohan, 49 C. L. J. 136: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Cal. 269), where in a suit for partition brought by a stranger purchaser some co-sharer members of the family were allowed to buy up other stranger purchasers who were defendants in the action but had asked for an allotment in the house to be given to them on the partition, the reason advanced being that to deny this right to the co-sharer members of the family would be to defeat the object which the Legislature had in enacting the Partition Act. And in the recent case of Abu Isa Thakur v. Dinabandhu Banik, 61 O. W. N. 639 : (A. I. R. (84) 1947 Cal. 426), the plaintiff, who was a co-sharer member of the family, was allowed to buy up certain stranger purchasers who were defendants in the partition suit and who do not appear even to have asked for an allotment for themselves in the house.

placing upon the expression "share in a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family" accords with and gives effect to the real meaning and intention of the Legislature in enacting S. 44, T. P. Act and S. 4, Partition Act. And this construction has this additional merit that it dispenses with the necessity of resorting to the fiction of a notional dwelling house belonging to the remaining co-sharer members of the family alone for the purpose of investing them with the right to proceed under S. 4, against a purchaser in the position of the present plaintiff. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the plaintiff has purchased a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family and an application under S. 4, Partition Act is maintainable against him.

[16] We have now to deal with the grounds upon which Chakravartti J. pronounced against the competence of defendant 1, to make an application under S. 4. The first ground sufficiently appears from the passage we have quoted above from our learned brother's judgment, and it was further developed by him in this way:

"In my opinion, the word 'family' in the phrase 'any member of the family, being a share-holder' must mean that particular undivided family, referred to in the beginning of the section, to which the dwelling house belonged, and the 'share-holder' must be a holder of a share in that house. Since, if the share sold to the plaintiff be at all a share of a dwelling house belonging to the undivided family, the family must be the family minus Upen and the dwelling house the house minus Upen's share, defendant 1, being no member of the one and having no share in the other, has no right under the section to buy off the plaintiff."

[17] As we have observed before, this ground of disqualification of defendant 1, is derived from the theory of a residuary dwelling house belonging to a residuary family; but whether it is a product of that doctrine or whether it is a corollary of the proposition that the plaintiff is not the purchaser of a share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family, it loses its force now that we have expressed our dissent from both of them. The other ground was formulated by our learned brother in these terms:

"When Upen re-purchased his share, it was in his hands, as it is in the hands of defendant 1 and his brothers, not a share held qua a member of the undivided family owning the house, but a share of ancestral property re-acquired from a person to whom Upen

[18] The ties of blood which bound Upen to the other members of the family were not severed when he sold his share, and the section itself appears to us to recognise that a person may be a member of the family although he may not be owning a share in the dwelling house. It confers the right to apply on "any member of the family being a share-holder"; the additional qualification of being a share-holder would not be necessary if the intendment of the section was that membership of the family was equivalent to co.ownership of the house. Nor can we find any. thing in the section which disqualifies a member who, having previously alienated his share, has re-acquired it and is owning it at the time he makes his claim under s. 4. The qualification of the applicant, in our opinion, has to be judged with reference to his position at the date of the application. A member of the family not himself having a share (e. g. the son of a co-sharer in a Dayabhag family, the father being alive up to the date of the application under S. 4) may for the first time purchase a share from another, member of the family, or a share-holder member may sell his share to another member or even to a stranger and may re-purchase it from the vendee, but if he shows that he is a co-sharer member of the family at the date of his application he, in our opinion, establishes his competence to make the application. The test is satisfied so far as defendant 1 is concerned, and he is competent to make a claim under S. 4.

[19] Certain equitable considerations in favour of the plaintiff and against defendant 1 were adverted to by Chakravartti J. and were advanced in argument before us by the respondent, but the matter has to be dealt with on the terms of the statute, and if the plaintiff comes within the mischief of the section and the appellant establishes his competence to apply under it, no room is left for the application of purely equitable considerations in the decision of the question before the Court.

[20] An attempt was made before us by the respondent to support the judgment of Chakra-varti J. on a ground which was decided against him by our learned brother, viz. that as the co-sharers had separate huts of their own, there was no common dwelling house to which the section could be attracted. We have already briefly alluded to the reasons which led our learned brother to reject that contention and it is sufficient for us to say that we entirely agree with our learned brother's decision upon this point and the reasons upon which it is based.

of Chakravartti J. that there is an excess area of .04 acres in the possession of the plaintiff and that the excess should be taken into account in making the partition has not been challenged by way of any cross-appeal by the plaintiff, and the direction given by Chakravartti J. in this behalf stands.

[22] The result is that this appeal is allowed with costs against the contesting respondents and defendant 1's prayer under S. 4, Partition Act is granted. Necessary directions in this behalf will be given by the trial Court to the commissioner appointed to make the partition. Defendant 1 appellant will also get his costs from the contesting respondents of the second appeal before Chakravartti J. and of the appeal to the lower appellate Court. The parties will bear their own costs of the trial Court up to the preliminary decree. Future costs will be in the discretion of the Court dealing with the case.

Provat Kumar Kar and others — Accused Petitioners v. William Trevelyan Curties Parkar — Complainant — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 623 of 1949, Decided on 12th September 1949.

(a) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 23 (a) (b) and (c) — Clause (c) makes strike during period of settlement or award illegal, if it relates to matters covered by settlement or award — Clauses (a) and (b) do not make such distinction — Any strike during pendency of conciliation proceedings and seven days thereafter is illegal.

The words "in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award" have been deliberately inserted in cl. (c) of S. 23 to limit its operation. During the period in which a settlement or award is in operation the workman cannot strike or the employers cannot lock out in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award. Strikes or lock-outs in respect of other matters are permissible. Clause (c), therefore, draws a clear distinction between strikes and lock-outs on matters in respect of which an award or settlement has been made and strikes or lock-outs connected with matters not covered by any award or settlement. But no such distinction is made in cls. (a) and (b) of S. 23. Clauses (a) and (b) prohibit workmen striking or any employer locking out his employment during the pendency of conciliation proceedings and seven days after the conclusion of such proceedings, and during the pendency of proceedings before a Tribunal and two months after the conclusion of such proceedings. There is nothing in these two clauses from which the Court can infer that a strike is permissible or a lock-out is permissible where the subject-matter of the dispute is different from the subject-matter of the dispute pending before a Tribunal or before a conciliation authority. The words of cls. (a) and (b) cover all strikes or lockouts relating to the industrial establishment which originally gave rise to the dispute which has been referred to a Tribunal or to the conciliation authorities. The fact that the proceedings were never brought to a conclusion cannot affect the convictions, when there were undoubtedly proceedings pending at that time and the employees went on strike whilst these proceedings were [Paras 17 & 23] pending.

(b) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 5 — Does not cover criminal proceedings for offences created under Act

The words in S. 5 only cover such proceedings as are pending for the settlement of disputes. Such proceedings may be before a Tribunal or they may be before the other authorities which are mentioned in S. 3 of the Act. The reference is to those proceedings and the section cannot possibly cover criminal proceedings instituted in a criminal Court for any offences created by the Act.

(c) Interpretation of Statutes — Intention of Act clear — Words should not be inserted to reduce it to nullity.

Chatterjee J.—Where the main object and intention of the Act is clear, it should not be reduced to a nullity by inserting words or amending a clause which would be the duty of the Legislature and not of the Court. The grammatical construction should be adhered to, unless it is clearly repugnant to the intention of the Act or unless it leads to some manifest absurdity: 150 E. R. 724, Ref. [Para 32]

Atul Chandra Gupta, M. M. Sen and Krishna Prosad Basu — for Petitioners.

S. M. Bose and S. C. Talukdar—for Opposite Party. Harries C. J.—This is a petition for revision of an order passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate convicting the ten petitioners of an offence under S. 26, Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, and sentencing each of them to pay a fine of Rs. 25. In default of payment of the fine it was provided that each should undergo a period of seven days' imprisonment.

[2] The ten petitioners were employees of Messrs. Lloyd Bank Limited, and were employed at the Head Office and the Chowringhee Office of the Bank. Disputes had arisen between the Bank and its employees and on 17th January 1948, these disputes were referred to the adjudication of a Tribunal under S. 10 (1) (c), Industrial Disputes Act (XIV [14] of 1947).

[3] Before these proceedings had terminated the ten petitioners together with other employees of the Bank went on a one-day strike on 17th August 1948. This one-day strike admittedly had nothing to do with the disputes which had been referred to the adjudication of a Tribunal under the Act. The one-day strike was a strike to express sympathy with certain employees of the Central Bank of India who were themselves on strike.

[4] Sanction from the Provincial Government was obtained and a prosecution was instituted against eleven persons for striking contrary to the provisions of S. 26 and further for instigating others to strike. The case came before the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate who held that there was no evidence upon which the eleven persons could be convicted of an offence of instigating others to strike. He, however, held that the eleven persons were guilty of an offence under S. 26, convicted them and sentenced them, as I have indicated. Of those eleven persons ten persons have petitioned this Court in revision.

[5] The prosecution was under S. 26 (1), Industrial Disputes Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act). The sub-section is in these terms:

"Any workman who commences, continues or otherwise acts in furtherance of, a strike which is illegal under this Act, shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to fifty rupees, or with both."

[6] Section 24 (1) provides:

"A strike or a lock-out shall be illegal if—(i) it is commenced or declared in contravention of S. 22 or S. 23; or (ii) it is continued in contravention of an order made under sub-s. (3) of S. 10."

[7] It is common ground that if this strike was illegal, it could only be illegal by reason of the provisions of S. 23 (b) of the Act.

[8] Section 23 is in these terms:

"No workman who is employed in any industrial establishment shall go on strike in breach of contract and no employer of any such workman shall declare a lock-out—(a) during the pendency of conciliation proceedings before a Board and seven days after the conclusion of such proceedings; or (b) during the pendency of proceedings before a Tribunal and two months after the conclusion of such proceedings; or (c) during any period in which a settlement or award is in operation, in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award."

[9] It will be seen from this section that no workman employed in any industrial establishment can go on strike in breach of his contract during the pendency of proceedings before a Tribunal and two months after the conclusion of such proceedings.

[10] On behalf of the prosecution it was urged before the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate that on the day this strike took place there were proceedings pending before a Tribunal and therefore the strike was illegal, as being contrary to S. 23 (b) of the Act in that it was a strike during the pendency of such proceedings.

[11] Mr. Atul Gupta who has appeared on behalf of nine of the petitioners has conceded that if the words of S. 23 (b) are taken literally then a case can be made out for the prosecution. He has, however, urged that no offence is committed under S. 23 (b) unless the strike in breach of contract is connected with the dispute then pending before the Tribunal. He has urged that if the strike concerns a matter or dispute different from the dispute already submitted to the Tribunal then the strike is not illegal by reason of S. 23 (b).

[12] On the other hand, the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the opposite party contends that the Legislature where it intended that the cause of the strike should have relation to the dispute before the Tribunal or the award made thereon, it has said so in the clearest terms. Reference is made to S. 23 (c). That provides that no workman who is employed in any industrial establishment shall go on strike in breach of contract during any period in which a settlement or award is in operation, in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award. There is nothing in this section to prevent a workman going on strike during a period in which an award is in operation, if the strike is connected with matters other than those covered by the award. However, if the strike is in respect of any matters covered by the award then the strike is probibited. It is to be observed that these words, "In respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award", appear only in cl. (c) of S. 28, and find no place in either cl. (a) or cl. (b). The contention of the Advocate-General was that if it was intended to limit the operation of S. 23 (a) or (b) to strikes arising out of matters pending before the Tribunal, then words similar to the words found in cl. (c) would have been added to cl. (a) and cl. (b).

[13] There is considerable force in this contention: but Mr. Atul Gupta has argued that the words "in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award" have no reference whatsoever to the dispute or disputes which was or were the causes of the strike. He has urged that the words "in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award" govern the terms "settlement or award". His point is that the whole of an award may not be put into operation and in a case where the whole of the award is not put into operation, he urges that these words "in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award" are necessary. Mr. Gupta relied upon 8. 15 (2) and the proviso to sub-s. (2) which is in these terms:

"(2) On receipt of such award, the appropriate Government shall by order in writing declare the award to be binding:

Provided that where the appropriate Government is a party to the dispute and in its opinion it would be inexpedient on public grounds to give effect to the whole or any part of the award, it shall on the first available opportunity lay the award together with the statement of its reasons for not making a declaration as aforesaid before the Legislative Assembly of the Province or where the appropriate Government is the Central Government, before the Central Legislative Assembly, and shall, as soon as may be, cause to be moved therein a resolution for the consideration of the award; and the Legislative Assembly may, by its resolution confirm, modify, or reject the award."

"On the passing of a resolution under the proviso to sub-s. (2), unless the award is rejected thereby, the appropriate Government shall by order in writing declare the award as confirmed or modified by the resolution, as the case may be, to be binding."

[15] It is clear from these provisions that where the Government is a party to an industrial dispute, the award made by the adjudicator can be modified before an order is made to enforce it. Mr. Gupta's argument is that the words "in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award" in cl. (c) of S. 23 of the Act are necessary because the award which is to be enforced may be not the award as made by the Tribunal. It may be an award as modified under the proviso to sub.s. (2) of S. 15 of the Act. In other words, the award which is to be put into operation may only be part of the award as originally made. Mr. Gupta, therefore, argues that it is necessary to insert the words "in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award" in cl. (c) of 8. 29, because the actual award in operation might be something less or it might not cover matters which the original award dealt with. The contention is that the words 'in respect of the matters covered by the settlement or award" would limit the

of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award" are unnecessary for the purpose suggested by Mr. Gupta. The award which is put in operation is the award as modified and therefore, the opening words of S. 23 (c) which are, "during any period in which a settlement or award is in operation", must mean the period in which a settlement or award as modified by the Government concerned is in operation. By reason of the proviso to sub-s. (2) of S. 15 the original award may never be put in operation, but what may be put in operation is an award modified or altered by the Government concerned.

[17] In my judgment the words "in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award" have been deliberately inserted in cl. (c) of s. 23 to limit its operation. During the period in which a settlement or award is in operation the workman cannot strike or the employers cannot lock-out in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award. Strickes or lock outs in respect of other matters are permissible. Clause (c), therefore, draws a clear distinction between strikes and lock-outs on matters in respect of which an award or settlement has been made and strikes or lock-outs connected with matters not covered by any award or settlement. It is to be observed, however, that no such distinction is made in cls. (a) and (b) of S. 23. Clauses (a) and (b) of that section prohibit workmen striking or any employer locking out his employment during the pendency of conciliation proceedings and seven days after the conclusion of such proceedings, and during the pendency of proceedings before a Tribunal and two months after the conclusion of such proceedings. There is nothing in these two clauses from which the Court can infer that a strike is permissible or a lock-out is permissible where the subject-matter of the dispute is different from the subject-matter of the dispute pending before a Tribunal or before a conciliation authority. It appears to me that the words of cls. (a) and (b) cover all strikes or lock-outs relating to the industrial establishment which originally gave rise to the dispute which has been referred to a Tribunal or to the conciliation authorities.

[18] Mr. Atul Gupta has urged that words similar to the words "in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award" should be inserted in cls. (a) and (b) of S. 23. For example, cl. (b) should read "during the pendency of proceedings before a Tribunal and two months after the conclusion of such proceed.

ings in respect of any of the matters covered by the disputes submitted to adjudication" or some similar words. He concedes that in construing a section Courts are not at liberty to insert words or sentences, but he has contended that such is absolutely necessary in this case. Further, he has urged that other additions must be made to this section to make it intelligible; for example, he has urged that the opening words of the section as they stand are not intelligible. The words are "No workman who is employed in any industrial establishment shall go on strike in breach of contract " Mr. Gupta has contended that to make that intelligible the words "of service" should be added to contract. If the words were added it would make the section perhaps a little more artistic, but I think, as the section is drafted, the word "contract" there can only mean contract of service, because it is a section dealing with workmen employed in an industrial establishment who strike in breach of contract. That must mean, therefore, breach of their contract of service with the employer in that particular industrial establishment.

[19] Mr. Gupta also contended that unless some other words were added, workmen who were not intimately connected with the industrial dispute might be prevented from striking. For example, he urged that on a literal construction of this section employees of the Lloyds Bank in Bombay or Delhi would be prohibited from striking by reason of this section. That argument however overlooks the words "employed in any industrial establishment." Those words, to my mind, limit the ambit of this section to dispute arising in a particular factory, workshop or other place of business or industry. The section was never intended to cover cases where the same employers employed workmen or employees in various factories situate in different towns.

[20] "Employed in an industrial establishment" must mean employed in some particular place, that place being the place used for manufacture or an activity amounting to industry as that term is used in the Act. That, I think, is clear from S. 2 (n) (ii) of the Act which is in these terms:

"'public utility service' means

(ii) any section of an industrial establishment, on the working of which the safety of the establishment or the workmen employed therein depends."

[21] It seems to me quite clear that there the words "industrial establishment" mean the place at which the workmen are employed and the words as used in S. 2 (n) (ii) must have the same meaning as when they are used in S. 23. That being so, it is quite clear that S. 23 could not cover a case of workmen in Bombay striking against an employer with whom employees in Calcutta have a dispute.

[22] It appears that an Ordinance (ordinance No. VI of 1949), was passed by the Central Government and was published in the Gažette of 30th April 1949. Section 4 of that Ordinance provided:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law, it shall not be competent for a Provincial Government or any officer or authority subordinate to such Government to refer an industrial dispute concerning any banking or insurance company, or any matter relating to such dispute, to any tribunal or other authority for adjudication, inquiry or settlement."

Section 5 of the Ordinance is in these terms:

"(1) Where under any law any industrial dispute concerning any banking or insurance company or any matter relating to such dispute has, before a commencement of this Ordinance, been referred by a Provincial Government or any officer or authority subordinate to such Government to any tribunal or other authority of adjudication or settlement and any proceedings in respect of or arising out of such reference were immediately before such commencement pending before any tribunal or other authority, then on the date of such commencement such reference shall be deemed to be withdrawan and all such proceedings shall abate.

(2) The Central Government shall, as soon as may be after the commencement of this Ordinance, by order in writing, refer under S. 10 of the said Act every industrial dispute to which the provisions of sub-section (1) apply to an Industrial Tribunal constituted under the said Act for adjudication."

[23] This Ordinance put an end to all proceedings which were being carried on all over India before various Tribunals relating to disputes between banks and their employees, and the purpose of the Ordinance was that all the disputes should be referred to a Tribunal which would deal with all of them. Proceedings which had been commenced on reference of particular disputes abated and these proceedings between the Lloyds Bank in Calcutta and their employees at the Head Office and the Chowringhee branch abated under this Ordinance. The fact that the proceedings were never brought to a conclusion cannot affect the convictions. There were undoubtedly proceedings pending at that time and the employees went on strike whilst these proceedings were pending. It is in my view wholly immaterial whether the proceedings ever fructified into an award or whether they ultimately proved infructuous. The object of cls. (a) and (b) of s. 23, is to ensure an atmosphere of calm and peace during an adjudication upon an industrial dispute. Whilst the adjudication is proceeding the workmen in that particular factory or establishment cannot strike and further the employers cannot lock-out their employees and it is immaterial whether the strike or lock-out is concerning matters connected with a dispute which is before the Tribunal or not. All disputes are forbidden in order to ensure a calm atmosphere for the adjudication upon the disputes, which have been referred.

[24] Mr. Gupta suggested that these criminal proceedings had abated by reason of the concluding words of S. 5 of this Ordinance. The words are:

"Any proceedings in respect of or arising out of such reference were immediately before such commencement pending before any tribunal or other authority, then on the date of such commencement such reference shall be deemed to be withdrawn and all such proceedings shall abate."

The suggestion is that this criminal prosecution was a proceeding arising out of or in respect of the reference. But it appears to me that these words only cover such proceedings as are pending for the settlement of disputes. Such proceedings may be before a Tribunal or they may be before the other authorities which are mentioned in S. 3 of the Act. The reference is to those proceedings and in my view the section cannot possibly cover criminal proceedings instituted in a criminal Court for any offences created by this Act.

[24a] For these reasons I can see no ground for interfering with the order of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate and accordingly this petition fails and the Rule is discharged.

[25] Chatterjee J.—I agree. The facts have been fully recited by my Lord the Chief Justice, and I need not repeat the same. The learned advocate appearing for the petitioners urged that a strike per se is not illegal and that the workmen should not be deprived of the right to strike unless there are specific words from which such an injunction can be inferred in the statute.

[26] The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate has held that there was no substance in the defence contention that S. 23 (b) of the Industrial Disputes Act should be given a limited meaning so as to indicate that the proceeding before the Tribunal must be in respect of the issue on which the petitioners went on strike.

[27] The sole question before us is this: Is the strike illegal under S. 24, Industrial Disputes Act? Under that section a strike or lock-out shall be illegal if it is commenced or declared in contravention of S. 23. Under S. 23, there is a general prohibition with regard to strikes and lock-outs. The essential ingredients of an offence in such a case are: (a) that there must be workmen employed in an industrial establishment, (b) that they shall go on strike in breach of the contract of employment and (c) that there must be the pendency of proceedings before a Tribunal.

[28] In my opinion all these ingredients were present in this case. The petitioners urge that the Magistrate failed to appreciate that the prohibition contained in S. 23 (b), referred only to a strike concerning the particular disputes which were pending adjudication before a Tribunal.

[29] I cannot accede to this contention. On a proper reading of Ss. 23 and 24 and the other relevant sections of this Act, it seems to me that there is a conscious distinction made between the two cases (a) when a matter is pending adjudication and (b) when the adjudication has ripened into an award.

[30] In the first case, that is, when proceedings are pending either before a Board or before a Tribunal there is an absolute prohibition on both the employers and the workmen. The employer is directed not to declare a lock-out; that is obviously in the interests of the workmen themselves. Similarly, the workmen are enjoined not to go on strike.

[31] After the adjudication is over and an award has been made, the injunction is that there should be no strike or lock-out in respect of any of the matters covered by the settlement or award under S. 23 (c).

[32] It has been urged by Mr. Gupta that words should be put in cl. (b) of S. 23, otherwise the language of the statute in its plain and ordinary meaning would lead to absurdity, hardship or injustice. He has asked us to read cl. (b) so as to mean that the injunction against strikes is confined to cases when proceeding are pending before a Tribunal relating to the disputes involved in the strikes. To import these words into cl. (b) will be really to amend the statute. Where the main objection and intention of the Act is clear, it should not be reduced to a nullity by inserting words or amending a clause which would be the duty of the Legislature and not of the Court. Parke, B., has pointed out that the grammatical construction should be adhered to, unless it is clearly repugnant to the intention of the Act or unless it leads to some manifest absurdity. Becke v. Smith, (1836) 2 M. & W. 191: (150 E. R. 724). I see no manifest repugnancy or absurdity, nor anything so contrary to the intention of the statute as to force us to depart from the grammatical construction of the Act.

[33] I would have acceded to the contention of Mr. Gupta if the opening words of S. 23 are to be construed in a general sense so as to cover all disputes between workmen and employers in respect of any branch of the Lloyds Bank. It would lead certainly to hardship and inconvenience and in some cases to gross injustice, if we are driven to construe the Act in such a way as to hold that all workmen employed in the different branches of this Bank in the different parts of India are debarred from resorting to any strike, because the workmen involved in a particular establishment in Calcutta are involved in an adjudication pending before a Tribunal. Suppose there is a big corporation which has five hundred branches all over the country and there is a tiny place where there is a local dispute between the manager and the employees; assume that in such a case there is a reference under S. 10 of that particular dispute to an Industrial Tribunal. If the Act is to be construed in such a manner as to say that all the workmen who are working in the other branch organisa. tions throughout the country are debarred from resorting to any strike for ventilating their just grievances or for the redress of their disabilities, then surely the language of the statute would lead to great hardship and injustice. In my opinion that is not what the Act contemplates. It only puts an embargo on a strike in respect of the workmen employed in the particular industrial establishment, that is, the particular factory or workshop or branch which is involved in the pending proceedings before a Tribunal. In that view there is really no scope for the argument that the statute leads to great hardship or absurdity or injustice. In my view S. 23 (c) says that workmen cannot go on strike on any of the matters covered by the award. But the Legislature has made a conscious departure in the case of pending proceedings and in such a case in order to make possible the uninterrupted course of the proceedings before the Tribunal both parties must stay their hands and must not prejudice a fair and impartial settlement or adjudication of the disputes. Therefore, in such a case the prohibition is general and unqualified. If we put that construction on the statute, then obviously there is no substauce in the point that cl. (b) should have a limited construction. So long as these proceedings are pending before a Tribunal, whatever may be their ultimate fate, and however they may be delayed, the statute says that there shall be no lock out and no strike. If you allow the wormen to go on strike during the pendency of these proceedings, obviously the employers also will assert their right to enforce a lock-out, and it may be grossly detrimental to the interests of the unfortunate workmen or employees.

A. F. O. O. No. 149 of 1947, Decided on 30th March 1949, against order of Sm. C. C. Judge, Sealdab, D/-30th June 1947.

(a) Municipalities—Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 127 (a) — Applicability—Assessment of premises in 1942-1943 — Owner and occupier same at such time—No structure on land — Structures raised by lessee about year 1945—Assessment by Corporation of bare land and building portion — Assessment held was illegal both under S. 127 (a) and S. 131 (2) (d) — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 131 (1) and (2) (d).

There was a revised assessment of the premises in question in 1942-1943 to remain in force for 6 years i. e. till 1948-1949. At that time the owner and occupier was the same. There was then no structure on the land. When the structures were raised by the lessee about the year 1945, the Corporation assessed the same presumably under S. 131 (2) (d). The details of valuation showed that the entire premises i. e. the bare land and the remaining portion, being the building portion and appurtenant land, was re-valued:

Held that such a course was not permissible under the Act. The revised assessment in 1945 of the entire premises before the expiry of the statutory period of 6 years was therefore illegal. [Para 22]

Held further that the entire premises could not also be valued under S. 131 (2) (d) as under the section the valuation is to be made of "such building" i. e. the new building and the valuation is of a temporary duration i. e. for the unexpired portion of the period referred to in S. 131 (1).

(b) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 127 (a) — Corporation valuing premises by sub-dividing same into two parts — No application for sub-division—No proceedings taken for such purpose — Assessment held was bad even if section applied.

Where the Corporation valued the premises by subdividing the same into two parts, viz. the building and land appurtenant thereto and the portion of bare land not so appurtenant and both were valued as held for letting purposes I. e. under S. 127 (a):

Held that the assessment, even assuming that S. 127 (a) was applicable, should have been made as one unit. The unit of assessment was the entire premises. There was no application for sub-division of the unit, nor were any proceedings taken for that purpose. The assessment was therefore bad. [Paras 25 and 26]

(c) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 127 (a) and (b) — Assessment partly under both sub-sections is not permissible.

The mode of assessing one unit of assessment partly under S. 127 (a) and partly under S. 127 (b) is not permissible: A. I. R. (26) 1939 P. O. 20, Foll.; A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 47, Ref. [Para 27]

(d) Maxims — Quicquid inædificatur solo solo cedit — Principle is not in consonance with usages and customs of this country.

The fiction of English law that buildings erected on land become, by the mere accident of their attachment to the soil, the property of the owner, compendiously embodied in the maxim Quicquid inædificatur solo solo cedit, is not in consonance with the usages and customs of this country: 6 W.R. 228 (F. B.) and A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 185, Foll. [Para 81]

(e) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 127—Section does not speak of hypothetical user — Land used for letting purposes—Building erected by lessee used by himself—Building cannot be regarded as held for letting purposes.

Section 127 does not speak of hypothetical user but of actual or intended user. Therefore, the assumption that because the land is used for letting purposes, the building erected by the lessee though used by the lessee himself should be regarded as held for letting purposes, is unwarranted. [Para 32]

(f) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923). S 127 (a) and (b) — Scheme of section—Bare land is valued under sub-s. (a)—Building erected for letting purposes — Case would be governed by same sub-section—Building not erected for letting purposes—Sub-s. (b) would apply.

The scheme of S. 127 is that if the land be bare land, it is to be valued under S. 127 (a); if there be a building upon it, the case would be governed by S. 127 (a) if the building was erected for letting purposes or was ordinarily let or by S. 127 (b) if the building was not erected for letting purposes or was not ordinarily let: A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 47, Expln.; A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 116, Ref. [Para 40]

Chandra Sekhar Sen and Provas Kumar Sen Gupta
— for Appellant.

Krishnalal Banerjee - for Respondent.

Das J. — The appellant, Dominion of India, representing the East Indian Railways, (formerly Bengal Assam Railway) appeals to this Court under S. 141, Calcutta Municipal Act III [3] of 1923 (bereinafter called the Act) against an order dated 30th June 1947, passed by Mr. R. N. Ray, learned Small Cause Court Judge, Sealdah, District 24 Parganas, whereby he dismissed an appeal against the order of the second Deputy Executive Officer, Corporation of Calcutta, dated 11th April 1946, under S. 140 of the Act in respect of the assessment of Premises No. 52, Gopal Chandra Chatterjee Road.

[2] The B. A. Railway (Bengal Assam Railway) was the owner and occupier of Premises No. 52, Gopal Chandra Chatterjee Road, measuring 83 Bighas, 9 Kottahs 6 Chhataks and 14Sq ft., and was paying Rs. 3001-12-0 per annum on account of municipal rates and taxes to the Corporation of Calcutta, hereinafter called the Corporation.

. [3] By a memorandum, Ex. 4, the B. A. Railway let out to the Civil Supply Department the aforesaid premises for one year subject to further extensions, as may be agreed upon; the relevant provision runs as follows:

"2 The Civil Supply Department shall be liable to pay to the Bengal Assam Railway Administration a sum of Rs. 60,096-4-0 per annum on account of rent for occupation of the above land. The Civil Supply Departments shall also pay a sum of Rs. 3004-12-0 per annum on account of Municipal tax which the Railway Administration is paying to the Calcutta Corporation. The Civil Supply Department shall be (sic) also pay other taxes or ancillary charges which the Railway Administration may have to pay to any local authorities or any other body in connection with the said plot of land and/or structures thereon."

It is now admitted that thereafter the Civil Supply Department erected certain godowns and other structures at its own cost and for its own use. This is also supported by the uncontradicted evidence adduced by the appellant.

[4] In September 1945, the Corporation served the following notice, Ex. 3, on the appellant: "Corporation of Calcutta; Assessment Department.

Special Notice under S. 138 of Bengal Act III [3] of 1923.

The owner of Premises No. 52, Gopal Chandra Chatterjee Road.

Take notice that the above premises have been assessed at an annual value of Rs. 3,71,520 and the said valuation is to remain in force from the commencement of the 3rd quarter of 1945-46 until the expiration of the period of assessment of the ward within which the above premises are situated, viz., the 4th quarter of 1948-1949.

Grounds of increase.

Valuation of the new structures on estimated yearly rental value less statutory allowance for repairs.

Municipal Office S. M. Hossain Acting Assessor to the Corporation."

[5] The following grounds of objections were then raised to the said proposed assessment:

 (i) That the entire revaluation is ultra vires, illegal and inoperative:

(ii) that the additional constructions which are sought to be assessed are not liable under the law to be assessed;

(iii) that the entire principle and basis of assessment are wrong and not warranted by the law; and

(iv) that the taxes demanded on the assessment are patently disproportionate to the services rendered.

[6] It would appear from Ex. A (1) that the Executive Engineer of the B. A. Railway admitted that the approximate cost of construction of the godown and structures was Rs. 35,90,000 only (excluding costs of land).

[7] The second Deputy Executive Officer by his order dated 11th April 1946, Ex. 2 (a), reduced the valuation to Rs. 3,22,920.

Intermediate Re-valuation with effect from the 3rd quarter of 45-46. Premises No. 52, Gopal Chandra Chatterjee Road.

[9] In the memorandum of appeal filed by the appellant, the grounds are thus stated:

"Buildings standing on this premises were not erected for letting nor are ordinarily let. The respondent body did not consider what they ought to have considered. The appellant claims that the assessment of the annual value as made by the respondent body under S. 127 (a), Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923, is illegal and should be cancelled."

[10] The case was taken up on 7th May 1947, and evidence was closed on that date. The case then stood over for arguments, on 26th May 1947. On 13th June 1947 the Corporation filed a petition praying for allowing it to adduce evidence on the question of valuation under S. 127 (b) of the Act. This prayer was refused. The case was taken up on 27th June 1947 and one witness was examined for the appellant and the memorandum of terms was marked as Ex. 4, on behalf of the appellant. The Corporation filed a petition that it has been prejudiced by the refusal of the Court to allow evidence of valuation under S. 127 (b). Arguments were then heard.

[12] In this judgment, the learned Judge pointed out that the quantum of assessment was not challenged, that the appellant did not plead that it could not be taxed in respect of the structures, because it was neither the owner nor the occupier thereof, that the only contention raised was that the principle of assessment was wrong, the assessment should have been made under S. 127 (b) and not under S. 127 (a) of the Act.

[13] As already stated this appeal is by the Dominion of India. Mr. Sen appearing for the appellant has argued that the basis of the assessment is wrong that the assessment should have been made not under 8.127 (a), but under 8.127 (b) of the Act and that as such the assessment made should be set aside.

other hand, has contended that S. 127 (b) of the Act only applies where the land and the building belong to the same person. Mr. Banerji has further submitted that if the land is held on a lease, any superstructure built by the lessee must be taken to be a part of the land for the purpose of assessment of rates and the land and the superstructures should both be deemed to be held for letting purposes.

[15] To deal with the contentions raised, it would be profitable to refer to some portions of chap. x of the Act which is headed as "The consolidated rate."

[16] Broadly speaking, the chapter first deals with the imposition of the consolidated rate and then deals with apportionment thereof between owners and occupiers.

[17] Section 124 is the charging section and runs as follows:

124. A consolidated rate not exceeding twenty three per cent on the annual valuation determined under this chapter may be imposed by the Corporation upon all lands and buildings in Calcutta for the purposes of this Act.

[18] Section 127 provides for the ascertainment of the annual value.

127. For the purpose of assessing land and buildings to the consolidated rate,

(a) the annual value of land, and the annual value of any building erected for letting purposes or ordinarily let, shall be deemed to be the gross annual rent at which the land or building might at the time of assessment reasonably be expected to let from year to year, less, in the case of a building, an allowance of ten per cent for the cost of repairs and for all other expenses necessary to maintain the building in a state to command such gross rent; and

(b) the annual value of any building not erected for letting purposes and not ordinarily let shall be deemed to be five per cent. on the sum obtained by adding the estimated present cost of erecting the building, less a reasonable amount to be deducted on account of depreciation (if any) to the estimated present value of the land valued with the building as part of the same premises."

[19] In the Court below this case proceeded on the footing that it was a case of general revision of assessment at the end of six years prescribed by S. 131 (1) of the Act.

Here there was a revised assessment of the premises in 1942-1943, to remain in force for 6 years i. e., till 1948-1949. At that time, the owner and occupier was the same, being the B. A. Railway. There was then no structure on the land. The land was bare land and the assessment must have been made under 8. 127 (a). When the structures were raised about the year 1945, the Corporation assessed the same presumably under S. 131 (2) (d). This would appear from the notice Ex. 8 issued under S. 138 of the Act.

[21] If this is the correct position, the Corporation can only value the new building. The details of valuation, already referred to, show that the entire premises was revalued, the bare land 10 bighas at a hypothetical rent of Re. 1 per katta per month less deduction of 10 p. c. and the remaining portion being the building portion and appurtenant land, at a hypothetical rent less deduction of 10 p. c. both under S. 127 (a).

[22] Such a course is, in our opinion, not permissible under the Act. The revised assessment of the entire premises before the expiry of the statutory period of 6 years is therefore illegal.

[23] Mr. Banerjee does not dispute that the structures erected are new buildings as defined in S. 3 (46) but his only answer is that the true import of S. 131 (2) (d) is that when a new building is erected during the currency of the period prescribed by S. 131 (1), the Executive Officer may value the entire premises i. e. the building and the surrounding lands anew. This argument overlooks two facts, viz., (1) that the valuation is to be made of "such building" i. e. "the new building" and (2), that the valuation is of a temporary duration i.e., for the unexpired portion of the period referred to in S. 131 (1); it is, therefore, not a case of a fresh assessment under S. 131 (1). Mr. Banerjee's contention cannot therefore be accepted.

[24] But assuming that it was permissible for the Corporation to revalue the entire premises, viz., the land and buildings included in premises No. 52, Gopal Chandra Chatterjee Road, the question is how should the assessment be made.

[25] The Corporation has valued the premises by sub-dividing the same into two parts, viz. the building and land appurtenant thereto (i. e. the portion of land necessary for the convenient enjoyment of the building) and the portion of bare land not so appurtenant. Both have been valued as held for letting purposes i. e. under S. 127 (a).

[26] The assessment, even assuming that S. 127 (a) was applicable, should have been made as one unit. The unit of assessment in this case is admittedly the entire premises No. 52, Gopal Chandra Chatterjee Road. There was no application for sub-division of the unit, nor were any proceedings taken for that purpose. This is another ground for holding that the assessment is bad.

[27] There is a further and more serious objection to the mode of assessment followed by the Corporation. The land is a leasehold one and its annual value has to be determined under S. 127 (a) but the building was not intended to be let nor was used for letting purposes and would not come within S. 127 (a) but might come under S. 127 (b), but such a mode of assessing one unit of assessment, viz. partly under S. 127 (a) and partly under S. 127 (b), is not permissible, Corporation of Calcutta v. Motichand, 66 I. A. 42 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 P. C. 20). It is true that this case related to the assessment of a bybrid building, occupied in equal moieties by the owner and his lessees. The principle was extended in the Corporation of Calcutta v. Province of Bengal, 44 O. W. N. 165 at p. 169 : (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 47). Mitter J. observed there that it would not be legitimate for the Corporation to determine separately the annual value of the lands under the building and of the compound, the building under S. 127 (b) and the compound under S. 127(a).

[28] A choice has therefore to be made between

B. 127 (a) and S. 127 (b).

[29] Mr. Banerjee has contended that in a case like the present, the building being attached to the land, should be regarded as a part of the land, and the user of the land should by a fiction of law determine the user of the building, although in fact this may not be so. It has therefore been argued that even though the building might have been erected by the lessee at his own cost and used by the lessee himself, the law will imply that for purposes of assessment, the building belongs to the owner of the land and as the land was let out, the building must also be deemed to have been let out.

[31] The fiction of English law that buildings erected on land become, by the mere accident of their attachment to the soil, the property of the owner, compendiously embodied in the maxim quicquid inadificatur solo solo cedit is not in consonance with the usages and customs of this country, Thakoor Chunder Pramanick v. Ramdhun Bhattacharjee, 6 W. B. 228 at.p. 229, F. B; Narayandas Khetry v. Jatindranath, 54 I. A. 218: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 135).

[32] The further assumption that because the land is used for letting purposes, the building though used by the lessee himself should be regarded as held for letting purposes, is equally unwarranted. Section 127 does not speak of hypothetical user but of actual or intended user.

[34] In the preliminary stage of assessment the Corporation has to find out the annual value of buildings dependent on the actual or intended user. It is not concerned with the ownership of the building.

[35] As regards bare land, the actual user is not considered, a hypothetical letting value is taken. In India, bare ownership of land sustains the liability to be rated. In this respect, it differs from the law in England where rateability depends on beneficial occupation (Ryde on Rating, 8th Edn. pp. 17-18).

[36] In such a case no difficulty arises. The annual value is determined by the hypothetical rent which a hypothetical tenant who is free to use the land would pay in respect of the land. Bengal Nagpur Railway v. Corporation of Calcutta, 51 C. W. N. 336: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. C. 50).

[37] In regard to buildings, S. 127 makes the annual value dependent on user, actual or intended. It is more logical to hold that where a building with land has to be rated, the user of the building ought to determine the basis on which the building and the land which forms with it one unit of assessment, should be valued.

[38] If the land is covered by buildings, erected by the owner of the land or a lessee of the land, the entire land and the building has to be assessed as one unit of assessment, the annual value being determined by the user of the build. ing, viz., the building is held if for letting pur. poses under 8. 127 (a) but if for personal use under 8. 127 (b).

[39] If the land and building both belong to the owner of the land, such assessment cannot be complained of. If the land and the building belong to two different persons, e. g., owner and lessee of the land, the owner of the land is rated in respect of both land and building. This does not entail any hardship on the owner of the land because he gets relief in respect of the assessment of the building as against the owner of the building under S. 150.

[40] We hold, therefore, that the scheme of S. 127 is that if the land be bare land, it is to be valued under S. 127 (a); if there be a building upon it, the case would be governed by S. 127 (a) if the building was erected for letting purposes or was ordinarily let or by S. 127 (b) if the building was not erected for letting purposes or was not ordinarily let.

V. Province of Bengal, 44 C. W. N. 165:

(A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 47), was referred to by both parties. The case related to the assessment of the Writers Buildings which was mainly occupied by the Province of Bengal with the exception of a few rooms which had been let out to a Co-operative Bank and two Co-operative Societies. The Chief Judge, Presidency Small Cause Court, had valued the premises partly under S. 127 (a) and partly under S. 127 (b). This basis was not accepted by this Court and it was held that the assessment should be made under S. 127 (b). On so holding, Mitter J. observed as follows:

"If the subject be bare land or building erected for letting purposes or ordinarily let. The annual value is to be what a hypothetical tenant would pay as rent from year to year, less a certain deduction. This is cl. (a) of S. 127. Clause (b) deals with what may, for brevity's sake, be called residential buildings, buildings erected for the use of and actually used by the owner" (p. 167).

[42] Mr. Banerji has relied on the last sentence and has argued that cl. (b) only applies to a case where the owner of the land is also the owner of the building.

[43] The observation has to be read in the light of the facts of the case and does not support the contention of Mr. Banerji.

[44] On the other hand, the view taken by us is supported by the following observations of Mukherjee J. in the Governor-General of India in Council v. Corporation of Calcutta, 52 C. W. N. 173 at p. 176: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 116):

"Section 127 lays down the procedure for ascertaining the annual value of lands and buildings. The principle adopted by this section is that if the property is vacant land it is valued on the basis of annual rental at which it could be expected to be let., less certain deductions. It any building stands upon the land and the building has been erected for letting purposes or is ordinarily let, the annual value has to be ascertained on the rental basis as provided for in cl. (a) of the Section. Otherwise the annual value is determined under cl. (b) on the basis of the cost of construction of the building and the value of the land. In either case the building is taken along with the land and the two are assessed together as one unit. This is the scheme adopted by the Calcutta Municipal Act. There is no rule here of valuing a building separately from the land upon which it stands and for the purposes of assessment, the building is taken as a part of the land."

[45] The result of the above discussion leads us to hold that the assessment made by the Corporation under S. 127 (a) was illegal and must be set aside.

the case may be remitted to the Court below for finding out whether the assessment made would be justified, on the basis that the case came within S. 127 (b). He has referred us to the two petitions filed by the Corporation for allowing it to lead evidence on the point. We have already referred to these petitions and to the orders passed thereon. In our opinion the Court below rightly rejected the petitions. As the basis of the assessment has been held by us to be erroneous, the assessment cannot stand. The Corporation has to proceed according to law and reassess the premises. This contention cannot be given effect to and must be overruled.

[47] The appeal therefore succeeds, the assessment made by the Second Deputy Executive Officer and the order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes Sealdah are vacated.

[48] The appellant is entitled to costs in this Court and the Court below. Hearning fee in this Court is assessed at 10 gold mohurs.

[Paras 14 and 15]

Gopal Chandra Narayan Choudhury

Nirmal Kumar Sen and Amaresh Chandra Roy

-for the Crown. Das Gupta J .- The appellant was tried by a Special Tribunal of Alipore constituted under the West Bengal Black Marketing Act, 1948 and convicted under S. 3 read with S. 2 (h) of that Act, also under S. 3 read with S. 2 (b) and S. 6 of the Act, and under S. 474, Penal Code, and was sentenced to two years rigorous imprisonment for the first mentioned offence and rigorous imprisonment for one year for the second offence. No separate sentence was passed under S. 474, Penal Code. The two sentences under the two offences under the West Bengal Black Marketing Act were ordered to run concurrently. It was further ordered that the handprinting press together with the printing outfit seized were forfeited under sub-s. (3) of S. 3 of the Act.

[2] The prosecution case was that on the night of 25th April 1948, a Sub-Inspector of the Enforcement Branch, Calcutta, accompanied by certain other Police Officers and some search witnesses went to premises No. 18, Fakir Chand Mitra Street and on search of the portion where this accused lived found under the bed and also in a trunk a large number of bread coupons which, according to the prosecution, are forged documents. A hand-printing machine was also found in one of the rooms and certain blocks from which it is said these bread coupons had been printed. There were some bread coupons the printing of which was only partly finished.

[3] The accused pleaded not guilty, his suggestion being that these bread coupons said to have been forged had been planted in his house by his landlord as an easy way for evicting him from the building.

[4] On the question of recovery of these coupons from the rooms in the possession of the accused evidence has been given by the Police Officer and two search witnesses Ganesh Chandra Ghosh and Priyanath Choudhury. I have no doubt from the evidence that these coupons were actually found in the possession of the accused. The suggestion that they were planted there by the landlord Naresh seems to me to be highly improbable.

[5] It is not disputed that these bread coupons were not the genuine coupons issued by the rationing department, and evidence has also been given by the Assistant Controller of Ration. ing to that effect. I have no hesitation in accepting this evidence as correct and find that these documents were prepared by some person with the intention of causing it to be believed that they were made by the rationing authorities. There cannot be the slightest doubt that in doing so, the person who made it had the intention to commit fraud by deceiving the officers concerned that they were genuine bread coupons. Whether or not Act XXIV [24] of 1946 which introduced rationing and the consequent bread coupons has legal validity after 31st March 1948, is of no relevancy on this question. For it is clear that whether it was necessary or not to have bread coupons in law, the person who made these coupons must have made them with the purpose of so using them and thereby deceiving certain persons to believe that they were genuine coupons and thereby gaining an advantage. I find it proved therefore that these documents that were seized were forged documents.

[6] Before the act of the accused could be held as blackmarketing within the meaning of s. 2 (h), it is also necessary for the prosecution to prove that the accused made these documents. Certainly the mere fact that they are found in his house is not sufficient to show that he made them. There is, however, on this point a confession made by him, though since retracted, that he printed a number of bread coupons on his machine, which is corroborated by the circumstances disclosed by the evidence of prosecution witness No. 1. As regards some samples which were printed on the machine then and there, I have examined these samples and find the printing there exactly similar to the printing on the forged coupons except for the fact that the base printing is absent. In my opinion the presence of the hand-machine in the accused's room together with the evidence as regards the samples is sufficient corroborative evidence of the accused's retracted confession. I would, therefore, have no hesitation in holding the accused guilty under S. 3/2 (h) of the Act and also for an attempt as regards the half finished coupons under Ss. 3/2 (h) and 6 of the Act, had these acts been committed after the West Bengal Black Marketing Act came into force. This Black Marketing Act came into force 17th october 1948. The acts of the accused were in April 1948. They were, therefore, offences under the West Bengal Black Marketing Ordinance 1948, which was in force at the time, and they would continue to be offences under this Ordinance in view of the provisions of S. 6, General Clauses Act, in spite of the fact that the Ordinance has ceased to operate. The decision of the question whether the acts in law are offences under the West Bengal Black Marketing Act also depends on the interpretation of S. 26 of the Act. The section runs thus:

"Any rule, order or appointment made or any notification issued or anything done or any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred or imposed or any action taken or any proceedings commenced in exercise of any power conferred by the West Bengal Black Marketing Ordinance, 1948, shall, on the said Ordinance ceasing to be in operation, be deemed to have been made, issued, done, incurred, imposed, taken or commenced in exercise of the powers conferred by this Act as if this Act had commenced on the 1st day of January 1948."

[7] It is sought to be argued on behalf of the Crown that where this section speaks of penalty incurred, it must mean penalty incurred under the West Bengal Black Marketing Ordinance and that the result of S. 26 is that if a penalty had been incurred under the West Bengal Marketing Ordinance, the penalty would continue as a penalty under the Act. It may very well be that the intention of the legislature was to make acts which were offences under the West Bengal Black Marketing Ordinance also acts under the Act. In my opinion, however, the words in S. 26 have not produced that effect. It seems to me to be clear that the words "in exercise of any power" have to be read with the words "penalty, forfeiture or punishment" as much as with the words "proceedings commenced" etc. The grammatical structure of the section falls altogether unless this is done, and it becomes impossible to understand what penalty, forfeiture or punishment is being spoken of. The result, therefore, is that any penalty incurred in exercise of any power conferred by the West Bengal Black Marketing Ordinance shall be deemed to have been incurred in exercise of the powers conferred by the Act. This presupposes that some authority had exercised some powers under the West Bengal Black Marketing Ordinance and it was as a result of such exercise that the penalty was incurred. When a person incurs the penalty by doing the act which is an offence under the Ordinance, he cannot reasonably be said to have incurred the penalty "in exercise of', a power conferred by the Act. I am unable to agree therefore that S. 26 of the Act has the result of making offences under the West Bengal Black Marketing Ordinance also offences under the West Bengal Black Marketing Act.

[8] My conclusion, therefore, is that while the making of forged bread coupons and the attempt to make forged bread coupons would, if committed after the West Bengal Black Marketing Act came into force, be offences under the Act, they are not offences under this Act inasmuch as they were committed before this Act came into force.

[9] The learned Advocate for the Crown suggests that we may alter the conviction to one under the Ordinance. It is to be noticed however that the Tribunal who tried the accused person was constituted under the Black Marketing Act and was not a Tribunal constituted under the Ordinance. Consequently, this Tribunal itself had no jurisdiction to try an offence under the Ordinance.

[10] It is also worth mentioning that the sanction which had been obtained was also for an offence under the Black Marketing Act. This cannot by any stretch of imagination be considered to amount to sanction for a prosecution under the Black Marketing Ordinance. In these circumstances it is not possible for us to alter the conviction to one under the Black Marketing Ordinance.

[11] The conviction of the accused person under s. 3/2 (h), West Bengal Black Marketing Act and also under s. 3/2 (h) and s. 6 of the Act should, therefore, in my opinion, be set aside and the accused acquitted of the charges.

[12] There remains for consideration the conviction of the accused under S. 474, Penal Code. As I have already said, the evidence is sufficient in my opinion to show that a number of forged bread coupons were found in a room in the possession of the accused. I would have no hesitation, therefore, in agreeing with the learned Tribunal that the accused was in possession of forged documents. In view of the confession of the accused already mentioned I would have no hesitation also in agreeing that the accused knew these to be forged and intended that these would be fraudulently and dishonestly used as genuine. The acts that have been proved would, therefore, make out an offence under S. 474, Penal Code.

advocate for the appellant that this conviction cannot stand inasmuch as the Tribunal had no jurisdiction to try an offence under S. 474, Penal Code. An offence under S. 474, Penal Code, is triable by a Court of Session. The question is whether anything in the Black Marketing Act has given the Tribunal constituted under this Act any jurisdiction to try an offence under S. 474, Penal Code. Section 12, Black Marketing Act provides thus:

"(1) The Provincial Government may, from time to time by notification in the Official Gazette, allot cases for trial to each Special Tribunal, and may also from time to time by like notification transfer any case from one Special Tribunal to another or withdraw any case from the jurisdiction of a Special Tribunal or make such modifications in the description of a case (whether in the names of the accused or in the charges preferred or in any other manner) as may be considered necessary.

(2) The Special Tribunal shall have jurisdiction to try the cases for the time being respectively allotted to them under sub-s. (1) in respect of such of the charges as may be preferred against the several accused and any such case which is at the commencement of this Act or at the time of such allotment pending before any Court or another Special Tribunal shall be deemed to be transferred to the Special Tribunal to which it is so allotted."

[14] In the absence of anyting pointing to a different conclusion I would myself be inclined to think that the cases for trial which can be allotted by the Provincial Government are cases of offences under this Act. It is, however, contended by the learned Advocate for the Crown that the provision in sub.s. (2) read with S. 14 of the Act justifies the conclusion that other offences, whether triable by a Sessions Judge or otherwise, than the offences under this Act can also be tried by the Special Tribunal constituted under this Act. Section 14 provided that a Special Tribunal may take cognizance of offences without the accused being committed to it for trial. I am unable to hold that this gives the Special Tribunal a jurisdiction to try offences which are triable by a Court of Session. The right of trial by a Jury in a Court of Session is a very valuable right which can certainly be taken away by legislature by express words, but in the absence of express words it would be improper to impute to the legislature the intention that this right was intended to be taken away.

[15] Sub-section (2) of S. 12 speaks of the jurisdiction of the Special Tribunal, According to this the Special Tribunal shall have jurisdiction to try cases allotted to them in respect of such charges as may be preferred against the accused. It is said that these charges may be for offences not under this Act. Assuming that this may so happen, it is necessary to find whether in this case when the Tribunal began the trial, any charge under S. 474, Penal Code, was preferred. The order of the Provincial Government allotting the case for the trial of this Tribunal mentions only an offence under s. s, Bengal Black Marketing Act. The sanction of the local Government was also with respect to an offence under S. S. Black Marketing Act. There is nothing on the record to show that any charge was at any stage preferred before the Special Tribunal for any offence under S. 474, Penal Code. The mere fact that a charge was actually framed by the Special Tribunal under S. 474, Penal Code or evidence was adduced before them does not justify the conclusion that a charge under S. 474, Penal Code was actually preferred. I am accordingly of opinion that the Special Tribunal constituted as it was under the Black Marketing Act, had no juris. diction to try the offence under S. 474, Penal Code. That conviction also must, therefore, be set aside.

[16] I would accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the convictions and sentences passed against the accused, and order that the accused be acquitted.

[17] The order for forfeiture is also set aside.

Judgment. — This appeal has to be allowed on the short ground that the suit is bad for misjoinder of the parties and of causes of action. This objection was raised by the defence in Courts below.

[2] The plaintiffs are co-sharer landlords and they filed the present suit against a large number of defendants who may be grouped under the following heads: defendants 1 to 16 were their co.sharers; Nos. 17 and 18 were two lawyers of the estate; Nos. 19 to 25 were officers, tabsildars, gomosthas and other employees of the estate; No. 26 is alleged to have intermeddled with the property as on behalf of defendant 1; and Nos. 27 to 38 were other proprietors of different estates. The claim was one for accounts against all these persons.

[3] A reading of the plaint itself would at once show that the causes of action were different not only for the different groups but even for different persons within the same group in some cases. It is impossible to allow the plaintiffs to bring such a suit merely because the claims against the different parties are in respect of the same property. It is not the case of the plaintiffs that all these defendants were by any one transaction made jointly and severally responsible for rendering accounts. The plaintiffs must elect against which of the defendants they want to proceed and specifically state in the plaint as to the common cause of action giving rise to their claim against such defendants. If, for instance, they want to proceed against the co-sharers, or some of them for having been placed in the management of the estate, the lawyers to whom separate payments had been made on definite accounts as alleged in the plaint, the suit is not maintainable against the latter. As against the tabsildars and other officers, if there is a separate engagement or kabuliyat with any one or more of those, then a suit for accounts so far as those officers are concerned must be separated according to the arrangement made between the flaintiffs and particular officers. This should be the principle for determining whether the suit as framed is maintainable in the present form or not. Prima facie, the suit is bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action. The plaintiffs should have taken the earliest opportunity of making the necessary amendments and for giving up such of the parties as they wanted to, so that the suit might have been heard on the merits. Unfortunately, both the Courts below misdirected themselves in coming to a conclusion that the suit as framed is maintainable.

[4] The judgments and decrees of the Courts below are accordingly set aside and the case is remitted to the trial Court for giving an opportunity to the plaintiffs to amend the plaint and to elect against which of the defendants they would proceed to trial. After such a prayer is made, the defendants will have the opportunity to file additional written statements. In the interest of the parties it will be desirable to raise a preliminary issue at that stage for deciding whether the suit as then framed after amendment is maintainable or not. The parties ought not to be asked to spend further money in this litigation before deciding this preliminary ques-

[5] As already stated, the plaintiffs had not taken the necessary steps at the earliest possible opportunity; they must be put to terms for having an opportunity of amending the plaint. The plaintiffs should within 15 days of the re-opening of the Court after the next Pujah Vacation deposit in the trial Court the entire costs of all the three Courts, namely, the Munsif, the District Judge and this Court, to the credit of the contesting defendants and only after such deposit is made that an application by the plaintiffs for amendment of the plaint will be entertained. If the deposit is not made within the date mentioned this appeal will stand allowed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs to the ap. pearing respondents. If the deposit is made, the defendants will be entitled to withdraw the same and to retain it irrespective of the result of the suit.

[6] In view of the order passed allowing the appeal and remitting the case to the trial Court on the condition mentioned, it is not necessary to pass any order on the application filed by the defendant Baidyanath Banerjee on 25th August 1949, for transposition to the position of an appellant in this appeal.

(c) Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 3-Apology -Grounds for-Lack of supervision - Accidental slip can be taken into account.

The essence of the offence being publication in the newspaper the Court cannot encourage the belief that lack of supervision is any defence to a proceeding for contempt but nevertheless, the Court will take into account the fact that the publication may have been the result of an accidental slip over which nobody could have any control. Apology in such cases may be accepted. [Para 18]

-for the Province.

Lahiri J .- This Rule was issued upon the Editor, Printer and Publisher of the Ananda Bazar Patrika and the Swaraj O Sangathan to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt for publications in their respective newspapers of news items published on 5th July 1949 and 8th July 1949 respectively under the captions "Narayangarh—Midnapore" and "Paddy looted during broad day light". The Ananda Bazar Patrika is a very influential and popular Bengali daily published from Calcutta and enjoying a very large circulation amongst the Bengali speaking population of this province and also beyond its borders. The Swaraj O Sangathan is also an influential Bengali Weekly published by the District Con. gress Office, Midnapore.

"Narayangarh (Midnapore)

Trouble created by Communists—The Communists looted away about 70 maunds of paddy in broad daylight from a paddy granary of Laxmi Narayan Prodban in village Kajichak within the police station of Narayangarh during his absence on 17th May 1949 last.

The Police-men of the Thana came to investigate and on their taking one of the accused persons into cu-tody the extremists attacked the Police and the owner of the house in an organised manner and surrounded the village. Late in the night higher police officials with 50 armed police-men came and rescued them and left behind 12 Police men in apprehension of a breach of the peace in the village. At present 50 accused persons who are on bail are creating panie in various ways within the village. It is only a few days that the Police force for maintaining peace had been withdrawn elsewhere, meanwhile, paddy was stolen from the granary of a witness named Gobinda De on 28th of June last, during the night. It is desirable that either the bail bonds of the accused persons should be cancalled till their trial is finished or arrangements made for providing Police guards' .

(3) The corresponding publication in the Swaraj O Sangathan runs thus:

"Paddy looted during broad day light.

The Communists looted away about 70 maunds of paddy from the paddy granary of Laksbmi Narayan Prodban, in village Kajichak, in broad day-light on 17th May 1949 last. The Police Officers of the thana who came to investigate took one of the accused persons into custody, whereupon the extremists attacked the Police men and the owner of the house in an organised manner and surrounded the village. Late in the night higher police officials with 50 armed constables came and rescued them. They left behind 12 constables in apprehension of a breach of the peace in the village. At present 50 accused persons who have been released on bail are creating panic in various ways in the village It is only a few days that the Police force for maintaining peace had been with rawn elsewhere, meanwhile paddy was stolen from the granary of a witness named Gobinda De on 28th June 49 last, during the night. In the circumstances some are of opinion that either the bailbonds of the accused persons should be cancelled till their trial is over or arrangements made for providing police guards.

Sri Priyanath Prodhan
Head Pandit Arjuni Deshabandhu Vidyapith, P. O. Belda,
Dt. Midnapore."

[4] The publication in the Ananda Bazar Patrika is described in the foot note as a letter received from a reporter whose name is not printed. We are told that this reporter is not a reporter employed by the newspaper itself but an external reporter as distinguished from a reporter who exclusively represents the newspaper. The publication in the Swaraj O Sangathan, on the other hand appears over the signature of one Priyanath Prodhan who describes himself as Head Pundit, Deshbandhu Vidyapith—P.O—Belda—District Midnapore.

[5] Two persons named Sri Bankim Chandra Poira and Sri Hara Prasad Jana sent by post an application addressed to the Registrar, Original Side drawing attention to the fact that the aforesaid publications related to matters which were awaiting decision by the Sub-divisional Officer, South Midnapore. The complaint made in the petition is to the effect that in the aforesaid publications the accused persons have been described as communists, although they had no affiliation with any communist organisation and in the second place there was a recommendation for the cancellation of the bail bonds of the accused persons on the ground that they had created a panic in the locality after their release on bail The two petitioners accordingly apprehend that the publications may have the effect of creating an atmosphere of prejudice not only in the mind of the witnesses but also in the mind of the trying Magistrate.

[6] Under the Rules of Business of this Court this petition was sent to us to be dealt with according to law. As from the petition it does not appear whether the two petitioners are on their trial we directed the original petition to be sent to the S. D. O. (South) Midnapore requesting him to inform us if the two petitioners mentioned above are on their trial before him and, if so, whether the signatures appearing on the body of the petition tally with the signatures of the prisoners before him. By his letter dated 5th August 1949 the S. D O. Sadar (South) Midnapore has informed us that the signatory Bankim Chandra Poirs is an undertrial prisoner in Case No. G. R. 913 (8)/49 under S. 148/461/380, Penal Code pending in his Court and that the signature of the accused on the bail bond tallies with his signature on the petition to this Court. Secondly, the signatory Haraprasad Jana is also an under-trial prisoner in Case No. 914 (S) of 49 under Ss. 148, 342, 853, 307, Penal Code and that his signature on the muktearnama tallies with his signature on the petition to this Court. It is clear therefore that the two petitioners are on their trial before a Court of law for offences which may or may not involve trial by a Jury. The S. D. O. has further reported that both the cases are under investigation by the police and that the two petitioners have been enlarged on bail. On receipt of this report we issued the present Rule.

[7] The Ananda Bazar Patrika has been represented before us by Mr. Sudhangsu Sekhar Mookerjee and the Swaraj O Sangathan by Mr. Manmathanath Das. At the hearing of the Rule the petitioners prayed for permission to be represented by Mr. Sisir Kumar Das which was granted and the Government of West Bengal was represented by the Senior Government Pleader.

[8] Mr. S. S. Mookerjee has argued in the first place that the information published in the Ananda Bazar Patrika is too vague to give any indication as to the identity of the case to which it relates, as it does not mention the names of the accused; consequently the publication does not, according to Mr. Mookerjee, amount to contempt of Court. We regret we cannot accept this contention. The publication gives the name of the place of occurrence, the date of the occurrence and also the name of the person whose paddy is alleged to have been looted. This description leaves us in no doubt as to the "cause" to which it relates and under the law that is all that is necessary. What is punishable under the law is comment on a cause while it is pending actually prejudicing or calculated to prejudice any party. If the party is named it adds to the gravity of the offence but the naming of the party is not an essential ingredient.

[9] The second point raised by the Ananda Bazar Patrika is that the publication does not amount to contempt because according to the celebrated utterance of Lord Atkin in the case of Ambard v. A. G. of Trinidad, 40 C. W. N.

801 : (A. I. B. (23) 1986 P. O. 141)

"the path of criticism is a public way: the wrong headed are permitted to err therein provided that members of the public abstain from imputing improper motives to those taking part in the administration of justice Justice is not a cloistered virtue: She must be allowed to suffer the scrutiny and respectful even though outspoken comments of ordinary men."

It was argued that the passage lays down the law with regard to pending cases. If that had been the case, the entire law of contempt of Court in this country would have to be rewritten: but an examination of the facts will show that Lord Atkin was making the observations in connection with a public criticism of a judgment after it had been delivered. A proceeding for contempt was drawn up against the defendant of that case for criticising a judgment which was under appeal, and the proceeding as drawn up included charges of contempt of the appellate Court as well as of the Court of first instance. The Supreme Court of Trinidad and Tobago acquitted the defendant of contempt in respect of the pending appeal but found him guilty of contempt of the Subordinate Court and the appeal to the Privy Council was directed against that order. So the only matter that was before the Judicial Committee was whether the defendant was justified in criticising the judg. ment of the Subordinate Court after it had been delivered and the Privy Council held that he was as he did not exceed the limits of legitimate criticism. This contention must therefore be overruled.

[10] The next argument advanced by Mr. Mookerjee was that the principle enunciated by Jenkins C. J. in the case of Legal Remembrancer v. Motilal Ghose, 41 Cal. 178: 17 C. W. N. 1253: (A. I. B. (1) 1914 Cal. 69: 14 Cr. L. J. 321 S. B.) should apply to the facts of the present case and it should be held that there was no contempt. This case was decided in 1913 long before the enactment of the Contempt of Courts Act (xII [12] of 1926) at a time when there was a considerable doubt as to whether the High Court had any jurisdiction to punish for contempt of a Subordinate Court situate beyond the limits of the Presidency Town. Section 8 of Act XII [12] of 1926 invested the High Courts established by Letters Patent with the same jurisdiction, power and authority in respect of contempt of Courts subordinate to it as it has in respect of contempt of itself. Sir Lawrence Jenkins pointed out that the High Court might possibly have the power to punish for contempt of a Mofussil Court only when the acts complained of amounted to deterring witnesses from giving evidence or prejudicing the Jury. It is fairly clear that the jurisdiction which this Court possesses under Act XII [12] of 1926 is considerably wider than the jurisdiction which it possessed in 1913. On the merits of the Amrita Bazar Patrika case it appears that the conduct of the Criminal Investigation Department was bitterly criticised by the Editor in connection with certain house searches and the treatment of the accused. Sir Lawrence Jenkins observed :

"I am unable to hold that witnesses would be deterred from giving evidence by reason of this attack on the police. I have examined and re-examined the articles to see if they could reasonabley produce this consequence but I come without doubt to the conclusion that they could not."

Mookerjee J. went a step further and said

"I must emphatically repudiate the astonishing proposition that the Criminal Investigation Department is the prosecutor in this case."

It is extremely difficult for us to see how the the facts of the Amrita Bazar Patrika case can have the remotest analogy to the facts of the case with which we have to deal This argument based upon this ruling must accordingly be held to be entirely misconceived.

[11] The fourth point argued by Mr. Mookerji that the contempt, if any, in the present case is of such a technical and trivial character that no action is necessary. Mr. Mookerji has relied upon the cases of King v. Dolan (1907)-2 Ir. R. 260 and Ananta Lal Sing v. A. H. Watson, 35 C. W. N. 189 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 257 : 32 Cr. L. J. 675, in support of this point. The facts of both the cases appear to us to be entirely different from the facts of the present case. In the former case, Mr. Walter Long, a member of the Parliament who had filled many important offices of the State in the past delivered a speech criticising the Parliamentary policy of Mr. Bryce. the then Chief Secretary of Ireland with regard to certain Irish questions and more particularly the attitude of the Parliament in minimising acts of intimidation prevalent in certain parts of Ireland. Mr. Long's point was that on account of the unsatisfactory policy of the Parliament acts of intimidation had become very common and as an illustration of this point, Mr. Long referred to a case recently tried in Ireland in which the Jury had returned a divided verdict on a charge of unlawful assembly and criminal intimidation, as a result of which the presiding Judge discharged the jury and ordered a new trial. Mr. Long concluded his speech by saying that if the Parliamentary policy of the Chief Secretary continued to be what it was, it was not a matter of surprise that the jury would return a divided verdict in an indictment for the offence of criminal intimidation. The speech was extensively reported in certain newspapers as a sequel to which a proceeding for contempt was started both against Mr. Long and the newspapers concerned. The defence of Mr. Long which was accepted by the Court was that his dominant object was political, viz., to bring about a change in the policy of the Parliament and the reference to the case was made incidentally without any realization of the fact that the case was pending in the sense that a new trial had been ordered. In these circumstances the Court held that though technically both Mr. Long and the newspapers had been guilty of contempt no action was required to be taken. A remarkable feature of this case was that the Attorney-General when moved to take action against Mr. Long and the newspapers refused to do so on the ground that the speech as reported could not have any effect upon the jurors. Though the refusal of the Attorney. General was by no means a conclusive or decisive factor in the case-Lord O'Brien L. C. J. observed as follows:

"There is no instance in our books in the whole range of criminal law, from the Year Books to the present day when on a summary motion of this sort, the Attorney General having refused to interfere, the Court inflicted punishment either by committal or by fine."

[12] In the case of Ananta Lal Sing v. A. H. Watson 35 C. W. N. 189: (A. I. B. (18) 1931 Cal. 257: 32 Cr. L. J. 675), the conduct of counsel for the defence in the Chittagong Armoury Raid case was criticised by the Editor of the States. man, because counsel after having made a public declaration of his intention to give up practice at the Bar to devote himself exclusive. ly to the service of the Indian National Congress subsequently accepted the brief of the accused and the Editor of the Statesman ironically asked whether the defence of the accused in that case was a part of the work of the Congress. In a subsequent issue of the Statesman, the Editor expressed his regret if that criticism was interpreted in such a way as to prevent counsel from undertaking the defence and pointed out that his intention was merely political, i. e., to criticise the policy of the Congress party and not to prevent counsel from accepting the brief of the accused. Upon these facts Rankin C. J., pointed out that the action of the Editor was "singularly ill advised" and amounted to a contempt but it was of such a technical character as not to call for any action. Sir George Rankin further pointed out in this case that the law of contempt was the same whether the proceeding pending involved trial by jury or trial by a Judge or Magistrate.

[13] None of the exceptional circumstances present in Dolan's case: (1907-2 Ir. R. 260) or Anant Sing's case: (85 C. W. N. 189: A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 257 : 32 Cr. L. J. 675) appear to be present in the case before us. As we shall presently show, the description of the accused as communists is, in our judgment, certainly a matter of great prejudice in the present political atmosphere of the country and a recommendation for cancellation of their bail bonds is a direct interference with the judicial discretion of the trying Magistrate. It has been said by high authorities that if trials of individuals by Courts of law are not to be replaced by trials by anonymous and irresponsible correspondents of newspapers publications of the present description have to be deprecated.

"Any publication which is calculated to poison the minds of the jurors, intimidate witnesses or parties or to create an atmosphere in which the administration of justice would be difficult or impossible, amounts to contempt."

Again at p. 123:

"It is also clear that a person may be guilty of contempt though there was no intention to commit contempt. It is sufficient if the effect of the article complained of is to create prejudice and to interfere with the due course of justice."

[15] We respectfully propose to apply the above principles to the facts of the present case and the result at which we have arrived can be summarised as follows: (a) The publication commences with the sub-heading "Trouble created by communists" and then goes on to state "the communists looted away about 70 maunds of paddy in broad day light" etc. If we attach to these words their plain and natural meaning without the assistance of laborious commentary the passage means that whoever may have done the act or acts, is a communist. To say that this description does not refer to the accused is to trifle with truth; because whatever doubt may arise upon the opening sentence is completely dispelled by the following sentences where express reference is made to the accused persons. This description, in our judgment, is certainly calculated to create a lot of prejudice against the accused in the mind of the local public and may have the effect of deterring a person from deposing in favour of the defence, if the accused choose to call any defence evidence. (b) The writer then says "At present 50 accused persons who are on bail are creating panic in various ways in the village." This is another attempt to create local prejudice against the accused and amounts to real interference with the course of justice. (c) The writer concludes by saying :

. "It is desirable that either the bail bonds of the accused should be cancelled till their trial is finished or arrangements made for providing police guards."

This passage has the effect of interfering with the free exercise of his judicial discretion by the trying Magistrate.

[16] It cannot and has not been suggested that the anonymous writer of the Ananda Bazar Patrika had any alternative motive of furthering a public or political cause as was held in the cases of King v. Dolan: (1907-2 Ir. R. 260) and Ananta Lal Singh v. A. H. Watson: (35 C.W.N. 189: A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal 257: 32 Cr. L. J. 675). We accordingly hold that the offence in the present case is more than technical and is of such a character as to call for action.

[17] The Editor, printer and publisher of the Swaraj O Sangathan has filed through Mr. Manmatha Nath Das an affidavit expressing sincere regret for the publication of the letter and offering his unqualified apology for the same. In the circumstances of the case we accept this apology under S. 8 of the Act XII [12] of 1926 and direct that he may be discharged.

[18] With regard to the Ananda Bazar Patrika Mr. Mookerjee said in opening the case that in case it was held that the action of his client amounted to contempt and in case it was further held that the contempt was of such a character as to call for action his client was prepared to express regret for what was done through inadvertence and absence of supervision. Before the commencement of the second day of the hearing, we pointed out that if the Ananda Bazar Patrika was sincere in its expression of regret we might at once accept it and dispose of the matter on that footing: but Mr. Mookerjee expressed his embarrassment whereupon he was allowed full opportunities of advancing his arguments on all the points. Mr. Mookerjee was certainly within his rights in placing all the points that could possibly be urged in support of his client and he has done it. At the conclusion of his arguments, Mr. Mookerjee again said that his client was prepared to offer apology and pointed out that the publication was the result of inadvertence and appeared in an obscure place of the newspaper. It is not for us to say whether it is proper for a newspaper of the eminence and influence of the Ananda Bazar Patrika to publish a news item on the basis of a report received from an anonymous reporter over whom, presumably the paper has no control, all that we can say is that if such a report is published it is published at the risk of the Editor, printer and publisher. The essence of the offence being publication, we do not for a moment encourage the belief that lack of supervision is any defence to a proceeding for contempt, but nevertheless, we have to take into account the fact that the present publication may have been the result of an accidental slip over which nobody can have any control. We have accordingly come to the conclusion that the present one is not a case for committal or fine and we accept the apology under 8. 3 of Act XII [12] of 1926; but in the circumstances of the case we direct that the editor, printer and publisher of the Ananda Bazar Patrika, should pay the costs of this proceeding to the two petititioners to be divided equally between them. Hearing fee is assessed at 20 gold mohurs.

(8th September 1949.)

[21] Order.—By consent of the parties expressed through their learned advocates, we order that the Editor, Printer and Publisher of "The Ananda Bazar Patrika" pay to the learned Advocate for the petitioner the amount of the costs including the hearing fee. Mr. Benode B. Haldar is authorised to grant a receipt which, when granted, will be kept on the record.

D.H. Order accordingly.

Tenancy Laws - Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 2-Applicability-Suit for arrears of putni rent-Article applies-Limitation Act (1908), Art. 110.

In a suit for recovery of arrears of putni rent, the relevant provisions for determining the period of limitation are those to be found in Art. 2, Sch. III of the Act; the provisions of Art. 110, Limitation Act, will not be attracted: 23 Cal. 191, Foll.; A I.R. (5) 1918 Cal. 265; 19 Cal. 504 and A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 465, Rel. on; 37 Cal. 747 and A. I. R. (24) 1937 Cal. 587, Dissent. A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 222, Disting.

Judgment.—The only question which arises for decision in this appeal is whether in a suit for recovery of arrears of putni rent the provisions of art. 110, Limitation Act or those of Art 2 of Sch. III, Bengal Tenancy Act will be attracted.

- [2] The plaintiff filed the suit on the 15th April 1944 for the realisation of arrear putni rent due before the said putni was sold under the Putni Regulation on 1st Jaistha 1348 B. S.
- [3] The defence was that a portion of the claim was barred by limitation as the plaintiff was entitled to claim arrears which had accrued due within three years of the filing of the suit. Both the Courts have disallowed the claim for the period antecedent to the Chaitra Kist of 1347 i. e. mid-April, 1941 holding that this suit is governed by Art. 110, Limitation Act. Hence this second appeal on behalf of the plaintiff.
- [4] We shall consider in the first instance the argument advanced on behalf of the appel. lant that art. 2 of Sch. III, Bengal Tenancy Act would apply in this case.
- [5] Section 195, Clause (e) saves the laws relating to putni tenures from the operation of the Bengal Tenancy Act subject to certain limitations. The relevant portion of the section is in the following terms:

Nothing in this Act shall affect

(e) any enactment relating to putni tenures in so far as it relates to those tenures except that

(i) the provisions of S. 67 and of clause (i) of subsection 1 of S. 178 shall apply to all putni tenures and,

(ii) the expression "Khudkast raigat or resident and hereditary cultivator" in sub-section (3) of S. 11 the Bengal Putni Taluk Regulation 1819 shall be deemed to include all raigats having the right to occupancy."

Where the Putni law is silent, the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act may be attracted for supplementing those provisions. There is no provision in the Putni Regulation as to the realisation of rent beyond one year. It was therefore held in Satyasankar v. Monmohan, 43 I. C. 996: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 265), Durgaprosad v. Brindaban, 19 Cal. 504 and Abdul Gaffar v. F. B Downing, 5 Pat. 415 at p. 430: (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 465) that the Zamindar will be entitled to bring a suit for the realisation of the arrears as under the provision contained in the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[6] Section 65 of this Act, practically similar to SS. 11 and 15, Patni Regulation, does not contradict S. 17 of that Regulation. Therefore S 65 applies to putni tenures: Pearymohan v. Sreeram Chandra, 6 C. W N. 794, Basant Kumar v. Khulna Loan Co., 20 C. L. J. 1:

(A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal 24).

[7] Although there are clear decisions to the effect that in spite of the provisions contained in the Patni Regulations, it is open to the landlord to file suits under the provisions contained in the Bengal Tenancy Act for the realisation of arrears, there has recently been an expression of doubt as to the correctness of those decisions. This Bench as constituted is not entitled to go behind the Bench decisions of this Court. I would, however, indicate the nature of the difference and the foundation, if any, in support of either contention.

[8] Section 195, Cl. (e), definitely attracts Ss. 67 and 178 (1) (i), Bengal Tenancy Act for all patni tenures. A long line of decisions, some of which are referred to above, support the view that provisions contained in the Bengal Tenancy Act so far as they did not contradict the specific provisions as in the Patni Regulation, are attracted so far as Putnis are concerned.

[9] The point which arises in the present case is almost similar and founded on the same set of facts as is Burnamoys Dasses V. Burmamoy: Choudhurans, 23 Cal. 191. In that case, the Patni Taluk had been sold and purchased by the landlord on 14th May 1891, but the entire amount due as arrears were not realised from out of the sale proceeds. The landlord filed a suit for the balance arrear of Patni rent as upto the end of the year 1297 B. S, i. e., 12th April 1891. Sir Comer Petherem C. J. and Beaverly J. held that the suit was governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act as contained in S. 184, and Sch. III, Art 2 (d), the period of limitation being three years from the last day of the Bengali year in which the arrear fell

[10] The view that suits for recovery of Patni rent come within the purview of the Bengal

Tenancy Act and are governed by Sch. III thereof, finds support from Basanta Kumar Bose v. Khulna Loan Co., 19 O. W. N 1001: 20 C. L. J. 1: (A. I. B. (2) 1915 Oal. 24), Wazed Ali Khan v. Brojendra Kumar, 36 C. W. N. 893: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 90). A contrary view has been expressed in Jagannath v. Mohiuddin Mirza, 37 Cal. 747: (6 I. C. 871), and Alauddin Ahammed v. Tomizurdin, 41 O. W. N. 1001 : (A. I. R. (24) 1997 cal. 587). An attempt was made by Biswas J. in the last of the cases mentioned above, to distinguish the earlier decisions in the view that either some of the opinions were merely obiter or that the learned Judge dissented from the earlier view. It would have been more satisfactory and in accordance with the Rules if the question had been referred to a larger Bench, if the learned Judge wanted to lay down a proposition contrary to the one which had been held in a long series of cases from at least 1892. Reliance is placed by Biswas J. on the following observation by the High Court which was affirmed by the Judicial Committee in Satya Niranjan Chakravarty v. Suraju Bala Debi 33 C. W. N. 865 at p. 870 : (A. I. B. (17) 1930 P. C. 13):

"This was the creation of a tenancy for the purpose of realisation of rent from the cultivating tenants and therefore the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act apply to it."

[11] This observation was made while interpreting the provisions of the particular Ijara Patta and there is no reference or discussion in the short judgment delivered by the Judicial Committee to this stray sentence in the judgment of the High Court. Consideration which may generally apply in the case of an ordinary Ijara Patta, are not always relevent when the suit is based on a Patni settlement. The lease in the case before Biswas J. was that of a registered Ijara lease for five years. The attempt made by the learned Judge to explain away or even to dissent from the earlier decisions relating to Patni tenures, are with due respect not justified or even supported by the reasons given.

upon on behalf of the defendants is that of the Official Trustee of Bengal v. Bejoy Chand Mahatab, 45 C. W. N. 787: (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 222). The facts in this case, however, are not only peculiar but altogether different from those in the present case. A Patni was sold under the Patni Regulation for arrears of rent for a particular year and purchased by a third party. That sale was set aside and the Patnidar was restored to possession. The Zamindar thereafter filed a suit for the recovery of the arrears of rent and cess for which the Patni had been previously sold, along with arrears for a subsequent period. The defence was that the claim for the arrears for which the previous Patni sale had been held was barred by limitation. The only question argued befere the Court was limited to the question whether Article 110 or Article 115 of the Limitation Act was attracted. Dr. Basak appearing on behalf of the respondent in that case had conceded that the suit was governed by Article 110. In the view that the Patnidar had recovered the Patni with mesne profits from the auction purchaser, it was only equitable that he should pay the amount of rent which was in arrears. The amount of rent did not accrue until the sale of the Patni had been set aside and it was accordingly held that the statute should not run until that time. The Court was, therefore, not called upon to express any opinion on the point which is now in issue in the present case.

[13] I respectfully agree with the view expressed by this Court in Burnamoyi Dasses v. Burmamoyi Choudhurans, 23 Cal. 191 and must hold that the relevant provisions for determining the period of limitation in the present case are those to be found in Art. 2 of Sch. III, Bengal Tenancy Act. The appeal is accordingly allowed and the suit decreed with costs in this Court.

A decision in the mortgage suit that the mortgages went into possession of the property in respect of another loan, which decision was necessary to sustain the decree in that suit, would operate as res judicata in the later proceedings under the Bengal Money-lenders Act wherein the question of the nature of mortgages's possession was at issue: A. In the mortgage suit no interest was claimed on the sums claimed as being due on the mortgages. The total sum decreed together with the interest already paid did not contravene the provisions of S. 30. The sum awarded as interest including the interest already paid was less than the principal of the loans. Amaresh Chandra Roy-for Appellant.

Girija Prasanna Sanyal and Baidyanath Banerjee — for Respondents.

Das J. — This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff and arises out of a suit under S. 36, Bengal Money-lenders Act. The suit has been dismissed by the Courts below. The plaintiff now appeals to this Court.

[2] The facts are more or less admitted and may be stated as follows: On 20th December 1921, the plaintiff borrowed a sum of Rs. 1493 8-0 on a mortgage of certain properties. The interest stipulated to be paid was Re. 1 per cent. per month. On 7th July 1922, the plaintiff again borrowed a sum of Rs. 995. The interest stipulated Re. 1-4-0 per cent. per annum with annual rests. A sum of Rs. 408.15 0 was paid by the plaintiff towards the interest due on the aforesaid mortgages. In 1934 the defendants instituted a suit for recovery of the sums due on the said mortgages. The claim was laid at Rs. 1800 on the first mortgage and a sum of Rs. 700 on on the second mortgage. No interest was claimed. On 12th February 1936, a preliminary decree was passed in the mortgage suit for a sum of Rs. 2773 9.3 on account of principal, and interest. This sum included the claim in the mortgage suit viz: Rs. 2000 and a sum of Rs. 773-9-0 as interest pendente lite. The decree carried interest at 6 per cent. per annum. On 26th August 1936 a final decree was passed. The mortgagees started execution proceedings in 1939 and the mortproperties were brought to sale on 21st September 1942. The plaintiff thereafter brought the present suit for relief under S. 36, Bengal Money-lenders Act. As already stated both Courts have dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

[3] Mr. Roy appearing on behalf of the plaintiff appellant has first contended that after the execution of the mortgages the mortgagees went into possession of Lot No. 8 and certain other lots and profits of these properties should be taken into account. As regards the other lots it appears that the mortgagees purchased the same in execution of a certificate and went into possession. As such, so far as these lots are concerned no question arises as the plaintiff cannot get restoration of possession of these lots, the mortgagees being in possession under independent title. This view is supported by the decision in the case of Kamalakshya Choudhury v. Joychand Lal Babu, 48 C. W. N. 105 since affirmed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Joychand Lal v. Kamalakshay Choudhury, 53 C. W. N. 562 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 239). As regards Lot No. 8, Mr. Roy's contention is that as the defendants-mortgagees possessed the same qua mortgagee in order to find out the sums due on the loans the profits received by the defendants mortgagees should be taken into account and if this amount is taken into account it would appear that the mortgage decree was for a sum which exceeded the limits provided for in S. 30, Bengal Money lenders Act. The case of the defendants mortgagees is that the defendants mortgagees were put in possession not quamortgagee but in satisfaction of their dues in respect of another loan of Rs. 4000 which was due by the plaintiff to the defendants. In order to establish this fact the defendants relied on the decision on this point in the mortgage suit and submitted that this was res judicata between the parties. Mr. Roy on the other hand, contended that the finding in the mortgage suit on thispoint is not res judicata because in order to ascertain the principal of the loan the Court has to enquire in this proceeding what sum was really due as principal of the loan. Mr Roy relies on the decision in the case of Provabati Mitrav. Anil Kumar Das, 47 C. W. N. 645 : (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 629). The facts of that case are somewhat different. In that case in a previous suit the question arose whether a sale of the properties of a minor was justified by legal necessity. The Court in deciding the question of the legal necessity came to the finding that the loan was incurred for purposes of joint family business. Thereafter proceedings were taken under the Bengal Money-Lenders Act. In this proceeding a question arose whether the finding in the previous suit operates as res judicata. This-Court held that as the question was not directly and substantially in issue in the earlier suit the finding that the loan was for business purposes was not res judicata. This decision does not therefore touch the present question. On the other hand in the case of Indra Sekhar v. Rati Kanta Haldar, 50 C. W. N. 703: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 447) it has been held that a decision in the mortgage suit which was necessary to sustain the decree in that suit would operate as res judicata in the later proceedings under the Bengal Money-lenders Act. This decision covers the present point. The first contention raised by Mr. Roy must therefore be overruled.

[4] The second contention raised by Mr. Roy was that as the mortgage decree provided for interest after decree, the decree is liable to be reopened under S. 31, Bengal Money-lenders Act. This question arose in the case of Devraj Ray Pandey v. Lalji Morarji Ranchord, 48 C. W. N. 200. It was held by this Court that if the interest due up to the decree does not contravene S. 30 (1), Bengal Money-lenders Act, the fact that the decree provided for post decree interest is not material. At p. 201 their Lordships make the following observations:

"Section 36 does not give the power to the Court to no open a transaction or a decree simply because the plovision of S. 31, Bengal Money-lenders Act, had be n contravened."

The second contention raised by Mr. Roy must also be overruled.

[6] The third contention raised may be stated as follows: It is argued that as the decree provided for interest pendente lite at 12 per cent. per annum this fact is sufficient to entitle the borrower to re-open the decree. It is to be noted that in the mortgage suit no interest was claimed on the sums claimed as being due on the mortgages. It is also admitted that the total sum decreed together with the interest already paid did not contravene the provisions of S 30. Bengal Money-lenders Act. The sum awarded as interest including the interest already paid is less than the principal of the loans. It is also less than the sum which would be due as interest if interest was calculated on the principal sum advanced at the statutory rate of 8 per cent. per annum. The question therefore is whether the bare fact that the Court awarded interest for the period in suit at 12 per cent. per annum, that is, in excess of the statutory rate of 8 per cent. per annum, entitles the borrower to re-open the mortgage decree. This question arose in the case of Romesh Chandra v. Jnanada Prosanna, 45 O. W. N. 772 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 89) Mukherjee and Roxburgh JJ. were of the opinion that in order to find out whether the interest decreed .contravenes S. 30 (1) the total interest which was allowed by the decree has got to be taken into account. Mr. Roy relies on the decision of this Court in the case of Sanat Kumar v. Pramatha Nath, 48 C. W. N. 551: (A. I. B. (81) 1944 Cal. 825). In that case the appeal arose out of an application under S. 38, Bengal Money-Lenders Act. The facts were that interest had been paid for a certain period at less than the statutory rate and for a certain other period in excess of the statutory rate. The total interest paid did not exceed 8 per cent per annum. In taking the account between the parties this Court held that during the period when interest was paid at more than 8 per cent per annum the excess payment of interest must be taken towards satisfaction of the principal of the loan and the amount should be adjusted on this basis. No decree on the mortgage had been passed. The case therefore came within 8. 30 (1), Bengal Money Lenders Act and not under S. 30 (2), Bengal Money-Lenders Act. Before this Court on behalf of the creditor reliance was placed on the decision in the case of Ramesh Chandra v. Jnanada Prasanna, 45 C. W. N. 772: (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 39), already referred to. Nasim Ali J. delivering the judgment of the Court observed that the facts of that case were different. and that decision was not applicable to the case then before this Court. The decision in the case of Sanat Kumar v. Pramatha Noth (48 C. W N. 551 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 325) therefore doesnot cover the present suit. It may be stated that the decision of this Court in the case of Sanat Kumar Mukherjee v. Pramatha Nath Roy, (48 C. W. N. 551 : A. I. R. (81) 1944 Cal. 325) has since been affirmed by the Federal Court Pramatha Nath v. Sanat Kumar, 53 C. W. N. (F. R.) p. 12 : (A.I.R. (36) 1949 F. C. 60).

[6] The only other case which bears on this question is a decision of Sen J. in the case of Mohini Mahan Roy v. Ashutosh Ghose-Bahadur, 46 C. W. N. 159 : (A.I.R. (29) 1942 Cal. 367). In that case which arose out of proceedingsunder S. 36, Bengal Money-lenders Act, the interest which was awarded upto the date of the preliminary decree did not contravene the provisions of the Bengal Money-lenders Act, but if the interest upto the period of grace was taken into account, the total interest awarded under the decree exceeded the limits imposed by S. 30. Bengal Money-lenders Act. The question that was agitated was whether the interest since thepreliminary decree down to the date fixed for payment is interest within the meaning of S. 2(8), Bengal Money lenders Act. This question was answered in the affirmative by the learned Judge. In so holding Sen J. relied on the decision in the case of Kusum Kumari v. Debi Prosad, 63 I. A. 114:(A.I.R. (28) 1936 P.O. 63) and observed that the contract embodied in the mortgage bond remainseffective up to the period of grace and after that date the matter passes from the domain of contract to the domain of judgment. How far the observations relied on are good law in view of the decision of the Federal Court in the case of Jai Gobind Singh v. Lachmi Narain Ram. 44 C. W. N. (F. R.) p. 21 : (A.I.R. (27) 1940 F. C. 20) is a question with which we are not concerned in this appeal. We may observe that the decision of the Federal Court has since been followed by this Court and the authorities bearing on the point are discussed in the case of Kumar Pramatha Nath Roy v. Ramani Kanta Roy, (unreported decision of this Court in F. A. 186 of 1941). The decision of Sen J., however, did not specifically decide the present question. All that was decided was whether the sum awarded as interest since the date of the preliminary decree down to the date of grace could be regarded as interest within the meaning of the Bengal Moneylenders Act. The view which was taken in the case of Ramesh Chandra v. Inanada Prasanna, 45 C. W. N 772 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 39) is a Bench decision of this Court and having regard to the terms of S 30 (2), Bengal Money lenders Act which speaks of the interest included in the decree, we are not inclined to dissent from it. The third contention raised by Mr. Roy must also be overruled. The result is that this appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Das Gupta J .- This Rule was issued on the District Magistrate of Howrah to show cause why proceedings under Sa. 465/109, Penal Code pending in the Court of Mr. Ghatak should not be transferred to some other Coart. Two persons, Pramatha Harabab and Haradhan Banerjee were summoned under S. 417, Penal Code on a complaint of one Amulya Charan Harabab, filed on 26th July 1948. After the case was transferred to Mr. Ghatak for trial, several witnesses were examined and the present petitioner Suchandra Kumar Samanta was actually examined as a witness on 28th April 1949. On 6th June, an application appears to have been filed on behalf of the complainant that Suchandra and another person should be summoned to take their trial. The order passed by the Magistrate on 6th June does not indicate that the learned Magistrate did read this petition carefully for he appears to have read it only as a petition for examination of the lawyer Bejoy Krishna Roy Choudhury. On 29th June, he discussed the question "whether P. W. 9, Suchandra Kumar Samanta should stand his trial after what has transpired in evidence" and said,

"I am now satisfied that he should be brought to trial, for his complicity with the forged document is beyond question, without of course entering into the merit of it, that is, whether his act was of a bona fide nature. Since he is attached to the Civil Court as a Moharir he should be summoned under Ss. 465/109

Penal Code for to-morrow."

Suchandra appeared on the following date and was released on bail. An application for transfor of the case filed before the District Magistrate failed.

(2) The first question for consideration is whether the Magistrate before issuing summons against the present petitioner under Ss. 465/109, Penal Code had taken cognisance of the case under S. 190 (1) (a), Criminal P. C. or under S. 190 (1) (c), as contended by Mr. Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherji on behalf of the petitioner, or was merely acting under S. 351, Criminal P. C. without having taken cognisance of the case at all under S. 190 (1), Criminal P. C.

(3) There has been some divergence of judicial opinion on this question whether when a person is summoned by the Magistrate on the basis of the evidence he has already heard in the case, he is to be considered as to have taken cognisance under S. 190 (1) (a) or under S. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. C. In the case of Khudiram Mooker. jea v. The Empress, 1 C. W. N. 105, the view was taken that the Magistrate in such a case was proceeding under 8. 191 (c), Oriminal P. C. which is the same as 190 (1) (c) of the present Code. In a later case reported Dedar Bux v. Syamapada Malakar, 18 C. W. N. 921: A. I. R. (1) 1914 Cal. SOI: (15 Or. L. J. 546), Sharfuddin and Teunon JJ. appeared to have taken a different view. In this case a complaint had been filed against several persons under Ss. 342 and 363, Penal Code. The Magistrate ordered the complainant to prove his case but before the date fixed the complainant filed a petition for withdrawal of the complaint. The Magistrate thereafter examined witnesses on the date fixed and found that there was no satisfactory evidence against the persons complained against, but summoned two other persons under Ss. 342, 363 and 353, Penal Code. The Court held that cognisance had been taken under S. 190 (1) (a) of the Code.

[4] It is not necessary for us in this case to decide the question whether one of these two cases, namely, Khudiram Mookerjea v The Empress, 1 C. W. N. 105 or Dedar Bux v. Syamapada Malakar, 18 C. W. N. 921: (A. I. R. (1) 1914 Cal. 801), was wrongly decided. It seems quite clear that the decision in the case of Dedar Bux v. Syamapada Malakar, 18 C. W. N. 921: (A. I. R. (1) 1914 Cal. 801), proceeded on the consideration that under 8. 190 (1) (a), Criminal P. C. cognisance is taken of an "offence" and once cognisance has been taken of an offence, the fact that processes may be issued against certain persons not named in the original complaint does not amount to a fresh taking of cognisance. In that case cognisance had already been taken of an offence under 8s. 842 and 863, Penal Code and two persons who were summoned later on though not named in the petition were summoned to take their trial under these sections, though an additional section was also added. In the present case, the petition of complaint was as regards an offence under 6s. 417/420 read with S. 120B. Penal Code. If the present petitioner had been summoned under any of these sections, there would be scope for the conclusion that cognizance having already been taken of the offence, it was open to the Magistrate to proceed against him without taking any fresh cognisance. Process, however was not issued against this person either under 8. 417 or under 8. 420 but under 8. 465 read with S. 109, Penal Code. It cannot, therefore, be said that cognisance had already been taken of the offence for which the accused was being summoned.

(5) Consequently, unless it could be held that the accused was being proceeded under S. 351, Criminal P. C. the only possible conclusion would be that cognisance had been taken against him under S. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. C.

(6) Under S. 351, Criminal P. C.:

"any person attending a Criminal Court, although not under arrest or upon a summons, may be detained by such Court for the purpose of inquiry into or trial of any offence of which such Court can take cognisance and which, from the evidence, may appear to have been committed, and may be proceeded against as though he had been arrested or summoned."

[7] Two decisions of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, bind, were cited in support of the view that a Magistrate proceeding under S. 351. Criminal P. C. need not at all take cognisance of the offence. As at present advised, I am not inclined to agree with this view. It seems to me that the only effect of S. 351, Criminal P. C. is that the preliminary proce dure of issuing processes under S. 204, Criminal P. C. is dispensed with. Section 351 in terms says that the offence must be one of which the Court can take cognisance. I do not see any justification for reading into this clause the meaning that it is sufficient merely that it should be such that the Court can take cognisance of and that it is not necessary for the Court to take cognisance.

[8] In any case, it seems to me clear that in the present case at least, the learned Magistrate did not proceed under 8. 851, Criminal P. C. He does not himself purport to act under that section and there is no reason why we should ascribe to him the intention of proceeding under the special procedure of 8. 851, Criminal P. C., unless there are clear indications that he did so. Nor did he take any notice of the complaint in the perition filed by the complainant, on 6th June 1949.

[9] My conclusion, therefore, is that the learned Magistrate before issuing process against the present petitioner under 8s. 465/109, Penal Code, had taken cognisance of this offence under 8. 190 (1) (c), Criminal P. O. consequently, since the accused objects to be tried by this learned Magistrate, it is necessary in law that the case should be tried by some other Magistrate. I would accordingly order that the case be transferred by the learned District Magistrate to the file of some other Magistrate and make the rule absolute.

Criminal Revn. No. 666 of 1949, Decided on 15th September 1949.

(a) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), Ss. 363 493 and 534 — Proceedings under S. 363 — Fine cannot be inflicted under S. 493.

Section 534 does not relate to proceedings under S. 363 but to proceedings under S. 493. Hence, in proceedings under S. 363, no fine can be inflicted under the provisions of S. 493. [Para 7]

(b) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923). Ss. 363 and 493—Application under S. 363—Magistrate has no jurisdiction to convert it as one under S. 493.

Where the proceedings have been instituted under S. 363 it is not open to the Magistrate to convert the proceedings to one under S. 493: Cri. Rev. No 285 of 1948, Rel. on; A. I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 36, Expl.

(c) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 363—Magistrate can refuse demolition if it would be against equity and justice—High Court's powers on revision are same as that of Magistrate.

Under S. 363 the Magistrate is not bound to order a demolition even if he finds that a building is unauthorised or that it has infringed the building rules but he has a discretion in the matter. He can refuse demolition if he thinks it would be against equity and justice: 33 Cal. 267 and 34 Cal. 341, Rel on. [Para 11]

The High Court on revision has the power to exercise all the powers which the Magistrate has and it is open to that Court either to order demolition or to prohibit demolition if such demolition has been ordered by the Magistrate: 34 Cal. 341, Rel. on. [Para 11]

Where a party is allowed to be in possession of an unauthorised building for a period of 3 years with full knowledge of the Corporation it is unfair and unjust to direct the party to demolish the building especially where the building bas not infringed any of the building bye-laws of the Corporation and has not affected adversely any rights of the neighbours. Order.— This Rule has been obtained by the petitioners against an order passed by Sri N. K. Ghose, Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta, whereby

Ghose, Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta, whereby the petitioners have been directed to pay a fine of Rs. 100 each, the fine purporting to have been inflicted under S. 493, Calcutta Municipal Act.

(2) The facts briefly are as follows: On 15th September 1948, the Corporation of Calcutta filed an application before the aforesaid Municipal Magistrate under S. 363, Calcutta Municipal Act. The Corporation prayed for the demolition of certain structures constructed at 43 Netaji Subhas Road on the ground that these constructions were made without the sanction of the Corporation and also on the ground that the constructions infringed certain by e-laws framed for buildings under the Calcutta Municipal Act. It was stated in the petition that the Corporation detected this unauthorised building on 10th January 1948. Before the learned Magistrate the persons complained against, that is to say, the present petitioners adduced evidence to show that none of the building regulations had been infringed and the Municipal Magistrate has found in favour of the petitioners on this point.

(3) Next, the petitioners took up the position that the constructions had been made more than five years prior to this petition and that therefore no demolition order could be passed. The evidence on this point was not believed by the learned Magistrate and he has held that the building was constructed in 1945, that is to say, within three years of the application and therefore the Corporation was not tarred from applying for its demolition. The learned Magistrate also found that the building had been made without the sanction of the Corporation. All these finding are now not challenged.

[4] The learned Magistrate after arriving at these findings has held that the unauthorised construction has not injured or in any way affected the rights of the neighbouring owners I may mention here that these proceedings were initiated pursuant to letters written to the Corporation by one Kashi Nath Mallik, witness No. 4 for the Corporation. He complained that his rights regarding air and light have been affected as a result of this unauthorised construction. The learned Magistrate has dealt with this point and has found that the unauthorised building could not possibly affect the rights of this witness regarding light and air inasmuch as his building is mostly a one-storied one and this unauthorised construction was built on the top of the third floor of the petitioners' building. This finding also is not challenged and indeed it could not be challenged.

[5] After arriving at these findings the learned Magistrate took up for consideration what order he should pass in view of the fact that the building was without sanction. He says that having regard to all the circumstances of this case he saw no reason to demolish the building as it affected nobody's rights, but he added that as the building was unauthorised, he should dispose of the proceedings under S. 493, Calcutta Municipal Act and relying on that section he fined the petitioners in the manner stated above.

[6] On behalf of the petitioners, it was argued that no fine under S. 493, Calcutta Municipal Act could be passed by reason of the provisions of S. 534 of the aforesaid Act which says that no person shall be liable to punishment for any offence under this Act or any rule or bye-law made thereunder unless complaint of such offence is made before a Magistrate within three months next after the commission of the offence or if such date is not known after the date on which commission or existence of such offence was first brought to the notice of the Corporation or the Executive Officer. He points out that in this case if the proceedings are considered to be one under S. 493, Calcutta Municipal Act, the learned Magistrate had no power to inflict any fine on the petitioner because the proceedings were started more than three months after 10th January 1948 when according to the petition of the Corporation itself the offence was detected. He points out further that from the letters put in it is clear that the offence was brought to the notice of the Corporation long prior to 10th January 1948, as it was brought to the notice of the City Architect on 24th August 1945 by Kashi Nath Mallik.

[7] On behalf of the opposite party, it is contended that S. 534 of the aforesaid Act has no application as these were not proceedings under S. 493 but proceedings under S. 363 of the aforesaid Act. . Learned counsel pointed out that S. 534 of the said Act dealt with punishment for an offence and that therefore it related to proceedings under 8. 493 which deals with the infliction of a fine and not with the proceedings under S. 863 which deals with a mandatory injunction to demolish a building. He contended therefore that S. 534 of the Act had no application. He further contended that the learned Magistrate was wrong in dealing with the case under S 493 of the Act. I am of opinion that the contention of learned counsel that S. 534 does not relate to proceedings under S. 363 but to proceedings under S. 493 of the Act is sound; but if these proceedings are considered to be proceedings under S. 363, then it follows that no fine can be inflicted under the provisions of S. 493. So, in any case the order of fine passed by the learned Magistrate cannot be upheld. Learned counsel accepts this position and he suggests that the case should be sent back to the Municipal Magietrate with a direction that he should deal with it under the provisions of S. 363, Calcutta Municipal Act.

[8] In my opinion, having regard to the law as it stands, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to treat the application as being one under 8. 493 of the Act. This has been clearly laid down by the Chief Justice in the case of Farrukh Sayer alias Mannoo Miah v. The Corporation of Calcutta, in Criminal Revision No. 285 of 1948 In S. 863 there is a proviso that where the Corporation have instituted proceedings under S. 493, no application shall be made under S. 863. There is a similar proviso in S. 498 which says that where an application has been made under S. 868 or S. 864, no proceedings shall be instituted by the Corporation under S. 493. The proceedings baving been instituted under S. 363 of the Act it was not open to the learned Magistrate to convert the proceedings to one under S. 493. If the parties could not do so, I do not see how the learned Magistrate could do so. The learned advocate for the petitioners referred to the case of Corporation of Calcutta v. Bangshidhar, 41 C. W. N. 1373 : (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 36) which he said supported the view that the Magistrate had the power to convert proceedings under S. 363 to proceedings under 8. 493 although the parties themselves could not do so. I have been through the case and I find that this is what was argued before Biswas J. but Biswas J. did not express any definite opinion on the point. He expressly says so in the judgment. There is therefore only the case decided by the Chief Justice on this point and having regard to the decision in that case and the express words in the provisos of Ss. 363 and 493, I am of opinion that the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to invoke the aid of s. 493 of the Act in these proceedings. To hold that a party could not invoke the aid of S. 493 and that the Magistrate could do so seems to me on the face of it to be illogical.

[9] The learned Magistrate was induced to do this by reason of the conduct of both the parties in this matter. The learned lawyer for the Corporation in his argument stated that "the defendant should be penalised. The Court may pass an order of demolition or impose a penalty under S. 493." This was the conclusion of the argument of the lawyer for the Corporation. Thereafter the learned Magistrate passed an order that the case should be put up for judgment on 1st June 1949. Prior to that date on 24th May 1949 a petition was put in by the present petitioners asking the Court to treat the case as one under S. 493 if the Court held the view that the unauthorised structures were made within five years prior to the institution of this case. No order was passed on this petition, but in the judgment the learned Magistrate seems to have accepted the views expressed by the lawyers of both parties that he had power to deal with this application either in accordance with the provisions of S. 363 or in accordance with the provisions of S. 493. As I have said before the Magistrate had no power to do this. He should have dealt with the application as it was made, that is to say, dealt with it in accordance with the provisions of S. 863.

[10] The next question which arises is what order should be passed in this case. The order for fine obviously cannot stand and it is hereby set aside. The application having been made according to the provisions of S. 863 it must be dealt with in accordance with those provisions.

The learned Magistrate in the major portion of his judgment has dealt with the petition on the footing that it was a petition for action under 8. 363 but it is only at the time of considering what final order he should pass the learned Magistrate said that the fine under S. 493 would be the proper order to pass inasmuch as the building was unauthorised. He held however in the main part of his judgment that no ground had been made out for demolition of the struc. tures. Learned counsel for the Corporation argues that having regard to all the circumstances of this case the case should be sent back to the learned Magistrate and he should be asked to treat it with sole reference to S. 363. He contended that the learned Magistrate refrained from passing an order of demolition because he thought that he had some other power of punishing the petitioner, namely, the power of fining the petitioners namely, under S. 493. He suggested that this was the reason why the learned Magistrate did not order demolition. I have been through the judgment and I am of opinion that this contention is not sound. The learned Magistrate did not refuse to order demolition because he thought he could fine the petitioners. He refused to order demolition on the ground that the structure harmed nobody and that it was just and equitable that demolition should not be ordered. This is what he says:

"I consider where no infringement of the building rules is involved and where as in this case no adjoining owner has been affected, it will be just and equitable for the Court not to make an order of demolition. I, therefore, allow the unauthorised structure to remain."

[11] Thereafter he goes on to say that this is a proper case where a fine should be passed under the provisions of S. 493. Another contention of learned counsel was that under the provisions of s. 363 the Magistrate had no option Once he found that the building was without the sanction of the Corporation, he was bound to order its demolition and he said that the word 'may' ap. pearing in S. 363, should be construed as 'shall'. In my opinion, this contention cannot be supported and it is against two decisions of two Benches of this Court in cases under the old Calcutta Municipal Act, S 449. The words of 8. 449 of the old Act and S. 363 of the present Act so far as this matter is concerned are exactly the same. In both these cases, it was held that the magistrate was not bound to order a demolition even if he found that a building is unauthorised or that it infringed the building rules but that he had a discretion in the matter. I refer to the case of Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta. 33 Cal. 287: (3 Cr. L. J. 211) and to the case of Chuni Lal Dutt v. Corporation of Calcutta, 84 Cal 341: (4 Cr. L. J 408). In both these cases it was held that the magistrate had a discretion in the matter and he could refuse demolition if he thought it would be against equity and justice. In the latter case it was also decided that this Court on revision had the power to exercise all the powers which the Magistrate had and that it is open to this Court either to order demolition or to prohibit demolition if such demolition had been ordered by the learned Magistrate. In this connection I would refer to the observations made by the learned Judges in the case of Chuni Lal Dutt v. Corporation of Calcutta, 34 Cal. 341 at p. 344. I therefore hold that I have jurisdiction to decide whether there should be demolition or not. Upon the evidence which has been adduced I am of opinion that there should be no demolition. The building was constructed so far back as 1945 and it is quite clear from the correspondence between Kashi Nath Mallik and the City Architect that the Calcutta Corporation was apprised of this unauthorised building on 24th of August 1945. The Corporation did nothing during all these years and it was not until 15th September 1948, that they started these proceedings. Where a party is allowed to be in possession of a building for such a period, with full knowledge of the Corporation it seems to me to be unfair and unjust to direct the party to demolish the building especially as the building has not infringed any of the building bye-laws of the Corpora. tion and has not affected adversely any rights of the neighbours. I do not think therefore that there is any necessity for me to send this case back to the Municipal Magistrate for considering whether there should be an order for demolition or not. I hold in agreement with him that the facts would not justify an order of demolition. As the Corporation chose to proceed under 8.363 there can be no other punishment inflicted on the petitioners.

[12] Having regard to what has been said above I set aside the order of fine and make this rule absolute. The fine, if paid shall be refunded.

Abani Mohan Mukerjee — Defendant No. I — Appellant v. Biswanath Mukherjee and others — Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 1 of 1945, Decided on 9th September 1949, against decree of Sub-Judge, 2nd Court, Zillab Howrab, D/- 31st August 1944.

Hindu law—Maintenance — Dayabhaga School —Partition between son and grandson through predeceased son – Maintenance of latter s widow—Charge for, must be placed on her sons' share and not on entire estate.

Under the Dayabhaga School of law the duty of the husband is to maintain his wife and after his death it is the duty of the son to maintain the mother. The son cannot shirk his liability because of the fact that his mother had become a widow during the life-time of his grand-father. Hence the maintenance of a daughter-in-law who has either inherited sufficient property from her husband or has got a son herself who is possessed of property cannot be made a charge on the entire estate left by her father-in law. When, therefore, partition is effected between a son and a grand-son, through a predeceased son, the charge for maintenance for the widow of the predeceased son must be placed on the share allotted to her son and not on the entire estate left by the father-in-law: Case law discussed.

Ranjit Kumar Banerji and Sachindra Chandra

Das Gupta-for Appellant.

Gurudas Bhattachar jee (for No. 1) Deputy Registrar, Biswanth Naskar (for No. 2); Sambhunath Baner ji, Senior, and Manishi Kumar Das (for No. 3)—for respondents.

- R. P. Mookerjee J.—This appeal on behalf of Defendant 1 is directed against a preliminary decree for partition passed by the Subordinate Judge, Howarah.
- (2) The property in suit originally belonged to one Narasinga Mukherjee who died on 16th october 1985, leaving his son Abani Mohan, who is defendant 1 in the present suit and Biswanath, the son of a predeceased son Suranath. Biswanth is the plaintiff and his mother Parul Bala is defendant 2. Biswanath brought the present suit for partition by metes and bounds in respect of his 8 anna share in the joint properties.
- [8] Various points were raised by Abani by way of defence but it is not necessary to refer to all those in the present appeal. The plaintiff's mother, Parul Bala, did not file any written statement. The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the suit declaring an 8 anna share in the suit properties in favour of the plaintiff and defendant 1 respectively. The decree further provided:

"Defendant 2 be declared to have a right of residence in the family dwelling house, and to have a charge therefore on the said properties."

There was a further direction for the appointment of a Commissioner for partition.

- (4) The only point urged before us on behalf of defendant 1 who is the appellant in this Court, is that the right of defendant 2 for maintenance and for residence cannot be made a charge on the entire joint estate. It is only the allotment in favour of the plaintiff which can be charged for the maintenance and residence of his mother, defendant 2.
- [5] At the very outset it ought to be noted that Narasingha died in October 1985 i. e. before the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, 1987, had been passed The provisions of that Act have no retrospective effect and they will not be attracted in the present case. This case is to be decided on the law as it stood before

- [6] The interest of Parul Bala which has to be safeguarded is that for maintenance and residence. The question whether the charge for the maintenance is to be on the entire estate left by her father-in-law or on that portion of the estate which devolves after the partition on her son is to be considered.
- [7] The right of the mother to a share on partition is founded upon the following passage in the Dayabhaga:

"When partition is made by brothers of the whole blood after the demise of the father an equal share must be given to the mother. For the text expresses "the mother should be made an equal sharer" (Ch. II S. 3 para 29.)"

- [8] There is now no doubt that the mother, though not entitled to enforce a partition so long as her sons remain united, is entitled, if a partition takes place between her sons, to receive the share of a son in property which is ancestral. This is the legal position irrespective of the question whether the parties are governed by the Dayabhaga or the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law, (Chowdhury Ganesh Dutt v. Mt. Jewach, 31 1. A. 10 at p. 15: (31 cal. 262 P. O.) Jogendra Chunder v. Fulkumari, 27 cal. 77: (4 O. W. N. 254)).
- [9] The share so allotted to the mother is carved out of the portion given to her sons. Only if the mother has got more than one son that any occasion can arise for a partition amongst her sons. There is no occasion for a mother, with an only son, being allotted a separate share in lieu of maintenance.
- [10] In the case of a partition between sons by different mothers and when more than one mother is alive the procedure to be followed is that the property is to be divided in the first instance into as many shares as there are sons and then to take the share allotted to the sons of a particular mother as one unit and to divide that unit amongst those sons and their mother, the mother getting a share equal to that of each of her sons. The shares allotted to the step-sons is not made responsible for the maintenance of a step-mother who has got her own sons. This has been the law since the days of the supreme Court (Calley Churn Mullick v Janova Dassee 1 Ind. Jurist (NS) 284. Damoodur v. Senabutti, 8 cal. 537 at p. 542 and Kristobhabiney v. Ashutosh, 18 Cal. 39). It is not necessary for us to discuss how far this rule under the Daya. bhaga school is modified under the Mitakshara school as the case now before us is one under the Bengal School. Ramesh Chandra Mitter J., has indicated the points of difference in Damoodur v. Senabutti, (8 cal. 537) referred to above.

by a deceased Hindu by different mothers the maintenance of all the mothers, so long as the estate remains joint, is undoubtedly upon the entire estate. But as soon as there is a partition amongst the sons each mother becomes entitled to maintenance against the share allotted to her own son or sons and she can have no claim against the share of her step-sons. Hemangini Dasi v. Kedar Nath Kundu, 16 I. A. 115 at p. 123: (16 Cal. 758 P. C.), (see also Colebrook's Digest Book V. Chap. 5, v. 89.).

three sons by one and one son by the other, this other widow is not entitled to any separate property upon a partition made between her only son and his three step-brothers; she must look to her son for maintenance out of the share allotted to him on partition. Sree Mottee Jeeomony Dossee v. Atma Ram Ghose, a decision of the Supreme Court referred to by Sir F. Macnaghten in his considerations on Hindu law p. 62.

[14] A sonless step-mother is not entitled to a share on partition between step-sons (Hemangini v. Kedar Nath, 16 I. A. 115: 16 Cal. 758 P. C):

"The right of a widow to maintenance is founded on relationship, and differs from debts. On the death of the husband his heirs take the whole estate, and if a mother on a partition among her sons takes as hare it is taken in lieu of maintenance. Where there are several groups of sons, the maintenance of their mother must, so long as the estate remains joint, be a charge upon the whole estate, but when a partition is made, the law appears to be that their maintenance is distributed according to relationship, the sons of each mother being bound to maintain her. The step-sons are not under the same obligation."

[15] Under the Mitakshara School, however, no distinction is made between a mother and a step-mother (Damoodur v. Senebutti, 8 Cal. 537).

[16] In the present case, however, the predeceased son left an only son Biswanath. Biswanath's mother Parulbala, therefore, is not entitled to a separate share on partition of the joint family property. The question is when a partition is effected between a son and a grandson, through a pre-deceased son, whether the widow of the pre-deceased son must have her maintenance from the share belonging to her son or out of the entire estate. There is no direct autority on this point.

[17] If the right of Parulbala to maintenance is to be on the basis on the relationship between Biswanath and Parulbala, that is, between a son and a mother, there can be no question that her son must be made responsible for the maintenance of his mother.

[18] On behalf of Parul Bala, however, it is urged that her rights are to be considered not as the mother of Biswanath but on the basis of her claim, as the widowed daughter-in-law on the estate of her father-in law, Narasingha. The rule of law is that on the death of a son, during the life time of his father leaving a widow, it is the moral duty of the father-in-law to maintain the widowed daughter-in-law. This moral duty of the father-in-law matures into a legal liability of his heirs when his property descends to the latter. It is for consideration whether the moral duty of the father-in-law to maintain a widowed daughter-in-law is an absolute rule independent of the question whether the legal liability to maintain her is on somebody else or not.

[19] The right to claim maintenance depends upon relationship as indicated in Hemangini v. Kedarnath, 16 I. A. 115: (16 Cal. 758 P. C.). So long as a daughter remains unmarried, the liability is on her father and if at the time of his death she still remains unmarried, the liability is on her brothers or on other persons under certain circumstances. After a daughter is given in marriage and during the life time of her husband the liability for maintenance is on the latter. If the husband dies leaving sufficient property there can be no question that it is against that property that she can prefer a claim for her maintenance. Only if the husband leaves no property or, if her own resources are not sufficient for her maintenance, that the question of enforcing her claim for a maintenance against somebody else arises. It has been held that even when no property is left by the husband, or in case the property in which her husband was a coparcener at the time of his death, is sufficient for her maintenance, she has no legal claim for maintenance either against her father-in-law or against his estate in the hands of his heirs and not even against the husband's relations. (Gangabai v. Sitaram, 1 ALL 170 (F. B.), Savitribai v. Luximibai, 2 Bom. 573 (F. B.) and Baiday V. Natha, 9 Bom. 279).

[20] The moral obligation of the father-in-law to maintain the daughter-in-law was recognised in Kalu v. Kashi Bai, 7 Bom. 127, Meenakshi Ammal v. Rama Aiyar, 37 Mad. 396: (A. I. R. (1) 1914 Mad. 587). But it is no legal obligation. An heir is legally bound to provide out of the estate, which descends to him, maintenance for those persons whom the late proprietor was either legally or morally bound to maintain. (Khetramani Dası v. Kashinath Das, 2 Beng. L. B. (A. C.) 15 at pp. 34, 33: (10 W. R. 89 F. B.), Kamini Dassee v Chandra Pode Mondle, 17 cal. 373). If the husband leaves sufficient property the question of the existence of any moral obligation of the father-in-law, far less of any legal liability on his heirs, cannot arise.

(21) Neither any text nor any authority has been placed before us in support of the proposition that the maintenance of a daughter-in-law who has either inherited sufficient property from her husband or has got a son herself who is possessed of property is to be made a charge on the entire estate left by her father in law. The principles underlying the law of maintenance under the Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law clearly fix the liability on different persons dependent on different sets of circumstances. The responsibility of the father-in-law to maintain a widowed daughter-in-law is contingent upon the fact that his son has left no sufficient separate property for her maintenance. liability of a son to maintain his mother cannot be got rid of or modified by introducing the rule which makes a father-in-law under certain circumstances liable for the maintenance of a daughter-in-law. The primary responsibility depends on the relationship between the mother and the son. There can be no question of certain other relations being also made liable or responsible for the same. It is not merely the presence of certain relations but it may some times be the capacity of such relations to maintain which will have to be considered.

[22] When, therefore, a person dies during the life time of his father leaving a widow and a son, such widowed daughter-in-law and the grandson become entitled under the Dayabhaga School of law to maintenance from the father of the predeceased son. This is so as under the Dayabhaga School of law as the son at the time of his death had no right to any chare of the ancestral property in the hands of his father. Under the Mitakehara School of law, the position may be different, as even after the death of his father the son continues to be a member of the co-parcenary and the latter is entitled, as of right, to participate in the income of the coparcenary property and the widowed daughterin-law is, of right, entitled to maintenance out of the co parcenary estate,

[23] Under the Dayabhaga School of law, it is the duty of the father to maintain the daughter so long as she is unmarried. The duty of the husband is to maintain his wife and after his death it is the duty of the son to maintain the mother. The son cannot shirk his liability because of the fact (sic) his mother had become a widow during the life time of his grandfather.

[24] The charge for maintenance for Parul Bala must, therefore, when the ancestral estate is being partitioned, be placed on the share allotted to her son Biswanath and not the entire estate left by Narasingha. The direction given in ordering portion of the judgment by the Trial Court must, therefore, be set aside.

[25] The appeal is accordingly allowed in part. The judgment and decree passed by lower Court be varied to this extent only that defendant 2 Parul Bala be declared to have the right of maintenance from Biswanath and the right of residence in the family dwelling house in the portion allotted to Biswanath and to have a charge on the allotment made in favour of the plaintiff Biswanath. There will be no order for costs in this Court.

[26] P. N Mitra J. - This case, in my opinion, is governed by the principle laid down in Hemangini v. Kedar, 16 I. A. 115: (16 cal. 758 P. C.). When Suranath died during the life-time of his father Nara Singha, the latter came under a moral obligation to maintain his widowed daughter-in-law Parulbala. On Nara Singha's death his estate devolved on his son Abani Mohan and his grandson Biswanath and the moral obligation which had rested on Nara Singha to maintain Parulbala matured into a legal liability of his heirs when his estate devolved on them. This liability could be enforced against the entire estate of Nara Singha in their hands so long as the estate remained undivided amongst them. When, however, they proceed to partition the estate amongst them, the principle laid down in the case of Hemangini v. Kedar, 16 I. A. 115: (16 Cal. 758 P. O.) comes into play. In that case the question was whether on a partition taking place between her son and stepsons of property inherited by them from her husband, a co widow's maintenance was to remain a charge on the entire estate of his husband or was to be a charge only on the portion allotted to her son, and it was held that it would be a charge only on the latter. The principle is that the two groups of sons become separate families on the partition, and each mother is a member of the family comprising her own son or sons and must thenceforth look to her own family for her maintenance. No distinction can on principle be drawn, in my opinion, between the case of property inherited by sons by different mothers and the case of property inherited by a son and a grandson by a pre-deceased son. A pre deceased son's widow, whose maintenance became a charge on the entire estate of the father-in-law on his death and whose son stands in the shoes of his father and inherits the share which his father, if then alive, would have inherited, cannot stand in a higher position than a co-widow having a son. Parulbala, in my opinion stands in the same position as Hemangini did in the case referred to above. Just as Hemangini had on the partition to look to her son's share for her maintenance, so Parulbala on the partition must look to Biswanath's share for her maintenance. And the right of residence must stand on the same footing as the right to maintenance. For these reasons I agree with the decree proposed by my learned brother.

Civil Rule No. 19 of 1949, Decided on 7th September 1949, against order of Dist. Judge, Birbhum, D/- 28th September 1948.

Debt laws—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936), S. 37 A (1) (b) (iii)—Non-occupancy holding—Transferee of, has no locus standi to apply under S. 37A.

The liability contemplated by the clause has reference to the liability of the tenant vis a vis the landlord and not merely as between the tenant and his cosharers. By reason of a transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding the transferee does not become liable to pay the rent due since the transfer to the landlord. In this view, the transferee cannot be said to be liable with any other person for the arrears of rent due to the landlord. The condition mentioned in S. 37A (1) (b) (iii) is not therefore fulfilled in such a case. The transferee therefore has no locus stands to make the application under S. 37A: A. I. R. (6) 1919 Cal. 167, Rel. on. [Para 4]

Hari Prosanna Mukher jee-for Petitioner.

Lala Hemanta Kumar and Purushottam Chatter jes — for Opposite Party Nos. 2 and 1, respectively.

Order.—This rule was obtained by an applicant under S. 37A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act and is directed against an order dated 28th september 1948 passed by the learned District stated as follows: The disputed land formed part of a non-transferable occupancy holding which was held under the opposite party No. 1. On 10th March 1927 one Panchanan Singh, the predecessor-in-interest of the petitioner, purchased a share in the said holding. In execution of a certificate for arrears of rent obtained by the landlord opposite party No. 1 against the recorded tenant, the disputed holding was brought to sale on 22nd November 1938 and was purchased by the certificate holder. Thereafter the purchaser at the certificate sale took possession on 2nd July 1942. To these proceedings Panchanan Singh or the present petitioner was not made a party, presumably because the purchase by Panchanan Singh was not recognised by the landlord. After the coming into operation of S. 37A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act an application was filed under that section by the present petitioner who had succeeded to the interest of Panchanan Singh on 24th May 1943. On 31st January 1945 opposite party No. 2 was impleaded as an occupant in possession. The proceedings under S. 37A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act continued before the Special Debt Settlement Board. The application was ultimately allowed by the Board. An appeal was taken against the decision of the Board. The appeal was dismissed. Against the order of the Appellate Officer the opposite party moved the District Judge who allowed the same. A petition in revision against the order of the District Judge was filed in this Court and a rule was obtained which was registered as C. Rule 412 of 1948. This rule was heard by Mukherjee J. on 28th August 1948. The rule was made absolute, the order of the learned District Judge was set aside and the case was remitted to the learned District Judge for a decision of the other points which arose on the petition filed before the District Judge which had not been previously disposed of by him. After the matter went back on remand, the learned District Judge held that the petitioner being the successor-in-interest of transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding had no locus standi to make the application in view of the terms of S. 37A (1) (b) (iii). The reason given was that Panchanan Singh or his successor, the present petitioner had not been recognised as a tenant and therefore it could not be said that the petitioner or Panchanan Singh was jointly liable with any other person in respect of a debt for arrears of rent. It is the propriety of this order which is challenged in this Rule.

[3] The question which arises in this rule turns on the interpretation of S. 87A (1) (b) (iii) which runs thus:

"before the commencement of the Bengal Agricultural Debtors (Amendment) Act 1940, in the case of a debt for arrears of rent in respect of which such person was liable jointly with any other person."

[4] In order to ascertain the meaning of the words "was jointly liable with any other person in respect of a debt for arrears of rent" the primary question is whether the liability contemplated by the clause has reference to the liability of the tenant, and his co-sharers inter se or whether the liability is one vis a vis the landlord. Section 2, cl. (15), Agricultural Debtors Act says that the words "landlord", "rent" and "raiyat" shall bear the same meaning as these words bear in the Bengal Tenancy Act. When therefore 8, 87A (b) (iii) speaks of joint liability for arrears of rent the obvious implication is that the liability is one vis a vis the landlord and not merely as between the tenant and his co-sharers. This view also receives support from S. 37A cl. (5) where it is stated that the applicant is required to pay the sum due under the award in certain instalments and also to continue to pay the current rent to the landlord. The section therefore connotes that the liability for arrears of rent should be a liability towards the landlord. Under the old S. 73, Bengal Tenancy Act, in case of a transfer of an occupancy holding either in whole or in part the transferor and the transferee became jointly liable for the rent due in respect of the occupancy holding since the transfer. It was held in the case of Jatindra Nath v. Binode Behari, 52 I. C. 289: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Cal. 167) that the old S. 73, Bengal Tenancy Act had no application to non-transferable occupancy holdings. By reason of the transfer therefore the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding did not become liable to pay the rent due since the transfer to the landlord. The definition of the words "landlord", "tenant" and "raiyat" in the Bengal Tenancy Act which applies to the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act also indicates that the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding cannot be regarded as jointly liable with the old co-sharer tenants for rent. In this view it cannot be said that Panchanan Singh or his successor-in-interest, the present petitioner was liable with any other person for the arrears of rent due to the landlord. The condition mentioned in S. 37A (1) (b) (iii) has not therefore been fulfilled in the facts of the present case. The view taken by the learned District Judge is, therefore, correct. The applicant has no locus standi to make the application under S. 87A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act.

[5] This rule must therefore be discharged but in the circumstances of this case I make no order as to costs.

A. I. R. (37) 1950 Calcutta 147 [C. N. 45.] HARRIES C. J.

Messrs. Badruddin and Sons — Appellant v. Corporation of Calcutta — Respondent.

Oriminal Appeal No. 151 of 1949, Decided on 9th November 1949.

(a) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 533 — Accused absent at adjourned hearing—Case not covered by S. 533 — Conviction in accused's absence is bad.

Under S. 533 if the accused fails to appear at the first hearing, that is, at the time and place mentioned in the summons the Magistrate may proceed in his absence. But if the accused fails to appear at some subsequent hearing then the case does not fall within the words of S. 533, because he does not fail to appear at the time and place mentioned in the summons. Hence where an accused person failed to appear at an adjourned hearing of a case and the Magistrate proceeded in his absence and convicted him, the conviction is bad: A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 589, Foll.; A. I. R. (24) 1937 Cal. 218 and A. I. R. (32) 1945 Cal. 103, Rel. on. [Para 6]

(b) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923)S., 386 (1) (a)—Electroplating does not fall within Sch. XIX — No offence to carry on such business without licence.

Electroplating is not the manufacture of chemical preparations within Item (8), Sab. XIX. It is merely covering copper or some such metal with a thin film of silver or nickel and this is done by electrolysis. This business does not fall within Sch. XIX and therefore it is not an offence to carry on such a business without a licence.

[Para 8]

(c) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 488 (2)—Previous wrong conviction—Subsequent conviction under S. 488 (2) for continuing to do act for which accused was wrongly convicted is illegal.

Where the accused had been previously wrongly convicted then he cannot be convicted under S. 488 (2) for continuing to do the act for which he was wrongly convicted. Sub-section (2) provides, 'whoever, after having been convicted of any offence continues to commit such offence.' That obviously must mean being rightly convicted.

[Para 10]

Sudhangsu Sekhar Mukherjee and Mihir Kumar Sarkar - for Appellant.

Pashupati Ghose — for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from an order of a Municipal Magistrate convicting the appellant of an offence under S. 386 (1) (a), Calcutta Municipal Act read with Sch. 19 of the Act.

- [2] The charge was that the appellant conducted the business of electroplating or nickelplating at certain premises without the necessary permission or license from the Corporation.
- [3] It seems that two previous prosecutions had been brought against the appellant and in each case he had pleaded guilty and was convicted. On this occasion, however, he pleaded not guilty. He was found guilty by the learned Magistrate, convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 25 per diem over a period of time.
- [4] Mr. Sudhangshu Mukherjee has taken a number of points and I shall deal with the points seriatim. He first contended that the trial was invalid by reason of the fact that the Magistrate on one day heard the case or arguments in the case in the absence of the accused person. It appears that on 19th May which was a date to which the hearing had been adjourned the accused was absent and a medical certificate was tendered with a view to showing that he was too ill to attend. The learned Magistrate did not accept this explanation and insisted on proceeding with the case.
- [5] Normally a criminal trial cannot proceed in the absence of the accused, but there is a special provision in the Calcutta Municipal Act, namely, S. 533 which is as follows:

"If any person summoned to appear before a Magistrate to answer a charge of an offence against this Act or against any rule or by-law made thereunder fails to appear at the time and place mentioned in the summons, the Magistrate may, if—

(a) Service of the summons is proved to his satisfaction and

(b) no sufficient cause is shown for the non-appearance of such person, hear and determine the case in his absence."

[6] It is quite clear that if the accused fails to appear at the first hearing, that is, at the time and place mentioned in the summons the Magistrate may proceed in his absence. But if the accused fails to appear at some subsequent hearing then the case does not fall within the words of S. 533, because he does not fail to appear at the time and place mentioned in the summons. It has been held by a Bench of this Court, to which I was a member, in the case of Ashutosh Roy v. Corporation of Calcutta, A. I R. (36) 1949 Cal. 589 : (53 C. W. N. 847), that where an accused person failed to appear at an adjourned hearing of a case and the Magistrate proceeded in his absence and convicted him the conviction was bad as the case was not covered by S. 533, Calcutta Municipal Act. This case followed earlier cases of this Court: Kusum Kumari Debi v. Corporation of Calcutta, A. I. R. (24) 1937 Cal. 218 : (38 Cr. L. J. 632) and Bhupendra Nath Roy v. Corporation of Calcutta, 48 C. W. N. 630 : (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Cal. 103 : 46 Cr. L. J. 480). Quite clearly, I am bound by these authorities and therefore must hold that the learned Magistrate could not at the adjourned hearing proceed with this case in the absence of the accused and that being so the whole trial is vitiated and the conviction must be set aside.

"No person shall use or permit to be used any premises for any of the following purposes without or otherwise than in conformity with the terms of a license granted by the Corporation in this behalf,

(a) any of the purposes specified in Sch. 19."

[8] It appears to me that the business of electroplating cannot fall within any of the items in Sch. 19 and the learned Magistrate has not found that this business falls within the ambit of Sch. 19 at all. Learned advocate for the Corporation suggested that possibly this business might fall within item (8), namely, manufacturing chemical preparations. But electropating is not the manufacture of chemical preparations It is merely covering copper or some such metal with a thin film of silver or nickel and this is done by electrolysis. It seems to me that this business does not fall within sch. 19 and therefore it is not an offence to carry on a business without a licence.

[9] Learned counsel for the Corporation however stated that it was wholly unnecessary to show in this case that the business fell within sch. 19, because this was a continuation of operations for which the accused had already been convicted. He relied upon S. 488, Calcutta Municipal Act, which is in these terms:

"(1) Whoever commits any offence by

(a) contravening any provision of any of the sections, sub-sections, clauses of sections, provisos or rules of this Act mentioned in the first column of the following table, or

(b) contravening any provision of any rule made under any of the said sections, sub-sections, clauses, or provisos, or

(c) failing to comply with any direction lawfully given to him or any requisition lawfully made upon him or under any of the said sections, subsections, clauses, provisos or rules, shall be punished with fine which may extend to the amount mentioned in that behalf in the third column of the said table.

(2) Whoever, after having been convicted of any offence referred to in clauses (a), (b) or (c) of sub-s. (1), continues to commit such offence shall be punished, for each day after the first during which he continues so to offend, with fine which may extend to the amount mentioned in this behalf in the fourth column of the said table."

[10] Learned advocate for the Corporation contends that as the accused had been previously convicted the Court could go on convicting him by reason of S. 488 (2), Calcutta Municipal Act. In my view, however, if the accused had been! wrongly convicted then he cannot be convicted for continuing to do the act for which he was wrongly convicted. Sub-section (2) provides "Whoever, after having been convicted of any offence continues to commit such offence." That, I think, obviously must mean being rightly convicted. All that one can say here is that the accused was convicted but not for an offence under the Act. He was wrongly convicted of an offence under the Act and it appears to me that a man who has been wrongly convicted cannot be convicted thereafter for merely continuing to do that for which he was wrongly convicted. If it is shown that he was wrongly convicted, then he cannot be convicted for continuing to do that Act. It is quite clear that this business did not fall within sch. 19, and that the appellant wrongly pleaded guilty and was wrongly convicted. He has now been advised, and it seems to me quite clear, that as he was wrongly convicted 8. 488, Calcutta Municipal Act, cannot possibly cover the case. That being so the Corporation cannot get any assistance from 8. 488.

[11] Lastly Mr. Sudhangsu Mukherjee contended that the prosecution was barred by limitation and he relied upon S. 534, Calcutta Municipal Act. Shortly that section provides that if the offence with which an accused is charged is continuous in its nature, the prosecution must be brought within three months from the date on which the commission or existence of such offence was first brought to the notice of the Corporation or the Executive Officer. Mr. Mukherjee has urged that there is here evidence that the offence was brought to the notice of the Corporation on 22nd September 1948, and indeed he was prosecuted for an offence committed on that day and succeeding days. The present prosecution was not launched until 2nd March 1949 and therefore it is urged that it was beyond three months of the date upon which the commission of this offence was brought to the notice of the Corporation or its Executive Officer. However, it appears to me that this period of limitation cannot apply where a charge could rightly be made under a section read with S. 488. Otherwise, very little scope would be given for a prosecution under S. 488 (2). It seems to me that the period of limitation in 8. 684 is the period prescribed for the first prosecution. But it is not necessary to consider the point any further, because I am satisfied that the conviction cannot be maintained for the reasons already given.

[12] In the result, therefore, I would allow this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit the appellant. If the fine or any part thereof has been paid such must be refunded forthwith.

Harries C. J. — This is a petition for revision of an order made by a learned Subordinate Judge of Asansol ordering the defendants to supply certain particulars of the written statement filed by them.

[2] A suit was filed by the plaintiffs in the Court of the Subordinate Judge in which they prayed for the cancellation of a lease dated 21st May 1946, executed and registered by a predecessor of the plaintiffs. It was alleged that on 22th April 1946 the predecessor of the plaintiffs as karta of a joint family entered into an agreement with defendant 2 for the grant of a lease of certain coal bearing lands. On 21st May 1946, this lease was actually executed by the predecessor of the plaintiffs.

[3] The plaintiffs alleged that at the time of the agreement another lease was produced and it was agreed that the terms of the proposed lease would be the same as those in the lease which was produced. Defendant 2, it is said, was to draft the lease which he did. The allegation is that he presented a draft lease to the plaintiffs' predecessor representing that its terms were in accordance with the lease which had been produced by the plaintiffs earlier. The plaintiffs relying upon the representation executed the lease which was later registered, but then found that the terms were very different from the terms of the lease which were to be copied in the lease in question.

tions and it was pleaded that the final draft was actually settled by the plaintiffs' own pleader and that the pleader was present when the lease was executed and registered. Unfortunately, however, in the written statement a good deal of matter was pleaded which was in fact nothing more than evidence. The application for particulars was an application for particulars of these statements which really amounted to the pleading of evidence. The defendants however invited this application by pleading in the manner in which they did.

of the matter in a rough and ready method. He seems to have held that particulars could be ordered of any matters within the knowledge of the defendants, whereas particulars could not be ordered of any matters known to the plaintiffs. This appears to me to be a somewhat odd rule to apply on the question of particulars. Strictly, many of these allegations made in the written statement should have never been there as they merely amounted to a statement of the evidence which the defendants proposed to produce. That being so, I do not think that on the merits any of the particulars should have been ordered.

[6] The Advocate-General however on behalf of the plaintiffs has contended that this Court cannot interfere by way of revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. and his argument is that at most all that can be said is that the learned Subordinate Judge decided this application wrongly, and such a decision does not give this Court a right to interfere in revision.

[7] Order 6, R. 2, Civil P. C. provides:

"Every pleading shall contain, and contain only, a statement in a concise form of the material facts on which the party pleading relies for his claim or defence, as the case may be, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved, and shall, when necessary, be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively. Dates, sums and numbers shall be expressed in figures."

[8] As I have already stated, the written statement offends against R. 2 of O. 6 in that the defendants pleaded evidence which the rule forbids them to do.

[9] Order 6, R. 5 provides:

"A further and better statement of the nature of the claim or defence, or further and better particulars of any matter stated in any pleading, may in all cases be ordered, upon such terms, as to costs and otherwise, as may be just."

[10] The learned Advocate-General has contended that if the learned Subordinate Judge has erred in this case, which he does not concede, he merely erred in applying the provisions of O. 6, R. 5. In other words, he failed to decide the case in accordance with this rule, but decided it wrongly and not in accordance with law. That, the learned Advocate General contends, does not give this Court a right to interfere under S. 115, Civil P. C.

[11] Section 115, Civil P. C. is in these terms:

"The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such subordinate Court appears —

(a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or

(b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested,

(c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit.

[12] Mr. Atul Gupta on behalf of the petitioners does not contend that this case comes within 8.115 (a) or (b). He has urged however that the case falls within 8 115 (c) as the learned Subordinate Judge acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally. There can be no doubt that the learned Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to entertain this application and no complaint can be made that he did entertain it. All that can be said is that he did not decide the application correctly and that he ordered particulars to be given by the defendants where such particulars ought not to have been ordered. The question arises whether in those circumstances it can be said that the learned Subordinate Judge acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally. If a Judge who decides a case wrongly and not in accordance with law can be said to act in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally then the present case would fall within S. 115 (c), Civil P. C. But it has been expressly held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a Court has jurisdiction to decide a case not only rightly but wrongly. In Rajah Amir Hassan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh, 11 I. A. 237: (11 cal. 6 P. C.). it was held by their Lordships that where the Judges of the lower Courts have jurisdiction to decide a question and decide it, no appeal lying from such decision, the Judicial Commissioner has no power under S. 622 of Act X [10] of 1877, as amended by 8.92 of Act XII [12] of 1879 (similar to S. 115), to call for the record of the case and pass an order therein, unless the Judges of the lower Court bave acted illegally or with material irregularity. At page 239 Sir Barnes Peacock, who delivered the judgment of the Board, observed:

"But S. 622 of Act X (10) of 1877 enacted that "the High Court", and in this respect the Judicial Commissioner, exercises the same powers as the High Court— 'may call for the record of any case in which no appeal lies to the High Court if the Court by which the case was decided appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, and may pass such order in the case as the High Court thinks fit'. By S. 92 of Act XII (12) of 1879 that section was amended by the insertion after the words 'so vested' of the following words, 'or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity.' The question then is, did the Judges of the lower Courts in this case, in the exercise of their jurisdiction, act illegally or with material irregularity. It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case; and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material that the Board were considering the meaning of the words "or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity," the words which appear in S. 115 (c). Their Lordships held that deciding a case wrongly was not acting in the exercise of jurisdiction illegally. The meaning of that phrase was the only point before the Board and the case is a clear decision on the question as to whether or not a Court can be said to have jurisdiction to decide a case or a point wrongly. The decision establishes beyond all doubt that a Court has jurisdiction to decide a case rightly

[14] The meaning of S. 115 was again considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar, 44 I. A. 261: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 71). At page 267 Lord Atkinson who delivered the judgment of the Board observed:

"As to the preliminary objection, S. 115, Civil P. C., enables the High Court, in a case in which no appeal lies, to call for the record of any case if the Court by which the case was decided appears to have acted in the exercise of a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or to have failed to have exercised a jurisdiction vested in it, or to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, and further enables it to pass such an order in the case as the Court may think fit.

It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

[15] Again the Board make it clear that the section is not concerned with erroneous conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. In the present case no question of jurisdiction is involved. All that was involved was whether in the circumstances certain particulars should be ordered or not. It seems to me that a wrong decision upon this question has nothing whatsoever to do with jurisdiction and cannot be revised under S. 115, Civil P. C.

[16] Mr. Atul Gupta, however, referred to two very recent cases decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, the first being N. S. Venkatagiri Ayyangar v. Hindu Religious Endowments Board, Madras, 76 I. A. 67: (A. I. R. (86) 1949 P. C. 156). In that case a Bench of the Madras High Court consisting of Mockett and Kuppuswami Ayyar JJ. in revision had interfered with the order of a subordinate Court. Mockett J. was of the view that the decision of the case depended entirely on the construction of a certain will. He considered that the conclusion of the learned Judge on the cons. truction of the will was so entirely out of accord with the meaning of the document that it required interference by the High Court and that the wrong construction put on the will by the learned District Judge involved such material misuse of jurisdiction as to involve interference by the High Court. Kuppuswami Ayyar J. in a concurring judgment expressed the view that the High Court was justified in interfering in revision under sub-cl. (c) of S. 115, Civil P. C.

[17] In this case it seems clear that in the view of the High Court the learned District Judge had clearly decided the case wrongly. He had misconstrued a will and had been guilty, in the view of the High Court, of a serious error of law, the error being so serious that according to Mockett J. it was a material misuse of jurisdiction. Their Lordships of the Privy Council, however, held that the case did not fall within s. 115, Civil P. C. and allowed the appeal and restored the order of the District Judge. At p. 73 Sir John Beaumont who delivered the judgment of the Board observed:

"Section 115 applies only to cases in which no appeal lies, and, where the legislature has provided no right of appeal, the manifest intention is that the order of the trial Court, right or wrong, shall be final. The section empowers the High Court to satisfy itself on three matters, (a) that the order of the Subordinate Court is within its jurisdiction; (b) that the case is one in which the Court ought to exercise jurisdiction; and (c) that in exercising jurisdiction the Court has not acted illegally, that is, in breach of some provision of law, or with material irregularity, that is, by committing some error of procedure in the course of the trial which is material in that it may have affected the ultimate decision. If the High Court is satisfied on those three matters, it has no power to interfere because it differs, however, profoundly, from the conclusions of the subordinate Court on questions of fact or law. No such matters arose in this case, and the order of the High Court on the petition was without justification."

John Beaumont's paraphrase of S. 115 (c). Sir John Beaumont reads it as meaning "that in exercising jurisdiction the Court has not acted illegally, that is, in breach of some provision of law." Mr. Gupta has contended that in the present case the learned Subordinate Judge in exercising jurisdiction acted illegally, that is, in breach of the provisions of O. 6, R. 5. That being so, it is urged that the case clearly falls within S. 115 (c).

[19] It is unnecessary for this Court to decide exactly what this phrase used by Sir John Beaumont actually means. But I think it is clear that it does not mean that a case falls within S. 115 (c) because the Court has decided a point not in accordance with law if the point does not involve jurisdiction. That I think is clear from the concluding words of Sir John Beaumont where he points out that if the High Court is eatisfied on the three matters to which he has referred, it has no power to interfere because it differs, however, profoundly, from the conclusions of the Subordinate Court on questions of fact or law. In other words, this Court cannot interfere even if it is of opinion that the decision of the Subordinate Court is grievously wrong either in law or in fact, unless of course the mistake concerns jurisdiction. Further it is clear that Sir John Beaumont could not possibly have meant that deciding a case wrongly is within the provisions S. 115 (c), because there is an express decision of the Board to the contrary.

[20] Reference was also made to a more recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Joy Chand Lal Babu v. Kamalaksha Chaudhury, 53 C. W. N. 562: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 239). In that case a subordinate Court dismissed an application under Ss. 30 and 36 (a) (ii), Bengal Money-lenders Act, 1940, on the view that loan in question was a commercial loan within the meaning of the Act and the High Court disagreeing with the lower Court held that the loan was not a commercial loan and set aside the aforesaid order. Their Lordships held that the High Court had power to interfere in revision under sub-s. (b) of S. 115, Civil P. C. At p. 566 Sir John Beaumont who delivered the judgment of the Board refers to the case of Rajah Amir Hassan Khan, 11 I. A. 237: (11 Cal. 6 P.C.) and the case of Balakrishna Udayar, (44 I. A. 261 : A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 71) and states that the principle laid down by those cases is firmly established. He then pro-

"A Court has jurisdiction to decide a case wrongly as as well as rightly. Mr. Pringle maintained that the learned Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to decide that the loan was a commercial loan and in so doing he did not act illegally or with material irregularity, and the High Court had no power to interfere in revision merely because it disagreed with his decision. So far Mr. Pringle is on safe ground, but the learned Subordinate Judge having held that this was a commercial loan, was bound to go on to consider what effect that decision had upon the respondent's application, and, since the Act in terms does not apply to commercial loans, the learned Judge was bound, upon his finding, to dismiss the application without determining whether or not the respondents brought themselves within Ss. 30 and 36 of the Act as they claimed to do. In so doing, on the assumption that his decision that the loan was a commercial loan was erroneous, he refused to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law, and it was open to the High Court to act in revision under sub-s. (b) of S. 115."

[21] It is to be observed that this is not a case of S. 115 (c) at all. It was contended that the decision of the subordinate Court that the loan was a commercial loan was at most a wrong decision which gave this Court no right to interfere. However, their Lordships pointed out that it was a decision relating to jurisdiction. A decision that a loan was a commercial loan made it impossible for the learned Judge to consider the application under Ss. 30 and 36, Bengal Money-lenders Act as that Act did not apply to commercial loans. The effect of the finding was that the subordinate Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in it. Therefore the case fell within S. 115 (b) and the High Court rightly interfered.

[22] In the present case there is no question that the Court by some erroneous finding exercised or failed to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it. Admittedly it had jurisdiction to entertain this application and admittedly it entertained it. All that can be said is that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge was clearly erroneous. That, however, does not bring the case within the purview of S. 115, Civil P. C. and that being so, I am bound to hold that no revision lies.

[23] In the result, therefore, I would dismiss this application and discharge the Rule with costs.

Sarkar J.—I agree.

A. K. Hazra-for Plaintiffs.

Asoke K. Sen and S. Roy-for Defendant.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs in this suit claim to be sub-tenants in respect of certain portions of the premises in suit. Defendant 1 is the superior landlord and defendants 2 and 3 are alleged to be the tenants of such superior landlord.

[2] This is a suit by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the order for possession of the Small Causes Court, Calcutta, dated 2nd March Chandra Ghose and Lalan Chandra Ghose (hereinafter referred to as the Ghose defendants) does not bind the plaintiffs and for a declaration that the plaintiffs are the sub-tenants of the premises in suit entitled to reside therein until the lawful termination of their sub-tenancy and for injunction restraining defendant 1 Sailendra Nath Saba Chaudhury (hereinafter referred to as the land-lord defendant) from executing the Small Causes Court decree or order for possession against the plaintiffs.

[3] The case of the plaintiffs is that they are and have been the sub-tenants of the Ghose defendants. The landlord defendant Sailen is the owner of the premises in suit under whom the Ghose defendants were the tenants. A notice to quit was given by the Ghose defendants to the plaintiffs on or about the 24th October 1946. The landlord defendant Sailen instituted proceedings in the Calcutta Small Causes Court being suit No. 1691 of 1947 against the Ghose defendants for possession of the said premises. In the Small Causes Court proceedings the landlord defendant Sailen did not implead the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs were not parties to such proceedings. The landlord defendant Sailen obtained an order for possession against Ghose defendants in those proceedings on 8th December 1947. In execution of the said order defendant Sailen has obtained a further order for eviction on 2nd March 1948. The Ghose defendants have not entered appearance in this suit. The landlord defendant Sailen has filed his written statement and disputes the plaintiff's claim to occupy the said premises.

[4] Mr. A. K. Hazra learned counsel for the plaintiffs abandoned the plea of conspiracy and and collusion laid in the plaint. The only issue raised was:

Have the plaintiffs been in possession of the premises as sub-tenants for a period not less than seven years and not expiring on the 1st October 1946?

If so, are they liable to be evicted under the West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1948, by the landlord defendant Sailen in pursuance of the decree and order of possession of the Small Causes Court?

Mr. Hazra called plaintiff Gour Mohan Roy as his first witness to prove the fact of (1) subtenancy and (2) its duration for not less than seven years and not expiring on 1st October 1946. During the examination in chief and after the said witness had adduced proof, Mr. A. K. Sen learned counsel for the landlord defendant Sailen conceded that the plaintiffs were the sub-tenants for over seven years and not expiring on 1st October 1946 and still continuing as such subtenants upon that concession. Mr. Hazra did not proceed further with the examination of the said witness and Mr. Sen did not cross-examine him.

I have directed the concession to be recorded in the minutes and it disposes of the first part of the issue.

- [5] The arguments of learned counsel have naturally therefore centred round the legal effect of such sub-tenancy and whether having regard to such sub-tenancy the plaintiffs are entitled to claim the protection of the West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1948.
- [6] Mr. Hazra appearing for the plaintiffs has argued that S. 13 of the Act protects his clients. The plaintiffs according to him were persons to whom the said premises had been sublet for a period of not less than seven years and such period did not expire on or after 1st October 1946. In such a case, he argues, that the Ghose defendants as tenants are not entitled to the benefit of 8. 11 of the Act and his clients the plaintiffs shall be deemed to be the tenants holding directly under the landlord defendant Sailen on the same terms and conditions on which his clients held under the Ghose defendants. According to Mr. Hazra that is the irresistible conclusion from the concession made by Mr. Sen appearing for the defendant Sailen.
- [7] Mr. Sen on the other hand contends that S. 13 of the Act does not apply in this case. His argument is that S. 13 applies only to leases and not to monthly tenancies. He draws this conclusion by an interpretation of the words "period" and "expires" used in that section and he submits that the word 'period' must be construed as meaning a term in a lease. I cannot accept the construction put forward by Mr. Sen.
- [8] The nature of a monthly tenancy is not; such which can be said to be a tenancy for a specified or any limited period. It is a tenancy for an indefinite time which can last ad libitum for any period whether of seven years or more or less with no terminus ad quem, the only limitation being that a monthly tenancy is terminable by fifteen days notice given either by the landlord or the tenant. Subject to that limitation, monthly tenancy as such cannot in my judgment be said to be a tenancy not for a period less than seven years so as to be excluded always from the operation of S. 13, Rent Control Act, 1948. Monthly tenancy is a periodical tenancy which does not come to an end by efflux of time at all for the obvious reason that no time is fixed or limited by the tenancy itself. In my judgment it commences with a month and without any further step on the part of the lessor or the lessee continues until either party terminates it by giving the requisite notice to quit under S. 106, T. P. Act. It is not a new tenancy every month but a part and parcel of the original tenancy. If any authority is required for the views which I express on the nature of monthly tenancy I need only refer to the decision, Usharani Debi v. Research Industries Ltd., of Gentle J. in 50 C. W. N. 461, and to Utility Articles Manufacturing Co. v. Raza Bahadur Motilal Bombay Mills Ltd., I. L. R. (1943) Bom. 553: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Bom. 306) and I rely on the observations of Beaumont C. J. generally and of Kania J. particularly-at p. 556 of the Report. I, therefore, am unable to accept the construction put forward by Mr. Sen that S. 13 of the Act does not apply to monthly tenancy at all. The words 'period' and 'expire' are not necessarily connotative of a lease. The expression 'lease' is a well-known word with well defined meaning and it has not been used in that section. In this context of S. 13 of the Act I do not feel justified in putting the limitation on the meaning of this section as argued by Mr. Sen and confining its operation only to leases of not less than seven years and excluding the class of monthly tenancies even though they had lasted for the requisite period from the operation of this section. In my opinion, for the reasons I have given and on the authorities I have referred to, I hold that S. 13 of the Act does apply to the case of a monthly tenancy provided it has lasted for a period of not less than seven years expiring on or after 1st October 1946.

[9] Then the question is that S. 13 of the Act came into operation only on 1st December 1948. The decree or order for ejectment was made long before the Act came into operation. Mr. Sen has stated to the Court that his client the landlord defendant Sailen has not yet succeeded in getting possession from the Ghose defendants in pursuance of the order of the Small Causes Court and that the Ghose defendants are still in possession and the plaintiffs also are in possession. It also appears to be so from the last sentence in para. 5 of his client's written statement and also from the facts pleaded in the plaint. It also appears from the evidence of plaintiff Gour Mohan Roy that not only the plaintiffs are still in actual possession (Qs. 13 and 31) but also the Ghose defendants are collecting rents from the plaintiffs (Q. 16) and themselves still paying rent to the landlord defendant Sailen every month (Q3. 33 and 35). Mr. Sen has not cross-examined or challenged this evidence. If the decree or order for possession had been executed by recovery of possession before 1st December 1948, when the Rent Control Act, 1948, came into force the plaintiffs could certainly have not been able to resist the eviction under the law prevailing at that time namely the Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1946.

should in my judgment be read with S. 2 (11) of the Act, which defines the tenant under the Act as including 'a tenant' who continues in possession after the termination of tenancy in his favour'. In my opinion therefore a tenant who continues in possession even though a notice to quit and/or a decree has terminated his tenancy, but which notice or decree has not been satisfied by recovery of possession from the tenant is a tenant under the Act. On the facts of this case the Ghose defendants answer to this description of a tenant under the Rent Control Act.

[12] On a proper construction of S. 13 of the Act, I have come to this conclusion that the Ghose defendants as tenants sublet for a period not less than seven years within the meaning of S. 13 of the Act to the plaintiffs and as the plaintiffs and the Ghose defendants are still in possession and the decree or order of the Small Causes Court had not been satisfied prior to coming into operation of the Rent Control Act, 1948, and still remains unsatisfied the plaintiffs must be deemed to be tenants holding directly under the landlord defendant Sailen on the same terms and conditions as they did under the Ghose defendants.

[13] Holding this as I do it follows as a necessary sequel that S. 11 (3) of the Act will apply to the plaintiffs so that the plaintiffs would be deemed to be tenants of defendant Sailen in respect of the portion of the said premises let out to the plaintiffs. It is conceded on behalf of the landlord defendant Sailen that the decree in the Small Causes Court did not proceed on the ground provided in sub-s. (8) of S. 11 (1) of the Rent Act.

[14] Mr. Sen then argues that on the basis of a decision of Banerji J. in Priyambada Mitter v. Jogesh Chandra Basu, in Suit No. 604 of 1946, delivered on 16th June 1949 the plaintiffs cannot get the benefit of S. 13 of the Act. That decision of the learned Judge, I find, was not given with reference to S. 13 of the Act at all. The learned Judge in that case was construing S. 11 (3) of the Act and inter alia comes to the conclusion that S. 11 (3) of the Act has no retrospective operation. The question before me for decision is not on 8. 11 (3) but on S. 13 of the Act. The consideration of S. 11 (3) in this case comes only incidentally. If S. 13 of the Act applies to the facts of the case then the language of that section itself makes it clear that the provisions of S. 11 (3) shall be applicable. It appears to me immaterial in this context as to whether the sub-lessees' interest fell with the fall of the lessee's interest when the decree or order of the Small Causes Court was made or the notice to quit given. The peculiar definition of a tenant under the Rent Control Act as including "a person who continues in possession even after the termination of the tenancy in his favour" impels me to the conclusion that it is inconsequential whether under the Common law or under the Transfer of Property Act the tenant's interest fell or disappeared. It may have fell or disappeared under the Common law or under the Transfer of Property Act. Both under the Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1946, which was the governing law on the subject from the 1st day of October 1946 till the 30th November 1948 as well as under Rent Control Act, 1948, which is the governing law since 1st December 1948 the definition of a tenant includes a person who continues in possession after the termination of tenancy in his favour. This termination of tenancy according to my interpretation of S. 2 (11) of the Act may be the result of a notice to quit or operation of law or even a decree or order of Court. The Statute does not put any limitation or qualification as to how the termination has to take place whether by act of parties or by decree or order of Court or by operation of law. The only limitation is that he must not have lost possession. As long as the test of possession is satisfied, he is a tenant within the extended meaning and definition provided under S. 2 (11) of the Act. Therefore in my judgment such a person must be regarded as a tenant even though his tenancy has been terminated by any cause whatever so long as he continues in possession and the posses. sion has not been recovered by the landlord from him.

[15] Such a result of the construction which makes the word tenant include an ex-tenant is not altogether unknown in the legal history and experience of Rent Registration Acts both in this country as well as in England. Reference may be made in this connection to the observations of Bankes L. J. at p. 54 and Scrutton L. J. at p. 58 in the decision of the Court of Appeal in Remon v. City of London Real Property Co., reported in (1921) 1 K. B. 49: (89 L.J.K.B. 1105) and to the observations of Lord Atkin at p. 1099 in the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the Karnani Industrial Bank Ltd. v. Satya Niranjan Shaw reported in 32 C. W. N. 1093: (A. I. B. (15) 1928 P. C. 227). Rankin J. also held in Bithaldas v. Lalbehari Dutt & Sons, in 25 C. W. N. 967 at pp. 969-70 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 891) under the old Calcutta Rent Act of 1920 that the term tenant was used in a special sense and included a person whose tenancy had expired even before that Act came into operation and who could claim benefit under the said Act.

[16] The landlord defendant Sailen could have executed the decree and might have recovered possession in such execution from the plaintiffs and the Ghose defendants before the Rent Control Act of 1948 came into operation. But the moment that Act of 1948 came into force on 1st December 1948 by the combined operation of S. 2 (11) and S. 13 of the Act the plaintiffs in my judgment must be deemed to be direct tenants as contemplated by S. 13 of the Statute. It is true that thereby the landlord loses his vested right to execute the decree or order i. e., the right that vested in him on the passing of such decree or order under the law prevailing before 1st December 1948. But the legislature has the power to override vested rights and while it is settled law that such vested rights must be taken away only by express words I find such express words in S. 13 of the Act when it uses the language "notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force". In other words, though the law for the time being in force might have entitled a landlord to execute his decree for possession against his tenant in such a manner as to oust and evict also the sub-tenants and in this case might have therefore enabled the landlord defendant Sailen to execute his decree before the Rent Control Act, 1948, came into force, he lost such right the day when the Act came into operation and in my judgment S. 13 should be applied notwithstanding such law and notwithstanding the fact that by so applying landlord defendant Sailen's vested right is infringed.

[17] It may not be out of place here to refer incidentally to a certain aspect of the nature of tenancy understood in the extended sense of a tenant under S. 2 (11) of the Act as a person who continues in possession even after the termination of the tenancy in his favour. Such a tenant has sometimes been described as a "statutory tenant" an expression severely criticised by Bankes L. J. in Keeves v. Dean, (1924) 1 K. B. 685 at p. 690 and about which expression Scrutton L. J. claimed the authorship and felt "impenitent" according to the report of the same case in 93 L. J. K. B. 203 at p. 207. Bankes L. J. at p. 693 of (1924) 1 K. B. 685 observes without deciding the question that the statutory tenant while could not assign his right may still be entitled to sublet. But the question whether the statutory tenant can sublet or assign does not in my view arise in this case and I do not propose to express any opinion on that question in this case. Here the Ghose defendants who were the tenants sublet for a period not less than seven years within the meaning of S. 18, Rent Control Act of 1948. The decree or order of the Small Causes Court either of 8th December 1947 or of 2nd March 1948 did not make the Ghose defendants any the less tenants because they continued and still continue in possession within the mean. ing of S. 2 (11), Rent Control Act, 1948. The plaintiffs in this case became sub-lessees long before the decree or order of the Small Causes Court and therefore the Ghose detendants did not in this case, as statutory tenants in the sense of tenants continuing in possession after the termination of tenancy in their favour, sublet the premises to the plaintiffs. That sub-letting was done before the tenancy of the Ghose defendants had been terminated by the decree or order of the Small Causes Court, and ex concessis such subletting continued thereafter and still continues.

[18] Mr. Sen's next submission is that on the basis of the plaint, the plaintiffs are not persons to whom the premises could have been "lawfully sublet" within the meaning of S. 11 (3) of the Act because a major portion had been sublet to them without the necessary consent in writing of the landlord. I am afraid this argument suffers from a great fallacy. The fallacy in my opinion is this. Section 13, Rent Control Act 1948, makes no difference between lawful subletting and unlawful sub-letting. The distinction between lawful and unlawful sub-letting under 8. 11 of the Act has no place in my judgment on a construction of S. 13 of the Act and that for the very simple reason to be found in the express words of S. 13 'notwithstanding anything contained in this Act." Effect must be given to those words and the only way such effect can be given is by saying that even though there was unlawful sub-letting and it was for a period not less than seven years as contemplated in S. 13 of the Act even then the sub-lessee will be deemed to be a tenant holding directly under the superior landlord. It is only after a sub-lessee is so deemed to be a direct tenant that the provisions of s. 11 (3) become applicable to him. In other words, my construction is that a sub-lessee can be a direct tenant in two ways under the Act of 1948. One is under S. 11 (3) of the Act where the premises have been "lawfully sublet" within the meaning of S. 11 of the Act e. g., where there is no breach of proviso (b) (i) or (ii) of S. 11 (1) of the Act, and where the interest of the tenant has been lawfully determined except in the case provided for in proviso (f) of S. 11 (1) of the Act. That is one way by which a sub-lessee can be a direct tenant of the superior landlord. But the other way in which a sub-lessee can become a direct tenant of the superior landlord is under S. 13 of the Act where the sub-lessee has been a sub-lessee for a period of not less than seven years as contemplated therein notwithstanding the fact that such sub-lessee has been a sub-lessee in breach of proviso (b) (i) or (ii) of S. 11 (1) of the Act. That is the meaning I attribute to the words "notwithstanding anything contained in this Act" appearing in S. 13 of the Act.

[19] This disposes of all the arguments made before me and I answer the second part of the issue in the negative. I hold, therefor, that the plaintiffs are entitled to relief under S. 13, Rent Control Act, 1948, and they shall be deemed to be tenants holding directly under defendant Sailen on the same terms and conditions as they did under the Ghose defendants in respect of the portions of the said premises in their possession and occupation. There will be therefore judgment for the plaintiffs accordingly. There will also be a declaration in terms of prayer (1) of the plaint and an injunction in terms of prayer (3) of the plaint. The plaintiffs will also be entitled to the costs in this suit.

Order.—This is a petition for revision of an order of a lower appellate Court dismissing an appeal from an order of a learned Munsif refusing to set aside a sale under S. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act.

Saurindra Narayan Ghose _for Opposite Party.

(2) It will be unnecessary to deal with the facts of the case in any detail because the case was disposed of on a point of limitation.

(3) Admittedly the last day for preferring an appeal to the lower appellate Court was 22nd March 1948. On that date the appellant presented the appeal, but he did not deposit in Court the amount recoverable in execution as required by the proviso to S. 174 (5), Bengal Tenancy Act. The Court made the following order — that the appeal be registered and the appellant was directed to deposit the amount recoverable in execution of the decree within limitation. The amount recoverable was not deposited for some little time and indeed could not have been deposited within limitation because the case was filed on the last possible day.

[4] Before the lower appellate Court a point was taken that the appeal was barred by time and the learned Judge relying upon a number of cases of this Court upheld that plea and dismissed the appeal.

[5] Before me it has been contended that the matter has now been put beyond all controversy by a recent decision of this Court in which it was expressly held that the deposit required under the proviso to S. 174 (5) need not be made within limitation, but it could be made at any time before the appeal is admitted. This recent decision is the case of Sasadhar Ghose v. Harthar Kar, 63 O W. N. 694 : (83 C. L. J. 389) in which it was held by a Bench that the use of the word "admitted" occurring in the proviso to sub-s. (5) of S. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, was intentional and the legislature provided for the deposit of the money to be in time if it was so done before the appeal is admitted by a judicial act of the Court. It followed that when the legislature had given a definite limit under sub-s. (5) of S. 174 that the deposit must be made before the appeal was admitted, the Court had not only the jurisdiction but was bound to receive the deposit if made before the appeal was actually admitted. The Bench further held that there was a clear distinction between the registration of an appeal or admitting the memorandum on the one hand which was a ministerial Act and the actual admission of an appeal on the other which was a judicial Act. The latter referred to the hearing under O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C., if the Court was not required at any earlier stage to pass any judicial order.

[6] It is quite impossible to distinguish the facts of this case from the facts of the case before me and as it is a Bench decision I am bound to follow it. It was, however, suggested by learned Advocate for the opposite parties that there is an earlier Bench decision of this Court to the contrary. That is the case of Bidhubala Dasi v. Raishahib Kumud Nath Das, 41 C. W. N. 1299. There are some observations of Costello J. in that case which might be regarded as in conflict with the later Bench decision. But the decision itself is not in conflict because it is quite clear that in that case no deposit was made at all and certainly not before admission, and therefore the decision itself is not in conflict with the later case of Sasadhar Ghose, (58 C. W. N 694; 83 C. L. J. 389) to which I have made reference.

[7] For these reason I am bound to hold that the appeal was not barred by limitation and therefore it should have been heard on the merits.

[8] In the result, therefore, I would allow this revision, set aside the order of the lower appellate Court and remit the case to that Court to be heard and determined upon the merits and in accordance with law. The costs of this revision will abide the event in the Court below.

Penal Code (1860), S 339—Landlord preventing tenant from using bath-room and privy by locking it—Offence under S 339 is committed—Dispute of this kind can however be tried more suitably in civil Court — On facts landlord held not guilty of any offence as bath-room and privy were not part of tenancy.

Where a landlord by locking the door prevents a tenant from entering and making use of a bathroom and a privy which he is entitled to use as a t-nant, the landlord is technically guilty of the offence of, wrongful restraint under S. 339, Penal Code. However, a dispute of this kind can be tri-d far more suitably in a civil Court than in a criminal Court: [Para 4]

Order.—This is a petition for revision of an order of a learned Presidency Magistrate convicting the accused persons of an offence under S. 341, Penal Code and sentencing each of them to pay a fine of Rs. 50 and in default of payment of the fine each to undergo simple imprisonment for one month.

[2] How this dispute could be made the subject matter of criminal proceedings I find it difficult to understand. The learned Magistrate seems to think that it was not a civil dispute. But if ever there was a civil dispute this is one.

Is Shortly the case of the complainant was that he was the tenant of certain rooms of the ground floor and of the first floor of the premises concerned, No. 310 Chittaranjan Avenue. According to him there were on the first floor a bathroom and a privy which he as tenant used. He went away according to his evidence on the last Saraswati Puja day and on returning the next morning found that the door of the bathroom and the privy on the first floor had been padlocked. This he said restrained his movements and accordingly he made a complaint under S 841, Penal Code. That section is in these terms:

"Whoever, wrongfully restrains any person, shall be punished with simple imprisonment for a term which may extend to one month, or with fine which may extend to five hundred rupses, or with both."

And wrongful restraint is defined in S. 389, Penal Code as:

"Whosver voluntarily obstructs any person so as to prevent that person from proceeding in any direction which that person has a right to proceed, is said wrongfully to restrain that person."

It is to be observed that there is an exception to s. 339 to the effect that

"the obstruction of a private way over land or water which a person in good faith believes himself to have a lawful right to obstruct, is not an offence."

- [4] It is quite clear that these sections are framed wide enough to cover a case of this kind. But I imagine that the framers of the Penal Code envisaged a very different class of case where the freedom of movement of a person had been affected not by locking a door but by other means. However, if it could be shown that the complainant had been prevented from entering a privy and bathroom of which he was a tenant, there would technically be an offence under this section. However, it appears to me that a dispute of this kind could be tried far more suitably in the civil Court than in a criminal Court.
- [5] As many as thirteen witnesses were called to show that the complainant was entitled to use this privy and bathroom; but I think that all the witnesses but the complainant can be eliminated from consideration. As an example, Panchu Gopal Chai, P. W. 7, a milkman who seems to deliver milk to the complainant gave evidence that the complainant used the privy and the bath on the first floor. How on earth would milkman know what privy the tenant of a house used. Other witnesses were guests and such like, and it would appear that if the evidence of these persons be accepted the complainant received his milk and apparently received most of his guests in the bathroom or the privy. Not one of these witnesses except one say that they used the bathroom or the privy themselves which they might have done if they were guests. I imagine that guests would have very little knowledge about the sanitary arrangements of a house unless they found it necessary to make use of such arrangements while they were guests. But nobody says that he had ever used the bathroom or the privy except Subodh Sen, P. W. 12, who says that he once used the bathroom himself.
- (6) This case must stand entirely upon the complainant's evidence as the other evidence is not worthy of consideration. The complainant in his examination-in-chief stated:

"I am a tenant under accused No. 1 in respect of the entire first-floor of premises No. 310 Chittaranjan Avenue. Accused 2 is her husband and accused 3 is their son. There is a privy and bath in the first-floor. I have been using this privy and bath in the first-floor since I went there as tenant. I have a dispensary on the ground floor and there is a latrine and water tap for use of my patients and compounders."

[7] That is all the evidence as to the nature of this tenancy and the accused in their written statement deny that this privy and bathroom were included in the tenancy.

[8] There are features which would suggest that this bathroom and privy were not part of the tenancy. There are apparently two staircases leading up to the first and upper floors and the complainant who was a tenant of the first floor had the exclusive use of the western staircase. The privy and the bathroom concerned however opened off the eastern staircase. Further there was a privy on the ground floor and doubtless there could be arrangements for bathing as there was a water tap there. The privy and the bathroom therefore were not essential for the use of a tenant of the first-floor and the whole or part of the ground-floor.

[9] Further, the case for the complainant is very odd. Why should the accused suddenly lock him out of his privy and bathroom? The suggestion made was that this was part of the harassing conduct of the accused to compel the complainant to pay more rent or vacate the premises.

[10] Can a Court upon such evidence find with any certainty that this privy and bathroom formed part of the complainant's tenancy? It seems that there is considerable enmity in this case. For example, the complainant's first supporting witness Gosaidas Rai, P. w. 2, was the brother-in-law of accused 2 and he gives evidence supporting the complainant, he being a person who lived across the road from this house. This witness in cross examination denied enmity with accused 2. But quite obviously he would not have given evidence against his brother-in-law unless there was enmity and when there is enmity these cases have to be examined with the very greatest care.

ing by itself I do not think that it can be said that it was established beyond all reasonable doubt that this bathroom and privy were part of his tenancy. He might have been allowed to use it as it was on the first-floor in which he was tenant of certain rooms. But the user may have been as a licensee, in which case the right to use the privy and the bathroom could be terminated at any time.

[12] In spite of what the Magistrate thinks I am still of opinion that this was pre-eminently a case to be decided by a civil Court and not a criminal Court, and in my view the evidence is not sufficiently convincing to sustain a conviction on a criminal charge.

(13) That being so, I would allow this petition, set aside the convictions and sentences and acquit the accused. The Rule is made absolute.

[14] I am now informed that a civil suit has been instituted by the complainant and this is undoubtedly the proper course for him to follow and the decision of the criminal case upon the evidence before the learned Magistrate cannot in any way affect a decision of the civil Court on the evidence tendered before that Court.

Civil Rule No. 594 of 1949, Decided on 3rd November 1949, from decree of Sub-Judge, Berhampore, D/-27th January 1949.

Indian Independence Order (1947), Arts, 8 (2), 9— Hospital housed in a house situate in Murshidabad district—Hospital serving residents of that district only—Rent of hospital accruing due before partition of Bengal is payable by Province of West Bengal.

Where a hospital which was housed in a house situate in Murshidabad district served the residents of that district the rent of the house which had accrued due before partition of Bengal and which was payable by the old province of Bengal became, under Art. 8 (2), payable by the Province of West Bengal. The term financial obligations' used in Art. 9 has a restricted meaning and it does not cover an obligation to pay rent. The obligation to pay rent is purely a contractual obligation which is covered by Art. 8 (2). Art. 8 (6) will not cover such a case. [Paras 9, 10]

Janendra Nath Mukherjee—for Opposite Party.

Harries C. J.—This is a petition for revision of a decree for Rs. 300 made in favour of the plaintiff by the Court of Small Causes at Ber-

- [2] A suit was brought by the opposite party for recovery of rent of a certain house for the period April 1946 to August 1946 at the rate of Rs. 55 per month and also for the period April and May 1948 at the same rate together with damages amounting to Rs. 84/6. It appears that the petitioners who were the tenants admitted liability for the rent falling due in April and May 1948 and the whole contest between the parties was confined to the liability for rent for the period April 1946 to August 1946. Eventually the learned Small Cause Court Judge held that the petitioners were liable for rent for that period together with a sum of Rs. 25 by way of damages. He accordingly passed a decree as I have said for Rs. 800.
- [3] The petitioners have contended before us that the province of West Bengal was not liable for this rent and that the suit had been improperly decreed against them. The property which was the subject matter of the claim for rent was situate in the Murshidabad district which was allotted on partition to West Bengal. It is the contention of the petitioners before us that the house which was let for the purposes of a hospital served not only persons resident in the Murshidabad district but also persons resident in adjoining districts which fell to Eastern Pakistan on partition. It is to be observed however that the petitioners apparently called no evidence to show that this hospital served any area other than areas situate in the Murshidabad district. Further it would appear as if the petitioners admitted that the purposes served by this hospital after the partition were exclusively the purposes of West Bengal because the petitioners admitted liability for the rent in April and May 1948 which was of course rent which had accrued due after the partition. I do not think therefore that it can now bealleged by the petitioners that this hospital served any districts other than districts allotted to West Bengal on partition.

[4] Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen on behalf of the petitioners has relied upon art. 8 (2), Indian Independence Order, 1917, and he has urged that this Article clearly shows that the liability for this rent rests on the Government of Eastern Pakistan and not on the Government of West Bengal. It would indeed be strange that the past liability for rent should be that of Eastern Pakistan when the house never became part of Eastern Pakistan on partition. Nevertheless, that is the argument which has been addressed to us on behalf of the Provincial Government.

[5] The Article in question is in these terms:
"Any contract made on behalf of the Province of Bengal before the appointed day shall, as and from that day,

(a) if the contract is for purposes which as from that day are exclusively purposes of the Province of West Bengal, be deemed to have been made on behalf of that Province instead of the Province of Bengal; and

(b) in any other case be deemed to have been made on behalf of the Province of East Bengal instead of the Province of Bengal and all rights and liabilities which have accrued or may accrue under any such contract shall, to the extent to which they would have been rights or liabilities of the Province of Bengal, be rights or liabilities of the Province of West Bengal or the Province of East Bengal, as the case may be."

[6] It is clear from this Article that if the purposes for which the contract was made were after the appointed day the exclusive purposes of the new Province of West Bengal, then the province of West Bengal would be liable though the contract was made with the old Province of Bengal which had been partitioned. It is further clear that if the contract does not fall within Art. 8 (2) (a) the liability by reason of Art. 8 (2) (b) falls on East Bengal or Eastern Pakistan. Mr. Sen's argument is that as the case does not fall within Art. 8 (2) (a) the liability must be that of Eastern Pakistan.

[7] As I have said earlier, it was never the case of the Provincial Government that this hospital which was housed in the house in question served any district which is now part of Eastern Pakistan, and as I have pointed out the Provincial Government seemed to have admitted the contrary in paying the rent due after the partition and that they would only be liable if after the partition the hospital was exclusively for the purposes of West Bengal. It seems to have been assumed in the Court below that before partition this hospital was maintained exclusively for the purposes of certain districts which on partition fell to West Bengal, and if that be so I think there can be no doubt whatscever that Art. 8 (2) (a), Indian Independence Order applies and that West Bengal would be liable for all rent accruing due after the partition and, as I have said, the rent which accrued due after the partition has actually been paid by the Province.

[8] Mr. Sen however contended that the Province could not be made liable for rent which had accrued due before the partition. But it seems to me that the terms of the Article makes the Province which is liable for the rent after the partition liable for the rent which accrued due before the partition, because Art. 8 (2) provides that "all rights and liabilities which have accrued or may accrue under any such contract shall, to the extent to which they would have been rights or liabilities of the Province of Bengal be rights or liabilities of the Province of West Bengal or the Province of East Bengal, as the case may be."

[9] As I have already pointed out, this is a liability which becomes the liability of the Province of West Bengal under Art. 8 (2) (a), Indian Independence Order as the purposes of the hospital on independence day were exclusively the purposes of West Bengal. That being so the rent which had accrued due before independence and which was payable by the old Province of Bengal became under this Article payable by the Province of West Bengal.

[10] Mr. Sen however next urged that effect must be given to sub-cl. (6) of Art. 8, Indian Independence Order. That clause is in these

"The provisions of this Article shall have effect subject to the provisions of Article 9 of this order; and bank balances and securities shall, notwithstanding that they partake of the nature of contractual rights, be dealt with as property to which Artice 7 of this order applies."

[11] Article 9, Indian Independence Order is int bese terms:

"All liabilities in respect of such loans, guarantees and other financial obligations of the Governor General in Council or of a Province as are outstanding immediately before the appointed day shall as from that day:

(a) in the case of liabilities of the Governor General in Council be liabilities of the Dominion of India;

(b) in the case of liabilities of the province of Bengal be liabilities of the Province of East Bengal;

(c) in the case of liabilities of the Province of the Punjab be liabilities of the Province of West Punjab; and

(d) in the case of liabilities of any Province other than Bengal, or the Punjab continue to be liabilities of that Province."

It is contended that this clause will cover contractual obligations and will cover liabilities for rent such as exist in this case. The obligation to pay rent is in one sense a financial obligation but I think it is clear that the words "and other financial obligations of a Province" in Art. 9 must be construed ejusdem generis with the words "loans and guarantees". What this clause covers are loans, guarantees and other obligations of a like nature. Clearly, it was not intended to cover purely contractual obligations; otherwise Art. 8 becomes wholly worthless. It is true that loans and guarantees and such like are obligations of a contractual nature and would be covered by Art. 8 but for cl. (6) of that Article which makes the provisions of Art. 8 subject to the provisions of art. 9 and further makes bank balances and securities, which are also contractual obligations, property to which art. 7 applies. In other words, cl. (6) exempts from the operation of Art. 8 certain contractual obligations which are dealt with in Articles 7 and 9. Unless the Court is satisfied that the obligation to pay rent for house is a "financial obligation" as the term is used in Art. 9 then quite clearly Art. 8 will apply. If the obligation to pay rent was a financial obligation within Art. 9, then of course by reason of Art. 9 (b) the Province of East Bengal or Eastern Pakistan will be liable. But as I have said previously the term "financial obligations" used in Art. 9 must be given a restricted meaning. The obligations must be of a nature similar to the obligations which are set out previously in that section. In my view, the obligation to pay rent for these premises is a purely contractual obligation which is covered by Art. 8 and as from Indepenence day the purposes of the letting of the house were exclusively the purposes of West Bengal, then West Bengal is liable for rent which accrued due from the old Province of Bengal before partition. That to my mind is clear from the terms of Art. 8, subcl. (2). If after Independence day the purposes of the contract can be regarded as exclusively the purposes of the new Province of West Bengal then West Bengal is liable for what accrued due under this contract before partition.

[12] It may be that the case was not presented properly before the lower Court and the truth may be that areas now failing within Eastern Pakistan may have been served by this hospital as well as areas which fell within West Bengal on partition. That is what is suggested in argument before us; but as I have pointed out that involves investigation into evidence and facts and such a case does not appear to have been made in the Court below and therefore cannot in my view be made in revision here. It seems to have been presumed, if not conceded, in the Court below that the area served by this hospital fell exclusively to West Bengal on partition.

(13) For the reasons which I have given, I am satisfied that the view of the lower Court is right and that the Province of West Bengal is liable for rent for the period April to August 1946 which was of course rent which accrued due before partition.

[14] That being so, this petition fails and is dismissed. The Rule is discharged with costs.

[15] Let the counter affidavit filed in Court today be kept on the record.

S. S. Mukerjee - for Petitioner.

Order.—This rule was issued by our learned brother Sen J. on the petition of one Srimati Champa Devi who was an accused under trial on a charge under s. 323, Penal Code, before a Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta on the complaint of one Babulal Goenka, the opposite party. As our learned brother thought that the rule should be disposed of by a Divisional Bench it has been placed before us under the orders of my Lord the Chief Justice.

[2] The petitioner is a purdanashin lady not resident, it is said, in Calcutta. She applied to the Magistrate for permission to appear by an agent. She was rightly granted such permission by the Magistrate and was appearing through her lawyer. Then, an application was filed be.

fore the Magistrate by the complainant opposite party asking that she should be required to attend personally to be examined under 8. 342, Criminal P. C. The petition was rejected by the trying Magistrate. The complainant came up before this Court and our learned brother Sen J. was of the opinion that the order of the Magis. trate should be set aside. Obviously, it appears, he was of the opinion that in view of a decision in the case of Adeluddin v. Emperor, 49 C. W. N. 537 : (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Cal. 482: 47 Or. L. J. 302), by a Divisional Bench of this Court consisting of Lodge J. and our learned brother himself, it was essential that the accused should be present at the time of the examination under S. 342, Criminal P. C. It appears that the previous petition was not with notice to the accused. When the accused came to know of it she filed the present petition and obtained this rule from our learned brother who has now sent it to a Divisional Bench as a consideration of other Divisional Bench decisions arises.

[3] Under S. 205, Criminal P. C., whenever a Magistrate issues a summons he has the power to dispense with personal attendance of the accused and permit him to appear by a pleader. This is subject to two qualifications, one contained in sub.s. (2) of the same section, namely, that if the Magistrate considers the presence of the accused necessary at any stage he has got the power to direct personal attendance of the accused and even to enforce the same. It must be made clear that in the present case the Magistrate has not considered this to be necessary. The other is under S. 366, sub-s. (2) which lays down that if a Magistrate passes a judgment of conviction in which the sentence is of imprisonment, then the accused is to be called upon to attend, personally to hear the judgment even if that accused had been previously permitted to appear by an agent. There is nothing in S. 342 itself which requires the personal attendance of the accused. Section 342 is a section which offers an opportunity to the accused to explain the circumstances appearing in evidence against him which the Magistrate considers as requiring such explanation and also to say what he has got to say generally about the case. This is the basic principle of S. 342. The section also enables the Magistrate at any stage of the proceedings to examine an accused person obviously to clear up any difficulties and the section makes it incumbent upon the Magistrate to hold an examination generally on the case at the close of the prosecution case. As this is for the purpose of enabling the Magistrate to know what the accused has got to say and further to enable the accused to given an explanation it does not appear to us to furnish any sufficient reason why the accused should be compelled to be present if either the Magistrate does not think the presence of the accused necessary or the accused himself does not think that his presence is necessary to offer some explanation. The explanation may as readily be given by an agent as by the accused himself from the dock and in a majority of cases practically what happens is that the accused even when in the dock says nothing and subsequently files a written statement drawn up by a lawyer. So, we do not see wby even from practical consideration there is necessity for an insistence upon the presence of the accused.

[4] In the decision reported in the case of Adeludain v. Emperor, 49 0 W. N. 537: (A.I.R. (32) 1945 Cal. 482: 47 Cr. L. J. 302), no reason was unfortunately given and the other provisions of the Code were not examined. That was a case in which one of the accused in a joint trial with other accused persons had been allowed to be represented by a pleader. Subsequently in an appeal taken against an order of conviction a point was raised that 8. 342, Crimidal P. C., had not been complied with as the accused had not been personally examined. It was in this connection that the question was examined under 8. 540A, Criminal P. C. In such a case, on the state of authorities at that time, it could be urged that there should be an examination of the accused, but none of the previous authorities had laid down that there should be personal examination of the accused.

[6] In view of the decision in the case of Abdul Rahman v. Emperor, 54 I. A. 96: (A.I.R. (14) 1927 P. C. 44: 28 Cr. L. J. 259), it is very doubtful whether the decisions of the Courts as to the mandatory nature of S. 342, Criminal P. C., may not have to be thoroughly reviewed as in that decision a test had been laid down by the Judicial Committee to decide whether violation of a particular provision of the law would altogether vitiate the trial or be a curable irre. gularity if there is no failure of justice. Whatever may be the state of authorities under S. 342, Criminal P. C., there is no case in which, except that reported in Adeluddin v. Emperor, 49 C.W.N. 537: (A. I. B. (32) 1945 Cal. 482: 47 Cr. L. J. 802), referred to above, it has been held that absence of a personal examination of an accused when he is represented by a pleader is also a violation of S. 342. Where S. 342 speaks of an accused, it must be taken, if the accused is represented by a pleader, that the accused means the accused as represented by his pleader. We are unable to agree with the opinion that even under 8. 540A the appearance of an accused person represented by a pleader is essential for his examination under S. 842, Criminal P. C. We hold that S. 366, sub-s. (2) governs both Ss. 504A and 205 but 8. 342 governs neither.

[6] We would have referred this matter to a Full Bench as, in our opinion, the decision in the case of Adeluddin v. Emperor, 49 C. W. N. 537 : (A.I R (32) 1945 Cal. 482 : 47 Cr. L. J. 302) is not correct, but in the present case it is not necessary to do so because this is not a case in which one out of several accused persons was allowed under S. 540A to be represented by a pleader. In the present case, the permission was granted under S. 205, Criminal P. C., as we have pointed out, and we have pointed out that in the Criminal Procedure Code there are two provisions for ordering subsequent personal attendance of the accused after an order dispensing with such attendance has been previously passed under 8. 205 of the Code. Neither of these two applies in the present case. As far as the authorities are concerned, the cases of this Court reported in In the matter of Kiran Chandra, 6 C W. N. lix, Devendra Nath v. Narendra Nath, 14 C. W. N. cxxxi and Raj Rajeshwari Devi v. Emperor, 17 C. W. N. 1248: (23 I. C. 489 : 15 Cr. L. J. 281), clearly support what the Magistrate did in dispensing with the personal appearance of the accused in the present case at the initial stage. All these decisions have been reviewed by us in a case recently in the Divisional Bench, as yet unreported the case being Cr. Revn. No. 548 of 1949. There is a decision fully applicable to the present case of a Divisional Bench reported in In re Sukhalata Gupta, 21 C.W.N. clxviii, in which the Divisional Bench dispensed with the personal attendance of the accused until the conclusion of the trial and directed that a plea be taken through her pleader and in case she files a written statement the same may be accepted as embodying her plea. In our opinion, the order passed in that case was correct and the same procedure should have been followed in the present case.

[7] This view receives support also from such a bigh authority as Sir John Beaumont in a a decision reported in Emperor v. Jaffar Kassum, 35 Cr. L. J. 1035 : (A I. R. (21) 1934 Bom. 212). In that case in which it was said that want of personal examination of an accused allowed to be represented by a lawyer vitiated the trial, the High Court of Bombay held that 8. 205 was not controlled by S. 842, Criminal P. C. and the trial was not vitiated in any way. This is also the view of a Divisional Bench of this Court as we have already pointed out.

[8] We, therefore, hold that S. 842 does not govern 8. 205, Criminal P. C., as it also does not govern S. 540A and in a case in which the accused is represented by a pleader in accordance with the permission granted by the Court, E1 5 19 0 090 be personally present to be examined under 8.842, Criminal P. C. The Magistrate, therefore, in the present case acted rightly in refusing the application of the complainant opposite party and in dispensing with the presence of the accused petitioner even at the time of the examination under 8.342, Criminal P. C.

[9] The result, therefore, is that the rule is made absolute and the order passed in Cr. Revn. No. 590 of 1949 set aside.

Civil Rule No. 574 of 1949, Decided on 20th September 1949, from order of Dist. Judge, Alipur, D/- 9th Febuary 1949.

Tenancy Laws—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 26F—Co-sharer tenant transferring his interest — Landlord exercising his right of pre-emption under old section—Interest of cosharer tenant transferred to landlord — Other cosharer tenant transferring his interest subsequently — Landlord having no right of pre-emption as landlord under new section — Landlord held was entitled to pre-empt as co-sharer under new section.

Once a tenancy has come into existence, it must in law be held to be continuing, unless shown to have been extinguished, or split under the provisions of S. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act; and the burden of proving that it does not exist in the same form is on the person who says this. Thus, when a landlord acquires part of a tenancy, no partial extinction of the tenancy results; the tenancy continues with only this change that the landlord and the co-sharer tenant, whose share has not been acquired, are now the tenants of the holding: A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 68 and 46 C. W. N. 853, Ref.

When a co-sharer tenant transferred his interest in the holding, the landlord exercised his right of pre-emption under the old S. 26F and obtained an order by which the interest of the co-sharer tenant stood transferred to him. Subsequently the other cosharer tenant also transferred his interest. The landlord had no longer any right of pre-emption as a landlord in view of the new S. 26F. He claimed however to have become cosharer of the tenancy as a result of the transfer to him of a co-sharer's interest under the old section, and so, to be entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption which the new section gives to co-sharer tenants:

Held that the landlord was entitled as a co-sharer to exercise a right of pre-emption under the new section.

[Para 14]

Atul Ch. Gupta and N. C. Chakaravarty -

Hiralal Chakravarty and Shyamadas Bhattachar-

Das Gupta J. — Section 26 (F), Bengal Tenancy Act, as enacted by the amending Act of 1928, gave the immediate landlord of a holding a right of pre-emption, in the case of a transfer of the holding by the tenant, with a few exceptions. When the Act was further amended the right of the pre-emption was taken away from landlords and given to cosharer tenants. In the present case, the facts are that when a cosharer tenant transferred his interest, in (sic) the opposite parties as landlords exercised their right of pre-emption, and obtained an order by which the interest of the cosbarer tenants stood transferred to them. The other cosharer tenant has since transferred his interest to the petitioner, but the opposite parties have no longer any right of pre-emption as "landlords," since the law has changed. They claim, however, to have become cosharers of the tenancy as a result of the transfer to them of a cosharer's interest under the old S. 26F, and so, to be entitled to exercise the right of pre-emption which the new section gives to cosbarer tenants.

[3] On behalf of the petitioners, Mr. Atul Chandra Gupta has contended before us that the landlord cannot in law become his own tenant; and so, even after the transfer to themselves of the interest of a cosharer tenant the opposite parties did not become cosharer tenants of the holding, but continued to be 'landlords' only.

[4] Section 2 (17), Bengal Tenancy Act, defines 'tenant' as "the person who holds land under another person and is " Obviously, when a tenancy originates, the landlord and the tenant cannot be one and the same person. After a tenancy has come into existence, with say, A as the landlord, and B, as the tenant, is it right to say that if A acquires B's interest, or B acquires A's interest—the tenancy ceases to exist? It has been held that this will depend on how far the law of merger will be applicable, and that whether the two interests—landlord's interest and tenant's interest—will merge or not, will depend. on the intention of the person. Thus, under the ordinary law of merger, where say A was the landlord of a tenure, and B the tenant, and A purchases B's interest a may keep the tenureholder's interest separate from the landlord's interest, and then there will be no merger. In such a case, A the landlord, and B the tenureholder will be considered to be different persons, within the meaning of S. 2 (17), Bengal Tenancy Act.

[6] Section 22 (1), Bengal Tenancy Act, introduces a special rule of merger, in providing that where the landlord of an occupancy holding is a proprietor (sic) a tenure holder, and the entire landlord's interest and tenant's is united in the same person, the tenant's interest merges in the landlord. Section 22 (2) provides when the occupancy raiyat's interest and a cosharer landlord's interest is combined in the same person, there will be no merger; but where a co-sharer landlord acquires the raiyati holding by purchase at a rent sale or certificate sale under the Act, the raiyati interest will merge in his landlord's interest, but he will have to pay a fair and equitable sum to the other cosharer landlords.

[6] It is important notice (sic) that S. 22 makes no provision for the case of the landlord's interest and a co-sharer tenant's interest being combined in the same person.

[7] Turning now to the old S. 26 (F), Bengal Tenancy Act, we find that as soon as the landlord's application for pre-emption is granted, the right, title and interest in the holding accruing to the transferee, shall be deemed to have vested in the landlord whose application has been granted subject to the provision of S. 22. As S. 22 has no provisions applicable to a case where a landlord acquires part of the tenancy interest, the consequence of the above provision of sub-s. (5) of the old S. 26 (F) is that the opposite parties hold apart from the landlord's interest a share of the tenant's interest.

[8] Mr. Gupta argues that the automatic result of this is that the tenant's interest is wiped out, and the tenancy continues only for the untransferred portion and the landlord is the land. lord for this altered tenancy. According to this argument, suppose there was a holding with a rent of Rs. 50, and an area of 10 bighas, and on eight annas share of the tenant's interest being sold, landlord in exercise of his right of preemption acquires this eight annas interest, the tenancy will at once become one with a rent. of Rs. 25 held by the owner of the unsold eight annas share under the landlord who has exercised the right of pre-emption. If this argument is not accepted, Mr. Gupta points out, the landlord will be able to sue the co-sharer who has not sold, for the entire Rs. 50, even though he is himself liable for Rs. 25. This is certainly a curious position. But another curious thing will result, if Mr. Gupta's argument of the automatic birth of a new tenancy is accepted. The area, in our illustration, was 10 bighas. Which portion of these 10 bighas will form the holding for the tenancy of Rs. 25? Obviously without a partition, this cannot be ascertained. The new tenancy with a rent of Rs. 25, will be, therefore, for an unascertained portion of the former holding. This is perhaps even more unsatisfactory than what results from the joint and several liability of each co-sharer tenant for the entire rent of the holding.

[9] I am, therefore, unable to accept Mr. Gupta's argument that an automatic alteration of the tenancy by a process of reduction, takes place, when the landlord acquires part of the tenancy interest. Once a tenancy has come into existence, it must in law be held to be continuing, unless shown to have been extinguished, or split under the provisions of S. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act, and the burden of proving that it does not exist in the same form is on the person who says this. There is no case here of extinction of the entire tenancy, or a splitting of the old tenancy into two or more new tenancies. Mr. Gupta's argument is that part of the old tenancy has been extinguished by the mere fact of the landlord having acquired it. As I have stated above, the position according to the argament will be that a tenancy comes into being, but it is not known what lands it includes. This is a contradiction in terms.

[10] In my judgment, when a landlord ac quires part of a tenancy, no partial extinction of the tenancy results; the tenancy continues with only this change that the landlord, and the co-sharer tenant whose share has not been acquired, are now the tenants of the holding.

[12] When they had to decide whether when a co-sharer tenant acquires the entire landlord's interest, the tenancy continues the same, their Lordships held that the tenancy continues, so that even after acquisition of the landlord's interest, a co-sharer tenant remains co-sharer tenant.

[13] In Amjat Talukdar v. Rohini Kanta Bhattacharjee, 45 C. W. N. 901: (A. I. B. (29) 1942 Cal. 68), Henderson J. sitting singly, had to consider exactly the question as is now before us, and decided that the landlord on acquiring share of a tenancy becomes a co-sharer tenant.

[14] My conclusion is that the Courts below rightly held that the opposite parties were entitled as "co-sharer" to exercise a right of preemption under the new S. 26 (F), Bengal Tenancy Act.

[15] I would, therefore, discharge the Rule with costs. Hearing fee 3 gold mohurs, Banerjee J. — This is an appeal by the employer from an order made by the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, West Bengal, awarding compensation against the employer to the widow of the deceased workman in the following circumstances.

- employed by Messrs. Tobacco Manufactures (India) Ltd., (who is the employer,) in its Kidderpore Factory. Stewart lived in Howrah and had to attend the Factory at 8 in the morning, On 10th April 1947, he was going to work riding a bicycle. He was knocked down by a lorry belonging to the Civil Supplies, Government of West Bengal, near Princep's Memorial and received injuries. Stewart died on 13th April 1947 from the injuries. His widow claimed compensation from the employer on the ground that the accident arose in course of and out of the employment.
- [8] The law is well established that the work-man in order to be entitled to the compensation, should be acting in the course of his employment, that is to say, when he is doing something in discharge of a duty to his employer directly or indirectly imposed upon him by his contract of service. The word 'employment' covers and includes things belonging to or arising out of it: St. Helens Colliery Ltd. v. Hewitson, 1924 A O. 59.
- (4) The learned Commissioner found that the employer gave the bicycle to Stewart to secure his punctual attendance at the factory, and the workman was bound to use the bicycle. And the route by which the deceased went was a recognised and permissible route. According to him, therefore, the accident arose in the course of the employment and out of it.

[5] The learned Commissioner reached his conclusion relying on a statement made by the widow in her evidence before the Commissioner that she had heard from her husband that the bicycle had been given to him by his employer, because otherwise he might be late in attending the factory.

[6] In our opinion, this evidence is hearsay. It does not come within any of the sub-sections of 8. 32, Evidence Act. Therefore, it is inadmissible. There is no other evidence to support the finding of the Commissioner that the bicycle was supplied by the employer to the deceased for doing his duty. Therefore, the Commissioner's finding is wrong in law. We, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the order.

[7] The employer's counsel did not ask for costs of this appeal against the widow. So, there will be no order as to costs.

Section 162 of the Code nowhere says that if the statements made to the police by witnesses are signed by them, the accused will not be entitled to get copies of such statements. It merely contains a provision that the statements should not be signed. The police or the prosecution cannot render the section nugative by disobeying its provisions and making the witnesses sign their statements.

Hence the Court is not justified in refusing copies of statements of witnesses merely because they are signed by the witnesses. [Para 2]

S. S. Mukherjee - for Petitioner.

Order.— This Rule has been obtained by the accused whose application to be given copies of the witnesses' statement to the police during the investigation of this case has been refused by the learned trying Magistrate. Against the order of refusal the Sessions Judge was moved to refer the matter to this Court. The learned Sessions Judge stated that the order was bad but he said that the Magistrate may reconsider the order and allow the defence to get copies of the statements made by the witnesses before the police or he may acquit the accused. For these reasons he thought that he should not delay the proceedings by making a reference to this Court.

a reference to this Court. [2] The learned Magistrate's order is in my opinion entirely wrong. An accused person is entitled under the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C., to get copies of the statements made by persons to the police during an investigation under Ch. 14 of the said Code provided that such persons are examined as witnesses by the prosecution. The accused when he gets such statements is entitled to use them for the purposes of contradiction in the manner provided by 8. 145, Evidence Act. Now, 8. 162 of the Code states that persons examined by the police shall not sign their statements. These statements were signed by the witnesses and the Magistrate says that this is a good ground for holding that 162 of the Code does not apply and therefore the defence are not entitled to get copies of the statements of the witnesses. This view, I must say, with respect exhibits both a misappreciation of the law and also a wrong sense of justice and fair play. Section 162 of the Code nowhere says that if the statements made to the police by witnesses are signed by them, the accused will not be entitled to get copies of such statements. It merely contains a provision that the statements should not be signed. The police or the prosecution cannot render the section nugatory by disobeying its provisions and making the witnesses sign their statements. I should have thought that an elementary sense of justice would have prevented any one from coming to such a conclusion as the learned Magistrate has done. Next, the learned Magistrate holds that as the statements were recorded under the provisions of R. 254 (b), Police Regulation, Bengal, therefore those statements do not come within the purview of S. 162, Criminal P. C. The answer to this point is obvious. If these statements be treated as statements recorded under the Police Regulation, Bengal, then there is nothing to prevent the accused getting copies of such state. ments for cross examination of the witnesses under 8. 145, Evidence Act. Such statements are not privileged. In this connection I would refer to a decision of this Court in the case of Panchanan Mukherjee v. Emperor, 33 C. W. N. 203 : (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Cal. 257 : 30 Cr. L. J. 577). Further, the investigating officer himself says that he carried out the investigation in accordance with the provisions of S. 174, Oriminal P. C If that be correct, then S. 162, Oriminal P. C., applies because it refers to statements made by persons to a police officer in the course of investigation under Ch. 14 and S. 174 is in Chapter 14, Criminal P. C. I do not know why the learned Magistrate says that this was not an investigation under S. 174, Criminal P. C. That section deals inter alia with the investigation of a case where a person had died under circumstances raising a reasonable suspicion that some other person has committed an offence. Here, the case related to the death of a girl being caused by the rash driving of a motor vehicle. This clearly comes under the provisions of S. 174 (1) (c), Criminal P. C. I wish it to be clearly understood that I am not for a moment suggesting that the case against the accused is in any way established, nor am I giving any opinion whatsoever regarding the merits of the case. All I wish to say is that the case is one which falls under 8. 174 (1) (c), Criminal P. C., if the allegations are proved to be true. It may also fall under the provisions of S. 174 (1) (b) of the Code.

(3) For the reasons stated above, I set aside the order of the learned Magistrate and direct that copies of the statements made by persons to the police who are called as witnesses in this case be supplied to the accused whether they are signed or unsigned or whether they are recorded under the provisions of chapter 14, Oriminal P. C., or under any other provision of the law in order to enable the accused to use the statements for the purpose of contradiction.

In a case coming under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act where an application is filed long after the statutory period and the provisions of S. 18, Limitation Act, are attracted, it is not necessary to come to a definite finding that the auction purchaser was a party to the fraud which had kept the applicants out of knowledge during the period in question. Section 18, Limitation Act, may be availed of to extend the period of limitation of an application for setting aside a sale where fraud is proved to have been committed by the decree-holder though the auction purchaser who was a stranger was not a party or accessory to the fraud. The fraud that can be alleged or proved against an auction purchaser would ordinarily be a fraud subsequent to the sale but for invoking the benefit of S. 18, Limitation Act, it is not necessary to prove fraud subsequent to the sale: A I. Order. - This is an application in revision on behalf of the auction-purchaser against an order passed by the lower appellate Court setting aside a sale. The sale in question was held on 5th May 1941, and a jama of Rs. 74.8-16 gandas covering an area of about 79 bighas was sold for Bs. 203.9-0. About a quarter of this area was khas land and the remaining portion was tenanted. The sale was confirmed on 7th June 1941 and the auction purchaser thereafter obtained possession through Court. About four years later, on 24th July 1946, an application purporting to be under 8s. 173 and 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act was filed by the judgment-debtors. It was alleged that the auction-purchaser was the benamdar of some of the judgment-debtors and this was made the foundation of the application under 8. 173. Various allegations about suppression of service of notices and other irregularities and of fraud were made in support of the prayer made under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. This joint application was dismissed by the learned Munsif and all the allegations by the judgment-debtors were rejected.

Subordinate Judge against this decision. It was held that although the judgment-debtors seemed to have some understanding with the auction-purchaser prior to the confirmation of the sale and though the case was not free from a strong suspicion that some of the judgment-debtors were in league with the auction-purchaser, it had not been conclusively proved that he was the benamdar of some of the judgment-debtors. It was accordingly held that the application under S. 178 had been rightly dismissed by the learned Munsif. In connection with the appeal preferred under 8. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, the learned Judge came to the conclusion that there had been not only material irregularities and fraud in publishing and conducting the sale, to the detriment of the applicants, but that the judgment-debtors had been kept out of their knowledge of the sale by the fraudulent action of the decree-holder. In this view, the sale was set aside.

[3] It is against this order that the present application has been moved in this Court. It is contended in the first instance that no appeal lay to the lower appellate Court against the decision of the learned Munsif. Reliance is placed on the case of Durga Charan v. Bishnupada, 46 C. L. J. 172: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 833), for the proposition that if there be a joint application under ss. 173 and 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, no appeal would lie even against that portion of the order which deals with the prayer under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. On a reference to the decision itself it is apparent that this proposition finds no support. If there is a joint application under the two sections mentioned above and the trial Court sets aside the sale under S. 173, Bengal Tenancy Act, the Court considered that an appeal against that part of the decision which dealt with the prayer under 8. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act would not entitle the aggrived party to any relief in the appeal. This is due to the fact that the sale having been set aside under S. 173, it becomes infractuous for the appellate Court to go again and further into the question whether the sale can or ought to be set aside for the reasons assigned which come under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. In the case now before me, the trial Court had refused to set aside the sale under either of the two sections. If the Court of appeal sets aside the sale on appeal on grounds falling under 8. 174 (8), Bengal Tenancy Act, there would be no decision by the appellate Court which would be contradictory to the decision arrived at by the trial Court under S. 178 of the Act. The jurisdiction of the Court to entertain an appeal against an order passed under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, cannot be taken away by reasons which were attempted to be placed before me. The appeal was compe. tent so far as the same was directed against the order passed under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act.

[4] It is next contended on behalf of the petitioner by Mr. Sen that in a case coming under 8. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, where the application is filed long after the statutory period and the provisions of 8. 18, Limitation Act have to be attracted, the Court must come to a definite finding that the auction purchaser was a party to the fraud which had kept the applicants out of knowledge during the period in question. Reliance is placed on Jagiswar Das v. Deb Narain Roy, 46 C. W. N. 403. It may be pointed out that the observations which appear in that judgment are all obiter as it had been held that there had been a previous application by the petitioner some years ago. On that finding alone there could be no doubt that the application was, apart from any other consideration, barred by limitation. Certain observations there are no doubt but they are not a decision on the point which actually arose. Reference was also made to the case of Atul Jamil v. Ambia Khatun 43 C. W. N. 862: (A. I. B. (26) 1939 Cal. 663). The actual decision in this case also was that the initial onus of proving that by reason of fraudulent concealment on the part of the person against whom the applicant had made the petition that he had been kept from the knowledge of his right to file the same, lies very heavily on the applicant. The manner in which such fraud is to be proved by the applicant was also indicated.

"Where any person having a right to institute a suit or make an application has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right or of the title on which it is founded,

or where any document necessary to establish such right has been fraudulently concealed from him, the time limited for instituting a suit or making an application:

(a) against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto or

(b) against any person claiming through him otherwise than in good faith and for a valuable consideration.

shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby.

This section was recently considered by B. K. Mukherjea J in the case of Mahipati Haldar v. Atul Krishna, 53 C. W. N. 587: (A. I. R. (86) 1949 Cal. 212). It was held there that S. 18, Limitation Act may be availed of to extend the period of limitation of an application for setting aside a sale where fraud is proved to have been committed by the decree-holder though the auction purchaser who was a stranger was not a party or accessory to the fraud. I respectfully agree with the view above. The fraud that can be alleged or proved against an auction purchaser would ordinarily be a fraud subsequent to the sale but as has been held repeatedly that for invoking the benefit of 8. 18, Limitation Act, it is not necessary to prove fraud subsequent to the sale. The provisions of S. 18 cannot be interpreted so as to make it incumbent on the petitioner to prove that in respect of the items of fraud proved against the decree-holder, the auction purchaser was also an accessory thereto. In this view, the findings arrived at by the Court of appeal below were sufficient for setting aside the sale.

[6] The Rule is accordingly discharged with costs.

An order passed under S. 488, Criminal P. C., is a continuing order and it is based upon the fact that the husband and wife are at variance and that the busband has refused to maintain his wife. In these circumstances the husband is compelled to maintain his wife by an order passed under S. 488 of the Code. It is clear from the provisions of the various sub-sections to St. 488 and 489, that this order of maintenance is dependent upon certain circumstances continuing to exist. In altered circumstances the order may be set aside or varied. The two sections lay down certain conditions under which an order for maintenance may be set aside. It is true that the sections have not mentioned the particular circumstances of a compromise between the parties, but it would be reasonable to hold that where parties have come together and have asked the Court to cancel an order for maintenance the Court has jurisdiction to cancel such order In any event High Court by virtue of the provisions of S. 561A of the Code has certain .nherent powers and under those powers it can cancel the order of maintenance in such circumstances: A. Order.—The petitioner has obtained this Rule and it relates to certain proceedings under S. 488, Criminal P. C.

briefly are as follows: The petitioner applied for an order of maintenance under S. 488, Criminal P. C. against her husband The order granting maintenance was made on 23rd June 1947. There were certain proceedings thereafter which need not be considered. On 3rd November 1947, the husband made an application under 8 488, subsection. (5), Criminal P. C., for cancellation of the order for maintenance on the ground that his wife was living in adultery. When that application came to be heard a compromise petition was put in on 2nd December 1948 which is in the following terms:

"The humble petition of the parties in this case, most respectfully sheweth: That the above matter has been compromised between the parties and the husband and wife have agreed to live together and none of the parties desires to proceed with any case against the other either oivil or criminal.

That your petitioner Ram Nawaj will maintain his wife honourably and there will be no further cause of dissatisfaction for the wife.

That your petitioner Tetri has agreed to live with her husband as a faithful wife.

In the circumstances your petitioners pray that your Honour would be pleased to treat this case as compromised and the order of maintenance may be treated as ineffective. And your petitioner, as in duty bound, shall ever pray."

Thereafter the learned Magistrate passed an order on that very date in the following terms:

"Petition filed that the matter is amicably settled. Proceedings dropped. The order of maintenance already passed becomes ineffective. Both sides present."

On 4th December 1948 the wife came again before the Court and filed a petition stating that in pursuance of the compromise petition she went to her husband's house, that husband assaulted her and kept her under look and key and threatened to cut off her hands and legs. It is futher stated that she managed to come out of the room with some difficulty and she asked the Court to set aside the order of 2nd December 1948 and review the case and issue notice on the second party to appear before the Magistrate. The learned Magistrate held that the parties baving already compromised the matter and he having passed an order upon the compromise he could not revive the order for maintenance after the compromise had been effected and that the remedy of the wife lay in making a fresh application. In this view he refused the applica. tion. Against this order, there was a motion preferred to the Sessions Judge which was heard by the Additional Sessions Judge and he refused to refer the case to this Court. The petitioner then applied for and obtained the present rule.

(8) It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass the order which he did upon the compromise petition. It is said that once an order for maintenance is made it can only be cancelled or reviewed upon the conditions mentioned in Ss. 488 and 489, Criminal P. O. If the conditions specified in those sections were not present the Court had no jurisdiction to cancel the order for maintenance. It is argued that the order of and December 1948 being without jurisdiction, the order for maintenance still sub-ists. Learned advocate on behalf of the husband frankly admits that there is no specific provision in the Code which empowers a Magistrate to cancel an order for maintenance upon a compromise petition filed by the parties after the order has been made; but he contends that in the circumstances. which have occurred the basis of the order for maintenance no longer exists, and that as it is an order dependent on certain continuing circumstances it has become infructuous and that this Court should not interfere with the order of the learned Magistrate refusing to accede to the prayer made in the petition of the wife. I have been taken through both Ss. 488 and 489, Criminal P. C; it is clear that there is no express provision in these sections which permits a Magistrate to cancel an order for maintenance which he has already made on the ground that: the parties have made up their differences and wished to have the order cancelled. On the other hand, there is no prohibition in the Code against a Magistrate acting upon a petition of compromise in proceedings under S. 488, Criminal P. C. In my opinion, if both the partiesapproached the Magistrate after the Magistrate made an order of maintenance and said that they did not wish this order to continue there could be no obstacle in the way of the Masistrate passing an order in terms of the com. promise. On behalf of the petitioner, I was. referred to two decisions, namely, Parul Bala Debi v. Satis Chandra, 37 C. L J. 180: (A I. B. (10) 1928 Cal. 456: 24 Cr. L. J. 945) and Kanangammal v. Pandara Nadar, 50 Mad. 663: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 376: 28 Cr. L. J. 271). The facts in these cases are quite different. In those cases the wife after an order for maintenance had been made went to live with her husband for some time. Thereafter she left her husband. and applied for recovery of maintenance in accordance with the order passed by the Magistrate. The Courts held that the mere fact that she had gone to stay with her husband did not. have the effect of cancelling or nullifying the order for maintenance and that until such order of maintenance is cancelled or nullified the wife is entitled to claim maintenance in accordancewith the terms of the order.

[4] Learned advocate for the husband referred to a decision of the Rangoon High Court, namely, the case of U Po Shein v. Ma Sein Mya, 32 Or. L. J. 114: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 kang. 89). In that case the wife had obtained an order of maintenance against her husband. The husband brought a suit for restitution of conjugal rights and got a decree. The wife after the decree applied for payment of her maintenance. It was held that after the decree for restitution of conjugal rights had been made the very basis of the order under S. 488, Criminal P. O. had disappeared and therefore the wife was not entitled to get maintenance in accordance with the order passed under S. 488, Criminal P. C. The facts of the case also are not the same as the facts in the present one. I must, therefore, decide this point on the wording of the section and upon general principles. In my opinion an order passed under S. 488, Criminal P C., is a continuing order and it is based upon the fact that the husband and wife are at variance and that the husband has refused to maintain his wife. In these circum. stances the husband is compelled to maintain his wife by an order passed under S. 488, Criminal P. C. It is clear from the provisions of the various sub-sections to Ss. 488 and 489, Criminal P. C. that this order of maintenance is depen. dent upon certain circumstances continuing to exist. In altered circumstances the order may be set aside or varied. The two sections lay down certain conditions under which an order for maintenance may be set aside. It is true that the sections have not mentioned the particular circumstances of this case. I think it would be reasonable to hold that where parties have come together and have asked the Court to cancel an order for maintenance the Court has jurisdiction to cancel such order. In any event this Court by virtue of the provisions of S. 561A, Criminal P. C., has certain inherent powers and under those powers this Court can cancel the order of maintenance in certain circumstances. In my opinion the circumstances which have occurred would justify this Court in cancelling the order of maintenance and for greater safety and I cancel that order. It is open to the wife, however, to file a fresh application for maintenance on fresh grounds.

A. F. A. D. No. 1214 of 1945, Decided on 9th September 1949, against decree of Sub-Judge, 1st Addl. Court, Alipore, D/- 9th March 1945.

(a) Tenancy Laws—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 182 — Right given by section is personal right—It continues to be available only so long as conditions in S. 182 are satisfied.

The word 'holds' in S. 182, indicates the point of time when the necessary ingredients are to be satisfied and that is when the dispute about the incidence of the tenancy of the homestead arises: A. I. R. (36) 1949 Oal. 259 and A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 565, Rel. on.

It is not correct to state that the raiyat or an underraiyat acquires a right of occupancy in the homestead on his proving that he is a settled raiyat or the holder of a raiyati in the same village or in a contiguous one. It is not that the homestead itself becomes a raiyati holding. The effect of the provisions is not to create a transferable occupancy right in that homestead. The right is a personal one dependent on the proof of the existence of certain facts. Such personal rights continue to be available only so long as the conditions are satisfied.

(b) Tenancy Laws—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 182. (as amended in 1928)—Word 'contiguous' must be construed in its strict sense—Person holding homestead in one village and agricultural holding in another adjoining village—Subsequent division of latter into three villages with result that contiguity was lost—Person loses his right to claim benefit of S. 182.

The word 'contiguous' in S. 182, must be interpreted in its strict sense as 'touching in actual contact, next in space, meeting at a common boundary' and not in its loose sense as 'neighbouring, situate in close proximity'.

Where a person holds his homestead land in one village and his agricultural holding in another adjoining village but the latter is subsequently divided into three villages with the result that the agricultural holding becomes situate in a village which has no common boundary or even a point of contact with the village in which the homestead is situate the person loses his right to claim the benefit of S. 182, in the homestead.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiffs against the decision by the Courte below dismissing the plaintiffs' suit against the defendants for ejectment.

[2] The principal question in issue in this appeal depends on an interpretation of 8. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act and is one of first impression

[3] The plaintiffs are admittedly the owners of premises No. 47/1 now re-numbered 46/1 Barrackpore Trunk Road, covering an area of about 11 bighas, which had been included upto March 1924, within the municipal limits of Cossipore Chitpore; but from after the passing of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923, which came into force on 1st April 1924, it is within the ambit of the Calcutta Corporation. As after service of notice under S. 105, T. P. Act, the defendants had not given up possession, the plaintiff filed the present suit for ejectment. There is a further claim for arrears of rent for a certain period upto the date of notice and for damages for use and occupation thereafter. The defence is that the alleged notice had not been served or at any rate it was not sufficient in law. The tenancy is claimed to be governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act and in any view the defendants being settled rayats of the adjoining village Nainan they have acquired an occupancy right in the suit land and cannot be ejected.

[4] The learned Munsif held that the notice to quit had been duly served and the holding having been leased out for residential use it was not a holding held for agricultural purposes but the defendants being settled rayats of the adjoining village the provisions under S. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act would be attracted. Plaintiffs' prayer for ejectment was accordingly dismissed.

(5) On appeal by the plaintiffs the learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the trial Court that the suit land had been leased out for residential purposes and the notice had been duly served He, however, remitted the suit to the trial Court for further investigation as to the applicability of S. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act. The High Court was moved against this order of remand. The direction given by this Court is in the following terms:

"The learned Subordinate Judge will himself take such evidence as the parties think fit to adduce on the question whether the village Nainan is contiguous to the village where the suit land is situate. He will also take such evidence as the plaintiffs seem fit to adduce in rebuttal of the Dakbilas Ex. F series. He will then dispose of the appeal in accordance with law."

[6] Upto this stage the parties were proceeding on the footing that 8. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act as amended in 1928, was the one applicable in the present case. When, however, the matter was heard by the learned Subordinate Judge after remand from this Court, it was argued that S. 182, as it stood before the amending Act of 1928, was attracted. This contention was upheld. The defendant tenant was found to have acquired an occupancy right in the suit land as their home. stead from before the amended section had come into force. It was also held in the alternative that even if the amended section was applicable the defendants were equally protected. Hence this appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs.

[7] The first point urged on behalf of the appellants is that even if the line of reasoning adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge be accepted he was wrong in stating that the defendants had acquired an occupancy right before the amended section had come into effect on 21st February 1929. The dakhilas marked as Ex. F series show that the defendants, were tenants in respect of the holding from 1824 B S. 18t of Baisakh 1824 B. S. corresponds to 14th April 1917. Twelve years from this date would not be completed when the amended section took effect on 21st February 1929. The reasoning adopted by the Subordinate Judge for attracting the old section cannot be supported.

(8) Before I deal with the question whether the new point about the applicability of the old section can be urged, I shall first consider whether on the facts found S. 182 as it now stands can be attracted.

[9] There can be no question that the land in suit, although now under the jurisdiction of Calcutta Corporation is within the added area and under cl. (ii) of sub s. (8) of S. 1, Bengal Tenancy Act, the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act would be attracted unless a notification, withdrawing the operation of the Act is issued. As there has been no such notification, the Bengal Tenancy Act is attracted over the area in question.

[10] Section 182, Bengal Tenancy Act, as after amendment in 1928 is in the following terms:

"When a raight or an under-raight holds his homestead otherwise than as part of his holding within the same village or any village contiguous to that village, his status in respect of his homestead shall be that of a raight or an under-raight according to the status of the landlord of the homestead and the incidents of his tenancy of such homestead shall be governed by the provisions of this Act applicable to raiyats or under-raiyats, as the case may be."

[11] If the raiyat has his homestead in the same village in which he has his agricultural holding or in "any village contiguous to that village the tenant will thereby acquire a status dependant on the status of the landlord of the homestead."

[12] The first question for consideration in this connection is whether the village Chasadhopapara, wherein the land in suit is situate and is used as the homestead, is contiguous to the village which is now known as Nainan Purba. The admitted fact is that to the east of the village Chasadhopapara was situate a village known as Nainan which extended further to the east beyond the limits of the northern boundary of Chasadhopapara. It is common case of both the parties that there was one village Nainan until 24th June 1931, when the old village Nainan was divided into three villages - the western portion which is just to the north of village Chasadhopapara remains as Nainan and is noted as sub-division (1) of Division 1 of Dehi Panchannagram. To the east of this sub-division is sub-division (19) which is known as Nainan Nij. To the further east of sub-division (13) is Nainan Purba, bearing the sub-division No. (12). From Billon's map marked Ex. J. it would appear that Nainan Purba had no separate existence as an independent village before 1931.

[13] On these facts it is contended on behalf of the landlord plaintiffs that Nainan Purba having now been declared as a separate village under 8. 8 (19), Bengal Tenancy Act which has no common boundary with Chasadhopapara, the agricultural holding which is in Nainan Purba cannot be considered to be in a contiguous village and accordingly the provision of

S. 182 will not be attracted.

[14] On behalf of the tenant defendants it is argued on the other hand that contiguity under S. 182 is not to be strictly interpreted but when two villages are near about, that should be taken as sufficient compliance of the requirements of that section. As admittedly the tenant in respect of the agricultural land had acquired occupancy right before Nainan-Purba was declared to be a separate village, the right of occupancy which the defendants had so acquired in the homestead in Chasadhopapara could not be destroyed or affected by a subsequent declaration, oreating Nainan-Purba as a separate village.

[15] It is now settled that the tenant need not take settlement of the agricultural holding and of the home-tead at the same time. A person owning a homestead may become a raiyat subsequent to his taking the residential tenancy and he is entitled to the protection provided in S. 182. Pulin Chandra v. Abu Bakhar Naskar, 40 C. W. N. 599: 67 C. L. J. 59: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 565). Similarly, a raiyat becoming a settled raiyat by lapse of time is entitled to invoke the provisions of this section in respect of the residential holding which he had been occupying from before.

the point of time when the necessary ingredients are to be satisfied and that is when the dispute about the incidence of the tenancy of the homestead arises. Nathati Jute Mills v. Kali Prosad Saha, 53 C. W. N. 82 at pages 90 and 91: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 259), see also Pulin Chandra v. Abu Bakhar Naskar (40 C. W. N. 599: 67 C. L. J. 59: A. I. R. (23) 1935 Cal. 565): supra.

which are declared in favour of the tenant over a homestead under S. 182 are dependent on his holding another agricultural tenancy in respect of which he has a right of occupancy. If such a tenant disposes of his agricultural holding and ceases to be a settled raiyat or an occupancy raiyat he will not continue to have the rights over his homestead which he previously had. Nathati Jute Mills v. Kali Prosad Saha (53 O. W. N. 82: A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 259) supradissenting from the single Judge decision Haru Charan Manna v. Sourendranath, 40 C. W. N. 182.

[18] If, on the other hand, such a tenant transfers his residential holding to another person who holds no agricultural holding either in the same village or in any contiguous village, the transferee will not be entitled to rely or fall back upon the rights which could have been claimed by his transferor because of his being the holder of another agricultural raiyati holding.

[19] It is further not correct to state that the raiyat or an under rayat acquires a right of occupancy in the homestead on his proving that he is a settled raiyat or the holder of a raiyat in the same village or in a contiguous one. It is not that the homestead itself becomes a raiyati holding. The effect of the provisions is not to create a transferable occupancy right in that homestead. The right is a personal one dependent on the proof of the existence of certain facts. Such personal rights continue to be available only so long as the conditions are satisfied.

[20] The Bench decision in Naihati Jute Mills v. Kali Prasad Saha, 53 C. W. N. 82 at p. 88: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 259) is a clear authority to the effect that the same person must, when the dispute arises about the ejectibility of the tenant from the homestead land be still holding there as agricultural plot. Contiguity of the villages must be proved as at that relevant time. The word 'village' as used in the Bengal Tenancy Act has got a special meaning in this Act as clearly defined in S. 3 (19) of the act. On the declaration made in June 1931, Nainan-Purba has become a separate village. It is admitted that not only there is no common boundary between the village Chasadhopapara and the village Nainan-Purba, there is even no point of contact between the two. The word 'contiguous' in Murray's Oxford Dictionary, is explained as "touching, in actual contact, next in space, meeting at a common boundary, bordering, adjoining." Reliance, however, is placed by the defendant respondent on what is stated by Murray as being the loose use of the word contiguous: "Neighbouring, situate in close proximity". In the first place such loose use is not in use in modern times. Further, such a loose use will introduce uncertainties and various complexities into the working of the provisions of S. 182. Anomalies will arise if it has to be decided in each particular case as to what is to be conceded to be close proximity. It will introduce an uncertainty which is wholly undesirable.

[21] Even if the test of close proximity were to be applied, the existence of another village Nainan Nij intervening between the two will not justify describing Chasadhopapara and Nainan-Purba as contiguous villages.

[22] I would, therefore, hold that the two villages were not contiguous ones at the relevant time and the defendant is not entitled to rely upon S. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act as it now stands after amendment in 1928.

[23] As indicated already the defendant made a new case after remand that the old S. 182 was attracted though the grounds mentioned by the Subordinate Judge for attracting the old section cannot be supported. Dr. Sen Gupta contends that it may be possible for the defendants to prove that they had acquired occupancy rights in respect of the agricultural plot long before

1929, and that such right cannot be affected by the subsequent notifications declaring Purba Nainan as a separate village which cannot affect the defendants' right of occupancy which had so been already acquired.

[24] Reliance is placed on certain observations appearing in the Naihati Jute Mills Co. Ltd. v. Kali Prasad Saha, 53 C. W. N. 82: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 259) as to the effect of the amended section on rights already acquired by the operation of the old S. 182 before 1st January 1929. As the facts necessary for giving a final decision on this point have not been ascertained I would not express any opinion on this question.

[25] The question of attracting the provisions of S. 182 as it stood before the amendment had not been raised up to the High Court on the previous occasion and if such a point is allowed to be taken the parties will have to be given an opportunity of adducing evidence on question of facts which must be enquired into. Ordinarily, such an enquiry ought not to be allowed at a late stage. In view, however, a further enquiry has to be directed to determine the applicability or otherwise of the provisions contained in the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948, which came into force during the pendency of appeal in this Court, I think the parties may have a further opportunity of agitating the applicability or otherwise of S. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act, as it stood before 1929.

[26] It may be noted that even if it had been held that the residential and occupancy holdings were in two contiguous villages the defendants would not have been able to rely upon S. 182 as it now stands as there is a further lacuna. On the authority of the Naihati Jute Mills Co. Ltd. v. Kali Prasad Saha, 53 C. W. N. 82:(A. I. R. (86) 1949 Cal. 259), the status of the tenant in respect of the homestead is to be determined "according to the status of the landlord of the homestead." It is for the tenant to prove what the status of the landlord is. This aspect of the case was neither raised by the parties nor considered by the Courts until the hearing of this appeal now. Had I not been of the view that the amended S. 182 was not attract. ed I would have been bound to send the case back for enquiry and decision as to the status of the landlord of the homestead i. e. the plaintiff. This point, however, now becomes immaterial on the decision arrived at as above.

[27] Even if it be found that the defendants are not entitled to rely upon or invoke the provisions contained in the old S. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act, a further question will arise for consideration. During the pendency of the appeal in this Court, the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948, came into force on 1st December, 1948. Whether the defendants are "tenants" as defined in S. 2 (11) of this Act will have to be examined. Whether the defendants can in that case fall back upon Ss. 11, 12 or any other provisions of that Act will also require consideration.

[29] The judgment and decree passed by the Subordinate Judge are set aside and the case is remitted to the lower appellate Court for rehearing according to the directions indicated above. The learned Subordinate Judge will frame proper issues for determining whether old 8. 182, Bengal Tenancy Act and or the provisions of the West Bergal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948, are attracted in the present case. Such issues will be sent down to the Court of the Munsif for trial after allowing the parties to adduce evidence on those issues. The findings of the trial Court so arrived at will be considered along with evidence already on the record and the learned Subordinate Judge will proceed to hear the appeal on those issues only according to law. The appeal is accordingly allowed. Each party will bear his own costs in this Court. Future costs will be in the discretion of the Court below.

Harries C. J. — This is a petitton for revision of an order of a learned Subordinate Judge of Murehidabad directing that the evidence of the plaintiff's husband be taken on commission.

[2] The plaintiff who is a lady had already given evidence on commission in the suit and it is suggested that her husband was her legal adviser and a most important witness in the case. The defence were naturally anxious to cross examine this witness in open Court. But an application was made for the issue of a commission on the ground that the witness was unfit to give evidence.

[3] An affidavit of the plaintiff was filed in support of the application and a medical certificate of some medical practitioner was also tendered.

[4] There can be no doubt that the learned Judge in coming to the conclusion that a commission should issue was influenced by this medical certificate. In his order he states:

"Heard the learned lawyers of both parties and perused the petition of the plaintiff of date supported by a medical certificate. Plaintiff's prayers for examination of her ailing husband on commission will be allowed."

[5] Mr. Banerji on behalf of the petitioner has contended that this medical certificate was linadmissible. The medical man who gave the certificate did not swear an affidavit and a medical certificate tendered in this manner is the worst form of hearsay evidence. By tendering the certificate the plaintiff informs the Court what the doctor says in the matter with her husband. She certainly could not give evidence that a doctor had told her verbally what was in the certificate. Neither can she produce the certificate and make it evidence because it is merely what the doctor had told her in writing. The certificate is wholly inadmissible in evidence. That being so, the very basis of the Judge's order disappears and the order must consequently be set aside.

[6] It will be of course open to the plaintiff, if her husband is now unfit to give evidence, to make a fresh application. But before the Court makes an order for the examination of this witness on commission it must have before it admissible evidence. The doctor should be called so that the defence would have an opportunity of cross examining to test his evidence.

[7] The result, therefore, is that this petition is allowed and the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside. The rule is made absolute with costs.

(8) Let the counter affidavit filed in Court to day be kept on the record.

Where the appellant to the Privy Council deposits an amount in Court as security for the costs of the respondents, the appellant still retains some disposing power over the amount deposited, which he may exercise for his benefit. The extent of the power is dependent on certain contingencies. The fact that the G. P. Notes deposited are endorsed in the name of an officer of the Court does not affect the question. The word property in S. 60 is used in a wide sense and does not mean only proprietorship but includes any right or power in respect of the same. The security deposit is made for the purpose of enabling the respondents to England to realise the cost which may be awarded to the latter in case the appeal fails. Even if the appeal fails, the costs decreed may or may not exhaust the deposit. In the latter case, the surplus is available for the appellant (depositor). If the appeal succeeds, the whole of the deposit remains at the dis-[Paras 20, 21 and 24] posal of the depositor.

Chandra Sekhar Sen and Jagneswar Majumdar
— for Appellants.

Md. Asir -for Province of East Bengal. Sits Kanta Laheri - for Respondents.

G. N. Das J.— This is an appeal by the Province of Bengal against an order dated 23rd September 1946, passed by Mr. J. P. Mukherjee, learned Subordinate Judge, 2nd Additional Court, District 24 Parganas, dismissing an execution case started by appellant.

[2] The facts are as follows: Bholanath Sen, predecessor-in-interest of the respondents and Tulsimanjuri Dasi filed a suit in forma pauperis, being Title Suit No. 69 of 1939 against Rajlakshmi Dasi and Nabani Gopal Banerjee. On 31st June 1941, the suit was dismissed and under the provisions of O. 33, R. 11, Civil P. C., a decree for payment of Rs. 2484-12-0 being the court-fees which would have been payable to the Government, had the plaintiff not been permitted to sue as paupers, was passed against the plaintiffs in favour of the Government.

[8] In 1900 the said Bholanath Sen bad borrowed a sum of Rs. 8000 from Jogendranath Das on a mortgage. In 1911 Jogendra sued to enforce the mortgage. The Court, however, passed a money decree in favour of Jogendra. Jogendra preferred an appeal to this Court. On 5th June 1917, this Court allowed the appeal and passed a preliminary mortgage decree. Bholanath Sen preferred an appeal to His Majesty in Council, which was numbered P. C. Appeal No. 126 of 1917. Bholanath Sen deposited 32 p. c. G. P. Notes of the face value of Rs. 4000 as security for cost of the said Jogendranath Das. in the said P. C. Appeal. The P. C. Appeal was dismissed with costs. On 23rd November 1918, a final mortgage decree for Rs. 43,000 odd was passed in favour of Jogendra. The decree was executed and the mortgaged properties were sold on 6th october 1986 and purchased by the decreeholder Jogendra for Rs. 79,000 the dues of the mortgages being about Rs. 85,000 on that date. The eale was confirmed on 29th May 1939. The decree-holder auction purchaser took possession through Court on 20th February 1940. The Bengal Money-lenders Act having come into force, the judgment-debtor Bholanath Sen instituted proceedings under the said Act for reopening of the said mortgage decree and for incidental reliefs. On 26th February 1944 the learned Subordinate Judge directed the decree to be reopened and a new preliminary decree for Rs. 48,000 was passed, but no instalments were granted. Both Jogendra and Bholanath appealed to this Court. The appeals were disposed of on 26th April 1944 and this Court directed a preliminary decree to be passed for Rs. 28,826 which was made payable in 10 annual instalments

[4] Meanwhile on 25th August 1942 the Province of Bengal executed the decree for Rs. 2484-12-0 passed in T. S. No. 69 of 1939 against Bholanath Sen and Tulsi Manjuri Dasi and prayed for realisation of the same by the attachment of 31 p. c. G. P. Notes for Rs. 4000 deposited by Bholanath Sen as security for costs of the respondent Jogendranath Das in P. C. Appeal No. 126 of 1917. This was registered as Title Execution Case No. 89 of 1942. On 15th March 1944, Ajit Nath Das one of the respondents in P. C. Appeal No. 126 of 1927 filed an application under O. 21, Rr. 52 and 58 Civil P. C., for releasing the said G. P. Notes from attachment by the Province of Bengal. This gave rise to Miscellaneous Case No. 11 of 1944. The miscellaneous case was dismissed on 2nd August 1944. On the ground that as the first instalment bad not fallen due, the claimant had no lien on the said 8 p. c. G. P. Notes and the latter could not be released from attachment. No suit has been filed by the claimant under O. 21, R 63, Civil P. C.

[5] On 6th March 1946, the judgment-debtor Bholanath Sen filed a petition of objection under S. 47 and prayed that the G. P. Notes be released from attachment and the execution case be dismissed. This was registered as Miscellaneous Case No. 12 of 1946. The learned Subordinate Judge by his order dated 23rd September 1946 allowed the miscellaneous case on the following grounds: (1) The mortgagee respondents in the said P. C. Appeal have a lien on the said G. P. Notes. (2) The said G. P. Notes were earmarked for a certain purpose viz., the payment of the cost of the said P. C. Appeal and cannot be utilised for any other purpose unless the said costs are paid. (3) The order in the claim case was made on the footing that the first instalment had not then become due and is not conclusive. On 2nd January 1947, the decree-holder Province of Bengal preferred this appeal against the said order.

[6] Mr. Sen, the learned Senior Government Pleader appearing for the appellant pressed the following points: (1) Even assuming that the lien of the respondents in the said P. C. Appeal subsisted, there was no bar to an attachment of the said G. P. Notes. (2) The lien in fact does not subsist, because the P. C. costs are now incorporated in the reopened decree which created a charge only on the mortgage properties. (3) The order passed in the claim case is binding on the judgment-debtor.

[7] Mr. Siti Kanta Lahiri for the respondents raised three preliminary objections: (1) The petitition filed by the respondent judgment-debtor really came under 0. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C. and no appeal lay against the order allowing the same. (2) The appeal cannot proceed in the absence of Tulsimanjuri, the co-judgment debtor. (3) The decree under execution cannot be now executed by the Province of Bengal which has ceased to exist since the appointed day (15th August 1947).

[8] The first objection must be overruled as the objection to attachment is at the instance of the judgment debtor and not of a third party. The case comes within 8. 47 vide Mulla's Civil

[9] The second objection is also without any substance. The G. P. Notes sought to be attached were deposited by Bholanath Sen alone. The relief is claimed against him and on his death his successors-in interest who are parties to the appeal as respondents.

[10] The third objection requires careful consideration. Section 8 (1), Indian Independence Act, 1947 provides that as from the appointed day. (a) the Province of Bengal, as constituted under the Government of India Act, 1935, shall cease to exist, and (b) there shall be constituted in lieu thereof two new Provinces to be known respectively as East Bengal and West Bengal.

(Right, Property and Liabilities) Order, 1947 provides that the initial distribution of rights, property and liabilities would be governed by the provisions of the order subject to any agreement between the two Dominions of India and Pakistan, or the provinces concerned, and to any award of the Arbitral Tribunal.

[12] Sections 4, 5 and 6 relate to the distribution of land, goods, coins, banknotes and currency

[13] Section 7 deals with distribution of all property other than land, goods, coins, bank-

for the joint purposes of the two Dominions of East Bengal and West Bengal all such property which was held for the purpose of the Province of Bengal. It is admitted on both sides that the decree which related to court fees payable in respect of a suit in Alipur, Bengal was held for the purpose of the Province of Bengal; as such, the decree automatically vested, as from the appointed date, in His Majesty for the Province of East and West Bengal.

Provinces of East and West Bengal would be automatically substituted for the Province of Bengal in this appeal which was pending on the appointed day and the appeal shall continue as such.

[16] The above result is, by reason of S. 8 of the Order, subject to any agreement between the two Dominions or Provinces or any award of the Arbitral Tribunal.

[17] No such agreement has been placed before us and we are not aware of the terms of such an agreement, if any.

[18] As the interest in the decree has been automatically transferred to the Provinces of East Bengal and West Bengal, both the Provinces are to be deemed to be appellant. The learned Senior Government Pleader, for the Province of West Bengal represents one of the appellants viz., the Province of West Bengal. We gave time to the Province of East Bengal to appear. Mr. Asir has appeared for the Province of East Bengal and represents the latter. Mr. Asir has accepted the position taken by the Province of West Bengal.

[20] The security deposit was made for the purpose of enabling the respondents to England to realise the cost which may be awarded to the latter in case the appeal fails. Even if the appeal fails, the costs decreed may or may not exhaust the deposit. In the latter case, the surplus is available for the appellant (depositor).

the properties liable to attachment, namely lands ; all other saleable property, moveable or immoveable, of the judgment-debtor, over which or the profits of which, he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf.

[24] The effect of the security deposit as stated already, is not to take away entirely the disposing power of the depositor. In spite of the fact that the deposit is ear-marked for a specific power, the depositor still retains a disposing power which he may exercise for his benefit. The extent of the power is dependent on certain contingencies. The fact that the G. P. Notes deposited are endorsed in the name of an officer of the Court did not affect the question. The word property is used in a wide sense and does not mean only proprietorship but includes any right or power in respect of the same. The effect of the attachment is merely to prevent private alienation and to subject the attached property to claims enforceable under the attachment.

[26] This view is supported by the decision in Shantanand v. Basudevanand, A.I.R. (17) 1930 ALL. 225 at pp. 244-245: (52 ALL. 619 F. B.).

sion in Jagadish Narain v. Mt. Ramsakal Koer, 8 Pat. 478: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Pat 97). In that case, money was deposited by an insolvent as security for costs of an appeal to His Majesty in Council. The deposit was attached by a creditor. It was held that the attachment was valid, the only effect is that it is subject to the result of the appeal.

[28] Mr. Lahiri relied on the case of Ramiah V. Gopala Aiyar, 41 Mad. 1053 : (A.I.R. (6) 1919 Mad. 607). In that case a debtor in order to prevent his arrest by the creditor, deposited the claim of the plaintiff. The money so deposited was attached by another person who had obtained a decree against the depositor. The latter was adjudicated an insolvent. It was held that the money deposited was charged with the dues of the plaintiff but the attachment effected was good, the rights of the attaching creditor and the official receiver were however subject to the said charge. Mr. Lahiri also relied on the case of Gauranga Behari v. Manindra Nath, 58 C. L. J 222 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 625). This case turned on the question of priority between a mere attaching judgment-oreditor, the official receiver and a person in whose favour an order had been made by a Court to bring the money into Court. The cases cited by Mr. Labiri do not therefore militate against the view taken by me. The decision in Chitrambani Ltd. v. Kisava Achan, 58 C. W. N. 892, did not decide the point before us. The first contention raised on behalf of the appellant therefore succeeds.

[29] It is not necessary to express an opinion on the second contention as we are not in a position to ascertain, on the materials before us, how far the judgment debtor has fulfilled the terms of the reopened decree. We may observe, however, that the mere passing of the reopened decree had not the effect of extinguishing the security for costs of the Privy Council.

[80] The third contention is not of substance, the claim was filed by one of the decree-holders and the order made was not a final one.

[81] The result therefore, is that this appeal succeeds, the decision of the Court below is set aside and the execution case will proceed. In the circumstances of the case, the parties will bear their own costs.

Criminal Revn. No. 501 of 1949, D/- 18th November 1949.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 117 (4)—Evidence of general repute should be considered very carefully—Magistrate or Judge must consider how far general repute is justified by good grounds—Circumstances under which accused acquired general repute must be examined.

Section 117 (4) provides a very extraordinary rule of evidence and because of the special nature of this provision of law, it is necessary that Judges and Magistrates should consider very carefully the evidence of general repute that is adduced to decide whether in a particular case the evidence of general repute is sufficient to establish the truth of the prosecution allegation that a person is a habitual thief or a robber. Mere enumeration of the number of persons who have given evidence does not amount to a sufficient consideration of the points that are at issue. When the prosecution relies mainly on the evidence of general repute to establish the case that a person is a habitual thief or robber, it is absolutely necessary for the Magistrate and the Judge to consider how far the general repute is justified by good grounds as also to examine the circumstances under which the accused acquired the general repute.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 117 (4) — General repute — Evidence as to — Witness and accused belonging to same caste and walk of life — Fact is in favour of his opinion and not against his credibility.

Though the fact that a certain person is a relation is a circumstance which may be taken into consideration against his evidence, the fact that he belongs to the same caste and walk of life is, far from being a circumstance against the credibility of the witness in a matter of general repute, a circumstance in favour of his opinion; because it is only people who belong to the same circle as the accused who can really give evidence of any value as to what he is reputed to be. (c) Criminal P. O. (1898), Ss. 110 and 117 (2) and (5)—Joint enquiry—Enquiry under S. 110 — There should be accusation justifying joint enquiry.

A joint enquiry against a number of persons would be fully justified in law if and when these persons have jointly taken part as habitual robbers and thieves. In enquiries under S. 110, no less than in trials for offences under the Code, it is necessary before there can be a joint trial of certain persons that there should be an accusation which would justify a joint trial. Where there is no such accusation, a joint enquiry is not in accordance with the provisions of law: A.I.R. (25) 1938 P. C. 180, Foll.

Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherji — for Petitioners.

J. M. Banerji - for the Crown.

Das Gupta J. — This application is against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Midnapur under S. 123, Oriminal P. C., directing the petitioners to execute bonds for good behaviour for a period of three years, and in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for the same period.

[2] Proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C., were drawn up against these petitioners and other persons, the allegations being that they were habitual thieves, robbers, house breakers and were so dangerous and desperate that their being at large without security was hazardous to the community. A large number of witnesses were examined on behalf of the prosecution and quite a fair number for the defence. The learned Magistrate came to the conclusion, on a consideration of the evidence, that the allegations that these persons were habitual thieves, robbers and house breakers had been established and it was necessary for the maintenance of good behaviour that they should be ordered to execute bonds for being of good behaviour for a period of three years. Accordingly, he sent the papers to the learned Sessions Judge of Midnapore. The learned Magistrate discharged two of the persons against whom proceedings were drawn up, being of the view that the charge had not been established as against them.

[3] The learned Sessions Judge has come to the conclusion that the learned Magistrate was right in his opinion that the evidence established the prosecution allegation that these persons were habitual thieves, robbers and house-breakers. He accordingly confirmed the order of the learned Magistrate. In fact he went a little further than the learned Magistrate inasmuch as he even passed an order as regards the two persons whom the Magistrate had discharged holding that the evidence showed that they also were habitual thieves and robbers and accordingly passed an order against them also directing them to execute bonds for good behaviour.

[4] It appears that later on the learned Judge passed an order in order, as it is said, to rectify this wrong direction of him so that the present position as regards these two persons, namely, Abinash and Dhananjoy is that there is no order against them.

[5] We are not concerned at present as to how the learned Judge could make such a mistake, nor how he himself having made such a wrong order had the jurisdiction to pass what is called the rectifying order. The mistake however shows this that the learned Judge was either thoroughly confused by the mass of evidence on the record or that he did not give the matter the attention it deserved. There can be no other explanation of a learned Judge wrongly thinking, as regards persons who had been discharged, that the Magistrate had passed an order and then proceeding to confirm that order. When we turn to the judge ment delivered by the learned Judge

I am confirmed in my opinion that the learned Judge did not give the matter the attention it deserved. His judgment bardly contains any discussion of the evidence. It is true that S. 117 (4), Criminal P. C. provides that the fact that a person is a habitual offender may be proved by evidence of general repute. This is at very extraordinary rule of evidence and because of the special nature of this provision in law, it is necessary that Judges and Magistrates should consider very carefully the evidence of general repute that is adduced to decide whether in a particular case the evidence of general repute is sufficient to establish the truth of the prosecution allegation that a person is a habitual thief or a robber. Mere enumeration of the number of persons who have given evidence does not amount in my opinion to a sufficient consideration of the points that are at issue. The learned Judge, when considering the case of each accused, has merely given the number of persons who deposed to the general repute and then pointed out as regards the persons who spoke in favour of the general repute of the person that they should not be believed, because apart from being relations they did not belong to different castes and walks of life. While I am inclined to agree that the fact that a certain person is a relation is a circumstance which may be taken into consideration against his evidence, the fact that he belongs to the same caste and walk of life is, far from being a circumstance against the credibility of the witness in a matter of general repute, in my opinion, a circumstance in favour of his opinion; because it is only people who belong to the same circle as the accused who can really give evidence of any value as to what he is reputed to be.

[6] When the prosecution relies mainly on the evidence of general repute to establish the case that a person is a habitual thief or robber, it seems to me absolutely necessary for the Magistrate and the Judge to consider how far the general repute is justified by good grounds. It may very well happen that a man is arrested several times, put on trial and acquitted. The fact that he has been arrested several times would itself create a general repute against him, The mere fact that the house of a person has been searched several times would also be sufficient to create a general repute against him even though there may not be good ground for such a search and the search may be the result of some party faction or a quarrel with the police. For these reasons it is necessary, when assessing the value of the evidence of general repute, for the Judge and the Magistrate to examine the circumstances under which the accused acquired the general repute.

[7] In the present case the learned Judge has not cared to consider the evidence from that light at all. To my mind, the judgment delivered by the learned Additional Sessions Judge quite apart from the circumstance mentioned above that he has wrongly passed an order against two persons who had been discharged by the Magistrate is an entirely unsatisfactory one and does not show that he applied his judicial mind to the consideration of the matter at issue.

[8] If that were all, I should be inclined to set aside the order passed by the learned Judge and send the matter for further enquiry by him. But there is a very much more fatal defect in this case. Eleven persons were dealt with together in the enquiry under S. 110, Criminal P. C. Sub-s. (2) of s. 117 provides that an enquiry in proceedings under S. 110 shall be made as nearly as may be practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in summons cases. There is a special provision in sub-s. (5) that where two or more persons have been associated together in the matter under enquiry, they may be dealt with in the same or separate enquiries as the Magistrate shall think just.

[9] There can be no doubt that in view of these provisions a joint enquiry against a number of persons would be fully justified in law if and when these persons have jointly taken part as habitual robbers and thieves. It is settled law now that it is on the basis of the accusation made and not on the facts finally proved on the evidence that the legality or the illegality of a joint trial depends. This has been held by the Privy Council in the case of Babulal Choukhaniv. Emperor, 42 C. W. N. 621: (A. I. R. (25) 1988 P. C. 130: 39 Cr. L. J. 452).

[10] It is contended by Mr. Banerji on behalf of the Crown that the decision of the Privy Council covers only cases of joint trials and does not cover cases of enquiry under S. 110, Oriminal P. C. In my opinion, there is no substance in this contention. Sub-section (5) of S. 117, Oriminal P. C., which has been already mentioned runs thus:

"Where two or more persons have been associated together in the matter under enquiry, they may be dealt with in the same or separate enquiries as the Magistrate shall think just,"

[11] When is the Magistrate to decide whether the same or separate enquiries are to be held? Obviously before he starts the enquiries. Necessarily therefore he cannot decide whether to hold the same or separate enquiries before allegations are made before him that several persons have been associated together as habitual thieves and robbers. Curious consequences will follow, if the contention of Mr. Banerji that it is not necessary that an accusation that the persons have been associated together as habitual thieves and robbers should be made at the very outset before the enquiry commences be accepted. It may very well happen that after a large number of witnesses have been examined the Magistrate is satisfied on the evidence that the accused persons have not been associated together in the matter under enquiry. According to Mr. Banerji, he is then to scrap all the proceedings and start afresh. That clearly in my opinion is not the intention of the Legislature. The very language used in sub.s. (5) does in my judgment make it very clear that the Magistrate has to decide before the enquiry commences whether certain persons should be dealt with in the same or separate enquiries. My conclusion therefore is that in enquiries under S. 110, Criminal P. C., no less than in trials for offences under the Code, it is necessary before there can be a joint trial of certain persons that there should be an accusation which would justify a joint trial. It is quite clear that in the present case there was no such accusation. The neces sary consequence that follows is that the enquiry which has been held has not been held in accordance with the provisions of law.

[12] In this view I do not think that it is possible to send the matter for any enquiry by the learned Judge, for as there is no accusation of joint activity he cannot even now hold a joint enquiry.

[18] I would therefore make this rule absolute and set aside the orders passed by the learned Judge and the Magistrate directing these persons to furnish security for good behaviour. They are discharged from their bail bonds.

[14] Panchu, Jnan Giri and Purna Sahu against whom also orders were passed by the learned Magistrate and the learned Judge, have not moved this Court in revision. In view of my conclusion however that the whole enquiry has been illegal, I would set aside the orders passed by the learned Magistrate and the learned Judge against them as well. If they are in custody they should be set at liberty at once.

(a) Succession Act (1925), Ss. 263, 283 (1) (c) — Revocation of probate — Application for — Trespasser in possession of deceased's property has no interest in it—He cannot apply for revocation.

In order to have the locus standi to apply for revocation of probate, a person must have an interest in the estate of the deceased, supposing he had died intestate. Thus, the creditor of a son who would have been heir on intestacy has locus standi to apply for revocation of probate. But a person who has merely the possession of a trespasser has no interest in the estate of the deceased. He has an interest against the estate of the deceased. He has, therefore, no locus standi to file such an application. [Para 2]

##(b) Hindu law — Succession — Dayabhaga School — Acharyya — On failure of blood relations Acharyya inherits—Diksha guru is not Acharyya.

The rule that an Acharyya of a Hindu governed by the Dayabhag system will inherit on the failure of the blood relations who are heirs is not obsolete in present-day India; in these days, the person who gives the Upanayan will inherit as Acharyya, and a Dikshaguru not being the person who gives Upanayan, or any other preceptor whether spiritual preceptor or not, will not inherit: 12 M. (c) Interpretation of Statutes — Duty of Courts— Courts cannot make new laws or repeal existing ones.

It is the legislature alone who can make new laws. Courts must resist the temptation to change the law under cover of interpretation of law. If as Judges, the Courts use their power to interpret law, to alter laws which they may not like, and to make new laws which they think should be made, that would be a corrupt use of their power. The Courts have to observe constant vigilance against such corrupt use of power by them. Similarly, if and when the ground on which a law is enacted ceases to exist, it is the province of the proper legislative authority to consider the matter of repealing the same. The Courts cannot arrogate to themselves the functions of the legislature. The Courts have no right to repeal alaw, because what appears to them to be the reasons for which the law was enacted [Paras 24 & 29] no longer exist.

Apurba Dhan Mukherji and Chandra Narayan Laik — for Respondents.

Das Gupta J. — The principal question for decision in this appeal is whether the Dikshaguru of a Hindu not being the person who invested him with the sacred thread is his heir, on failure of other heirs. The appeal is against the decision of a Probate Court, allowing an application for revocation of a probate that had been granted of a will of one Manmatha Nath Mandal, who will be later referred to simply as Manmatha. Manmatha died in July 1933, leaving his widow Manada Bala Dassi hereinafter referred to as Manada. Manada died in 1945. Disputes arose over properties left by Manmatha, after the death of Manada, between purchasers from Pachkari Bhuian who sold as a guardian of Gokul said to have been adopted by Manmatha and the purchaser from Janaki Nath Chakravarti who claimed to be Manmatha's heir on the death of Manada, on the ground that he was Manmatha's "Dikshaguru". On 23rd August 1945, Panchkari Bhuian applied for Probate of a will said to have been left by Manmatha. He stated therein that there was no other heir of the deceased except Gokul Chandra Mandal, who had been taken in adoption by Manmatha. No special citation was, therefore, issued, and Probate was granted in November 1945. On the last May 1946, Harinam Sha filed an application for revocation of Probate. He stated therein that the will was a forged document, that the story of adoption of Gokul was false, that Manmatha had died leaving Manada as his heir, and on Manada's death, as no blood relations who would be heirs according to Hindu law existed, Manmatha's Dikshaguru Janaki Nath Chakravarty (who will be hereinafter referred to as Janaki) succeeded to Manmatha's estate as his heir, but this fact was fraudulently concealed in the application for probate, and probate was obtained without any citation being issued on Janaki. It was stated that Harinam had purchased the properties of Manmatha from Janaki by registered Kobala on 21st June 1945. The main contentions of Panchkari Bhuian, in reply to this application were that the will was genuine, that Gokul was really the adopted son of Manmatha, and that Janaki was not Dikshaguru of Manmatha. These contentions were adopted by Sadananda Pyne, who was added as a party. At the trial, the dispute centred round the question of law, whether a Dikshaguru is the heir of a Hindu, on failure of nearer heirs. The first question that was raised was whether Harinam Sha, as purchaser from Janaki, had locus standi to apply for revocation of probate, the other question was whether non-mention of Janaki as an heir was a "just cause for revocation of the Probate." The decision of both these questions turned on the question whether Janaki would be Manmatha's heir, on failure of nearer heirs. The learned trial Court held that Janaki was an heir; under the Hindu law, and allowed the application for revocation.

[2] Before entering into the question whether Janaki, as Dikshaguru, is an heir under the Hindu law, it is necessary to consider the contention of Mr. Apurbadhan Mukherji the learned advocate for the respondent that Harinam Sha, has locus standi to apply for revocation for probate, even if Janaki is not an heir, and so Harinam has not acquired any interest in the property by his purchase from Janaki. Mr. Mukherji contends that the mere fact that Harinam was in actual possession of the property gives him an interest in the property, which gives him a locus standi. If Janaki was not

Manmatha's heir, Harinam has acquired no interest by his purchase from Janaki and Harinam's possession is merely a trespasser's possession. Does possession as a trespasser amount to an interest which gives the locus standi to apply for revocation of probate? Clearly not. In order to have the locus standi to apply for revocation of probate, a person must have an interest in the estate of the deceased, supposing he had died intestate. Thus, the creditor of a son who would have been heir on intestacy, has locus standi to apply for revocation of probate. But a person who has merely the possession of a trespasser, has no interest in the estate of the deceased. He has an interest against—the estate of the deceased. Whether the estate descends to the heir on intestacy, or the legatee on the will, can have no legal effect on the trespasser's possession. If he remains in possession for the statutory period of twelve years, he will acquire a lawful title-which will be good against the legatee no less than against the heir on -intestacy. It is clear to me that a trespasser has no interest in the estate of the deceased. He has therefore no locus standi to file an application for (revocation of?) probate.

[3] Mr. Mukherji relied for his proposition that a trespasser has locus standi to file an application for probate on the dictum in Mortimer's Probate and Practice, which was accepted by Mukherjee J. in Haripada Saha v. Ghanesyam Saha, 49 C. W. N. 713, that any interest is sufficient to gives locus standi. There can be no doubt whatsoever that both Mortimer and Mukherji J. are thinking of some interest in law-some legal title, however remote or however slight-when they say "any interest is sufficient " A trespasser has no interest in law; if he may be said to have a "possessing interest" it has to be remembered that the possession being without title, this interest is against 'law'.

[4] I have not the least hesitation in rejecting Mr. Mukherji's proposition that a trespasser's possession gives him locus standi to file an application for revocation for probate.

[5] In order to succeed in the application for revocation, Harinam Sha has therefore to establish that Janaki would be Manmatha's heir, on failure of other heirs. That Janaki was Manmatha's 'Dikshaguru' is not 'disputed now, nor that this Diksha was Tantrik Diksha. It is also not disputed that according to Dayabhag, the 'Acharyya' is a Hindu's heir, on failure of blood relations who are heirs. Jagnabalkya does not mention "Acharyya" as an heir; but Manu does. Jimutbahan accepts Manu's text, and includes Acharyya in his list of heirs. In fact, he combines Manu's dictum "Acharyya Sishya eb ba" and Jagnabalkya's "Sishyah Sabrahmacharinan" and states as the law that on failure of Sapindas, Sakulya and Samanodakas, an Acharyya inherits—on failure of Acharyya a Sishya inherits—and on failure of Sishya, a Sabrahmachari inherits.

[6] Jimutbahana himself does not say whom he means by the word "Acharyya". He is content to quote Manu's text as the authority of his statement of the law that an Acharyya inberits. Srikrishna Tarkalankar, who flourished more than two hundred years ago, does however in his commentary on the Dayabbag, offer an explanation of the word "Acharyya" as used by Jimutbahan here. He explains the word as "the teacher of the Vedas". In his synopsis on the Dayabhag which he calls Daykram Sangraha, Srikrishna when mentioning Acharyya as the heir, takes pains to cite a verse (from Jagnabalkya) to explain who Acharyya is and says "Upaniya Dedadvedamsa Acharyya Udahratatha". It is abundantly clear therefore that Srikrishna had no doubt in his own mind as to what "Acharyya" meant in Dayabbag. He was clearly of opinion that Jimutbahan, was using this word to mean the Brahmin who gives the sacred thread, and then teaches the Vedas. To him clearly Acharyya did not include Dikshaguru ; or "religious preceptors" in general.

[7] It is well to remember in this connection that tantrism was not less prevalent in Srikrishna's time than now; and there can be no doubt that "Dikshagurus" were well known to Srikrishna's time. His interpretation of "Acharyya" to mean only the Brahmin who gives the sacred thread, and then teaches the Vedas, must therefore be taken to exclude "Dikshaguru" from the

[8] Mr. Mukherji has drawn our attention to Sir William Jone's translation and Colebrooke's translation of "Acharyya" as used in Dayabhag, as "Religious preceptor", and has asked us to accept the view of these learned translators in preference to Srikrishna's. I have the highest regard for the scholarship and erudition of Sir William Jones, and Colebrooke; but if it is a question of preference between those English scholars and Srikrishna, I have no hesitation in saying that I would prefer Srikrishna's autho. rity. It is important to mention that neither Sir William Jones, nor Colebrooke has given any reasons for interpreting Acharyya as a generic term, meaning all kinds of religious preceptors, in preference to Srikrishna's interpretation of it as meaning a specific class of religious preceptors viz., the preceptor, who gives the sacred thread, and then teaches the Vedas.

[9] In The Collector of Madura v. Moottoo Ramalinga, 12 M. I. A. 397; (1 Beng. L. R. 1

P. C.), the Privy Council observed that the duty of a Judge administering Hindu law is not so much to inquire whether the doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities, as to ascertain whether it is one that has been received by the particular school of Hindu law, which prevails in the district in which the case arises, with which he has to deal and whether such doctrine has been sanctioned by usage; as by the Hindu system of law, clear proof of usage will outweigh the written opinion of text writers. In the present case, there is no evidence of any dispute between usage and the opinion of the text writers. It is reasonable to think that Srikrishna's interpretation is based on his own experience of usage; but whether or not that is so, it is I think proper, to examine Manu's own writings for finding what kind of religious preceptor, he had in his mind, when he laid down that an Acharyya would be an heir.

Upaniya tu yah Sishyam Vedamadhyapayoddvijah

Sakalpam Sarakshyacha tamacharyyam prachakshate

It has been argued by Mr. Mukherji that Manu is not giving his own definition of Acharyya; but is stating what others think the Acharyya to be. There can be no doubt however that Manu is quoting with approval this definition of Acharyya even if we agree that this is not a definition starting with Manu. Quite apart from this Sloka, however, a study of the second chapter of Manu, (which deals with Brahmacharya. eram) brings before the mind's eye a clear picture of the "Acharyya" as Manu saw him. The ceremony of Upanayan was indeed the most important event in a Hindu's life ; for it was this, which gave him his second birth. In the Upanayan ceremony itself, certain verses of the Vedas were taught by the Brahmins who invested the young Hindu with the sacred thread; it was with this ceremony that he entered upon the Brahmacharyasram. Immediately after the Upanayan, the Hindu had to take up his residence in the house of this very Brahmin, and receive education in Vedas as well as other matters from him. Manu has sometimes used the words Guru and sometimes the word Acharyya in dealing with the Upanayan ceremony, and the system of studies thereafter; but he has used either of these words to mean that one Brahmin who invested the Hindu with sacred thread, and then became his teacher. There was no vagueness in Manu's mind as to who this person was. He was not thinking of a number of functionaries, any of whom could be an Acharyya; he was thinking of one and one person only.

[11] Mention may be made only of the following verses:

145. Upadhyayan Dasacharyya Acharyyanam Satam Pita. [The "Acharyya" is ten times more venerable than an Upadhay; the father a hundred times more than the Acharyya.]

148. Acharyyastasya Yajatim Bidhibadvedaparagah Utpadayati Sabitrya Sasatya sajaramara. [But that birth which the Acharyya acquainted with the whole Veda, in accordance with the law procures for him through the Savitri is real, exempt from age and death.]

170. Tara Yadbrahmajanmasya Maunjibandhanachihritam Tatrasya Mata Sabitri Pita tvacharyya uchyyate. [Among those three, the birth which is symbolized by the investiture with the girdle of munja grass is his birth for the sake of the Vedas, they declare that in that birth Savitri (verse) in his mother and the Acharyya his father.]

171. Vedapradanadacharyam Pitaram parichakshate Nahyasmin Yujyate karma Kinchidamamamjibandhanat. [They call the Acharyya father because he gives the Veda; for nobody can perform a sacred rite before the investiture with the girdle of Munja grass.]

226. Acharyyo Brahmano Murtih Pita Murtih Prajapateh. [The Acharyya is the image of Brahmin, the father the image of Prajapati.]

The verses 148, 170 and 171 are specially helpful in understanding whom Manu had in mind, when he used the word Acharyya.

[12] The text on which Jimutbahana's rule that an Acharyya is an heir on the failure of blood relations, is Sloka 187 in Ch. IX Manu. The commentators of Manu do not try to explain "Acharyya" as occurring in this Sloka. The reason of this may very well be, that in an earlier part of Manu Ch. V. 80, where the word occurs, they have already given their explanations. The Sloka runs thus:

Triratramachurshaucham Acharyye samsthite sati Tasya putre cha patincha Dibaratramiti sthitih. [They declare that when the Acharyya has died, the impurity lasts three days; if the Acharyya's son or wife is dead, it lasts a day and a night; that is a settled rule.]

Sloka as regards Asaucha, where it is of very great practical importance to know which person is meant by Acharyya the commentators agree in saying that it means the person who gives the upanayan. When later on, Acharyya is enumerated as an heir, and the commentators do not trouble to explain the word, it is reasonable to conclude that according to them the word had the same connotation as in ch. V, where they had explained it.

[15] My conclusion on a study of Manu and his commentators therefore is that Acharyya in Bl. 187, Oh. IX means the person who gives upanayan and nobody else.

[16] It is useful to turn at this stage to the Jagnavalkya-Samhita and the Mitakshara, to discover what meaning Jagnavalka and Vignaneswara attached to this word. Verse 34 Acharadhyaya contains Jagnavalkya's definition of the Acharyya.

"Sa gururjah Kriyahkritra Vedamatmai prajachhati Upaniya dadadvedam Acharyyah Sa udahrtah" [He is called the Guru who after performing the ceremonies on the child from before his birth gives him the Vedas; and he is called the Acharyya, who having performed upanayan gives him the Vedas.]

[17] Vijnaneswara's commentary on this runs thus:

"He who performing all the rites according to rule beginning with the Garbhadhana ceremony, and ending with the upanayan teaches the Vedas to him the Brahmachari is called a Guru; He again who only pertorming upanayan teaches the Vedas is an Acharyya.

[18] When Jimutvahana (who according to the generally accepted view flourished after Vijnaswar) wrote the Dayabhaga, he was aware of these definitions of the word 'Acharyya' by Jagnavalka and Vijnaneswara's commentary on the same.

the connotation of this word, we would have been bound to accept that extended connotation. But Jimutbahana does not do so; he simply quotes Manu's text and accepts it adding to the list of heirs—"Sabrahmachari." The only possible conclusion is that Jimutbahana was not prepared to extend the connotation of the word Acharyya, and he meant this word to connote the same person as Manu had meant the person who gives upanayan.

who gave Upanayan did not cease there. It was rather merely the beginning of his task, for it was he who taught him the Vedas, and other subjects as well. In present-day India, the person who gives the upanayan ends his task there. The Upanayan ceremony itself requires him to teach a few verses of the Vedas; but, that is all. In fact, the system of learning Vedas as a part of one's education no longer exists, and even if any person wants to study the Vedas, he does not ordinarily study it with the Brahmin who gave him the Upanayan.

[21] Two opposite theories have been sought to be built on this undisputed fact that in modern India, the person who gives the Upanayan does not thereafter take the boy as his 'student' for teaching Vedas and other subjects.

[22] Mr. Hiralal Chakravarti, arguing for the appellant, propounded the theory that the law that an Acharyya would be an heir, was an integral part of the system of education under which the student used to live in the house of the teacher, and as this system has disappeared, the law that an Acharyya would be an heir should no longer be considered good law. He drew our attention to the observation of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ramchandra v. Vinayak, (41 I. A. 290: A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. O. 1):

"It was urged that it is hardly likely Vijnaneswara would give a right of inheritance to a spiritual preceptor or Guru before Kinsman, however remotely connected. This argument appears to ignore the peculiar and intimate relationship which their Lordships understand exists in the Hindu system between the pupil and the Guru who has to initiate him into the mysteries of the Vedic laws and rites, and under whose roof he has to pass many years of his life. It is easy to suppose that in such circumstances the mystical relationship between a spiritual preceptor and a pupil should be regarded as creating a far closer tie than remote relationship of blood."

were to meet the argument that a religious preceptor could not possibly have been included as an heir, if certain blood relations were excluded from heirship, may at most be said to express their Lordships' view as regards some of the reasons which made the author of the Mitakshara include a religious preceptor as an heir. They do not in my opinion justify a conclusion that their Lordships considered the rule of inheritance in favour of a religious preceptor dependant in any way on the institution of the student, living at the house of his teacher, to be initiated into Vedic laws and rites.

[24] Assuming, however, that at the time, the law was made, the ground for the same was this intimate relation which the teacher in those days had with the student, it by no means follows that once the ground had disappeared, the law also disappears. If and when the ground on which a law is enacted, ceases to exist, it is the province of the proper legislative authority to consider the matter of repealing the same; but the Courts cannot arrogate to themselves the functions of the legislature. We have no right to repeal a law, because what appears to us to be the reasons for which the law was enacted no longer exist. Even assuming, therefore, though not accepting, the theory that the rule that an Acharyya would be heir, first became law, because he had certain, intimate relations with the pupil. I am of opinion that this rule of inheritance continues to be good law, even though such relations no longer exist.

[25] Mr. Apurbadhan Mukherji has on the other hand put forward the theory that while the Acharyya continues to be an heir under the Hindu law, this word now connotes the Dikshaguru. His argument is that the person who, in these days, gives the sacred thread, does not answer the description of an Acharyya, because he does not teach the Vedas, and that the person who gives Tantrik Diksha, has really taken the place of the person who in Manu's time gave Upanayan and taught the Vedas.

[26] Mr. Mukherji has in a very learned discourse, tried to convince us that the Tantrik system is really based on the Vedas, so that the Guru who initiates a man into the Tantrik system by giving Diksha, is really giving him Vedic education. I do not think it necessary for the purpose of this case to reach a conclusion on Mr. Mukherji's proposition that the Tantrik system is based on the Vedas, for I do not see that the truth of this proposition can justify the further conclusion that the person who initiates a man into the Tantrik system by giving him a Diksba, becomes this man's heir. In the first place, I am clearly of opinion that though the person who gives the Upanayan in modern times may not possess all the characteristics of an 'Acharyya' — inasmuch as he no longer teaches the Vedas — he retains still the principal characteristics and is the Acharyya, who inherits on failure of blood relations. Mr. Mukherji drew our attention to Medhatithi's commentary on Manu's definition on Acharyya in Sl. 140, ch. II, where Medhatithi says that if one person gives the sacred thread, and another teaches the Vedas, neither can be called the Acharyya. It is to be noticed however, that Medhatithi himself does not stick to this strict and literal interpretation of the word Acharyya. For, commenting on Sl. 80 of Ch. V, Medhatithi him. self uses the word Upaneta, i. e., the person who gives the sacred thread, to explain the word Acharyya. It is remembered also that the Sabitri, the communication of which is the essential part of the Upanayan ceremony has had been said to be the essence of the Vedas.

[27] Even in present-day India, therefore, the person who gives the Upanayan, does teach at least some important part of the Veda. It would be against all known canons of justice, to treat him, as not entitled to inherit as Acharyya, because he does not teach all the Vedas.

[28] In the second place, supposing that the person who gives the sacred thread is not entitled to inherit in present day India, I can see no reason why another person who does not give the sacred thread, but initiates into the Tantrik system by giving Diksha, can be held to be the 'Acharyya,' in the list of heirs. Supposing Mr. Mukherji is correct in saying that the Tan-tras are based on the Vedas, it still remains true that the Tantras are not the Vedas, — just as Buddhism which, is based on Hinduism, is certainly not the same as Hinduism. It is absolutely clear that the Dikshaguru who initiates a person into the Tantrik system of worship by giving Diksha does not as such, teach any of the Vedas. He does not, therefore, possess either of the two characteristics of the Acharyya that Manu knew the giving of the sacred thread, and the giving of the Vedas.

[29] Mr. Mukherji also argued that the Diksha. guru in present day India has taken the place of the Acharyya of the days of yore, — for it is the Dikshaguru who gives religious education now as the Acharyya did in the days of Manu, and should be allowed to inherit as the Acharyya. The fact that the Dikshaguru is the person who gives serious religious education may be a very good reason, for which he should be an heir. But it is the legislature alone, who can make new law making an heir. We must resist the temptation to change the law, under cover of interpretation of law. If as judges, we use our power to interpret law, to alter laws which we may not like, and to make new laws which we think, should be made, that would be a corrupt use of our power. We have to observe constant vigilance against such corrupt use of power by ourselves. I refuse, therefore, to consider the question whether the Dikshaguru ought to be made an heir.

[30] Mr. Mukherji's next argument is that as the word Acharyya has been used in old treatises in a wider sense than to mean the person who gave the Upanayan and thus taught the Vedas, it would be wrong to put this limited interpretation on the word as used, by Jimutbahana, in the Dayabhaga. Mr. Mukherji referred first to two passages in the Vishnupuran which show that Vasistha was being called 'Acharyya' and also as 'Kulaguru.' This, in my judgment, does not show the use of Acharyya to mean anybody than the person who gave the sacred thread. We find in fact Valmiki himself using the word Acharyya as well as the word Guru for-Vasistha, in more than one part of the Ramayan. Thus, in 111 Canto of the Ayodhyakanda, Vasistha describes himself as an Acharyya:

"Purushasya hi jatasya bhavanti gurubastriyah Acharyyaschib Kakutstha pita mata cha raghab Pita hyeenam janayati purusham purushasharva Pragnam dadati acharyyatashmat sa gururuchayate Sa hi tepituracharyyastab ehaib parantap."

The Ramayana itself shows however, that Vasistha, as the Purchit of the family, gave Rama and his brothers Upanayan and taught them the Vedas.

[31] That the word Acharyya was used in old times to include persons other than the person who gave Upanayan is, however, clear from the fact that in the Mahabharat both Kripa and Drona are called Acharyya of the Kaurava and the Pandavas. Sayana, the great commentator of the Vedas, is generally referred to as Sayana. charyya.

[32] As regards more modern times Mr. Mukherji has drawn our attention to a passage in Raghunandan's Dikshatattwa where Raghunandan in quoting from another treatise called Mantratantra Samhita a verse in which Acharyya is clearly used to denote a Dikshaguru.

[33] Mention may be made in this connection of the Savdakalpadrum—a lexicon compiled by Sanskrit Scholars in Bengal in the last century—according to which "Acharyya" means the teacher of Vedas and also the commentator on Vedic Mantres; and Wilson's "Glossary of Judicial and Revenue laws", where we find the following interpretation of the word Acharyya:

"A religious teacher; properly the Brahman who instructs the religious student of the two next castes the Kshatriya and the Valsya—as well as the Brahman, In the Veda. In modern use, it is applied to any religious instructor, and to any Brahman and religious mendicant professing to be qualified to give spiritual instruction. In the south of India it specially denotes the head of a religious society—the Mahant of Hindusthan and the Panda and head priest of a temple. Among the Marathae, it was given to Brahmans employed by respectable families as cooks. In the Tamil provinces, it is assumed by carpenters and other artisans."

[84] Quite clearly, therefore, uses of the word "Acharyya" in other senses than the Brahmin who gives the sacred thread and teaches Veda were not unknown in ancient India, and are common in modern India. Our task in this case is not however to investigate the many meanings the word Acharyya may have had, but to ascertain what sense it has in the list of heirs, as propounded by Manu, and accepted by Jimutbaban. For this, we have to turn to other passages of Manu's Samhita, and the notes of his commentators. These I have already mentioned, and they show in my opinion that to Manu, an Acharyya was the person who gave the' Upanayan and taught the Veda, and as I have already stated Jimutvabana should be considered to have used the word in the same sense as Manu.

(86) I find no justification for reading into this an expression of their Lordship's opinion that 'Acharyya' in the list of heirs, means 'spiritual preceptors' in general. Not only were their Lordships not considering in that case, the question with which we are now concerned; they were not even remotely concerned with the meaning of the word Acharyya in Jimutbaban's list of heirs. If it were justifiable, to make from the mere fact that the judgment contains a translation of the text in which Acharyya has been translated by the word 'preceptor', the deduction that in their Lordships' considered view, Acharyya in the list of heirs means 'spiritual preceptor', in general, it would be even more justifiable to deduce from the passage in Ramchandra v. Vinayak, 41 I. A. 290: (A.I.B. (1) 1914 P. C. 1) quoted above, that the Privy Council held there that the 'spiritual preceptor' in the list of heirs is that person in whose house the man lives as a pupil and who initiates bim into the mysteries of the Vedas.

[37] In my judgment, neither of these Privy Council decisions, can reasonably be used for any light on the question which is now for consideration.

[38] Nor can I find any assistance from the decision in Sambasiva v. Secy. of State, 44 Mad. 704: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Mad. 637), on which reliance was placed by the learned trial Court. That was a case where the Crown claimed the property of a Sudra ascetic, as escheated, on failure of heirs, and the defendant claimed to be an heir, as a "Sishya". The main contention on behalf of the Crown was that the rule of law making Sishya an heir, had become obsolete. The High Court rejected this contention, and held that the defendant was entitled to inherit as a Sishya. It was not disputed there that the defendant was the Sishya of the deceased. This decision can clearly be of no assistance for our present purpose.

[40] It was held that the priest may, in certain circumstances, inherit. It is well-known that the family priest is very often the person who gives Upanayan. On my interpretation of the word 'Acharyya' as the Brahmin who gives Upanayan, the priest will be an heir, when he gives Upanayan. As this decision does not say in what circumstances a priest may inherit, it is of no assistance to us.

[41] One consequence of interpretation of Acharyya as the Brahmin who gives the Upanayan is that a Sudra who cannot have Upanayan cannot have an Acharyya in his list of heirs. As the rules of inheritance in the Dayabhaga are for all the four castes—Brahman, Kehatriya, Vaisya and Sudra—we should certainly try to interpret the rules in such a manner as to make them operative in the case of all the castes. But, for this, we have no right to put a meaning on a word, where it is clear that Jimutbahana did not use in that sense.

Acharyya of a Hindu governed by the Dayabhag system will inherit on the failure of the blood relations who are heirs is not obsolete in present-day India; that in these days, the person who gives the Upanayan will inherit as Acharyya, and a Dikshaguru not being the person who gives Upanayan, or any other preceptor—whether spiritual preceptor or not—will not inherit.

[43] Consequently, I hold that Janaki was not Manmatha's heir, and thus, no interest was acquired by Harinam Sha by his purchase from Janaki. Harinam Sha had, therefore, no locus standi, to apply for revocation of probate.

[44] I would therefore allow this appeal, with costs, set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court, and dismiss the application for revocation of probate. The hearing fee is assessed at three gold mohurs.

A. F. A. D. Nos. 1773 and 1827 of 1943, Decided on 11-11-1949, against decrees of D. J., Zillah Burdwan, D/- 30-4-1943.

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI [11] of 1859), Ss. 13, 14 —Section 14 does not provide for closing of separate accounts—Contemplated sale not taking place—Order of Collector closing separate account ceases to be effective.

Section 14 does not expressly provide for the closing of separate accounts. It merely directs that the Collector will declare that the entire estate will be brought to sale if the cosharers do not pay up the arrears in respect of the defaulting shares. The closure of all separate accounts is done in the Collectorate for the purposes of convenience, with a view to find out whether the estate as a whole is in default or not. If, in point of fact, the contemplated sale does not take place or is set aside in a competent proceeding, the effect of the declaration made by the Collector loses all its force and the parties are restored to the position which they occupied before the declaration was made by the Collector. The order of the Collector closing the separate accounts ceases to be effective if the contemplated sale never took place. Separate account therefore survives the order of the Collector: A. I. G. N. Das J .- These two appeals arise out of Title Suit No. 95 of 1941 of the Court of the 1st Mun. sif at Burdwan. Second Appeal No. 1773 of 1943 is at the instance of the plaintiff. Second Appeal No. 1827 of 1943 is at the instance of the defendant. The suit was for declaration of the plaintiff's exclusive title and possession in respect of Cadastral Survey Dags Nos. 31 and 33 of khatian No. 253 of mouza Ichlabad. The plaintiff's allegation is that the plaintiff purchased the residuary share in touzi No. 147 of the Burdwan Collectorate in January 1936, the residuary share being 18 as. 6 gds. 3 karas and 2 tils, that the plaintiff obtained symbolical possession on 24th May 1936, that there was a separate account No. 16 comprising 2 gds. 2 karas 2 krantis and 2 tils share in the aforesaid touzi, the disputed lands being the lands of the said separate account, that the defendant's predecessor held the said separate account which was closed and later on the previous owners of separate accounts Nos. 1 and 2 had their own separate account reopened, the result being that the residuary share including separate account No. 16 was brought to sale and was purchased by the plaintiff, the plaintiff's purchase taking effect under s. 28 of the Revenue Sale Law on 29th september 1935, that the defendant had failed to restore possession of the disputed lands and the plaintiff accordingly prayed for declaration of his title to the said dags and for possession of the same.

[2] The defence to the suit was that there was no closure of separate account No. 16 as alleged in the plaint either in fact or in law, that consequently by this revenue sale at which the plaintiff purchased separate account No. 16 which had never been amalgamated with the residuary share did not pass by the sale.

[3] The trial Court was of the opinion that the effect of the order of the Collector dated 31st March 1932 viz., Ex. 9 was to close all the separate accounts including separate account No. 16 and although there was no sale as contemplated by S. 14 of the Revenue Sale Law, as there was no attempt to supersede the order of the Collector closing the separate accounts, in proper proceedings, separate account No. 16 ceased to exist and was amalgamated with the residuary share. The sale at which the plaintiff purchased therefore passed separate account No. 16 and the plaintiff had a good title to the disputed lands. In the result the trial Court passed a decree declaring the plaintiff's title to the disputed land with the exception of the superstructures standing thereon and directed delivery of possession of the suit lands, the defendant being directed to remove the buildings standing on the disputed land. Against the decision of the trial Court, the defendant preferred an appeal.

[4] The learned District Judge who heard the appeal concurred with the view of the trial Court as regards the effect of the revenue sale with this modification that the defendant was to remain in occupation of the buildings on payment of fair and equitable rent. As stated already two appeals have been taken against the decision of the learned District Judge. The defendant in appeal raises the question whether by the revenue sale the plaintiff acquired a good title to separate account No. 16, that is, to the lands in suit. The plaintiff's appeal concerns that part of the order of the learned District Judge which maintains the defendant in possession of the superstructures on payment of fair rent.

[5] We shall first deal with the defendant's appeal, viz., Appeal No. 1827 of 1943. Dr. Sen Gupta appearing on behalf of the defendant has contended that as there was no sale of the entire estate after the collector had directed separate accounts to be closed in March 1932 the rights of the holders of separate account were not in any way affected by the order of the collector dated 31st March 1932 directing the separate accounts to be closed. As such in the absence of any thing to show that there was any other valid basis for the alleged closing of the separate accounts, the effect of the order of the collector dated 31st March 1932 was to maintain the existence of separate account No. 16 and as such the revenue sale at which the plaintiff purchased did not pass that share.

[6] The question as to the effect of an order made by a Collector under S. 14, Revenue Sale Law (act XI [11] of 1859) depends on the view to be taken of Ss. 18 and 14 of the said Act. Section 13 of Act XI [11] of 1859 states that after separate accounts have been opened in respect of an estate, if the estate is in default because of non-payment of revenue in respect of any share the Collector shall declare the share or shares of estate which are in default to be put up to sale, and if at the sale the bid offered is not sufficient to liquidate the arrears the Collector will under S. 14, Revenue Sale Law, stop the sale and declare that the entire estate shall be brought to sale at a future date unless the other recorded sharer or sharers purchase the share in arrears within 10 days by paying the sarrears due from the said shares. Section 14 does not expressly provide for the closing of separate accounts. It merely directs that the Collector will declare that the entire estate will be brought to sale if the co-sharers do not pay up the arrears in respect of the defaulting shares. The practice of closing separate accounts is to be traced to the decision in the case of Haji Mutsaddi Mian v. Mahomed Idris, 19 0. W. N. 764 : (A. I. R. (2) 1915 P. C. 177) to which our attention was drawn by Mr. Bose appearing for the respondent. The passage which occurs at p. 767 of the judgment of the High Court runs as follows:

"It is admitted that the Collector was bound to close all the separate accounts before he could sell the entire estate under S. 14."

The judgment of this Court was merely affirmed on appeal by the Judicial Committee. The practice, therefore, rested on a concession made by the parties before the Hon'ble High Court. As already indicated there is no express provision in the Act itself for the closure of all separate accounts. This is done in the Collectorate for the purposes of convenience, with a view to find out whether the estate as a whole is in default or not. This view is in accord with a decision of this Court in the case of Narendra Nath Roy v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. Ltd., 44 C. W. N. 38 : (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 115). At p. 49 Mitter J. observed thus:

"The Act does not contain any provision for closing separate accounts. Section 14 speaks only of a declaration by the Collector; makes the same a necessary preliminary step for putting at a future date the entire estate to sale."

If in point of fact, the contemplated sale does not take place or is set aside in a competent proceeding, the effect of the declaration made by the Collector loses all its force and the parties are restored to the position which they occupied before the declaration was made by the Collector. Assuming that there was a statutory justification for the closing of the separate accounts, for which as we have already said there was none, the order of the Collector dated sist March 1932 closing the separate accounts ceased to be effective as the contemplated sale never took place. Separate account No. 16, therefore, survived the aforesaid order of the Collector. It was not necessary for the recorded proprietors of that account to take any proceeding to have the order of the Collector vacated, as was erroneously thought by the Courts below. The argument in so far as it proceeded on the order of the Collector dated 31st March 1932 vide, Ex. 9, does not support the plaintiff's alleged title to separate account No. 16. In the Courts below the plaintiff relied also on the entry in the D Register, Ex. 8 and it was urged on his behalf that the entry in the D Register must be taken to be prima facie correct. A reference to Ex. D shows that serial No. 77 refers to separate account No. 16. There is an entry 'closed' against the serial number. That entry is undated and no reference is made to any order of any officer justifying the entry. No order of any competent officer has also been produced. Serial No. 17 and a few other serial numbers against which there is a similar entry 'closed' are struck out and a note is made vide serial No. 83. Serial No. 83 states that the plaintiff is the proprietor of 13 as.

Reference is made then to Mutation Cases Nos. 561 and 563 of 1936-1937. This is followed by a remark "in lieu of Ali Mohammad and others by purchase at revenue sale." A fair inference to draw from these entries is that serial No. 77 was closed at the time when serial No. 83 was placed on the D Register as a result of the mutation cases in 1936-1937 after the plaintiff's purchase at the revenue sale now in question. This does not support the view that the closure of separate account No. 17 proceeded on any order of the Collector either under S. 14 of Act XI [11] of 1859 as mentioned in the plaint or on any order under S. 72 or 74A, Land Registration Act (Act VII [7] BC 1876). In fact there is nothing on the record to show that any order was passed under S. 72 or 74A, Land Registration Act which is the only procedure for the closure of separate accounts. Mr. Bose appearing for the respondent wanted to contend that as the D Register shows the existence of a residuary share in respect of 13 as. 6 gds. 3 karas that entry must be presumed and the Court is to surmise that at some other interme __ date between the abortive revenue sale of 1932 and the present revenue sale, there had been proceedings legally undertaken to close separate account No. 16. This is a contention which is opposed to the case made in the plaint and as stated by the plaintiff himself in cross examination. In the plaint it was generally stated that the separate accounts were closed and thereafter two of the separate accounts Nos. 1 and 2 were reopened. The date when this was done was not specifically mentioned. The plaintiff in his cross examination stated that 'the amalgamation of separate account No. 16 took place in 1932' obviously referring to the order of the Collector dated 31st March 1932, Ex. 9. It is not open to the plaintiff respondent to make out this case in this Court. As the existence of separate account No. 16 at an earlier date is admitted, it was for the plaintiff respondent to prove by evidence how the separate account ceased to exist. The result, therefore, is that by the revenue sale at which the plaintiff purchased, separate account No. 16 did not pass.

[7] Mr. Bose at the close of his argument, prayed that even if the above view be taken, as there was nothing to show that separate accounts were opened under S. 10 of Act XI [11] of 1859 the plaintiff has admittedly an undivided share in the disputed land which forms a part of the lands comprising the touji and as such a declaration may be made in respect of his undivided residuary share in respect of the disputed land. This contention cannot be given effect to in view of the specific case made in the plaint that the disputed lands are the specific lands of separate account No. 16 and the prayer by the plaintiff for declaration of his exclusive title to and possession of the said lands. A further difficulty stands in the plaintiff's way, viz. that the other recorded co-sharers in the touzi are not before the Court. Mr. Bose prayed for leave to amend the plaint to raise this case and to add the co-sharers as parties. In our opinion such a prayer cannot be acceded at this late stage and in view of the course of the trial in the Courts below.

[8] The result, therefore, is that Second Appeal No. 1827 of 1943 succeeds. The judgments and decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the plaintiff's suit must stand dismissed with costs in all Courts.

[9] Second Appeal No. 1173 of 1943.—
As the plaintiff has been found to have no title to the disputed lands this appeal must also fail. This appeal is therefore dismissed but there will be no order for costs.

Municipalities—Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 488—Trial for disobeying notice under Rule 4 (2) of Sch. XVIII — Question of dangerous condition of building and necessity to vacate cannot be agitated before Magistrate.

It is quite clear from the words of Rule 4 that the Corporation is the authority to decide whether the building is in a dangerous condition and whether it is necessary to require the inmates of the building to vacate it. The statute gives the Corporation alone the power to decide this matter. Further, the statute has provided by S. 511 the tribunal to decide this question, that tribunal being the Corporation itself. In these circumstances, the question cannot be re-agitated before the Municipal Magistrate who is trying persons for disobeying a notice under Rule 4 (2) asking a tenant to vacate the premises: 11 C. W. N. 671; 26 Cal 811 and A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal 142, Ref. [Para 4]

Debi Prosad De-for Petitioners.

Debabrata Mukherjes for Bireswar Chatterjee and Kamal Krishna Palit-for Opposite Party Nos. 1 and 2, respectively.

Order. —This Rule has been obtained by the petitioners who have been convicted by the Municipal Magistrate and fined. The case against them is that they did not comply with a notice to vacate certain premises which were in a dangerous condition and that thereby they had committed an offence which was punishable under S. 488, Calcutta Municipal Act.

[2] The facts briefly are these: The petitioners are tenants of certain premises. It came to the notice of the Municipality that the premises were in a dangerous condition and after inspection a notice was served both upon the landlord and the tenants under Bule 4, sub-rule (2) of sch. XVIII, Calcutta Municipal Act requiring the inmates of the building to vacate it. The tenants admitted that they received this notice. They applied under S. 511, Calcutta Municipal Act for a withdrawal of the notice. The matter was considered by the Administrative Officer and he was satisfied that the notice was necessary. In spite of this decision the tenants did not vacate the premises and they were prosecuted, and sentenced as stated above.

[8] The only contention raised before this Court is that the Magistrate was wrong in refusing the petitioners an opportunity to adduce evidence to prove that the notice was not necessary inasmuch as the premises were not in a dangerous condition. It was pointed out that the learned Magistrate refused to allow the petitioners to adduce evidence on this point holding that the question was concluded by the decision of the Corporation and that he had no jurisdiction to consider whether or not the building was in a dangerous condition.

[4] I am of opinion that the learned Magistrate was right in his view. Apart from the case law on the subject, I think the wording of the sections and general principles of law indicate unmistakably that this question cannot be investigated by a Municipal Magistrate trying a person for disobedience of a notice issued under Rule 4, sub-rule (2) of Sch. XVIII, Calcutta Municipal Act directing them to vacate the premises on the ground that it was in a ruinous or dangerous condition. The relevant words of Rule 4 which need be quoted are these:

"Rule 4, sub-rule (1): If any wall or building, or anything affixed thereto, be deemed by the Corporation to be in a ruinous state, or likely to fall, or to be in any way dangerous, they shall forthwith cause a written notice to be served "

"Rule 4, sub-rule (2): The Corporation may also, if it appears to them to be necessary to do so, cause a proper hoarding or fence or other means of protection to be put up . . . and may also, after giving them such notice as the Corporation may think necessary require the inmates of the building to vacate it."

It is quite clear from the words of this rule that the Corporation is the authority to decide whether the building is in a dangerous condition and whether it is necessary to require the inmates of the building to vacate it. The statute gives the Corporation alone the power to decide this matter. Further I would point out that S. 511, Calcutta Municipal Act makes it additionally clear, that this question is one which is to be decided exclusively by the Corporation. Section 511 of the aforesaid Act provides that if any person is dissatisfied or objects to the issue of such notice, his remedy lies in making an application to the Corporation within a certain period. The section also provides that the Corporation shall consider and decide the objection. It is thus clear that the statute has provided the tribunal to decide this question, that tribunal being the Corpora. tion itself. In the circumstances I do not see how it can be argued that the question can be re-agitated before the Municipal Magistrate who is trying persons for disobeying a notice. In this connection I would refer to the following cases: Shamul Dhone Dutt v. Corporation of Calcutta, 11 C. W. N. 671, F. W. Duke v. Rameswar Malia, 3 C. W. N 508: (26 Cal. 811) and Atul Chandra v. Corporation of Cal. cutta, I. L. B. (1941) 2 Cal 308 : (A. I. B. (29) 1942 Cal. 142: 43 Cr. L. J. 513). The first case deals with the Bengal Municipal Act and the second with the Calcutta Municipal Act as it was in 1899. The last case deals with the present Act. Although the sections dealt with are different, I am of opinion that the principal enunciated in these cases entirely supports the view that I have taken.

[5] In my opinion, the learned. Magistrate's order cannot be interfered with and this Rule is discharged.

Sree Sree Iswar Gopinath Deb Thakur and another - Defendants - Appellants v. Kameswar Nath and another-Plaintiffs-Respondents.

A. F. A. D. No. 176 of 1946, Decided on 17th November 1949, against decree of D. J. Murshidabad, D/-7th

(a) Bengal Primary Education Act (7 (VII) of 1930), S. 29 (1) — Nuskar lands lying within zemindari -Zemindari assessed to payment of road and public works cess-Neskardar not liable to pay road cess—Still education cess is recoverable.

Where the disputed lands are Niskar lands lying within the ambit of a zemindari which itself is assessed to the payment of road and public works cess, it cannot be said that the disputed lands are such immovable property on which road and public works cess was not assessed. Section 29 (1) declares the liability of all immovable property on which road and public works cesses have been assessed, to be further assessed to the education cess. The fact that the Neskardar was not liable to pay road cess to the memindar does not lead to the conclusion that the property itself was not assess.

ed to road and public works cesses. Hence even though road cess is not payable education cess is recoverable from the Niskardar. [Para 5]

(b) Bengal Primary Education Act (7 (VII) of 1930), S. 32—Road cess not leviable be cause of non-service of notice under S. 54, Cess Act—Still education cess is recoverable—Bengal Cess Act (9 (IX) of 1880), S. 54.

In order to entitle the holder of an estate to recover primary education cess no special notice under S. 54 of the Cess Act is required to be served. Hence, even though the levy of road cess is not possible because of the non-service of the requisite notification, under S. 54 of the Cess Act, still primary education cess is recoverable.

(c) Bengal Cess Act (9 [IX] of 1880), S. 58—Education cess not paid though leviable—Zemindar can recover penalty under section.

Where the primary education cess is properly leviable but has not been paid according to the instalments fixed by the Act, the zemindar is entitled to recover penalty as stated in S. 58. [Para 7]

Purushottam Chatterji-for Appellants.

Judgment. — This appeal is on behalf of the defendants and arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of road cess for the years 1343 to 1350 B. S. and education cess for the last half year of 1347 B. S. together with the penalty provided for in S. 58 of the Cess Act.

[2] The defence of the defendants was that neither the road cess nor the education cess is recoverable because notice under S. 54 of the Cess Act was not served according to law.

[3] The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit in so far as it concerned the claim for recovery of road cess inasmuch as the service of notice under S. 54 of the Cess Act was not proved. The claim for recovery of education cess was however decreed. The judgment does not give us any indication of the reasons which led the trial Court to decree this part of the claim. Against the decision of the trial Court, the plaintiff preferred an appeal in so far as the trial Court dismissed the claim for recovery of road cess. The defendants preferred a cross appeal. The appeal and the cross appeal were both dismissed by the lower appellate Court. The appeal was dismissed on the . ground that notice under S. 54 of the Cess Act was not proved to have been served. The cross appeal was dismissed by the lower appellate Court on the ground that the liability to pay education cess was determined under S. 30 of the Bengal Primary Education Act (Act, VII (7) of 1980). The plaintiff has not preferred any appeal. The defendants have preferred this appeal challenging their liability to pay education cess as claimed in the plaint.

[4] Mr. Chatterji appearing for the defendants appellants has conteded in the first place that as no road cess is payable in the present case education cess is not recoverable in view of the provisions of S. 29 (1), Bengal Primary Education Act of 1930. In the second place it is contended that S. 32 of the said Act makes the provisions of the Cess Act applicable in the matter of assessment, levy, payment and recovery of education cess. As road cess is not recoverable in the present case education cess is also irrecoverable. In the third place it is contended that the decrees of the Courts below imposing a penalty under S. 58, Cess Act are not in accordance with law on the grounds already mentioned.

[5] The first contention depends on an interpretation of S. 29 (1) of the said Act. The subsection runs as follows:

"In any district or part of a district in which the provisions of this Chapter are in force all immovable property on which the road and public works cesses are assessed according to the provisions of the Cess Act, 1880, shall be liable to the payment of a primary education cess."

The disputed lands are niskar lands lying within the ambit of a zemindari belonging to the plaintiff. The Zemindari itself is assessed to the payment of road and public works cess. It cannot therefore be said that the disputed lands are such immovable property on which road and public works cess was not assessed. Section 29 (1) of the Act declares the liability of all immovable property, on which road and public works cesses have been assessed, to be further assessed to the education cess. The fact that the niskardar was not liable to pay road cess to the Zemindar does not lead to the conclusion that the property itself was not assessed to road and public works cesses. The first contention raised on behalf of the appellants must therefore be overruled.

[6] The second contention has to be answered by a reference to the different sections of the Bengal Primary Education Act 1930 as also of the Cess Act, 1880. I have already referred to S. 29 (1), Bengal Primary Education Act, 1930 which makes all immovable property on which road and public works cesses have been assessed to be further subject to a liability to pay the primary education cess. Section 29 (2) of the Act prescribes the rate of levy of education cess which in the case of land is fixed at 5 per cente per rupee on each rupee on annual value of the land. Section 30 of the Act provides for the mode of payment of education cess by the holders of different grades of interests in land and for apportionment of the same between the holder of an estate or a tenure or a cultivating raiyat. Section 31 of the Act provides that when primary education cess is levied for the first time a notification and proclamation in the manner provided for by S. 41 of the Cess Act and a notice on the holder of an estate showing the amount of cess payable in respect of the estate and specify. ing the date from which such primary education cess will take effect, shall be served subject to the proviso that defeat in the service of notice shall not effect the liability of any person or proprietor to the payment of cess. Section 32 of the Act then states:

"Subject to the provisions of this chapter the provisions of the Cess Act, 1880, shall apply so far as possible to the assessment, levy, payment and recovery of the primary education cess."

It is contended that as the levy of education (road?) cess in the present case is not possible because of the non-service of the requisite notification under S. 54 of the Cess Act primary education cess is also irrecoverable. In order to deal with this contention we have to refer to S. 54 of the Cess Act. Section 54 provides that in cases where a new valuation or re-valuation takes effect in a district or where the rate of cess is changed or where the dates fixed by the Board of Revenue for payment of cesses under S. 57 of the Cess Act are altered, the holder of the estate will cause a notice in the prescribed form to be published in the places mentioned in S. 54. Section 56 then provides that if such a notice under S. 54 is not published cesses cannot be recovered. In the present case, there is no question of a new valuation or re-valuation of the estate or a change in the rate on which cesses are payable or any change in the dates fixed by the Board of Revenue for payment of an instalment under S. 57 of the Cess Act. The education cess, as I have already stated, is payable at certain rates on the annual value of land. The annual value of the land is defined in the Cess Act. As such, in order to entitle the holder of an estate to recover primary education cess no special notice under S. 54 of the Cess Act was required to be served. It has been found that notice under S. 52 of the Cess Act was properly served. In this view, the defendants niskar. dars cannot escape liability from the payment of education cess as claimed in the plaint. The second contention on behalf of the appellants must therefore fail.

[7] The third contention raised on behalf of the appellants relates to the imposition of a penalty under s. 58 of the Cess Act. As I have already held that the primary education cess was properly leviable and as the same has not been paid according to the instalments fixed by the Act the plaintiff was entitled to recover penalty as stated in S. 58 of the Cess Act. This contention must also be overruled.

[8] The result therefore is that this appeal fails and must be dismissed but as there is no appearance on behalf of the respondent there will be no order for costs.

(a) Interpretation of Statutes—Technical legislation—Language plain — Words to be construed according to ordinary and natural meaning in absence of indication to contrary.

The elementary rule of construction is that it is to be assumed that the words and phrases of a technical legislation are used in the ordinary meaning. If there is nothing appearing in the section itself either to modify or to alter or if there be nothing to qualify the language which the statute contains, it is to be construed in the ordinary and natural meaning of the words and sentences. If the language is not only plain, but admits of only one meaning, the task of interpretation can hardly be said to arise. It is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation: A. I. (b) Debt laws — Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (7 [VII] of 1936), S. 44 — Words 'decision' or 'order' in S. 44 include award — Even if not included, Board's jurisdiction to review its decision is not taken away merely because decision has culminated in award.

Review as allowed under S. 44 is against any order or decision passed by the Board. The words 'order' and 'decision' are quite clear and make no differentiation between certain classes of orders and others. Looking at it from the practical point of view, there must be certain orders or decisions by the Board before an award can be drawn up and if there be any defect or any ground on which review will be allowed, such previous order or decision being modified on review, the award also falls to the ground as a corollary. Even if it were taken that the term 'award' was not specifically included that would not take away the right of the Board to review its own decision which had ultimately culminated in the award.

(c) Debt laws—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (7 [VII] of 1936), Ss. 44 and 55—Rules under S. 55, R. 91 (b)—R. 91 (b) does not require previous filing of review application to Board before obtaining permission from Collector — Board exercising powers of review suo motu after receipt of order from Collector granting permission—Subsequent formal application to Board—Board cannot refuse it on ground of delay.

Under R. 91 (b), if a review application is to be made beyond 60 days such an application cannot be dealt with by the Board unless permission of the Collector has been obtained. But there is nothing in R. 91 (b) which requires the previous filing of an application for review in the Board and then approaching the Collector for permission.

On an application by a debtor, the Collector allowed permission under R. 91 (b) for review of an award passed by the Board two years back. On receipt of the order from the Collector, the Board proceeded to deal with the matter though there had been no application filed for review before the Board itself and passed various orders from time to time. Subsequently, the debtor filed a formal application for review on the direction of the Board. The Board, however, dismissed the application on the ground of inordinate delay in filing the application:

Held, that in the circumstances the Board was exercising its powers of review suo motu and as it had already taken cognizance of the proceedings, it was not open to it to refuse the prayer for review on the ground of delay on the part of the debtor. [Para 10]

Ajoy Kumar Basu-for Petitioner. Syama Charan Mitter-for Opposite Party.

Order.-This application in revision is on behalf of the creditor. On an application by the creditor, an award was made by Fatepur Debt Settlement Board on 25th January 1942. In 1944, an application was filed by the debtor before the Collector of 24 Parganas for permission under R. 91 (b) read with S. 44, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act for review of the award which had been made in January 1942 inasmuch as more than 60 days had expired from the making of the award. On 21st July 1944, the order passed by the Collector permitting review of the previous award was received by the Debt Settlement Board. From the order sheet maintained by the Board, it appears that after the receipt of that intimation various orders were passed from time to time, sometimes directing service of notice on the creditor and sometimes on the debtor concerned. On 12th April 1946 up to which the proceedings were continuing before the Board, the latter directed the debtor to file a formal application for review under 8. 44, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act accompanied by the requisite court-fees. An application was accordingly filed on 14th June 1946. The Board however held on 8th August 1946 that there had been inordinate delay in filing the application and accordingly dismissed the prayer for review.

[2] On an appeal being taken to the Appellate Officer, the order was set aside directing the Debt Conciliation Officer concerned to deal with the application according to law and on the merits. This order was affirmed by the District Judge under S. 40A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act.

[3] On behalf of the creditor, it is contended that it is not competent for the Board to entertain the application for review after an award has been signed. Section 44 of the Act is in the following terms:

"Subject to any rules made under this Act—(a) a Board may, on an application made by any person interested, or of its own motion review any decision or order passed by it and pass such order in reference thereto as it thinks fit."

Clause (b) authorises the Appellate Officer in similar terms. There is a proviso that no order shall be varied or reversed unless an opportunity has been given to a person interested to appear and be heard in support of such order.

[4] It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the expression 'decision' or 'order' used in cls. (a) and (b) of S. 44 does not include an award.

Reference is, in this connection, made to the provisions contained in S. 40 of the Act where while dealing with the right of appeal in addition to the reference made to a decision or order of a Board, an award is referred to in the next clause. It is urged that had the expression 'decision' or 'order' the general significance, there would not have been any necessity of making separate reference to the word 'award'.

[5] Before I refer to the effect of the use of the relevant words in S. 40 we have, in the first instance, to consider the effect of the words as appearing in S. 44. The elementary rule of construction is that it is to be assumed that the words and phrases of a technical legislation are used in their ordinary meaning (Corporation of the City of Victoria v. Bishop of Vancouver Island, (1921) 2 A. C. 384: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 P. C. 240). If there is nothing appearing in the section itself either to modify or to alter or if there be nothing to qualify the language which the statute contains, it is to be construed in the ordinary and natural meaning of the words and sentences. (Vestry of St. John Hampstead v. Cotton, (1886) 12 A. C. 1, 6.) If the language is not only plain, but admits of only one meaning, it has repeatedly been held that the task of interpretation can hardly be said to arise. It is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation.

clear and make no differentiation between certain classes of orders and others. Looking at it from the practical point of view, there must be certain orders or decision by the Board before an award can be drawn up and if there be any defect or any ground on which review will be allowed, such previous order or decision being modified on review, the award also falls to the ground as a corollary. Even if it were taken that the term 'award' was not specifically included that would not take away the right of the Board to review its own decision which had ultimately culmi-

tween Ss. 40 and 44 may also be explained. By a technical and very strict interpretation; it may be stated that the word 'award' is not a decision by the Board, but it is a formal paper, which records the effect of the decision or order. An appeal under S 40 is allowed not only against the earlier order passed, but against the award as it stands. Review as allowed under S. 44 is against any order or decision passed by the Board and if a review is limited to the award itself without questioning any earlier or previous orders passed by the Board, it may be contended that review is not allowed under such circumstances. But on the other hand, if any earlier order or decision passed by the Board is questioned any review and a modification of such earlier order or decision, if affecting the award itself, will be permissible.

(8) Merely because there has been an award will not take away the jurisdiction of the Board to review its own order or decision. This objection, therefore, must be overruled.

[9] It is next contended that as there bad been no application for review filed before the permission of the Collector was sought, the proceedings now pending before the Board are without jurisdiction. This contention also cannot be supported. If an application is made within 60 days under R. 91 (b), that application has to be filed before the Board immediately. If the Board exercises its right to review its own order suo moto within 60 days that also can be done without any reference to the Collector. If review, however, of the earlier order or decision is to be made beyond the period of 60 days such an appliestion cannot be dealt with by the Board unless the permission of the Collector has been obtained. Reliance is placed upon the proviso to R. 91 (b) wherein it is laid down "that no action shall be taken by a Board" and it is argued that it is only taking some action on the application which is barred and not the filing of the application before the Board. It is further pointed out that there is no definite provision barring out the entertaining of an application before the Collector's permission is obtained. There is no substance in this contention. If the application itself cannot be dealt with by the Board before the permission of the Collector is obtained, there is nothing in the rule which requires the previous filing of the application in the Board and then approaching the Collector for permission. As there is no direct provision in the rule requiring such previous filing of the application before the Board, I would not accept such a far fetched interpretation.

[10] In the present case, it appears that after the order from the Collector was received by the Board, the Board proceeded to deal with the matter although there had been no application filed for review before the Board itself. It might have been taken on the special facts of this particular case that the Board was exercising its powers to review its own order of its own accord. But on the subsequent filing of the application as required by the Board two years later, it cannot be thrown out, because there had been no such application at an earlier stage. My atten. tion has not been drawn to any provision under which the application must be filed within a definite period. As the Board had already taken cognisance of the proceedings and had been dealing with the same from July 1944, till April 1946, it was not open to the Board to take an objection, thereafter about any supposed delay an the part of the debtor.

[11] The decision by the Additional District Judge cannot be assailed. This Rule is accordingly discharged.

Criminal Revn. No. 810 of 1949, D/- Sth December 1949.

Influx from Western Pakistan (Control) Ordinance (XVII [17] of 1948), S. 3 — Permit System Rules, 1948, Rr. 12 and 16A — Applicability—Persons going to Lahore under temporary business permit and 'returning back to Calcutta' under permit valid for two months 'pending verification'—R. 16A applies — Conviction under R. 12 held invalid.

The case of a person who wants to return to India claiming that he is domiciled here and was only staying on a temporary visit to Pakistan is provided for in R. 16A which provides for the High Commissioner or the Deputy High Commissioner to grant him the neceseary permit to return permanently here, but in caso the authority is not satisfied, he may grant a temporary permit which is to be for a period long enough for the authority to receive a report from India as to the desirability or otherwise of the person being allowed to return permanently here. If the enquiry has not been completed by the High Commissioner or the Deputy High Commissioner he may automatically extend the period under R. 16A (4). This has got nothing to do with the permit-holder, as under cl. (5) of the Rule it is the duty of the High Commissioner or the Deputy High Commissioner to send an intimation to the Superintendent of Police of the district where the applicant is for the time being staying that his application has been refused and that the applicant should return to Pakistan on the expiry of the period of the temporary permit held by him : [Para 4]

Where, therefore, certain persons proceeded from Calcutta to Delhi and from there to Lahore under a temporary business permit and returned to India under a permit which was valid for 2 months in which their object of return was stated to be 'returning back to Calcutta, pending verification' and they were convicted under R. 12 for over-staying in India:

Held, that as their object was to return permanently to India, they were entitled to claim that their case was governed by R. 16A. (The conviction was set aside as this point was not gone into by the lower Court.)

Nirmal Chandra Sen - for Petitioners.

Ajst Rumar Dutt and N. K. Sen-for the Grown.

Order. — This Rule was issued at the instance of two persons who have been convicted by a Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta under S. 4, Influx from Western Pakistan (Control) Ordinance, 1948, and R. 12, Permit System Rules, 1948, framed thereunder, each being sentenced.

to pay a fine of Rs. 200, in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months.

(2) As far as the facts are concerned, on 18th october 1948, the petitioners went from Calcutta to Delhi and then on 23rd October 1948, they went to Lahore from Delhi under Temporary Business Permits Nos. 210 and 211 granted by the High Commissioner for Pakistan, in India at New Delhi. They wanted to return and on 2nd Novem. ber 1948 they were granted two Temporary Permits being Nos. M. B. 28650 and 28651 by the Deputy High Commissioner for India in Pakistan at Lahore in which the object of the visit was stated to be "returning back to Calcutta: pending verification," and these permits were made valid for two months. It is not disputed that the petitioners did not return to Western Pakistan after two months.

[8] Various questions have been raised by Mr. Sen appearing on behalf of the petitioners relating to the powers of the Governor General to pass the Ordinance and also the different Ordinance subsequently passed and the retrospective operation of the different clauses, but in view of our decision in the present case, we do not intend to express any opinion whatever either on this point or on the actual question of facts. It appears that the petitioners are convicted for violation of the Rules framed under the Ordinance then in force or even as subsequently modified so far as it relates to the case of the petitioners. The Rules then in force were the Rules published in the Gazette of India (Extraordinary), first on 14th September 1948 and then amended on 4th october 1948. Of the Rules published in the Gazette on 14th September 1948, R. 3 speaks of three kinds of permits of which No. 1 is permit for temporary visits and under R. 12 it was laid down that no person holding a temporary permit shall stay in India after the date of expiry of such permit. Then on 4th october 1948 (published in the Gazette of India on 7th October 1948) Rr. 12A and 16A were added. Rule 12A enables a permit-holder to apply to the Superintendent of Police of the district to extend the period of the permit by such number of days not exceeding 20 days as may be necessary on account of circumstances over which the permit-holder has no control. This obviously refers to such temporary permit holders who are in India from . Western Pakistan for a temporary purpose and not permanently to India after a temporary sojourn in Pakistan. In such a case, it would appear he may, if circumstances are such that he had no control over them, get an extension only for a period of 20 days from the Superintendent of Police.

[4] The case of a person who wants to return to India claiming that he is domiciled here and was only staying on a temporary visit to Pakistan was provided for in R. 16A. That Rule provided for the High Commissioner or the Deputy High Commissioner to grant him the necessary permit to return permanently here, but in case the authority was not satisfied, he may grant a temporary permit which is to be for a period long enough for the authority to receive a report from India as to the desirability or otherwise of the person being allowed to return permanent. ly here. It is provided in R. 16A (4) that if necessary the period of such temporary permit can be extended from time to time. This obviously means that if the enquiry has not been completed by the High Commissioner or the Deputy High Commissioner be may automatically extend the period. This has got nothing to do with the permit-holder, as under the next clause, Cl. 5 of R. 16A, it is the duty of the High Commissioner or the Deputy High Commissioner to send an intimation to the Superintendent of Police of the district where the applicant is for the time being staying that his application has been refused and that the applicant should return to Pakistan on the expiry of the period of the temporary permit held by him. It has to be connected, as we have said, with the previous clause, cl. 4, which shows that the High Commissioner or the Deputy High Commissioner must finish the enquiry before the expiry of the period of the temporary visit and should communicate the result and ask the person to return and incase this cannot be done there is this provision for extension as we have said, i.e., for automatically extending the period of the temporary permitand in such a case when permission permanently to return to India is refused, the High Com. missioner or the Deputy High Commissioner will intimate such refusal to the applicant through the District Superintendent of Police as also the extended date by which he is required to return to Pakistan. There is no provision for intimation or granting of the application. In the present case as the object of the visit is to return to Calcutta and no other temporary object of visit is shown, it is written there that this is pending verification, the petitioners are entitled to claim that their case was under R. 16A and this point had not been gone into in the Court below. This is a matter which cannot be decided without evidence and the evidence must be given by the prosecution before the Chief Presidency Magistrate as to whether the application was made to the High Commissioner or the Deputy High Commissioner for India in Pakistan only under cl. (12) for a temporary visit or under cls. (16) or (16A) for the purpose of return to India permanently of a person who claims to be domiciled in India and had been only on a temporary visit to Pakisthan. The Court will then consider on the evidence how the law is to be applied.

[6] The conviction and sentence are, therefore, set aside and the Rule is made absolute and the case remanded to the Presidency Magistrate for further enquiry in the light of this judgment. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

D.R.R. Rule made absolute.

Landlord and Tenant -Putni lease -Covenant by putnidar to submit collection papers yearly affects value of land and therefore is covenant running with land-Covenant binds assignees from parties -Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 40.

Though a covenant in a putni lease that the putnidar shall submit duly, year after year in the landlord's office, the 'Jamawasil baki' and 'lowazima papers' does not affect the nature or quality of the land, it will certainly affect the value of the land from the very moment it is entered into, inasmuch as the collection papers will supply requisite materials and facilitate collection and show the real state of affairs of the putni and the dues etc. from the tenants and this factor will weigh with the purchaser of such interest in estimating the money that may reasonably be paid for such purchase. Such a covenant runs with the land and therefore binds the assignees from the parties. [Paras 2 & 4]

Judgment.— This is an appeal against an appellate decree of the District Judge of Hooghly affirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge, and Court of the same place.

(2) The facts are very simple. The appellant is a successor in interest of one Prannath Choudhury of Satkhira. The defendants are the successors-in-interest of one Raj Krishna Mukherjee. Both parties are assignees. Prannath Choudhury gave a putni lease of his share of touzi No. 87 of the Hooghly Collectorate to Raj Krishna Mukherjee, one of the terms of which was 'You shall submit duly year after year in my office the Jamawasil baki papers etc., and the Lowazima papers." On 1st May 1942, the plaintiff, the Hooghly Bank Ltd., purchased also the putni interest and took delivery of possession on 80th June 1942. They found an utter absence of papers and as the assignees of the original creators of the putni they have now called upon the defendants, the assignees of the putni holder, for the lowazima and collection papers not submitted prior to the purchase by the plaintiff and within the period of limitation. Both Courts have held that the covenant is not which runs with the land but is only a personal covenant. The learned District Judge's judgment is not very satisfactory as it deals with questions as to restraint on alienation etc., which really do not arise. The only question which has been urged is whether the covenant, we have mentioned before, is one which runs with the land and is therefore binding on the assignees of the original contracting parties. The case stood over for a long time as no decision actually covering the point could be shown, except an observation in a case by this Court in which the Divisional Bench assumed that such a covenant may run with the land. It did not decide the point. Some decisions were cited regarding covenants to pay chout or 1/4th share of the purchase money on sale of occupancy tenancies. Those are clearly distinguishable as they are creating a new right which as tenants the occupancy tenants did not possess and so conditions on the exercise of the right could be imposed.

[3] It is clear that in order to be a covenant running with the land the covenant must touch and concern the land, that is, it must affect the nature, quality or the value of it. If it runs with the land then the covenant will bind not merely the original contracting parties, but even assignees provided privity is proved. In the present case, there is no question that there was privity between the assignees of the landlord's interest and the assignees of the tenant's interest. Land also means interests in land.

[4] It is also clear that the covenant in question does not affect the nature or quality of the land. The only question, therefore, is: Does it affect the value of it? It is again clear from the decided cases that the covenant, to run with the land, must affect the value from the very time when it is entered into. In other words, would a purchaser take the existence of such a covenant into consideration in deciding upon the money he would spend for the purchase of the lands or the interest in lands? It is clear that a purchaser at an astam sale i. e. compulsory sale of putni under the Regulation or the landlord, if he bacomes the successor of the putnidar by surrender of the putni, would be in great difficulties as to collection unless he got proper collection papers of the tenant putnidar. In the two instances we have mentioned, he would not be likely to get any such help from the previous putnidars. Therefore, whether a person is a purchaser of, the putni interest or of the landlord's interest, both will know that a duplicate set of collection papers submitted by the putnidar and kept in the landlord's sherista will supply requisite materials and facilitate collection and show the real state of affairs of the putni and the dues etc., from the tenants. This factor will weigh with a purchaser of the interest in estimating the money that may reasonably be paid in the purchase of such property or interest. Under the circumstances, it cannot but be said that a covenant like this will affect the value of the land and that from the very moment it is entered into. As it does so, it is a covenant running with the land and therefore binds the assignees. The defendants were therefore liable as assignees of the original putnidar to submit collection papers to the assignees of the original landlord. Both the Courts were therefore wrong in dismissing their claim. The case cannot be fully dis. posed of here as the question of damages will have to be fully gone into now in the trial Court.

[5] The order therefore is that the appeal succeeds and is allowed and the decrees of the Courts below are set aside and the case is remanded for further action by the Subordinate Judge in the light of this judgment. The plaintiff appellant will have all the costs incurred by him so far further costs being at the discretion of the Subordinate Judge.

(a) Bengal Village Choukidari Act (6 [VI] of 1870), S 54; Sch D, Form D—Requisition in Form D in Sch. D does not require specification of area

Requisition under Form D, under S. 54 in respect of choukidari chakran lands requires that the amount in arrears and the name of the person liable to pay the same and the village in which the lands are situate should be stated. The requisition does not require to specify the details of the lands in respect of which arrears are claimed It cannot therefore be said that the requisition which does not correctly specify the area of lands is not in the proper form. [Para 7]

(b) Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (X1 [11] of 1859), Ss. 6, 33—Misdescription of land is not per se ground for setting aside sale—Misdescription when ground for setting aside sale, under S. 33, stated.

Incorrect specification of some of the details in the notification under S. 6 is not per se such a misdescription as would entitle the Civil Court to set aside a sale under S. 33. The object of a notification under S. 6 is obviously to apprise likely purchasers of exactly what is going to be sold and to ensure thereby reasonable competition amongst bidders in order that which is sought to be sold. Rules and forms which have been prescribed by the Board of Revenue in this behalf have no statutory force but are in the nature of administrative behasts and mere non compliance with them is not sufficient to vitiate the sale. Whether the misdescription is such as would render the sale liable to be set aside depends on the particular facts of each case, the test being whether the specification of the property put up for sale is sufficiently definite for the purposes already mentioned. The Court has to see if the particulars given are sufficient to identify the property and give prospective bidders information as to what they was going to bid for: A. I. R. (2) 1915 P. C. 24 and A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 173, Rel. on. [Para 7]

Where it was merely stated who the defaulters were and the serial number which the choukidari chakran lands bore in the assessment list had been correctly stated and there were no other choukidari chakran lands in the villages in question, the identity of lands was beyond question and the description of the property sold in the notification under S. 6 was not such as to vitiate the sale.

(c) Bengal Village Choukidari Act (VI [6] of 1870), Ss. 55, 6 — Sale of choukidari chakran land by Collectors for non-payment of arrears of assessment—Notification under S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI [11] of 1859) is not necessary.

Sections 50, 52, 53 to 55 of the Choukidari Act read with S. 30 of the Act, have the effect of empowering the Collector to sell choukidari chakran lands in respect of which a requisition has been made under S. 54, under the provisions of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, after the service of a notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859. [Para 18]

In regard to sales of choukidari chakran lands under the provisions of S. 55, Village Choukidari Act, the service of a notification under S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, is not necessary. [Paras 23 & 25]

Purushottam Chatterjes-for Appellant. Hars Prasanna Mukherjes-for Respondents.

Judgment .- This appeal is by the plaintiff. The plaintiff's case is that the disputed lands are the choukidari chakran lands situate in mouja Jamuni and Kanaipur appertaining to touji No. 1401 of the Birbhum Collectorate. The previous number of the touji was No. 139 of the Murshidabad Collectorate. On 29th June 1939 a requisition for payment of dues under the Village Choukidari Act was issued under S. 59 of the said Act. Thereafter without serving a notice under S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, the said choukidari chakran lands were advertised for sale after the issue of a notice under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act 1859. The sale took place on 19th September 1939 and the disputed lands were purchased by defendant 1, at the highest bid. The plaintiff who owned 4 as. 8p. share in the disputed lands instituted this suit for setting aside the sale and for recovery of possession. There was an alternative prayer for reconveyance if the prayer for setting aside the sale could not be entertained. In view of the findings arrived at by the Courts below the alternative prayer has not been pressed in this Court and no reference need be made to the allegations on which the alternative prayer was founded. The validity of the sale was attacked on two grounds:

(1) That the notice under the provisions of S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, was neither issued nor published and (2) that in the requisition under S. 54 of the said Act the disputed lands were not properly described. The same misdescription attached to the notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859 and that in consequence of misdescription the disputed lands were sold at an under valuation.

(2) The defence of the contesting defendant was (1) that the suit was bound to fail on account of non-joinder of the other co-sharers of the plaintiff; (2) that the service of a notice under S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859 was not necessary in order to bring to sale choukidari chakran lands under the special provisions of the Village Choukidari Act, 1870; (3) that there was no misdescription of the lands sold and even if there was any the misdescription was not such as to justify a reversal of the sale.

[3] The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit and the judgment of the trial Court was affirmed on appeal. The findings of the lower appellate Court are (1) that there was no defect in the frame of the suit because of the non-joinder of the other co-sharers of the plaintiff; (2) that the misdescription was not sufficient to justify a setting aside of the sale and (3) that notice under S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, was not necessary.

[4] As I have already stated, this appeal is at the instance of the plaintiff. Mr. Purushottam Chatterjee appearing on behalf of the plaintiff appellant has contended in the first place that there was misdescription both in the requisition under S. 54, Village Choukidari Act 1870 and in the notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, and the misdescription was such as to justify the plaintiffs' prayer for a reversal of the sale. In the second place, it is contended that the service of a notice under S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, was an essential prerequisite to a sale of the choukidari chakran lands under the provisions of S. 55, Village Choukidari Act.

[5] The first contention turns on the provisions of S. 54, Village Choukidari Act, 1870, and SS. 6 and 13, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act.

(6) Section 54, Village Choukidari Act, 1870, states that whenever an assessment has been made in respect of a choukidari chakran land and if the assessment is in arrears for a space of 15 days after it has become payable, the collecting member of the Panchayet shall forward to the Collector of the district in which the lands are situate:

"a notice of the amount of such arrears and the name of the person liable to pay such assessment in the Form in Schedule D annexed to the Act."

[7] Turning to Form D the form requires that the amount in arrears and the name of the person liable to pay the same and the village in which the lands are situate should be stated. The requisition does not require to specify the details of the lands in respect of which arrears are claimed. It cannot therefore be said that the requisition which did not correctly specify the area of lands, was not in proper form. The defects in the notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, are stated to be that the areas of the choukidari chakran lands in the two moujas have been grossly misstated and the names of the transferees of the original holders of these lands have not been specified. It is merely stated that the defaulters are Rajendra Chandra Pal and others. It is, however, to be noted that the serial number which the choukidari chakran lands bear in the assessment list has been correctly stated and that there are no other choukidari chakran lands in the two villages in question. Both the Courts below have found that the identity of the disputed lands was beyond question. Incorrect specification of some of the details in the notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act is not per se such a misdescription as would entitle the civil Court to set aside a sale under S. 33, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859. The object of a notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act is obviously to apprise likely purchasers of exactly what is going to be sold and to ensure thereby reasonable competition amongst bidders in order that the defaulter may have a fair value for the property which is sought to be sold. The rules and forms which have been prescribed by the Board of Revenue in this behalf have no statutory force but are in the nature of adminis. trative behests and mere non-compliance with them is not sufficient to vitiate the sale. Whether the misdescription is such as would render the sale liable to be set aside depends on the particular facts of each case, the test being whether the specification of the property put up for sale is sufficiently definite for the purposes already mentioned. The Court has to see if the particulars given are sufficient to identify the property and give prospective bidders informa. tion as to what they were going to bid for. The above view is supported by the decisions in the cases of Raveneshwar Prasad Singh v. Baijnath Ram Goenka. 42 I. A. 79 : (A. I. R. (2) 1915 P. C. 24) and Sakina Khatoon v. Khirod Chandra, 46 C. W. N. 78: (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal 179). Judged by the above principles it cannot be said that the description of the property sold in the notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, was such as to vitiate the sale. The first contention raised on behalf of the appellant must therefore fail.

[8] The second contention raised on behalf of the appellant requires careful consideration. In order to deal with this contention it is necessary to advert to certain provisions of the Village Choukidari Act, 1870.

[9] Section 48, Village Choukidari Act provides for transfer of choukidari chakran lands to the zemindars of the estate or tenure within which such lands are situate.

[10] Section 49 of the said Act then states that all lands transferred should be subject to assessment at half of the annual value of such lands made by the village panchayat.

[11] Section 50 empowers the Collector to approve of the assessment so made and to transfer such lands to zemindars in Form C subject to the assessment approved by him.

[12] Section 52 lays down that the assessment is to be a permanent yearly charge on the lands transferred and is to be payable to the collecting member of the Panchayat 'yearly in advance on the 1st day of the year current in the village."

[13] Section 53 then provides that such assessment shall be deemed to be "a demand to be realised in the manner herein after provided."

"Immediately after the receipt of such notice the Collector . . . shall proceed, without preliminary notice for payment, to issue notification for sale under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, and unless the arrears be paid within the time mentioned in such notification, shall sell such lands according to the provisions of such law, as if such land was an estate within the meaning of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1868."

[16] Act VII B. C. of 1868 was enacted to amend and extend the law for the realistion of arrears of land revenue and of public demands recoverable as arrears of land revenue.

[17] Section 30 of this Act states that the Act is to be read with and as part of Act XI [11] of 1859 as amended by Act III B C. of 1862.

[18] The above provisions have the effect of empowering the Collector to sell choukidari chakran lands in respect of which a requisition has been made under S. 54, under the provisions of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, after the service of a notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859. There is no dispute that the notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act was published in the present case. Mr. Chatterjee ingeniously contends that the use of the words,

"according to the provisions of such law as if such land was an estate within the meaning of the Bengal makes all the provisions of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, applicable; in particular s. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859, is attracted and a sale of the choukidari chakran lands cannot take place unless the collector proceeds to serve the notification mentioned in s. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859.

[19] In order to test this contention we have to bear in mind the definition of an arrear of revenue as contained in S. 2, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act which lays down that if an instalment of revenue according to the kists, remains unpaid on the 1st day of the month following that in which the kist is payable the unpaid kists shall be deemed to be an arrear of revenue. Section 3, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act empowers the Board of Revenue to fix the latest date of payment of the arrears of revenue and it is well known that such dates have been fixed by the Board of Revenue.

[20] Section 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act provides that notifications in the manner prescribed in the section shall be issued when the arrears or demands are of the four descriptions stated in the section, the fourth category being wide enough to include dues in respect of choukidari chakran lands. Section 5 further provides that the notification mentioned in that section shall specify the "nature and amount of arrear or demand and the latest date on which payment thereof shall be received." The notification has to be affixed in the places mentioned in the section for not less than 15 clear days preceding the date fixed for payment under S. 3 of the Act. Section 5 therefore requires the Collector in the cases specified in the section to issue notifications prior to the latest date for payment of revenue and the sale is not to be advertised until such notification has been published. Notification under 8. 5 differs from notification under S. 6 in that the notification under S. 5 has to be issued before the sale can be advertised. Section 6 notification, however, follows the expiry of the latest date of payment. It may be stated that the non-service of a notification under S. 5 is an illegality within the meaning of S. 33, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act : vide Monindra Deb Roy v. Sree Sree Hanseswari Thakurani, 40 C. W. N. 271. If such a notification under S. 5 was an essential prerequisite before the Collector could issue a notification under S. 6 for the sale of the choukidari chakran lands the result would be that the dates mentioned in Ss. 54 and 55, Village Choukidari Act would have to be varied. The service of such a notification would also be contrary to the express terms of S. 55 which empowers the Collector to proceed to issue a notification under S. 6 immediately after the assessment which is to be paid in respect of the choukidari chakean lands has become payable. The following words used in 8. 56, Village Choukidari Act namely "without preliminary notice for payment" in my opinion obviously refer to any notification which calls upon the defaulter to pay the arrears of demand payable in respect of the choukidari chakran lands. As such the said words would, in my opinion, exclude the issue of a notification under S. 5. Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act which is a public call to the defaulter to pay the arrears within a certain time. In my opinion, quite apart from this consideration, the scheme mentioned in the Village Choukidari Act, 1870, is such as to exclude by necessary implication the service of any notice prior to the service of a notification under S. 6, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act. Again S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act is a proviso to Ss. 2 and 3 of the said Act. As Ss. 2 and 3, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act have no application to the case of a sale for non-payment of the assessment under the Village Choukidari Act necessarily S. 5 can have no application to such sales.

[21] Mr. Chatterjee was fully alive to the difficulty because of the presence of the words "without preliminary notice for payment" in S. 55, Village Choukidari Act. He therefore argued that these words refer to a notice which is envisaged in S. 6 of Act VII B. C. of 1869. Section 6 of Act VII of 1868 enables the Local Government (now the Provincial Government) by an order published in the Calcutta Gazette (now official Gazette) to empower Collectors if they so think fit, to cause notices to be served on any proprietor before proceeding under Act XI of 1859 to realise from such proprietor any arrear of revenue that may be due from such property. It may be noted that before the passing of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1830, the words "or any demand" followed the words "any arrears of revenue" in the aforesaid S. 6. This contention raised by Mr. Chatterji cannot be accepted for two reasons. In the first place the notice under S. 6 was not a compulsory notice. It is not known whether the Lt. Governor has made any notification under 8. 6. More. over, even if the Lt. Governor has made such a notification a discretion is left with the Collectors to issue notices under S. 6 only in appropriate cases. In the second place, the words "any demand" occurring in the latter part of S 6 were omitted, as I have said, by the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1880. As such a notice under S. 6 will not thereafter be served upon a proprietor in cases of demands other than arrears of revenue. The retention of the words "without preliminary notice for payment" in 8. 55, Village Choukidari Act even after the amendment of

S. 6, Public Demands Recovery Act, 1880, clearly indicates that notice under S. 6 of the Act, VII B. C. of 1868, was not the notice which was evisaged in S. 55, Village Choukidari Act.

[22] Mr. Chatterjee further contends that the words "unless the arrears be paid within the time mentioned in such notification" occurring in S. 55, Village Choukidari Act clearly show that S. 55 contemplates a notification which calls upon a defaulter to pay within a certain time, and this must be a notification other than a notification under S. 6, Land Revenue Sales Act It is true that the notification under S. 6, Land Revenue Sales Act does not specify that the defaulter has to pay the arrears within certain time. On the contrary the last paragraph of S. 6 states that no payment or tender of payment after the sunset of the latest date of payment can bar or interfere with the sale, and the defaulting proprietor is not entitled to stop the sale by payment or tender of payment of the arrears due after the sunset of the latest date of payment. This is quite true but as was pointed out in the case of Gobind Chundra Gango. padhya v. Sherajunnessa Bibi, 13 C. L. R. 1, a practice had grown up at the time, on acceptance of arrears of revenue even after the sunset of the latest date of payment before the actual sale takes place; the Collectors in those days generally exercised their powers under S. 18, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act of exempting the estates from sales even where payment was made after the latest date. It may be mentioned that the practice which was referred to in Gobinda Chandra's case (13 C. L. B. 1) was the foundation for the observation of Loch J., in the case of Raghub Chunder Banerjee v. Brojonath Koondoo, 14 W. R. 489: (9 Beng. L. B. 91n), to the effect that the object of S. 6 notice is to give information to the defaulter that unless the amount be paid by & certain date the property will be sold. The aforesaid words relied on by Mr. Chatterjee may have, in this view, referred to the notification under S. 6.

Village Choukidari Act justify the Collectors in bringing to sale choukidari chakran lands for non-payment of arrears of assessment under the Village Choukidari Act without serving a notification under S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859.

[24] I may point out that it is a matter of some doubt whether S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act has any application at the present day to sales for arrears of demands which are recoverable as arrears of land revenue. The Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act does not contain any direction as to how such sales for arrears of demands which are not arrears of revenue may be dealt with. Moreover, in case the arrears due are not realised by the sale in such cases, the right to sell other properties of the defaulter was extremely problematical after the repeal of Act VIII [8] of 1835. In order to get round this difficulty Bengal Act VII [7] of 1868 was passed. This Act provided for sales of estates for arrears of revenue and also sales of estates and tenures for recovery of demands other than arrears of revenue but which are realisable as arrears of revenue, but that part of Act VIII which dealt with latter class of cases was, however, repealed in 1880 when the Public Demands Recovery Act (Act VII B. C. 1880) was passed, the latter Act providing for a speedy mode of realisation of such demands.

[25] The result of the above discussion leads me to hold that in regard to sales of chousidari chakran lands under the provisions of S. 55, Village Choukidari Act, 1870, the service of a notification under S. 5, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1869, is not necessary. The second contention raised on behalf of the appellant must also therefore be overruled.

[26] In the result, the appeals fail and must be dismissed with one set of costs for the two appeals.

Harries C. J. — This is a petition for revision of an order of a learned Magistrate directing certain accused persons to execute a bond in the sum of Rs. 500 with two sureties of like amount for keeping the peace until the conclusion of a certain enquiry.

[2] The petitioners were being prosecuted under S. 110. Criminal P. C. The learned Magistrate was hearing the case in camp. Whilst the dase was proceeding there was an outcry that there was a fire in a neighbouring house and everybody seems to have run out including the learned Magistrate. The learned Magistrate in his judgment says that he learnt from some man and two females who were inmates of a hut which was burning that they had seen one Tari rupning out from behind the hut as soon as it was on fire. Tari, it was said, was a sister of three of the petitioners and either the landlord or the paramour of the fourth petitioner. The hut which was burning belonged to two persons, Srinath Roy and Debendra Roy, who were prosecution witnesses in the case. The learned Magistrate said that he inspected the fencing which had been broken down in order to obtain access to the rear of the hut, and then he went out with the police in search of the woman. They failed to find the woman and then returned to continue hearing the case. Apparently fire again broke out in this hut or huts and there was another outcry and people ran about.

[3] The police appear to have applied to the learned Magistrate praying that he should cancel the bail of the four accused persons and direct that they should enter into bonds. The learned Magistrate admits that there were no witnesses whom he could examine. Nevertheless, he came to the conclusion that there was not the slightest doubt that public tranquillity had been badly disturbed by the action of an agent of the accused persons and that there was ground for public apprehension. Unless action was immediately taken further mischief might be engineer-

[4] The only basis for this finding is a statement made to the Magistrate outside the Court by some man and two women that they had seen Tari running away from behind the hut. Whether Tari set fire to these huts or not is impossible to say, but the learned Magistrate appears to have overlooked entirely that he was a judicial officer who could only act judicially. Cancelling bail and demanding bonds are matters which cannot be decided on hearsay, but could only be decided upon proper material presented to the learned Magistrate in the proper manner. He cannot act on hearsay and tittle-tattle, and it appears to me that there was no material at all here upon which the order could have been made. The most that can be said was that there was a suspicion that Tari was connected with this fire, but it in no way follows that Tari was the agent of the accused, though of course she might have been. But before an order of this sort would have been made some material should have been before the Magistrate which would have amounted to proof. There was no material of any kind and the learned Magistrate acted on the suggestion of the police immediately.

[5] In my view, this order cannot possibly be sustained and must be set aside, and the accused must be released on their original bail immediately.

Order.— This Rule has been obtained by the Municipal Commissioners of Howrah against an order passed by the Munsif, 3rd Court, Howrah, acting as a Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Howrah, dismissing the plaintiffs' suit for the recovery of certain rates on the footing that the subject-matter of the rates was a bustee.

[2] The learned Munsif has held that the subject matter with respect to which the claim has been made is not a bustee and on this ground he has dismissed the suit.

[8] The principal question for decision is whether the learned Munsif's judgment on the question whether the subject-matter is a bustee or not is in accordance with law. The learned Munsif has based his decision on two grounds. First he says, that upon the evidence before him he is satisfied that the area is not a bustee with. in the meaning of S. 3 (10) read with S. 3 (86), Calcutta Municipal Act as extended to Howrah. His second ground is that the Municipality of Howrah was bound to decide whether the area was a bustee or not before it could levy the rates claimed and that as there has been no such decision by the Municipality of Howrah, the claim is not sustainable. For this purpose he relies upon s. 4, Calcutta Municipal Act as extended to Howrah.

[4] Learned Advocate appearing in support of the Rule contends that the learned Munsif has erred in law in coming to his conclusion upon the evidence that the land is not a bustee because he has drawn an unwarranted inference regarding some of the plaintiffs' witnesses—an inference which is not based on the evidence. He argues that the question whether the area is a bustee or not should be re-heard upon both parties giving fresh evidence on the point. As regards the second point, his argument is that it is not necessary for the Howrah Municipality to come to a formal decision that a particular area is a bustee before it can realise rates on that area on that basis. His view is that S. 4 abovementioned does not lay down any such principle as is laid down by the learned Munsif in his judgment.

- (5) Learned advocate appearing in opposition to the Rule supports the findings of the learned Munsif both on law and on fact. He contends further that no notice was served upon the assessee as is required by the provisions of S. 138 of the aforesaid Act as extended to Howrab.
- [6] I shall first deal with the question whether the Municipality is debarred from assessing an area as a bustee until there is a formal decision of the question by the Commissioners at a meeting. Section 4 is in the following terms:

"The Corporation may decide whether any particular area is or is not a 'bustee' as defined in S. 3 and their decision shall be final."

So far as the Howrah Municipality is concerned the word 'Corporation' means the Commissioners at a meeting. It is argued by learned advocate opposing to the Rule that unless the Commissioners at a meeting formally decided this question, there can be no assessment of a bustee. On the other hand, it is argued by learned advocate in support of the Rule that this section would come into operation only when there is a dispute before the Municipality as to whether or not a certain area should be declared a bustee and that where there is no such dispute there is no necessity for a formal decision by the Commissioners at a meeting. In my opinion, S. 4 of the aforesaid Act does not lay down the rule that an area cannot be assessed as a bustee until there has been a formal decision to that effect by the Commissioners at a meeting. Section 4 in my opinion is an empowering section. It gives power to the Corporation to decide whether an area is a bustee or not. Nowhere in the Act is, it laid down specifically that before assessment there must be a formal decision. The Act defines what a bustee is and if an assessment is made on an area which conforms to this definition the assessment would, in my opinion, be a good one although no formal decision has been made on the question whether the area is a bustee or not by the Commissioners at a meeting. All that!

S. 4 means is this. If there is any dispute or doubt as to whether an area is a bustee or not, the Corporation is empowered to decide that dispute or resolve that doubt and its decision on the question shall be final. It does not in my opinion make the decision of the Commissioners at a meeting a sine qua non for the assessment of an area as a bustee. I hold, therefore, that the learned Judge was wrong in coming to this conclusion. In arriving at this view, I am relying on the use of the word 'may.' I am aware of the principle that the word 'may' in certain circumstances should be construed as 'shall,' but it does not follow that in construing this section one must hold that "may" should always be construed as "shall." In my opinion, the word "may" has been used for the following reasons viz., there may be no dispute or doubt regarding the question whether an area is a bustee or not, on the other hand, such a dispute or doubt may arise, when such a dispute or doubt does arise the Municipality must decide the question, when such a dispute or doubt does not arise no such decision need be made. The use of the word 'may' indicates that the Municipality is not bound to decide the question unless the contingency abovementioned occurs. If the legislature intended that in all circumstances the Municipality was bound to decide this question it would have used the word 'shall' and not "may." As stated before the section is essentially an empowering section and not per se a directive or mandatory one.

[7] On the question of notice I am of opinion that the learned Judge is wrong. The notice has been placed before me and it clearly shows that it was served on one Jagabandhu who is described in the notice as the grandson of Sm. Ushangini Debi the owner of the bustee. It is true that a witness in his deposition says that the notice was served on the grandson of Jagabandhu. This is clearly an error. The notice itself shows that it was served on Jagabandhu as the grandson of the owner. The person giving evidence had no personal knowledge of service and he misread the notice and much capital has been made of this misreading by the learned Judge and by learned advocate opposing the rule. I hold, therefore, that there is no error in the service of the notice because the Act permits service of notice on an adult member of the owner if the owner cannot be found. Admittedly, Sm. Ushangini Debi was the owner by virtue of the fact that she was the executrix of the late owner and admittedly Jagabandhu is her grandson and stands now in the place of Sm. Ushangini Debi.

tion whether the land is a bustee or not is in accordance with law. Learned advocate who appeared in opposition to the rule says that this is a pure finding of fact and that under S. 25, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act I, should not interfere. It is quite true that under S. 25 of the last mentioned Act this Court should not interfere with pure findings of fact, but where the finding is based upon an obvious error in the appraisement of the evidence, then it cannot be described as a finding in accordance with law. If the Judge had merely believed one witness and disbelieved another. I would not be right in interfering with the learned Judge's decision on findings of fact. But here the learned Judge has made a serious error. Two witnesses for the plaintiffs namely witness No. 1 Anukual Chandra Chatterji and witness No. 3 Bishnupada Bose both describe the land as bustee. They were not cross-examined on this point. They were not asked whether or not they had been on the land. The learned Judge, however, says that the witnesses for the plaintiffs "have no personal knowledge about the condition of the huts on suit land." There is no justification for this finding so far as the witnesses I have named are concerned. It is true that there is positive evidence given on behalf of the defendant that the erections on the land consist of walls which are either masonry or half masonry and that they have corrugated iron roofs. If this evidence be true, then the constructions cannot be described as buts and, therefore, the land would not be a bustee. On the other hand, there is the evidence of the witnesses for the plaintiffs which has been misappreciated.

should be sent back to the learned Munsif who shall allow the parties to adduce further evidence on the question of the structures on the land and on the question whether the land is a bustee or not within the meaning of the Calcutta Municipal Act as extended to Howrah. After hearing such evidence, the learned Munsif shall decide the matter in accordance with law in the light of the observations made above.

[11] The costs will abide the result.

Sudhansu Sekhar Mukhar jee and Amaresh Chandra Roy — for Petitioners.

Sir S. M. Bose and N. K. Sen - for the Crown.

Das Gupta J. — These two applications are against two orders of conviction and sentence under s. 7 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946, read with S. 8 of the same Act, in two different cases. In both the cases the petitioners were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two and a half months, and the paddy was forfeited.

- [2] They were heard together, as both of them raise the same question of law—the question whether on the alleged date of contravention of orders for which the petitioners have been convicted, 29rd September 1948—Act XXIV [24] of 1946 was in force. Mr. Mukherjee who has argued the cases for all the petitioners has contended that Act XXIV [24] of 1946 ceased to be in force after 31st March 1948. If this contention be correct, it must be held that the conviction of the petitioners for acts committed on 23rd September 1948, would be unsustainable.
- [3] Admittedly, Act XXIV [24] of 1946 is, or was a temporary Act. As the preamble states, it was enacted to provide for the continuance of certain powers during a limited period. It was therefore necessary to define in the Act itself the period during which it would be in operation. This has been done in sub-s. (3) of S. 1, by saying when the Act will cease to operate. The sub-section is in these words:

"It shall cease to have effect on the expiration of the period mentioned in S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, except as respects things done or omitted to be done before the expiration thereof . . . "

- [4] To find out therefore whether this Act is in operation in any case, we have to ascertain first the date of expiration of the period mentioned in S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946. If the act or omission complained of was done after that date, Act XXIV [24] of 1946 has no operation, if the act or omission was done before that date, Act XXIV [24] of 1946 has operation.
- [5] Turning now to the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, we find that was originally enacted "by the King's most Excellent Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons" assembled in the British Parliament, and "by the authority of the same" this Act had six section of which S. 1 repealed a provision in the Government of India Act as regards qualifications of Executive Councillors; S. 2 provided that notwithstanding anything in the Government of India Act, 1935, the Indian Legislature should during the period mentioned in section 4 of the Act have power to make laws with respect to certain matters; S. 3 provided that notwithstanding anything in the Government of India Act, 1935, the powers of the Indian Legislature to make laws shall extend to the making of laws providing for continuance of certain powers until not later than the end of the period mentioned in section 4 of the Act. The provisions of Ss. 5 and 6 of the Act are not relevant for our present purpose; but it is necessary to set out in full S. 4 of the Act, as originally enacted. It is in these words:

"The period mentioned in the two last preceding sections is the period of one year beginning with the date on which the proclamation of emergency in force at the passing of this Act ceases to operate, or, if the Governor-General by public notification so directs, the period of two years beginning with that date:

Provided that if and so often as a resolution approving the extension of the said period is passed by both Houses of Parliament, the said period shall be extended for a further period of twelve months from the date on which it would otherwise expire so, however, that it does not in any case continue for more than five years from the date on which the proclamation of emergency ceases to operate."

[6] It is not disputed that the proclamation of emergency mentioned in S. 4 ceased to be in force after 31st March 1946. It is also undisputed that before 31st March 1947, the Governor-General had by public notification directed the period mentioned in S. 4 to be the period of two years beginning with the date on which the proclamation of emergency ceased to be in force. The position on 14th August 1947, therefore, was that the period mentioned in S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946 was due to expire on 31st March 1948, unless there was further extension under the proviso, by a resolution passed by both Houses of the British Parliament. If, on 14th August 1947, or on an earlier date, the two Houses of British Parliament had passed a resolution, approving the extension of the period for a further period of twelve months, the period mentioned in S. 4 would have been extended up to 31st march 1949. Petitioners' advocate does not dispute the fact that the two Houses of Parliament could have passed such a resolution and that if they had passed such a resolution, the effect would have been as mentioned above.

[7] The British Parliament did not, however, pass any such resolution. On 18th July 1947, the British Parliament enacted the Indian Independence Act, under which India became an Independent Dominion as from 15th august 1947. Consequently, the British Parliament lost all legislative authority over India, so that the Houses of Parliament could not, I think, pass any resolution under the provision (proviso?) to S. 4. India (Central Government and Legislature) Act. 1946, on or after 15th August 1947, even if this Act had remained unaltered. But it did not remain unaltered. On 14th August 1947, the Governor-General of India made an order in exercise of powers conferred by S. 9 read with S. 19, sub-s. (4), Indian Independence Act, by which, he directed substitution for "both Houses of Parliament," the words "the Dominion Legislature" in S. 4 and the insertion of a new 8 4A. There was no modification, in Ss. 2 and 3 mate. rial for our present purpose. The position, after this order had been made by the Governor-General, therefore was that Ss. 2 and 3 remained unaltered except in matters which are not relevant for our present purpose, while Ss. 4 and 4A stood thus:

Provided that if and so often as a resolution approving the extension of the said period is passed by the Dominion Legislature, the said period shall be extended for a further period of twelve months from the date on which it would otherwise expire so, however, that it does not in any case continue for more than five years from the date on which the Proclamation of Emergency

4A. Powers of the Dominion Legislature to be powers of the Constituent Assembly - The powers of the Dominion Legislature, under this Act shall, until other provision is made by or in accordance with a law made by the Constituent Assembly under sub-s (1) of S. 8, Indian Independence Act, 1947, be exercisable by that Assembly, and accordingly reference in this Act to the Dominion Legislature shall be construed as references to the Constituent Assembly."

[8] It cannot be seriously disputed that the Governor General had full legal authority to make the order mentioned above, if in fact S. 9 read with S. 19 (4), Independence Act conferred on him the power to make it. The relevant portion of S. 9 is in these words:

"The Governor General shall by order make such provision as appears to him to be necessary or expedient.

for making omissions from, additions to, and adaptations and modifications of, the Government of India Act, 1935 "

Section 19 (4) is in these words:

"In this Act, except so far as the context otherwise requires

References to the Government of India Act, 1935, include references to any enactments amending or supplementing that Act, and, in particular, references to the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946."

[9] Quite clearly, therefore, these provisions of the Indian Independence Act gave the Governor-General the power to make "omissions from, additions to, and adaptations and modifications" of the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946. The order made by the Governor-General making the additions and alterations in the India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, was therefore a good and valid order, and not ultra vires the Governor-General, as was, rather faintly suggested by Mr. Mukherjee at one stage of his argument.

[10] The position from 15th August 1947, on-wards, therefore, was that the period mentioned in S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, would expire on 31st March 1948, unless the Constituent Assembly, exercising the powers of the Dominion Legislature, passed a resolution approving the further extension of the period under the proviso to S. 4. On 25th February 1948, the Constituent Assembly did pass the following resolution:

"In pursuance of the proviso to S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946 as adapted by the India (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947, this Assembly hereby approves the extension of the period mentioned in Ss. 2 and 3 of the said Act for a further period of twelve months commencing on 1st day of April 1948."

Again, on 23rd March 1949, the Constituent

"In pursuance of the proviso to S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946 as adapted by the India (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947, this Assembly hereby approves the extension of the period mentioned in Ss. 2 and 3 of the said Act for a futher period of twelve months commencing on 1st of day April 1949."

[12] Mr. Mukherjee's main argument is that these resolutions had no legal effect whatsoever, as they did not receive the Governor-General's assent. He found this argument on S. 32, Government of India Act, 1935, which after adaptation by the India (Provisional Constitution) Order, 1947, runs thus:

"When a Bill has been passed by the Dominion Legislature it shall be presented to the Governor-General, and the Governor-General shall declare either that he assents in His Majesty's name to the Bill, or that Provided that the Governor-General may return the Bill to the Legislature with a message requesting that they will reconsider the Bill or any specified provisions thereof, and in particular, will consider the desirability of introducing any such amendments as he may recommend in his message, and the Legislature shall reconsider the Bill accordingly."

[13] This provision of the Government of India Act, the argument proceeds, puts a limit to the power of the Legislature of the Dominion and so, stands in the way of the Dominion Legis. lature legislating by a resolution without obtaining the assent of the Governor-General. In this connection, Mr. Mukherjee has drawn our attention to sub-s. (3) of S. 8, Indian Independence Act, which is in these words:

"Any provisions of the Government of India Act, 1935. which, as applied to either of the new Dominions by sub-s. (2) of this section and the orders therein referred to, operate to limit the power of the legislature of that Dominion shall unless and until other provision is made by or in accordance with a law made by the Constituent Assembly of the Dominion in accordance with the provisions of sub-s. (1) of this section, have the like effect as a law of the Legislature of the Dominion limiting for the future the powers of that Legislature."

[14] It is difficult to see how the provision of S. 32, Government of India Act operates to limit the power of the Legislature. It puts no restriction on the power of the Legislature either to consider any matter, or to pass any resolution, or any Bill. In fact, it does not deal with the power of the Legislature at all; but merely provides that when the Legislature has exercised its power by passing a Bill, it should be placed before the Governor General for his assent.

[15] In my judgment, there is no scope for the operation of s. 8 (3), Indian Independence Act in this case. Quite apart from that however it seems clear to me that the provisions of S. 32, Government of India Act continue to be applicable to the Constituent Assembly, exercising the powers of the Dominion Legislature. These provisions, however, apply only to Bills passed by the Legislature. The section does not provide that a resolution passed by the Legislature will have to be placed before the Governor-General for his assent. There is no justification for reading into the section the words "resolution passed by the Dominion Legislature" when they do not occur there. It must be held therefore that S. 32. Government of India Act does not require that a resolution passed by the Dominion Legislature should be placed before the Governor-General for his assent.

[16] Mr. Mukherjee next argued in a general way that as all legislation by the Dominion Legislature requires for its validity the assent of the Governor General the passing of a resolution under the proviso to S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, which is also "legislation" requires for its validity the assent of the Governor General. It is not correct to say however that all legislation by the Dominion Legislature requires the assent of the Governor-General. The principal mode of legislation by the Dominion Legislature is by passing bills. Indeed the passing of a Bill incorporating the provisions is the only mode in which the Dominion Legislature can legislate unless an Act of a legislature with plenary powers has conferred on it-the Dominion Legislature—the power to legislate in a certain matter in some other way viz., by passing a resolution. But there can be such conferment of powers, and when there has been such conferment, as under the proviso to S 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act. 1946, it is clear the Dominion Legislature can legislate by passing resolution. Such legislation does not come within the operation of S. 32, Government of India Act, and so, does not require for its validity the assent of the Goveror-General. My conclusion is that the resolutions mentioned above that were passed by the Constituent Assembly functioning as the Dominion Legisla. ture did not require for their validity the assent of the G vernor-General.

[17] Mr. Mukherjee contented, however, that even if the resolutions passed by the Constituent Assembly be legally valid, the resolutions as worded have not the effect of extending the period of operation of act XXIV (24) of 1946. The only effect of the resolutions, according to Mr. Mukherjee, is that the Dominion Legislature can during the extended period exercise certain powers, which it otherwise would not have; that it could have enacted legislation extending the period of operation of Act XXIV [24] of 1946, but as this has not been done, the act expired on 31st March 1948. This argument is in my judgment entirely misconceived. As we have seen subs. (3) of 8 1 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946 fixes the period of operation of the Act to be the period mentioned in S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act. 1916. If the resolutions have produced the effect of extending the period mentioned in 8 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, to a certain date, the consequential effect is that up to that date, Act XXIV [24] of 1946 is in force. The question of enacting fresh legislation to extend Act XXIV [24] of 1946 does not arise at all. If the period mentioned in 8. 4. India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, had not been extended, the Dominion Legislature could still have passed an Act with the assent of the Governor-General amending sub s (8) of S. 1 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946, in order to extend the period of its operation.

[18] The resolutions mentioned above approved of the extension of the period mentioned in 8s. 2 and 3, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946. The necessary consequence under the proviso to S. 4 of the same Act, is that the period mentioned in that section was extended for a period of twelve months from 31st March 1948, by the first resolution dated 25th February 1948; and for another period of twelve months from 31st March 1949 by the second resolution.

[19] The period mentioned in S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946, did not therefore expire on 31st March 1948, but at the present moment, stands extended to 31st March 1950. Act XXIV [24] of 1946 did not therefore cease to be of effect after 31st March 1948, but will cease to have effect unless there is further extension of the period mentioned in S. 4, India (Central Government and Legislature) Act, 1946 only after 31st March 1950 as regards acts or omissions after that date. As regards acts omitted or committed before 31st March 1950, Act XXIV [24] of 1946 will continue to operate indefinitely after 31st March 1950.

[20] The alleged date of the acts in both the applications is 23rd September 1949. Act XXIV [24] of 1946 is therefore inforce as regards these.

[23] The petitioners in Revision Case No. 716 of 1949 were convicted for attempt to move twenty five maunds of paddy from West Dinajpur District into Malda District, without permit. It is not disputed that such movement would contravene the West Bengal Government notification dated 17th September 1947. The question for the decision of the Courts below was whether the prosecution had been able to prove that the accused persons were attempting to move such paddy from West Dinajpur District to Malda District. The prosecution case was that on the night of 23rd September 1948, a boat with twenty bags of paddy containing twenty-five maunds, was caught, when moving down a river, towards the Malda border, about a rashi from the border. The defence story was that when these persons were loading paddy into a boat about one and a half miles from the border, they were arrested, and the boat with the paddy seized. Evidence that they were caught, about a rashi from the border from the boat, when it was moving towards the border, with these petitioners and twenty bags of paddy on board, has been given by an Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police and two other persons, who were on duty there. The defence story sought to be proved by the evidence of one witness who says that he gave a loan of fifty maunds of paddy to the petitioners, and there other witnesses who say that the petitioners were arrested and the paddy seized, near Rangapukur about one and a half mile from the Malda border. The most striking circumstance is that D. W. 1 who claims to have given the paddy on loan did not say anything to the police that night or the following morning though the seizure is said to have taken place just when the paddy was being loaded into a boat near his house. That is not the conduct of a person who knows that he is going to lose fifty maunds of paddy, as a result of police high handedness.

[24] The learned Magistrate who had the opportunity of seeing the witnesses believed the prosecution witnesses, and found the defence witnesses unworthy of credit. Not a single circumstance has been mentioned by the learned defence Advocate, why the assessment of evidence made by the Magistrate should not be accepted. On a consideration of probabilities, and the ordinary course of human conduct, I agree with the learned Magistrate, and the Court of appeal below, that the prosecution witnesses told the truth in saying that the boat, with these petitioners, and twenty bags of paddy on board, was caught about a rashi from the Malda border, when moving towards that border. Admittedly they had no permit for this attempted movement of the paddy into Malda. They have therefore been rightly convicted, in my opinion under S. 7 read with S. 8 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946. The sentence in my opinion is not too severe.

[25] The petitioners in Revision Case No. 717 of 1949 were convicted under S. 7 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946 read with S. 8 of the same Act for attempting to move twenty bags containing twenty-five maunds of paddy from West Dinajpur District into Malda District.

September 1948, the patrol men on duty in West Dinajpur near the West Dinajpur Malda border found a boat with these petitioners and 20 bags of paddy on boat moving down the stream, about a rashi from the Malda border, and arrested the men, and seized the boat and the paddy. The defence story was that they were caught when they were loading paddy which they had borrowed from one Abdul Hossain Beg, near his house, about one mile and a half from the border.

[27] Evidence that these petitioners were caught on the boat which had in it twenty bags of paddy, about a rashi from the Malda border, when the boat was moving towards the Malda border has been given by an Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police, and two other persons, who were on patrol duty near the West Dinajpur Malda border. The learned Magistrate who had the opportunity of seeing the witnesses believed the testimony of these prosecution witnesses, and considered the defence witnesses who had given evidence that the men and the boat with the paddy were caught one and a half mile away, unworthy of credit. Abdul Hossain Beg who gave evidence that he had given fifty maunds of paddy on loan to these petitioners, admitted that though he was informed immediately that the paddy he had lent and the men to whom he had lent it had been seized near his house, he took no action whatsoever. That is not normal human conduct. On a consideration of probabilities, and the ordinary course of human conduct I think the learned Magistrate rightly rejected the defence evidence, as unworthy and believed the prosecution case that these petitioners were caught in a boat, with twenty bags of paddy, about a rashi from the Malda border when the boat was moving towards the Malda border. Admittedly they had no permit for the movement of the paddy from West Dinajpur into Malda. They were, therefore, rightly convicted under S. 7 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946, read with S. 8 of the same Act.

[28] The sentence is not in my opinion too severe and the order of forfeiture was rightly made.

[29] I would, therefore, discharge the rules. The petitioners should surrender to their bail to serve out their sentence.

Civil Rule No. 802 of 1949, D/- 5-12-1949 from order of Munsiff, 1st Court, Sealdah, D/- 23-8-1949.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 20,80—Suit for damages for short delivery against Government—Cause of action wholly outside jurisdiction of Court—Jurisdiction over suit on ground of defendant's residence or carrying on business, etc.—Notification of E. I. R. Administration published on 27-5-1948—Construction.

The Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit brought sgainst the Dominion of India where the cause of action has arisen wholly outside the ordinary original jurisdiction of that Court, on the sole ground that the Government of India dwelt or carried on business or personally worked for gain within the local limits of that Court. 40 Cal. 308, Rel. on. [Para 10]

The plaintiff sued the Dominion of India for damages for short delivery of goods entrusted to the Railway Administration for carriage from Aligarh (U. P.) to Khulna, which is now within the Dominion of Pakistan. The suit was instituted at Sealdah. The Munsif held that the Court had jurisdiction to try the suit relying upon the Notification of the E. I. R. Administration published on 27th May 1948 according to which the plaintiff was asked to submit his claim at the Accounts Office at Sealdah:

Held (i) that Sealdah Court could not assume jurisdiction over the suit on the ground of defendant's residence or their carrying on business or their personally working for gain within the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Court;

(ii) that no part of the cause of action was furnished by the Notification. By reason of the Notification the Railway Administration did not undertake to make the payment to the plaintiff within the jurisdiction of Sealdah Court and so no part of the cause of action arose within that jurisdiction. Nor did it arise in Sealdah merely by reason of the fact that plaintiff was asked to submit his claim at the Accounts Office at Sealdah: A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 199, Disting.

Bhabesh Narayan Bose-for Petitioner.

Manindra Nath Ghose and Sachindra Chandra

Dass Gupta-for Opposite Party.

Banerjee J.—This is an application on behalf of the defendant Dominion of India asking for a revision, under S. 115, Civil P. C., of an order made by the learned First Munsiff at Sealdah. By that order, he held that the Sealdah Court had territorial jurisdiction to try the suit.

[2] The facts of the case are very simple and may be shortly stated: The plaintiff sued the Governor-General of India in Council for damages for short delivery of goods which, he alleges, he entrusted to the Railway Administration for carriage from Aligarh (U. P.) to Khulna Railway station, which is now within the Dominion of Pakistan.

[3] After due notice under S. 80, Civil P. C. the plaintiff filed the suit on 7th December 1945, in the Munsiff's Court at Khulna.

[4] On 15th August 1947, two Dominions were set up in what previously was British India. One was the Dominion of India and the other the Dominion of Pakistan. There is a Governor General for the Dominion of India and there is a Governor General for the Dominion of Pakistan.

[5] After that date, the plaintiff amended his plaint by substituting the two Governor Generals in place and stead of then defendant the Governor-General of India in Council.

[6] On 19th July 1948, the Khulna Court held that it had no jurisdiction to try the suit and returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. We are not concerned in this application with the correctness or otherwise of the decision of the Khulna Court. No legal proceeding has been taken to challenge its correctness.

[7] On 23rd August 1948, the plaintiff opposite party filed the plaint in the Court of the First Munsif at Sealdah, and amended the cause title of the plaint, by substituting the petitioner the Dominion of India for the Governor General of India, by striking out the name of the Governor. General of Pakistan and by adding the General Manager, East Indian Railway as defendant 2 and the Chief Commercial Manager, of that Railway as defendant 3.

- [8] The plaint was further amended by averments made in the body of it to show how and when the cause of action arose. The amendments were allowed after notice to the defendant.
- [9] The petitioner entered appearance. Various issues were framed. One of them was whether the Sealdab Court had territorial jurisdiction to try the suit. On the prayer of the petitioner, this issue was taken first and decided as a preliminary issue, and the learned Munsif has held that the Court has jurisdiction to try the suit. Against this decision, this application has been made.
- [10] Defendants 2 and 3 do not reside or carry on business or personally work for gain within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Bealdah Court. So far as defendant 1, the Dominion of India is concerned, I think, the same principle applies, which was applicable in suits against the Secretary of State for India in Council. That principle, as stated in Rodricks v. Secy. of State, 40 Cal. 808: (21 I C. 1) is this:

"The Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit brought against the Secretary of State for India in Council, where the cause of action has arisen wholly outside the ordinary original jurisdiction of that Court, on the sole ground that the Secretary of State for India in Council dwelt or carried on business or personally worked for gain within the local limits of that Court."

[11] Therefore, the Sealdah Court could not assume jurisdiction over this suit on the ground of defendants' residence or their carrying on business or their personally working for gain within the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Court.

[12] The question, therefore, is whether the cause of action or any part of it arose within the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Court?

[13] In this case, the cause of action obviously is (1) entrustment of the goods to the Railway Administration and (2) short delivery.

[14] If the plaintiff succeeds in proving these two facts, the Railway Administration or for the matter of that defendant 1, who now represents the Railway Administration would be liable unless it can show circumstances which exempt it from liability.

[15] It is clear, therefore, that no part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Court.

[16] But the learned Munsif has taken the view that a part of the cause of action arose within that jurisdiction by reason of a certain notification of the East Indian Railway Administration published on 27th May 1948. It is headed "Re: Partition of claims against the late Bengal Assam Railway". It says:

"All claims for work done or services rendered to the late Bengal Assam Railway up to 14th August, 1947 and other miscellaneous claims outstanding on that date, should be submitted for registration with the Accounts Department of the East Indian Railway, Calcutta. A separate section to deal with these claims will be formed soon; for the present, public and ex-employees are requested to register their claims as quickly as possible and at the latest within the 1st July 1948, with the Divisional Accounts Officer, East Indian Railway, Sealdah. On receipt of these claims arrangements will be made for their verification with the East Bengal Railway'Administration, where necessary, and payments will be made thereafter."

[18] Relying upon this notification, the learned Munsif has taken the view that the Railway Administration undertook to make the payment to the plaintiff within the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Court. We are unable to take that view. There is nothing in the notification to show that the Railway Administration undertook so to do. All that the notification says is that persons concerned should put in their claims before the Divisional Accounts Officer, East Indian Railway at Sealdah, which, after verification with the proper authorities, would be paid. But it is not said that it would be payable or paid at the Accounts Officer's office at Sealdah or any other place at Sealdah. Therefore, the opinion of the learned Munsif is clearly wrong.

[20] There are two difficulties in the way of the respondent's counsel; first, if the suit be treated as a suit as filed in the Khulna Court the plaint of which was returned and then presented to the Sealdah Court, nothing in the notification can form a part of the cause of action as it was published after the institution of the suit at Khulna. A cause of action must be complete before a suit can be filed. Secondly, if the suit be treated as a new suit filed on 23rd August 1948, no fresh court-fee was paid and there may be the question of limitation. And assuming that we treat it as a new suit filed in the Sealdah Court on that day, it is clear that the filing of the claim by the plaintiff in the office of the Accounts Officer, Sealdah, cannot be a part of the cause of action. The cause of action, as I have said, is entrustment of the goods and short delivery thereof.

[21] The test is this; Suppose the plaintiff does not file the claim before the Officer, or filing the claim he does not allege that in the plaint, can the suit be dismissed? I think not. It is not incumbent on the plaintiff to file the claim before that Officer. That notification has not the force of a statute or any rule or order having the force of a Statute which compels the plaintiff to file the claim in that office and default of which entails dismissal of the suit.

[23] Consequently, we are unable to hold that any part of the cause of action arose within the local limits of the Sealdah Court.

[24] Counsel for the respondent referred us to the case of Peoples Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Benoy Bhusan, 47 C. W. N. 292: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 199). That was a case for the recovery of certain insurance money. The death of the insurance took place at Dacca, where the Insurance Co., had a branch office. It was held that "the cause of action in this case arose within the jurisdiction of the Dacca Court and as the company has a branch office in that place, the suit could be institu-

[25] There cannot be any doubt about this proposition. Explanation 2 of S. 20, puts the matter beyond doubt. That section says that a Corporation shall be deemed to carry on business at its sole or principal office in British India or, in respect of any cause of action arising at any place where it has also a subordinate office, at such place.

office at Dacca and the death of the insured took place at Dacca. Therefore, the suit could be instituted within the jurisdiction of the Dacca Court. —

[27] In this case, the petitioner, Dominion of India, is not a Corporation and secondly no part of the cause of action arose within the local limits of the Sealdah Court. This case, therefore, is of no assistance to the respondent opposite party.

[28] We are, therefore, unable to accept the view taken by the learned Munsif. The order made by him is clearly wrong and it must be set aside.

[29] We make the rule absolute with costs.

[30] In conclusion, we may add that other points were argued by counsel in this case, viz., (1) whether the Khulna Court was right in rejecting the plaint, (2) what is the effect of the order of Khulna Court in the light of sub.r. 8 of R. 4, Indian Independence (Legal Proceedings) Order 1947, whereby in certain circumstances stated in that rule an order made by a Court within Pakistan becomes equivalent to an order made by a competent Court of the Dominion of India and (3) whether the suit is barred by limitation.

[31] We have not considered these matters as they are not necessary to be considered in this application. We do not, therefore, express any view on these points.

[32] The only question that we have decided is that no part of the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Court, and as such, it has no territorial jurisdiction to try the suit.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 151 — Change in presiding officer of Court—Whether succeeding officer will interfere under S. 151 with orders passed by his predecessor depends upon facts of each case—In suitable case such officer is entitled to interfere—Fact of change not to come in his way.

The fact that one officer has ceased to preside over a Court and is succeeded by another gentleman does not mean that the Court has ceased to exist, or that the Court is another Court. It is the Court which, in the exercise of its inherent power, can, and where necessary should, make orders for the ends of justice. Whether a succeeding presiding officer can interfere with an order passed by his predecessor in office or not depends entirely on the circumstances of each case. The case may not be a suitable case for the exercise of powers under S. 151 at all; but if it is a suitable case the fact that there has been a change in the officer presiding over the Court would create no difficulty in his way: A. A person applied on 1st March 1947 under B. 174 (8), Bengal Tenancy Act. The hearing was adjourned to 28th April 1947 for orders awaiting receipt of the record from the appellate Court. But the record on being received was put before the Court on 14th March 1947 in the absence of the parties. The Court passed order directing the applicant to take necessary steps for service of fresh notice upon the opposite party by 19th March 1947. The record was put up on 19th March 1947 and the Court dismissed the case for default as its orders were not complied with by the applicant. Subsequently the applicant applied under S. 151 for setting aside the order of dismissal and the Court allowed the

application:

Held that though an appeal lay under S. 174 (5) against the order dismissing the application under S. 174 (3) and though ordinarily the Court would not interfere under S. 151, Civil P. C., with order against which the party had other redress in law, in the peculiar circumstances of the case the Court was justified in interfering under S. 151. It was really the mistake of the Court itself to take up a case for hearing on a date other than the date it had fixed in the presence of the parties and dismiss the case on the mistaken view that the party had not taken proper steps which he ought to have taken. Hence it was not only right but the duty of the Court to correct its mistake.

Das Gupta J .- This application is direct. ed against an order setting aside under S. 151, Civil P. C., an order of dismissal of an application under S. 174 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[2] It appears that the application for setting aside the sale was put up before the Munsif on 1st March 1947, and on that date, hearing was adjourned to 28th April 1947, "for orders awaiting reciept of the record from the appellate Court." The case was, however, never put up on 28th April because on an earlier date it was dismissed for default. The circumstances under which it was dismissed for default are peculiar. It appears that after the Court had, on 1st March 1947, adjourned the case to 28th April 1947, the records on being received from the High Court were put up before the Munsif on 14th March 1947. On that date, apparently in the absence of either party, the Munsif passed the following orders:

"Applicants are directed to take necessary steps for service of fresh notice upon opposite parties Nos. 4 and 9 by 19-3-47. Put up on that date for further orders.

Inform."

[3] Accordingly, on 19th March 1947, the regord was put up before the Munsif and the following order was passed:

"No further steps taken by the applicants and the Order No. 40 of 14-3-47 has not been complied with. Ordered that the Miscellaneous Case be dismissed for [4] It was in these circumstances that an application under S. 151, Civil P. C., was filed by the applicant praying for restoration of the miscellaneous case, that is to say, the case started on the application under S. 174 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, after vacating the order passed on 19th March 1947.

[5] On 12th June 1948, this application for restoration was allowed by the learned Munsif and as stated above the dismissal order passed on 19th March 1947, was set aside.

[6] In support of the present application, it is argued, in the first place, that an appeal lay under the provisions of S. 174 (5), Bengal Tenancy Act against the order of dismissal for default and consequently the Court acted illegal. ly in the exercise of jurisdiction in allowing the application under S. 151, Civil P. C. Secondly, it is argued that the Munsif, who passed the order of dismissal for default, having ceased to be the presiding officer of the Court, his successor in office was not entitled in law to give any relief under the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. O.

[7] Taking the second point first, we are unable to agree that any such limitation, as suggested by the learned Advocate, can be placed in the way of the Court making orders under S. 151, Civil P. C. What this section lays down is this:

"Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect the inherent power of the Court to make such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice, or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court."

[8] The fact that one officer has ceased to preside over a Court and is succeeded by another gentleman does not mean that the Court has ceased to exist, or that the Court is another Court. It is the Court, which in the exercise of its inherent power, can, and where necessary should, make orders for the ends of justice. There seems no reason why we should limit this power given by the Legislature to the Court by laying down that it is only when the same presiding officer continues that an order already passed can be altered. Reliance was placed by the learned advocate on the decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Bisheshwar Pratap Narain Sahi v. Asarfi Singh, 74 I.C. 110: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Pat. 136). In that case a decree had been passed declaring that the plaintiffs were entitled to, among other things, profits with respect to properties of schedule IV, but subject to the decision of the Privy Council, for three years before suit and for subsequent period until delivery of possession, or three years after the decree whatever event first occurred. The application for execution of the decree having been made before the Judge who actually passed the decree, the learned Judge allowed execution in respect of the properties of schedule IV, also, on an application under S. 144, Civil P. C., having been made by the opposite party, the presiding officer, who was not the Judge who had passed the decree and dealt with the execution application in the first stage, passed an order, purporting to Act under S. 151, Civil P. C., for the restoration of these properties to the opposite party on the ground that in his opinion "possesion over these properties could not be delivered before the decision of the Privy Council."

[9] The learned Judges of the Patna High Court held that this order of the learned Subordinate Judge could not be supported and that S. 151, Civil P. C., gave him no power whatever to recall an order which had been passed by his predecessor in office.

[10] I am unable to agree that this observation is intended to lay down, or does lay down any general proposition that whenever there has been a change in the presiding officer of the Court, the succeeding officer cannot pass any order in exercise of powers under S. 151, Civil P. C. if such orders would have the effect of altering some decision of his predecessor. Quite clearly in the case before the Patna High Court, the succeeding officer was of opinion that his predecessor had made a mistake in law in ordering delivery of possession of certain properties and he thought that under S. 151, Civil P. C. he was competent to pass another order setting aside his predecessor's order in order to correct the mistake of law. In this way, the Subordinate Judge was really sitting in appeal over his predecessor which he in law was certainly not entitled to do. It was in these circumstances, that the Patna High Court in substance, held that by calling his order an order under 8. 151, Civil P. C. the learned Subordinate Judge could not act in a way which really amounted to sitting in appeal over his predecessor.

[11] In our opinion, whether a succeeding presiding officer can interfere with an order passed by his predecessor in office or not depends entirely on the circumstances of each case. The case may not be a suitable case for the exercise of powers under S. 151, Civil P. C. at all; but if it is a suitable case the fact that there has been a change in the officer presiding over the Court would create no difficulty in his way. For, as we have already stated, the Court remains the same Court, though the presiding officer changes.

[12] The other contention pressed by the learned advocate is that when an appeal lay against the dismissal order, the Court acted wrongly in restoring the case under S. 151, Civil P. C. Sub-section (5) of S. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act provides for an appeal against an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale. It has been held more than once by this Court that, an order dismissing an application for setting aside a sale for default amounts to an order refusing to set aside a sale and so an appeal lay. Vide the cases of Debendra Nath v. Gopal Chandra Das, 42 O. W. N. 198, and Haji Mohammad Kazibulla Mondal v. Humayun Reza Choudhury, 42 C. W. N. 619:

(A. I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 454). I respectfully agree with these decisions, and with the learned advocate that an appeal did lie against the order of dismissal passed by the Munsif on 19th March 1947.

[13] It is also correct to say that ordinarily speaking the Court should not interfere under the provisions of S. 151, Civil P. C. with orders against which the parties have other redress in law. Ordinarily, the exercise of inherent jurisdic. tion under S. 151, Civil P. C. should be limited! only to cases where the parties have no other redress in law. The circumstances in this case are, however, very peculiar. Though the order dated 19th March 1947, purports to be an order of dismissal for default, what really happened was that the case was taken up by the Munsif on a date other than the date which had been fixed by him in the presence of the parties for the hearing of the case. It was really the mistake of the Court itself and a very serious mistake to take up a case for hearing on a date other than the date it has fixed in the presence of the parties. This can only be done where the alteration of the date is made with the knowledge and consent of the parties concerned. That was obviously not done in this case. It seems to me that in circumstances of this nature it is not only the right but the duty of the Court to try to correct its own mistake. That mistake consisted in taking up the case for hearing on a date other than the date fixed and dismissing the case on the mistaken view that the parties had not taken steps which they ought to have taken. The only way to correct that mistake was to set aside the order passed under this misapprehension by taking up the case on a wrong date and that was the order which was actually passed, under S. 151, Civil P. C. I think this a proper use of powers under S. 151, Civil P. C.

[14] Even supposing that as an appeal lay against the order of dismissal for default, this was an unorthodox use of the powers under S. 151, Civil P. C. I am of opinion that in the circumstances of this case it would be an improper use of our discretionary juridisction, to interfere with the order passed by the learned Munsil restoring the case.

[15] For all these reasons I would dismiss this application and discharge the rule. Parties will bear their own costs.

The appointment of a Receiver in execution proceedings has been described as a form of equitable relief which is granted on the ground that there is no effective remedy by execution at law. Surely it is an improper use of that equitable remedy to employ it to avoid a very definite bar created by statute law to achieving the very object for which the Receiver is appointed. Hence, where the decree-holder is unable to attach the provident fund money of the judgmentdebtor as he at the time is still in service, the Court should refuse to direct the appointment of a receiver as the only object of such appointment is to avoid the bar created by S. 60 (k) of the Code of Civil Procedure and S. 3(1), Provident Funds Act. Order. — This is a Rule obtained at the in. stance of the Dominion of India representing the East Indian Railway Administration and the Divisional Accounts Officer, E. I. Rly., Asansol, against an order of a Munsif of Burdwan, dated, 25th August 1949, appointing a Receiver in the following terms:

"In view of the circumstances it is considered just and proper that the entire provident fund money of the judgment-debtor lying in the hand of the Divisional Accounts Officer, Asansol, do vest in the Receiver. The Receiver shall deposit the entire sum in Court. The judgment-debtor shall get the balance of the money after deduction of the decretal dues and costs, receiver's fees and incidentals."

[2] The circumstances of course were that the decree-holder was unable to attach the provident fund money in question as the judgment debtor at the time was still in service. Under S. 3 (1), Provident Funds Act No. XIX

"a compulsory deposit in any Government or Rallway Provident Fund shall not in any way be capable of being assigned or charged and shall not be liable to attachment under any decree or order of any Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court in respect of any debt or liability incurred by the subscriber or depositor, and neither the Official Assignee nor any Receiver appointed under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, shall be entitled to, or have any claim on, any such compulsory deposit."

[3] The learned Munsif, however, thought that it was just and proper (following the terms of O. 40, R. 1) that these circumstances should be avoided by the simple device of appointing a Receiver so that instead of the Court sending its own order of attachment to the authorities, the Receiver would write a letter to them to pay the money in question to him and he was then to deposit it in Court. Manifestly it was most unjust and improper in the circumstances in my opinion to appoint a Receiver for that purpose. The appointment of a Receiver in execution proceedings has been described as a form of equitable relief which is granted on the ground that there is no effective remedy by execution at law. Surely it is an improper use of that equiable remedy to employ it to avoid a very definite bar created by statute law to achieving the very object for which the Receiver is appointed.

[4] My attention has been drawn to two cases arising out of the same suit, Baramdeo Pandey v. Mrs. F. Smith, 44 C. W. N. 636 and 637, in which it was held that there was no bar to the appointment of a Receiver in respect of the provident fund money. The money in that case was the provident fund money of a deceased person and was in the funds of the Calcutta Tramways Company Limited. There were special features in the case in that the rules of the fund were not such as to bring in the operation of S. 3 (2) and S. 5 (1), Provident Funds Act. In the latter case reference was made by Mc. Nair J. to the case of Rajindra Narain Singh v. Mt. Sunder Bibi, 30 C. W. N. 818: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 P. C. 176), as an authority for the proposition that a Receiver might be appointed in respect of a right to future maintenance, although attachment of that right was barred under S. 60 (n), Civil P. C. That case has been discussed by Beaumont, C. J., as he then was, in the case of the Secretary of State for India in Council v. Bai Somi, (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Bom. 950), in which he held that even if the decision in question did amount to a decision that there could be jurisdiction to appoint a Receiver in the particular case, this ought not be done in the particular circumstances. He also pointed out, what is sufficiently obvious, that many payments in addition to future maintenance are exempted from attachment under S. 60, Civil P. C. and if these could be reached in execution by the appointment of a Receiver the protection afforded by the section is to a great extent lost.

[5] In my opinion, therefore, in the present case, the trial Court should have refused to direct the appointment of a receiver, as the only object of such appointment was to avoid the bar created by S. 60 (k), Civil P. C., and S. 3 (1), Provident Funds Act, 1925.

[6] The Rule is accordingly made absolute and the order appointing the Receiver is set aside.

[7] The petitioners will have costs of this Rule. Rule made absolute.

Order. — This is a rule against an order of the Additional Court of the Munsif at Sealdah refusing the defendants' prayer that a plaint in an ejectment suit be returned under O. 7, B. 11, Civil P.O. The suit in question was brought in 1945. under the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Control Order, 1943. At the time when it was brought the amendment made by the insertion of cl. 9A, in the order which took effect on 22nd May 1944, was in force; in other words, the permission of the Rent Controller was necessary in respect of a suit filed on the ground mentioned in cl. 9 (1) (c) of the Order which may be briefly referred to as the ground of bona fide requirement by the landlord. The plaint here includes a cause of action on this ground of bona fide requirement and also one on the ground of default in payment of rent.

Ordinance replaced the order and on 1st December 1948 the West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act replaced the Ordinance. The plaintiff had not obtained the permission of the Rent Controller as required under the provisions of cl. 9A of the Order. In fact, he had applied for permission and it had been refused.

[8] The learned Munsif has disposed of the matter by referring to s. 45 (2), Rent Control Act of 1948 holding that as permission is now no longer required in such cases the absence of permission at the time when it was required is immaterial. I have no doubt that the learned Munsif is in error in this view and the reference to S. 45 (2) certainly does not in any way help in arriving at that view. A similar question was considered in the case of Tarini Gupta v. Manmatha Nath. 68 C. W. N. 855: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 674).

That was a case filed under the Ordinance, S. 131 (1) of which, required permission of the Rent Con. troller in the case of a suit for ejectment on the ground of bona fide requirement by the landlord. The suit was pending after the Ordinance was replaced by the Act and it was held that the absence of permission as required under the Ordinance was fatal to the suit. A contrary view appears to have been taken in Hari Mohan Dutt v. C. K. Sen & Co. Ltd., 83 C. L. J. 278. It would appear that in fact the present question really was never in issue there because the suit in question was not based on the ground of bona fide requirement by the landlord. It appears to have been assumed therein however, that in the particular case permission of the Rent Controller was necessary for the suit, when it was filed and it was held that subsequent amendments had rendered this unnecessary. My own view is that the decision in the first mentioned case is clearly correct. I may point out that a similar problem arose, as it was on the obverse side, when cl. 9A was introduced in the Rent Control Order. The question arose then as to what should be the law as regards pending cases when an amendment was being made requiring the sanction of the Rent Controller for the entertainment of certain suits. The problem then was specifically dealt with both as regards pending suits and indeed as regards suits disposed of but still pending in execution. If that specific provision had not been made, there can be no doubt that it would have been held that suits instituted at a time when no permission was necessary would be good and would not be barred by the amendment which would clearly only apply to suits instituted after the amendment came into force. The same principle clearly applies, in my opinion, where the requirement of permission has been removed, the position which we are now considering in the present case.

Munsif for rejecting the application of the defendants cannot be supported, but Mr. Jana rightly contends that as his other cause of action on the ground of default in payment of rent is not in any way hit by the requirement for permission, his suit so far as that cause of action is concerned is good and therefore the plaint ought not to be rejected under 0. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C. The suit will continue on that cause of action. It cannot be entertained on the other cause of action in the absence of the permission of the Rent Controller.

[5] The result is that the present rule must be discharged. There will be no order as to costs.

Though the General Clauses Act does not apply to a temporary statute like the Defence of India Act and though the language of the saving clause in S. 102 (4), Government of India Act is elliptical and less comprehensive than the language of S. 2 of the Defence of India (Second Amendment) Ordinance of 1946, it is wide enough to authorise the continuation of the proceeding for setting aside a consent decree in favour of the landlord for possession started by an application made by the tenant under S. 9B, Calcutta House Rent Control Order before the expiry of the Order. Section 9B remained alive for the purposes of a proceeding commenced under it before the date of its expiry although it was dead for all other purposes. Though the Order was issued by the Governor, the ultimate source of the authority of the Governor to issue the Control Order is S. 102 of the Government of India Act and the effect of the expiry of the Control Order must be determined by reference to the provisions of S. 102. 51 O. Hemanta Kumar Bose -for Petitioner. Panchanon Ghose, Probodh Kumar Shome and Benoy Kumar Ghose -for Opposite Party.

Lahiri J .- This Rule was obtained by the plaintiff landlord in a proceeding under S. 41, Presidency Small Cause Court Act for the recovery of possession of room No. 27 of premises No. 57 Clive Street of which the opposite party was a monthly tenant at a rent of Rs. 75 per month. The facts of the case, which are undisputed, are as follows: the present proceeding was started on 7th March 1945, inter alia, on the ground of default in payment of rent after service of a notice to quit and on 27th July 1945 it was decreed on consent in favour of the landlord. On 29th August 1945, the Calcutta House Rent Control Order was amended by the insertion of para. 9B which inter alia provided by sub-para. (3) that where any decree or order for recovery of possession had been made before 29th August 1945 on the ground of default in payment or deposit of rent but possession had not been recovered, the proceeding for recovery of possession in execution of the decree or order shall be stayed till 29th September 1945 and if during that period the tenant made an application for setting aside the decree or order and deposited all arrears of rent and costs within such period as might be allowed by the Court, the Court which made the decree shall set it aside. On 1st October 1945 the opposite party applied for relief under Para, 9B as it then stood and it was allowed by the Presidency Small Cause Court Judge; but on revision this Court set aside the order of the Small Cause Court Judge on 10th June 1946 on the ground that Para. 9B (3) as it then stood did not apply to consent decrees.

[2] On 15th June 1946, Para. 9B was further amended by making it expressly applicable to consent decrees and orders and the time granted for filing an application for setting aside a consent decree or order was one calendar month expiring on 15th July 1946. On 12th July 1946 the opposite party filed a second application under the amended para. 9B for getting the reliefs contemplated by that paragraph and before this application was finally decided the Calcutta House Rent Control Order expired on 30th September 1946 and was replaced by the Calcutta Rent Ordinance (Bengal Ordinance No. ∇ [5] of 1946) which came into operation on 1st October 1946. In spite of that, the learned Small Cause of Court Judge proceeded to decide the application and set aside the consent decree on 6th December 1946 in exercise of powers conferred by Para. 9B (3), Calcutta House Rent Control Order.

[3] The principal question that has arisen in this case therefore is whether in spite of the expiry of the Calcutta House Rent Control Order the Small Cause Court Judge had juris. diction to continue the proceeding under Para. 9B (3) started by the application dated 12th

July 1946. [4] Mr. Bose appearing for the petitioner has argued that after the expiry of the Calcutta House Rent Control Order there was no provision in law under which the proceeding could be continued; because Para. 9 B (3) of the Control Order was not reproduced or re-enacted by the Calcutta Rent Ordinance. Mr. Bose has argued that S. 26 of the Rent Ordinance keeps alive only those proceedings under the Control Order for which there is a counter part in the Ordinance and as there is no provision in the Rent Ordinance corresponding to Para. 9B (3) of the Control Order the proceeding under that paragraph cannot be continued under the Ordinance. This argument is of great force. The nearest approach in the Rent Ordinance to the provisions of Para. 9B (3) of the Control Order is to be found in S. 17; but that section does not reproduce all the provisions of Para. 9B; for example, it does not give the tenant an option to have the decree for ejectment set aside as a matter of right, on payment of arrears of rent and costs. In the case of Manindra Nath

Banerjee v. A. K. Fazlul Huq, 51 C. W. N. 148 Khundkar J. took the view that an application under Para. 9B filed on 15th July 1946 could be continued, if at all, only under S. 17 of the Rent Ordinance and as the provisions of S. 17 (unlike the provisions of Para. 9B of the Control Order) were not mandatory the tenant had no right to have the decree set aside as a matter of right. With regard to the effect of the expiration of a temporary statute Mr. Bose has relied upon Craies on Statute Law (4th Edn.) P. 347 where the learned author states as follows:

"Unless it contains some special provision to the contrary, after a temporary statute has expired no proceedings can be taken upon it and it ceases to have any further effect. Therefore offences committed against temporary Acts must be prosecuted and punished before the Act expires and as soon as the Act expires any proceedings which are being taken against a person will ipso facto terminate."

Similar observations are also to be found in Halsbury's Laws of England (2nd Edn.) vol. 31 Art. 666 where the following passage appears:

"After the expiration of a Statute, in the absence of provision to the contrary, no proceedings can be taken on it and proceedings already commenced ipso facto determine."

The argument of the petitioner is that the Calcutta House Rent Control Order having the force of a temporary Statute the proceeding under Para. 9B initiated by the application filed on 12th July 1946 ipso facto terminated on 30th September 1946 on which date the statute expired.

[5] If the present case were to be decided by reference to the provisions of the Calcutta House Rent Control Order and the Rent Ordinance only we would be bound to give effect to the contention of the petitioner. Mr. Ghose appearing for the opposite party has however relied upon S. 102 (4), Government of India Act and also upon the language of S. 2, Defence of India (Second Amendment) Ordinance (Ordinance XII [12] of 1946) which came into effect on 30th March 1946. Section 2 of Ordinance XII [12] of 1946 inter alia provides that the expiry of the Defence of India Act shall not affect any right, privilege, obligation or liability acquired, accrued or incurred under the Defence of India Act or any rule made thereunder or any order made under such rule or any investigation or legal proceeding or remedy in respect of any such right, privilege, obligation, liability, penalty, forfeiture or punishment as aforesaid.

[6] The Calcutta House Rent Control Order was passed by the Governor of Bengal under R. 81 (2) (bb), Defence of India Rules which again were framed under S. 2, Defence of India Act. The Defence of India Act itself was enacted under S. 102, Government of India Act under which the Central Legislature was given power to legislate on provincial subjects after a Proclamation of Emergency had been made. By sub-s. (4) of S. 102 as amended by S. 5, India (Central Government and Legislative) Act, 1946 (9 and 10 Geo. VI Ch. 89), it was provided that an emergency legislation on a provincial subject by the Central Legislature shall to the extent of the incompetency cease to have effect on the expiration of six months after the Proclamation of Emergency has ceased to operate, "except as respects things done or omitted to be done before the expiration of the said period." If we are to read the Calcutta House Rent Control Order as a part of the Defence of India Act, as we must, we are bound to hold that on 30th September 1946 the Calcutta House Rent Control Order ceased to have effect except as respects things done or omitted to be done before the said date.

[7] The ultimate question that we have to decide in the present case, therefore is whether the application filed by the opposite party on 12th July 1946 for the reliefs contemplated by Para. 9B (3), Calcutta House Rent Control Order come under the saving clause of S. 102 (4), Government of India Act. The effect of a saving clause like the present one upon expiring statutes has been considered in several cases two of which deserve special mention.

[8] In Wicks v. Director of Public Prosecutions, (1947) A. C. 862: (1947-1 ALL E. R. 205) the House of Lords had to consider the effect of a saving clause the language of which very nearly corresponds to the language of S. 102 (4). Section 11 (3), English Statute named the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, 1939, runs as follows:

"The expiry of this Act shall not affect the operation thereof as respects things previously done or omitted to be done."

The parent Act expired on 24th February 1946 and the defendant Wicks was arrested in March, 1946 for acting in contravention of a Regulation framed under the Act on various dates between April 1948 and January 1944. On 27th May 1946. the defendant was found guilty and sentenced to four years' penal servitude. The validity of the prosecution was challenged on the ground that it took place after the expiry of the parent Act and the Regulation; but the challenge was held to be untenable on the ground that the presence of sub-s. (8) preserved the right to prosecute after the date of the expiry. It was pointed by Viscount Simon in his speech that though S. 88, Interpretation Act (1889) does not apply to a statute which expires by effluxion of time, S. 11 (3), Emergency Powers (Defence) Act has the same effect. In the judgment of Lord Goddard which was affirmed by the House of Lords and which is reported in (1946) 62 T. L. R. 674: (1946) A. E. R. 529 there is good deal of discussion on the language of S. 11 (3) and it was pointed out though the language of that sub-section is somewhat elliptical and less comprehensive than the language of S. 38, Interpretation Act it was wide enough to allow the expiring Act to operate in respect of a thing done or omitted to be done before the expiry. In J. K. Gas Plant Manufacturing Co. v. Emperor, 52 C. W. N. (F. C. R.) 25: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 F. C. 38) the Federal Court of India had to consider the effect of the saving clause in S. 102 (4), Government of India Act in considering the question of the validity of a prosecution for the violation of the Indian Iron and Steel (Control of Production and Distribution) Order, 1941, after the expiry of the Defence of India Act. Spens C. J., held that though the Defence of India Act expired on 30th September 1946 the saving clause in S. 102 (4), Government of India Act authorised a continuation of the prosecution. It was also pointed out that the general rule to the effect that after a temporary statute has expired no proceeding can be taken upon it is modified by the express insertion of the saving clause in S. 102 (4) and reliance was placed upon the observations of Viscount Simon in Wick's case: (1947 A. C. 362: 1947-1 ALL E. B. 205).

[9] Applying the above principles to the circumstances of the present case, we have come to the conclusion that though the provisions of the General Clauses Act (which corresponds to the English Interpretation Act, 1889) do not apply to a temporary Statute like the Defence of India Act and though the language of the saving clause in S. 102 (4), Government of India Act is elliptical and less comprehensive than the language of S. 2 of Ordinance XII [12] of 1946, it is wide enough to authorise the continuation of the proceeding for setting aside the consent decree which was started by the application filed by the opposite party on 12th July 1946 before the expiry of the Calcutta House Rent Control Order. Mr. Bose has argued that the provisions of the Government of India Act cannot be invoked for considering the effect of the expiry of the Control Order which was issued by the Governor of the Province. Both upon principle and upon the authority of the judgment of the Federal Court referred to above we cannot accept this argument. The ultimate source of the authority of the Governor to issue the Control Order is S. 102, Government of India Act and the effect of the expiry of the Control Order must be determined by reference to the provisions of S. 102.

disposal of the Rule; but we have to place it on record that Mr. Bose for the petitioner objected to the application of Ordinance XII [12] of 1946 to the facts of the case on the ground that the Ordinance ceased to have effect on a provincial subject after 30th September 1946 under the provisions of S. 102 (4) as amended by S. 5, India (Central Government and Legislative) Act of 1946 (9 and 10 Geo. VI ch. 39). Mr. Ghose on the other hand contended for the opposite party that the promulgation of the Ordinance being a "thing done" within the meaning of the saving provision in S. 102 (4) the Ordinance is alive even with regard to 'Provincial Subjects.' In view of our decision as to the scope and effect of the saving provision in S. 102, Constitution Act it is not necessary for us to decide this question.

[11] With regard to the decision of Khundkar J., in the case of Manindra Nath Banerjee v. A. K. Fazlul Hug, reported in 51 C. W. N. 148, it is to be noticed that it consists of two parts. The first part decides that after the expiry of the Control Order on 30th September 1946 a proceeding under para. 9B of the Control Order could be continued only under S. 17 of the Rent Ordinance (V [5] of 1946) and the second part decides that the relief under S. 17 of the Ordinance is discretionary and not mandatory. From what we have stated above as to the scope and effect of S. 102 (4), Constitution Act as interpreted by the Federal Court in the case of J. K. Gas Plant Manufacturing Co. v. Emperor, 52 C. W. N. (F. C. R.) 25 : (A. I. R. (34) 1947 F. C. 38), it will appear that Para. 9B of the Control Order remains alive for the purposes of a proceeding commenced under it before the date of expiry although it is dead for all other purposes. We therefore respectfully differ from the first part of the decision of Khundkar J., in the aforesaid case and express no opinion on the second part.

[12] The result of our decision is that in spite of the expiry of the Control Order on 30th September 1946 the Small Cause Court Judge had jurisdiction to decide the application filed by the opposite party on 12th July 1946 and that Para. 9B of the Control Ordinance remained alive for the purposes of this proceeding.

[13] As all the points raised by the petitioner fail the Rule must be discharged; with regard to costs it appears that the case was kept pending in this Court for an unnecessarily long period at the instance of the opposite party. There will therefore be no order as to costs.

[14] Certificate is granted under S. 205, Government of India Act as this case involves the question of construction of S. 102 of the said Act.

(a) Calcutta High Court Rules (Original Side), Chaps. 8 and 9—"Enter appearance" — Party not entering appearance—Consequences of — Right to appear at hearing.

There is nothing under the Rules on the Original Side which can be said to prevent the party from appearing when a suit is called on for hearing even though he has not "entered appearance." The words "enter appearance" are technical words used in the Rules and must not be given any meaning save that the Rules attribute. There are two consequences of not entering appearance under the Rules. One is that the suit is liable to be heard ex parte and the other is that no written statement can be filed. Therefore, a party subject to these handicaps imposed by the Rules can still appear under the Civil Procedure Code when the suit is called on for hearing from the undefended list, not only to cross-examine the witnesses of the plaintiff and demolish in such manner the plaintiff's case on evidence that the Court will not pass any decree in the plaintiff's favour but also to make such arguments and submissions on law and on such evidence as the plaintiff may have brought to the Court. These are valuable rights under the Code which are not taken away by Rules of the Original Side.

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 163—Applicability to Original Side of High Court.

Article 163 is not confined only to applications made under Civil Procedure Code. The language of the Article is such that it covers any application by the plaintiff for an order to set aside any dismissal for default of appearance and there is nothing in the Limitation Act either to exclude from its operation, or to give special privilege to, an application on the Original Side by the plaintiff to set aside a dismissal for default.

Where the order of dismissal has not only been drawn up, completed and filed but is also signed, a Judge sitting in the Original Side cannot recall or vary any order that he may have passed before such order is drawn up or completed or signed and filed.

(d) Civil P.C. (1908), S. 151—Principle of section.

Section 151 does not formulate any new doctrine but is only a legislative recognition of the well-known principle that every Court has inherent power to act ex debito justific and to do that real justice for the administration of which alone it exists. [Para 29]

(i) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 9, Rr. 8 and 9—Applicability to Original Side of High Court.

Order 9, R. 8 and O. 9, R. 9 are applicable to the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court. The words

'appear' in O. 9, R. 8 and "his non-appearance" in O. 9, R. 9 are not such as would indicate that these rules in terms do not apply to the Original Side. The words must be read and construed so as to mean and include not merely appearance by the party himself but also appearance through recognised agents and solicitors on the Original Side who hold power of attorney. These words should be read and interpreted in accordance with the meaning of the word "appearance" as provided by R. 1 and R. 2 of O. 3 of the Code.

When an application is made by the plaintiff under the provisions of O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C., after the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed under Art. 163, Limitation Act, the Court is not entitled to extend the period of limitation by taking into consideration circumstances which appear to operate harshly against the plaintiff. P. P. Ghosh -for Applicant. S. Sinha-for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is an application made by a notice of motion. The notice of motion is taken out by the attorney for the plaintiff and is dated 19th August 1949. By special leave the notice of motion was made returnable for 22nd August 1949. The notice of motion asks for the following reliefs:

"1. Order setting aside the order of dismissal dated 5th May 1949.

2. Restoration of the suit for hearing.

3. If necessary, extension of time for making this application."

[2] On the day when special leave was asked from the Court to make the notice of motion returnable on 22nd August 1949 the application was not noted as made on that date when the application came on the list on 22nd August 1949 the plaintiff did not have the application noted as made even on that date. On 22nd August 1949 directions were obtained from this Court for filing affidavits. Time was taken to file affidavit in opposition by Tuesday week i. e., 80th August 1949 and to file affidavit in reply by the following Monday, i. e., 5th September 1949 and the application remained adjourned for hearing till 6th September 1919 when adjournment was asked for and granted till the following Tuesday i. e. 18th September 1949. Even on 6th September when the motion was on the list the applicant did not have the motion noted as made on that date. When the motion appeared on the list on 13th September, it was again adjourned at the instance of the parties till the following Friday, 16th September 1949. The application was heard on 16th September 1949. I have stated in detail the career of this motion because an important point of limitation has been raised in defence to to this application.

may be stated briefly.

[4] This is a liquidated claim and the suit was instituted by the plaintiff on 1st December 1946. Plaintiff claimed in the suit the recovery of the sum of Rs. 2,570-1-6 alleged to be due on a batchita. The batchita was executed by the father of defendant 1 Kartick Chandra Nayak Saha as early as 9th January 1938. The drawer of the promissory note died in June 1946. The plaintiff filed the suit against the widow and the other minor sons of the deceased drawer. The suit appeared in the prospective list from 11th March 1948 and continued in the Prosective List for over a year till 30th April 1949. Under Chap. 10, R. 7 of the Original Side Rules of this Court a suit is placed on the prospective list when it is ready to be heard, which, in my opinion, means when inspection, discovery and translation of documents have all been completed.

[5] On 4th May 1949, the suit appeared in the warning list of liquidated claims of Sinha J. On 5th May 1949, the suit appeared in my daily list of liquidated claims for disposal. It was called on twice. On the first call no one appeared for the plaintiff when it was passed over. On the second call also, nobody appeared for the plaintiff. On both these occasions defendant 1 and his counsel were present. On the second call when no one appeared Mr. S. Sinba learned advocate for defendant 1 asked for the dismissal of the suit. The suit was accordingly dismissed and I consider the provision of o. 9, R. 8, Civil

P. C., to be mandatory.

[6] On behalf of the plaintiff, this application is now made to set aside that order of dismissal which was made on 5th May 1949. In support of the notice of motion the only ground used is an affidavit of one Kanai Lal Chatterjee affirmed on 19th August 1949. The said Kanailal Chatter. jee is a court clerk of the attorney for the plaintiff. The case made in his said affidavit may be summarised as follows:

(i) He did not know that the suit had been dismissed for default on 5th May 1949. The Court closed for the summer holidays after 14th May 1949 and re-opened on 15th June 1949.

(ii) Between 4th May 1949 when he saw the suit appearing on the warning list of Sinha J. and until 14th May 1949 when the Court closed for the summer holidays apparently no interest was taken in this suit. It is stated in para, 6 of the said affidavit the suit did not appear on the warning list or the prospective list of Sinha J.

(iii) After the Court reopened on 15th June 1949, he thought that the omission of the suit from the list was due to some reason or other and that the same would reappear on the warning list in due course and it is stated in paras. 7 and 9 of his affidavit that he was under the "impression" that the suit went out of the list through mistake or inadvertence. No reason or cause is given as to why he should have that impossible "impression".

(iv) That after the Court reopened on 15th June 1949 he gave requisition to the Registrar for translation of three vernacular documents which the plaintiff had disclosed in his affidavit of documents,

(v) On 8th August 1949, the plaintiffs' younger brother Babu Ballav Dutt called at the office of the attorney for the plaintiff and made enquiries as to when the suit was expected to be heard, although there is no supporting affidavit from Dutt. Thereafter be went to make enquiries at the court-office to put the sait in the warning list when he came to learn from the department of this Court that the suit had been dismissed for default on 5th May 1949. This enquiry according to para. 11 of his affidavit was made on 11th August 1919 so that the knowledge of the dismissal of the suit on 5th May 1949 was gathered on 11th August 1949.

(vi) It is said in para. 13 of his affidavit that although the names of the parties and the cause title in the suit were correctly set out the registered number of the suit and the respective names of the solicitors were not correctly set out in the daily list of 5th May 1949.

(vii) The notice of motion was taken out as I have said before on 19th August 1949.

[7] Mr. S. Sinha, learned advocate appearing for the respondent, has urged before me that the application is out of time and barred by Art. 163, Limitation Act, and should therefore be dismissed. His argument is that the dismissal of the suit for default of the plaintiffs' appearance made on 5th May 1949, was under O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C., when a suit is so dismissed under O. 9 R. 8 the Code provides by specific provision how the suit is to be restored. That provision is contained in O. 9, R. 9 of the Code which gives the plaintiff the right to apply for an order to set the dismissal aside on sufficient cause being shown for his non-appearance. According to Mr. Sinha this application is and must be treated under O. 9, R. 9 of the Code and Art. 163, Limitation Act provides that such an application should be made within 30 days from the date of dismissal. Unlike Art. 164, Limitation Act, Art. 163, Limitation Act, in my opinion, makes it clear that the starting point of limitation is the date of dismissal and not the date when the applicant has knowledge of the dismissal. The dismissal having taken place on 5th May 1949 and the notice of motion being dated 19th August 1919 the applicant is clearly out of time.

[8] Mr. Sinha's further argument is that even assuming that time runs from the date of knowledge of the dismissal which is stated in the affidavit to be 11th August 1949 this application not having been actually "moved" before 16th September 1949 and it not having been "noted" as made on any date within 80 days from 11th August 1949, is in any event barred by limitation.

[9] Mr. P. P. Ghose, learned counsel for the applicant, has submitted before me that Rr. 8 and 9 of 0.9, Civil P. C., are not applicable to the original side of this Court. He has relied on the well known decision of the Court of appeal of this Court S. N. Banerjee v. S. Surhawardy, reported in 32 C. W. N. 10 : 55 Cal. 473 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 772), where learned Chief Justice Rankin holds that O. 9, R. 13, Civil P. C., is couched in a language which indicates that a practice different from that which obtains from the original side of the High Court was in the contemplation of O. 9, R. 13. Although this case does not turn on the interpretation of O. 9, R. 13, Mr. Ghose has argued on a parity of reasoning that for the same reasons I should hold R. 8 and R. 9 of O. 9 of the Code are not applicable to the original side.

[10] His next submission is that it is open to me to treat this application for restoration as within the inherent jurisdiction of this Court and such application should be treated as one under S. 151 of the Code. In that event Mr. Ghose argues that Art. 163, Limitation Act. does not apply.

[12] The decision in S. N. Bannerjee v. H. S. Suhrawardy, 82 C. W. N. 10 : 55 Cal. 478 : (A. I. B. (15) 1928 Cal. 772), being a decision of the Court of Appeal is binding on me on the point it decides. But unfortunately for the applicant, that is not a decision on O. 9, R. 8 or R. 9 and it does not deal with or decide the question of Art. 168, Limitation Act. This decision is therefore distinguishable from the present case. The Court of appeal in that case was concerned with 0. 9, R. 18 and with an application by the defendant and not by the plaintiff. The question therefore before me in the present application is not concluded by the decision of the Court of appeal. Although at the bar attention was drawn to O. 49, R. 3 of the Code S. N. Banerjee V. H. S. Suhrawardy, 32 O. W. N. 10 at p. 13 and 65 Cal. 473 at p. 475 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 772), it is unfortunate that the decision of the Court of appeal contains no discussion as to how that point is met in the judgment. The judgment of the Court of appeal as reported in the authorised report does not state the reason why inspite of O. 49, R. 3 of the Code it was held that O. 9, R. 13 of the Code did not apply to the original side.

[13] It has been observed in that judgment that O. 9, R. 13 "is directed in terms to a different practice from that which obtains on the original side of the High Court because of the words "appearing when the suit was called for hearing" in O 9, R. 13. But there again it appears from the judgment that the provisions of Rr. 1 and 2 of O. 3, Civil P. C., which provide for appearance under the Code through agents and solicitors holding power of attorney escaped

[14] This judgment proceeds to deal with the difference between the mode of appearance in the Districts (moffusil) and the original side of this Court and the decision there arrived at that O. 9 R. 13 of the Code does not in terms apply to the original side appears to have been reached inter alia on account of that difference. It is necessary however to observe that in the case before the Appeal Cour no appearance was entered unlike the present case before me where not only appearance has been entered but also written statement has been filed. On that ground also, this present case is distinguishable and therefore it would still remain to be decided in future whether in such a case the terms of O. 9 R. 13 of the Code would apply to the original side.

[15] At the same time, I find nothing under the Rules on the original side which can be said to prevent the party from appearing when a suit is called on for hearing even though he has not "entered appearance". The words "enter appearance" are technical words used in the Rules of the original side of this Court. They must not be given any meaning save that thel Rules attribute. And what are the Rules? They are contained in Chaps. VIII and IX of the Original Side Rules of this Court. Forms 4 and 5 under chap. 8 of the Rules give the standard forms in which an "appearance is entered" which run as follows: "To

The Registrar,

Please enter an appearance for the defendant (or me) to the plaint in the above suit.

Signature of the Attorney or of the defendant in person."

They materially follow and imitate the forms and procedure under O. 12 of the Rules of the Supreme Court of London. Chapter 8 R. 6 of our Rules provides that if such appearance is not entered "the suit is liable to be heard ex parte", while Ch. 9 R. 2 of our Rules provides that no written statement will be allowed to be filed if no appearance has been entered. Thus then there are two consequences of not entering appearance under the Rules. One is that the suit is liable to be heard ex parte and the other is that no written statement can be filed. In that context, I am not inclined to impose more punishment than those two so explicitly stated by the Rules. Therefore I am of the opinion that a party subject to these handicaps imposed by the Rules can still appear under the Civil Procedure Code when the suit is called on for bearing from the undefended list, not only to cross-examine the witnesses of the plaintiff and demolish in such manner the plaintiff's case on evidence that the Court will not pass any decree in the plaintiff's favour but also to make such arguments and submissions on law and on such evidence as the plaintiff may have brought to the Court. These are, in my opinion, valuable rights under the Code which are not taken away by any Rules of the original side. If that be so I fail to see why in such a case the terms of O. 9 Rr. 8 and 9 of the Code cannot be made applicable to the original side of this Court notwithstanding the technicalities of "entering appearance" as introduced by the Rules of the original side practice. It may be that when because of the default in "entering appearance" the suit is liable to be heard ex parte, the defendant may not know or have notice when the suit is going to be heard. But that is immaterial and that is a risk to which such a defendant makes himself open by such default. But should he by any means whatever know that the suit is being heard from the undefended list he can nevertheless appear at such hearing and exercise the rights I have mentioned. Rankin C. J. in the Court of appeal sees the possibility of cross-examination in such a case by the defendant of plaintiff's witnesses. The learned Chief Justice observes as follows at p. 477 of that Report:

"If he does not enter appearance within the time limited the case will go into what is called the undefended list and when the case is on the undefended list it is not possible for the defendant without obtaining leave to enter appearance. He has a limited right to cross-examine witnesses adduced on behalf of the plaintiff of he appears at the time when the undefended case is down for hearing, but his position is that of a man who for not entering appearance in time is precluded from defending the suit whether he appears at the hearing or does not appear at the hearing."

[16] I have not been able to pursuade myself to take the view that a suit can only be defended by filing a written statement or by "entering appearance" under the Rules. In my opinion filing of written statement is not the only way of defending a suit. A defendant in my judgment may ably and successfully defend a suit against him by cross-examination and arguments. The confusion that should be avoided in this context is that the expression "entering of appearance" under the original side Rules is not co-extensive in its signification and import with the word "appears" or "appearance" of o. 9, Civil P. C. Rules of the original side do not say that a defendant who has not "entered appearance" cannot in any way "defend" the suit. They punish default of entering appearance only in two ways that I have mentioned, and in no other.

[17] This judgment in S. N. Banerjee v. H. S. Suhrawardy, 32 C. W. N. 10: 55 cal. 473: A. I. R. (15) 1928 cal. 772), not only binds me but has acquired all the veneration of a stare decisis and has been regarded and followed as a well-known authority on the original side of this Court. It may perhaps be necessary in future for a Full Bench of this High Court to reconsider the grounds and limits of this decision. I will only be content here to say as I have said before that this decision does not conclude the point that has been raised before me, and is distinguishable from the present case in the manner I have already indicated.

(18] Reliance has been placed by Mr. Ghosh on three other decisions. The first decision is Lalta Prasad v. Ramkaran, 34 ALL. 426: (14 I. C. 187), where the Court held that notwithstanding the provision contained in O. 9 R. 9 of the Code it has inherent powers of passing orders necessary for the ends of justice. At page 428 of that Report the following observation appears:

"Nothing in the Code of Civil Procedure can limit or otherwise affect such power under which in our opinion a Court can restore such a case as this on grounds other than sufficient cause for non-appearance. Order 9 R. 9 makes it compulsory on a Court to set aside a dismissal under O. 9 R. 8 where the plaintiff satisfies the Court that there was sufficient cause for non-appearance. It however cannot take away the Court's power to restore the case for any other valid reason."

This case however was not concerned with the question of limitation. Morover I find it difficult to imagine a case where the Court finds that there is no "sufficient cause" for non-appearance and yet can hold that there is a "valid reason" for such non-appearance under its inherent jurisdiction. A Division Bench of the appellate side of this High Court presided over by Sir Ashutosh Mukherjee J. sitting with Beachcroft J. in Charu Chandra v. Chandi Charan, 19 C. W. N. 25: (A. I. B. (2) 1915 Cal. 539), did not follow this Allahabad decision and made the following observations at p. 27 of that Report:

"Reliance however has been placed upon the cases of Somayya v. Subamma, 26 Mad. 599 and Lalta Prasad v. Ramkaran, 34 All. 426: (14 I. C. 187), in which an attempt was made to draw a distinction between "sufficient cause" and "valid reason" for non-appearance. We are not impressed by the distinction suggested."

I am in respectful agreement with the views expressed by the Division Bench of the appellate side of this High Court and I respectfully dissent from the Allahabad decision.

[12] The second decision is Bilasrai Laxminarayan v. Cursondas Damodardas, 44 Bom. 82: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Bom. 837). Sir Norman McLeod C. J. delivering judgment relied on the observation in the Allahabad decision and exercised the inherent jurisdiction of the Court for ends of justice independently of the fact whether under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C. there was or was not sufficient cause for such restoration.

[13] The third decision is to the same effect and reported in Saw Mg. v. Ma Bwin Byu, 4 Rang. 18: (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Rang. 109).

[14] Neither the Bombay nor the Rangoon decision is an authority on the point of limitation and no question of limitation arose for decision in any one of those cases, and both these cases are based on the Allahabad decision which I am not able to follow for reasons I have given above.

[15] I propose to refer to certain decisions of of this Court which in my opinion are binding on me and which I regard as authorities dealing with the point that is raised on this application. In Biswanath v. Gostabehari, 44 C. W. 576 Panckridge J., one of the most experienced Judges on the original side of this Court, made the following observations at p. 577:

"If the suit was dismissed under the circumstances contemplated by O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C., the plaintiff was entitled as of right to apply to have this dismissal set aside under O. 9, R. 9 and the Court was bound to set aside, if satisfied, that there was sufficient cause for plaintiff's non-appearance. On the other hand, if the circumstances in which the suit was dismissed did not fall within the purview of R. 8 the only remedy would

[16] This decision implies that there is no inherent jurisdiction of this Court to restore the suit which has been dismissed and which dismissal does not come within the purview of O. 9, R. 8 and appeal is the only remedy according to Panckridge J. It is needless for me to say that the learned Judge was dealing with an application on the original side of this Court.

of appeal from the original side of this Court and is the case of Surendra Nath v. Hrishi. kesh, 46 C. W. N. 280 there it was held that an application to have an ex parte decree passed on the original side of the High Court set aside is covered by Art. 164, Limitation Act and must be made within 30 days from the date of the decree or the date of the applicant's knowledge. An application to set aside an ex parte decree is provided in O. 9, R. 13 of the Code, If according to the decision of the Court of appeal in S. N. Banerjee v. H. S. Suhrawardy, (32 C. W. N. 10: 55 Cal. 473; A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 772) such an application on the original side cannot be made under o. 9, R. 13 and is only made under the inherent jurisdiction of this Court under 8. 151 of the Code then the decision of the Court of appeal in S. N. Roy v. Hrishikesh Saha, (46 C. W. N. 260) can only be reconciled by saying that even an application under the inherent jurisdiction of the Court to set aside an ex parte decree of the original side is also governed by Art. 164, Limitation Act. Derbyshire C. J. in delivering judgment in S. N. Roy v. Hrishikesh Saha, in 46 C. W. N. 280 and 281 says as follows:

"I see no reason why the matter should not be governed by Art. 164, Limitation Act which provides that an application for an order to set aside a decree passed ex parte should be made not later than 30 days from the date of the decree or where the summons were not duly served when the applicant had knowledge of the decree.

"It has been suggested that this Court is not bound by the provision of the Art. 164, Limitation Act. I would say with regard to that contention that if it were correct then there is every reason why the Court if it is indeed free to decide after what period it may set aside ex parte decree should be guided by the provision of Art. 164. It would be unfortunate if the length of time which would be a bar to an application of this kind would be different from one side of the circular road from the other."

[18] While delivering this judgment Derbyshire C. J. referred to and passed by the decision of Rankin C. J. in the case of S. N. Banerjee v. H. S. Suhrawardy, (32 C. W. N. 10: 55 Cal. 473: A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 772) without any comment. The case of S. N. Banerjee v. H. S. Suhrawardy, (32 C. W. N. 10: 55 Cal. 473: A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 772) was concerned with an application by the defendant and not by the plaintiff but does deal with the question of limitation.

[19] There is, however, another pronouncement of the Court of appeal where a suit on the original side of the High Court was dismissed for default and on an application being made to set aside such dismissal it was held that such application must be moved within the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 163, Limitation Act. That is the well-known decision of Srichand Daga v. Schanlal Daga, I. L. R. (1943) 2 Cal. 227: 47 C. W. N. 450: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 257). From the arguments in that case it will appear at p. 230 of the report that the learned Advocate-General distinguished the decision of the Court of appeal in S. N. Bancrice

v. H. S. Suhrawardy, (32 C. W. N. 10: 55 Cal. 473: A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 772) by stating that that decision did not deal with the question of limitation but was only considering the grounds on which ex parte decree could be set aside. At p. 240 of the report Derbyshire C. J. comes to the following conclusion:

"Therefore Art. 163, Limitation Act is part of the general law of land and in my view it applies on the original side of this Court. Article 163 is framed to meet all cases where steps are to be taken to aside dismissal of suits for default."

[20] This decision is binding on me. It is also a decision on O. 9, R. 9 and on O. 9, R. 8 of the Code and on Art. 163. Limitation Act. The same argument was made there as will appear from the report of the argument at pp. 229-30. The argument was this :

"Thirdly this is not an application under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C. The High Court in its original side can vacate any order before it is drawn up and it is an application to the High Court in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction to restore the suit by vacating the original order. See S. N. Banerjee v. H. S. Suhrawardy, 55 Cal 473: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal 772); Padmabati Dassi v. Rasiklal Dhar, 37 Cal. 259: (6 I. C. 666) and Sarupchand Hukumchand v. Madhoram, 28 C. W. N. 755: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 83) which follows the English authority like ex parte Brown, In re Suffield & Watt, (1888) 36 W. R. (Eng.) 303: (29 Q. B. D. 693). There is no time limit to such an application and the Limitation Act does not apply."

[21] That argument did not find favour with the Court of appeal and was overruled. The argument that is made before me is on the same lines and I feel I am bound by the decision of the Court of appeal in Srichand Daga v. Schanlal Daga reported in 1943 (2) cal. 227:

(A. I. R. (30) 1943 cal. 257) and I am bound to hold that such argument cannot prevail.

[22] The language of Art. 163, Limitation Act is in my opinion such that it covers any application by the plaintiff for an order to set aside any dismissal for default of appearance and I find nothing in the Limitation Act either to exclude from its operation, or to give special privilege to, an application on the original side by the plaintiff to set aside a dismissal for default. I find nothing in the language of the Limitation Act on which to hold that the limit tation of 30 days from the date of dismissal which is provided for in Art. 163, Limitation Act does not apply to an application by the plaintiff on the original side of this Court to set aside a dismissal for default of appearance. That in my view is the proper interpretation and construction of Art. 163, Limitation Act.

[23] In my judgment Art. 163, Limitation Act is not confined only to applications made under Civil Procedure Code. Article 163, Limitation Act occurs in the 3rd Division of Sch. 1, Limitation Act. The 3rd Division begins with Art. 158 and ends with Art. 183. Wherever applications under the Civil Procedure Code are intended under the 3rd Division the Legislature has said so expressly as for instance Arts. 159, 165, 166, 171, 172, 174, 176, 177, 178, 179, 181, 182. The 3rd Division refers to many miscellaneous applications not all of which are under Civil Procedure Code as all, e.g.. Art. 158 as now amended which provides for application under the Arbitration Act 1940 and Art. 161.

[24] The facts in this case are clear enough. It is clear beyond doubt that from 15th June 1949 until 19th August 1949 although the plaintiff knew that the suit was not on the list neither he nor his attorney took any steps to find out where it was and whether it has been disposed of. If any enquiry had been made then it could have been found out on 15th June 1949 when the Court reopened that the suit had already been dismissed for default. The affidavit of the attorney's court-clerk that he was under the "impression" that the suit had been omitted from the list through mistake or inadvertence is groundless and he had no reason to cherish that impression. Although the suit had appeared in the warning list the plaintiff had taken no steps to make the suit ready for hearing and the clerk now comes forward with an affidavit that he gave requisition for translation of three vernacular documents although that requisition has not been producted before me. I have the gravest suspicion about the bona fides of such a statement. If such requisition was given it appears to me it was given to make out a case that there was no knowledge of the dismissal of the suit on 5th May 1949.

[25] Even assuming every fact in favour of the applicant there remains an insuperable difficulty on his way on the applicants own showing the knowledge of the dismissal of the suit dated from 11th August 1949. The application was not "made" to the Court until 16th September 1949, which is more than a month after the date of

[26] It is true that the notice of motion is dated 19th August 1949 and it is also true that by special leave it was made returnable on 22nd August 1949. But the application was not "made to the Court" within the language of the notice of motion until 16th september 1949. The applicant could have this application "noted as made" either on 19th August 1949 when the notice of motion was taken out or on 22nd August 1949, when the notice of motion was taken out or on 22nd August 1949, when the notice of motion was made returnable and when being on the list the application was adjourned at the instance of the parties for filing their affidavits or even on 6th September 1949, when it appeared on the list for disposal. If the application was made noted on any one of these days it might have been argued that at any rate limitation ceased to run as from the day of such noting. After the decision of Srichand Daga v. Sohanlal Daga, (I. L. R. (1943) 2 Cal. 227: 47 O. W. N. 450; A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 257 it can no longer be contended that taking out of a notice of motion, per se, operates to save limitation. It is now settled law that the application has to be moved and made to the Court. That not having been done, the decision of the Court of appeal in Daga's case: (I. L. R. (1943) 2 Cal 227: 47 C. W. N. 450 : A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 257) is clear and I must hold that even if the limitation operated from the date of the knowledge of the dismissal, even then this application is barred by time. I am however of the opinion that it is incontestable that the time from which limitation runs under Art. 163, Limitation Act is not from the date of the knowledge but from the date of the dismissal.

[27] Sale J. who had large experience of the practice and procedure on the original side of this Court took the same view in Hinga Bibee v. Manna Bibee, 8 C. W. N. 97: (91 Cal. 150). It is also a decision which holds that an application by the plaintiff on the original side of the Court to set aside a dismissal for default must be made within 30 days (Art. 163, Limitation Act) of the date of dismissal.

[28] Incidentally I must observe that the order of dismissal made on 5th May 1949, has not only been drawn up, completed and filed but was also signed on 14th July 1949, so that I cannot even exercise the jurisdiction that I have as a Judge sitting in the original side to recall or vary any order that I may have passed before such order is drawn up or completed or signed and filed, on the principles laid down in Sarupchand Hukum. chand v. Mardhoram, 28 O. W. N. 755 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 83) and In re Steel Construction Co. Ltd., 89 C. W. N. 1259.

[29] Section 151, Civil P. C., does not formulate any new doctrine but is only a legislative recognition of the well-known principle that every Court has inherent power to act ex debito justitia and to do that real justice for the administration of which alone it exists. "Ends of justice" are solemn words and no mere polite expression in juristic methodology and here secreted in the solemn words is the aspiration that justice is the pursuit and end of all law. But the words "ends of justice" wide as they are do not, however, mean vague and indeterminate notions of justice, but justice according to the statutes and laws of the land. They cannot mean that express provisions of the statute can be overriden at the dictates of what one might by private emotion or arbitrary preference call or conceive to be justice between the parties. There is a wholesome temptation to which the Courts willingly succumb when a suit is dismissed without being heard for default of appearance of the plaintiff to restore such suit with a view to grant the defaulting party an opportunity to have his case heard and decided on merits and the judicial conscience is set at rest by ordering payment of costs against the defaulting party. Costs are the sovereign palliative for the judicial conscience and I must confess at one stage I felt inclined to apply that palliative and restore this suit. On a closer consideration and reflection, I have however come to this opinion that the words "ends of justice" in S. 151, Civil P. C.. do not permit the Court to take a step or a procedure which defeats a statutory provision or the law of the land, when the plaintiff does not appear and the defendant only appears O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C., makes the clear and mandatory provision that the Court shall dismiss the suit. Where there is such clear provision for such a case it is not open in my judgment to treat the order of dismissal as one under the inherent jurisdiction of the Court. When again O. 9, R. 9 of the Code lays down a particular procedure by which the dismissal could be set aside I am of the opinion it is not open to the Court to say that nevertheless the defaulting party may choose not to adopt that procedure and yet ask the Court to set aside the dismissal by invoking the inherent jurisdiction of this Court. It is well established law that there is no room for the application of the inherent power where there is an express provision in the Civil Procedure Code.

[30] In my judgment o. 9, R. 8 and o. 9, R, 9, Civil P. C., are applicable to the original side of this Court. I am fortified in that view by the decision of the Court of appeal in Srichand Daga v. Sohan Lal Daga, I. L. R. 1943-2 Cal. 227 : (A. I. R. (80) 1948 Cal. 257) and by the decisions of Sale and Panckridge JJ. two very experienced Judges of the original side of this Court, I do not consider that the words "appear" in O. 9. R. 8 and "his non-appearance" in O. 9. R. 9, are such as would indicate that these rules in terms do not apply to the original side. I consider that the words "appear" and "non-appearance" must be read and construed so as to mean and include not merely appearance by the party himself but also appearance through recognised agents and solicitors on the original side who hold power of attorney. These words in R. 8 and R. 9 of O. 9 of the Code should, in my opinion, be read and interpreted in accordance with the meaning of the word "appearance" as provided by R. 1 and R. 2 of O. 3 of the Code. While saying this I am not unmindful of the observations made by Rankin O. J., in S. N. Banerjee v. H. S. Suhrawardy.

32 C. W. N. 10 at p. 15: 55 Cal. 473: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 772) where the learned Chief Justice discusses the case when the defendant need not "personally" attend in some of the cases on the original side of this High Court and yet his case need not go ex parte. That is quite true. It is unfortunate however that the word "personally" creeps into the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. That is a word which does not appear under O. 9, R. 13, which the learned Chief Justice was considering in that case. Appearance of a plaintiff under the provisions of o. 9 of the Code does not necessarily mean appearance "personally" by that party but must include appearance through agents and solicitors within the meaning of Rr. 1 and 2 of O. 3 of the Code. If that view is taken, there is no difficulty in applying the terms of O. 9 of the Code to the original side of this Court. This, in my view, adds fresh reasoning to the conclusion that I have arrived at quite apart from the provisions of o. 49, R. 3, which does not exclude o. 9 of the Code from the original side of this Court. Had the present application been one under O. 9, R. 13, I should have held myself bound by the decision of the Court of appeal in S. N. Banerjee v. H. S. Suhrawardy. (32 C. W. N. 10): 55 Cal. 473: A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 772), notwithstanding my own opinion on the point. As the present case, however, is one under Rr. 8 and 9 of o. 9 of the Code and as this was the point decided also by the Court of Appeal in Srichand Daga v. Sohanlal Daga, I. L. R. 1943 (2) Cal. 227: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 257) I consider it is not only open to me to follow that decision but also that decision is binding on me.

[31] I am also of the view that it is not permissible for this Court to invoke the inherent jurisdiction under S. 151, Civil P. C., to avoid the provisions of the Limitation Act. As I have said before S. 151, Civil P. C., should not be interpreted to mean that the Court has any power in the name of its inherent jurisdiction to suspend or dispense with the statutory provisions or the laws of the land. It is said that no limitation is provided for in an application under S. 151, Civil P. C., But if an application is of the nature which is before me i.e., an application by the plaintiff to set aside the order of dismissal then Art. 163, Limitation Act, must be given effect to. It will not help the plaintiff applicant in such a case to say that the Court should invoke its inherent jurisdiction. One short answer to that is that even then it has to be regarded as an application under S. 151, Civil P. C. and if it is an application under the Code then there is no escape from Art. 168, Limitation Act. As I have said before however that the language of Art. 163 is not such which says that it must be an application under the Code at all. In that view of the matter whether the present application is treated as one under the Code or not it is in my judgment in any event barred by Art. 163, Limitation Act.

[32] As a last resort Mr. Ghosh for the applicant asked me to treat this application as one for review under O. 47 R. 1 of the Code and Mr. Ghosh submitted that the application can come under the words "any other sufficient reason" occurring therein. In support of this proposition he relies on the judgment of Sir Ashutosh Mukherjee and Chotzner JJ. in Gopika Raman Roy v. Meher Ali, 39 C. L. J. 247: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 872). He has also relied on the case Rajnarain v. Ananga Mohan, 26 Cal. 598. I do not see how these authorities help the applicant. These decisions do not deal with any question of limitation. There is a shorter period of limitation for review of judgments of the original side of this Court. Article 162, Limitation Act, provides that an application for review of such a judgment of this Court must be made within 20 days from the date of the decree or order and not from the date of the knowledge of the decree or order. Even if it were regarded as an application for review then also it will be barred by limitation on the facts of this case.

[33] In the notice of motion, extension of the period of limitation for making this application has been asked but not pressed in the argument by learned counsel for the applicant. Such extension is asked obviously under S. 5, Limitation Act. In order to obtain such extension, the party asking for such extension must satisfy the Court that there was "sufficient cause" for not making this application within the time prescribed by the Limitation Act. In my opinion the affidavit of the court clerk of the applicant's attorney does not disclose sufficient cause on the facts of the case. He has disclosed no reason or cause why nothing was done from 15th June 1949 till 19th August 1949, when the notice of motion was taken out. No reason or cause is disclosed why he should wait for months under the "impression" that the suit was not appearing in the list through some mistake or inadvertence, I am therefore unable to hold that there was "sufficient cause" on the facts of this case for not making this application within time. So far for the facts on this point. On the law I only observe that Panckridge J. sitting on the original side of this Court and deciding the case of Madhoram v. Mt. Tapoo Rubhani, 52 C. L. J. 23: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 319) held that when an application was made by the plaintiff under the provisions of O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C., after the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed under Art. 163, Limitation Act, the Court was not entitled to extend the period of limitation by taking into consideration certain circumstances which appeared to operate harshly against the plaintiff.)

[34] The application, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

(a) Houses and Rents—West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act (XXXVIII [38] of 1948), S. 11 (1), Proviso (b) (i)— Oral contract to sub-let—If protects tenant.

The protection of the tenant under S. 11 (1), Proviso (b) (i) can only be claimed in case there is a contract in writing expressly permitting sub-letting. [Para 5] writing expressly permitting sub-letting. [Para 5]

The words "in writing" do not qualify the word "authority" only but also the word "contract" in
S. 11 (1), Proviso (b) (i), Rent Act. [Para 5]

Any contract to sublet is a kind of authority given to the tenant by the landlord and the words "contract" and "authority" are to be read as sjusdem generis in this section.

Under this section, an authority in writing from which it might follow by implication a permission of sub-letting will not protect the tenant. The Legislature intended to exclude cases of implied as opposed [to express permission of sub-letting. [Para 5]

A mere oral or verbal contract to sub-let will not protect the tenant. [Para 5]

(b) Houses and Rents—West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act(XXXVIII [38] of 1948), S. 11 (1), Proviso (b) (i)— Six months' sub-letting without landlord's permission commencing prior to Act and continuing thereafter— Six months not elapsing since Act came into force—

Tenant is disentitled to protection.

Under proviso (b) (i), S. 11 (1), any period of subletting prior to and continuing on or after 1st December 1948 disentitles a tenant from any protection under S. 11 (1) if such sub-letting has been for more than six consecutive months for the whole or a major portion of the premises without a contract in writing expressly permitting such sub-letting. In this view the fact that six months have not elapsed since the commencement of the Act is immaterial; A. I. R. (84) 1947 Cal. 401;

A. K. Sen and S. Roy — for Plaintiff.
J. C. Gupta and D. K. De _for Defendant.

Judgment.—This is a suit for possession of premises No. 3A, Anukul Mukherjee Road. Calcutta, for arrears of rent for the two months of Jaistha and Aswar 1354 B. S. corresponding to 16th May to 17th July 1947 amounting to Rs. 202 and for mesne profits and other reliefs. The plaintiff's case is that she is the owner of the said premises and that the defendant was a monthly tenant under her at a rent of Rs. 101 per month. The plaintiff gave a notice of ejectment through her Solicitors Messrs. Mitter & Bural on 29th May 1947 calling upon the defendant to quit and vacate on the expiry of the month of Aswar 1854 B. S. corresponding to 17th July 1947. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant sub-let the premises without her consent. This suit was filed on 21st July 1947.

[2] The defendant filed his written statement admitting the receipt of notice to quit. He also admits sub-letting but states in his written statement that it was a condition of the tenancy that he should sub-let portions of the premises. The defendant states also that at the time when he took over the said premises as a tenant there were existing sub-tenants on the premises. He claims protection under the Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1946, and pleads deposit of all rents with the Rent Controller.

Issues were raised: (1) Was there any agreement as alleged in para. 2 of the written statement? (2) Has the defendant sublet the major portion of the said premises for more than six consecutive months without the plaintiff's consent? Even if so, if such subletting was not for six months from 1st December 1948, can such subletting be a ground of ejectment? (3) Has the defendant deposited all rents under the Rent Ordinance Act up to date? (4) Is the notice to quit bad in law under the new Rent Act? (5) To what reliefs, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

[4] Issue No I — The agreement pleaded in para. 2 of the written statement is that the plaintiff let the premises to the defendant on condition that the defendant would take it subject to the sub-tenancies then existing and to be entitled to sub-let portion thereof not required for his own purpose. [After discussing the evidence, his Lordship proceeded:] On these facts I have no hesitation in holding that there was no agreement as stated in para 2 of the written statement and answering issue No. 1 in the negative. [5] Issue No. 2. - [After discussing the evidence, his Lordship proceeded: I hold therefore on the evidence that the defendant sublet the major portion of the said premises for more than six months, without consent in writing of the plaintiff. It will be proper at this stage to deal with a point of law raised by Mr. J. C. Gupta and which is concerned with the interpreta. tion of the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948. Mr. Gupta has argued first that the words "in writing" qualify the word "authority" only and not the word "contract" in S. 11. Proviso (b) (i), Rent Act. On an anxious consideration of this argument I find I cannot accept this construction. In my judgment any contract to sub-let is a kind of authority given to the tenant by the landlord and the words "contract" and "authority" are to be read as ejusdem generis in this section. That is why the word "other" is used in that part of the statute under consideration. If the words "contract" and "authority" were not to be read ejusdem generis then the word "other" would be meaningless. Besides the use of the word "expressly" in my opinion indicates that the Legislature intended that the contract must be expressed. The word "expressly" qualifies also "in writing". In other words an authority in writing from which it might follow by implication a permission of sub-letting will not protect the tenant. The Legislature therefore intended to exclude cases of implied as opposed to express permission of sub-letting. If in the case of even an authority in writing the permission has to be expressly stated and not implied I fail to see why an interpretation should be put upon this section so as to mean that a mere oral or verbal contract to sub-let will protect the tenant. There is no sensible reason in being severe on "authority in writing" as opposed to contract to sub-let. No logical principle of interpretation of statute or common sense can justify such difference being made between a contract and an authority. The absence of the word "authority" in Proviso (b) (ii) of that section does not help Mr. Gupta because in that sub-section a prohibition is dealt with and a prohibition is an interdirt and can never be regarded as an authority. If Mr. Gupta's argument were to prevail then it would have meant that while the prohibition on sub-letting has always to be in writing the permission to sub-let by contract could be oral. I see no justification for making such a difference between prohibition and permission. Mr. Gupta has argued on the policy of the Act contending that the Act was indulgent to sub-letting on the ground of dearth of accommodation in Calcutta and therefore the Act required no writing in the contract to sub-let but the Act did not favour prohibition on subletting on the same ground of dearth of accommodation and therefore requires the prohibition to be in writing. The policy of the Act is to be gathered from the language used in the different sections read in the light of the object of the Act as set out in the preamble. On such a consideration, I cannot accept Mr. Gupta's unqualified and sweeping suggestion that such policy was indulgent to sub letting in any and every case because if that were so proviso (b) (i) need not have been enacted at all. In my opinion therefore the protection of the tenant, can only be claimed in case there is a contract in writing expressly permitting sub-letting. There is in this case no such express contract in writing permitting such subletting. The contracts in this case were recorded by the defendant in writing dated 22nd March 1943 and 29th May 1947 and the defendant has not "expressly" or "in writing" said there that the defendant can sub-let.

[6] The next point argued by Mr. Gupta is that the subletting for six consecutive months which disentitles the tenant to the protection given by S. 11, Rent Act, 1948, must be subletting under Rent Act, 1948, and therefore it must be six months' subletting since 1st December 1948 when the Act came into operation. According to him no matter for how long more than six months' the tenant may have sublet prior to 1st December 1948 all that period of subletting even though for more than six months is of no avail as that was not offensive subletting under the Rent Act, 1948. As six months have not elapsed since 1st December 1948 in this case even now the plaintiff according to Mr Gupta cannot avail of Proviso (b) (i) of S. 11 of the Act.

tion and raises a very important question. There are three decisions on somewhat similar point raised under the Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1946 (Bengal Ordinance v [5] of 1946). The first decision is of Sen J. on 1st March 1948 in Atul v. Ganesh reported in 52 C. W. N. 379. There the learned Judge considered Proviso (b) to 8. 12 (1) of the Ordinance 1946 which also disentitles a tenant to the protection under S. 12 of the Ordinance if he sub-let the premises without the consent in writing of the landlord. In that case the learned Judge interpreted Calcutta Rent Ordinance and came to the conclusion that sub-letting prior to the Ordinance was also affected with the result that the tenant lost the immunity conferred by S. 12 of the Ordinance even though he sub-let prior to the Ordinance. At p. 381 the learned Judge notices the well-known principle that the Act should not be given retrospective effect unless the words of the Act expressly or impliedly indicate that such effect is to be given and the Court should construe an Act as having effect only from the date on which it comes into force unless by express words or by necessary implications it is given a retrospective operation. The learned Judge followed the decision of Purushottam v. Mt. Hawi Bai reported in A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal 401: (83 C. L. J. 173).

[8] The second decision is of Biswas J. which came a month later on 9th April 1948 in Guru. pada Haldar v. Arjundas reported in 52 C. W. N. 604 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 61). That was also a decision under the Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1946 and the learned Judge came to the conclusion that the tenant who sublet the premises without the consent of the landlord lost the protection given by S. 12 (1) of the Ordinance and was hit by ol. (b) of the proviso of that section even though the subletting was done before the Ordinance came into force. There the subletting continued after the Ordinance came into force. In the other case decided by Sen J. there also the subletting continued after the Ordinance of 1946 had come into force.

[9] The third decision is of Clough J. on 24th June 1947 (earliest in point of time but last to be reported) in Sk. Mohammed Omer v. T. B. Timms reported in 52 C. W. N. 693. That also was a decision under the Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1946 and the learned Judge came to the same conclusion as in the other two decisions I have mentioned. In addition to what was stated by Sen and Biswas JJ. the learned Judge in this case decided that the question of construction of that section of the Ordinance was not to be approached as if it was one that deprived person referred to in it i. e., tenants of any right. The learned Judge also construed and emphasised the word "bas" in the expression bas sublet.

[10] There is one decision under the Rent Act, 1948 of Banerjee J. in Suit No. 783 of 1948 Sm. Santilata Ghose v. Sk. Ibrahim delivered on 4th January 1949 which is unreported and to which my attention has been drawn. The learned Judge there has held following the two decisions of Clough J. and Biswas J. which I have quoted above and one other unreported decision that the fact of subletting before the Act makes no difference to the tenant. The learned Judge has given no further reasons.

Rent Ordinance 1946 and they are different in two material particulars. First there is no provision in that Ordinance that sub-letting has to be for more than six months as under the Rent Act of 1948. Secondly there was also no provision in Rent Ordinance of 1946 similar to that contained in S. 13, Rent Act The question, therefore, for determination is whether these two special provisions make any difference and whether the principles laid down in three cases decided by Biswas J., Sen J. and Clough J. under the Calcutta Rent Ordinance 1946 are applicable to the Rent Act of 1948.

(12] Mr. D. K. Dey who followed Mr. Gupta in argument on this point has submitted that these two factors do make a difference. According to him as no period of subletting was specified under the Rent Ordinance 1946, if the subletting continued a day after the Ordinance came into force that was enough to throw out the tenant from the protection of S. 12 of the Ordinance. He has drawn my particular attention to the observation of Biswas J. in Gurupada Haldar v. Arjundas, 52 C. W. N. 604 at p. 607: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 61) which are in these terms:

"It may be that at the inception of the tenancy there was no question of obtaining the consent of the land-lord in writing before the tenant could sublet. All the same the tenancy subsisted at the date of the Ordinance and continued during its currency."

[13] On that ground Mr. Dey distinguished the decision of Biswas. Sen and Clough JJ. who held that subletting prior to the Ordinance was sufficient to disentitle the tenant to the protection offered by S. 12 of the Ordinance.

[14] In my judgment S. 11 (1), Rent Act should be construed as a whole. Sub-section (1) of that section should be construed and read along with the proviso that follows. While sub-s. (1) says that that no order or decree for recovery of possession should be made it also says in the same instance by way of a proviso that this embargo on the making of a decree will not operate in the case where the tenant "has sublet" for more than six consecutive months without landlord's consent. In Jennings v. Kelly, 1940 A. C. 206: (109 L. J. P. C. 38) the House of Lords say that there is no rule that the first or enacting part is to be construed without reference to the proviso. The proper course is to apply the broad general rule of construction which is that a section or enactment must be construed as a whole each portion throwing light if need be on the rest. Viscount Maugham in his speech at p. 219 says:

"The principle is equally applicable in the case of different parts of a single section and none the less that the latter part is introduced by the words 'provided that' or like words. There can I think be no doubt that the view expressed in Kent's Commentaries on American Law (Cited with approval in Maxwell 8th Edn. p. 140) is correct. The true principle undoubtedly is, that the sound interpretation and meaning of the Statute on a view of the enacting clause, saving clause and proviso, taken and construed together, is to prevail."

[15] The point of time is the time when the decree is going to be made and at that point of time the words "has sublet" have to be given a meaning. The only consistent possible and natural meaning will be to look to a period anterior to the point of time when the decree is being made and when once that construction is followed any prior period of six months will necessarily come in. No question of disturbing or affecting vested rights is involved by adopting this interpretation. Prior to the Rent Act 1948 the tenant had no vested or any right to resist a suit for ejectment after notice to quit under the general law of the Transfer of Property Act on the ground that he has not sublet for more than six months. Indeed under the law previous to the Rent Act, 1948, even a day's subletting without permission was enough to turn out the tenant of protection under the Ordinance of 1946. Therefore, the consideration of the principle that a statute should not be given a retrospective effect so as to affect vested right (Maxwell, Interpretation of Statutes 9th Edn. pp. 222-23) is inappropriate in such context. In fact the construction which I put on this section and which affects subletting prior to 1st December 1948 does not disturb vested rights and instead of doing violence to the rights of the subject under the general law is in consonance therewith.

[16] In my opinion, the question is as to the ambit and scope of the Rent Act and not as to the date from which the new law as enacted by the Act is to be taken to have been the law. Similar considerations and arguments were considered in West v. Gwynne, (1911) 2 Ch. D. 1: (80 L. J. Ch. 578), where the question was if S. 3, Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892 engrafting a proviso on all leases containing a covenant against subletting without consent of the landlord to the effect that no sum of money shall be payable in respect of such consent, was applicable to leases before the Act. The question arose whether such a provision would apply to a lease executed before the Act came into operation but continued during the currency of the Act when the Act did not use any express language of retrospective operation. At pp. 11 and 12 of that Report, Buckley L: J. says:

"During the argument the words "retrospective" and "retroactive" have been repeatedly used and the question has been stated whether S 3, Conveyancing Act 1892 is retrospective. To my mind the word "retrospective" is inappropriate and the question is not whether the Section is retrospective. Retrospective operation is one matter. Interference with existing rights is another. If an Act provides that as at a past date the law shall be taken to have been that which it was not, that Act I understand to be retrospective. That is not this case. The question here is whether a certain provision as to the contents of leases is addressed to the case of all leases or only of some, namely, leases executed after the passing of the Act. The question is as to the ambit and scope of the Act and not as to the date from which the new Law as enacted by the Act is to be taken to have been the Law."

[17] If this were not the construction, then it will mean suspending the operation of this particular statutory provision for six months from 1st December 1948 in respect of the ground of subletting although the Act says it shall come into operation under S. 1 (2) of the Act on such date as the Provincial Government may by notification appoint, and the date so appointed is 1st December 1948. Reading therefore S. 11 (1) of the Rent Act with the provisor that follow and with a view to give effect to the entire section along with the proviso and with a view to avoid suspending operation of the Statute and making it applicable in different parts to different points of time, a result which is always whenever possible to be avoided the proper construction in my opinion is to give a meaning to the words "has sublet" as capable of affecting a period of time anterior to the operation of the Act.

[18] The next consideration is whether S. 13 of the Rent Act makes any difference. It is argued on the basis of this section that the Legislature has made the special provision where a tenant has sublet in whole or in part any premises let to him for a period of not less than seven years and such period expires on or after the 1st day of october 1946 the tenant shall not be entitled to the benefit of S. 11 of the Act date 1st October 1916, was the date on which the Rent Ordinance of 1946 came into operation. The argument therefore is that where the legislature thought fit to affect subletting anterior to the date when the Act came into operation i. e., 1st December 1948, it has said so expressly and the only anterior subletting which is affected by the Act is therefore that class of subtenancy which lasted for at least seven years expiring on or after 1st October 1946, and not any other subletting prior to the Act for a period less than seven years. If a subletting for more than six consecutive months prior to the date of coming into operation of the Act was to come within proviso (b) (i) of S. 11 then it is argued S. 13 of the Act, is redundant.

[18a] On a careful consideration of this argument I am unable to accept it. I do not consider that S. 13 of the Act, will be redundant if by proviso (b) (i) of S. 11 subletting for more than six months prior to 1st December 1948, is hit. The purpose of S. 13 is clear enough from the words

"notwithstanding anything contained in this Act." This according to my interpretation means that even where the tenant has express permission in writing for subletting from his landlord that is no protection for him if he has sublet for a period not less than seven years expiring on or after 1st October 1946. The purpose of S. 13 of the Act, is to make a special provision where the sub-tenancy is for not less than seven years and the legislature has thought fit that in such a case a tenant does not need to retain his tenancy and he is deprived of the protection under S. 11 of the Act. In that case therefore the further provision is made which follows from the words of S. 13 that the subtenants with such long duration of not less than seven years will be deemed to be tenants directly under the landlord.

[19] In my judgment on a proper construction of S. 11 and S. 13 of the Act, I am of the opinion that under proviso (b) (i) of S. 11 of the Rent Act, any period of subletting prior to and continuing on or after 1st December 1948, disentitles a tenant from any protection under S. 11 (1) of the Act, if such subletting has been for more than six consecutive months for the whole or a major portion of the premises without a contract in writing expressly permitting such subletting.

[22] Issue 4.—The notice to quit is dated 80th May 1947. A notice to quit in my opinion does not need to state any ground at all. In this case the ground however was stated and that was subletting without the knowledge and consent of the plaintff. Mr. Gupta has argued that under S. 11 of the Rent Act, the notice must state subletting not merely without the consent of the landlord but also for a period for more than six consecutive months and he has submitted that on this ground the notice is bad under the Rent Act. The argument in my opinion is unsound. Section 11 of the Rent Act, has nothing to do with notice to quit and it is not necessary that the notice to quit should be in any particular form except as required by the Transfer of Property Act. Section 11 of the Rent Act, does not put a fetter on the passing of any decree or order for recovery of possession if while passing such decree it is brought to the notice of the Court on the evidence or otherwise that there has been an offensive subletting within the meaning of proviso (b) (i) of S. 11 so as to deprive the tenant of his immunity under that section. That however does not mean that the notice to quit is bad. Besides that notice to quit was given under the Transfer of Propterty Act as it must be and at a time before the Rent Act came into operation.

[23] I therefore hold that the notice is not bad and accordingly answer this Issue in the negative.

[24] Issue 5. - It follows from my findings on the other issues that the plaintiff is entitled to the reliefs he has claimed in the plaint.

[25] There will accordingly be judgment for the plaintiff for possession, forarrears of rent amounting to Rs. 202, for mesne profits as claimed in prayers (a), (b) and (c) of the plaint. The defendant will pay the costs of the suit to the plaintiff. Certified for two counsel. No order is asked for and I make no order in respect of the sub-tenants.

Harries C. J .- This is an application for extension of time to make the necessary deposit under the provisions of O. 45, R. 7, Civil P. C.

[2] Admittedly the payments were not made in time and the question arises whether this Court has jurisdiction to extend the time.

[3] Other High Courts have held that by reason of the Rules governing Appeals to His Majesty in Council the High Court has jurisdiction to extend the time and I am party to one of those decisions whilst sitting in the High Court at Patna. This Court however has consistently held that the time for making the deposit under 0.45, B. 7, cannot be extended and that the Court has no jurisdiction to grant an application such as the present.

[4] This matter was considered by a Bench of this Court in Raj Kumar Govind Narain Singh v. Shamlal Singh, 39 O. W. N. 651. There an application was made to cancel a certificate on the ground that the deposit had not been made in time in accordance with the provisions of O. 45, R. 7, Civil P. C. It was urged that the Court had a discretion to extend the time under R 9 of Appendix II of the Privy Council Rules of February 9, 1920. The Court was asked to refuse the application for cancellation on the ground that in its discretion the Court could extend the time. At p. 652, of the report Rankin, C. J., who delivered the judgment of the Bench observed;

"This is a question of jurisdicition. It does not seem to me possible to maintain that the Court, in its discretion under Rule 9 of the order, made on 9th day of February 1920, could refuse the application made by the respondent.

In my judgment the only order which it is open to us to make is that the certificate for the admission of the appeal dated 2nd August 1926, should be cancelled."

[5] This decision has been consistently followed. For example on 17th June 1940, a Bench of this Court consisting of Derbyshire C. J., and Mukherjea J. held in the case of Akimuddin v. Fateh Chand (unreported P. C. A. 16 of 1939), that time could not be extended. The same view has been taken by Benches of which I have been a member, an example being a case decided on 29th November 1948 (F. C. A. Nos. 5 to 10 of 1948) No Bench has taken a contrary view in this Court and that being so we are bound to follow our own decisions and to hold that time cannot be extended for making the deposit required under 10. 45. R. 7, Civil P. C.

[6] It has been suggested that the matter should be referred to a Full Bench. But it appears to me that the authorities of this Court are so consistent and are so much at variance with authorities of other Courts that this is a point that must eventually be decided by a superior tribunal. A Full Bench decision affirming a long line of decisions of this Court would only make matters worse.

[7] In the result therefore this application fails and it is dismissed with costs hearing fee being assessed at two gold mohurs.

[8] The certificate granting leave to appeal will be cancelled. The money which was deposited out of time must be returned by the Court to the proposed appellant.

Banerjee J. - I agree.

Before a person can be called a thika tenant within the meaning of S. 2 (5) it is essential for him to prove and establish the system referred to in S. 2 (5). It may be the system which has the well-known names mentioned in the section. It may also be a similar system. But the fact of having a system under which a tenant holds has to be established. Anil Chandra Ganguly - for Plaintiffs. Gouri Mitter-for Defendant.

Judgment. — This is a suit by the plaintiffs for the recovery of a vacant plot of land being the northern portion of premises No. 235/1, Bowbazar Street, Calcutta, more particularly described in the schedule to the plaint. According to the plaintiffs, the defendant was a tenant in respect of the said plot of land for a term of 15 years ending on 30th June 1947 at a rent of Rs. 20 per month. By a letter dated 25th April 1947, the plaintiffs called upon the defendant to give vacant possession on the expiry of the month of June 1947. It is also alleged in the plaint that a sum of Rs. 60 was due and payable by the defendant on account of rent for three months from April to June 1947.

[2] The defendant filed his written statement and he took a number of points in defence. Mr. Gouri Mitter who appeared for the defendant has abandoned all these points taken in the written statement and has argued only one point before me and that is a point arising under the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949, to which

I will refer later or in the judgment.

[3] On behalf of the defendant he has admitted the lease dated 1st July 1932, between the plaintiffs and the defendant and the letter, dated 25th April 1947. These two documents are to be found in the admitted brief of correspondence which has been marked by consent as Ex. A in this suit. For purposes of this suit Mr. Gouri Mitter for the defendant has admitted the facts stated in the plaint.

[4] Mr. Mitter contends that the defendant comes within the scope of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949 and this Court has no juris. diction to determine this suit having regard to S. 29 of that Act. He relies on S. 2 (5) of the Act which defines thika tenant in the following terms:

"Thika tenant" means any person who under the system commonly known as 'Thika', 'Thika masik uttandi,' 'Thika masik', 'Thika bastu' or under any other like system holds, whether under a written lease or otherwise, or has been recorded in any recordof-rights as holding, under the title "dakhal basalkar" or other like appellation, land under another person and is, or but for a special contract would be liable to pay rent, at a monthly or at any other periodical rate, for that land to such other person and has erected any structure on such land for a residential, manufacturing or business purpose and includes the successors in interest of such person.

[5] Mr. Mitter's argument is based on the two expressions "or under any other like system" and "whether under a written lease or otherwise". It is not his contention that the defendant is a thika tenant in the sense that he could be called as "thika" or "thika masik utbandi" or "thike masik" or "thike bastu" what he contends is this that having held over after the expiry of the lease which I have mentioned, the defendant should be treated as holding the land within the meaning of the expression "under any other like system." He further points out that the fact of there having been a written lease does not alter the situation because of the words "whether under a written lease or otherwise."

[6] Mr. Mitter contends that so far as the definition of "thika tenant" is concerned the Ordinance and the Act are more or less in similar terms, and that his construction of the definition section should be accepted.

[7] I cannot accept his construction of S. 2 (5), Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949 or S. 2, Oalcutta Thika Tenancy Ordinance 1948. It seems to me that a tenant can only be called a thika tenant under any particular system. It may be the system which has the well-known names mentioned in the statute, namely, "thika", "thika masik utbandi", "thika masik" or "thika bastu." It may also be a similar system. But the fact of having a system under which a tenant holds has to be established. Mr. Mitter has frankly conceded that he has no evidence on the point. In the absence of evidence, I am not prepared to hold that as a matter of fact the defendant is a tenant under any system which can be called the system of a thika tenant. Mr. Mitter contends that it should follow as a matter of legal construction and interpretation of Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act or ordinance and the definition as provided under S. 2 (5), of that Act or S. 2 of the ordinance. In my judgment, it is not a matter of legal interpretation or construction, but is a question of fact in every case to be decided on the materials available in such case. But it is essential in my view for any defendant to prove and establish the system referred to in S. 2 of the ordinance or S. 2 (5) of the Act before he can be called a thika tenant under the Ordinance or the Act. It is a matter of proof and evidence in every case.

(8) In this particular suit the fact is that there was a lease, dated 1st July 1932. That lease was of the northern portion of the plot of land situated at premises No. 285/1, Bowbazar Street, Calcutta. It is not in evidence that the system mentioned in S. 2 of the ordinance or S. 2 (5) of the Act prevails in the Bowbazar Street locality of the town of Calcutta. Then it was a lease for at first a fixed period of 10 years with option thereafter on the part of the lessee to extend the lease for a further period of 5 years. It gave leave to the lessee to construct and erect any structure on the land and under the terms of the lease the lessee was obliged to remove the structures so erected before the expiry of the period mentioned in the lease. Analysing the different clauses in the alleged lease I do not consider that the present defendant can be called a thika tenant within the meaning of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Ordinance, 1948 or the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949.

[9] Mr. Mitter has referred me to two decisions. One is a decision of Rishikesh Law v. Satishchandra, A. I. B. (9) 1922 Cal. 123: (64 O. 774). That was a decision under the Bengal Tenancy Act. It was concerned with the interpretation of a Uriya document where the words "thika mokrar" were used and the nature of the land could be gathered from the fact that the tenant had to pay at so may annas per bigha for jalkar rent. There the learned Judges held that the word "thika" was used to indicate the creation of a tenancy and the word "mokrar" written in Uriya was in reality intended to mean mokrari indicating that the rent was fixed in perpetuity. I do not think that these considerations are germane to the construction now put before me. There are many kinds of tenures described in the Bengal Tenancy Act and current in different parts of the province.

[10] The other decision to which my attention has been drawn by Mr. Mitter is Manmotha Nath v. Anath Bandu. 29 C. W. N. 201: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Cal. 482) Mr. Mitter has referred me to p. 213 of that report. That again was a case under the Bengal Tenancy Act and it is not concerned with the question of construction that I

[11] In that view of the matter I hold that there is nothing in this case to suggest or to show that the defendant is a thika tenant within the meaning of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Ordinance, 1948 or the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949.

[12] There will accordingly be judgment for the plaintiff in terms of prayers 1, 2, 3 and 5 of the plaint. The mesne profits would be at the rate of Rs. 2 per day until delivery of possession.

[13] Mr. Mitter on behalf of the defendant has asked for some time to vacate on the very good ground that his client has got structures on the land which he had built. I think he is entitled to have some time. Mr. Mitter asks for six months' time which I do not consider to be long having regard to the fact that he has been there for the last 15 years. The execution of this order for vacating possession will be stayed for six months within which time the defendant must vacate. This indulgence of time for six months is given to the defendant on the defendant's undertaking not to prefer an appeal from this judgment.

Benode Behary Roy — Plaintiff v. The General Assurance Society Ltd.—Defendant.

Contract Act (1872), S. 62 — Contract of service —Alteration of terms at employee's will—Unilateral alteration of contract — Master and servant.

There is nothing repugnant to the law of contract to have as one of the express terms of the contract itself that it will be alterable at the instance of one party alone.

When an employee of a company, by the very terms of his contract of service, is to act according to the byelaws of the company, and one of such bye-laws is that the bye-laws can be added to or altered at any time by the company, then the employee is bound by any alteration or addition of the bye-laws that may duly be made by the company even though such addition or alteration is made after the contract of service. This is so even if it means that the employee thereby loses any vested right i. e. any right acquired by him before such alteration or addition. The problem is never met by raising in the abstract the principle of sanctity of contract or the doctrine of vested rights. The problem is always a problem of construction and interpretation of the true meaning and effect of the terms of a particular contract of service or employment and of the scope of the relevant bye-laws in relation thereto. In such a case it is not appropriate to invoke the precedenis to show that a company cannot alter its Articles of Association to commit a breach of contract. (Held on a construction of the contract that the plaintiff had lost his right to claim gratuity by cancellation of this relevant bye-law by the defendant company.)

P. C. Mullick — for Plaintiff. G. K. Mitter — for Defendant.

Judgment.—The plaintiff sues the defendant company for the recovery of the sum of Rs. 6,184 as being the gratuity alleged to be earned by the plaintiff as an employee of the defendant company. The defendant company resists the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the bye-laws which entitled the plaintiff at one stage of his service to claim the gratuity had been altered before the termination of the plaintiff's services. The vexed question as to how far a company by altering its bye-laws can prejudicially affect an employee's contract of service has been raised in this suit.

[2] The facts may be stated very briefly. The plaintiff was appointed Secretary of the Company in October 1924 at a salary of Rs. 150 per month and it is the pleading of the plaintiff that such appointment was subject to and in terms of the regulations contained in the then byelaws of the defendant company. He thereafter rose to the position of the Officiating General Manager of the Company in 1932-33. His services were terminated in December 1939 and he was admittedly paid his Provident Fund.

[3] When he joined service of the defendant company as its secretary the bye-laws of the company at the time did not entitle him to any gratuity because his salary was below Rs. 300 per month. Gratuity at that time under the bye. laws was payable only to employees of the superior service of the company drawing a salary of Rs. 300 per month and over (Bye-law 54) and such gratuity was payable in lieu of pension (Bye-law 94 under Chap. 12 which Chapter deals with superior service only). The employees of the subordinate service of the company were given only Provident Fund for which provision was made under Chap. 13 of the bye-laws. The difference between the superior service and the subordinate service will appear under bye law 54. These bye-laws were published in 1923. The plaintiff reached the grade of Rs. 300 per month on 1st January 1929. Bye-law that governed grant of gratuity at that time is contained in Cl. 94 of the bye-laws published in 1923. That bye-law is in the following terms:

"94. Gratuities at the rate of a month's pay for every year of service rendered are paid to employees on retirement in lieu of pension provided the following:

conditions are fulfilled:

1. Service must be continuous, good, efficient and faithful.

2. In the event of voluntary retirement before attaining the age of 55 years an employee must have rendered 15 years service.

3. In the event of compulsory retirement by the Society for medical unfitness.

4. No gratuities are granted to members of the Subordinate Staff."

[4] It was clear that when the plaintiff joined the service he did not come under the bye-law granting gratuity but when he reached the grade of Rs. 300 per month on 1st January 1929 he became eligible to come under the bye-law governing gratuity. Before, his services were terminated in 1939 by the Board, Resolution No. 3 of the Directors dated 12th October 1935 the bye-law granting gratuity was cancelled.

[5] Mr. G. K. Mitter learned counsel appearing for the defendant company gave up all points of defence taken in the written statement except the defence that the amendment of the bye-laws cancelling provision for gratuity as depriving the plaintiff of his right. He has confined himself to one issue which he has raised and that issue is:

"Does the alteration of the Bye-law by the Board Resolution No. 3 dated 12th October 1935 cancelling provision for gratuity deprive the plaintiff of his right to claim any gratuity"?

[6] On that basis no evidence has been called on either side. It is admitted on both sides that when the plaintiff joined the service as secretary, under the bye-laws published in 1923 the plaintiff had no claim to be eligible to any gratuity. It is also admitted that when from 1st January 1929 the plaintiff reached the grade of Rs. 300 per month Bye-law 94 became operative on him but that such bye-law was cancelled in 1935 before the plaintiff's service was terminated in 1939. It is also admitted that such cancellation was duly made and in accordance with the power given by the bye-laws themselves. What however has been contended on behalf of the plaintiff is that by such cancellation the plaintiff's right has not been lost. There is an admitted brief of correspondence and documents which has been marked as Ex. 'A' in this suit. The records of the plaintiff's service as well as all material facts will appear from such exhibit.

[7] Before I notice the arguments in this case it will be necessary to refer to bye-law 4 which remained all the time without amendment and which was continued although bye-laws were amended from time to time. In my judgment the decision in this case will depend on a consideration of the effect of that bye-law on the construction of the contract of service. Byelaw 4 runs in the following terms:

"4. The Board of Directors reserve to themselves the right of altering or adding to at any time, the rules contained in these Bye-laws."

[8] This bye-law 4 was in the bye-laws of 1928 and was there at the time when the Board Resolution of 12th October 1935, was passed. It was an operative bye-law at all material time.

[9] The argument for the defendant company is this. Bye-law 4 gives the Board of Directors of the Company the right of altering or adding to at any time the Rules contained in the bye. laws. The relevant contract of appointment of the plaintiff is contained in letter dated 28th September 1924. The letter provides

"you are to act according to our instructions and orders issued to you from time to time and the Byelaws, a copy thereof is supplied herewith and deductions towards Provident Fund contributions and security deposit shall have to be made out of your monthly dues as usual."

That letter of appointment does not make gratuity an express term in the contract of service. The claim for gratuity therefore can only be based on the bye-laws. The company has a right to alter the bye-laws providing for gratuity at any time by reason of bye-law 4. As the bye-law was cancelled as a result of the Resolution of the Board of Directors dated 12th October 1935 the plaintiff has no claim. That in brief is the contention of the company.

[10] Mr. P. C. Mullick appearing for the plaintiff has ably put forward his case. His first argument is that although bye-law 4 is in very wide terms it does not permit the company to alter the provision for gratuity in such a manner as to deprive the plaintiff from earning the gratuity granted by the previous bye-law of 1929 he having once come under its operation. In support of this submission Mr. Mullick has relied on the observation of Lindley M. R. in Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, Ltd., (1900) 1 Ch. 656 at pp. 671 to 674: (69 L. J Ch. 266) and on the judgment of Sargant J. in British Syndicate Ltd. v. Alperton Rubber Co. Ltd., (1915) 2 Ch. 186: (84 L. J. Ch. 665) which followed and adopted at p. 193 of that Report the observation of Lindley M. R. Both these cases however are cases concerning the rights of a member and shareholder of a company as against the company. They are not cases as between an employee of the company and the company. It may be observed that they are cases where the statutory right of alteration of Articles of a Company under the Company Law was one of the considerations. No questions of Company Law or of the statutory rights of the Company to alter Articles arise in this C&SO.

"the power thus conferred on companies to alter the regulations contained in their articles is limited only by the provisions contained in the statute and the conditions contained in the Company's Memorandum of Association. Wide however as the language of S. 50 is the power conferred by it must like all other powers be exercised subject to those general principles of law and equity which are applicable to all powers conferred on the majority and enabling them to bind minority. It must be exercised not only in the manner required by law but also bona fide for the benefit of the company as a whole and it must not be exceeded. These conditions are always implied and are reldom if ever expressed."

Mr. Mullick invokes that passage in the judgment of the Master of the Rolls and asks me to construe the wide powers of bye-law 4 as-"subject to those general principles of law and equity." In my opinion, the general principles of law and equity which the Master of the Rolls considered in that case were, (1) that the power must be exercised in a manner "required by the law" and (2) bona fide for the benefit of the company and not in breach of the principle that the majority should not oppress the minority. No scope of the application of the first principle exists in the present case as the amendment is not suggested to have been made illegally or in a manner not justified by law. Indeed Mr. Mullick for the plaintiff has conceded that the cancellation has been duly and lawfully made according to bye-law 4. The second principle that in company law the majority cannot oppress the minority has no concern with the facts of the present case. If that be so I cannot put any fetter on the unrestricted right of altering or adding to at any time the Rules contained in the Bye-laws and which right is conferred under bye-law 4. Indeed, the Master of the Rolls in the passage that follows the observations on which Mr. Mullick relies says this

"but if they (the two principles I have referred to above) are complied with I can discover no ground for judicilly putting any other restriction on the power."

[12] In my opinion I feel the same way and I consider that I cannot judicially put any restriction on the right conferred under bye-law 4.

[13] In the recent decision of the House of Lords, Southern Foundries Ltd. v. Shirlaw reported in 1940 A. C. 701: (1940-2 ALL E. R. 445) a very great divergence of judicial opinion is expressed. In that case the contract of appointment of the Managing Directors was "for ten years from 1st December 1933." Article 91 of the Company whose Managing Director the plaintiff was, provided that the Managing Director

"shall be subject to the provisions of any contract between him and the company but subject to the same provision as to resignation or removal as the other Directors of the company and if he ceased to hold the office of the Director he shall ipso facto and immediately "cease to be a Director."

By an amendment of the article, the plaintiff was removed under the amended article before the period of ten years expired. The plaintiff claimed damages for wrongful repudiation of the contract and before the trial Judge succeeded in obtaining a decree for damages. The Court of appeal affirmed the decree for damages although Sir Wilfred Greene M. R. dissented. The company appealed to the House of Lords and the appeal was dismissed by the majority of the members although here again both Viscount Maugham and Lord Romer dissented. That case does not assist the plaintiff here. There the contract was expressly for ten years and the articles relating to the removal of the Managing Director were expressly "subject" to the contract. Here the letter of appointment does not expressly include any term in the contract regarding payment of gratuity to the plaintiff, and the Bye-laws were not made subject to the contract of appointment. On the contrary it expressly incorporates the bye-laws in the terms of the contract. It is only in the bye-laws that the provision for gratuity had been made and such bye-laws also provided expressly that they could be altered or added to at any time by the Board of Directors. The question therefore resolves to a question of construction of the particular contract of service.

only take effect by the continuance of such an existing state of circumstances there is an implied engagement on his part that he shall do nothing of his own motion to put an end to that state of circumstance under which alone the arrangement can be operative and the principle laid down by Kennedy L. J. in Measures Bros. L'd. v. Measures, (1910) 2 Ch. 248 at p. 258: (79 L. J. Ch. 707), that it is elementary justice that one of the parties to a contract shall not get rid of his responsibilities thereunder by disabling the other contractor from fulfilling his part of the bargain are well established. But before these principles can be applied, the more fundamental question is what is the contract between the parties. If the contract is that the very Bye-laws under which gratuity can be claimed and paid are subject to alterations or additions at any time then such a question resolves itself in my opinion into one of true construction of the agreement or contract of service. There is in my judgment nothing repugnant to the law of contract to have as one of the express terms of the contract itself that it will be alterable at the instance of one party alone. If one contracting party gives to the other contracting party the right to alter the terms of the contract between them the Court is not justified in my view to apply the principles of Cockburn C. J. and Kennedy L. J. which were approved by the House of Lords in Southern Foundries Ltd. v. Shirlaw, 1940 A. C. 701: (1940.2 ALL E. R. 445). In the majority opinion of the House of Lords the reference to these principles are made by Lord Atkin and Lord Porter. But the speech of neither of these two learned Lords discusses the context in which the principles are to be applied. It is only in the dissenting speech of Viscount Maugham that a reference is made to such a consideration. Indeed at p. 712 of that Report, Viscount Maugham observes on the principle laid down in the statement of Cockburn C. J.:

"This is not a rigid rule. It is capable of qualification in any particular case. And it is a rule the application of which depends on the true construction of the agreement."

There is nothing in the majority opinion which can be said to dissent from this statement of Viscount Maugham on this particular point. The principle that Courts should uphold the sanctity of a contract makes it all the more necessary in my opinion for the Courts to examine with care the terms and true construction of such contract or else there is the risk or danger of misdirected righteousness in the name of sanctity of contract.

[15] From the point of view of construction the contract in the particular case before the House of Lords was different from the contract that is before me. As Lord Atkin pointed out at p. 721 of that Report:

"Article 91 was thus expressly subject to the provision of the agreement so far or rather if in any event it should conflict with the provisions of the agreement such as the ten years' term of engagement."

Secondly, Lord Atkin also observed at p. 723 of that Report that the articles in that case gave the Directors "power to dismiss but the power to dismiss is to be distinguished from the right to dismiss." Neither of these considerations is applicable to the present case before me. Bye-law 4 in expressed terms gives "the right" to alter or add to the Rules contained in the Bye-laws. Secondly, the letter of appointment does not make it any express term of the contract of service that the plaintiff should receive any gratuity or that the Bye-laws are to be subject to the contract of service. Nor indeed the plaintiff could come under that provision as at the time of appointment his salary was not of the grade which could come under the operation of the Bye-law providing gratuity.

[16] In my judgment the true construction of the plaintiff's contract of service with the defendant company is that the contract of the plaintiff was "to act according to the instructions and orders issued from time to time and the Bye-laws." The result is that the contract of service incorporated the Bye laws. Consequently, one of the terms of the contract is that the plaintiff gave to the Board of Directors the right to alter or add to at any time the Rules contained in the Bye-laws by virtue of bye-law 4. As gratuity could only be claimed under bye-law 94 it was a term of the contract according to my construction that bye law 94 providing for gratuity could be altered at any time. If, therefore, it has been cancelled as a result of the Board Resolution No. 3 dated 12th October 1935 that was by virtue of the terms of the contract and was not in breach thereof. It is therefore not appropriate in my view to invoke the precedents to show that a Company cannot alter its Articles of Association to commit a breach of contract.

the plaintiff is that even if bye-law 4 justifies alteration, no alteration could be made which affects a vested right and the plaintiff according to him had acquired a vested right. I do not consider that on 12th October 1935 when the Resolution of the Board of Directors cancelled bye-law 94 providing for gratuity the plaintiff had any vested right in fact or in law to the gratuity. The right to claim gratuity is by terms of bye-law 94 could only arise "on retirement". But the plaintiff was in service on that date and had not retired he being retired four years thereafter in 1939. There is therefore no question of vested right. Again whether a vested right in particular circumstances can be altered is in my view a question of construction of the contract with reference to the Bye-laws in a particular case. A somewhat similar argument was advanced in Smith v. Galloway, (1898) 1 Q. B. D. 71 at p. 75 by the learned counsel for the plaintiff and I can do no better than quote the observation of Wright J. in that case at p. 77 of the Report and which observations I respectfully follow:

"Then the second point made by the plaintiff was that if the plaintiff did by joining the Society assent to a subsequent alteration of the Rules he did so subject to this limitation, that the alteration should not affect a vested interest and should not deprive him of any benefit to which he has already become entitled at the time of alteration made. But I can see no ground for introducing any such limitation into his contract. It is a matter of every day occurrence for the Society such as this to make alterations in the Rules. Where the only contract between the Society and the member in the original contract under which he became a member and that as is the case here, provides for alterations of the Rules he is bound by any subsequent alterations that may be made within the power of alteration, whatever the extent of that alteration may be."

Kennedy J. agreed with the observations of Wright J. in that case. In that view of the matter the second argument of the learned counsel for the plaintiff cannot also in my opinion succeed. I also find support for the conclusion to which I have arrived from the judgment of Sellers J. in Yeo v. Stewart, reported in (1947) 2 ALL E. R. 28: (177 L. T. 428) and particularly the observations of that learned Judge at pp. 33 and 34 of that Report. As the learned Judge there says at p. 33 of that report relying on the observations of Rowlatt J. in Page v. Liverpool Victoria Friendly Society, (1926) 42 T. L. R. 712: "the rules here incorporated into this contract do provide their own terms of amendment and alteration and therefore the plaintiff fail on his contention with regard to the contract, assuming of course, that the Rules have been properly amended as required by the Rules themselves."

an employee of a company, by the very terms of his contract of service is to act according to the Bye-laws of the Company, and one of such Bye-laws is that the Bye-laws can be added to or altered at any time by the Company, then the employee is bound by any alteration or addition of the Bye-laws that may duly be made by the Company even though such addition or alteration was made after the contract of service. This is so even if it means that the employee thereby loses any vested right i. e. any right acquired by him before such alteration or addition. The problem is never met by raising in the abstract the principle of sanctity of contract or the doctrine of vested rights. The problem in my opinion is always a problem of construction and interpretation of the true meaning and effect of the terms of a particular contract of service or employment and of the scope of the relevant Byelaws in relation thereto. Accordingly I answer the issue in the affirmative.

[19] This disposes of all the arguments of Mr. Mullick advanced on behalf of the plaintiff. Mr. Mullick has not contended that the alteration of the Rules by cancelling the provision for gratuity has not been lawfully made. It is necessary here to observe further that Mr. G. K. Mitter for the Company makes it quite clear that if any argument was going to be made on behalf of the plaintiff that the Bye-law relating to gratuity has not been properly or lawfully cancelled under bye-law 4 then Mr. Mitter will raise the plea of estoppel as raised in para. 11 of the written statement. It is not necessary for me to deal with this point as Mr. Mullick has accepted the position that he does not contest the proposition that bye-law 94 has been properly and duly cancelled under bye-law 4 and it is on that basis that Mr. Mitter's concession on the point of estoppel has been made. It is therefore not necessary for me to decide whether bye-law 94 was duly and properly cancelled by virtue of bye-law 4. I need observe that the plea of estoppel which Mr. Mitter gave up was based on the contention that the service of the plaintiff was non-pensionable and was such that it did not attract any pension or gratuity at all. In fact as the plaintiff admits in para. 12 of the plaint he was duly paid the Provident Fund which is admitted at the bar to be a sum of Rs. 12,911-1.0 when he was retired in the year 1939. The defendant's contention on the ground of estoppel is that having taken benefit of payment of Provident Fund which according to the defendant the plaintiff was entitled to by nature of his service the plaintiff could not claim the double benefit of both the Provident Fund and the gratuity. Indeed under ch. XII of the Bye laws the distinction was clearly made between the superior service which alone was pensionable and entitled to gratuity, and the upper and lower subordinate staff which was non-pensionable under Ch. XIII of the Bye-laws and entitled only to Provident Fund. I need therefore only record the fact in the judgment that Mr. G. K. Mitter learned counsel for the defendant has given up the point of estoppel only on the basis that Mr. Mullick on behalf of the plaintiff concedes that bye-laws 85 and 94 could be lawfully cancelled under bye-law 4.

[20] In the circumstances the suit fails and is dismissed. The defendant would have been entitled to costs. But Mr. Mullick submits that the pluintiff may be relieved from costs. Mr. G. K. Mitter consents to give up costs. Having regard to such consent I make no order as to costs in this suit.

[21] I direct the two printed books containing the bye-laws one published in 1923 and the other published in 1929 with amendment slips be made exhibits in this suit, as both the learned counsel on either side have relied on them in their argument.

K.S.

Suit dismissed.

A. F. O. D. No. 101 of 1948, D/- 7-4-1949, from judgment and decree of Clough J., D/- 14-7-1948.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), S. 22 — Partners of firm on record either as plaintiff or defendant —

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, O. 30, R. 9.

Where A, one of the two partners A and B of firm X, sues B and C who are partners of firm Z, the suit is properly constituted and the addition of firm X as plaintiff is not necessary as all the partners of the firm X are on record either as plaintiff or as defendant and the Court will adjust the rights of the partners by giving a declaration that A and B as partners of firm X will be entitled to the relief in proportion to their shares in the firm. Order 30, R. 9, Civil P. C. does not prevent the Court from making an order so as to give appropriate relief when all the necessary parties are before it.

Chatterji J.—This is an appeal from a judgment and decree of Clough J. dated 14th July 1948, whereby he dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

[2] Three persons, viz., Radhakissen Bagla, Ramniwas Bagla and B. B. Nadodwala, carried on business under the name and style of "Bagla Minerals Company". The said Mr. Nadodwala and one Mr. Haq carried on business in partnership under the name and style of "Behar Mining Company." They were also owners of a colliery known as East Chasnalla Colliery.

[3] According to the plaintiffs on 12th December 1942, the Bagla Minerals Company (hereinafter called the plaintiff firm) agreed to buy and the defendants in their firm of Behar Mining Company (hereinafter called the defendant firm) agreed to sell 2,600 tons of coal on the following terms: (a) 600 tons of coal lying at East Chasnalla Colliery at Rs. 12 per ton f. o. r., Jharia; (b) 2,000 tons Golukhadih Steam Coal which had been bought from another concern of Nadadwala called the Bengal Transmarine Company at Rs. 11 per ton f. o. r., Jharia; (c) Delivery of 2,600 tons was to be given by 31st March 1943 and the goods were to be loaded in wagons provided by the East Chasnalla Colliery out of their own allotment to the extent of 60 wagons per month; (d) The plaintiff firm was to pay to the defendant firm the full value of 600 tons in advance. They were also to deposit Rs. 4,000 with the defendant firm against the value of 2,000 tons of coal as and by way of an advance.

[4] The plaintiff firm in pursuance of the contract paid a sum of Rs. 7,200 to the defendant firm for the total value of 600-tons in advance and on the next day they paid a further sum of Rs. 4,000 to the defendant firm being the advance against the said 2,000 tons.

[5] According to the plaintiff firm there was subsequent variation of the terms of the contract and it was agreed that (a) the defendant firm would sell only 600 tons of steam coal lying at East Chasnalla Colliery for and on account of the plaintiff firm, (b) the defendant firm would supply soft coke in place of steam coal and (c) the defendant firm would pay the sale proceeds of 600 tons to the plaintiff firm after deducting loading charges and other expenses.

(7) The suit was instituted originally by only two plaintiffs, viz., Radhakissen Bagla and Ramniwas Bagla against Nadadwala and Huq who were described as carrying on business in partnership under the name and style of Behar Mining Company. There was a claim for account in respect of the sale of 600 tons of steam coal and for delivery of the coal still un delivered or the value thereof and for damages. There was also a claim for the refund of the sum of Rs. 4,000 which had been advanced as aforesaid by the plaintiff firm to the defendant firm.

[8] The defence was principally directed against the subsequent agreement as pleaded by the Baglas. The defendants, however, admitted that there was some kind of variation in 1943 but according to the defendants the terms settled were different and the terms as arranged were set out in para. 10 of the written statement.

[9] On the main issue of this case, namely, issue 6, as to the variation of the original contract of 12th December 1942, my learned brother Clough J. did not accept the evidence adduced by the plaintiffs. His finding is that the plaintiffs failed to prove that there was any agreement of the kind alleged by them. He also held that what really happened was that the original contract was varied by consent. The total quantity was reduced to 500 tons and the price was also reduced to Rs. 11.8-0 per ton. But the learned Judge did not accept the evidence of Nadawala that it was agreed between the parties that the plaintiffs would not be entitled to refund of Rs. 11,200 which had been already paid by them. In his careful judgment, the learn. ed Judge pointed out, and in our opinion correctly, that no such term was mentioned in the correspondence and was inconsistent with the bill dated 24th May 1943 which had been submitted by the defendant firm to the plaintiff firm and that it was not referred to at all in the written statement.

[10] The learned Judge also held that Behar Mining Company was ready and willing to perform their part of the new agreement but it was the Bagla Minerals Company which failed to perform the contract either in its original form so long as it existed, or, as it was subsequently varied.

[11] The plaintiffs failed to establish the case made by them in the plaint that the defendants had sold some of the coal and misappropriated the sale proceeds and the relevant issues were answered by the learned Judge in favour of the defendants. The defendants raised a plea of limitation which was negatived by the learned Judge. On his findings on the relevant issues the learned Judge dismissed the suit with costs, and refused to grant any relief to the plaintiffs.

[12] The suit as originally framed was instituted on 19th May 1945 by the two Baglas mentioned above. It was contended that they were not competent to maintain the suit in the absence of Nadadwala who was the third partner of the firm of Bagla Minerals Co. More than three years later, the plaint was amended on the application of the plaintiffs and the firm of Bagla Minerals Co., was added as a plaintiff s. During the pendency of the suit, Radhakissen Bagla died and in his place Rameshwarlal Bagla was substituted. The plaint was actually amended and re-verified on 12th July 1948.

[13] Learned counsel for the plaintiffs appellants, Mr. G. P. Kar, accepted the findings of the learned Judge and contended with considerable force that in any event his clients were entitled to the refund of Rs. 8628-5-3 being the difference between Rs. 11,200 which had been paid or advanced by the plaintiff firm and Rs. 2571-10 9 which is the total price of the coke supplied by the defendant firm. We are inclined to accept the contentions of Mr. Kar on this point, although the plaintiffs did not claim specifically in the plaint the refund of both the sums of Rs. 4000 and Rs. 7200. Mr. Arun Sen for the respondents urged that in view of the absence of a specific prayer in the plaint no refund should be allowed. We cannot accede to this submission as it would mean pushing technicality to absurd limits. The learned Judge, Clough J. was referred to Ss. 39, 64 and 75, Contract Act and also to a judgment of the Judicial Committee in Muralidhar Chatterjee v. International Film Co. Ltd., 70 I. A. 35: 47 C. W. N. 497: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 P. C. 34).

[14] That case is an authority for the proposition that a contract which may be "put an end to" under S. 39, Contract Act, is voidable and S. 64 of the Act applies to cases of rescission under S. 39. The right to recover damages in cases where the contract has been rendered 'voidable' by the wrongful act of a party thereto and has been rescinded by the other party is a right expressly conferred by the statute. In Muralidhar's case, (70 I. A. 35: 47 C. W. N. 497: A. I. R. (30) 1943 P. C. 34), the appellant had wrongfully refused to perform his part of a contract entered into with the respondents, and the latter had rightfully put an end to the contract under S. 39 and they were held to be liable under S. 64 to restore to the appellant the benefit received from him under the contract. The learned Judge was right when he observed that Muralidhar's case, (70 I. A. 35: 47 C. W. N. 497: A.I.R. (30) 1943 P C. 34), had no application to the facts of the present case. Clough J. pointed out that "the plaintiff's pleading does not justify the making of a decree on the basis of a contract which has been rescinded resulting in right to a refund." All that the Judicial Committee decided in that case was that where a party to a contract had elected to put an end to the contract under S. 39, he is bound to return or restore any benefit or advantage that he had received under the contract although he can claim damages for the breach of the contract. A liability to make restitution attaches to the party who rescinds or puts an end to a contract under S. 39.

[15] In this case there is no room for the in.] vocation of S. 39 or S. 64, Contract Act. This ist not a case where one party had become entitled by reason of the other party's default to put an end to the contract, nor is it a case where a contract has become voidable at the option of one party, under S. 64. But that is no reason why the plaintiff firm should not get back the moneys which they had advanced when accordto the learned Judge's finding a variation was agreed upon between the parties as aforesaid. There was no agreement that the defendant firm would be entitled to retain or to forfeit any part of Rs. 11,200 which had been advanced or paid by the plaintiff firm. In this state of things it would be contrary to equity and justice to refuse any relief to the plaintiff firm. Clearly they would be entitled to get back as. 11,200 less the price of coal or coke which had been supplied to them. Call it money had and received or money held by the defendant firm to the use of the plaintiff firm or money due on failure of consideration, the defendant firm must repay the difference, viz. Rs. 8628-5-3 to the plaintiff firm, unless the suit is barred by the law of limitation. But the equities between the members of the plaintiff firm have got to be worked out in any event as described hereinafter.

[16] Mr. Arun Sen contended that the learned Judge's judgment was not correct on the question of limitation. In our opinion, Clough J took the correct view on this question and the suit was not barred by limitation under S. 22, Limitation Act. That section reads as follows:

"22 (1) Where, after the institution of a suit, a new plaintiff or defendant is substituted or added, the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party.

(2) Nothing in sub-s (1) shall apply to a case where a party is added or substituted owing to an assignment or devolution of any interest during the pendency of a suit or where a plaintiff is made a defendant or a defendant is made a plaintiff."

[17] All persons who have a joint cause of action must be impleaded before the period of limitation prescribed by the Act. When a suit is instituted within time by some of the persons who have a joint cause of action and other persons are added as plaintiffs after the period of limitation, then the whole suit is barred as the original plaintiffs could only enforce their claims in conjunction with the added plaintiffs. Ramsebuk v. Ram Lal Koondoo, 6 Cal 815: (8 C. L. R. 457). Mir Tapurah v. Gopi Narayan, 7 C. L. J. 251

[18] It sometimes happens that a suit is instituted by some persons and later on it appears that other persons who were necessary parties must be joined. In such a case additional parties may be impleaded but with regard to the parties subsequently added the suit is to be treated as if it was instituted on the day when they were actually made parties. It is a just rule, because a person who may have a clear right against another by lapse of time should not be made to lose such rights for no fault of his. Section 22 was enacted with a view to safeguard such a right.

[19] Here the suit had been properly constituted at the date of its institution, because all the necessary parties had been impleaded. Really the addition of the plaintiff firm was not necessary as all the members of that firm were on the record either as plaintiffs or as defendants.

Rustomji Aspandyarji Sethna v. Sheth Purshottamdas Chaturdas, 25 Bom. 606: (3 Bom. L. R. 227), where Jenkins C. J. passed a decree in somewhat similar circumstances. A Division Bench of this High Court has held that the rule that the same man cannot be the plaintiff and the defendant in the same suit loses much of its force in India where the Courts are Courts of Equity and when all the parties are before the Court and their rights can be determined and adjusted: Mahomed Faiz Chowdhury v. Upendra Lal Singh Roy, 2 I. C. 597 (Cal.).

[21] In the Bombay case the plaintiff, one Purshottamdas Chaturdas, describing himself as the owner of the firm of Gordhandas Bhagwandas, instituted a suit against his son Nagindas and his co-partners who carried on business in partnership in the name of Pathak Shanghavi & Co. Nagindas along with his father Purshottamdas were members of a joint Hindu family and were equally interested in the firm of Gordhandas Bhagwandas. The trial Court passed a decree for the amount claimed by Pursbottam. das against the defendants in respect of advances made by the firm of Gordhandas Bhagwandas to the firm of Pathak Shanghavi & Co. Two of the defendants appealed. Pending the appeal the plaintiff died and his son the defendant Nagindas was substituted in his place. Thus, Nagindas was interested both as a creditor and debtor. Jenkins C J. held that as all the parties interested were before the Court either as plaintiffs or as defendants, the Court should adjust and determine their rights in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience.

shares in the firm of Gordhandas Bhagwandas and the learned Chief Justice held that the trial Court should have made a declaration that they were entitled to the amount advanced in equal shares and that it ought to have passed a decree that one moiety thereof should be paid to Purshottamdas and the other moiety treated as an

on Purshottamdas' death pending the appeal Nagindas as his heir had become the sole plaintiff. The Court of appeal did not pass a decree in his favour even in respect of the half share of Purshottamdas, but only declared that for this amount also Nagindas was entitled to credit in the partnership accounts aforesaid.

[24] Jenkins C. J. followed Bosanquet v. Wray, (1816) 6 Tauntan 597: (16 R. R 677) and pointed out that where an individual is a common partner in two houses of trade, no action can be brought by one house against the other house upon any transaction between them while such individual is a common partner. The learned Chief Justice observed as follows:

"This doctrine is founded on the elementary rule of procedure, too often disregarded in this country, that the same individual, even in different capacities, can not be both a plaintiff and a defendant to one and the same action. While, however, at Common Lawthis rule led to the result we have indicated, the Courts of Equity surmounted this difficulty. Though they observed strictly the rule that a man cannot be both plaintiff and defendant, they did not allow it to stand in the way of doing justice between the parties; for, provided all interested were before the Court either as plaintiffs or as defendants, they adjusted and determined their rights. This is aptly exemplified in Luke v. South Kensington Hotel Company, (1879) 11 Ch. D. 121: (48 L. J. Ch. 361).

"Similarly, we think the fact that Nagindas was interested both as creditor and debtor cannot stand in the way of our adjusting the rights of the parties in accordance with the enjoined rule of justice, equity and good conscience. To learn the goal to which that guiding principle should direct our steps it will be well to consider separately what the rights first of Purshottamdas, and then of Nagendas, would have been had the money advanced been in each case his alone. Now if Purshottamdas had been the sole creditor, he clearly could have recovered the amounts in a suit properly framed for that purpose : had the advance been out of Nagindas' separate moneys, a suit to recover that money would not have lain; for one partner cannot sue for money lent by him to a firm of which he is a member, as the advance would be but an item in the partnership account.

"This we think gives a clue to the proper equitable principle to be applied here. First, we must determine the shares in which Pursbot amdas and Nagindas were interested in the firm of Gordhandas Bhagwandas. In some cases this might be a matter of considerable difficulty, but not in the present instance; for it is not questioned that the two were equally interested in this firm and we think we are entitled to take that as the basis of adjustment.

'That it is within the power of the Court to administer equity on these lines is we think, to be interred from Piercy v. Fynney. (1871) 12 Eq. 69: (40 L. J. Ch. 404) Therefore, we think there should in the lower Court have been a declaration that Purshottamdas and Nagindas were entitled to the amount advanced in equal shares and a decree, that one moiety thereof should be paid to Purshottamdas, and the other moiety treated as an item to the credit of Nagindas in the partnership accounts."

[25] In our view it is within the power of this Court to administer equity between the parties on the lines suggested by Jenkins C. J. in the above case. There is a recent judgment of the Judicial Committee in Monghibai v. Cooverji, 66 I. A. 210: (43 C. W. N. 869: A. I. R. (26) 1939 P. C. 170), where some of the partners sued as plaintiffs and others were joined as defendants. As all the parties interested were before the Court, judgment was given in favour of all the partners.

[26] The two Bagla plaintiffs have each 4 as. 3 pies share in the plaintiff firm and Nadadwala has 7 as. 6 pies share therein. These shares are undisputed. There would be a declaration that the two plaintiffs and Nadadwala as partners of the firm of Bagla Minerals Co. are entitled to Rs. 8,628-53 in the above shares. Out of this amount Rs. 4,582-12-9 being eight annas six pies' share thereof, should be paid by the defendants to the Bagla plaintiffs and the balance being Rs. 4045-8-6 should be treated as an item to the credit of Nadadwala in the partnership account of the defendant firm of Behar Mining Co.

"This order shall apply to suits between a firm and one or more of the partners therein and to suits between firms having one or more partners in common; but no execution shall be issued in such suits except by leave of the Court, and, on an application for leave to issue such execution, all such accounts and inquiries may be directed to be taken and made and directions given as may be just."

[28] In our view, this Rule does not in any way affect the soundness of the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in the Bombay case. Rule 9 of O. 30 reproduces R. 10 of O. 48-A of the Rules of the Supreme Court in England. It simply provides that suits between a firm and one of its members or suits between two firms with common partners can be instituted in the firm name provided the firms carry on business in British India. But no execution will be levied in such a suit except by leave of the Court. In our opinion, the safeguard introduced against execution of decree in a suit coming within the scope of R. 9 is meant to secure an equitable adjustment of the rights and liabilities of the partners inter se as indicated by Jenkins C. J. in the above case. In the "Yearly Practice" it is pointed out that this rule did not alter the substantive law as it existed before the enactment of the rule. We agree with this view and in our opinion nothing in R. 9 prevents the Court from making an order so as to give appropriate relief when all the necessary parties are before it.

Bagla is dead and it is conceded that his son Rameshwarlal who has been substituted in his place is not entitled to his share of the decretal amount except on the production of a Succession Certificate. The appeal is allowed and the decree of Clough J. is set aside. There will be a decree for Rs. 2291.6.4½ in favour of Ramnivas Bagla. There will be a further decree for the said sum in favour of Rameshwar Lal Bagla, but he must produce a Succession Certificate before the decree is finally completed. The defendant Nadadwala will be entitled to credit for the sum of Rs. 4045.8.6 in the partnership accounts of Behar Mining Co.

Minerals Co. which was added as plaintiff 3 in the year 1948 need not have been made a party as all the persons interested in that firm were already impleaded in this suit and were before the Court. If that firm was a necessary party on the date of the institution of the suit, then the suit would have been barred under S. 22, Limitation Act. But Mr. Kar concedes that the addition of the firm was superfluous and he has proceeded on the footing that the firm need not have been made a party. Therefore, there will be no decree in favour of that firm.

[31] The appellants will be entitled to one half of the costs of the lower Court and one half of the costs of this appeal. Certified for two counsel.

In the matter of Tripura Modern Bank Ltd.; Her Highness Maharani Regent Mohadebi of Tripura and others—Appellants.

A. F. O. O. No. 42 of 1949, D/- 26th April 1949, from judgment of Sarkar J., D/- 1st March 1949.

(a) Interpretation of Statutes — Restrictions in heading.

The natural meaning of the clear words of an enactment should not be cut down by reading into the same any restrictions derived from the heading. [Para 6] Annotation: ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., Pre. N. 10.

(b) Interpretation of Statutes — Retrospective effect — Vested rights should not be affected by giving such effect — Enactment dealing with procedure applies to pending actions — Appellate Court can give effect to remedies introduced by statutes pending appeals.

It is a well settled rule of construction that a restrospective operation is not to be given to a statute so as to impair an existing right or obligation. But the law is different with regard to matters of procedure and enactments dealing with procedure apply to pending actions unless a contrary intention is expressed or clearly implied.

Therefore an appellate Court is entitled to give effect to remedies introduced by enactments passed pending appeal. But it must give effect to the same law rewarding vested rights as that which was in force at the time the Court of first instance dealt with the matter.

An iotation : ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., Pre. N. 3.

(c) Barking Companies Act (1949). S. 45 - Banking Companies (Control) Ordinance (1948), Cl. 11 - Scope and applicability - Section 45 of Banking Companies Act, 1949, is retrospective.

Either S 45, Banking Companies Act 1949 or Cl. 12. Banking Companies (Control) Ordinance, 1948 does not affect vested rights or substantive law, but deal with the mode and method in which persons who want a scheme to be approved by the Court have to approach the company ludge in order to obtain the appropriate order. Poerefore provisions either with regard to certificate or report from a bank or any other authority are merely auxiliary to the substantive right which had been onferred by S. 153, Companies Act and in that view S. 45, Banking Companies Act, 1949 would be restrospective. [Para 134]

Therefore where a creditors' application under S. 159, Companes Act for the consideration of a scheme for a banking company was dismissed on the ground that it was not accompanied by a certificate of the Reserve Bank as required under Cl 19, Banking Companies (Control) Ordinance of 1948, the appellate Court before which the appeal against that order was pending when the Banking companies Act 1949, which dissensed with the necessity for such a certificate as a condition precedent to the application came into force, can give effect to it and hold that the application was properly instituted: Case law referred. [Paras 13a, 15]

Sarat C. Bose and R Oh udhury - for Appellants. H. N. Sanyal - for Respondents.

Chatterjee J. — This is an appeal from a judgment of Sarkar J dated 1st March 1949, whereby he dismissed an application presented by a number of creditors of the Tripura Modern Bank Ltd., under 8. 153 Companies Act.

121 This Bank had a subscribed capital of Rs. 22,50,000 and a paid up capital of Rs. 15,54 000. It was made a scheduled bank in the year 1945, but it got into difficulties thereafter. In the petition it was stated that by reason of various difficulties and the change in the political situation the business of the company was affected and it had to meet liabilities to the extent of over two crores of rupees Owing to the suspension of business of a number of banks in Calcutta which were also scheduled banks, the company was unable to meet heavy demands and it was not possible for the bank to make further payments without realising its investments.

[3] The petition discloses that the situation is really serious. The liability of the Bank on the date of the presentation of the petition was over two crores and three lacs of rupees and it says that it has assets valued over two crores and fifteen lace of rupees. But these facts have got to be ascertained on proper materials. Its cash balance is practically expansived and it had therefore to approach the Court with an application for a moratorium under S. 277 (n), Companies Act. The Court admitted the petition and adjourned the same till 24th January when a petition for winding up of the bank was fixed for hearing.

[4] On 24th January the Court made an order for winding up and appointed a member of the Bar as liquidator. Thereafter the present petition under S. 153 was put forward for the consideration of a scheme by Her Highness Maharani Regent of Tripura and sixty-seven other creditors whose total claims amounted to over ten lace of rupees.

[5] The main difficulty in the way of the petitioner was Cl. 12. Banking Companies (Control) Ordinance, 1948 (Ordinance No. XXV [25] of 1948). Under Cl. 12:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force — (a) no Court shall entertain an application for sanctioning a compromise or arrangement between a banking company and its creditors.... unless the application made in respect thereof is accompanied by a report of the Reserve Bank certifying that such compromise or arrangement is not detrimental to the interests of the depositors of such company."

Sarkar J. in a very careful judgment dealt with the arguments put forward by Mr. S. C. Bose in support of the application. Mr. Bose contended that on a proper construction Cl. 12 was restricted to an application for sanctioning a scheme or compromise resulting in an amalgamation and to amalgamations by banking companies outside Court. There was some justification for putting forward this argument on the part of Mr. Bose, because Cl. 12 had a heading which was in the following terms: "Restrictions on amalgamation."

cited before him Sarkar J. held, and in my opinion rightly, that the heading was somewhat misleading and he refused to cut down the natural meaning of the clear words of the enactment by reading into the same any restrictions derived from the heading. The learned Judge pointed out with considerable force that if the Court was to accede to Mr. Bose's contention, it would make Cl. 12 practically nugatory. In our opinion Sarkar J. was justified in refusing the application as he did, in view of the Ordinance then in force.

[7] On appeal, it was contended by Mr. S. C. Bee on behalf of the appellants that in view of the change in the law the Court of appeal is entitled to take into consideration the legislative changes effected after the decision given by Sarkar J. Pending appeal the law on the point has been changed and now an application under S 163 can be entertained by the Court without any report or certificate of the Reserve Bank of India. The alteration in the law was effected by the Banking Companies Act, 1949 (Act X [10] of 1949) which received the assent of the Governor-General on 10th March 1949. According to its preamble it is an Act to consolidate and amend the law relating to banking companies. Under S. 45 of this Act

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force — (a) no Court shall sanction a compromise or arrangement between a banking company and its creditors, unless the compromise or arrangement is certified by the Reserve Bank as not being detrimental to the interests of the depositor of such company."

[8]. In support of his contention Mr. Bose referred to a judgment of the Federal Court in Lachmeshwar Prasad v. Keshwar Lal 1940 F. C. R. 84: A. I. R. (28) 1941 F. C. 5. In that case the Patna High Court had declared S. 11, Bihar Money-lenders Act (act III [3] of 1938) to be ultra vires. An appeal was preferred to the Federal Court. During the pendency of the appeal in the Federal Court, the Bihar Money-lenders Act (III [3] of 1938) was repealed and re-enacted as Act VII [7] of 1939. The appellants before the Federal Court sought to claim the benefit of the change in the legislation, that is, S. 7 of the Act of 1939. The learned Advocate-General of India, Sir Brojendra Mitter, urged that the Federal Court ought not to take any notice of the legislative changes which had supervened since the decision on appeal was given; but the Federal Court declined to accede to his argument and took into consideration the subsequent legislative alteration. The learned Judges pointed out that the hearing of an appeal under the procedural law of India is in the nature of a re-hearing and therefore in moulding the relief to be granted in a case on appeal the appellate Court is entitled to take into account facts and events which have come into existence after the decree appealed against. An appellate Court is competent therefore to take into account legislative changes since the decision in appeal and its powers are not confined only to see whether the lower Court's decision was correct according to the law as it stood when its decision was given. Accordingly the Federal Court gave effect to S. 7 of the Act of 1939 and the appellants were given the benefit of that section. It is to be observed, however, that the latter Bihar Act had in terms been made retrospective and therefore the Federal Court was in a position to give effect to the law as enacted by the later statute.

[9] Mr. H. N. Sanyal, learned counsel for the liquidator, has pointed out with considerable force that the position is different when the later enactment is not made retrospective. He referred us to a judgment of Lord Wright in Inre a Debtor (No. 490 of 1935), (1936): Ch. 237: (105 L. J. Ch. 129). In that case the argument rested upon a construction of the Bankruptcy statutes. Under S. 125, subs. (1), Bankruptcy Act of 1914:

Every married woman who carries on a trade or business, whether separately from her husband or not, shall be subject to the bankruptcy laws as if she were a feme sole."

A married woman entered into a large number of speculative Stock Exchange transactions with the petitioning creditors and was indebted to a very large extent. The creditors obtained judgment against her. The creditorsthen petitioned for a receiving order. The debtor disputed the petition on the ground that she was a married woman who was not carrying on a trade or business within the meaning of S. 125 of the Act of 1914. The Registrartion held that the transactions in which the debtor had been engaged constituted the carrying on by her of a business within the meaning of S. 125 and made a receiving order against her. Then an appeal was preferred. During the pendency of the appeal, the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 was passed. It was provided by S. 1 (d) of the Act of 1935 that a married woman shall be "subject to the law relating to bankruptcy in all respects as if she were a feme sole". By Sch. II of that Act S. 125, Bankruptcy Act of 1914 was repealed and by S. 4, sub.s. (1) it was provided as follows:

"Nothing in this Part of this Act shall enable any judgment or order against a married woman in respect of a contract entered into or debt or obligation incurred before the passing of this Act, to be enforced in bankruptcy . . . " trar was right in holding that the transactions in question constituted the carrying on by the debtor of a business within S. 125 (1) of the Act of 1914. An argument was advanced before the Court of Appeal on the basis of the new legislation which altered the law. Lord Wright in negativing that argument observed as follows:

"The same reasoning would, I think, justify the Court in proceeding under S. 125, Bankruptcy Act, 1914, even though the bankruptcy proceedings were not commenced until after the Act of 1935 came intooperation so long as the act of bankruptcy was anterior to that Act. Counsel for the debtor relied on Quiller v. Mapleson, (1882) 9 Q. B. D. 672: (52 L. J. Q. B. 44). That, however, was a case merely dealing with matters of procedure or remedies to which a different rule applies. It is not necessary to quote any authority for that distinction save what was said by Jessel M. R. in In re Joseph Suche & Co., (1875) 1 Ch. D. 48: (45 L. J. Ch. 12): 'It is a general rule that when the Legislature alters the rights of parties by taking away or conferring any right of action, its enactments, unles in express terms they apply to pending actions do not affect them. It is said that there is one exception to that rule, namely, that where enactments merely affect procedure and do not extend to rights of action, they have been held to apply to existing rights, and it is suggested here that the alteration made by this section (i. e., S. 10, Judicature Act, 1875) is within that exception. I am of opinion that it is not. This is an alteration not merely in procedure, but in the right to prove for a debt which is not distinguishable in substance from a right of action before winding up, being simply a legal proceeding to recover a debt against a company in liquidation. . . .

"Thus while an Appellate Court is able, and bound, to give effect to new remedies which have been introduced by enactments passed after the order appealed from was made by the Court of First Instance, yet with regard to substantive rights it is well established that the Appellate Court most give effect to the same law as that which was in force at the date of the earlier proceeding."

[11] With great respect we agree with what Lord Wright said in the above case. An appellate Court is entitled to give effect to remedies introduced by enactments passed pending appeal, but it must give effect to the same law regarding vested rights as that which was in force at the time the Court of first instance dealt with the matter.

[12] Mr. Bose conceded that the views expressed by Lord Wright were applicable to the interpretation of Indian statutes. The real question we have got to decide is whether this is a matter of procedure or remedy or a matter affecting the substantive rights of parties. Learned counsel for the Liquidator, Mr. Sanyal, urged that on a proper construction of cl. 12 of the Ordinance of 1948, the jurisdiction of the Court was taken away and this Court had no power or authority to entertain any application for sanctioning a compromise and that the certificate of the Reserve Bank was a condition precedent to the accrual of the right on the part of the company or the creditors concerned to approach the Court with an application for sanctioning a scheme or an arrangement. Mr. Bose on the other hand argues that it is really a question of procedure or remedies and the appellate Court is able and bound, in the words of Lord Wright, to give effect to the new remedies which have been introduced by the later legislation passed in 1949 which really removed the fetter whereby a certificate of the Reserve Bank was made a condition precedent to the Court's entertaining a petition for sanctioning a compromise or an arrangement.

"And although a suitor may have a vested right to a decree, the mode and method in which he is to approach the Court in order to obtain it, and the time within which that or any other step in the cause is to be taken, are merely auxiliary to that right, and may be changed, either by the legislature or by the rules and orders of the Court, without any infringement of the right itself."

[13a] In that case the learned Judge observed that the later statute applied to pending actions as it really dealt with the mode and method in which a litigant was to approach the Court. In my view the relevant sections of the above statutes do not affect vested rights or substantive law, but deal with the mode and method in which persons who wanted a scheme to be approved by the Court had to approach the company Judge in order to obtain the appropriate order. Therefore provisions either with regard to certificate or report from a bank or any other authority were merely auxiliary to the substantive right which had been conferred by S. 153, Companies Act. In that view the later legislation would be retrospective.

[14] The rule of construction is well settled. Retrospective operation is not to be given to a statute so as to impair an existing right or obligation. But the law is different with regard to matters of procedure. In re Athlumney, (1898) 2 Q. B. 547 : (67 L. J. Q. B. 935). No person has a vested right in procedure and if the Legislature alters the mode of procedure a litigant has to proceed according to the altered mcde. Enactments dealing with procedure apply to pending actions unless a contrary intention is expressed or clearly implied.

[15] In this case no existing rights or obligations are being impaired. With a view to meeting the emergency caused by a series of bank crises the Ordinance was enacted so as to help the Court with some prima facie evidence in the form of a certificate recommending the favourable consideration of a scheme. But that report or certificate was not binding on the Court. In my opinion the later statute which! dispenses with such certificate at the initial stage does not impair or abrogate any substantive right but deals with the method or manner of invoking the Court's jurisdiction under S. 153 Companies Act. Braund J. in the case of Benares Bank Ltd. v. Shri Sri Prakasha Bhagawan Das, A. I. B. (33) 1946 ALL. 269: (I.L.R. (1946) ALL. 461) had to consider the effect of the amendment of S. 285 (1), Companies Act by Act XXII [22] of 1936. The learned Judge observed that the real question was whether there was an alteration of substantive law as opposed to a mere law of procedure, that is, whether there was an intention adversely to affect the subject in the sense of depriving him of some accrued right or interest. If it is a mere alteration of procedure, then the statute is retrospective. But if it is a question of taking away the accrued right or interest of the subject, then the statute should not be given retrospective effect.

[16] In my view the later statute of 1949 has not abrogated or taken away any vested or accrued right. It has only regulated procedure and there is no alteration of the substantive law on the subject affecting the rights of parties.

[17] I would refer to a judgment of Sir Charles Sargent C. J. and Candy J. in Balkrishna Pandharinath v. Bapu Yesaji, 19 Bom. 204 Under 8. 254, Civil P. C. of 1882 uncertified adjustments could not be recognised by any Court. That section was altered by S. 27, Amending Act of 1888 by which uncertified adjustments could be recognised by Courts other than the Court executing the decree. The question was whether the later statute was applicable to adjustments previous to the Amending Act. The learned Chief Justice held that the effect of that section was to alter the practice or procedure of the Code. The ordinary rule is that changes in matters of procedure are retrospective. The same principle is applicable here and as the rights of parties are not being taken away or impaired, it is our duty to give effect to the subsequent change in the law relating to procedure and the appellants should be given the benefit of S. 45 of Act X [10] of 1949.

[18] The order of Sarkar J. is set aside and this case will go back to the learned company Judge, Sinha J., who will give the appropriate directions with regard to the necessary advertisements and the summoning of the requisite meetings. Lisa The Official Liquidator will be entitled to the costs of this appeal as between attorney and client. Mr. Bose's clients will bear their own costs of this appeal. Certified for two counsel.

[20] An order for stay was granted by this Court which only asked the liquidator not to distribute the assets nor to sell any furniture. But otherwise the liquidator was to function as such. There is a question as to whether advertisements with regard to winding up should be forthwith published or not. Necessary directions will be obtained from Sinha J. in that behalf.

There was a proceeding by Dayal Chand Dey and Murari Mohan Dey under Chap. He also in his application made some reference to S. 18 of that Act (which appears to me to have no bearing on the present question at all) and made a number of somewhat strange prayers which it is not necessary to set out; but his principal prayer was that a notice be issued on the opposite party, namely, the plaintiffs and defendant in the proceeding under Chap. [3] The learnd Registrar has remarked in his order: "As there is no special provision that the substantive right granted to a sub-tenant under S 11 (3) West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1948 can be enforced by an application in this Court, the Small Cause Court cannot entertain the matter."

[4] He has stated further that "the applicant has, therefore, to bring a regular suit in the Hon'ble High Court and obtain an order staying delivery of possession . . . " He granted a short stay to give the applicant time to file his suit.

[5] It would seem that perhaps through some misunderstanding of the effect of the provisions of S. 16, West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, the Registrar has come to believe that some alteration has been made in the provisions of the Act so that the Court now has a power to try a a suit for ejectment; otherwise it is not easy to understand why the order is passed in the form quoted above that the suit was decreed by con. sent The position has been discussed in the case of Amulya Ratan v. Meghmala Dutt, 53 C. W. N. 474. The proceedings under Chap. VII, are not a suit and indeed, S. 14 of the Act, under whose provisions power can be conferred on the Registrar to deal with such proceedings, specially provides that for the purpose of that section only that shall be deemed to be a suit. The point is of some importance in considering whether the learned Registrar is correct in saying that there is no provision that rights of the subtenant under S. 11 (3), West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act can be enforced by an application in the Court of Small Causes.

[6] In my opinion, the matter is provided for in 8. 48, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, which lays down that in all proceedings under Chap. VII, the Small Cause Court shall "as far as may be and except as berein otherwise.

"as far as may be and except as herein otherwise provided follow the procedure prescribed for a Court of first instance by the Code of Civil Procedure."

Ordinarily, the Small Cause Court by virtue of the provisions of S. 19 (d) of the Act, which bars the Court's jurisdiction in suits for recovery of immovable property, has nothing to do with immovable property either in suits or in execution. But there are some special provisions in the Act which do result in the Court having some jurisdiction in respect of immovable property. One provision is 8. 28 dealing with a matter of structures attached to immoveable property and other provisions are in Chap. VII. Chapter VIII also relating to distresses gives special procedure for the recovery of rent due which, at any rate, brings the Court in its proceeding in the same relation with immovable property. It seems to be a fundamental necessity of natural justice that the party who is not bound by the proceeding in a Court should not be deprived of his possession of property by any act of that Court. As a corollary it is natural to find provision that any person who considers that he is not so bound will have an opportunity, if he finds he is affected by the orders of the Court, to come before the Court and at least to air his objection.

[7] If the order of the learned Registrar, as given in the present form, is correct, then the provisions of the law relating to the procedure of the Presidency Small Cause Court are such that the sub-tenant, although he contends that he is in no way bound by the order of the Court, cannot be heard by the Court. In my opinion, the view of the Registrar is not correct.

(8) The provisions of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act as regards the procedure are unfortunately in a somewhat jumbled condition. Some attempt has been made to clarify matters by the issue in January last year by this Court of Rules of practice and procedure and the like made under the appropriate provisions of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act and the Code of Civil Procedure. In the case of the ordinary Courts, a person in the position of the present applicant would come before the Court with an application under O 21 R. 97. or rather 93, or R. 100 and his objection would be heard. It is probable, as Mr. Mukberjee points out, that ordinarily in the case of sub-tenants the result would be that his application would fail on the ground that it would be held that he was bound in any case by the decree against his lessor, but at any rate there is a procedure provided by which he at least can have his objection heard / by the Court to the order which, if enforced, will dispossess him. In the rules framed under S. 9, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, there is provision for such a procedure in the specific case of a claimant to structures dealt with under S. 28. I refer to the rules in Chap. XXI under the heading "Resistance to delivery to purchaser"-Rule 69 under the heading specifically referring to property mentioned in S. 28 of the Act, and Br. 71 and 73 giving power to the Court to pass an order either in favour of or against the objector.

[9] In the case of distresses under chap. VIII, the Act itself provides a procedure in S. 61 for adjudication of claim cases in such matters by a Judge of the Small Cause Court. Incidentally, the Act itself in that section makes provision that the procedure of the Small Cause Court in cases under S. 61 is to conform so far as may be to the procedure in an ordinary suit in such Courts.

[10] Are we then to say that in the case of a proceeding for recovery of possession under Ghap. VII of the Act the person claiming to be in no way bound by the Court's order has no remedy because there is no procedure providing for him to be heard? In my opinion, the answer is clearly, no, and the reason why no specific rules have been framed under S. 9 of the Act for such a procedure are that such rules could not be framed because of the provisions of S. 48 in chap. VII itself which I have already referred to. The Act itself provides that the procedure in the Small Causes Court in these matters under chap. VII is to be the same as that prescribed in what may be called a mofussil Court by the Civil Procedure Code. In my opinion, this automatically brings into operation the provisions of Chap. (Order?) XXI and in particular the rules relating to the procedure for hearing claims. This is recognised in the form of S. 141, Civil P. C., as applied to the Calcutta Courts of Small Causes by this Court in exercise of its powers under S. 8, Civil P. C., itself. The section as adapted for those Courts is as follows:

"The procedure provided in this Code and in the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, in regard to suits shall, as far as it can be made applicable and except as therein otherwise provided be followed in all proceedings.... in the Court of Small Causes of Cal-

The words "and except as therein otherwise provided" have reference to provisions in the Small Causes Court Act such as those of S. 48.

[11] Apart from the provisions of S. 48, this would make applicable, to all proceedings other than suits, in the Courts, the procedure ordinarily applicable to suits, as is done in S. 141, Civil P. C., itself. But the adapted section recognises that as a special provision with regard to procedure for matters under Chap. VII has been laid down in S. 48 of the Act itself, this Court by adaptation of S. 141 under S. 8, Civil P. C., could not alter that provision. I may add as my own opinion that matters could be much simplified if the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act were amended so that all the procedure could be provided for in one place as it were instead of being scattered about as it is, partly in the Act by reference in sections like Ss. 48 and 61 and partly by adaptation of the Code and partly by rules made under S. 9. That is, however, purely a personal opinion. I merely mention it because it seems that owing to those difficulties the actual provision applicable in the present case seems to have been lost sight of. In my opinion, therefore, the appropriate order that the learned Registrar should have made was merely to point out that the application in the form in which it stood could not be dealt with, but that the applicant, if he considered he had a grievance and a right, and if and when the order of the Court was sought to be enforced so as to affect his right, could come to the Court under the appropriate provision under O. 21 of the Code and he would be heard.

[12] I wish to make it clear that in what I am saying I am not in any way suggesting anything as to what would be the actual result of such an application, or what exactly are the rights of the sub-tenant under S. 11 (3), West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, or what would be proper order for the Court to pass in view of the alteration in the law made by those provisions. The point in this matter arises mainly from the fact that the learned Registrar's order, as it stands, is based on a wrong view of the position with regard to procedure and partly from the fact that my attention has been drawn to several cases in which various applications of various kinds to enforce the right under 8. 11 (3), West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act had been made and the parties have simply been told that that particular method of applying is a wrong one. I have not seen in any case anywhere any suggestion as to what is the correct procedure for the sub-tenant to follow.

[13] The result in any case is that the rule is discharged. I make no order as to costs.

Harries C. J.—This is a petition for revision of an order of a learned Magistrate whereby he declined to hold that certain proceedings were void ab initio.

Magistrate by one Khagendra Nath Haldar alleging that the present petitioner had set fire to a stack of straw on 18th December 1948, and that they were guilty of offences under the Penal Code. It is clear from the order sheet that the Magistrate took no action at all except to send the complaint to the Officer in charge of the Mandirbazar Police Station for taking cognizance. In fact that is the allegation made in para. 2 of the petition.

framed a charge sheet and the case proceeded in Court based on the charge sheet. Later it was suggested that the whole of the proceedings were void ab initio because the Magistrate had acted wrongly and reliance was placed on a number of authorities including a very recent authority of this Court to which I am a party.

(4) It is quite ofear that a Magistrate may order an investigation by the police and it appears to me that that was all the Magistrate did in this case. Section 156 (3) expressly provides that any Magistrate empowered under S. 190 may order such an investigation as mentioned in the preceding sub-sections of that section.

(5) The Magistrate of course can also take cognizance of the offence, examine the complainant and if necessary send the complaint to the police for investigation and report. If as a result of such an order the police submit a charge sheet and proceedings are based thereon, such proceedings, according to the recent authorities, would be wholly without jurisdiction. However, if the Magistrate does not take cognizance, but merely forwards the complaint to the police for investigation and for taking cognizance he acts under S. 156 (3), Criminal P. C., and a charge-sheet can be submitted by the police and proceedings based thereon.

The words "such act as aforesaid" in S. 82 refer to the acts mentioned in the earlier sections and the section governs a decree against the Dominion of India for breach of contract or negligence of a railway. Consequently, where no time is stated in the decree within which it is to be satisfied it cannot be executed. Further even if there is on the face of the decree a time limit for its satisfaction the decree cannot be executed until a report of its non-satisfaction within the time specified has been sent to the Provincial Government. Bhabash Narayan Boss — for Petitioner

Bhabesh Narayan Bose — for Petitioner. Bhabesh Chandra Mitter — for Opposite Party.

Harries C. J.— This is a petition for revision of an order of a learned Judge of the Presidency Small Cause Court, Calcutta, disallowing the objection of the Dominion of India to a certain execution.

[2] On 12th August 1947, the opposite party instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court at Barisal against the Indian General Navigation Company, River Steamship Navigation Company, Bengal and Assam Railway and the Governor-General in Council representing Bengal and Assam Railway. The claim was for short delivery of certain chillies which had been booked from the steamer station of Ibrahimpur in East Bengal for delivery at Forbesganj in Bihar.

[3] The first two defendants entered appearance, but it appears that the Bengal and Assam Railway and the Governor-General in Council did not enter appearance. However on 6th February 1948, the plaintiff obtained a decree in the Small Cause Court at Barisal against defendants 8 and 4, that is, the Bengal and Assam Railway and the Governer-General as representing that railway.

[4] Later application was made to the Barisal Court for a certificate of non-satisfaction of the decree. The Court gave the certificate in June 1948 and it is said that written on the certificate were the words that the decree is executable against the East Indian Railway as it had undertaken to pay the liabilities of the Bengal and Assam Railway and therefore had become liable to pay the decretal amount.

[5] The Barisal Court sent the certificate of non satisfaction and the decree at the instance of the plaintiff to the Presidency Small Cause Court at Calcutta for execution.

Cause Court wrote to the East Indian Railway informing them that the plaintiff-decree-holder had prayed for attachment of certain movable properties belonging to the railway. Objection was immediately filed on behalf of the Dominion of India objecting to this execution as it was the execution of a decree of a foreign Court. Eventually the Small Cause Court overruled the objection and allowed execution to proceed. It is for revision of that order that the present petition has been preferred to this Court.

It is common ground that the Court of Barisal is now a Court in Eastern Pakistan and is not within the jurisdiction of this Court and is not within the Dominion of India. It is now a Court in a foreign country and it seems to have been suggested earlier in these proceedings that a foreign Court could not possibly transfer a decree to a Court in the Dominion of India for execution. Quite clearly the Code of Civil Procedure does not govern any decrees made by a foreign Court and would not allow that foreign Court to transfer such decrees to a Court in the Dominion of India for execution.

[8] On behalf of the opposite party, however, reliance is placed on certain orders which were made in August 1947 when the Dominions of India and Pakistan were created. These orders were intended to deal with the rights and liabilities of the two new Dominions and with pending legal proceedings.

[9] As this suit was instituted on 12th August 1947, it was pending in the Court of Barisal when the two Dominions became independent and were partitioned on 15th August 1947. It has been urged on behalf of the opposite party that after partition the Barisal Court has jurisdiction to proceed with this case as if the partition had never occurred. Reliance is placed on the Indian Independence (Legal Proceedings) Order, 1947, Art. 4 (1) and (3) That Article provides:

"Notwithstanding the creation of certain new Provinces and the transfer of certain territories from the Province of Assam to the Province of East Bengal by the Indian Independence Act, 1947.

- (1) all proceedings pending immediately before the appointed day in any civil or criminal Court (other than a High Court) in the Province of Bengal, the Punjab or Assam shall be continued in that Court as if the said Act had not been passed, and that Court shall continue to have for the purpose of the said proceedings all the jurisdiction and powers which it had immediately before the appointed day;
- (3) effect shall be given within the territories of either of the two Dominions to any judgment, decree, order or sentence of any such Court in the said proceedings, as if it had been passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction within that Dominion."

[10] The argument is that as this suit was pending at Barisal the Court at Barisal had the same jurisdiction over it as if no partition had ever taken place and further that the decree which it passed could be given effect to in either Dominion, as if it had been passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction in either of the two Dominions. What is said is that this decree though made by a Court at Barisal must be treated as a decree made by a Court of competent jurisdiction in India and therefore the provisions as to the transfer of decrees apply and the decree could be transferred to the Small Cause Court at Calcutta.

[11] It was urged on behalf of the petitioner that these proceedings could not possibly be continued against the Governor General of India or the Dominion of India in Barisal. But it is pointed out by the learned Advocate for the opposite party that the case is expressly covered by Art. 12 (1), Indian Independence (Rights, Property and Luabilities) Order, 1947 which deals with the question of Governor General in Council or the Dominion of India being party to legal proceedings in respect of any property, rights or liabilities transferred by that Order. It seems to me that by reason of arts. 8 and 9 of this Order it is immaterial whether the cause of action in this case was contractual or tortious as in either case the Governor General of India did not cease to be liable by reason of the partition That being so proceedings could be carried on against him in the Barisal Court.

[12] It is unnecessary to come to any definite conclusion upon these contentions because even assuming that the Barisal Court can be treated as a Court in the Dominion of India and can transfer the decree to any other Court in the Dominion of India for execution nevertheless Small Cause Court in Calcutta could not execute this decree

[3, It the Harisal Court could transfer the decree for execution it could only do so under the provisions of these various orders and the Civil Procedure Code applied to the transfer of this decree for execution the Code would apply to the decree itself, and it is pointed out that the decree as it stands is inexecutable by reason of 8 82 of the Code.

"(1) Where the decree is against the Dominion of India or a Province or against a public officer in respect of any such act as aforesaid, a time shall be specified in the decree within which it shall be satisfied; and, if the decree is not satisfied within the time so apsoified, the Court shall report the case for the orders of the Provincial Government.

[15] Tue words "such act as afor said" refer to the acts mentioned in the earlier sections and there can be no doubt that this section would govern a decree against the Dominion of India for breach of a contract or negligence of a railway. That being so, the section requires that the decree should have on the face of it a time limit for its satisfaction. Learned Advocate for the opposite party contended that we must presume that the Court at Barisal did everything properly; but no presumption can be made in this case because the decree is actually on the record and no time is stated in the decree within which it was to be satisfied. That being so this decree as it stands, cannot be executed. Further even if there was on the face of the decree a time limit for its satisfaction the decree could not be executed until a report of its non-satisfaction within the time specified had been sent to the Provincial Government, Before execution could proceed three months must elapso from the date of the report No report of course was made in this care because no time was fixed in the decree for satisfaction and therefore the Court could not execute the decree.

did not comply with 8.82 it was not void. It is unnecessary to decide whether the fecree is void or not. But one thing is quite clear that it is not executable in its present form and that is enough to dispose of this case. That is quite clear from the case of Governor General in Council v Piramul. A.I.B (86) 1848 Pat. 179. Whether this decree can be made executable is not a matter upon which this Court can offer any opinion. All that this Court is asked to hold in this petition is that the decree as it stands is not executable and therefore the order of the the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was erroneous.

(17) In my view the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, Calcutta, should not have ordered execution of this decree and his order permitting execution must be set aside.

Sait No. 2278 of 1948, D/- 10th August 1949.

(a) Houses and Rents – West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provision) Act (XXXVIII [38: of 1948). S 11 (1) Proviso (f) — Ejection of tenant—Conditions to be satisfied by landlord stated.

A landlord who files an application under S. 11 (1), Proviso (f) should satisfy the Court on three points: (1) that he "requires" the premises, (2) that such requirement is for his "own occupation" and (3) that this requirement is "bona fide." [Para 23]

The word 'requires' involves something more than a mere wish and it involves an element of need to some extent at least: 26 C. W. N. 499, Rel. on. [Para 14]

Therefore the landlord in order to show that he requires the premises must also show certain circumstances or facts proving some need or some necessity, though it need not be an absolute need or an absolute requirement in the sense that the landlord will not have any accommodation of any description and that he must actually be in the streets before he can demand his own house for his own occupation. [Para 14]

What is "bona fide" under the statute is always a question of fact and the Court with a view to find out whether the requirement of the landlord is bona fide is entitled to look to every relevant fact or circumstance affecting the landlord and his position, such as the nature and character of the landlord's temporary accommodation at the time when he is asking for the decree for po-session, the inscourity or otherwise of the tenure that he might be holding at the time, the fact that he himself is under a notice to quit and the scope, size and character of his requirement. But the hardship which might be caused to the tenant by granting the decree for possession or the fact that tenant on the facts of the case does not need the premises is not a proper or relevant consideration for deciding the question of bona fide [Paras 18, 19 & 20]

Gross unreasonableness of the landlord may in proper circumstances lead the Court to the conclusion that the landlord's requirement is not bona fide. How much unreasonableness will be regarded by the Court as evidence of mala fides on the part of the landlord will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case:

(b) Houses and Rents — West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provision) Act (XXXVIII [38] of 1948). S. 11 (1) Proviso (f) -Object.

A Statute like the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948, is designed to meet the fugitive exigencies of the hour and in doing so the Legislature in its wisdom has still left the land-lord with that remnant of his right, which is an incident of ownership, to be able to evict a tenant, when he bona fide requires his property for his own occupation which the Court will be loath to confiscate without express statutory provision. [Para 20]

S. Dutt-for Plaintiff.

D. K. Sen -for Defendant.

Judgment. — This is a suit by the plaintiff for the recovery of possession of premises No. 260 Amherst Row, Calcutta, and for a decree for the sum of Rs. 705 alleged to be due in respect of arrears of rent from April 1947 to June 1948 and for mesne profits and costs.

[2] The case of the plaintiff is that the defendant was a monthly tenant under the plaintiff in respect of premises No. 26C Amherst Row at the rent of Rs. 47 per month. A notice to quit was given on 26th May 1948 calling upon the defendant to vacate the premises by the end of June 1948. The plaintiff also pleads that he requires this house for his own occupation. He obtained permission from the Rent Controller on 17th December 1947. The suit was instituted on 12th July 1948.

[8] The defendant filed his written statement. The default in the payment of rents is denied. The defendant also denies the validity of the notice to quit. The defendant denies that there is any bona fide requirement by the plaintiff.

[4] In the written statement the defendant has gone further to say that the plaintiff owns and possesses many other properties in Calcutta and does not require the premises in suit for his own occupation. The defendant has imputed a motive to the plaintiff for filing this suit by the plea in para. 7 of the written statement that the plaintiff wanted to increase the rent and because the defendant did not accept the proposal for increase of rent set out in that paragraph the plaintiff wants to turn out and evict the defendant.

[5] Mr. Dilip Kumar Sen who appears for the defendant confined himself only to the issue to bona fide requirement. The only issue he raises is "Does the plaintiff bona fide require the house for his own occupation"?

(6) Mr. Sen does not raise any issue with regard to the notice to quit. Nor does Mr. S. Dutt who appears for the plaintiff raise any with regard to the arrears of rent. The position with regard to the arrears of rent is this that the defendant has gone on depositing all the rents with the Rent Controller up to the date when an order was made on an application under ch 13A in this suit; since that order the payments are being made to the plaintiff's solicitors. Mr. Dutt admits that payments up to date have been made in this way.

[12] In the circumstances, the point for decision is, does the plaintiff bona fide require the house for his own occupation, within the meaning of proviso (f) of S. 11 (1), Rent Control Act, 1948? On the facts I have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff bona fide requires premises No. 26C, Amherst Row for his own occupation.

[13] In my opinion a landlord under the West Bengal Premises (Temporary Provision) Rent Control Act, 1948 is to satisfy the Court on three points, (1) that he "requires" the premises, (2) that such requirement is for his "own occupation" and (3) that his requirement is "bona fide."

[14] The word "require" was construed by Buckland J. in Rekhab Chand v. D'Cruz, 26 C. W. N. 499: (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 223), while dealing with a similar provision in the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920, and the construction that the learned Judge put upon the word "require" is this:

"The word in the Act is not 'desire' but 'require.'
This in my opinion involves something more than a mere wish and it involves an element of need to some extent at least."

I respectfully follow the same meaning and construction of the word "require" in construing that word in the West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1948. Mere wish or convenience or whim or fancy of the landlord will not in my view be enough to show that the landlord "requires" the premises. The landlord must show certain circumstances or facts proving some need or some necessity for the landlord. At the same time the Statute does not say that it must be an absolute need or an absolute requirement in the sense that the landlord will not have any accommodation of any description and that he must actually be in the streets before he can demand his own house for his own occupation. This in my opinion will be taking the most unreasonable and impossible view of the Statute and I do not consider such was its intention.

that the plaintiff and his wife have already got an accommodation where they are living with their family. Therefore, he submits that the plaintiff cannot be said to "require" No. 260, Amherst Row. In my judgment the landlord is not bound to continue his residence at rented premises with all the uncertainties of that tenure. Although he may have a rented and tenanted accommodation, such accommodation in my view of the construction of the Statute, does not prevent the owner of a house from requiring his own house for his own occupation. The fact that the landlord owing to the refusal of the tenant to give up possession has to live in other premises temporarily or in a precarious condition of tenure at some place at the time of hearing is no reason in my view for holding that the landlord does not require the dwelling house for himself.

[16] Sir Norman Macleod, the learned Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court observed in Rustomji Dinshaw v. Dosibai Rustomji, 45 Bom. 1236 at p. 1240 : (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Bom. 34) that the landlord was not bound to accept such precarious existence and the fact that he had such precarious accommodation does not mean that he cannot require his own house for his own occupation. Mr. Sen tried to distinguish the Bombay case by his argument that the words of the Bombay Act are both 'bona fide' and 'reasonably.' The word 'reasonably' does not appear in proviso (f) of S. 11 (1), West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1948. But I do not think that this argument helps Mr. Sen at all. On the contrary, it goes very much against his contention. With both the words 'bona fide' and 'reasonably' in the Statute, the Chief Justice of the Bombay High Court came to the decision that the landlord was not bound to continue residing in the rented premises and his demand of his own house for his own occupation where he can live will be considered to be 'reasonable' within the meaning of the Statute. Even in such a case and under such a Statute the landlord's demand or requirement was not held to be unreasonable. The word 'reasonably' finds expression also in the English Statute although word 'bona fide' is not there. Even under the English Statute, Peterson J. in Neville v. Hardy, (1921) 1 Ch. 404: (90 L. J. Oh. 158), holds that the temporary residence of a landlord because the tenant refused to deliver him possession of his own house is never a reason for holding that the landlord cannot require his own dwelling house for his own occupation.

there is any difference and if so what between our Act and the English and the Bombay Acts. It is also not necessary for me to decide whether the meaning of S. 11 (1) proviso (f), Rent Control Act, 1948 would be different and, if so, to what extent, if the word 'reasonably' occurred in the Statute? That will be dealing with a hypothetical statute and a hypothetical case. It is common learning that in construing a statute no extra word should ordinarily be imported. As I understand, the word 'require' I am content to accept the view and the construction of that word which Buckland J. expressed on the point. This construction came up before the Court of Appeal in Saleh Abraham v. Manekji Gowasji, 50 Cal. 491 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 57) for consideration but neither Sanderson C. J. nor Richardson J. decided the point. Although the word 'reasonably' does not appear in the Statute questions of reasonableness may come in for consideration in deciding the 'bona fides' of the landlord. Gross unreasonableness of the landlord may in proper circumstances lead the Court to the conclusion that the landlord's requirement is not bona fide. How much unreasonableness will be regarded by the Court as evidence of mala fides on the part of the landlord will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. Richardson J. in the Court of Appeal in the decision to which I have just referred expressed at p. 505 of 50 Cal. 491 : (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 57) the same view dealing with almost similar expression used in the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920 when he observes :

"I agree that a landlord is not acting bona fide under the Act unless he reasonably requires the house for his own occupation although there also the Statute did not use the word 'reasonably,' "

Statute, it is always in my opinion a question of fact. The Court in this context and with a view to find out whether the requirement of the landlord is bona fide, is entitled to look to every relevant fact or circumstance affecting the landlord and his position. The nature and character of the landlord's temporary accommodation at the time when he is asking for the decree for possession, the insecurity or otherwise of the tenure that he might be holding at the time, the fact that he himself is under a notice to quit, the scope, size and character of his requirement are all relevant factors that the Court might consider in this context.

[19] Mr. Sen with considerable force had argued about the hardship of the tenant that may arise in this case. In considering the question as to whether the landlord bona fide requires the house for his own occupation, my view is that the hardship which might be caused to the tenant by granting the decree for possession is not a proper or relevant consideration under proviso (f) of S. 11 (1), Rent Act, 1948. The tenant is always entitled to draw the attention of the Court to any factor bearing on the question of bona fide requirement or on the need of the landlord. But any possible hardship of the tenant that might be entailed by the passing of the decree for ejectment is not in my judgment a proper or a relevant consideration lander proviso (f) of S. 11 (1), Rent Act, 1918.

[20] Mr. Sen has argued that the defendant is a lawyer Magistrate who has been in Government service and still is and whose family members reside in this house. The defendant is, a Sub-divisional Relief and Rehabilitation Officer of the Government of West Bengal. At present he says he is at Siliguri and he will remain there until October this year. He has his wife and two children, one is aged 9 years and the other is 13 years who live at 26C, Amherst Row, Calcutta and from where they attend Scottish Churches Collegiate School. In 1943 he was practising in the Bankshall Police Court as a pleader and was residing at 26C, Amberst Row. He joined Government service in 1945. In January 1945 he was posted at Barisal for 2 years and 8 months and he left his family to live in that house in Calcutta. Then from Barisal he was posted to Contai for 6 months. Mr. Datt has on these facts argued that the tenant really does not need the house. On the same facts Mr. Sen argues that it will be a very great hardship on the defendant if he is to leave the house. In my view both such arguments are misconceived. The test that is to be satisfied and considered under the statute is whether the landlord bona fide requires the house for his own occupation and not whether the tenant needs the house or that a decree for ejectment will cause bardship to the tenant. Proviso (f) of S. 11 (1) of the Act engrafts an exception where a decree for recovery of possession can still be made in favour of a landlord who bona fide requires the premises for his own occupation. The Statute thereby recognises a wholesome principle that a man should not be deprived of his own house if he bona fide requires it for his own occupation. Under the Common law or the Transfer of Property Act, the landlord has considerable rights to evict a tenant from his property. A good many of these rights have been taken away by the Act in order to meet the prevailing and acute shortage of housing accommodation for the citizens of this province. A statute like the West Bengal Premises (Temporary Provisions) Rent Control Act, 1948 is designed to meet the fugitive exigencies of the hour and in doing so the Legislature in its wisdom has still left the landlord with that remnant of his right, which is an incident of ownership to be able to evict a tenant, when he bona fide requires his property for his own occupation. This Court will be loath to confiscate that valuable right of the landlord without express statutory provision.

[21] In this case in the written statement as I have said before the plaintiff challenged the plaintiff's case of bona fide requirement on two grounds. The first ground was that the plaintiff had many other properties and houses in Calcutta; and the second ground was as pleaded in Para. 7 of the written statement, namely, that this was a mala fide suit and was instituted because the defendant did not agree to the plaintiff's demand for increment of rent. I find nothing from the evidence of the defendant in support of either of these allegations made in the written statement and nothing in my opinion has been proved in support of any one of such allegations. Both the grounds, therefore, on which the defendant has challenged the bona fide requirement of the landlord plaintiff tail.

satisfy this Court that he bona fide requires the premises for his own occupation. On the facis as I have found above, I have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff has satisfied the three tests required under proviso (f) of S. 11 (1) of the Act, namely, (1) that he 'requires' the house, (2) that the requirement is for his 'own occupation, and (3) that such requirement is 'bona fide' I, therefore, hold that the plaintiff requires No. 260, Amherst Row, Calcutta, for his own occupation and accordingly answer the issue in this suit in the affirmative.

[23] Therefore, there will be judgment for the plaintiff for possession of Premises No. 260, Amberst Row and for costs. Mr. Sen a-ks for some time to vacate the premises Time is granted till 3rd November 1949 to the defendant to vacate. The defendant will continue to pay to the plaintiff's solicitors mesne profit at the rate of rent until the delivery of possession within 7th of each succeeding month for which the same will be due. As the counsel for the defendant says that the defendant has paid all arrears of rent, the plaintiff does not ask for a decree for such arrears of rent. The plaintiff, however will have this direction that he has the liberty to withdraw the deposit of rents with the Rent Controller, if not withdrawn already Transfer referred to in S. 26F (1) includes an involuntary ransfer. Hence where a sale takes place under S. 28. Bengal Agricultural Debiors Act (ViI [7] of 1936), a co-sharer is entitled to pre-empt under S. 26F. [Paras 3 & 18]

Rajendra Bhusan Bakski and Ashutosh Ganguti — for Petitioner.

Purna Chandra Basu - for Opposite Party.

R. P. Mookerjee J. — This is an application in revision against the orders passed by the lower Courts allowing an application under S. 26F, Bengal Tenancy Act.

(2) The opposite party made an application on 17th September 1948 under S. 26F, Bengal Tenancy Act on the allegation that he was a cosharer with one Kanir de Das in respect of an occupancy holding which had been sold on 22nd March 1947 under the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act. Sasi Bhusan Singha, the petitiener before this Court, was a: creditor of Kshirode Das and had obtained an award under the provisions of the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act. The payments directed to be made under the award not having been made within the due dates steps were taken by the creditor under S. 28 Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act. The certificate sale which followed was confirmed on 23rd May 1947 but the opposite party alleged that he had no knowledge of the sale before 9th september 1:48. The application for pre-emption under S. 26.F. Bengal Tenancy Act was filed on 17th September 1948.

[3] Various objections were raised by the decree-holder auction purchaser, Sasi Brusan Singha It is not necessary for our present purpose to refer to all the different objections as only one of those has been uiged before us. It is argued that the sale had taken place under S. 28. Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, and the provisions of S. 26 F, Bengal Tenancy Act are not attracted in the case of involuntary sales. This objection had been disallowed by the Courts below.

of that section

"One or more cosharer tenants of the holding, a portion of share of which is transferred, may, within four months of the service of the notice under S. 26 C, apply to the Court for the said portion or share to be transferred to himself or the meetves."

It is contended that all the exceptions as appearing in clauses (a) to (e) refer to voluntary transfers. There is no indication that the transfer referred to in this sub-section includes an involuntary transfer. It is further contended that the reference to S 26.0 in sub-s. (1) is only for the purpose of attracting such cases where a notice is to be given under S. 26.0 of the Act. Section 260 does not control S. 26.F.

[5] In our view, such a restricted interpretation of S. 26F is not warranted. Reference may be made in this connection to the other parts of 8 26F and also to the provisions contained in 8 26C of the Act. Before we refer to the provisions contained in 8 26.C it may be noticed that in sub-s. (11) of s. 24F, it is provided:

"In this section 'transfer' does not include simple or usufructuary moregage or mortgage by conditional sale until a decree or order absolute for foreclosure is made."

If it were the intention of the Legislature to restrict the term 'transfer' only to cases of voluntary sales there would have 'een no neces sity of excluding simple or usuffuctuary mortgage or mortgage by conditional sale until a decree or order absolute for foreclosure is made. Let us take the case of a morigage by conditional sale. Title passes on the final de ree for foreclosure being passed. If the passing of such a decree for foreclosure is deemed to be a transfer under S 26F it is difficult to support the contention that only voluntary transfers were taken into consideration in this section. If a transfer which takes place on the passing of a decree absolute for foreclosure is not saved under sub.s. (11) of 8 26F it cannot be contended that transfers by inv lying sales were not provided for in this section.

(5) This interpretation is, however, further supported if reference is made to the provisions contained in S. 26-C of the Act. In subs (1) of S. 26 F, reference is made to S 26 C, no doubt, for the purpose of determining the period within which an application for the exercise of the right of pre-emption is to be filed. But if reference is made to some of the provisions contained in S. 26-C of the Act, it will be patent that this latter section has to be read along with S. 26-F

[6] The opening words in sub-s. (1) of S. 260 refer to "every transfer" and the exceptions made to such transfers as "in the case of a bequest or a sale in execution of a decree or of a certificate signed under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913" unmistakably indicate that the term 'transfer' as used in this sub-section is in the widest sense. The transfer referred to includes not only a sale effected by acts of parties, but also those effected through Court.

[7] The service of notice is made incumbent in the case of all transfers as provided for in the different sub-sections following sub-s. (1). Sub-s. (1) provides for the service of the notice of the transfer at the time when the document is registered under the Registration Act. Sub s. (2) provides for cases where title passes by a bequest, and no probate is to be granted or letters of administration issued until steps are taken for the service of notice of such a transfer. The notice in this case, however, is limited to a notice to the landlord and not to the other co-sharers.

[8] Sub section (8) provides that a Court or Revenue Officer shall not confirm a sale of either the entire or portion of a holding until the purchaser or the mortgages files copy of a notice to be served and takes other steps as required under subs. (1).

(9) Sub-section (4) specifically provides in respect of cases where a portion or a chare of an occurancy holding is transferred and is in the following terms:

"If the transfer of a portion or share of such a holding be one to which the provisions of subts. (1) of S. 26F apply, there shall be filed notices giving particulars of the transfer n the prescribed form together with process fees prescribed for the service thereof on all the co sharer tenants of the said holding who are not parties to the transfer."

It will be noticed that sub-s (4) is made applicable only in such cases where the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 26F are attracted. Notices to the co-sharers must be given under sub s. (4) Taken along with sub-s. (5) the duty is cast upon the Court or the Revenue Officer or the Registering authority, as the case may be; and the duty of the landlord is to register the names of all the transferees.

(10) Further, in sub-s. (6) the word 'transfer' is interpreted; and for 8 260 'transfer' does not include partition or a lease, or, until a decree or order absolute for the foreclosure is made, simple or usufructuary mortgage or mortgage by conditional sale. This limitation taken along with the very wide use of the term 'transfer' as appearing in sub s. (1) of S. 260 indicates the purpose for which notice is to be issued. and the right of preemption given under S. 26F is to be exercised.

(11) It is, no doubt, true that a particular word may be used in different senses over the different parts of the Act, but the ordinary rule is that unless something specially appears from the section itself, the same meaning is implied by the use of the same expression in every part of an Act. In ascertaining the meaning to be attached to a particular word in a section of an Act, the proper course would be, in the first instance, to ascertain what meaning is possible from a consideration of the section itself. It a particular section unmistakably shows a special meaning to be attached to a particular word, it is not open to refer to other portions of the Act to interpret that word in a different meaning. If, however, a clear meaning cannot be ascertained from the section itself, other sections may be looked at to fix the sense in which the word is there used. See the observations of Jessel M. R in Spencer v. Metropolitan Board of Works. (1882) 22 Ch. D. 142: (52 L J. Ch. 249).

[12] It is not, however, overlooked that the same word may be used in different senses in the same statute, and care has to be taken to find out whether any special meaning is to be given to any particular word in any particular section.

[19] As indicated already in S. 26F of the Act, there is no indication that the word 'transfer' is used in any restricted sense. It is used in the general and ordinary sense, and if any assistance can be obtained from sub-s. (11) the only conclusion that can be drawn is that the intention of the Legislature was not to limit the scope of the word 'transfer' in any particular manner. If without reference to any other section in the Act the interpretation of the word 'transfer' is to be based, we think that it is the wider meaning and not any restricted one which can be put upon the word 'transfer.'

[14] If there had been any doubt about the scope of the word 'transfer' in S. 26F such doubt is dispelled if we refer to the provisions contained in S. 26C. Although it cannot be strictly stated that S. 26C controls S. 26F, the two sections have to be read together at least for certain purposes as the service of notice provided for in S. 26C gives the cause of action for making an application under S. 26F. We do not overlook the fact that even when a notice has not been served, it is open to a co-sharer to take advantage of the transfer and to make an application for enforcement of the right as laid down in S. 26F within three years from the date of sale. Article 181, Limitation Act has been held to be attracted in such a case. See Asmat Ali v. Mujahar Ali, 52 C. W. N. 64: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 cal. 48 F. B.). The cause of action, therefore, which gives rise to the exercise of the right under S. 26F, Bengal Tenancy Act is not merely the service of notice, but the transfer of a portion of the occupancy holding. The different kinds of transfer which are referred to in S. 260 subject to the exceptions as contained in S. 26F have to be taken note of.

[16] There is no doubt in our mind that S. 260 as it now stands, includes all kinds of transfer. Further, when in sub.s. (1) of S. 26F certain exceptions are being indicated in cls. (a) to (e), such exceptions must be taken to be exceptions to the general connotation of the term 'transfer.'

[16] The word 'transfer' means the passage of a right from one individual to another. Such transfer may take place in one of three different ways. It may be by virtue of an act done by a transferor with an intention, as in the case of a conveyance or a gift, or, secondly, it may be by operation of law, as in the case of forfeiture, bankruptcy, intestacy, etc. Or thirdly, it may be an involuntary transfer effected through Court, as in execution of a decree for either enforcing a mortgage, or for recovery of money due under a simple money decree. The word 'transfer' in its ordinary sense would include all these different kinds of transfer. Reference may in this connection be made to the ordinary dictionary meaning as appearing in Murray's Oxford Dictionary, vol. II, p. 257 : "to convey or make over title, right or property by deed or legal process." Reliance, however, was placed by the learned Advocate for the petitioner on the meaning of the word 'transfer' as appearing elsewhere in the same dictionary—"conveyance from one person to another of property." In the latter place, there is no indication as to how the transfer takes place; there is change of title from one to another but the method adopted is not indicated. Making over or transferring the right which is in one to another may take place as indicated already in one of the three different ways.

[17] In the absence of any words of limitation, a word is to be interpreted in the ordinary dictionary meaning. Even if there was any doubt about the ordinary meaning, from such indications as have been noticed and as appear in sub-s. (11) of S. 26F, and the connotation of the term as appearing in S. 260 we would have held that the limited interpretation attempted to be put on that word 'transfer' in S. 26F is not justified.

[18] In this connection, reference may also be made to the observations made by the Full Bench in Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan, 42 Cal. 172: (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal. 242) and the decision of the Special Bench in Chandra Binode Kundu v. Ala Bux, 48 Cal. 184: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 15). It will be remembered that while formulating the different propositions of law, the Full Bench laid down certain principles when dealing with the question of the transferability of an occupancy holding. Transfers, whether voluntary or involuntary, were both taken into consideration. Particularly in the judgment of Mookerjee A. C. J., in the Special Bench case referred to above, the first proposition, as stated by the Full Bench, was modified and the difference between voluntary and involuntary sales was fully considered; it was laid down that involuntary alienation stood on the same footing as the question of voluntary alienation, and that no differentiation had been made, as detailed in the historical analysis of the case law on the point, between voluntary and involuntary sales. The Bengal Tenancy Act does not provide in the sections referred to any difference between voluntary and involun tary sales. It will not be proper to introduce such a differentiation in S. 26F of the Act unless such differentiation is clearly indicated in the section itself, and there is no such indication.

[19] This Rule is accordingly discharged. There will be no order for costs in this Court.

Civil Rule No. 1030 of 1949, D/-25th January 1950, from order of Munsif, 2nd Court, Alipore, D/-4th April 1949.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 45 - Execution in foreign Court.

A Court in India cannot issue a writ of attachment of the salary of the judgment-debtor residing within the jurisdiction of a Court in Pakistan. [Para 6]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) C. P. C., S. 45, N. 1.

Chandra Sekhar Sen and Radha Kanta Bhattacharjya-for Petitioner.

R. P. Mookerjee J.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by the Munsif refusing to issue an order for attachment in respect of moneys payable by a person now resident in East Pakistan.

[2] The present petitioner obtained a decree from the Court at Alipore against the opposite party who was at that time a resident within the jurisdiction of that Court and was serving as an Inspector under the Calcutta Police. The opposite party having opted for Pakistan as from after 15th August 1947, he is now stated to be acting as an Inspector of Police at Dacca. The decree of the Alipore Court was put into execution in that Court. The decree-holder prayed for the realisation of the balance of her decretal dues by attachment of the salary of the opposite party payable at Dacca. The petitioner accordingly prayed for the issue of a writ of attachment of the salary of the opposite party under the provisions contained in R. 28 of o. 21, Civil P. C. The writ of attachment was returned unexecuted from the Court in East Pakistan with the endorsement that the writ should be sent through the proper diplomatic channel. The Deputy High Commissioner for India in East Pakistan was approached and he intimated to the Munsif at Alipore that the Government of India had not laid down any procedure for levying attachment through the Deputy High Commissioner. The decree-holder petitioner then applied to the Alipore Court for requesting the Central Government for the realisation of the balance of the decretal dues. By an order, dated 4th April 1949, the learned Munsif dismissed the execution case on the ground that the attachment process was not capable of execution in view of the fact that the judgment-debtor was living in another Dominion. It is against this order that the present rule has been obtained,

[3] It is now incontestable that the Dominions of India and Pakistan are now two separate sovereign and foreign states. A Court in India has no authority on any Court or Officer resident in the other Dominion. An order may be passed by a Court only if such an order can be enforced though the person or party refuses to carry out that order.

[4] Further, the provisions contained in S. 60, Civil P. C., read with S. 136 and O. 21, R. 48 of the Code prima facie apply only to Courts in India. This Code is not attracted or is applicable outside India. It is permissible for the Court, as is made clear in the sections themselves, to issue a writ of attachment outside the jurisdiction of that particular Court, but that Court must be situated within India where the Code of Civil Procedure is in force. Reference may in this connection be made to the decision in Mela-Mal v. Bishen Das, 13 Lah. 206: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Lah. 723), where cognate provisions as in R. 5 of O. 38, Civil P. C., relating to attachment before judgment by civil Courts came up for consideration. Even a Court which was situated at Khasgar which was admittedly a foreign ter. ritory, but where a Court had been established under Foreign Jurisdiction Act, 1890, by His Majesty in Council was not even considered to be within the category of Courts established by the Governor General in Council. A Court situated in British India at that date was held to be incompetent to attach property situated in Khasgar. The rules contained in the Code of Civil Procedure are obviously restricted to Courts in India.

[5] Reference may also be made to the recent decision of this Court in Dominion of India v. Hiralal Bothra, 53 C. W. N. 817: (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Cal. 12), where the relation between the two States, and the position and jurisdiction of the Courts situated in the two Dominions fell to be considered. The Court at Dacca comes within the definition of a foreign Court, as defined in S. 2 (5), Civil P. C. The order for attachment is to be sent to the relevant District Court under s. 186, Civil P. C. The District Court as referred to in S. 156 will be, in the present case, if this section be applicable and enforceable in East Pakistan though part of the law of India, the District Court at Dacca. The District Court at Dacca is a foreign Court as being situate beyond the limits of all the provinces of India and is neither established nor continued by the Governor-General. It is not competent for a Court in India to direct a foreign Court, situated at Dacca, to take necessary steps for the execution of a decree. As held by this Court in Dominion of India v. Hiralal Bothra, 58 C. W. N. 817: (A. I. R. (87) 1950 Cal. 12), a decree passed by aCourt which is now in one Dominion cannot be executed by another Court in the other Dominion. The two Dominions are not reciprocating countries as envisaged in S. 44A of the Code and there has not been any intestate arrangement between the two States.

[6] The learned Munsif was correct in his decision that he had no jurisdiction to issue a writ of attachment to Pakistan.

[7] This Rule is accordingly discharged. As there is no appearance on behalf of the opposite party in this Court, there will be no order for costs in this Court.

Judgment. — This is an appeal against a decision of the second Subordinate Judge, Alipur, dated 28th September 1943 reversing a decision of the Third Munsif, Alipur, dated 8th April 1943 in T. S. No. 102 of 1942 decreeing the suit filed by the plaintiff, the Corporation of Calcutta, against the defendants.

[2] The facts out of which this appeal arises are as follows: On 6th October 1931, the Corporation of Calcutta (hereinafter referred to as "the Corporation") leased out a piece of land measuring 10 cottabs 5 chittacks and 14 sq. ft. being portion of premises No. 58/1, Kansaripara Road and Nos. 9 & 10 Kundu Road in favour of one Dulal Chandra Nandan, Secretary of the Bhowanipur Youngmen's Association. An indenture dated 6th October 1931 was executed by the parties. The indenture recites that on 27th March 1929, the Corporation for the monthly rent of Rs. 6 agreed to permit the said Association to occupy and use the premises No. 58/1, Kansari-para Road as play-ground and that the lessee as Secretary applied to the Corporation for lease of a further plot of land being portion of premises Nos 9 and 10 Kundu Road. The indenture further recites that the Corporation on 26th March 1930 resolved to lease the remaining portion of premises Nos. 9 and 10 Kundu Road and 58/1, Kansaripara Road to the lessee at an annual rent of Rs. 10 for playing outdoor games subject to the conditions that (a) no structure was erected, (b) the lessee would vacate the premises whenever called upon to do so by the Corporation.

[3] The terms of the lease so far as they are material for this appeal may be set out as follows: Clause 1-The lessee hereby agrees to occupy the piece or parcel of land described in the schedule to the lease as a monthly tenent, it being hereby agreed that such occupation may be determined at any time by the Corporation by one month's written notice being given to the lessee. Cl. 3—The lessee shall not be at liberty to erect any structure on the land without the previous permission of the Chief Executive Officer of the Corporation had and obtained in that behalf. Clause 5 - The lessee shall, whenever the said premises be required by the Corporation, on a month's notice deliver peaceful possession of the same to the District Engineer or any other Officer of the Corporation appointed in that behalf provided always and it is hereby agreed that if there be any breach of any of the covenants herein contained it shall be competent for the Chief Executive Officer to cancel and determine the agreement and to take over peaceful possession of the said premises as if these presents had not been done.

[4] Out of the area which is the subjectmatter of the said indenture a portion of land measuring 3 cottahs 7 chittaks and 8 sq. ft. was disposed of by the Corporation and possession of the same was made over by the defendants on

[5] On 22nd October 1940, a notice was served upon the defendants by the Corporation by registered post requiring the defendants to vacate and give up possession of the portion of the land then in the possession of the defendants on the expiry of 30th November 1940.

[6] As the defendants inspite of demands did not vacate the land a suit was instituted in the Third Court of the Munsif at Alipur being T. S. No. 114 of 1941 for ejectment and for other

[7] On 17th November 1941, the said suit was withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit.

[8] On 27th November 1941 a notice was sent by registered post on behalf of the Corporation requiring the defendants to vacate the premises on or before 31st December 1941 as the Corporation urgently required the land in the occupation of the defendants for the purpose of extending the roadway and as the defendants had forfested their interest in the land by the construction of structures thereon in direct contravention of the terms of the said indenture. The notice was returned with the endorsement "left." Thereafter, on 15th December 1911 the said notice was again sent by registered post. The registered cover came back with the endorsement by the peon "Refused." The said two covers have been marked as Exs. 2 and 2 (a).

[9] On 24th April 1942, this suit was filed for recovery of possession of the portion of the land then in the possession of the defendants and for damages commencing from the date of filing of the suit.

[10] The defendants were sued under 0.1, R. 8, Civil P. C., as representing all members of the Bhowanipur Youngmen's Association. The suit was contested by defendants 1, 3 and 4 who filed a joint written statement. In the written statement, they denied the service of the notice of ejectment as alleged in the plaint and the validity of the notice and of the service thereof. The defendants also alleged that the covenants in the lease had not been broken by them inasmuch as they did not erect the structure existing on the land the same having been erected prior to the date of the said indenture.

[11] The learned Munsif held on the evidence that the structure had been raised after the date of the said indenture and without the permission of the Corporation and that the defendants had incurred forfeiture under S. 111 (g), T. P. Act. The learned Munsif however held that the forfeiture had been waived by the Corporation by acceptance of and of demanding payment of rent which became due since the forfeiture. The learned Munsif further held that the breach complained of namely, the erection of the structure, was not of a continuing nature and the continuance of the structure after the waiver of the forfeiture was not a fresh breach giving the plaintiff a fresh cause for a fresh forfeiture. The learned Munsif also held on the evidence that the notice to quit had been duly served upon the defendants but inasmuch as no notice had been served under S. 114A, T. P. Act, the suit for ejectment was not maintainable. In the view he held that the tenancy of the defendants had not been validly determined. He therefore dismissed the suit.

[12] Against the decision of the Munsif there was an appeal which was heard by the Second Subordinate Judge at Alipur. The Appellate Court agreed with the Munsif that the forfeiture incurred by the erection of the structure had 1950 C/83 & 34 been waived but held that as the breach of the covenant not to erect structure was a continuing one, the service of the notice dated 27th November 1941 determined the tenancy by forfeiture. He also held that it was not necessary to serve a separate notice under S. 114A, T. P. Act, and that a combined notice under Ss. 111 (g) and 114A was enough and that such notice had been served. The combined notice had not been waived and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to recovery of possession of the land and damages from 1st January 1942 to the date of delivery of possession at the rate of Rs. 10 per annum.

learned advocate for the appellant that the breach of covenant not to erect a struture was not a continuing breach. The breach was a single breach and was complete on the date of the erection of the structure. That breach having been waived by acceptance of rent after the forfeiture was complete, the plaintiff was not entitled to eject the defendants in reliance on that forfeiture. There had been no other breach after the date of the notice dated 22nd october 1940 which entitled the Corporation to determine the tenancy by forfeiture. The Corporation was not entitled therefore to eject the defendants by a fresh notice based on forfeiture.

[15] It has been held that where there is an express govenant to build within a fixed period and the tenant does not do so, there is a single breach which may be waived by subsequent acceptance of rent. See Hillon Landlord and Tenant p. 187, Art. 142. Reliance was placed by the learned advocate for the respondent Corporation on the case of Doc de Ambler v. Woodbridge, reported in (1829) 9 B and C. 376: (33 R. R. 203). In that case the covenant was not to alter or use certain rooms then used as bed. room into, or for any other purposes than, bed or sitting rooms without the license of the lessor in writing and the lease contained a clause of forfeiture for breach of any of the covenants. It was held per curiam that the conversion of a house into a shop is a breach complete at once and the forfeiture thereby incurred is waived by subsequent acceptance of rent. There was however a new breach of covenant every day during the time the rooms were used contrary to the covenant, of which the landlord could take advantage. That case is an authority for the proposition that if the breach of the covenant is a continuing breach, the lessor can avail himself of a new breach after a previous one had been waived but if the breach was complete at once, it was waived by subsequent acceptance of rent and could not be availed of thereafter.

[16] In Powell v. Hemsley, (1909) 1 ch. 680, the lessees built a house in contravention of the covenants contained in the lesse. The question arose whether the breach was a continuing one.

Eve J. said as follows at p. 688;

"It has been argued on the part of the plaintiff that the breach is a continuing breach that there is a new breach of covenant every day the house is left standing. I cannot adopt this view. In my opinion the covenant was broken once and for all when the house was erected contrary to it was a breach complete at once and not continuous: See per curiam in Doe de Ambler v. Woodbridge: (1829-9 B. & C. 376: 33 R. R. 203) The defendant therefore cannot be liable on the footing of a continuing breach."

[17] This case went up on appeal and the judgment on appeal is reported in Powell v. Hemsley, (1909) 2 Ch. 252: (78 L. J. Ch. 741).

Lord Justice Farwell says as follows:

"It was said that this is a continuing breach. I agree with Eve J. that the case of Doe de Ambler v. Woodbridge: (1829-9 B. & C. 376: 33 R. R. 203) illustrates the distinction very well. The covenant there was that the tenant should not alter or convert certain rooms into bed rooms. The Court held the conversion was a breach complete at once. I entirely agree with Eve J. and I think that this appeal should be dismissed with costs."

I therefore hold that the breach of covenant not to erect any structure on the land was not a continuing but a single breach. The breach and the forfeiture incurred therefor having been waived, the Corporation was not entitled to rely on the breach by reason of the erection of the structure for determining the tenancy.

[18] The other ground on which the notice to quit was based was that the land was required by the Corporation for its own purposes. Clause 5 of the lease provided that if at any time the Corporation required the land, the lessee would deliver peaceful possession of the same on a month's notice. (After discussing the evidence His Lordship proceeded:) Further, Cl. 1 of the lease entitled the Corporation to recover possession of the land by determination of the tenancy at any time by one month's written notice being given. It is contended that even if there was no forfeiture, the Corporation was entitled to recover possession by giving one month's notice. Such a notice was given on 27th November 1941 and the tenancy determined on the expiry of the period of the notice.

[19] The learned advocate for the appellant contends that the suit has proceeded on the basis of forfeiture and the judgments of the lower Courts have also proceeded on that footing. No issue was raised as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to possession on any ground other than that of forfeiture.

[20] In the plaint recovery of possession is asked for on the footing of the notice to quit dated 27th November 1941. The notice dated 27th November 1941 expressly mentioned that the Corporation urgently required the land for extending the roadway. Clause 5 of the lease required the lessee to give up possession on a month's notice whenever the premises were required by the Corporation. Clause 1 of the lease entitled the Corporation to determine the tenancy on a month's written notice. It is therefore contended that the Corporation was entitled to a decree for possession if one month's notice was given.

[21] One of the issues framed at the trial was "Was any notice of ejectment served on the defendant Association? If so, is it valued and sufficient?" The learned Munsif found that notice under S. 111 (g), T. P. Act had been duly served on the defendants. He did not go intothe question as to whether the defendants had got one month's notice, as it was not necessary for his purposes, he having proceeded on the ground of forfeiture only. In the grounds of appeal filed in the lower appellate Court, it was complained that the learned Munsif omitted to consider the other condition mentioned in the notice which was itself a good ground for ejectment, namely, that the land was required by the Corporation. The lower appellate Court having come to the conclusion that the breach of covenant was a continuing one held that there had been a forfeiture, and did not go into the other question, namely, whether the Corporation was entitled to a decree, on the ground that they had served a notice giving the defendants one month's time to vacate.

[22] If the evidence on the record was sufficient to enable me to determine the issue, L would have decided the issue here. But it seems to me the evidence is not sufficient. It is true that there is evidence that the letter dated 27th November 1941 was sent by registered post on the said date. The presumption is that the notice; was served at the time when it would be delivered in the ordinary course of post. The presumption is however rebuttable. It is pointed out that the registered cover containing the notice dated 27th November 1941 was returned with the endorsement "Left" which is dated 2nd December 1941. As the lower Court did not consider the question as to whether one month's notice had been given, it was not necessary for the defendants to adduce any evidence for rebutting the presumption.

[23] I think therefore it is necessary that the following issues should be referred for trial to the lower appellate Court. (a) Was the premises now in the occupation of the defendants required by the Corporation? (b) Was the notice dated 27th November 1941 duly served on the defendants? If so, on what date?

[24] The lower appellate Court would take additional evidence on the issues referred to above and return the evidence to this Court with its findings thereon.

[25] Costs of this hearing, will abide the result.

(a) Tort — Malicious prosecution — Infructuous criminal process.

(b) Tort-Malicious prosecution-Prosecution-

Test-Mere filing of false complaint.

The question whether in a particular case there has been a prosecution or not depends on the facts of that particular case. The test is not whether the criminal proceedings have reached a stage at which they may be certainly described as a prosecution, but the test is whether the criminal proceedings have reached a stage at which damages to the plaintiff may result. The mere filing of a false complaint which may fail is not per se such a prosecution. [Para 9]

In an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff can claim damages, either on the ground of loss of reputation or damage to person and property. [Para 10]

Binoy Bihari Sen-for Appellant. Panchanan Pal-for Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the defendant in a suit for recovery of damages for malicious prosecution. The plaintiff's allegation is that he acted as the defendant's pleader in Money Execution Case No. 101 of 1942 and with. drew certain sums of money from Court and paid to the defendant his share of the moneys so withdrawn, on a receipt given by the defendant. The defendant however lodged a complaint before the Magistrate at Serampore alleging that the plaintiff and two other persons had forged a vakalatnama, and on the strength of the forged vakalatnama had withdrawn moneys from Court and had misappropriated the same. The Magistrate thereupon took cognizance of the matter and sent the matter for enquiry to the munsif at Serampore. The munsif issued a notice on the plaintiff, and after an enquiry made by him, submitted a report. On perusal of the report, the Magistrate dismissed the complaint under S. 203, Oriminal P. C. The plaintiff claimed damages for a sum of Rs. 503-11.6 for loss of reputation and expenses incurred by the plaintiff in defending the criminal proceedings started by the defendant. The plaintiff alleged that there was no reasonable and probable cause for initiation of the criminal proceed. ings, and that these proceedings were actuated by malice. The defence was a denial of the material allegations made in the plaint. It was stated that there was no malice or want of reasonable and probable cause. The defendant alleged that he had a bona fide belief that he had not been paid his proper share in the money withdrawn in the aforesaid money execution case; before initiating the proceedings before the Magistrate, he had sent a pleader's letter to the plaintiff enquiring as to who was responsible for the forged vakalatnama and withdrawing moneys and not paying him his proper share.

[2] The trial Court found that there was prosecution of the plaintiff, that there was want of reasonable and probable cause for filing the complaint before the Magistrate; that these proceedings were actuated by malice; and that the plaintiff was a leading practitioner and had suffered loss in reputation and had incurred certain costs. The trial Court, therefore, passed a decree for Rs. 503-11 6 with full costs.

[3] An appeal was taken by the defendant. The lower appellate Court has varied the decree of the trial Court by reducing the amount decreed, by Rs. 200. The lower appellate Court has maintained the decree of costs passed by the trial Court; it has directed that the parties should bear their costs in the appellate Court. Against the decision of the lower appellate Court, the defendant has preferred this appeal.

[4] Mr. Sen appearing for the defendant has contended that, (1) there was no prosecution of the plaintiff; and (2) the order for costs made by the lower appellate Court awarding full costs of the trial Court was not justified.

Is] Mr. Sen develops the first point on two grounds. In the first place, he contends that the complaint was filed against the plaintiff and two other persons alleging a conspiracy on the part of the persons named in the petition of complaint. The offence alleged included an offence under S. 463 and S. 408, Penal Code, but no sanction was taken as required under S. 196 (A) (2), Criminal P. C., to the initiation of the procedings; the complaint, therefore, would not have resulted in any event in a conviction of the plaintiff and his alleged associates; there was thus no valid complaint in the eye of the law, and as such, there was no prosecution.

[6] In my opinion, the fact that the prosecution, if any, of the plaintiff by the defendant may fail does not absolve the defendant of his liability for damages in a suit for malicious prosecution if the other requisite elements are found to be present. In my opinion, the defendant cannot escape liability merely on the ground that the step taken by him was erroneous in law. If, in fact, the processes of the criminal Court are set in motion, and the criminal Court takes cognisance of the matter, the bare fact that the processes may be void on some ground or other does not disentitle the plaintiff from claiming damages for malicious prosecution. In my opinion, in such a case as the present, the conduct of the complainant (defendant in the civil action) is more reprehensible than the conduct of one who initiates criminal proceeding which is not void in law. In this connection, reference may be made to Parli v. Read, 30 Kamsas 534 where it was pointed out that the plaintiff can succeed whether the indictment is good or bad, because, in either case, the plaintiff is equally subject to the disgrace of the initiation of the criminal proceedings and is put to expenses for clearing up his character in the criminal proceedings.

[7] There is another answer to this part of the appellant's contention. It is true that the petition of complaint disclosed a charge of conspiracy and sanction under S. 196 (A) (2), Criminal P. C. was necessary to the initiation of the proceedings. In the present, case, however, the Court did take cognisance of the matter. It may be that the criminal Court might have issued process not on a charge of conspiracy, but on other charges which the petition of complaint disclosed. It cannot, therefore, be said that the entire proceedings before the criminal Court were void and of no legal effect. This branch of the appellant's contention must, therefore, be overruled.

[8] The second branch of the appellant's contention is based on the ground that in point of fact, no process was issued by the criminal Court. The petition of complaint was dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C. It is, therefore, suggested that criminal Court prosecution, did not commence in the facts of this case. In support of this proposition, reliance is placed upon the decision in Golapjan v. Bholanath, 38 cal. 880: (11 I. C. 311) as also on the case of Mohammed Amin v. Jogendra Kumar, 49 C. W. N. 282. It is true that these cases support the wide proposition contended for on behalf of the appellant that if the complaint is dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C. and no process is issued, the proceedings must be deemed not to have commenced at all and an action for malicious prosecution cannot be sus. tained. The decision in Mohamed Amin's case, (49 C. W. N. 282) went on appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and the decision of this Court was reversed: the decision of the Privy Council is reported in 51 C. W. N. 723: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. C. 108). The decision of this Court in Golapjan's case, (38 Cal. 880: 11 I. C. 311) was expressly overruled by the Judicial Committee in the case last cited.

[9] The question whether a prosecution which can found an action for damages for malicious prosecution commences with the mere filing of a petition of complaint before the criminal Court has been considered in a number of cases both in this country and abroad. In the case of Rez v. Wallace, (1797) 1 East P. C. 136, it was broadly laid down that the lodging of information before the Magistrate commences a prosecution which may, if unsuccessful, give rise to a suit for damages for malicious prosecution. It may be noted that the action for malicious prosecution is not founded on statute. The word "prosecution" which is said to be one of the elements for sustaining an action for malicious prosecution has not the same technical meaning which is to be found in the Criminal Procedure Code. The question whether in a particular case there has been a prosecution or not depends on the facts of that particular case. In the case of Mohamad Amin v. Jogendra Kumar Banerjes, 51 C. W. N. 723 : (A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. C. 108), the Judicial Committee stated that the test is not whether the criminal proceedings have reached a stage at which they may be certainly described as a prosecution, but the test is whether the criminal proceedings have reached a stage at which damages to the plaintiff may result. The mere filing of a false complaint which may fail is not per se such a prosecution.

[10] In the case before the Judicial Committee in Mohamad Amim v. Jogendra Kumar Banerjee, 51 C. W. N. 723: (A. I. R. (34) 1947, P. C. 108) the facts were that on a petition of complaint filed by the defendant, the Magistrate directed an enquiry to be made. The enquiry was made not by a police officer, but by a Magistrate, and thereupon the petition of complaint was dismissed. Gentle, J. delivering the judgment of the trial Court felt himself bound by the decision in Golapjan's case, (38 cal. 880: 11 I. C. 311) which was a decision of a Judge sitting singly on the Original Side of this Court. On appeal from that decision, Derbyshire, C. J. and Lodge, J. dissented from the view taken by Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ. in Bishun Pergash v. Phulman Singh, 19 O. W. N. 935: (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal. 79), and affirmed the view taken in Golapjan's case: (38 Cal 880: 11 I. C. 811). The learned Chief Justice points out that when the matter is at enquiry stage, either before a police officer or a Magistrate, ordinarily, the person complained against has no locus standi to appear, and to lead evidence with a view to exculpate himself. Their Lordships, therefore, observed that when proceedings were at that stage, no prosecution could be deemed to have taken place. This view was overruled by the Judicial Committee on appeal from the judgment of this Court. I may point out that in an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff can claim damages, either on the ground of loss of reputation, or damage to person and property. Vide Savile v. Roberts, (1898) 1 Ld. Raym 374.

(11) Unquestionably in the facts of the present case, the effect of the initiation of the criminal proceedings by the defendant against the plaintiff on whom a notice was served to appear at the enquiry stage before the munsif resulted in such damages. The Courts below were, therefore, right in bolding that there was a prosecution which entitled the plaintiff to recover damages in the suit. The first contention raised by Mr. Sen must, therefore, be overruled.

[12] The second contention refers to the order for costs made by the lower appellate Court. In my opinion, though the proper order for costs would have been to direct the defendant to pay proportionate costs both in the trial Court and in the lower appellate Court, it is not suggested that the order for costs actually made exceeds the amount of costs which would have been payable if an order of proportionate costs in both the Courts had been passed. The second contention must also fail.

Annotation .- ('46-Man) Workmen's Compensation Act, S. 25 N. 1.

Phanindra Kumar Sanyal.—for Appellant.

Jitendra Mohan Sen Gupta and Jnan Chandra Ray
— for Respondent.

Harries C. J. — This is an appeal by the employer from an order of the Commissioner for workmen's compensation awarding the respondent a sum of Rs. 441 together with certain costs as compensation in respect of an accident.

[2] The workman's case was that he was employed by the appellant to load certain bricks into a lorry, to travel with the lorry and unload the bricks on arriving at the lorry's destination. It is said that whilst the respondent was travelling in this lorry on some day about seven months before the hearing before the Commissioner, the lorry travelling along a narrow path overturned. The workman who was travelling on the lorry, it is said, was thrown into a tank along side this narrow path and was injured by bricks from the overturned lorry falling upon him. The workman's case was that he sustained injuries in the chest and on left hand, left knee and waist.

[3] The appellant denied that the respondent was a workman within the meaning of the Act and he denied that there was any accident or that he had notice of any accident.

[4] Evidence was called before the Commissioner upon which he held that the respondent had been injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment and assessed the compensation at the sum of Rs. 411 for partial disablement.

[5] A number of grounds have been taken in this appeal and it appears to me that the judgment of the Commissioner for workmen's compensation cannot possibly be maintained on any ground whatsoever. The learned Commissioner has proceeded to decide this case without any reference whatsoever to the provisions of the Act.

[6] In the first place, the Commissioner has decided that the respondent is a workman. In ordinary parlance, the respondent was clearly a workman; but for the purposes of workmen's compensation he must be a workman as defined in the Act. Section 2 (n) defines "workman" as follows:

"Workman' means any person (other than a person whose employment is of a casual nature and who is employed otherwise than for the purposes of the employer's trade or business) who is

(ii) employed on monthly wages not exceeding four hundred rupees, in any such capacity as is specified in Schedule II".

[7] Schedule II specifies a large number of capacities in which the persons who are employed are workmen within the meaning of the term as used in the Workmen's Compensation Act.

[8] The learned Commissioner appears to have thought that the case of the respondent fell within cl. (XXVI) of Sch. II of the Act. That clause provides that a person "employed in the handling of transport or goods in or within the precincts of,

(a) any warehouse or other place in which goods, are stored and in which on any one day of the preceding twelve months ten or more persons have been so employed; or

(b) any market in which on any one day of the preceding twelve months one hundred or more persons have been so employed."

[9] All the evidence amounted to was that this man was employed to load bricks into a lorry and to unload them. Where this loading took place was not stated, and there was no evidence at all that the handling of these bricks or the transport of these bricks took place in or within the precincts of any warehouse or market or in any place, in any warehouse or other place where on any one day of the preceding twelve months ten or more persons had been employed, or in or within the precincts of any market in which one hundred or more persons had been employed on any day within the preceding twelve months. How the learned Commissioner could have held that this man was a workman within the meaning of cl. (XXVI) of Sch. II upon the evidence I am wholly unable to say. It is quite clear that there was no evidence at all upon which it could be held that the respon. dent applicant was a workman and therefore he could not have obtained any compensation under the Act.

[10] A point was also taken by the appellant by way of defence that no notice of the accident had been given by the respondent and an issue was framed giving rise to this question. The respondent gave no evidence at all that he had given his employer any notice of the accident, and it is to be observed that the employer so far from admitting any notice of the accident denied that there ever had been an accident or that he ever had notice of such an accident. Upon that state of the evidence, the learned Commissioner found that there was an accident as stated and that the matter was known to the opposite party in due course; but clearly that is a finding upon no evidence whatsoever. The Commissioner is not entitled to find that the appellant before us must have become aware of this accident in due course unless there is evidence upon which he can so find. According to the appellant he hired this lorry every day and there is nothing to suggest in the evidence that the appellant was ever told about any accident, if an accident did in fact take place. The Commissioner for workmen's compensation is not allowed to guess. He is an officer exercising judicial functions and he can only find facts upon evidence. As I have said there is no evidence at all that any notice of this accident was ever given by the workman or on his behalf.

[11] It is true that by reason of S. 10 (1) (b) notice need not be proved, if it is established that the employer had knowledge of the accident from any other source at or about the time when it occurred. But that the employer had knowledge of the accident requires to be proved like any other fact and further it must be proved that he had knowledge of the accident at or about the time when it occurred. The Court cannot treat notice of an accident as unnecessary, for example, when the employer had obtained knowledge of the accident many days or weeks later. In the present case, however, there is no evidence that the employer ever knew of this accident until this claim was made and admittedly a claim for compensation is not notice of an accident. The Workmen's Compensation Act requires a claim for compensation to be made within twelve months and also notice of the accident unless such notice can be dispensed with for the reasons given in S. 10.

held in this case that the failure to give notice was not fatal to the claim, if he was satisfied that there was sufficient cause for failing to give the notice. The learned Commissioner has not dealt with the matter at all and has not considered whether there was sufficient or any cause for not giving the notice. He seems to have found that no notice was given but as he appears to have thought that as the employer must have got to know of this accident such (sic) was sufficient. The law however requires notice of the acciden and such notice is only rendered unnecessary i the Court is satisfied on evidence that the employer knew from other sources of the accident at or about the time it took place, or if there were sufficient grounds for failure to give notice.

(13) As the respondent failed to give the notice of accident in this case and his failure cannot be condoned his claim was bound to fail apon this ground also.

[14] Learned advocate for the appellant has also urged that there was really no evidence of incapacity or disablement. Admittedly, no doctors were called and the learned Commisgioner has acted upon medical certificates. Medical certificates are the worst form of hearsay evidence. They merely record what somebody who is not a witness has written. There is nothing to suggest that the parties agreed to be bound by these certificates and I cannot see that any order finding incapacity and the extent of incapacity can ever be founded upon a mere medical certificate. The Commissioner also noted that he had seen the workman. The Commisaioner is not a medical man and in this class of litigation malingering and false claims are notorious and I am sure that the Commissioner would find it very difficult to say whether an alleged injury to a joint was real or not. However, all the Commissioner had in this case were medical certificates together with his own obserwation. However, it is not necessary to consider this question further because it is puite clear that this order cannot possibly be sustained and must be set aside.

[15] In the result therefore I would allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Commisainer for workmen's compensation and dismiss the workman's claim.

[16] No order is made for costs.

The words 'subject to the provisions of sub-s. (6)' in S. 82 (7), necessarily exclude whatever other powers of ravision the High Court may possess including its powers under S. 115, Civil P. C. [Para 14]

The power of the High Court to revise an order passed by the Rent Controller or the Chief Judge, the District Judge or the appointed Judge except in the specific cases mentioned in S. 32 (6) of the Act has been taken away by necessary implication. [Para 16]

Hence, an order of a Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes modifying on appeal an order of the Rent Controller fixing the standard rent for certain premises not being one mentioned in S. 32 (6) is not open to revision by the High Court under S. 115, Civil P. C.: 49 C. W. N. 10, Rel. on; A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 427 and A.I.R. (10) 1923 Cal. 169, Disting; Case law discussed.

- G. N. Das J.— The above cases were heard together. They arise out of applications under 8. 115, Civil P. C., hereinafter called the Code. The Orders complained of in these Rules were passed by the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta hereinafter called the Chief Judge, modifying on appeal the orders made by the Additional Rent Controller fixing the standard rent of certain premises under the provisions of the West Bengal Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948, hereinafter called the Act.
- [2] Mr. Banerjee appearing for the opposite party has raised a preliminary objection that this Court has no power to interfere with the orders complained of under S. 115 of the Code. His contention is that exercise of this power under S. 115 of the Code has been excluded by S. 37 (6) and (7) of the Act.
- [3] It has not been disputed by Mr. Mukherjee appearing on behalf of the petitioner that the Provincial Legislature may, by appropriate legislation, take away the powers of this Court to interfere under S. 115 of the Code with an order passed by a Judicial Tribanal of Civil Jurisdiction.
- [4] In order to deal with this matter, it is necessary to refer to certain provisions of the Act.
- [5] Section 32 (1) of the Act impliedly provides for an appeal from an order of the Rent Controller, and requires it to be presented either to the Chief Judge or to the District Judge.
- [6] Section 32 (2) empowers the Provincial Government to appoint a person who has exercised the powers of a District Judge to hear appeals, presented to the Chief Judge and a Judicial Officer not below the rank of a Subordinate Judge to hear appeals presented to the District Judge.

[7] For the sake of brevity, I shall hereinafter call the person appointed by the Provincial Government as the appointed Judge.

[8] Section 32 (3) confers on the Chief Judge or the District Judge the powers to transfer and withdraw cases to or from the appointed Judge.

[9] Section 32 (4) lays down the procedure to be followed in hearing an appeal.

[10] Section 32 (5) provides for review.

[11] Section 32 (6) empowers the High Court to revise an order imposing or confirming an order passed by the Controller imposing a fine under S. 20, S. 33 or S. 34 when the amount of fine is not less than five hundred rupees. The period of limitation is fixed at 30 days.

[12] Section 32 (7) then provides that "all decisions of the Chief Judge, or the District Judge, or a person appointed under sub-s. (2), as the case may be, shall, subject to the provisions of sub-s. (6), be final."

[13] According to the large majority of decisions, the word 'final' means not appelable but open to revision or review. Partha Saradhi Naidu v. Koteswara Rao, 47 Mad. 369: (A.I.R. (11) 1924 Mad 561 F.B.) Phani Bhusan v. Sarat Kumar, 40 C. W. N. 124: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 773) and Manager, Spring Mills Ltd. v. C. D. Ambekar, 51 Bom. L. R. 148: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Bom. 188).

[14] In my opinion the words "subject to the provisions of sub-s. (6)" necessarily exclude whatever other powers of revision the High Court may possess.

[15] Mr. Mukherjee appearing for the petitioner submitted that the insertion of sub-s. (6) was made ex abudanti cautela with a view to provide against a possible contention that as the orders referred to were of a quasi criminal nature, revision was barred. This contention cannot be accepted. The High Court has ample powers of revision even in regard to orders of quasi criminal nature in appropriate cases.

[16] Mr. Mukherjee next contended that the word 'revise' has been used in a wide sense and includes an appeal. This contention cannot also be accepted because in S. 32 itself, the Act used the words, 'appeal, review & revision.'

[17] It was lastly contended that sub-s. (6) is wider in scope than S. 115 of the Code and was inserted with a view to confer on the High Court wider powers of revision in cases of a quasi criminal nature. This contention cannot also be accepted because the words "subject to the provisions of sub-s. (6)" clearly imply a limitation and not an extension of the powers of the High Court.

[18] In my opinion, the conclusion is irresistible that the power of the High Court to revise an order passed by the Rent Controller or the Chief Judge, the District Judge or the appointed Judge except in the specific cases mentioned in S. 32 (6) of the Act has been taken away by necessary implication. It is not disputed that the orders now in question do not come within the purview of S. 32 (6) of the Act. This Court has therefore no jurisdiction to interfere with the orders complained of.

[19] Mr. Mukherjee was at considerable pains to show that the Chief Judge or the District Judge or the appointed Judge acts as a Court and not as a persona designata. He referred us to a long catena of cases in support of his submission. In the view I have taken, it is not necessary to express a final opinion on this question. Conceding that the Chief Judge or the District Judge or the appointed Judge is a Court when hearing an appeal from the order of the Rent Controller, before this Court can interfere with an order passed in appeal the appellate tribunal must be subject to the revisional jurisdiction of this Court under S. 115 of the Code. It cannot be disputed that the appellate tribunal constituted under the Act is a a Court of special jurisdiction on the well settled principle that where a statute confers on a judicial tribunal the power to determine a right or liability which is the creation of the statute but which, but for that statute it would have had no jurisdiction to try, such jurisdiction is said to be special jurisdiction.

[20] The question, therefore, arises whether an order passed by a Court of special jurisdiction is revisable by this Court under the provision of S. 115 of the Code. Mr. Mukherjee relied on the principle enunciated by Viscount Haldane, L. C. in National Telephone Co. Ltd v. Post Master General (No. 2), (1913) A. C. 546: (82.L. J K B. 1197), namely, where a special jurisdiction is conferred on an existing or established Court without more, it will attract all the ordinary incidents of the ordinary jurisdiction of such Court. The rule thus enunciated refers to an existing or established Court. This is also emphasised by Lord Atkinson in the same case at p. 555 where the rule is said to imply simply the question of extending the jurisdiction of an existing Court of Law. Lord Parker of Wadding. ton at p. 562 (ibid) speaks of the principle as applicable to cases "where by statute matters are referred to the arbitration of a Court of record." Mr. Mukherjee also relied on the decision in Hem Singh v. Basant Das, 63 I. A. 180: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 P. C. 93) where the principle was applied in cases where the right of appeal was given to "one of the ordinary Courts of the country" and it was observed that in such cases "the procedure, orders and decrees of that Court will be governed by the ordinary rules of the the order complained of is an order passed either by the ordinary Court of the land or by a Court of record. The position was clarified by Rankin J. in the case of Allen Bros & Co. v. Bando & Co., 26 C. W. N. 845: (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 169).

"From the Act of 1881, from the Letters Patent and from the decisions I draw the conclusion that it is not enough for the purposes of the Code or the Letters Patent which deal on definite principles with a regular order of Courts; that from the limited nature of the powers conferred or from a mere comparison with other Courts, or from possible relationship thereto not yet subsisting, a new Court may be styled an inferior Court. An actual relationship to this Court must be established; an existing thread of connecting authority must be disclosed".

[23] If this view is accepted, then an order made by the appointed Judge which ex concessis must be regarded as a new tribunal will not be subject to revision by this Court.

been extended to all Courts exercising special jurisdiction. Thus in the case of Md. Abdulla v. Giridharilal, 42 C. W N. 507: (A. I. R (25) 1938 Cal. 448), it was held that an appellate officer appointed under the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act is not subject to revisional jurisdiction of the High Court on the ground that the civil Courts contemplated by cl. 16 of the Letters Patent do not cover Courts which are created by a special statute for a special purpose. In the later case of Ram Krishna v. Ali Newaj, 42 C. W. N. 892: (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 688), the fact that the appellate officer was the Munsif ex officio was held to be immaterial.

[25] All the cases cited at the bar were reviewed by Mitter J., in the case of Nur Mahammad v. S. M. Solaiman, 49 C. W. N. 10 at p. 16, the learned Judge lays down the following general rules:

"(1) The general rule is that when a matter reaches a civil Court, the procedure of civil Courts, would be attracted including the provisions regarding appeal from its judgments decrees and orders, but

(2) The general rule is applicable only where the matter comes to that Court as part of its ordinary jurisdiction and not by reason of a special jurisdiction having been conferred upon it."

[26] If this extended view is taken then this Court would have no power of revision under 8. 115 of the Code in regard to orders passed either by the Rent Controller, the Chief Judge, the District Judge or the appointed Judge.

[27] Reliance was placed on behalf of the petitioner on the case of H. D. Chatterjee v. L. B. Trivedi 26 C.W.N. 78: (A.I.R. (9) 1922 Cal. 427), as also on the case of Allen Bros & Co. v. Bando & Co., 26 C.W. N. 845: (A.I.R. (10) 1923 Cal. 169). It is significant to note that in both these cases this Court interfered in revision with orders passed by the Rent Controller under the earlier Rent Act not under S. 115 of the Code but under S. 107, Government of India Act (since repealed). Section 107 empowered the High Court to exercise powers of superintendence over all Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction. As Rankin J., pointed out in the latter case of Allen Bros & Co. v. Bando & Co., 26 C. W. N. 845: (A.I.R. (10) 1923 Cal. 162), in cases arising under the earlier Rent Act there was a thread of connecting link between the Rent Controller and the High Court through the President of the Tribunal because this Court had the power to hear an appeal from a decision of the President of the Tribunal in certain cases. These cases are therefore distinguishable.

regards the power of this Court to interfere in revision with orders of the special tribunal, it cannot be disputed that this Court cannot interfere with an order passed by the appointed Judge under S. 115 of the Code. If we are to hold that the power of revision is not excluded in those cases where the appeal under S. 32 of the Act is heard by the Chief Justice or the District Judge the result would be anomalous. The question would then depend on the fortuitous circumstances as to whether the appeal is heard by the Chief Judge, or the District Judge or the appointed Judge. Such a construction should not be adopted.

[29] In my opinion, a reasonable view to take of the matter is to hold that S. 32 (6) and (7) of the Act by necessary intendment has taken away the powers of this Court to interfere in revision under S. 115 of the Code with an order passed by the Rent Controller or by the Chief Judge or the District Judge or the appointed Judge.

[31] As the question involved was in a state of uncertainty the parties will bear their own costs in these revision cases.

[32] The Rules are accordingly discharged.

Lahiri J.— The applicant for pre-emption ander S. 26F (1), Bengal Tenancy Act, obtained this rule which is directed against an order of the First Subordinate Judge, Howrah, affirming the decision of the Munsif Uluberia, by which the application of the opposite party to join as a co-applicant under S. 26F (4) (a) was allowed.

[2] The facts of the case which are undisputed are as follows: On 12th November 1946, the opposite party purchased a share of an occupancy holding at an auction sale held in execu-Hon of a decree but no notice of the purchase was served on the co-sharers under S. 26C. The petitioner came to know about the sale on 28th March 1948 and on 16th April 1948 he made the application under S. 26F (1). Notice of this application was served on the opposite party under S. 26F (3) on 16th July 1948, and on 19th July 1948 the opposite party filed an application ander S. 26F (4) (a) for joining in the application as a co-applicant alleging that he was a so sharer of the holding from before the date of his auction purchase. This application was resisted by the petitioner on the ground that it was filed beyond the period of special limitation provided for by sub.s. (4) (a) of S. 26F, Bengal Tenancy Act and as such it was liable to be dismissed.

[8] The Court of first instance held that though the application is barred under S. 26F (4) (a) it was within time under sub.s. (1) because the opposite party was not served with a notice ander S. 26C and was therefore entitled to apply within three years from the date of sale under the decision of the Special Bench in the case of Asmat Ali v. Mujahar Ali, 52 C. W. N. 64: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 48). The appellate Court holds that the opposite party being a transferee was not required to be served with a notice under S. 26C and therefore his application was not maintainable under sub-s. (1); but the appellate Court affirmed the decision of the first Court on a different ground by applying the principle of certain decisions given by this Court under S. 26F as it stood before the amendment of 1938, e. g. Gadadhar v. Gopal Chandra, 40 e. W. N. 680 (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 343); Sachindra Nath v. Trailakya Nath, 40 C. W. N. 1023: (A. I. R. (28) 1926 Cal. 576) and Satis Chandra v. Jogendra Krishna, 41 C. W. N. 674 in which it has been held that when on account of the default of the Court the notice of an application by a co-sharer landlord has not been served on other co-sharer landlords within a month, the Court has inherent power to relieve the latter against the time limit for making an application under sub-s. 4 (a) and an application made by a co-sharer landlord under sub-s. 4 (a) will be allowed provided it is filed within a reasonable time of the service of the notice upon him, although it is filed after a month from the date of the application under sub-s. (1).

[4] Mr. Das Gupta appearing for the petitioner has argued that the decisions under the old S. 26F will not apply to S. 26F after the amendment of 1938, because under 8. 188, Bengal Tenancy Act, as it stood before the amendment of 1938 it was obligatory upon a cosharer landlord to implead the remaining cosharers in an application under 8 26F; whereas after the amendment of 1938, a cosharer tenant in making an application under S. 26F is not required to implead the other cosharer tenants. Reliance has also been placed on the decision in Gobardhan v. Gunadhar, 44 C. W. N. 802: (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 78), where it has been held that after the amendment of 1938 cosharer tenants are not necessary parties to an application under S. 26F. With regard to this argument it is to be noticed that a transferee cosharer is certainly a necessary party to an application under S. 26F and sub.s. (3) provides for a notice to be given to the transferee. The transferee cosharer tenant in a proceeding under S. 26F after the amendment of 1938 therefore stands in the same position as a cosharer landlord in a proceeding under S. 26F before the amendment. Consequently the principle of the decision in Satis Chandra v. Jogendra Krishna, 41 C.W.N. 674 would apply to the case of a cosharer tenant who is a transferee and if no notice is served on him within a month by the fault of the Court he must be allowed to pre-empt if he applies within a reasonable time from the service of the

(5) But the difficulty in applying this principle is that in the Special Bench decision of Asmat Ali v. Mojahar Ali, 52 C. W. N. 64: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 48) it was laid down that the doctrine of reasonable time is confined to cases of equitable relief which might be refused by the Court if the applicant slept over his rights and the relief by way of pre emption cannot be said to be an equitable relief. The cases relied upon by the appellate Court in the present case seem to have been overruled by implication by the aforesaid Special Bench decision.

[6] We have then to consider the question whether the present case is governed by the Special Bench decision in Asmat Ali's Case, (52 C. W. N. 64: A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 48). That decision will apply only to cases where no notice was served under S. 260 and where the special rule of limitation provided for by 8, 26F (4) (a) is not applicable. The language of S. 26F (4) (a) is clear. It provides that the co-sharer tenant may apply either within the time provided for in sub.s. (1) i. e., within 4 months of the service of notice under S. 260 or within one month from the date of the application whichever is later. In the case of Golam Ehiya v. Abdul Rob, 48 C. W. N. 417, Blank J., sitting singly appears to have held that the controlling words in S. 26F (4) (a) are "whichever is later." In other words, if the first fixed point, (i. e., four months from the date of service of notice under S. 26C) does not exist in a particular case, the entire provision about the special limitation is inapplicable. From the facts of that case it appears that there the notice under S. 260 (4) was mandatory and Blank J., held that the right of a cosharer tenant to obtain pre-emption could not be defeated by non-service of the statutory notice. In the case before us, the opposite party being a transferee was not entitled to the statutory notice. Consequently we have to hold that the decision given by Blank J., in Golam Ehiya v. Abdul Rob, 48 C. W. N. 417 will not apply to the facts of the present case.

[7] On the plain language of sub-s. 4 (a) of S. 26F, the starting point in the present case is the date of the application by the original applicant, namely, 16th April 1948 and we are not entitled to hold that the starting point is the date of service of the notice under sub-s. (3) of S. 26F. The application filed by the opposite party on 19th July 1948 being beyond one month from the date of the application by the original applicant must accordingly be held to be barred by limitation.

[8] The rule is accordingly made absolute. The orders of the Courts below must be set aside and the application filed by opposite party must be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs of this Court.

R. P. Mookerjee J.-I agree.

D.H. Rule made absolute.

Order.—This is an application by Bajranglal Serowgee who carries on business under the name and style of Bajranglal Laduram for having the effect of an arbitration agreement determined by this Court. The application is really for an adjudication that an arbitration agreement between the parties is still subsisting.

[2] By contract No. 1633 dated 28th July 1948 the petitioner alleges that he agreed to purchase from the respondent 80,000 heavy cees bags in 200 bales at the rate of Rs. 140/4/. per 100 bags, delivery August 1948. The terms of the agreement appear from a copy of the Bought Note included in the annexure to the petition.

(3) Clause 13 of the said contract contained an agreement for arbitration in very wide terms.

[4] The petitioner's case is that on 16th August 1948 he sent shipping instructions to the respondent to bring 50 bales, that is, 20,000 heavy cees bags, and on 18th August 100 bales, that is, 40,000 heavy cees bags alongside the vessel "Kutsang." The respondent failed to bring the aforesaid goods alongside the ship and a letter was sent to the respondent complaining about this failure.

[5] It is alleged the petitioner by letter dated 81st August 1948, again requested the respondent to tender the pucca delivery order in respect of the balance of 50 bales of goods, that is, 20,000 heavy cees bags and offered to pay for and take delivery of the said pucca, delivery order. The respondent neither sent the 150 bales in terms of the shipping instructions nor did they give any delivery order. The petitioner's attorneys demanded payment of the different bills amounting to Rs. 15,992/6/4 but the respondent failed to pay. Thereupon on 13th December 1948 the petitioner filed a statement of case and referred the dispute to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce and claimed the said sum from the respondent.

[6] The reply of the respondent was a complete denial of the transaction. Their case is, they never entered into the contract in question and they repudiated liability in toto. Some statements and counter statements were filed before the Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce who, it is alleged, heard oral evidence.

[7] On or about 8th April 1948, the petitioner was informed by a letter from the Registrar, Bengal Chamber of Commerce that the Arbitrators were not prepared to proceed with the arbitration until the question of the existence of the arbitration agreement was decided by this Court.

[8] On receipt of this letter from the Registrar of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce dated 8th April 1948 the present application was presented.

[9] The real question I have got to determine is the maintainability of this application.

[10] The question argued before me is this: can a person who affirms the existence of an arbitration agreement apply to the Court under S. 33 or any other section of the Arbitration Act for an adjudication by the Court that such an agreement exists and is binding on the parties?

[11] In Manik Lal v. Shiva Jute Bailing Ltd., 52 C. W N. 389, Das J. held that the "existence" of an arbitration agreement which by S. 32, Arbitration Act, 1940, cannot be challenged by a suit is not the factual but the legal existence of an agreement on grounds like mistake, fraud, illegality, etc , under Ss. 19 to 30, Contract Act. His Lordship further held that S. 33 applies only when the applicant admits the factual existence of an agreement but challenges the "legal" existence thereof on such grounds as misrepresentation, fraud, etc. In Baijnath v. Chhotulal, 52 C. W. N. 397, Clough J. followed the judgment of Das J.

[12] Sinha J. has differed from the judg. ments of both these learned Judges in Chatur. bhuj v. Bhicamchand Chororia & Sons, 53 C. W. N. 410. According to the learned Judge the intention of the framers of the Arbitration Act was that the right and liabilities of the parties in respect of an arbitration agreement or an award such as are mentioned in Ss. 31 and 32 of the Act should be litigated only in the Court having jurisdiction under S. 31 and on an application made under S. 33 and not by way of suit. The intention of the legislature was to take away the remedy by way of suit which the parties to an arbitration agreement or an award had before the passing of the Act and to relegate them to the remedies as provided in the Act.

[13] The opening words, "any party to the arbi. tration agreement" in S. 33 of the Act should be construed according to Sinba J. to mean a party who is alleged to be a party to an arbitration agreement but who challenges the existence thereof and that there is nothing in the section to restrict the meaning of the word, 'existence' to 'legal existence' and it should be read in its ordinary and natural meaning, namely, existence either in fact or in law.

[14] Mr. Barwell, learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respondent, relied on the judgment of Das and Clough JJ, while Mr. Ganguli for the petitioner relied on the view of Sinha J. In this case it is not necessary for me to come to any decision regarding this conflict of judicial authorities which should really be resolved by the Court of appeal. Even if Sinha J. is right in the view that he has taken, the party who challenges the existence of an arbitration agreement is entitled to apply under S. 33, Arbitration Act. That section provides a remedy to the party who challenges the existence of an agreement to refer to arbitration and he can come to Court and obtain a decision, even when the other side does not wish to enforce it. Bhagwandas v. Atma Singh, 47 Bom. L. R. 716: A. I. R. (32) 1945 Bom. 494.

[15] Chapter V, Arbitration Act, contains the general provisions relating to all arbitrations i. e., arbitration without intervention of a Court, or arbitration in suit or arbitration with the intervention of a Court when there is no suit

[16] Section 31 deals with jurisdiction. Subsection (1) deals with the forum for filing awards. Sub-section (2) provides that all questions relating to the validity, effect or existence of an award or an arbitration agreement shall be decided by the Court in which an award under the agreement has been or may be filed and by no other Court. Sub-section (3) states that all applications relating to the conduct of the arbitration proceedings shall be made to such Court. Sub-section (4) makes it clear that that Court alone shall have jurisdiction over the arbitration proceedings and all subsequent applications arising out of a reference and the arbitration proceedings shall be made in that Court and in no other Court.

[17] Section 32 and S. 33 are the new sections introduced by the Arbitration Act of 1940. They were introduced in accordance with the suggestions of the Civil Justice Committee and were meant to negative the decisions in E. D. Sasson & Co. v. Ramdutt Ramkissen Das, 50 Cal 1: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 P C. 374) and Matulal v. Ram Kissendas, 47 Cal. 806: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 820), where it had been held that a suit must be filed if a party wants to challenge the existence of a submission. Sections 32 and 33 are in the following terms:

"32. Notwithstanding any law for the time being in force, no suit shall lie on any ground whatsoever for a decision upon the existence, effect or validity of an arbitration agreement or award, nor shall any arbitration agreement or award be set aside, amended, modified or in any way affected otherwise than as provided in this Act.

33. Any party to any arbitration agreement or any person claiming under him desiring to challenge the existence or validity of an arbitration agreement or an award or to have the effect of either determined shall apply to the Court and the Court shall decide the question on affidavits:

Provided that where the Court deems it just and expedient, it may set down the application for hearing on other evidence also, and it may pass such orders for discovery and particulars as it may do in a suit."

[18] The first part of S. 32 preyents a substantive right to challenge the existence of an arbitration agreement. The second part of that section prevents the setting aside, amending or modifying or in any way affecting an arbitration agreement, otherwise than as provided by the Act. It has been held by the Calcatta High Court that suit to challenge the existence or validity of an arbitration clause in a contract or for determining the effect of an arbitration agreement or award is not maintainable by reason of S. 33, Arbitration Act of 1940 which provides that such a challenge must be made by means of an application and not by means of a suit. Deokinandan v. Basantlal, I. L. R. (1941) 2 Cal. 123: A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 527. A contrary view has been taken by a Division Bench of the East Punjab High Court in Banwari Lal v. The Board of Trustees, Hindu College, Delhi, A.I.R. (36) 1949 E. P. 165. With respect to the learned Judges of the East Punjab in my opinion the correct view was taken by Lort-Williams J., in the Calcutta case cited above. The Madras High Court has also taken the same view as the Calcutta High Court adopted : Rashid Jamshed Sons and Co. v. Moolchand Jothajee, (1945) 2 M. L. J 98 : (A. I. R. (82) 1945 Mad. 871).

[19] Section 83 is a corollary to S. 82. Under S. 83, an arbitration agreement or an award has to be decided by means of an application. Section 83 provides a remedy not to the person who affirms the existence or validity of an arbitration agreement but to the person who challenged the same. Obviously, the legislature thought that the person who sets up a submission can go to arbitration and have the disputes decided by the arbitrators. Mr. Ganguli, learned counsel for the applicant, wants me to split up S. 83 and he contends that an application can be made to the Court (a) by any party to an arbitration agreement desiring to challenge the existence or validity of an arbitration agreement or (b) by any party to an arbitration agreement desiring to have the effect of either an arbitration agree. ment or an award determined. Counsel concedes that he cannot come under (a) because he is not challenging the existence or validity of the arbitration agreement as he is really asserting the existence of such agreement and is affirming the validity thereof. But he contends that he comes under (b) and he desires to have the effect of the arbitration agreement determined by this Court. I cannot accede to this contention. The words 'existence, effect or validity of an arbitration agreement or award" are used in 8. 32. Under S. 33 if any one challenges the arbitration agreement he can come to Court. If there is any question raised as to whether there is any particular dispute within the ambit of the arbitration agreement, or whether it has ceased to be operative on account of frustration or any supervening illegality or impossibility then that can also be determined under this section by means of an application. In my opinion, the word "effect" does not mean the existence of an arbitration agreement. It connotes in this context the purport, drift, or tenor of the agreement. What Mr. Ganguli wants me to decide is that there is in fact an existing, valid and binding arbitration agreement. Really there is no question of deciding the effect of that agreement.

[20] My attention has been drawn to a case decided by the Division Bench of the Bombay High Court in M. Gulamali Abdulhussein and Co. v. Vishwambharlal Ruiya, 51 Bom. L. B. 79: (A.I.B. (36) 1949 Bom. 158). The learned Judges Chagla C. J. and Tendolkar J., held that an application to establish the existence or validity of an arbitration agreement can be entertained by a Court under the Arbitration Act, 1940, though not under S. 33 thereof. According to these learned Judges when the Legislature enact. ed S. 32 and barred all suits with regard to the existence, effect or validity of an arbitration agreement and the object of the Legislature was that all questions with regard to these matters should be dealt with under the Arbitration Act. and not by substantive suits, it is open to a party to make any application with regard to which a suit is barred under S. 32. Section 33 according to Chagla C. J., is merely one instance of such an application. The Legislature cannot conceivably deal with all possible applications that may arise with regard to which suits are barred under S. 82.

remedies should be prescribed or rights should be conferred on litigants for the determination of such questions and that is why S. 33 was enacted. Section 33 to my mind is not to be read as illustrative. It is difficult to follow how a general right to apply may be held to exist when the statute makes specific provisions providing for the right of a litigant to come to Court with regard to a specific class of cases under specific conditions. The fact that the right of suit is taken away by S. 32 does not confer a general right on the litigants to apply to Court. To my mind, it is not correct to urge that S. 32 has impliedly created a general right to apply to Court under that section. If that was the correct view, then S. 33 would be unnecessary. When the Legislature had its attention directed to the necessity of making provisions in order to provide for the situation created by the enactment of a provision like S. 32, then it must be assumed that S. 33 is exhaustive and not illustrative. Therefore, in my opinion, a person who denies the existence of an arbitration agreement cannot apply under the Arbitration Act. I cannot understand how can there be a general right to apply under an Act although there is no right to apply under any specific section of the Act.

[21] Mr. Ganguli contends that if this is the correct view, then the arbitration agreement would be wholly infructuous and he is left absolutely without any relief or remedy whatsoever and when a person has a right he must have a remedy. I do not agree that a person in the position of the petitioner is not without any remedy whatsoever. The arbitrators should proceed with the reference. The respondents can appear before the Tribunal of Arbitration under protest and without prejudice to their contention that there is no submission or arbitration agreement. That question cannot be decided by the arbitrators. If the arbitrators make an award on the merits in favour of the petitioner, then the respondent can apply under S. 33 in order to challenge the validity of the award. In any event, the Court will be in a position to determine whether there was a valid and binding arbitration agreement justifying the reference to the Tribunal of Arbitration before a decree is passed on the award. I am expressing no opinion on the existence or validity of the arbitration agreement at this stage.

[22] The application is dismissed. Costs will abide the result of the arbitration.

[23] The attention of the Tribunal of Arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce should be drawn to this judgment and they should be asked to proceed with the arbitration as I have indicated hereinbefore.

V.B.B. Application dismissed.

Calcutta Agency Ltd. — Applicant v. Commissioner of Income-tax, West Bengal—Res. pondent.

Income-tax Reference No. 8 of 1949, D/- 9-9-1949.

(a) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 7, Proviso — Applicability.

Proviso to S. 7 was introduced to cover cases where a gross sum is fixed as salary or commission, which includes a necessary outlay on the part of the assessed in the carrying out of his duties. The deduction under that proviso can be made when the assessee is required by the terms of his employment to spend the amount in question and such expenditure must be incurred not only exclusively but necessarily for the performance of its duties. If there is no stipulation in the contract of service or employment to spend a particular amount, then the deduction is not permissible under the proviso. Payment by the assessee managing agents of a company of certain debts under subsequent agreement with the company by deduction from commission payable to them is not one to which the proviso applies.

(b) Income-tax Act (1922), S. 10 (2) (xv)—Expenditure to remove difficulty in carrying on business.

A, a bank, obtained a decree against B, a Cotton Mill, and C a Company, acting as managing agents for the Mill B, for certain malfeasance committed by the director of company C. An agreement was entered into between B and C by which B was entitled to deduct certain portion of the commission payable to C for payment of the debts to A under the decree. The object of the agreement was to avoid the publicity of the action by A against C and consequent exposure and scandal and to maintain the managing agency. The payment did not bring into existence any new assets or any advantage for the enduring benefit of C's trade:

Held that as the object of the agreement was to remove the difficulty in carrying on the business of company C, the payment should be treated as expenditure from revenue and not capital and should be deducted in computation of profits and gains: (1927) 1 K. B. 719, Foll.; Case law discussed. [Para 26]

S. Mitra and Dilip Mitter—for Applicant.

Dr. S. K. Gupta and J. C. Pal—for Respondent.

Chatterjee J. — The following question has been referred by the Appellate Tribunal, Calcutta Bench, to the High Court for its opinion:

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of this case, the sum of Rs. 22,500 was taxable in the hands of the applicant company."

[2] The applicant is a private limited company incorporated in August 1932. From the Memorandum of Association of the company, it appears that it was brought into existence to float various companies including cotton mills.

[3] In November 1932 a cotton mill was floated under the name of Basanti Cotton Mills Ltd. By Art. 132 of the Articles of Association, the applicant company, the Calcutta Agency Ltd., was appointed the Managing Agent of the said Mill.

[4] The Managing Agents were to receive a monthly allowance of Rs. 500 so long as the subscribed capital did not exceed Rs. 5,00,000 and a commission of 3 per cent on all gross sales of goods manufactured. In case the subscribed capital exceeded Rs. 5,00,000, then for every Rs. 2,00,000 of the increase the Managing Agents were to get an additional monthly allowance of Rs. 150.

[6] It appears that Nath Bank Ltd. instituted four suits against the Basanti Cotton Mills Ltd. In two out of the said four suits the Calcutta Agency Ltd. was impleaded as the codefendant. The claim of the Nath Bank Ltd. was on certain hundies drawn by one Mr. S. C. Mitter purporting to act on behalf of the Calcutta Agency Ltd. These suits were decreed for Rs. 31, 593/9/3 and Rs. 21, 054/2/9. These decrees were passed by consent of the parties.

[6] In the other two suits in which the applicant company was not a party decrees were passed for Rs. 1,15,735/12/5 and for rupees 21,593/8/3.

[7] An agreement was entered into between the applicant company and the Basanti Cotton Mills Ltd. Inas much as good deal of argument has been advanced on the language of this agreement, the same is set out below :

"Memorandum of Agreement made between the Calcutta Agency Limited of the one part and Baganti Cotton Mills Limited of the other part Whereas the Nath Bank Limited demanded from the Mills the payment of the sum of Rs. 1,80,000 and interest thereon And Whereas the said Mills repudiated their liability in respect thereof as it appeared from the books of the said Mills that the said mills did not have the use of the said sum of Rs. 1,80,000 or any part thereof And Whereas the said Nath Bank Limited thereupon instituted four suits in High Court being suit Nos. 1683, 1720, 1735 and 1757 of 1939 for the said aggregate sum of Rs. 1,80,000 and the interest thereon And Whereas the said Mills have been advised to settle the said suits amicably And Whereas the Calcutta Agency Limited by its Directors S. N. Mitter or S. C. Mitter, having been and being still the Managing Agents of the said Mills have undertaken to reimburse the said Mills in respect of the decress to be made in the said four suits in the manner hereinafter appearing NOW THESE PRESENTS WITNESS AND IT IS HEREBY AGREED AND DECLARED.

(i) That out of the commission of 3% payable by the said mills to the said Agency under Regulation 181 of the Articles of Association of the Company, the Company shall have a paramount lien on and deduct and set off a moiety thereof against any payment which the said Mills may make in respect of the said decrees or any of them and/or costs of the said suits.

(ii) The said molety shall be one half of the commission so payable less such sum as the Directors of the Mills may from time to time allow to be deducted."

[8] By virtue of this agreement, the applicant company was in effect given Rs. 22,500 less than what was due to it by way of its remuneration.

[9] Before the Income-tax Officer it was urged on behalf of the applicant company that the sum of Rs. 22,500 should not be taxed in its hands as it was diverted by virtue of the above agreement and was paid to the Nath Bank by the Basanti Cotton Mills Ltd. and this sum, therefore, did not reach the applicant as remuneration. Both the Income tax Officer and the Appellate Assistant Commissioner repelled this contention of the applicant.

counsel on behalf of the applicant company, contended that the remuneration received by the applicant was in the nature of salary or commission within S. 7, Income tax Act. In this Court, Mr. Mitra put forward the same contention and relied on the first proviso to S. 7. Section 7 states that tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head "salaries" in respect of any salary or wages, any annuity, pension or gratuity, and any fees, commissions, perquisites or profits in lieu of, or in addition to, any salary or wages, which are due to him from an employer. The first proviso to S. 7 runs as follows:

"Provided that the tax shall not be payable in respect of any sum which the assessee by the conditions of his employment is required to spend out of his remuneration wholly, necessarily and exclusively in the performance of his duties."

[11] Mr. Mitra urges that payment out of the commission of the sum aforesaid was made by the applicant company "wholly, necessarily and exclasively" in the performance of its duties. Mr. Mitra's argument was that unless the company agreed to pay the amount aforesaid, its managing agency would have been terminated by the Mills and therefore such payment came within the said proviso to S. 7.

[12] The Tribunal held that the proviso to S. 7 was not intended to cover payment of this nature. It is difficult to bring this payment within the first proviso to s. 7. The expenditure must be made wholly, necessarily and exclusively in the performance of its duties. In my opinion, the payment made by the Managing Agents under the aforesaid agreement is not a deduction permissible under the said proviso to S. 7. That proviso was introduced to cover cases where a gross sum is fixed as salary or commission, which includes a necessary outlay on the part of the assessee in the carrying out of his duties. The deduction under that proviso can be made when the assesses is required by the terms of his employment to spend the amount in question and such expenditure must be incurred not only exclusively but necessarily for the performance of its duties. If there is no stipulation in the contract of service or employment to spend a particular amount, then the deduction is not permissible under the first proviso to S. 7. For example, when an engineer is appointed to super. vise certain works outside the city and is required to maintain a motor car for the purpose of inspecting the work site in the course of his duties, then the proviso would be attracted, as the expenditure would be then incurred necessarily and wholly in the performance of his duties.

[13] The next argument put forward by Mr. Mitra was that the expenditure came within S. 10 (2) (xv), Income tax Act. Section 10 deals with the tax payable by an assessee in respect of profits and gains of business, profession or vocation. Clause (2) specifies permissible allowances or deductions. Sub-clause (xv) mentions:

"Any expenditure (out being in the nature of capital expenditure or personal expenses of the assessee) laid out or expended wholly and exclusively for the purpose of such business, profession or vocation."

applicant company had not agreed to pay the amount mentioned in the aforesaid agreement, then the Basanti Cotton Mills Ltd. would have sued the company for the realisation of the amount due on the Hundies and it seems that there would have no defence to the action. This would have subjected the applicant company to the danger of public exposure and in order to save itself from the scandal and in order to maintain the Managing Agency the applicant company agreed to deduct certain amounts from the Managing Agency commission and, therefore, such expenditure came within 8. 10 (2) (xv) of the Act.

[15] Reference has been made to the case of Mitchell v. B. W. Noble Ltd., (1927) 1 K.B. 719: (96 L. J. K. B. 484). A company, which carried on an insurance business wanted in the interest of its business to get rid of one of its directors. The company entered into an agreement with him under which in consideration of a payment to him by the company of £19,200, the director undertook to retire from the company, to sell and transfer the 300 £1 shares held by him in the company to the remaining directors at par, and to abandon all claims that he might have against the company, or its directors. The other directors were parties to this agreement. £19,200 was payable in five annual instalments. The company paid the first instalment of £5200 and sought to deduct it for income tax purposes from the profits in the year of payment as being money wholly and exclusively laid out for the purposes of the business. The commissioners allowed the claim. Rowlatt J., held that inasmuch as the directors were satisfied that in order to save the company from scandal it was necessary to get rid of the director and to pay him the sum in question, that sum must be regarded as money 'wholly and exclusively laid out and expended for the purposes of the trade" of the company within the meaning of R. 3 of the Rules applicable to cases I and II of Sch. D.

[16] The Court of appeal affirmed Rowlatt J., and held that the payment was not made to secure an actual asset so as effectually to increase the captial of the company, but was made in order to enable the directors to carry on the business of the company as they had done in the past, unfettered by the presence of the retiring director which might have had a bad effect on the credit of the company and, therefore, it must be treated as an income and not as a capital expenditure, and was deductible as such for incometax purposes.

[17] Rowlatt J., held that the payment made to the director to get rid of him was a business expense and that it was not a capital expense.

The learned Judge observed:

"But is it a capital expense on any ground? As Lord Cave points out in British Insulated and Helsby Cables Ltd. v Athorton, 1926 A. C. 205: (95 L.J. K.B. 336), it is a capital expense if you buy an asset or purchase an enduring advantage. This was not that case or anything like it."

[18] Dr. S. K. Gupta strongly urged that the payment which was made in this case was really not a business expense but it was a capital expense and, therefore, not deductible. He drew our attention to the judgment of Viscount Cave L. C. in British Insulated and Helsby Cables Ltd. v. Athorton, 1926 A.C. 205: (95 L.J.K.B. 336). In that case, the House of Lords held that a lump sum set aside out of profits for contribution to a pension fund was in the nature of capital expenditure and was, therefore, not an admissible deduction. In his speech Viscount Cave L. C. said:

"But when an expenditure is made, not only once and for all, but with a view to bringing into existence an asset or an advantage for the enduring benefit of a trade, I think that there is very good reason (in the absence of special circumstances leading to an opposite conclusion) for treating such an expenditure as properly attributable not to revenue but to capital."

[19] Mr. Gupta argued that this payment in satisfaction of the decree was made with a view to bring into existence an advantage for the enduring benefit of the trade of the applicant company and thus it came within the dictum of Viscount Cave.

[20] It is to be observed, however, that the Lord Chancellor in Atherton's case, (1926 A. C. 205: 95 L. J. K. B. 336), further pointed out that "a sum of money expended not of necessity and with a view to a direct and immediate benefit to the trade but voluntarily and on grounds of commercial expediency, and in order indirectly to facilitate the carrying on of the business, may yet be expended wholly and exclusively for the purposes of the trade."

[21] Atherton's case: (1926 A. O. 205: 95 L. J. K. B. 336) was discussed at some length before the Court of appeal in Mitchell case: (1907-1 K. B. 719 : 96 L. J. K. B. 484). Lord Hanworth M. R. held that when payment is made in the course of business, with reference to a particular . difficulty and is made not in order to secure an actual asset to the company, but to enable the company to continue to carry on, as it had done in the past, the same type and quality of business, it is not a capital expenditure. Sargant L.J. took the same view and pointed out that the payment was being made to the director in order to get rid of him and to preserve the status and dividend earning power of the company and that was within the ordinary purposes of the trade, profession or vocation of the company. The learned Lord Justice observed:

"It is quite impossible to put against the capital account of the company, as I conceive it a payment of this nature. It seems to me that the payment, though large and though exceptional, was not of such nature; it certainly was not capital withdrawn from the company, or any sum employed or intended to be employed as capital in the business. It was a payment which as a matter of fact was made out of the profits of the company, apparently, as to the £5200, in the year in which it was paid, and, as to the future payments, they will have to be made out of the profits of the year in which those payments will have to be made. To my mind, it is essentially different from those various payments in the cases which have been referred to which were of the nature of adding to or improving the equipment, or otherwise made for the permanent benefit of the company."

Lawrence L. J. was of the same view and said:

"I agree that the sum in question was wholly and exclusively expended by the company for the purpose of its business, in the sense that the sole object with which the company made the payment was to enable the company to continue to carry on and earn profits in its business."

[22] The ratio decidendi of Mitchell's case, (1927 1 K. B. 719 : (96 L. J. K. B. 484) is this. If an expenditure is made not to secure an actual asset but to remove a difficulty in carrying on the business and if it is made to continue the business on the same lines as before, then the expenditure is from revenue and not from capital. Mitchell's case, (1927-1 K. B. 719: 96 L. J. K. B. 484) was followed in Anglo Persian Oil Co., Ltd. v. Dale, 1932-1 K. B. 124: (100 L. J. K. B. 501). In Dale's case, (1932-1 K. B. 124: 100 L. J. K. B. 504), a payment was made to determine an onerous agency agreement and it was held to be a revenue payment and was deductible by the company in ascertaining its net profits. The observation of the Lord Chancel. lor in Atherton's case, (1926 A. C. 205 : 95 L. J. K. B. 886) was explained by the Court of Appeal. It was pointed out that the payment in question in Dale's case, (1989-1 K. B. 194: 100 L. J. K. B. 504) did not bring any assets into existence and it could not properly be said to have brought 1950 0/35 & 86

into existence an advantage for the enduring benefit of the company's trade within the meaning of that expression as used by Viscount Cave.

Dhudhuria v. Commissioner of Income tax, 60 I. A. 196: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 P. C. 145). In that case by a decree a maintenance allowance in favour of a step mother was made a charge upon the ancestral estate of a Raja. It was held that the decree diverted a portion of his income from the assessee and had directed it to his stepmother. To that extent what he received for her was not his income. The Privy Council observed:

"It is not a case of the application by the appellant of part of his income in a particular way; it is rather the allocation of a sum out of his revenue before it becomes income in his hands."

Really in charging the income of an individual the Income-tax Act intends to charge what reaches the individual as income. It was pointed out by Dr. Gupta that in Jagadish Chandra v. Dhanpati Singh, 1945 13 I. T. B. 64 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Pat. 280), a Division Bench of Patna High Court has held that where a testator has bequeathed his properties to another creating a charge for an annuity for maintenance the principle laid down in Dhudhuria's case (60 I.A. 196 : A. I. R. (20) 1933 P. C. 145) will apply and the annuity will not become income of the legatee, but where the legatee himself creates a charge for a debt payable to him that principle will not apply. In Dhudhuria's case, (60 I. A. 196 : A. I. R. (20) 1983 P. C. 145), however, the decree had been passed by consent of parties and there was no testamentary disposition by the Raja's father creating any charge.

[24] Dr. Gupta drew our attention to Commissioner of Income-tax v. Manager, Katras Encumbered Estate, 18 Pat. 197: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 116 S.B.). In that case the proprietor of a coal mine owed monies to a company. To secure the repayment of the monies due the proprietor mortgaged the mine to the company. He also executed a lease of the mine to the same company at a royalty. It was provided that a minimum sum of Rs. 8,000 a year was to be paid to the proprietor himself and the balance of royalty was to be applied by the mortgagee to the liquidation of the debt under the mortgage. It was held that the whole of the royalty was to be considered the income of the assessee and was assessable to income tax. Courtney Terrell O. J. distinguished the Dhudhuria case, (60 I. A. 196 : A. I. R. (20) 1983 P. C. 145) and pointed out that the position was entirely different when out of the profits or income a portion was to be paid to liquidate a debt.

[25] The learned Judges in the Katras case, (13 Pat. 197: A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 116 S.B.), however, had not to deal with facts which are present in this case. The assessee in that case was being taxed as an individual and there was no question of taxing any business and there was consequently no question of any allowance or deduction in respect of payment being made in order to enable a business to continue its same course as before.

[26] Of all the cases cited Mitchell's case, (1927-1 K. B. 719: 96 L. J. K. B. 484) most closely resembles the present case. The real question is what was the object of the agreement which provided for payment by the Mills to the Nath Bank. In Mitchell's case, (1927-1 K. B. 719: 96 L. J. K. B. 484), the payment was made to a Director whose presence was detrimental to the company's business and the money was paid in order to avoid the publicity of an action for wrongful dismissal and it was held to be a proper deduction in arriving at the profits. In this case it is clear that the agreement was entered into with a view to avoid the publicity of an action against the managing agent and consequent exposure and scandal and in order to maintain the managing agency so that the company could carry on its business as before. The payment in question did not bring in any new assets into existence nor in my opinion can it properly be said that it brought into existence an advantage for the enduring benefit of the company's trade. The appellate tribunal observed that the decree was evidently passed against the appellant company for certain misfeasance committed by its directors and the appellant company agreed to pay it off from its remune. ration. The method of book-keeping is, however, not conclusive. The object of the agreement was to enable the company to remove a difficulty in carrying on the business of the company and to earn profits in its businsss. Therefore, this case is covered by the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Mitchell's case, (1927-1 K. B. 719: 96 L. J. K. B. 484) and the payment should be treated as expenditure from revenue and not from capital and is a proper deduction in the computation of profits or gains.

[27] The payment here cannot be attributed to capital inasmuch as it was not made with a view to bringing a tangible asset or advantage into existence. It is also to be noted that in order to make it a capital payment the asset or advantage is to be for the "enduring" benefit of the trade. As Rowlatt J. said by "enduring" is meant "enduring the way that fixed capital endures." Romer L. J. approved of this view in Dale's case, (1932-1 K. B. 124: 100 L. J. K. B. 504). Therefore, the payment or expenditure in question was made or incurred in the conduct of the business of the company and it is not a capital expense.

[28] I answer the question framed in the statement of case in the negative and I hold that in the facts of this case the sum of Rs. 22,500 is not taxable in the hands of the applicant company. The applicant is entitled to the costs of the reference certified for two counsel.

#(a) Constitution of India, Art. 13—Powers of Parliament and State Legislatures — Comparison with powers of Parliament in England—Question whether statute is valid or void—Powers of Court.

In England Parliament is supreme and it can pass any law however unreasonable it may seem, and to whatever extent it may curtail the liberty of the subject. There is no power in the Courts in that country to declare the law to be void or invalid. [Para 3]

In the republic of India there is a written Constitution in which certain fundamental rights are guaranteed to its citizens. These are mentioned in Part III of the Constitution. If Parliament or any State Legislature makes any law taking away these fundamental rights except in the manner and to the extent provided in Part III, then that law is void to the extent of its inconsistency with the provisions of Part III (vide Art. 13 (1)). Thus Parliament and the State Legislatures are not supreme to the extent that Parliament in England is supreme. The Legislatures in this country have only those powers of legislation which are bestowed upon them by the Constitution Act. If they pass an Act in excess of those powers, then that Act becomes void to that extent.

[Para 3]

Under the Constitution the power to decide whether a piece of legislation is void or not, is given to the Courts, i.e., the judiciary and nobody else. The power of the judiciary is supreme in this respect. [Para 4]

(b) Constitution of India, Art. 19 (1) (d)—Words "throughout the territory of India"—Meaning.

The words "throughout the territory of India" in Art. 19 (1) (d) were used because the Constitution is not guaranteeing to the citizen any right of free movement outside its territories; In fact it could not give any citizen such right because that would result in infringing the sovereignty of a foreign State. This phrase was used also to indicate that the Constitution was not giving the citizen any absolute right to move from the republic of India into some foreign State; in other words, it was saving passport restrictions. Further, those words were used to indicate that the Act was not giving a citizen any absolute right to enter the territory of India from outside. These are the reasons why the words "throughout the territory of India" [Para 6]

++ (c) Public Safety — Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act (VI [6] of 1930 as amended by Criminal Law Amendment (Amending) Ordinance, (1949), Preamble and S. 2 (1) - Act, if valid after passing of Constitution of India - Constitution of India, Arts. 13 (1), 19 (1) (d), 19 (5) and 22 (4).

The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, even if it is an Act providing for preventive detention, is void under Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution of India because it is inconsistent with the provisions of Part III of the Constitution.

The detention which may be imposed upon a citizen by the Bengal Act amounts to restriction on the right of free movement guaranteed as one of the fundamental rights by Art. 19 (1) (d) of the Constitution of India, and the restriction is neither reasonable nor in the interests of the general public considering the fact that the Act is not an emergency measure. (For summary of the grounds why restrictions are not reasonable and in the interests of the public, see Para 14.)

The Act is also in direct conflict with Art. 22 (4) of the Constitution of India.

The illegalities are fundamental and they taint the whole of the Act. The doctrine of severability cannot be applied. The entire Act is, therefore, void.

(e) Public Safety—Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act (VI [6] of 1930), Preamble and S. 2—Act if provides for preventive detention - Detenu not produced before Magistrate within 24 hours as required under Art. 22 (2), Constitution of India-Effect—Constitution of India, Art. 22 (2).

The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act does not deal with preventive detention. The law regarding preventive detention is directed towards preventing a person from doing isomething which the Legislature thinks should not be done. The Act nowhere says that a person may be detained or otherwise dealt with in order to prevent him from doing anything.

There can be no doubt that if a person is detained, the detenu is deprived of his personal liberty. In such a case, if the detenu is not produced before any Magistrate within 24 hours of his arrest as required under Art. 22 (2) of the Constitution, the detenu is deprived of his personal liberty without complying with one of the most important items of procedure laid down in the Constitution regarding such deprivation. In these circumstances the order of detention cannot be upheld.

[Para 20] (f) Interpretation of Statutes - Reference to another statute.

It is dangerous to interpret one law by reference to another unless the terms are identical or so similar as to justify a common deduction. Annotation : ('46-Man.) Interpretation of Statutes,

N. 2.

(g) Public Safety-West Bengal Security Ordinance (1949), S. 22 - Validity of Ordinance - Constitution of India, Arts, 13 and 22 (4).

The Ordinance is clearly an Ordinance providing for preventive detention, but the Ordinance is void because it is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution Act. [Paras 21, 22]

The West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949, does not provide for any Advisory Board of the nature contemplated by Art. 22 (4), Constitution Act. [Para 21]

Further, the Ordinance does not impose restrictions which are reasonable and are in the interests of the general public.

-(h) Public Safety - Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order (1950) - Applicability to Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act (1930) and West Bengal Security Ordinance (1949) - Constitution of India, Arts. 22 (7) and 373-Public Safety-Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act (VI [6] of 1930) - Public Saiety - West Bengal Security Ordinance (1949).

The Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, made by the President of the Indian Republic, can have no effect so far as the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930 and the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949 are concerned.

[Para 23] The Act and the Ordinance became void as soon as the Constitution came into force (i. e., at midnight on 25th January 1950) by reason of the provisions of Art. 13 (1) of the Constitution. They cannot be revived by the subsequent Order of the President passed in the exercise of the powers conferred by Art. 22 (7) (a) and (b) read with Art. 373 of the Constitution. [Para 23]

(i) Public Safety -Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order (1950) - Validity - Constitution of India, Arts. 13 (1) and 22 (7) (a) and (b).

The Preventive Detention Order of 1950 is of no effect. [Para 25]

The Order does not comply with the provisions of Art. 22 (7) (a) and (b), Constitution Act. [Para 26]

The Order Is also void because the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, is not an Act providing for preventive detention. [Para 26]

4(j) Adaptation of Laws Order (1950), R. 28 _ Validity - Constitution of India, Art. 372 - Public Safety - West Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act (VI [6] of 1930) - Public Safety - West Bengal Security Ordinance (1949).

Rule 28 directs this Court as well as certain Tribunals and other authorities to construe the law in a certain manner. There is no provision of law or any principle or practice regarding legislation which would justify any legislature to direct a Court regarding the manner in which it has to construe the law. A Court construes a law in accordance with definite rules or canons of interpretation. It has to decide the meaning which a law bears. The jurisdiction of the Court in this respect must be unfettered. No Court can submit to an order from any authority directing it to construe a law in a particular manner. Such an order will be contrary to all principles and will result in making the Court a mere tool of the legislature or other authority which makes such an order. All that the legislature can do is to define certain terms but it must leave the Court to interpret the law according to those definitions.

Apart from the fact that the Order conflicts with all principles of judicial independence it is something which is contrary to the express provisions of Art. 372 (2), Constitution Act. That sub-clause empowers the President to make adaptations and modifications of any law in force in the territory of India. It does not empower the Court to make such adaptations or modifications and indeed it would be very surprising if any Constitution Act were to impose upon the Court the duty of legislating. The Courts are meant to interpret legislation and not to make it. What the President has done is to throw upon the Court a burden which is exclusively his. He is to adapt or modify and he has no authority to ask the Court to do something which he alone is expressly empowered to do. Further, by that Article the Constitution Act has delegated certain powers to the President. He in turn cannot delegate those powers to any other authority. The principle delegatus non delegare potest would apply.

Article 372 (1) does not preserve the effect of all laws in force in the territory of India before the commencement of the Constitution. It keeps only such laws in force as are not inconsistent with the provisions of Part III. The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930 and the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949, are inconsistent with the provisions of Part III. They became therefore void from 12 midnight of 25th January 1950, when the Constitution came into force. That being so, even the President or the Legislature cannot make any adaptations or modifications of those laws in order to bring them in accord with the provisions of this Constitution. Those laws are dead and the dead law cannot be brought back to life by modification or adaptation.

Not only has the Order tried to convert the Court into a Legislative body but in doing so it has by a proviso reduced this newly created legislative body to a position of subordination and inferiority. The effect of the Order is this: The Judiciary is converted into a Legislature with limited powers, and the Executive is converted into a judiciary whose decisions are to be final. In this state of affairs, the Courts cannot give effect to this Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950, even though this Order may have emanated from the President of the Indian Republic. [Para 30]

Order.—These are 381 Rules issued in respect of 381 persons 370 of whom are under detention by orders passed under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, as amended by the Criminal Law Amendment (Amending Ordinance, 1949) and two of whom, namely, Purna Chandra Ghose and Dulal Bose, are under detention by orders passed under the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949. Of the persons who are subject to these rules, eight have been discharged and one has escaped from custody. So far as these persons are concerned, the rules have become infructuous and no further orders on these rules are necessary.

(2) Most of these rules were issued before the Constitution of India came into force and they were under S. 491, Oriminal P. O. Thereafter the Constitution Act came into force by which the High Courts were given powers to issue, inter alia, writs in the nature of habeas corpus by Art. 226 (1) and all the rules issued by this Court were treated in the alternative as being rules nisi for the issue of writs of habeas corpus. The learned Advocate General accepted this alternative and waived any claim to fresh notice.

[3] We shall deal first with the question of the legality of the detention of the persons who have been detained by orders passed under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930. The first point for consideration is whether the aforesaid Act is a valid law or not. In the argument urged on behalf of the detenus it was contended, inter alia, that this Act is not an Act for preventive detention. With that argument we shall deal later. We shall assume for the present that the Act provides for preventive detention and decide whether the Act is valid having regard to its provisions and the provisions of the Constitution Act. Before going into details we would like to emphasise the powers given to the High Court by the Constitution Act as regards deciding whether a statute is valid or void. In England Parliament is supreme and it can pass any law, however unreasonable it may seem, and to whatever extent it may curtail the liberty of the subject. Once the law is passed by Parliament the Courts are helpless. They must give effect to the law according to the recognised canons of interpretation of statutes. There is no power in the Courts to declare the law to be void or invalid. In this connection it would not be out of place to refer to certain observations made by Lord Wright in the well-known case of Liversidge v. Sir John Anderson, 1942 A. C. 206 at p. 260 : (1941-3 ALL E. R. 338).

"Parliament is supreme. It can enact extraordinary powers of interfering with personal liberty. If an Act of Parliament, or a statutory regulation, like Reg. 18B, which has admittedly the force of a statute, because there is no suggestion that it is ultra vires or outside the Emergency Powers (Defence) Act, under which it was made, is alleged to limit or curtail the liberty of the subject or vest in the executive extraordinary powers of detaining a subject, the only question is what is the precise extent of the powers given. The answer to that question is only to be found by scrutinizing the language of the enactment in the light of the circumstances and the general policy and object of the measure. I have ventured on these elementary and obvious observations because it seems to have been suggested on behalf of the appellant that this House was being asked to countenance arbitrary, despotic or tyrannuous conduct. But in the constitution of this country there are no guaranteed or absolute rights."

The position in the Republic of India is entirely different. Here, we have a written constitution in which certain fundamental rights are guaranteed to its citizens. These are mentioned in Part III, Constitution Act. If Parliament or any State Legislature makes any law taking away these fundamental rights except in the manner and to the extent provided in Part III, then that law is void to the extent of its inconsistency with the provisions of Part III (vide Art. 18 (1)). Thus Parliament and the State Legislatures are not supreme to the extent that Parliament in England is supreme. The Legislatures in this country have only those powers of legislation which are bestowed upon them by the Constitution Act. If they pass an Act in excess of those powers, then that Act becomes void to that extent.

[4] The rext question which arises is this; who is to decide the question whether a piece of legislation is void or not? Under our Constitution the Courts i. e., the Judiciary are to decide this and nobody else. We thus see that the powers of the Judiciary in our country is in this respect far greater than the powers of the Judiciary of Great Britain. Many observations regarding the effect and interpretation of laws passed by the Parliament of Great Britain are coloured by the fact that Parliament there is supreme and they are not wholly applicable in this country. Here the power of the Judiciary is supreme in this respect. We realise that Parliament may amend the Constitution Act but that can only be done if the provisions of Art. 368 of Part XX, Constitution Act are complied with. However, until the Act is amended the powers of the Legislatures and of the Judiciary are as stated above. The people of India have given us the power of interpreting the Constitution of India and of deciding whether any piece of legislation is or is not consistent with the provisions laid down in the Constitution of India.

[6] As stated at the beginning of the last paragraph we shall assume that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act is an Act providing for preventive detention and decide on this basis whether the Act is valid or whether it is void in whole or in part as being inconsistent with the provisions of Part III, Constitution Act. Article 19 (1), Constitution Act deals with the "Right to Freedom." It specifies seven such rights and says that all citizens shall have these rights. We are concerned with the right mentioned in Art. 19 (1) (d), that is, the right "to move freely throughout the territory of India." That right is guaranteed to all citizens by Article 19 (1) (d). Article 19 (5) provides that nothing in sub-cl. (d) of Art. 19 (1)

"shall affect the operation of any existing law in so far as it imposes, or prevents the State from making any law imposing, reasonable restrictions on the exercise of any of the rights conferred by the said sub-clause either in the interests of the general public or for the protection of the interests of any scheduled tribe."

We are not concerned in the present rules with the protection of the interest of any scheduled tribe. If Art. 19 (1) (d) and Art. 19 cl. (5) are read together, the meaning which can be deduced is this: every citizen shall have the right of moving freely from any part of the territory of India to any other part of such territory, but any law already passed before the Constitution Act came into force, or to be passed by the Legislatures established by the Constitution may curtail that right provided the curtailment or restrictions it imposes on that right are reasonable and in the interests of the general public. It is thus clear that, the right of free movement throughout the territory of India cannot be restricted unless (a) the restrictions are reasonable and (b) the restrictions are necessary in the interests of the general public. Both conditions must co-exist.

[6] Now, the question which arises is whether the detention which may be imposed upon a citizen by the Criminal Law Amendment Act amounts to restrictions on the right of free movement guaranteed by Art. 19 (1) (d). The learned Advocate-General argued that an order passed under the Bengal Criminal Law Amend. ment Act committing a person to custody in jail is not an order taking away the right "to move freely" throughout the territory of India which is mentioned in Art. 19 (1) (d). He contends that the words "throughout the territory of India" have been put in sub.cl. (d) for a particular purpose. The sub-clause according to him relates only to liberty of movement from one particular State to another or from one particular area to another and it does not relate to liberty of movement in general. We are unable to see that the words "throughout the territory of India" which appear in subcl. (d) and do not appear in the other sub clauses, except sub-clause (e), have the significance sought to be attached to them by the learned Advocate-General. In our opinion the words "throughout the territory of India" were used because the Constitution Act is not guaranteeing to the citizen any right of free movement outside its territories, in fact it could not give any citizen such right because that would result in infringing the sovereignty of a foreign State. This phrase was used also to indicate that the Constitution Act was not giving the citizen any absolute right to move from the Republic of India into some foreign State; in other words. it was saving passport restrictions. Further, those words were used to indicate that the Act was not giving a citizen any absolute right to enter the territory of India from outside. These, in our opinion, are the reasons why the words "throughout the territory of India" have been used. We are of opinion that if a person is committed to custody in jail, his right to move freely throughout the territory of India is being taken away. Now, the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, by S. 2 (1) (f) gives the Provincial Government the right to commit a citizen to custody in jail. We must therefore see whether the law giving such a right is one which imposes a restriction which is reasonable and which is in the interests of the general public.

[7] It will now be necessary to reproduce S. 2 (1), Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act which is as follows:

"Where, in the opinion of the Provincial Government, there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person-

(i) is or was at any time a member of an association of which the objects and methods include the commission of any offence included in Sch. I or the doing of any act with a view to interfere by violence or threat of violence, with the administration of justice; or

 (ii) is being or was at any time instigated or controlled by a member of any such association with a view to the commission or doing of any such offence or act;

(iii) is doing or did at any time any act to assist the operations of any such association:

the Provincial Government may, by order in writing, give all or any of the following directions, namely, that such person-

(a) shall notify his residence and any change of residence to such authority as may be specified is the order;

(b) shall report himself to the police in such manner and at such periods as may be so specified:

(c) shall conduct himself in such manner or abstain from such Acts as may be so specified;

(d) shall reside or remain in any area so specified;

(e) shall not enter, reside in, or remain in any area so specified;

(f) shall be committed to custody in jail; and may at any time add to, amend, vary or rescind any order made under this section:

Provided that such order shall be reviewed by the Provincial Government at the end of one year from the date of making of the order, and shall not remain in force for more than one year unless upon such review the Provincial Government directs its continuance."

[8] We accept the argument of the learned Advocate. General that it is not open to us to decide whether the opinion of the Provincial Government is well founded or not. The words "where in the opinion of the Provincial Government there are reasonable grounds for believ. ing etc." have been interpreted recently by a Special Bench of this Court in the case of Bhupendra De v. Chief Secretary, the Govern. ment of West Bengal, 58 C. W. N. 798: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 633: 51 Cr. L J. 169) and we have no hesitation in following that interpretation. The Provincial Government has to form the opinion that there are reasonable grounds and it is not for the Courts to decide whether the grounds are reasonable or not. That is a matter for the Provincial Government alone and the opinion of the Provincial Government is subjective and not justiciable. If the Provincial Government declares that in its opinion there are reasonable grounds for believing etc. this Court cannot investigate the grounds and say that the grounds are not reasonable. The rea. sonableness of the grounds is a matter for the decision of the Provincial Government alone and not for the Court. We are not now dealing with any question of mala fides. We thus see that the Provincial Government is constituted the sole and absolute arbitrator for the decision of the point whether there are reasonable grounds for believing etc. Now, what is meant by the terms 'Provincial Government.' According to the General Clauses Act (India), S. 43A the Government of the Province is the Governor. The Governor under the present constitution cannot act except in accordance with the advice of his ministers. Under the Government of India Act, 1935, the position was different. The Governor could do certain acts in his discretion, that is, without asking for the advice of any minister; he could do certain acts in his individual capacity, that is, only after consulting his ministers but he was not bound when acting in his individual capacity to follow the advice of his ministers. Under the present Constitution the power to act in his discretion or in his individual capacity has been taken away and the Governor therefore must act on the advice of his ministers. This is the constitutional position as explained to us by the learned Advocate General and we accept his view.

[9] Next, on enquiries made by this Court from the Advocate General be stated that orders of detention under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act were passed, in fact, not by the Governor nor by any minister nor by the Chief Secretary but by the Deputy Secretary. This was done according to certain Rules of Business formulated by the Governor. The net result of these circumstances is that these persons have been detained because a Deputy Secretary has formed a certain opinion the justness or validity of which cannot be questioned by the Courts of law. In our opinion this provision of the law is neither reasonable nor in the interests of the general public. The right to personal liberty given to citizens by the Constitution Act is a funda. mental and a precious right and it seems to us that it is not reasonable and not in the interests of the general public to empower an executive officer of the rank of the Deputy Secretary, who is not responsible to the Legislature, to take away such a fundamental right in the manner provided in the Bengal Criminal Law Amend. ment Act; in other words, it is neither reasonable nor in the interests of the general public that an executive officer of this kind should be empowered to send a man to custody in jail on an opinion formed by him on grounds which cannot be investigated by anybody. In this connection we would observe that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act is not an emergency measure. It is "an Act to supplement the ordinary criminal law in Bengal." Nowhere is it stated in the Act or suggested that it is an emergency measure. The Act is a permanent one and not enacted for any particular period and it has been in force since 1930. During times of emergency extraordinary measures may be taken and extra-ordinary legislation may be passed. Such legislation may be considered to be reasonable and in the interests of the general public having regard to the emergency then prevailing, but an Act which is not an emergency measure but merely an addition to the ordinary criminal law cannot be viewed in the same manner when it deprives a citizen of his fundamental right of freedom.

[10] Next, let us consider in further detail the provisions of S. 2, Bengal Criminal Law Amend. ment Act. Section 2 (1) (i) renders a person liable to committal to custody in jail if he was at any time a member of an association of the kind described in the section or is at the moment a member of such an association. The section does not say that the person who is to be so committed should know or even have reason to believe that the association had the objects and methods described in the section; nor does it say that these objects and methods should be the avowed objects of the association. Thus, a person who joins an association without knowing that it has the objects and methods mentioned in the section is liable to be confined in jail. Again, if a person many years ago joined such an association and thereafter left it as he disagreed with its objects he is also liable to be confined to jail. He may be, at the time the order is passed on him a person who is bed-ridden or a paralytic, nevertheless he is liable to be subjected to an order committing him to custody in jail. It seems to us that this provision is wholly unreasonable.

[11] Let us next examine S. 2 (1) (ii), Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. It discloses a more preposterous state of affairs. It says that if a person was at any time instigated or if he is being instigated by a member of an association of the description mentioned in the section he may be committed to jail. Here, again there is no provision that there should be any reasonable cause to believe that the person instigated was inclined to carry out the object of the person instigating him. If the person is investigated and he refuses to accede to the request of the instigator, he is still liable to be committed to jail. Again, if he was instigated say 20 years ago and then refused to carry out the object of the instigator, he is still liable to be committed to jail. We find it difficult to conceive how such a provision of law can be considered to be reasonable and in the interests of the general public. It may be said in certain circumstances that it is reasonable to commit the instigator to custody in jail if he is instigating the commission of a crime, but it passes our comprehension how it can be reasonable to enact that a person, merely because he was instigated is liable to be detained in custody in jail. The learned Advocate General argued that it should be presumed that the Act would be reasonably administered. We are not at all concerned with the question whether the person operating the Act will be reasonable or not. We are concerned with the sole question whether the provisions of the Act are reasonable and in the interests of the general public. If they are not, then the Act is void and no person however reasonable can be left to exercise powers under such an Act.

[12] Again, if one were to consider all the provisions of the Act one would find that there is no period fixed during which a person may be detained. The proviso to S. 2, Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act says that the order shall be reviewed by the Provincial Government at the end of one year from the date of making it and shall not remain in force for more than one year unless upon such review the Provincial Government directs its continuance; in other words, the Provincial Government which in the present case means the Deputy Secretary may order the continuance of the detention for an unlimited period. It is true that S. 9 of the Act provides that the order shall be submitted to two Judges with the qualifications described therein in order to obtain their opinion whether or not there is lawful and sufficient cause for such an order, but this provision does not place any limitation on the Provincial Government for the continuance of the order for an indefinite period. In the first place, there is no time fixed within which the Judges are to give their opinion. Secondly, by virtue of S. 9, sub s. (2) the Provincial Government may sit upon that opinion for an indefinite period and pass no orders upon it. Lastly, the Provincial Government is not bound to accept such opinion or report of the Judges. It is given power to pass such orders upon their report as to the Government appears just or proper. We would point out also that by virtue of the provisions of sub-s. (3) of B. 9 of the Act the person against whom an order under S. 2 (1) has been passed is not entitled to appear before the Judges either in person or by pleader, and the proceedings and report of the said Judges are made confidential. It is obvious that the safeguards to wrongful custody in jaii which are pretended to be laid down in S. 9 are purely illusory. The order of the two Judges need never be accepted by the Government. No one except the Government is permitted to know what the report of the two Judges is, nor is any one permitted to know what transpired in the proceedings before the two Judges. We thus see that the Government is again being made the only authority to decide whether its order is lawful or not. The Government is also the only authority to decide whether the detention should continue or not. Can it be said that it is reasonable and in the interests of the general public to give the Government, that is, the Deputy Secretary such absolute and unlimited powers? In our opinion it cannot.

[13] There is another point of great importance. Under Art. 22, sub art. (4), Constitution Act, it is laid down that no law providing for preventive detention shall authorise the detention of a person for a longer period than three months unless an Advisory Board consisting of persons having certain judicial qualifications has reported before the expiry of the said three months that there is in its opinion sufficient cause for such detention. The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act is in direct conflict with these provisions laid down in the Constitution Act. We shall deal later with the latest order passed by the President of the Republic of India whereby these rights given to the citizens under Art. 22 (4) are sought to be whittled down and we shall endeavour to show that this order is of no legal effect.

[14] We now propose to summarise grounds of our opinion that the restrictions imposed by the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act upon the free movement of citizens throughout the territory of India are not reasonable and lare not in the interests of the general public. They are as follows: (1) The Act gives the Provincial Government, that is to say, the Deputy Secretary, the power to detain persons if he forms a certain opinion and neither the Courts nor any other authority is entitled to question the reasonableness or the validity of such opinion. In this connection we would repeat again that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act is not an emergency measure but a measure to supplement the ordinary criminal law. This fact is one which governs our determination of the question of the reasonableness and the public benefit in all its aspects; (2) The Act renders a citizen liable to commitment to custody in jail even though he has no sinister object or motive and merely because he was at any time or is a member of an association the objects of which are not known to him; (3) The Act provides for the commitment to prison of a citizen merely because he is a subject of instigation although he may not have any inclination to do the act instigated; (4) By the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act a person may be kept in custody for an indefinite period. The length of that period is left to the sole discretion of the Government, that is to say, of the Deputy Secretary; (5) Although the order of Government is to be submitted for opinion and report to two Judges the Government is not bound in any way to accept that opinion or report; (6) The person detained has no right to place his case before these two Judges either in person or by pleader, nor is he or any one else given the right to know anything about the proceedings before the Judges or the report furnished by them; and (7) The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act is in direct conflict with the provisions of art. 22 (4), Constitution Act.

[15] The learned Advocate General argued that even if some portions of the Act are considered to be void on the ground that they are inconsistent with the provisions of Part III of the Constitution Act, the Court should give effect to those portions of the Act which are not in conflict with the Constitution Act, in other words, he asks us to split up the Act and give effect to such portions of it as are not in conflict with the Constitution Act. We are of opinion that this cannot be done having regard to our findings regarding the illegality of certain provisions of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. The illegalities which we have pointed out cannot be severed from the rest of the Act. They are fundamental illegalities and they taint the whole of the Act and are inextricably mixed up with the other provisions of the Act. The doctrine of severability can only be applied where a particular provision of an Act can be isolated from the rest of the Act and yet the Act can be worked.

be made. The whole Act is vitiated by the illegalities pointed out above and it is impossible to isolate those illegalities and pronounce that the rest of the Act is legal. In this connection we would refer to the observations of the Chief Justice of the High Court at Patna in the case of Brahmeshwar Prasad v. The State of Bihar (A I. R. (37) 1910 Pat. 265), a report of which has been furnished to us by the learned Advocate General. This is what the learned Chief Justice says:

"I now come to the second line of reply of the learn-

Put crudely the argument comes to this. If a law provides for detention for six months, but the Constitution says that no law shall provide for detention for more than three months, then that law is not wolly void, but can be regarded as a good law as regards detention up to three months. The fallaciousness of such an argument is at once apparent. It would mean, not severing the bad portion of the law from the good and leaving the latter, but substituting a new and different law in place of the old. In fact it would mean legislation by

still greater because the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act has been found by us to be void not merely because it provides for detention for a longer period than is permissible under the Constitution Act but for certain other more fundamental reasons. It is not for us to legislate. We are merely to interpret an Act and discover whether it is void or not. We are not to substitute a new and more reasonable Act in the place of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. We thus hold that the entire Act is void for the reasons stated above and that the detention of the persons who obtained these Rules is illegal.

[18] We shall now deal with these Rules on the footing that the Act is not void. In our opinion, if this assumption is made, the order of detention is bad inasmuch as the provisions of the Act have not been followed. We would refer again to the provisions of S. 2 (1), Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act. In our opinion this section means that the Provincial Government must come to a definite opinion before it can pass an order of detention. Section 2 (1) (i) says that where in the opinion of the Provincial Government there are reasonable grounds for believing that any person is or was at any time a member of an association with objects and methods etc. may pass an order committing that person to jail or placing certain other restrictions on him as are mentioned in S. 2 (1) (iii) (a) to (f). We would point out that the words used are "is or was at any time a member." The orders of Government in all

1949 are in the following form:
"Whereas in the opinion of the Provincial Government there are reasonable grounds for believing that these cases except those which have been passed under the West Bengal Security Ordinance of Avenue), Calcutta,

(i) is or was a member of an association of which the objects and methods include the commission of offences included in Sch. 1 to the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930 (Bengal Act VI [6] of 1930)

(ii) is doing or did acts to assist the operations of an association of which the objects and methods include—the commission of offences included in Sch. 1 to the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930

(Bengal Act VI (6) of 1930).

The Governor, in exercise of the powers conferred by S. 2, Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930 (Bengal Act VI [6] of 1930), is pleased to make the following order: "

It is quite clear from this order that the Government has come to no definite conclusion. Section 2 (1), so to speak, offers the Government a choice of matters on which it is required to form an opinion. If the Government is of opinion that a person is a member of an association etc., it may pass the orders mentioned in S. 2 (1). Similarly, if the Government is of opinion that a person was at any time a member of an association etc., it may pass all or any of the orders mentioned in the section. The Government must make its choice. What the Government in this case has done is to make no choice. It uses the words "was at any time or is." In other words, what the Government is saying is this: "I am not sure if the person was at any time a member, nor am I sure that he is at present a member. Nevertheless I order him to be detained because I am of opinion that he was at any time or is a member." We would say with great respect that in our opinion this statement in the order does not make sense. The only inference from this order is that the Government has formed no opinion at all. It has merely repeated the very words of the section. There is a danger in merely repeating the very words of a section in an order. The alternatives given in a section of a statute may be reasonable. We do not say that in this particular case these alternatives are even reasonable. But an order of Government stating that in his opinion both alternatives are present is clearly meaningless. When a section distinguishes between a person who was at any time a member and a person who is a member of an association it means that it is dealing with persons of two distinct types; otherwise there would be no sense in mentioning these alternatives in the section. It follows from this that the Government must make up its mind as to the category to which a person it is proposing to detain belongs. The Government here has done no such thing. We hold therefore that the order of Government is not in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act and that it indicates that the Govern. ment has formed no opinion at all. In this connection the learned Advocate General drew our attention to the case of King Emperor v. Shibnath Banerjee, 1944-6 F. O. R. 1: (A. I. R. (30) 1948 F. C. 75: 45 Or. L. J. 341). In that case the Central Government expressed its opinion in the very words of the section which contained certain alternatives. Two of the learned Judges Zafrulla Khan and Srinivasa Varadachariar JJ. held that such an order was bad whereas Sir Patrick Spens C. J., held that the order was valid. The view of Sir Patrick Spens was upheld by the Judicial Committee but it expressed no definite opinion on this point. We are of opinion, however, that the contention of the learned Advocate General cannot be given effect to inasmuch as the phraseology of the. Acts in that case and the phraseology of the present Act are quite different. Rule 26 of the Defence of India Rules is what was being construed. The relevant portion of that rule is in the following terms:

"The Central Government or the Provincial Government, if it is satisfied with respect to any particular person that with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the defence of India, the public safety, the maintenance of public order, His Majesty's relations with foreign powers or Indian States, the maintenance of peaceful conditions in tribal areas or the efficient prosecution of the war it is necessary so to do, may make an order

- (b) directing that he be detained."

Here, the Central Government could detain a particular person with a view to prevent him from doing one or other of several acts. In such a case it was held by the Chief Justice that an order which mentioned that the Government was detaining a person with a view to prevent him from doing all or any of those acts was perfectly justifiable. The present cases are quite different. The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, S. 2 (1) does not say that the Government may detain a person with a view to prevent him from doing one or all of several Acts. What it says is that if the Provincial Government is of opinion that a person belongs to one category or another he may be detained. The distinction is obvious. Before you can detain a person under such a provision of the law you must be satisfied that he belongs to one or other of those categories. Under R. 26, Defence of India Rules, all that the Government has to do is to form an opinion that it is necessary to detain a person in order to prevent him from doing one or other of certain acts. In this rule it was not necessary for the Government to form an opinion definitely as to which act such person may do. He may be a person who is prone to do one or other of such acts. Under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, S. 2 (1), the Government has to form an opinion as to whether a person sought to be detained was at any time a member of an association or whether he is at present a member of an association. We are of opinion, therefore, that as the Provincial Government has formed no opinion at all on the matter, it had no authority to pass the orders of detention, that it has passed and that consequently the orders are bad.

[19] We have already dealt with these Rules on the footing that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act is an Act providing for preventive detention and have shown that even if it were so, the detention orders which are the subject-matter of these Rules are bad. We are of opinion, however, that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act does not deal with preventive detention. The law regarding preventive detention, as we understand it is directed towards preventing a person from doing something which the Legislature thinks should not be done. Nowhere in the Act do we find any expression which indicates that the law is designed for the purpose of preventing a person from doing any. thing. We have set out the preamble in the earlier part of the judgment and it contains nothing which would indicate that the law is a preventive measure. Section 2 of the Act, which is the most important section in the Act and which gives powers of detention to the Provincial Government does not say that these powers are given for the purpose of preventing anything being done. It merely lays down that a person may be detained or dealt with in certain other ways if he is or was a member of a certain kind of association or if he is or was being instigated or controlled by a member of a certain kind of association or if he is doing or did at any time any act to assist the operation of such association. It nowhere says that a person may be detained or otherwise dealt with in order to prevent him from doing anything. If you detain a person if he is a member of an association you are not detaining him in order to prevent him from being a member of the association but you are restricting his liberty because he is a member of such association, a fortiori, if you detain or otherwise restrict the liberty of a person because he was a member of an association, you are not doing anything in order to prevent him from being such member. The same arguments would apply to the provisions contained in S. 2 (1) (ii) and (iii). The law does not lay down that the authority detaining a person or otherwise restricting his liberty should be satisfied that the detention is necessary for the prevention of anything. That being so, we are of opinion that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act is not a law of preventive detention. The learned Advocate-General drew our attention to a certain passage in Dicey's Law of the Constitution, Edn. IX at page 231 where a certain Irish Act was described as an Act which gave the executive absolute power of arbitrary and preventive arrest. We do not think it will serve any useful purpose to discuss this passage of the Irish law referred to. It is dangerous to interpret one law by reference to another unless the terms are identical or so similar as to justify a common deduction. It would be safe and more correct to ascertain the nature of the Bengal' Criminal Law Amendment Act by reference to its own provisions. Having regard to those provisions we have no hesitation in saying that the law is not a law providing for preventive detention.

[20] Now, if it is not such a law, then it is impossible to justify the orders passed in these cases. Article 21, Constitution Act says this: "No person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to procedure established by law." There can be no doubt that in these cases the detenus have been deprived of their personal liberty. The order depriving them of such liberty can be upheld only if it is an order passed according to the procedure established by law. Article 22 (1) and (2), Constitution Act, provides some portion of such procedure. It says this:

22. (1) "No person who is arrested shall be detained in custody without being informed, as soon as may be, of the grounds for such arrest nor shall he be denied the right to consult, and to be defended by, a legal practitioner of his choice."

(2) "Every person who is arrested and detained in custody shall be produced before the nearest Magistrate within a period of twenty four hours of such arrest excluding the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the Court of the Magistrate and no such person shall be detained in custody beyond the said period without the authority of a Magistrate."

It is admitted that in these cases the detenus have not been produced before any Magistrate within twenty four hours of their arrest excluding the time necessary for the journey from the place of arrest to the Court of the Magistrate. Thus the detenus have been deprived of their personal liberty without complying with one of the most important items of procedure laid down in the Constitution Act regarding such deprivation. In the circumstances the order of detention cannot be upheld.

[21] We shall now deal with the two cases in which persons have been detained under the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949. This Ordinance is clearly an Ordinance providing for preventive detention, but in our opinion this Ordinance is void because it is inconsistent with the provisions of the Constitution Act. The Ordinance in S. 22 provides for the detention of a person for a period not exceeding nine months. Under Art. 22 (4), Constitution Act, it is provided that no law providing for preventive detention shall authorise the detention of a person for a longer period than three months unless an Advisory Board has reported that there is in its opinion sufficient cause for such detention. The West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949, does not provide for any Advisory Board of the nature contemplated by the Constitution Act. It says that the Provincial Government may place before a Judge of the High Court the grounds on which the order of preventive detention is made. The section is clearly not mandatory. The Government if it so chooses need not place before the aforesaid Judge its order of detention.

[22] Next, we would point out that reference to a Judge of the High Court is only to be made where an order is passed under cl. (a) of subs. (1) of S. 21 of the aforesaid Ordinance, that is to say, in the case of an order directing detention. Section 21 (1) of the said Ordinance deals with several other restrictions on the liberty of the subject. In the case of those other restrictions there is no provision whatsoever for any reference being made to a High Court Judge. On the contrary, the provision in S. 22 of the Ordinance, empowers the Government in those cases to renew its orders from time to time after the expiry of each period of nine months. The other reasons which we have given for holding that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act does not impose restrictions which are reasonable and are in the interests of the general public apply to the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949. We hold therefore that the order as passed on the two persons Purna Chandra Ghose and Dulal Bose under the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949, is void as it is inconsistent with the Constitution Act.

[23] We shall now deal with the Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, made by the President of the Indian Republic. We are of opinion that it can have no effect so far as the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930 and the West Bengal Security Ordi. nance, 1949 are concerned and our reasons are as follows: The Constitution came into force at midnight on 25th January 1950. The President was not sworn as President until 10-15 A. M. on 26th January 1950. In other words, he was not President until the Constitution came into force. As soon as the Constitution came, into force the two abovementioned laws became void by reason of the provisions of Art. 13 (1) for the reasons which we have already given. The Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, provides that the maximum period for which a person may be detained shall be, in the case of a person detained immediately before the commencement of the Constitution, three months; and in the case of persons detained in pursuance of an order made after such commencement for a period of three months from the date of such order. If these two provisions could be given effect so far as the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, and the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949, are concerned, then some at least of the reasons given for declaring these measures void would disappear, but we find that there is an insuperable difficulty to apply the Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, to the above mentioned two Acts. The Acts having become void they cannot be vivified or revived by such an order which purports to have been passed in the exercise of powers conferred by sub-cls. (a) and (b) of cl. (7) of Art. 22, Constitution Act read with Art. 573 of the said Constitution Act. In this connection we can do no better than quote the observations of the Chief Justice of the Patna High Court in the case of Brahmeswar Prasad v. The State of Bihar, (A.I.B. (37) 1950 Pat. 265).

"In my judgment no such order made by him under cl. (7) could in any way prevent an Act becoming void under Art. 13 (1) and this for two reasons. The first and primary reason is that under Art. 13 (1) quite clearly provisions become void, if they become void at all directly and instantaneously with the Constitution coming into force whereas an order by the President can only originate and become valid after the Constitution has come into force. There can be no such order of the President except as a consequence of the Constitution having come into force and given him power to make it. That is to say such order must be logically subsequent to the voidability which the coming into force of the Constitution itself affects. That, in my opinion follows directly and logically from the laws of cause and effect. But it is in fact not necessary to enter into philosophical questions of the infinite divisibility of time and the nature of simultaneity, because in fact we are here concerned with a time lapse of over ten hours. The Constitution came into force on the midnight of 25th and the Act, if it became void at all, became void then. But the President did not enter upon his office until he took the oath on 26th at 10-15 A. M.

As to these propositions, there can be no question, Art. 394 of the Constitution provides that certain Articles with none of which we are concerned, shall come into force at once, and the remaining provisions shall come into force on 26th January 1950. Article 367 (1) makes the General Clauses Act, 1897, applicable and the General Clauses Act provides in S. 5 (3) that where an Act is to come into force on a certain day, it shall come into force at midnight of the preceding day. Under Art. 60 the President must make and subscribe an oath before entering upon his office. The same thing is apparent from the Constitution (Removal of Difficulties) Order No. 1 published with Notin. No. 1 in the Gazette of India (Extraordinary) of 7th January 1950, which prescribes that such person as the Constituent Assembly shall have elected as President shall, before entering upon his office, make and subscribe the oath or affirmation prescribed in Art. 60. Notification No. F35/4/49 Public, published in the Gazette of India (Extraordinary) on 26th January 1950) shows that the Governor General proclaimed the new Constitution at 10-15 A.M. on 26th January. After that the President took the cath, and took his seat as President of India and assumed the office. Quite clearly the President could make no valid order until after 10 15 A.M. on 26th whereas those provisions in Act III [3] of 1950 repugnant to the Constitution became void directly after midnight on 25th. It is quite apparent that the subsequent order of the President could not restore an Act which had already become void and ceased to exist. Nor does his order purport to do so."

[26] Article 22, sub-art. (7) (a) and (b) are in the following terms:

22 (7). Parliament may by law prescribe-

(a) the circumstances under which, and the class or classes of cases in which, a person may be detained for a period longer than three months under any law providing for preventive detention without obtaining the opinion of an Advisory Board in accordance with the provisions of sub-cl. (a) of cl. (4).

(b) the maximum period for which any person may in any class or classes of cases be detained under any law providing for preventive detention."

It is quite clear that these two sub-clauses contemplate the taking out of a certain class of persons from the operation of the law laid down in sub-cl. (4) by which the maximum period of three months is prescribed. Parliament should therefore when enlarging the maximum period of detention set forth what class or classes of persons are to be detained for a period longer than three months. In this case the President has not done any such thing. He has made no selection of any class or classes but he has extended the period of preventive detention to all cases of persons preventively detained. Further, Art. 22, Sub-Art. (7) (a) states that the Parliament may prescribe the circumstances under which the detention should be extended for a period longer than three months. Here no such circumstances are mentioned. Rule 2 of the Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950 begins thus: "Where in any class of cases or under any circumstances specified in any law providing for preventive detention etc." Such an order is not one which complies with the provisions of Art. 22, sub-Art. (7) (a) Constitution Act. Next, cl. (b) of Sub.Art. (7) of Art. 22 says that the Parliament may prescribe the maximum period for which any person in any class or classes of cases may be detained under any law providing for preventive detention. Although the words "the maximum period" are mentioned in R. 3, Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order 1950, as a matterof fact no maximum period is provided. The words "the maximum period" connote the fixation of a particular period which is the maximum. Rule 3 of the aforesaid order would have the effect of fixing various periods. In the case of a person in detention before the commencement of the Constitution the period is three months from the commencement of the Constitution. Now a person may have been in detention for four months before the commencement of the Constitution. Under the Order passed by the President the maximum period for him would be three additional months or seven months. Another person may have been in detention one month before the commencement of the Constitution. For him the maximum period would be four months. Thus no fixed maximum period has been prescribed and the Preventive Detention (Extension of Duration) Order, 1950, is therefore void. We would repeat again that the order would also be void because of the view we have taken namely that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, is not an Act providing for preventive detention.

(27) Having regard to all these circumstances we must hold that the detention of the petitioners in all these cases is illegal and we direct that they be set at liberty forthwith.

[28] After we have completed our judgment we were sent a copy of a Rule of an order by the President of the Republic of India entitled "Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950". The Rule of the aforesaid Order of which we were sent a copy is R. 28 and it runs as follows:

"28. Any Court, Tribunal or authority required or empowered to enforce any law in force in the territory of India immediately before the appointed day shall, notwithstanding that this order makes no provision or insufficient provision for the adaptation of the law for the purpose of bringing it into accord with the provisions of the Constitution, construe the law with all such adaptations as are necessary for the eaid purpose:

Provided that, if any question arises regarding the adaptations with which such law should be construed, for the said purpose, the question shall be referred to the Central Government if the law relates to a matter enumerated in List I or List III in the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution and to the State Government concerned in any other case, and the decision of that Government on any such reference shall be final."

[29] Although the learned Advocate General wanted an appointment to make his submissions on the rule when questioned by us he stated that he had nothing to say on it. We must frankly confess that we find it difficult to put any reasonable construction upon it. It directs this Court as well as certain Tribunals and other authorities to construe the law in a certain manner. We are quite unaware of any provision of law or any principle or practice regard. ing legislation which would justify any legislature to direct a Court regarding the manner in which it has to construe the law. A Court construes a law in accordance with definite rules or canons of interpretation. It has to decide the meaning which a law bears. The jurisdiction of the Court in this respect must be unfettered. No Court can submit to an order from any authority directing it to construe a law in a particular manner. Such an order will be contrary to all principles and will result in making the Court a mere tool of the legislature or other authority which makes such an order. All that the legislature can do is to define certain terms but it must leave the Court to interpret the law according to those definitions. This order purports to be a law passed in accordance with the provisions of Art. 872 (2), Constitution Act. In our opinion although the order is garbed in such a way as to simulate a legislative enactment, it is nothing of the kind. It is a direction pure and simple by the Executive to the Court to construe a law not necessarily in accordance with justice or legal principles but in accordance with the desire of the Executive. Obviously this Court cannot submit to an Adaptation Order of this kind. Apart from the fact that the Order conflicts with all principles of judicial independence we would further point out that it is something which is contrary to the express provisions of Art. 372 (2), Constitution Act. That sub-clause empowers the President to make adaptations and modifications of any law in force in the territory of India. It does not empower the Court to make such adaptations or modifications and indeed it would be very surprising if any Constitution Act were to impose upon the Court the duty of legislating. The Courts are meant to interpret legislation and not to make it. What the President has done is to throw upon the Court a burden which is exclusively his. He is to adapt or modify and he has no authority to ask the Court to do something which he alone is expressly empowered to do. We would further point out that by that Article the Constitution Act has delegated certain powers to the President. He in turn cannot delegate those powers to any other authority. The principle delegatus non delegare potest would apply. Article 372 (1), Constitution Act states that notwithstanding the repeals by this Constitution of the enactments referred to in Art. 395 and subject to the other provisions of this Constitution, all laws in force in the territory of India immediately before the commencement of the Constitution shall continue in force until altered or repealed or amended by a competent Legislature or other competent authority. Article 395 refers to the repeals of the Indian Independence Act and the Government of India Act together with all enactments amending or supplementing the latter not including the abolition of Privy Council Jurisdiction Act, 1949. The Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, and the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949, have nothing to do with the Acts mentioned in art, 395. Article 372 (1) says that all laws in force in the territory of India immediately before the commencement of the Constitution shall continue to be in force, but there is a necessary and important provision in the Article which cannot be lost sight of. It says that those laws shall be in force subject to the other provisions of this Constitution. Article 18 (1), Constitution Act says that all laws in force in the territory of India before the commencement of the Constitution in so far as they are inconsistent with the provision of Part III shall to the extent of such inconsistency be void. Thus Art. 872 (1) does not preserve the effect of all laws in force in the territory of India before the commencement of the Constitution. It keeps only such laws in force as are not inconsistent with the provisions of Part III. We have held that the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930, and the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949, are inconsistent with the provisions of Part III. They became therefore void from 12 midnight of 25th January 1950, when the Constitution came into force. That being so, we are of opinion that even the President or the Legislature cannot make any adaptations or modifications of those laws in order to bring them in accord with the provisions of this Constitution. Those laws are dead and we fail to see how a dead law can be brought back to life by modification or ad. aptation.

[30] We have something further to say with respect to R. 28, Adaption of Laws Order, 1950. Not only has the Order tried to convert the Court into a legislative body but in doing so it has by a proviso reduced this newly created legislative body to a position of subordination and inferiority. The proviso says that if the Court makes any such adaptation as is contemplated in the first part of the rule, if the adapted law relates to matters enumerated in List I or List III in Sch. 7 to the Constitution it shall be subject to adjudication by the State Government concerned. It adds that the decision of the Government on any such reference shall be final. In other words, what this Order purports to do is this: It converts the Central or State Executive into judicial authorities with the power of revising the decisions of the Courts of law and makes their decision on the point final. Taken as a whole the effect of the Order is this: The Judiciary is converted into a Legislature with limited powers, and the Executive is converted into a Judiciary whose decisions are to be final. In this confusing state of affairs, the only thing for us to do is to act in accordance with the oath which we took when we assumed office when we swore to bear true faith and allegiance to the Constitution of India and to perform our duties of office duly and faithfully without fear or favour and affection or ill will and where we also swore to uphold the Constitution and the laws. In our opinion we would be false to our oath if we gave effect to this Adaptation of Laws Order, 1950, even though this Order may have emanated from the President of the Indian Republic our respect for whom is no less than that of anybody else.

[31] The Advocate-General has next brought to our notice a new Act called the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, passed by Parliament on 25th February 1950, and he says that the orders for detention under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1980, and the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949, have been cancelled but that the detentions have been continued under the Preventive Detention Act, 1950. He suggests that in the circumstances the Rules have become infructuous. We cannot agree with this view. We issued these Rules upon the State on the footing that the detention was under the Bengal Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1930 and the West Bengal Security Ordinance, 1949. The detention under these legislative measures was sought to be justified by the State. We must therefore pronounce upon the validity of such detention irrespective of the what new legislative measures have now been introduced. Our decision, if correct, may have the effect of giving the detenus valuable rights both under the criminal law and the civil law. We do not propose to deprive them of these rights by not pronouncing our judgment. Whether the detenus are now detained under any valid law is not a matter for consideration in the disposal of these Rules. We pronounce no opinion on the validity of such detention or upon the propriety of the conduct of the authorities in continuing a detention which we have pronounced to be illegal or upon the risks which the detaining authority may be taking upon themselves by detaining the petitioners under this new law in spite of our orders. That is a matter which may form the subject of further proceedings the results of which we cannot anticipate.

[82] It may be that in spite of all our efforts the petitioners will be re-arrested and sent back to custody. That is a matter with which we are not now concerned. Our duty is that of right action, the result and fruits of our action are not for us to consider. That must be left to that divine providence which controls the destiny of us all.

[33] The citizens of the Republic have given great powers to the Judiciary. We recognise that great powers necessarily involve grave responsibilities, but we are not dismayed. It has always been the proud tradition of this Court to stand between the subject and any encroachment on his liberty by the executive or any other authority however high. It is a great tradition which we have inherited and we believe that this Court will be worthy of this inheritance. Amidst the strident clamour of political strife and the tumult of the clash of conflicting classes we must remain impartial. This Court is no respecter of persons and its endeavour must be to ensure that above this clamour and tumult the strong calm voice of justice shall always be heard. Fiat justitia ruat coelum.

V.B.B. Order accordingly.

for Respondents,

Harries C. J. - This is an appeal from anorder of a learned Subordinate Judge of Asansol, dismissing an application to set aside a sale. The application was made under Ss. 47 and 151, Civil P. C.

[2] To appreciate the points in issue it will be necessary to state the facts in some detail.

[3] Nagarmull Rajgharia, now deceased, whose personal representative has been brought on the record as respondent in his stead, obtained a decree in Suit No. 1518 of 1923 on the Original Side of this Court. The decree was eventually transferred for execution by this Court to the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Asansol through the District Judge of Burdwan. A certificate of non-satisfaction under S. 41. Civil P. C., was sent by this Court which was transmitted to the Asansol Court. The decreeholder Nagarmull Rajgharia commenced Money Execution Case No. 296 of 1931 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Asansol, but that case was eventually dismissed for default on 27th Fabruary 1932. The Court at Asansol sent what purported to be a certificate of non-satisfaction under S. 41, Civil P. C., to this Court and it is to be observed that the decree was never again transferred to the Court at Asansol for execution. Later, however, the decree holder made another application for execution at Asansol and Money Execution Oase No. 224 of 1932 was commenced. In the course of that execution the decree-holder purchased the Sripur Colliery on 9th June 1933, but the sale was set aside on 29th January 1934 on an application by one of the judgment-debtors, the appellant in this appeal, under O. 21, B. 90, Civil P. C. A certificate purporting to be a certificate under S. 41, Civil P. C., was sent by the Asansol Court to the High Court. The decree-holder appealed against this order setting aside the sale, but his appeal was dismissed by this Court. The records of Misc. Case No. 224 of 1932 were returned to this Court by the Asansol Court on 17th September 1935 and the execution case was revived.

[4] The property, namely, Sripur Colliery, was again sold in an execution sale to the decree-holder for Rs. 12,000 but this sale was set aside. The property was again resold and purchased by the decree-holder for Rs. 2,50,000 on 27th May 1988. The appellant made an application to set aside this sale which was rejected. He preferred an appeal to this Court which was ultimately dismissed and an application by him for leave to appeal to the Privy Council failed.

[5] It appears that the judgment-debtor instituted a suit being Title Suit No. 8 of 1986 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Asansol to recover a sum of money and to enforce a charge against the Sripur Colliery and for permission to redeem a charge declared in favour of the said decree holder Nagarmull Rajgharia in Suit No. 1518 of 1923. The appellant's suit was dismissed in the Court at Asansol, but on 18th August 1940 an appeal from that decree was allowed in this Court.

[6] In order to ascertain the amount due to the decree-holder, Nagarmall Ragharia in Suit No. 1518 of 1923 the appellant instructed his attorney to search the records of that suit and it is said that as a result of that search the appellant came to know for the first time on 23rd August 1940 that the Asansol Court had sent a certificate of non-satisfaction in Money Execution Case No. 296 of 1931 to this Court and that no fresh certificate of non-satisfaction had been sent by this Court to the Court at Asansol. The appellant then realised for the first time that the Court at Asansol had no jurisdiction to entertain the second execution case, namely, Money Execution Case No. 224 of 1932 and that all the proceedings in that case were null and void as they were without jurisdiction. It seems that an application to review the order of the High Court dismissing the application to set aside the sale for Rs. 2,50,000 was made but was rejected. But no point was made on this matter and it does not appear when that application was made.

[7] As the appellant alleged that the Court at Asansol had no jurisdiction to entertain the second application for execution and therefore no jurisdiction to order or conduct a sale, an application was made to the Court at Asansol under Ss. 47 and 151, Civil P. C., praying that the sale be set aside as it was a sale without jurisdiction.

[8] The decree-holder objected and contended that the Court at Asansol had jurisdiction to entertain the proceedings and in the alternative, if it had no jurisdiction, the appellant having failed to press the point in the proceedings was now barred by the doctrine of res judicata from contending that the Court had no jurisdiction.

[9] The matter eventually came before the learned Subordinate Judge who held in the first place that the Court at Asansol had juris. diction to entertain the second application for execution. In the view of the learned Subordinate Judge, the document purporting to be a certificate of non-satisfaction sent under S. 41, Civil P. C. to the High Court when the first application was dismissed for default was not in fact or in law a certificate of non-satisfaction which deprived the Court at Asansol of jurisdiction further to entertain execution of the decree. In the view of the learned Subordinate Judge, this notice was merely an intimation to the High Court that the first attempt at execution had failed for non-appearance of the decreeholder. As in the view of the learned Subordinate Judge there was no certificate of nonsatisfaction sent to the High Court the Court at Asansol had retained jurisdiction to execute the decree and therefore all the proceedings were with jurisdiction.

[10] In the second place the Court was of opinion that this question of jurisdiction should have been raised and pressed. But as that was not done the Court could not later be asked to reagitate the matter and hold that it had no jurisdiction. In short it held that the judgment-debtor appellant was barred by the doctrine of res judicata from raising the point.

[10a] In the Court of the Subordinate Judge there seems to have been some discussion as to whether or not there was on the file in the Court at Asansol a certificate of non-satisfaction from this Court when the second execution case was started. Allegations were made by the appellant that the documents were abstracted from the record in the High Court and placed in the record of the execution case at Asansol. It is unnecessary, however, to consider this question because learned advocate for the respondent conceded before us that no fresh certificate of non-satisfaction was sent by the High Court to the Court of Asansol after receipt by the High Court of the certificate under S. 41 despatched by the Asansol Court to the High Court and received by the latter on 11th March 1932. It will be seen therefore that no fresh certificate of non-satisfaction was sent by this Court to Asansol which would give that Court jurisdiction. The respondent's case is that the Asansol Court had jurisdiction throughout and had not sent any certificate under S. 41 which would deprive that Court of its jurisdiction.

sol had no inherent jurisdiction to execute a decree made on the Original Side of this Court. A decree of this Court however could be transferred to Asansol for execution under the provisions of S. 39, Civil P. O. which is in these terms:

"(1) The Court which passed a decree may, on the application of the decree-holder, send it for execution to another Court,

(a) if the person against whom the decree is passed actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or

(b) if such person has not property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree sufficient to satisfy such decree and has property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or

(c) if the decree directs the sale or delivery of immoveable property situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, which passed it, or

(d) if the Court which passed the decree considers for any other reason, which it shall record in writing that the decree should be executed by such other Court.

(2) The Court which passed a decree may of its own motion send it for execution to any subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction."

[12] It is common ground that the decree in question could be and was transferred by this Court to the Court at Asansol for execution.

[18] Section 41 of the Code provides:

passed it to another Court for execution a copy of the decree together with a certificate of non-satisfaction or part satisfaction is sent to the Court which has to execute the decree and it is clear that when the Court to which these documents are sent, receives the documents it then has jurisdiction to execute the decree. It is admitted that this Court sent a copy of the decree and a certificate of non-satisfaction to the Asansol Court and therefore that Court had jurisdiction to execute the decree and therefore had jurisdiction to entertain the first application for execution which resulted in Money Execution Case No. 296 of 1931.

[15] As I have stated earlier, this application was dismissed for default and there can be no doubt that a certificate was sent to this Court giving the result of the application for execution. According to the judgment-debtor appellant this was a certificate of non-satisfaction under S. 41, Civil P. C., whereas according to the respondent it was nothing more than an intimation that the first attempt at execution had failed.

[16] The certificate was in Form No. 5 of Appendix E, Civil P. C., that is, in the form of a "certificate of execution of a decree transferred to another Court" under O. 21, R. 6 of the Code. This Court has adapted that form for certificates under S. 41 of the Code and there is a note on the form that the form may also be used for certificates under S. 41 of the Code. Such a form was undoubtedly used and the details of the execution are given in the form and under the column "How the case is disposed of" appear the words "Dismissed for default, 27th February 1932."

Asansol intended this document to be a certificate of non-satisfaction. It is urged however that the Court at Asansol could never have intended this certificate to be a certificate under s. 41 of the Court at Asansol could never have intended this certificate to be a certificate under s. 41 of the Code because it had not complied with the Rules of the Court. Rule 264 of the Civil Rules and

Orders (part I) of this Court provides that a covering letter should be sent with a certificate of non-satisfaction. But there is no covering letter on the record of this Court and it would appear that no such letter was sent with this certificate. The respondent contends that as B. 264 was not complied with, it is clear that the document was never intended to be a certificate of non-satisfaction under S. 41 of the Code.

(18) The learned Subordinate Judge attached no importance to the failure to send the covering letter with the certificate and I think rightly. Rule 264 of the Civil Rules and Orders referred to above is in these terms:

"Decree sent to the High Court for execution under S. 39 and certificates communicating the result of execution proceedings to the High Court under S. 41 of the Code, shall be accompanied by covering letters."

[19] It is difficult to appreciate what was in the mind of this Court when this rule was drafted. A covering letter as a rule contains nothing more than a statement that accompanying the letter is a certain document and I cannot see that the absence or otherwise of a covering letter can affect the nature of the document sent. If it was a notice of non-satisfaction under S. 41 of the Code it would, I think, be such a notice with or without a covering letter and I think the learned Subordinate Judge was right in not attaching any importance to the want of a covering letter.

Asansol did not send with the certificate purporting to be one under 8. 41 of the Code a copy of the decree which had been sent to it and that fact is also suggested to be of importance. It is urged by the respondent that if the Asansol Court really intended the certificate to be one under 8. 41 it would have sent a copy of the decree along with it.

[21] I think there can be no doubt that the certificate sent was a certificate of non-satisfaction under S. 41 of the Code. It was sent in the form prescribed by this Court for such certificates. If it was not intended to be a certificate of non-satisfaction then there was no need for the Court at Asansol to send any intimation at all.

dent has contended that all that the Asansol Court had intended when sending this certificate was to intimate to this Court out of courtesy that the first attempt at execution at Asansol had failed. It was contended that the Court at Asansol was informing this Court quite unnecessarily of the fate of other proceedings. A similar certificate was sent to this Court on 1st February 1934 when a sale in the second execution case was set aside. This, it is said, was not necessary, but the certificate shows that it was intended as a certificate of non-satisfaction. It shows that a sale was held and that sale was set aside and the execution case dismissed on 29th January 1934.

[23] I cannot assume that the Asansol Court never intended to act under S. 41 of the Code and that it was merely out of courtesy informing this Court of the result of various steps in in the execution.

[24] Further it appears to me that the Court at Asansol did intend that the certificate should be a certificate under S. 41 because when the second execution case was commenced in 1932 the first order in the case makes it clear that the Court assumed that it had jurisdiction, because it wrongly thought that a fresh certificate of non-satisfaction had been received by the Court at Asansol. The first order in the second execution case is dated 24th November 1932 and is in these words:

"Register. Let the certificate of non-satisfaction received be annexed to the record. Issue notices under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C. upon the judgment-debtors returnable on 23rd December 1932."

[25] From the terms of this order it is clear that the Asansol Court was of opinion that what gave it jurisdiction to entertain the second execution case was the fact that a fresh certificate of non-satisfaction had been received from this Court, though in fact no such certificate had ever been received. This order, I think, makes it clear that the Asansol Court was of opinion that a fresh certificate of non-satisfaction from this Court was necessary to give it jurisdiction and it could only have held that view if it was of opinion that the Court at Asansol had lost jurisdiction to execute the decree by resson of something which it had done in connection with the earlier execution case. The only thing that it had done in connection with the earlier case which could deprive it of jurisdiction was to send to this Court what purported to be a certificate of non-satisfaction under S. 41, Civil P. O.

[26] For these reasons I am satisfied that the Asansol Court not only sent what purported to be a certificate of non-satisfaction under S. 41 of the Code to this Court, but intended such certificate to be a certificate of non-satisfaction. I do not agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the document was never intended to be such a certificate and was only an intimation that the first attempt at execution had failed.

[27] Mr. Atul Gupta on behalf of the respondent has contended that the circumstances existing in this case when the first application for execution was dismissed for default did not warrant the despatch of a certificate of nonsatisfaction under S. 41 of the Code. He relied upon the words of S. 41 which are:

[28] Mr. Gupta's argument is that the transferee Court was never intended by the Code to send a certificate of non-satisfaction unless it had failed to execute the decree. It is only when the Court is satisfied that it can do no more towards executing the decree that such a certificate should be sent. Failure to execute the decree at the first attempt for non-appearance of the decree-holder is not, according to Mr. Gupta, total failure to execute the decree. The Court, according to the respondents should have waited and should not have sent a certificate of non-satisfaction until it was clear that it could do nothing more to execute this decree. It, however, sent what purported to be a notice under the section when the first attempt to execute failed for non-appearance of the decree-holder.

[29] I am inclined to think that the construction placed upon this section by Mr. Atul Gupta is right. But that does not solve the question.
If what was sent to this Court was a certificate of non-satisfaction under 8. 41 then that deprived the Asansol Court of jurisdiction whether the certificate should or should not in the circumstances have been sent. The fact that the certificate was sent when it should not have been sent cannot affect the question if the certificate was intended to be a certificate of non-satisfaction as I hold it was.

[80] Reliance was placed by Mr. Gupta upon the case of Abda Begam v. Muzaffar Husen Khan, 20 ALL. 129: (1897 A. W. N. 218) the headnote of which reads as follows:

"The Court to which a decree is sent for execution retains its jurisdiction to execute the decree until the execution has been withdrawn from it, or until it has fully executed the decree and has certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree, or has executed it so far as that Court has been able to execute it within its jurisdiction and has certified that fact to the Court which sent the decree, or until it has falled to execute the decree and has certified that fact to the Court which forwarded the decree. The mere striking off of an application for execution on the ground of informality in the application does not terminate the jurisdiction of the Court to execute the decree, nor render it necessary for the Court to send any certificate to the Court which forwarded the decree for execution."

[31] In the Allahabad case the first application for execution made in the transferee Court was struck off on the ground that it did not comply with certain sections of the Code then in force. Later the Subordinate Judge of the transferee Court certified to the Court that passed the decree, that on the objection of the judgment-debtor the application for execution was struck off. On the same day, on which this certificate was sent, the decree-holder applied.

again to the transferee Court to execute the decree. The application, however, was dismissed on the ground that the transferee Court was no longer seized of the case and was functus officio. On appeal, however, the High Court held that the transferee Court in spite of the certificate which it had sent had jurisdiction to entertain the execution. The Court appears to have thought that the document which was sent was not a certificate of non-satisfaction and indeed it was not. It was merely an intimation that an application for execution had been struck off whatever that phrase may mean. In the United Provinces and in other Provinces it has been repeatedly held that striking off an application for execution is not in fact a dismissal and applications for execution struck off or, to use a familiar phrase used in those provinces, "consigned to the record room," may be revived. Those orders are not regarded as complete dismissals of the application. At p. 132 the Bench which decided the Allahabad case observed :

"In our opinion the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore did not fail to execute the decree within the meaning of S. 223; it merely struck off an application on the ground of informality. We further consider that the case was not a case in which the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore was justified in sending any certificate to the Court at Lucknow. Neither of the events had arisen which would have justified the Subordinate Judge in sending any certificate under S. 223, for there

[32] The facts of the Allahabad case differ from the facts of the present case. In the case before us the execution application had been dismissed, though for default, and that was the end of the application. In the Allahabad case the application had simply been struck off on the ground of informality and I have little doubt that it could have been revived on the informalities being corrected. In any event in the Allahabad case there was nothing to indicate that execution in the transferee Court could not proceed. Whereas in the case before us the Asansol Court might well have come to the conclusion that any attempt to execute in that Court was hopeless and it could have inferred that fact from the absence of the decree holder in support of his application. Further in the Allaha. bad case the certificate which was sent made it clear that the application was only struck off and not that it had been dismissed for any reason.

[83] I am somewhat doubtful whether a Court can go into the question whether what purports to be a certificate under S. 41 was or was not such a certificate if on the face of it it clearly is such a certificate. In any event I do not think it necessary to consider the matter further because I am satisfied that the Asansol Court intended this certificate to be a certificate under

S. 41 even if it is open to this Court to go into the question of what it did intend. There were grounds in the present case to justify the issue of such a certificate and I think it was issued and even if it was wrongly issued it deprived the transferee Court of jurisdiction because it was intended to be and was in fact a certificate under S. 41, Civil P. C.

[34] As I have stated earlier a copy of the decree was not returned to this Court with the certificate and the learned Subordinate Judge appears to have thought that to deprive the Asansol Court of jurisdiction the copy of the decree would have to be sent with the certificate of non-satisfaction. It is to be observed that the original decree is not sent to the transferee Court, but merely a copy of the same, and therefore it is by no means essential that the copy should be returned when the transferee Court notifies satisfaction or non-satisfaction. Further it is to be observed that there is nothing in the present Code of Civil Procedure that requires the transferee Court to return the copy of the decree along with the certificate of non-satisfaction. Section 41 of the Code is silent as to the return of the copy of the decree.

[35] The learned Subordinate Judge, however, relied upon a Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of J. G. Bagram v. J. P. Wise, 10 W. R. 46: (1 Beng. L. R. 91), in which it was held that when a decree of one Court has been transmitted under 8s. 284 et seg of Act VIII [8] of 1859, to another Court for execution, and when that Court has struck off for default the first proceedings in execution of the judgmentcreditor, the Court to which the decree has been transmitted has jurisdiction to allow the proceedings to be revived. At p. 50 Sir Barnes Peacook C. J., who delivered the judgment of the Full Bench observed:

"It is quite clear that the Court to which the decree was sent had jurisdiction over its own order striking off the case, whatever the striking off amounts to. As soon as a copy of the decree which is sent for execution to another Court is filed in the Court to which it is transmitted, it has the same effect as a decree of that Court, and by S. 283 that Court is to proceed to execute it according to its own rules in the like cases. The order for striking off the application for execution of the decree did not strike the copy of the decree off the records of the Court to which it was sent for execution; and as long as it remains there the Court to which it was sent may deal with it, and any application for execution of it as if it was a judgment of that Court. If in the present case, the decree had been a decree of the Backerganj Court, that Court would have had power to entertain the application."

[36] It is to be observed however that the provisions of the Code then obtaining were very different from the provisions of the present Oode. There was no provision then similar to s. 41 of the present Code which required the transferee Court to certify to the Court which passed the decree that the decree had been executed or that there had been a failure to execute the decree. It would appear that as long as a copy of the decree together with a certificate that satisfaction thereof had not been obtained within the jurisdiction of the Court that passed it remained with the transferee Court that Court had jurisdiction. This case therefore is no authority for the proposition that under the present Code the transferee Court retains jurisdiction if it retains a copy of the decree though it has sent a certificate of non-satisfaction under S. 41 of the Code to the Court that passed the decree.

[37] The case of Muhammad Ibrahim v. Chhatoo Lal, 5 Pat. 398: (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Pat. 274) was relied upon by both parties. In that case a Bench held that the jurisdiction of the Court to which a decree has been sent for execution ceases as soon as the Court takes action under S. 41, Civil P. C., and certifies to the Court which passed the decree the circumstances attending the failure on the part of the transferee Court to execute the decree.

[38] The appellant urged that this case clearly decided that once the Asansol Court had sent a certificate of non-satisfaction to this Court, the Asansol Court had no further jurisdiction. Learned Advocate for the respondent contended that in this case the transferee Court had returned the copy of the decree. But if it had, Das J. who delivered the judgment of the Bench attached no importance whatsoever to that fact. It seems to me quite clear that this Patna case supports to the full the contention of the appellant that the Asansol Court ceased to have jurisdiction when it despatched a certificate of non-satisfaction after the first application for execution had been dismissed for default. It is to be observed that in the Patna case the certificate under S. 41 was a certificate sent after dismissal for default.

[39] The respondent also relied upon the case of Maharajah of Bobbili v. Narasaraju, 48 I. A. 238 : (A. I. B. (3) 1916 P. C. 16), in which it was held that when the decree of a District Court had been sent under the Code of Civil Procedure, S. 223, to the Court of a Munsif for execution and had not been returned to the District Court, the 'proper Court' within the meaning of the Limitation Act, 1908, Sch. 1 Art. 182 (6) in which to apply for execution, or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree is the Court of the Munsif. Consequently, in the above circumstances, an application in the District Court would not prevent the time for enforcing the decree from running (under Art. 182) from the date upon which it was made.

[40] In this case the Munsif to whose Court the decree had been transferred for execution neither returned the copy of the decree nor sent a notice of non-satisfaction and therefore it was held that an application made in the Court of the District Judge for execution before the Munsif certified non-satisfaction and returned the decree was an application made to a Court without jurisdiction. This is clear from the observations of Sir John Edge, who delivered the judgment of the Board, at p. 242:

"As the decree of 5th April 1904 had by order of the Court of the District Judge been sent on 30th September 1904, to the Court of the Munsif Parvatipur for execution by the latter Court, and as the copy of the decree with the non-satisfaction certificate was not returned to the Court of the District Judge until 3rd August 1910, and as the petition of 13th December 1907, was for execution of the decree by sale of the immoveable property of the respondents which was within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court, their Lordships having regard particularly to Sa 223, 224, 228 and 230, Civil P. C. 1882, are satisfied that when that petition of 13th December 1907, was presented to the Court of the District Judge that Court was not the proper Court to which the application to execute the decree by sale of the immoveable property which had been attached by the Court of the Munsif should have been made and that the proper Court to which the application should have been made was the Court of the Munisif of Parvatipur as that was the Court whose duty it then was to execute the decree so far as it could be executed by that Court."

[41] It is true that in these observations Sir John Edge refers to the fact that the Munsif had neither returned a certificate of non-satisfaction as he was required by S. 223 of the Code of 1882 (now S. 41 of the present Code) nor a copy of the decree to Court which passed the decree. Section 223 did not require the transferee Court to return a copy of the decree and therefore it appears to me that no undue weight should be attached to the fact that the copy of the decree was not returned. I do not think that this Privy Council case is an authority for the proposition that to deprive the transferee Court of jurisdic. tion that Court must send not only a certificate of non-satisfaction, but also must return a copy of the decree sent to it. Neither the Code of 1882 nor the present Code required the transferee Court, in case of failure to execute, to return a copy of the decree, though doubtless in most cases it would do so when it sent a certificate of non-satisfaction. In my view there is nothing in the present law which requires a transferee Court when it has fully executed the decree or has failed to execute the decree wholly or in part, to return a copy of the decree sent to it along with a certificate of non-satisfaction. That being so, I think the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in bolding that the Asansol Court still retained jurisdiction by reason of the fact that a copy of the decree did not accompany the certificate of non-satisfaction under S 41, Civil P. C. which it sent to this Court when the first application for execution was dismissed for default.

[42] On the other hand I think that these cases show that once a certificate for non-satisfaction has been sent the transferee Court ceases to have jurisdiction. This view of the Privy Council case was taken by a Bench of this Court in the case of Jatindra Kumar v. Ramesh Chandra, 43 C. W. N. 412, in which a decree was sent for execution in Court B and that Court sent intimation of non-satisfaction to a Central Court which under the practice prevailing was to send such intimation to Court A which had passed the decree but no such intimation was sent by the Central Court and the decree-holder made an application for execution in Court B but that Court returned the application on the ground that it had already certified non-satisfaction and the decree-holder then applied to Court A and it was held that Court A had no jurisdiction.

[44] In this case though Court A had not actually received the certificate of non-satisfaction it had been sent by the transferee Court B to the Central Court for transmission to Court and therefore Court B had ceased to have jurisdiction and Court A which had passed the decree had, therefore, jurisdiction when the application was made to it. This appears to me to be a case clearly in support of the appellant's present contention and we must follow it and hold that once certificate of non-satisfaction has been sent by the transferee Court to the Court that passed the decree the transferee Court ceases to have jurisdiction, though it might have failed to return the copy of the decree sent to it.

Asansol Court sent the notice of non-satisfaction under S. 41, Civil P.C., it ceased to have jurisdiction over the execution of this decree and that being so, it should not have entertained the second application for execution. It however did so and two sales in the second execution were set aside and eventually a sale for Rs. 2,50,000 was effected which the Court refused to set aside.

[46] On behalf of the appellant it has been contended that if the Asansol Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the second application for execution then the whole of its orders were made without jurisdiction and are, therefore, null and void. That being so it is urged that an application could be made under 83. 47 and 151 to set aside the sale as being a sale without jurisdiction.

Subordinate Judge conceded that no application under S. 47 lay and that the application must be treated as one under S. 151, Civil P C. The learned Subordinate Judge does make a reference to such an admission by Dr. Radba Binode Pal who was one of the learned Advocates for the appellant in the Court below. However, we are informed in argument before the learned Subordinate Judge, the leading Advocate Dr. Naresh Sen Dupta withdrew this concession and contended that the application was one under S. 47. Civil P. C. If there was an admission, it was on a point of law not binding on the appellant and further Mr. Atul Gupta does not press the point having regard to a statement made by Dr. Naresh Sen Gupta that he contended eventually that the application was one under S. 47, Civil P. C.

[48] Mr. Atul :Gupta contended that if the application was one under S. 151, Civil P. C., then no appeal lay and that is so. But having regard to the statement of Dr. Naresh Sen Gupta we are bound to hold that this was an application under S. 47, Civil P. C., as it was stated to be and, therefore, an appeal lay from the order of the Subordinate Judge.

[49] In my view, the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Asansol had no inherent jurisdiction to entertain an application for execution of a decree made on the Original Side of this Court. A judgment delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it cannot operate as res judicata and in my view the orders of the Subordinate Judge of Asansol, being wholly without jurisdiction cannot be relied upon to found a defence upon the principles of res judicata. It is true that the appellant could and should have raised the question in the second execution case that the Asansol Court had no jurisdiction in the absence of a certificate of non-satisfaction from the High Court to entertain the application. But in my view though this point was neither made nor pressed, these orders of the learned Subordinate Judge in the second execution application cannot be urged as a bar to the present application under the doctrine of res judicata. It is true that 8. 11, Civil P. C., does not apply to execution proceedings but it has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the principles of the law relating to res judicata do apply to execution proceedings and Mr. Atul Gupta has urged that the present application is barred by res judicata. Dr. Naresh Sen Gupta on behalf of the appellant concedes that the doctrine of res judicata does apply to execution proceedings, but he has contended that the doctrine has no scope in the present case because the orders of the Subordinate Judge were wholly of an irregular assumption of jurisdiction, but rather of a want of inherent jurisdiction. The Court at Asansol, as I have said, had no inherent jurisdiction to execute a decree made on the Original Side of this Court. It could only do so on receipt of a certificate of non-satisfaction from this Court and a copy of the decree. Having received neither, the Asansol Court when it entertained the second application, had no jurisdiction at all.

[51] The present case appears to me to be similar to the case of Rajlakshmi Dassee v. Katyayani Dassee, 38 Cal. 639: (12 I. C. 464), where a suit was intentionally undervalued. The defendants raised no objection as regards valuation, and the suit was tried. The appeal was filed before the District Judge instead of before the High Court, in consequence of the undervaluation, and the District Judge decided the appeal, by a consent decree. It was held by a Bench of this Court that if a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigation, its judgments and orders, however precisely certain and technically correct, are mere nullities, and not only voidable, they are void and have no effect either as estoppel or otherwise, and may not only be set aside at any time by the Court in which they are rendered, but be declared void by every Court in which they may be presented. It was further held that these principles apply not only to original Courts, but also to Courts of appeal and that jurisdiction could not be conferred upon a Court of appeal by consent of parties, and any waiver on their part could not make up for the lack or defect of jurisdiction. At p. 668 Sir Asutosh Mookerjee J. observed:

"It is an elementary principle of law, that if a Court has no jurisdiction over the subject matter, its judgment and orders are mere nullitles, and may not only be set aside at any time by the Court in which they are rendered, but be declared void by every Court in which they are presented. If a Court has no jurisdiction, its judgment is not merely voidable, but void, and it is wholly unimportant how precisely certain and technically correct its proceedings and decisions may have been, if it has no power to hear and determine the cause, its authority is wholly usurped and its judgments and orders are the exercise of arbitrary power under the forms, but without the sanction of the law."

"These cases lay down the doctrine that, where no jurisdiction exists, no action on the part of the plaintiff, no inaction on the part of the defendant, can invest the Court with any of the elements of power or of vitality, so as to convert the proceeding before it into a proper judicial process. If a Court assumes to act where it has no jurisdiction, its adjudications are all utterly void and have no effect either as an estoppel or otherwise. From this point of view the consent decree is entirely unavailing for want of jurisdiction, and consequently neither binds nor bars the plaintiff."

[53] It seems to me that this case establishes that the orders of the Subordinate Judge of Asansol in the second execution case are wholly null and void and can have no effect either as an estoppel or otherwise. In short, they cannot be pleaded in bar of the present application on the principles of res judicata. The decisions must be treated as if they had never been made and therefore the sale is wholly ineffective and must be set aside.

[54] In an earlier case of Gurdeo Singh v. Chandrika Singh, 36 Cal. 193: (1 I. C. 913), the same learned Judge had to deal with a case not of inherent want of jurisdiction, but a case of an irregular assumption of jurisdiction. In that case a suit was Instituted originally in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge; the District Judge transferred the case to his own Court acting in the exercise of the powers conferred on him by S. 25, Civil P. C. of 1882. Subsequently, the District Judge transferred the case to the First Subordinate Judge as he himself was about to proceed on leave. The case was tried by him and no objection was taken by either party to the effect that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to try the case. On an objection taken as to the want of jurisdiction it was held that under S. 18 of Act XII [12] of 1887, the Subordinate Judge unquestionably possessed jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the litigation, and that therefore the case was not one of absolute want of jurisdiction, but was at best an irregular assumption of jurisdiction, and as no objection at an earlier stage of the proceedings was taken by the defendants appellants, they waived their right to take exception to the power of the Subordinate Judge to try the cause under authority of an order of transfer made by the District Judge.

known decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ledgard v. Bull, 13 I. A. 134:(9 ALL. 191 P. C.). In that case a suit having been instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge who was incompetent to try it, the same was transferred by consent of parties to the Court of the District Judge for convenience of trial. It was held that such transference was incompetent, and that such consent did not operate as a waiver of the plea to the jurisdiction which was taken in the defendant's written statement and subsequently insisted upon. Dealing with this matter Lord Watson, who delivered the judgment of the Board at p. 144 observed:

"The defendant pleads that there was no jurisdiction in respect that the suit was instituted before a Court incompetent to entertain it, and that the order of trans-ference was also incompetently made. The District Judge was perfectly competent to entertain and try the suit, if it were competently brought, and their Lordships do not doubt that, in such a case, a defendant may be barred, by his own conduct, from objecting to irregularities in the institution of the suit. When the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject matter of a suit, the parties cannot, by their mutual consent, convert it into a proper judicial process, although they may constitute the Judge their arbiter, and be bound by his decision on the merits when these are submitted to him. But there are numerous authorities which establish that when, in a cause in which the Judge is competent to try, the parties without objection join issue, and go to trial upon merits, the defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the grounds that there were irregularities in the initial procedure, which, if objected to at the time, would have led to the dismissal of the suit."

distinction between lack of inherent jurisdiction and an irregular assumption of jurisdiction. Where there is an inherent lack of jurisdiction parties cannot by their mutual consent convert a proceeding into a proper judicial process. If they cannot do it by mutual consent a fortiorithey cannot do it by not taking a point as to want of jurisdiction. If the proceeding cannot in the words of Lord Watson be converted "into a proper judicial process" then it seems to me that the orders of a Court in such a case cannot possibly operate by way of res judicata.

(57) The same view has been taken in Lakhmi Chand v. Madho Rao, 52 ALL. 868: (A.I.R.
(17) 1930 ALL. 681), where it was held that in the absence of a certificate from the Collector a civil Court had no jurisdiction to try a suit relating to a pension or grant of money or land revenue made by Government and a judgment of a civil Court in such a suit without a certificate under S. 6, Pensions Act, could not operate as res judicata.

[68] A similar case was Raghubir Saran v. Hori Lal, 53 ALL. 560: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 ALL. 454), where a suit was brought in a Court in the District of X on a mortgage of property situate in the District of Y and a decree was passed without any adjudication of the question of jurisdiction. It was held that the decree did not operate as res judicata so as to bar a suit to set aside the decree for want of jurisdiction.

(69) Mr. Atul Gupta eventually contended that possibly these orders of the learned Subordinate Judge could not be pleaded as a bar to a suit brought for setting aside the sale and for recovery of possession of the property if it had been handed over to the auction purchaser. It must be remembered in the present case that the auction purchaser was the decree holder himself and a dispute regarding this sale is a dispute between the parties to the decree relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree.

Such matters must be agitated by proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C., and therefore it would appear to me that no suit would lie in the present case. In any event I cannot see why, as the principles of res judicata are applicable to execution proceedings, the same rule should not apply to a subsequent application in execution and to a suit. Why should these orders not operate as res judicata in a suit, but operate as res judicata in a subsequent application in execution proceedings? Mr. Atul Gupta contended that if these orders of the learned Subordinate Judge could not be pleaded as a bar to the present application then applications under S. 47 would be interminable and that it would always be open to the judgment debtor to harass the decreeholder by alleging want of inherent jurisdiction. It must be observed, however, that there are comparatively few cases in which the want of inherent jurisdiction can be urged and the fact that the decree-holder might be harassed is no reason for not giving effect to the contentions of the appellant if they were well-founded.

[60] Lastly, it was urged by the appellant that a Court has inherent power to correct its own proceedings when it has been misled, for example, by the fraud of one of the parties. Reliance was placed on a Bench decision of this Court in Peary Choudhury v. Sonoory Dass, 19 C. W. N. 419 : (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal. 622). In that case a decree passed by consent in an appeal was set aside on an application by the respondent under O. 41, R. 19, Civil P. C., the Court finding that the appellant got the service of the notice of the appeal suppressed and had a false and fraudulent vakalatnama and a petition of compromise filed and that the respondent came to know about the compromise decree only after process in execution of the decree was taken out. The Bench held that O. 41, R. 19 had no application to the case, but the decree could be set aside on review under O. 47, R. 1, and the Court had also inherent jurisdiction to set aside the decree. The Bench further observed that it was an inherent power of every Court to correct its own proceedings when it had been misled.

was undoubtedly misled because the first order in the second execution case dated 24th Novem. ber 1932, presupposes the existence of a fresh certificate of non-satisfaction and such is ordered to be annexed on the record. How the Court was misled is not clear, but it was undoubtedly due to the fault of the respondent decree holder, because at that stage the judgment debtor ap pellant was not before the Court. If the decree holder misled the Court, as he must have, then it appears to me that this Bench decision applies and that the Court has inherent power to correct its own proceedings. The only way in which it can correct its own proceedings is to set aside this sale which was wholly without jurisdiction. In my view the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the application was barred by the doctrine of res judicata. The appellant did in his objections vaguely raise the question of jurisdiction, but even so the matter was never pressed and never adjudicated upon. Whether adjudication would have affected the question the Court need not consider as all that can be argued is that the question of jurisdiction could and should have been raised and therefore cannot be agitated again. In my view the orders did not preclude the appellant from urging that the sale should be set aside and in my opinion the learned Subordinate Judge should have set aside this sale for want of jurisdiction.

[62] In the result therefore this appeal is allowed. The order of the lower Court is set aside and the sale is set aside and the whole proceedings are held to be void and of no effect. The appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court and in the Court below. I would assess the hearing fee in this Court at ten gold mohurs.

Court-fees Act (1870), Sch. 1, Art. 1 — Appeal regarding costs only — Costs whether form 'subject-matter in dispute."

It is an admitted practice of the Calcutta High Court that where a part of the main subject-matter is in dispute in appeal, even though there is a specific dispute about the costs because they have not followed the event, no fee is charged; in other words, the amount of costs in that case is not taken to be part of the subject-matter in dispute. No difference can be made in the case where the dispute on the main subject-matter, so to speak, in the appellate Court vanishes to zero and the question is of about costs only. The practice should be consistent. Thus where an appeal relates only to the question of costs in suit for specific performance of an agreement of sale of property valued at Rs. 75,000 though it is governed by Art. 1 of Sch. I. no court-fee is payable as the costs are not to be taken as part of the [Para 12] subject-matter in dispute.

Order.— This is a reference under S. 5, Court-fees Act. The appellant in this case obtained a decree for specific performance of a contract of sale of some immovable property, valuing the suit at Rs. 75,000. The lower Court directed that the parties would bear their own costs. The appeal to this Court relates only to the order which in effect deprives the appellant of the cost which he would ordinarily expect to receive. The memorandum of appeal was filed with a court-fee stamp of Rs. 2 only. The Stamp Reporter demanded an ad valorem court-fee on the amount of costs. The matter was placed before the Taxing Officer and has now been referred to me for decision.

[2] Two decisions of this Court relating to the matter of court-fees chargeable in respect of costs are referred to in the reference by the Taxing Officer, viz., a decision of Nasim Ati J. in the case of F. A. T. No. 2488 of 1937 (Kshirode Chandra Sen v. Sm. Bhagbati Dasi) and a decision of Chatterjea J. in the case of Kamal Kumari v. Rangpur North Bengal Bank Ltd., 25 C. W. N. 934: (A. I. B. (8) 1921 Cal. 55).

[3] In the course of arguments my attention has also been drawn to a decision of Mitter J. in the case of Jyots Prosad v. Jogendra Ram. Roy, 32 C. W. N. 1105: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal.

[4] The case of Kamal Kumari Devi v. Rangpur North Bengal Bank, 25 C. W. N. 934: (A. I. B. (8) 1921 Cal. 55) arose out of a crossobjection where costs had been disallowed in a suit on a mortgage. Chatterjea J. first considered the general question as to the liability for courtfees in respect of a dispute in appeal relating to costs whether alone or whether also joined with an appeal as to the main subject-matter. He pointed out that it had been the regular practice of this Court that in no case were any court fees charged in respect of a dispute as to costs where there was also an appeal with regard to the main subject-matter in dispute. He then discussed various cases of other Courts including in particular In re Makki, 19 Mad. 350 and found that no distinction could be made between cases where the appeal related to the whole subject-matter of the original suit, or only to part thereof. In particular he cited as an example the case of a suit for Rs. 1,000 with a decree for Rs. 990, no costs being allowed. He pointed out that if there was an appeal in respect of Rs. 10 not allowed, as well as in respect of the whole costs, court-fees would be charged on Rs. 10 only. He also relied on two cases of the Privy Council on the question of the meaning. of the "subject-matter in dispute" viz., Doorga-Doss v. Ramanath 8 M I. A. 262: (1 Sar. 772) and Nilmadhab Dass v. Bishumbhar Doss, 13: M. I. A. 85: (3 Beng. L. R. 27 P. C.)

[5] This decision was referred to by the Taxing Officer in the reference before Nasim Ali J. in the case of Kshirod Chandra Sen v. Sm. Bhagabati Dasi, in F. A. T. No. 2488 of 1937, but was not discussed by the latter. The case before Nasim Ali J. related to an appeal against an award under the Land Acquisition Act, and was really disposed of as covered clearly by S. 8, Court fees Act. Nasim Ali J. observed:

"Where the relief as to costs is the only relief claimed in the appeal, the value of the subject-matter of the appeal is the amount of costs in dispute in the appeal. Further it is conceded by the learned Advocate for the appellant in this case that the subject-matter of the present appeal is really the difference between the amount awarded as compensation to the appellant and the amount claimed by the appellant in this appeal as the amount of costs is to be deducted from the amount of compensation claimed by the appellant."

(6) It would seem, therefore, that although there was an observation by Nasim Ali J. on the question which arises in the present case, the decision in the case was really based on S. S.

Court-fees Act.

[7] The case of Jyoti Prosad v. Jogendra Ram Roy, 82 C. W. N. 1105: (A. I. B. (15) 1928 Cal. 878) was a partition case in which on appeal the only question in dispute was as to costs. Mitter J. held that the case was nevertheless one clearly governed by Art. 17 of

Sch. II and the fee payable was Rs 15.

[8] The cases cited have discussed the various cases of different Courts in which similar questions had arisen. The judgment of Chatter. jee J. has itself been the subject of later discus. sion in such cases as Ma Shin v. Maung Shwe Hnit, 2 Bang. 687. (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Rang. 145) and Chiranji Lai . Bool Chand, 52 ALL 1020: (A. I. B. (17) 1930 ALL. 852) and the view there expressed has not been accepted. Some comment was also made in the Rangoon case on Chatterjee J. reference to the decisions of the Privy Council.

[9] There can be no doubt that ordinarily where there is an appeal against a decision where the order that has been made as to costs is the normal order, the costs following the event, no one, I think, has ever suggested that although the costs are included in the decree, on appeal any court fee has to be paid in respect of the costs calculated separately. This practice, in my opinion, seems to be based on the view which was expressed in the Privy Council cases cited. Costs are not regarded as being any part of a subject matter in dispute either in the suit or in the appeal. In the appeal, the appellant does not in such an event really dispute the order as to costs for it is the natural order that is ordinarily made following the decision as to the main subject matter in dispute, and if he himself succeeds in the appeal in regard to the main subject-matter, automatically he will expect to succeed with regard to the costs.

[10] The question then arises whether any difference is created where costs do not follow the event and the party affected by the order appeals against the order as to costs either alone or along with an appeal as to the main subjectmatter The same problem also arises in a crossobjection. The matter was tersely dealt with by Sir Arthur J. H. Collins in the case of In re-Makki, (19 Mad. 950) by, saying:

"The appellant has made the costs the subject-matter of dispute, and therefore, a court-fee stamp is leviable."

[11] Taking the question in its widest form, the difficulty I should feel in accepting that view, apart from the question of what has been the practice in this Court, is that it seems to ignorethe problem, which was pointed out by Mitter, J. in the case of Jyoti Prosad (32 C. W. N. 1105: A. I. B. (15) 1928 Cal. 878) referred to above, in a case coming under Sch. II Art. 17. The matter seems more simple if the main subject matter in dispute is one on which court-fee is payable ad autorem and comes under Art. I, Sch. 1, and by following the view of Sir Arthur J. H. Collins it can be said that all that is necessary is to add the costs, wherespecifically to be in dispute, to the main amount in dispute and charge court fee accordingly. The same, as pointed out by Mitter J., cannot be easily done if the main subject matter in dispute has no value and the case comes under Art. 17 of Sch. II.

[12] But in any case the matter seems to me, so far as this Court is concerned at any rate, to be settled by the admitted practice that at any rate where a part of the main subject-matter is in dispute in appeal, even though there is a specific dispute about the costs because they have not followed the event, no fee is charged: in other words, the amout of costs in that case is not taken to be part of the subject matter in dispute. I cannot see how, if that is the practice in such a case any difference can be made in the case where the dispute on the main subject matter, so to speak, in the appellate Court vanishes to zero. It seems to me that the practice should be consistent and while agreeing that in a case, such as the present, which is admittedly one under art. 1 Sch. 1, court-fee leviable is to be calculated under that Article, I come to the conclusion that as the costs are not to be taken as part of the subject-matter indispute, the slightly anomalous result is reached. that there is an appeal, though the amount of the subject-matter in dispute being in the particular case is nil. The court-fee payable under Art. 1 of Sch. 1 there is also nil, because, in my opinion the fees payable are 6 annas on Rs. 5. or part thereof, and here the so called part is nothing : nothing cannot, in my opinion, bedeemed to be a part of something. The Courtfees Act is in essence a taxing statute and if the interpretation given is deemed by the powers concerned not to achieve the results they wish, there is no difficulty in their making specific provision for this problem of appeals relating to cost only.

[13] I should mention that in the case of Kamal Kumari Devi V. Rungpur North Bengal Bank, 25 C. W. N. 984: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 55), Chatterji J. was dealing with a crossobjection and made it specifically clear that he expressed no opinion as what is to be done as to the memorandum of appeal; but, on the other hand, in view of the manner in which he dealt with the cross-objection, there can be little doubt that he would not have followed the view I now express. Indeed so far as I can see, there can be no difference between the two cases and both the cross-objection and the memorandum of appeal come under Art. 1 Sch. I and are chargeable either as I have indicated, if the view is taken as I have done that the amount of costs does not form part of the subject matter in dispute, or is chargeable in full ad valorem on the view taken by other High Courts. I cannot see how either can be held as coming under Art. II Sch. II or Art. 1.D of Sch. II. All that section 6 of the Court-fees Act says is that certain documents are to be chargeable with certain fees according to the Schedules. It nowhere eaid that every document filed in a Court is necessarily chargeable with a fee specified somewhere under the Court-fees Act, and if it cannot be fitted under one, or if the article under which it appears to come does not give any amount of fee as chargeable then by some process of reasoning it must somehow or other be fitted under some other Article.

[14] I would also point out that some if not all of the reasons given by Chatterjea J. for distinguishing between the case of a memorandum of appeal and a cross-objection appear to have lost their validity in view of the amendment of 8. 2, Court fees Act. 1870 by Bengal Act VII (7) of 1985 whereby a suit has been defined as including an appeal, and an appeal as including

[15] At any rate, so far as the memorandum of appeal is concerned, the decision of Chatterjea J. left the matter entirely open. In my opinion, in a case like the present one, it clearly comes, as I have said, under Art. 1 Sch. I, although the result is that the fee payable is nothing. The court-fee paid in this case is more than adequate.

Midnapore Zemindary Co. Ltd. - Defendants-Appellants v. Naba Kumar Singh Du. dhoria and others - Plaintiffs-Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 2 of 1948, D/-9th February 1950, against judgment of Biswas J., in A. F. A. D. No. 1736 of 1943, D/-27th February 1948.

Limitation Act (1908), S. 9 — Tenancy Law — Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 185 and Sch. III, Part I, Art. 2 (b)—Limitation—Extension in case of suspended cause of action.

Under the ordinary law of limitation as enacted in 8. 9, Limitation Act, 1908, the period of limitation can be extended in three classes of cases, viz., (1) where injustice has been caused by an act of Court, (2) where the cause of action was satisfied and (3) where the cause of action was cancelled.

Though S. 185, Beng. Tenancy Act expressly makes S. 9, Limitation Act, Inapplicable to the suits specified in Sch. III of the Act, it has been held that limitation may be extended when the claim to recover the rent is either satisfied or extinguished or rendered legally unenforceable in consequence of a transaction to which the defendant is a party and the validity whereof is in controversy and awaits a final adjudication.

[Paras 12, 15] Where therefore in a sult to recover rent for accreted land, the High Court held that the landlord had no right to recover the rent and the plaintiff succeeded in the Privy Council, his right to recover such rent was suspended so long as the decision of the High Court stood and he was entitled to the extension of period of limitation under the above principle for recovery of rent for the next period. The defendant who had been successful in his plea of non-liability to pay rent in High Court and had thus compelled the plaintiff to appeal to the Supreme Court, could not be allowed to turn round and plead bar of limitation to evade the liability to pay [Paras 9, 18 and 19] rent: Case law discussed.

Annotation: ('42-Com.), Limitation Act, S. 9, N. 11. Jnanendra Nath Mukherji - for Appellants. Apurbadhan Mukherji and Amiya Kumar Mukher jee -for Respondents.

G. N. Das. — This appeal is at the instance of the defendant in a suit for recovery of arrears of rent limited in the course of the trial to a claim for the year 1344 B. S. The facts are not in controversy and may be briefly stated as follows: The defendant held a putni taluk in res. pect of lands appertaining to touzi No. 523 under the plaintiffs. In the year 1914 the lands which are the subject-matter of this suit for rent accreted to the parent touzi No. 523 and were formed into a temporary settled estate bearing touzi No. 8653. In the record of rights finally published under Part II Chap. X, Bengal Tenancy Act a sum of Rs. 1028-2-0 was settled as the rent payable in respect of the accreted lands. Two suits for rent were instituted by the plaintiffs for recovery of rent for two successive periods, namely 1328 to 1331 B. S. and 1332 to 1335 B. S. These suits for rent were ultimately dismissed by this Court in second appeal on the ground that no additional rent was payable in respect of the lands in suit. The decision of this Court was pronounced on 29th July 1938 and is reported in Midnapore Zemindari Co. v. Chan. dra Singha, 68 C. L. J. 305 : (A. I. B. (26) 1939 Oal. 1). Against this decision the plaintiffs took an appeal to the Privy Council. The appeal succeeded. The decision of the Judicial Committee was pronounced on 18th December 1941 and is reported in Chandra Singh v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. Ltd., 69 I. A. 51: (A. I. R. (29) 1942 P. C. 8). The effect of the decision of the Privy Council was that the defendant was held to be liable to pay rent to the plaintiffs at the rate of Rs. 1028-2-0 per annum. Consequent on the decision of the Privy Council, on 22nd July 1942 corresponding to 5th Braban 1949 B. S. the plaintiffs instituted the present suit for recovery of rent.

(2) The defence to the suit was one of limita. tion. This defence succeeded in the Courts below. On an appeal to this Court our learned brother Biswas J. was of the opinion that the claim was not barred by limitation. The appeal was accordingly allowed. In the present appeal by the defendant the only question which calls for our determination is a question of limitation.

[3] Under S. 53, Bengal Tenancy Act, (hereinafter called the Act) rent is payable subject to an agreement or established usage to the contrary, in four equal instalments falling due on the last day of each quarter of the agricultural year. Article 2 (b) Part I, Soh. III prescribes the period of limitation for a suit for recovery of arrears of rent to be three years from "the last day of the agricultural year in which the arrears fall due". In other words, the claim for the period in suit, that is 1344 B. S. became barred on 1st Baisakh 1348 B. S. but as 1st Baisakh 1348 B. S. was a holiday, a suit for recovery of the arrears of rent for 1344 B. S. had to be instituted on and Baisakh 1948 B. S. The claim was, therefore, prima facie barred under Art. 2 (b) Part I, Sch. III of the Act. The suit was, therefore, prima facie liable to be dismissed under S. 184 of the Act.

[4] The defendant-appellant contends that this is the legal position and bases his argument on the plain terms of Art. 2 (b) Part I, Sch. III. His contention is that the time having once begun to run it was not suspended by reason of the pendency of the appeal before the Privy Council.

[6] For the plaintiffs respondents Mr. Apurba Dhan Mukherji urges that the plaintiffs were entitled to a suspension of the period of limitation from 29th July 1928, the date of the decision of this Court, negativing the plaintiffs' right to recover the rent claimed, to 18th November 1941, the date of the Order in Council when their eight to recover rent was finally established.

[6] It is undisputed that if this period is added to the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 2 (b) Part I, Sch. III the claim is within time. The question is whether the plaintiffs are so entitled.

[7] The principle that once time begins to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue can stop the running of time was embodied in 8. 11 of Act XIV [14] of 1859 and was re-enacted with some amplification in the later Limitation Act, namely Act XI [11] of 1871 and Act XV [15] of 1877 and is now contained in S. 9 of Act Ix [9] of 1908.

[8] The scope of the section has been the subject of discussion in multitudinous cases. The cases bearing on the point were reviewed by Mukerji J. in the case of Sm. Sarat Kamini Dasi v. Nagendra Nath Pal, 29 C. W. N. 978: (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 65) and the law was thus summarised at p. 988 :

"I am of opinion that except perhaps in cases where injustice has been occasioned by a Court by its own acts or oversights there is no scope for the application of any principles of equity in the administering of the statutes of limitation, that in point of fact the Judicial Committee has not, however, much the language used by their Lordships in some of the decisions may suggest the same, laid down any such principle as being of universal applicability and that all the decisions of the Judicial Committee as well as most of the cases decided in this country are supportable on grounds which are in no sense founded on any general equitable principle extraneous to or unauthorised by the statute. In cases in which the question arises as to the starting point of time for the purposes of limitation, these decisions are mostly reconcilable with a proper appreciation of what the cause of action means when the starting point is the cause of action or with a proper interpretation of the words used in the third column of the articles in other cases; and in cases where the question of suspension arises, if time has once begun to run it never again ceases to run, but there may be satisfastion of a claim or the cancellation of a cause of action operating to suspend the rights of the plaintiff who may, on the removal of the satisfaction or cancellation avail of a fresh cause of action which arises by reason thereof."

If the present case fell to be decided under the ordinary law of limitation as enacted in the Limitation Act (Act IX [9] of 1908) the period of limitation can be extended according to the above observations in three classes of cases, viz., (1) where injustice has been caused by an act of Court, (2) where the cause of action was satisfied and (s) where the cause of action was cancelled.

[9] The facts of the present case do not attract the second exception. In a broader sense of the word cancelled the third exception may apply and the time during which the right of the plaintiff to successfully recover the rent from the defendant was negatived by the decision of this Court may be excluded. The first exception is supported by the weighty observations of Lord Eldon in Pulteney v. Warren, (1801) 6

Ves. 73 at p. 92 : (31 E. R. 944) :

"If there is a principle upon which Courts of Justice ought to act without scruple it is this: to relieve partles against injustice occasioned by his own acts or oversights at the instance of the party against whom the relief is sought."

[10] The above observations were relied upon by this Court in the case of Lakhan Chandra, v. Madhu Sudan, 35 Cal. 209: (7 C. L. J. 59) and the time during which, as a result of an erroneous decision of a Court the plaintiffs' right of suit was in jeopardy, was excluded. The view taken by this Court was affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council in the case of Nr:tya Moni Dassi v. Lakhan Chandra, 43 Cal. 660: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 96).

[11] The principle above stated, supports the contention of the plaintiffs, in the facts of the present case where also, the erroneous decision of this Court which negatived the plaintiffs' right to receive rent from the defendant was responsible for the delay in the filing of the suit.

[12] The present case is, however, one which does not fall to be decided under the general law but under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 185 of the Act expressly makes S. 9. Limitation Act, 1908, inapplicable to suits specified in Sch. III annexed to the Act.

[13] The reason for the exclusion is stated in Rampini's Bengal Tenancy Act, 4th Edn., under the notes to S. 185. The plain implication of the exclusion is that in proper cases the time for filing a suit may remain in abeyance. Thus in the case of Mt. Rance Surnomoyee v. Shashi Mokhee, 12 M. I. A. 242 at p. 253:(2 Beng. L. B. 10

P. C.), it was observed as follows:

"They must also respectfully dissent from another statement of the learned Judges of the High Court, to the effect that the appellant might have sued for these arrears pending the proceedings to set aside the sale of the putnee. It is clear, that until the sale had been finally set aside, she was in the position of a person whose claims had been satisfied, and that her suit might have been successfully met by a plea to that offect."

[14] In the later case of Hem Chandra v. Kali Prosanna, 30 I. A. 177 at p. 181: (30 Cal. 1033 P. C.), their Lordships of the Judicial Com. mittee held that the proceedings in an earlier suit for enhancement of rent 'stayed the operation of the law of limitation."

[15] In my opinion the above cases proceed on the principle that limitation may be extended when the claim to recover the rent is either satisfied or extinguished or rendered legally unenforceable in consequence of a transaction to which the defendant is a party and the validity whereof is in controversy and awaits a final adjudication.

[16] The above view is also supported by the following observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Bassu Kuar v. Dhun Singh, 15 I. A. 211 (11 ALL. 47 P. O.).

"And it would be an inconvenient state of the law if it were found necessary to institute a vain litigation under peril of losing the property if he does not."

[17] This principle was restated in a slightly different form in the case of Nagendra Nath v. Suresh Chandra, 59 I. A. 283: (A. I. B. (19) 1932 P. C. 165,):

"It is at least an intelligible rule that so long as there is any question subjudice between any of the parties, those affected shall not pursue the so often thorny path of execution which, if the final result isagainst them, may lead to no advantage."

[18] In my opinion it will be a lamentable state of the law if the defendant who had by an appeal to this Court successfully upheld his plea of non-liability to pay rent to the plaintiff and thereby compelled the plaintiff to resort to the highest Court for redress, is allowed to turn round and plead that the lapse of time occasioned by the said appeal, had relieved the defendant from his liability to pay the rent by the bar of limitation.

[19] In my opinion neither expediency nor justice nor the spirit of the law as contained in Art. 2 (b) Part I Sch. III read with S. 185, Bengal Tenancy Act compels the Court to give effect to such a plea of the defendant.

[20] The contention raised on behalf of the defendant appellant must therefore be overruled.

[21] The result therefore is that the decision of our learned brother Biswas J. must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

G. N. Das J.—This appeal is by the plaintiff against a decision of our learned brother Sen J. The only question which has been canvassed before us on behalf of the appellant is a question of res judicata. The facts which bear on this question may be briefly stated as follows: Bamdhan, Panubala and Hiran Bala were co-sharer tenants of a holding, the share of Ramdhan being 8 annas and those of Panu and Hiran Bala 4 as. each. In March 1940 Ramdhan sold his 8 annas share to the plaintiff stating that the holding which was sold was an occupancy holding. The other co-sharers Panu Bala and Hiran Bala thereupon made an application for preemption under S. 26F, Bengal Tenancy Act as amended in 1938 (hereinafter called the Act). The plaintiff who was the opposite party in the pre-emption proceedings disputed the claim of the pre-emptors inter alia on the ground that the holding in question was a mokrari mourashi holding and that pre-emption under S. 26F, Bengal Tenancy Act could not be allowed. The learned Munsif held that the holding in question was an occupancy holding and on this finding made an order under S. 26F of the Act. The plaintiff who was the opposite party in those proceedings unsuccessfully filed an appeal before the lower appellate Court. Thereafter on 12th September 1941 the plaintiff raised the present suit for a declaration that he had a right to the tenancy as a mokrari mourashi raiyat to the extent of 8 annas share and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from taking possession on the ground that the decision in Misc. Appeal No. 12 of the 1st Court, Subordinate Judge, Hooghly, was erroneous.

[2] One of the defences taken to this suit was that the question whether the plaintiff was a mokrari mourashi tenant or an occupancy raiyat was concluded by the decision in the pre-emption proceedings. Both the Courts below concurred in holding that the status of the plaintiff was that of a mokrari mourashi raiyat and that the decision in the pre-emption proceedings did not operate as a bar to the re-agitation of this question and on these findings gave the plaintiff, a decree. On appeal to this Court, Sen J. took a contrary view and held that the question of the status of the plaintiff was decided in the pre emption proceedings and that this decision operated as res judicata. The appeal was accordingly allowed by the learned Judge. It is against this decision that the present appeal has been taken.

[3] The sole question between the parties in this appeal is whether the decision in a proceeding under S. 26F of the amended Bengal Tenancy Act to the effect that the tenancy in question is an occupancy holding, is res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties for a declaration that the tenancy is a mokrari mourashi holding and not an occupancy holding.

[4] The proceedings under S. 26F of the Act start on an application and not by a suit. The procedure to be followed in such cases is by force of S. 148 (2) of the Act, not regulated by the Code of Civil Procedure but is subject to any rules which may be passed by this Court under S. 143 (1) of the Act.

[6] It is now fairly well settled that a question of title can be determined in such proceedings, though the Court is not bound to do so. Hossein Ali v. Kala Chand, 51 C. W. N. 415:

(A. I. B. (34) 1947 Cal. 444), Balai Chand v. Nibaran Chandra, 51 C. W. N. 644: (A. I. B. (34) 1947 Cal. 410)

tuted by an application and are not suits strictly so called S. 11, Civil P. C. does not in terms apply, but as has been held in numerous cases principles analogous to those embodied in the said section apply. I may refer, in particular, to the latest pronouncement of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Shivarraj v. Edappakath Ayissa Bi, 54 C. W. N. 55:

(A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 302) where the principles of constructive res judicata were made applicable to procedure in execution of a decree.

[8] In the present case the question of status was expressly put into issue and was decided in the previous proceedings under S. 26F.

[9] Mr. Banerjee appearing for the appellant strongly relies on the decision of this Court in the case of Maha Luxmi Bank v. Abdul Khaleque, 48 C. W. N. 1046. In that case, consequent on an order under s. 26J of the Act, directing the tenant to pay to the landlord the balance of the landlord's fees, the former instituted a suit for declaration that the holding in question was a mokrari mourashi holding and for a permanent injunction restraining the latter from realising the money decreed in the S. 26J proceedings. This Court held that the decision on the question of status in the 26F proceedings was not res judicata though the order directing the payment of the landlord's fees was conclusive and binding between the parties and could not be impeached in a later suit.

[10] The reasons given in that judgment may be analysed as follows: (1) There was a vital difference between a suit and an application both as regards scope and the nature of the orders and the powers of the Court in dealing with the matter; (2) the Court dealing with an application under 8. 26F cannot make any declaration as to the status of the tenant, (3) the question of the character of the tenancy cannot be deemed to be finally decided in proceedings under S. 26F which have been aptly described as summary proceedings; (4) the cases in which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee apply the principle of res judicata in cases outside S. 11, Civil P. C. fall into classes, viz (a) where an interlocutory judgment has been passed in a proceeding and this was held to be conclusive in a later stage of the same proceeding; (b) where a contentious proceeding which though not technically a suit culminates in a final order which has all the charateristics of a decree and is open to challenge by way of appeal; and (5) on general principles as enunciated in Barrs v. Jackson, (1842) 57 R. R. 461; (14 L. J. Ch 433), either party may litigate for any other purpose provided the immediate object of the decision be not attempted to be withdrawn from its operation.

[11] It may be pointed out at the outset that the decision in the case of Maha Luxmi Bank v. A. Khaleque 43 C. W. N. 1046 on the question of res judicata was obiter inasmuch the Munsif who decided the 26J proceedings expressly refrained from deciding the question of status

[12] I am not unmindful of the fact that the above decision was followed in the case of Biswa Nath v. Bhupendra Nath, 46 C. W. N. 133; Srish Chandra v. Kala Chand 46 C.W.N.169: (A I R (29)1942 Cal-445). All the above three cases were however decided before the amendment of S. 26F in 1938, at a time when there was no provision for an appeal to a higher Court. This last fact, viz. that there was no provision for an appeal to a superior tribunal, was relied on as a circumstance to indicate that the proceedings under S. 26J, Bengal Tenancy Act, were of a summary character.

[13] Adverting now to the reasons given by the learned Judges in Maha Luxmi Bank's case, 48 C.W.N. 1046, I may however observe that it has been decided, as already stated, that the Court dealing with an application under S. 26F of the Act has power to decide the question of the title or of the nature of the tenancy if raised by the parties. It is also to be noted that in order to decide a question of res judicata the Court has to look to the substance of the matter and that the previous judgment which is relied on to raise the plea operates as an estoppel not merely as regards the actual decision but also as regards all the findings which are essential to sustain the judgment. Lilabati v. Vishnu Chobey, 6 C. L. J. 621 at p. 630; Panchu Mondal v. Chandra Kanta, 14 C. L. J. 220 at p. 224. (12 I.C. 9). It may also be noted that the proceedings under S. 26F under the amended law cannot be regarded as of a summary character. The adjudication made in such proceedings is open to challenge by way of an appeal.

[14] It is not, however, necessary for the purposes of the present case to pursue the matter further. All the three cases referred to already were decided prior to the amendment, in 1938 when the right of appeal was expressly conferred, and are distinguishable on this ground. The decision in the case of Prosanna Kumar v. Advasakti Debi, 46 C.W.N. 1022: (A.I.R. (29)1942 Cal 586) has been distinguished and dissented from in the case of Shankaracharjya v. Sademoni, 49 C. W. N. 580: (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Cal 474) and Balai Chand v. Nibaran Chadra, 51 C. W. N. 644: (A. I. B. (34) 1947 Oal 410.) The case is distinguishable because in that case the question of the nature of the tenancy was not raised or decided in the proceedings uuder S. 26F of the Act and as such the decision under S. 26F of the Act could not operate as res judicata. The case was also decided under the unamended S. 29F of the Act.

[15] It is true that in applying the principle of resjudicata to cases which are not suits strictly so called the tests for deciding the validity of the plea must be coveal with the conditions embodied in s. 11 of the Code subject to this that the proceedings, the decision, whereof is said to be a bar were not suits strictly so called but part of the character of suits. If we apply this principle to the facts of this case, in my opinion there is no escape from the conclusion that the express decision on the question of status which was made in the 26F proceedings is binding on the parties in the present suit on the principle of finality in litigation. This view receives support from the Bench decision of this Court in the case of Balai Chand v. Nibaran Chandra 51 C. W. N. 644, : (A. I. B. (84) 1947 Cal 410) [16] The sole contention raised by Mr. Banerjee in this appeal fails and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Das Gupta J .- I agree.

Bengal Food Adulteration Act (VI [6] of 1919), Ss. 6 (1) (v), 5 (1) (b) —S. 6 (1) (v) if governed by S. 5 (1) (b).

Section 6 (1) (v) is not governed by S. 5 (1) (b). S. 6(1)(v) is a distinct and separate section and it prohibits a person from keeping for sale mustard oil unless it is derived exclusively from mustard seeds. The case under S. 6 (1) (v) has nothing to do with saponification value or the iodine content of the oil nor has the Court, under that section, to consider when a presumption of adulteration should arise. -for Opposite Party, Sen J.—This Rule was obtained against an order acquitting the opposite party Sham Sundar Sadhukhan of a charge under S. 6 (1), Bengal Food Adulteration Act. The order of acquittal was passed by Jonab S. M. A. Meerza, Magistrate, 1st Class, Serampore. Against this order an application was made to the District Magistrate and it was rejected. The Health Officer of the Serampore Municipality then moved this Court and obtained this Rule against the order of acquittal.

(2) The case is of a very simple nature and we are of opinion that the order of acquittal cannot stand. The accused has a shop in New Gate Street, Serampore, where he sells mustard oil. Samples of mustard oil exposed for sale in this shop were taken and sent to the Public Analyst. He has made a report which is Ex. 2. Therein it is stated inter alia that argemone oil was present in the sample. Upon this report being furnished the present prosecution was started.

[3] The learned Magistrate acquitted the accused on grounds stated in his judgment which we are not quite able to appreciate. There is the clear finding that argemone oil was present in the sample taken from the shop of the accused. This is the report of the Public Analyst and it does not seem to have been challenged. In the report certain other details have been given regarding the saponification value and the iodine content of the oil and from the report it seems that so far as the saponification value and the iodine value are concerned the mustard oil conforms to the standard laid down by the law. It seems that it is on. this ground that the learned Magistrate has acquitted the accused. He says further that the quantity of the argemone oil present has not been stated. He presumes from the fact that the saponification value and the iodine value. are within limits that the percentage of arge. mone oil was necessarily very small. What grounds he had for such presumption we do not know. The two questions are quite distinct and we are not aware of the fact that there is any inter relation between the presence of argemone oil and the saponification value and the iodine value in the oil. The learned Magistrate then. goes on to say that it is a matter of common. knowledge that argemone seeds are unavoidably mixed up with mustard seeds. After saying this he relies upon the case of Mithan Lal v. Emperor, 149 I. C. 222: (A. I. R. (21) 1994 ALL. 439: 35 Cr. L. J. 912) and says that in accordance with the above ruling the accused should be acquitted. Learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the petitioner points out to us S. 6 (1) (v) of the aforesaid Act. According to that subsection the law prohibits a person from selling, exposing for sale, etc. mustard oil unless it is. derived exclusively from mustured seeds. He then draws our attention to the provisions of S. 21 of the Act which says that any person contravening any of the provisions of the Act mentioned in the first column of the table just below the section shall be punished, etc. Now, in the table we find in col. 1, 8. 6, subs. (1) and in col. 2 we find the following words: "Sale, etc. of milk, butter, ghee, wheat flour, mustard oil or notified article which ie not of the prescribed quality or not is labelled or marked in the prescribed manner." He argues that it has been conclusively proved that the oil has not been derived exclusively from mustard seeds and that therefore the provisions of S. 6 (1) of the Act have been disobeyed. It. follows, he says, that the accused is punishable under S. 21 of the Act. Mr. Basu appearing on behalf of the accused relied upon S. 5 (1) (b) of the Act. He also relied upon the preamble ofthe Act and certain Notifications of the Government made under the provisions of the Act. His contention put shortly is that the presence of the argemone oil was minute and unavoidable and that consequently there should be nopresumption that the oil was adulterated. That being so, he says, the order of acquittal is proper. In our opinion this contention cannot be upheld. Section 5 (1) (b) deals with the sale. of food and it says that where any article of food is unavoidably mixed with some extraneous matter in the process of collection or preparation an offence shall not be deemed to be committed where such extraneous matter is found in the food. That section has nothing whatever to do with the provisions of S. 6 (1) (v). Section 6 (1) (v) is a distinct and separate section and it prohibits a person from keeping mustard oil unless it is derived exclusively from mustard seeds In our opinion the case has nothing to do with saponification value or iodine content nor is it a case in which the Court has to consider when a presumption of adulteration should arise. Although it is framed with the object of preventing adulteration of food, it is not a section which is governed by S. 5, it is a distinct section and its wording is in our opinion absolutely clear and incapable of misapprehension. It prohibits the storing, or keeping for sale of mustard oil which is not derived exclusively from mustard seeds.

Court below has misdirected itself on the question of law. The matter is of serious public importance and we are of opinion that in the circumstances we should set aside the order of acquittal and direct a retrial in the light of the observations made above. The retrial shall be held by some other Magistrate who shall be appointed by the District Magistrate of Hooghly in this hehalf.

A. F. A. D. No. 2074 of 1945, D/- 2-3-1950, against decree of Sub-J., 1st Court, Howrah, D/- 29-8-1945.

Muhammadan Law — Marriage — Dissolution — Agreement giving wife right of separate residence and maintenance and divorce—Contract Act (1872), S. 23.

An ante-nuptial agreement by a Muhammadan husband in a kabinnama that he would pay separate maintenance to his wife in case of disagreement and that the wife would have power to get herself divorced in case of failure to pay maintenance for a certain period is not opposed to public policy and is enforceable under the Muhammadan law. [Para 2]

The wife exercising the power under the kabinnama must establish that the conditions entitling her to exercise the power have been fulfilled. [Para 3]

Apurbadhan Mukherjee-for Appellants.

Sambhu Nath Banerjee (Sr.)-for Respondent.

Lahiri J. — This appeal is by defendants 1 and 2 and is directed against the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Howrah by which he has decreed the plaintiff's suit for restitution of conjugal rights. Defendant 1 is the wife and defendant 2 is the father-in-law of the plaintiff. The plaintiff's case in the plaint is that he was married to defendant 1 and continued to live with defendant 1 quite happily till defendant 1 fled from the house of the plaintiff on the evil advice of her father. Thereafter the wife, that is, defendant 1, instituted a case for maintenance under S. 488, Criminal P. C., against the plaintiff, but that case was dismissed. The plaintiff requested defendant 1 to come to his house on many occasions but without success. Defendant 1 contested the suit by a written statement in which she alleged that under the terms of Kabinnama which was executed by the plaintiff before the marriage she had validly divorced herself from her husband and as such she was no longer the wife of the plaintiff and it was further alleged that the plaintiff was guilty of cruelty towards defendant 1. The suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance upon the finding that the plaintiff used to assault his wife and was otherwise guilty of ill-treatment towards her and as such he was not entitled to a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. On appeal by the plaintiff, the decision of the learned Munsif has been reversed by the Court of appeal below upon the view that the wife has failed to prove that the plaintiff was guilty of ill treatment towards her. With regard to the Kabinnama the Court of appeal below has held that an agreement between the husband and the wife to the effect that the wife should be free to leave the husband and take up residence elsewhere in case of being unable to agree with the husband is void. Against this decision of the Court of appeal below the present appeal has been filed by defendants 1 and 2.

[2] Mr. Mukherjee appearing on behalf of the appellants has contended in the first place that the proposition of law formulated by the learned Subordinate Judge as to the validity of the stipulation in the Kabinnama is wrong. It has been argued that under the Muhammadan law a husband enjoys an absolute power of divorcing his wife and he may delegate that power to his wife by a contract. In support of this proposition Mr. Mukherjee has invited our attention to Baillie's Digest on Muhammadan Law, Book III Chap. III where the following passage occurs:

"As a man may in person repudiate his wife so he may commit the power of repudiating her to herself or a third party."

In Wilson's Anglo Muhammadan Law, Edn. VI, there is a passage in 8.66 which runs as follows:

"The husband may confer a power of repudiation on his wife or on some third party, and a divorce will take effect if, and when, the power, so conferred, is exercised."

Similar observations are to be found in Tyabji's Muhammadan Law in Ss. 128 to 134 where the learned author says that the husband may delegate his power of divorce to his wife. Upon these authorities it is quite clear that a Muhammadan husband has the right to delegate his power of divorce to his wife. The learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon Art. 216, cl. (3), Mulla's Mahomedan Law for the view that a contract between a husband and wife that the wife would be free to live separately in case of disagreement with her husband is void under the Mahomedan law. A reference to the relevant article shows that the learned author did not formulate any such proposition as stated above. In the first place, Sir Dinsha Mulla in Art. 216 (3) was dealing with post-nuptial agreement in the second half of cl. (3) but in the present case we are not concerned with a post-nuptial but with an antenuptial contract. Secondly, in the case of Abbas Ali v. Nazemunnessa Begum' reported in 43 'C. W. N. 1059, a Division Bench of this Court held that an agreement by a Mahomedan husband in a Kabinnama that he would pay separate maintenance to his wife in case of disagreement is not opposed to public policy and is enforceable under the Mahomedan law. The Kabinnama which has been marked Ex. C. in the present case contains the following provisions: [Here follow the text of the Kabinnama in Bengali language. 1 From the above passage it is clear that the husband was authorising the wife to live in her father's house in case of disagreement with her husband and was binding himself to pay her maintenance at the rate of Rs. 10 per month and was further conferring upon his wife the power to get herself divorced in case the husband failed to pay maintenance for eix consecutive months. The learned Subordinate Judge takes the view that so long as cruelty and ill-treatment are not proved, the plaintiffappellant would not be bound to maintain the wife at the place of her father and upon that view the only question to which he addressed himself was whether the plaintiff was guilty of cruelty towards his wife. We are disposed to hold that this view of the wife's right is not in conformity with the conditions in the Kabinnama because the Kabinnama expressly confers upon the wife the right to live in her father's house in case of disagreement and imposes a liability upon her husband to pay her separate mainten. ance so long as she lives in her father's house and we hold that this agreement is valid and binding upon the plaintiff.

[8] In considering the evidence on the question as to why the wife left her husband's house, the learned Judge has come to the following findings; in the first place, he holds that the father in law of the plaintiff took away his daughter with or without the knowledge and consent of the plaintiff at a time when she was carrying for three or four months. In the second place, the learned Subordinate Judge has also found that defendant 1 developed a dislike for her husband and for that purpose she was not willing to live with him and she had a secret desire in her mind for a younger husband. In the third place, it has been found that it is quite likely that the wife is not so much against her husband but she is in the complete control of her father, defendant 2, and the latter is thinking of another marriage for her for his own selfish gain. From these findings it is not clear to us whether defendant 1, left her husband, as contemplated by the Kabinnama, Ex. C, on account of disagreement with her husband. The discussion of the evidence on the question of cruelty is, in our judgment, vitiated to some extent by the surmises made by the learned Subordinate Judge on the circumstantial evidence of the case. Mr. Bannerjee appearing in support of the plaintiff-respondent has cited the case of Mirjan Ali v. Mt. Maimuna Bibi, which is a decision of the Assam High Court in 53 C.W.N. 302 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Assam 14), where it has been held that when a Muhammadan wife seeke to exercise a delegated power of divorcing herself, she must establish clearly that the conditions entitling her to exercise the power have been fulfilled. With respect we agree with the view in the said decision but we are afraid that the appreciation of the evidence in the present case by the Court of appeal below 'has been vitiated by misconception of the legal rights of defendant 1 under the Kabinnama and also by the surmises made by the learned Subordinate Judge on the circumstantial evidence.

[4] Mr. Mukherjee appearing in support of the appeal has also argued that the order of perpetual injunction against the father defen. dant 2, is not maintainable under S. 54, Specific Relief Act. The question under that section is whether there was an obligation on the part of defendant 2, in favour of the plaintiff in the circumstances of this case. The Court of appeal below will, therefore, consider the evidence on this point and come to a specific finding as to whether defendant 2, actually stood in the way of defendant 1's returning to her husband. Upon a consideration of this evidence, the Court of appeal below will come to a decision as to whether any injunction should be granted against defendant 2.

[5] In this view of the matter, the appeal is allowed and the judgment and decree of the Court of appeal below are set aside and the case is remanded to that Court for a reconsideration of the evidence in the light of the observations made above.

[6] There will be no order for costs in this Court. Further costs will be in the discretion of the Court of appeal below.

Where letters written by a woman to members of her family during a period of 5 to 9 months before her suicide showed that her state of mind was seriously affected by the cruel conduct of the members :

Harendra Nath Roy Choudhury_for Petitioner.

Debabrata Mookerjee_for the State.

Harries C. J. — This is an application for revision by one Gokul Chandra Chatterjee who was convicted of an offence under S. 306, Penal Code and sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment.

Assistant Sessions Judge sitting with a jury upon a charge of abetment of suicide. His son Biswa Ranjan Chatterjee was also tried with him upon the same charge. The jury unanimously found Biswa Ranjan not guilty and the learned Judge accepted the verdict and acquitted him. The jury however by a majority of three to two found the petitioner guilty and accepting the verdict the learned Judge sentenced him, as I have indicated, to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment. An appeal to the Sessions Judge was dismissed.

[3] The charge was concerned with the death of a young woman called Swarnalata who, according to the prosecution committed suicide by standing between the rails in front of a moving train. There was some suggestion in the Court below that this was not a case of suicide, but obviously it was, and it has not been suggested before us that the death was accidental. The allegation against the petitioner was that he along with his son had instigated this young woman to commit suicide on the day previous to her death and on the day of her death shortly before she was killed by the train.

[4] This young woman Swarnalata was married to Bankim, a son of the petitioner Gokul. She was the daughter of one Chandi Charan Ganguly of a village called Chaumashina which was not far away from the villagein which Gokul lived. It is said that the marriage between Swarnalata and Bankim was an unhappy one and that practically from the outset the young girl who was only about fifteen years of age when she married was ill-treated and assaulted by her mother in-law, by her hueband and Biswa Ranjan, the husband's brother. A son was born to Swarnalata, but it is said that about a month after the child was born Swarnalata left the house of Gokul, her father-in-law, and went to her father's house at Chaumashina. According to the prosecution Swarpalata was really driven away from her father-in-law's house and was deprived of all access to her small son. She wrote a number of letters to her father-in-law and her mother-inlaw begging that the child should be sent to Chaumashina, but the petitioner was adamant.

[5] On 19th March 1948, Swarnalata according to the prosecution accompanied by her two uncles . Anadi (P. W 1) and Abani (P. W. 3) went to the house of Gokul and there saw her young son. Gokul, it is said, abused Swarnslata and asked her to leave the house at once. Swarnalata who it is said had picked up the child was deprived of the child and Biswa-Ranjan pushed her and she fell in the courtyard. She clung to the petitioner's feet and begged him to allow her to stay with her child; but it is said that both Gokul and Biswa Ranjan told her to go away and told her to kill herself by taking poison or by placing herself under railway train. SO E LOVE STA

[6] It seems that this occurrence had brought a number of neighbours to the scene, who had assembled in front of the house. The two uncles after this occurrence made a report at the thana and it is significant to note that in the entry in the diary there is no reference whatsoever of any incitement to suicide by either the petitioner or Biswa Ranjan. It seems that after making this report the Head Constable came to Gokul and asked him to allow his daughter in law to spend the night at his house, but Gokul would not allow her to do so and Swarnalata and ber two uncles had to spend the night elsewhere.

[7] The following morning Swarnalata and her two uncles again went to the house of Gokul and found that Swarnalata's husband Bankim was also present, Swarnalata. it is said, on entering the house asked her uncles to go home and Anadi and Abani went to Bankura Railway Station to catch the 10-80 A.M. Down-Gomoh Passenger Train for Ramsagar Railway Station which was their destination.

[8] According to the prosecution Gokul, Biswa Ranjan and Bankim together with Swarnalata arrived on the platform just when the train was about to start and the three of them pushed Swarnalata into a compartment reserved for females. It is said that on this occasion also Gokul and Biswa Ranjan incited Swarnalata to commit suicide by throwing herself under a train.

[9] Two co-villagers of Anadi and Abani are said to have seen Swarnalata being pushed into a ladies' compartment though Anadi and Abani who were in the train saw nothing. These two villagers told the two uncles who went to the ladies' compartment when the train stopped at the next station and took Swarnalata back to their compartment. The train in due course arrived at Ramsagar when Abani went in search of a bullock cart while Swarnalata and Anadi stood waiting on the platform. Whilst they were waiting the Up Gomoh Passenger Train was seen about to enter Ramsagar Station, Swarnalata, it is said, ran from the platform and got on the railway line and stood between the tracks facing the engine of the approaching train and was knocked down and killed almost instantaneously. An Assistant Sub-Inspector of Police, Bankura, held an inquiry and came to the conclusion that it was a case of suicide.

[10] Nothing appears to have been done by either of the uncles until March 17 when a complaint was sent to the Superintendent of Police of Bankura District. In this complaint, it is said that Swarnalata was unhappy in the house of her father-in-law and that she had been compelled to leave Gokul's house and return to her father's village. The cause of the unhappiness was stated to be certain debts which were said to be owing to Gokul. It is then stated that Swarnalata gave birth to a son, but that the child was kept away from her and that as a result Swarnalata became most unhappy and very anxious to return to her husband's house in order to see the child. It is then stated that the informant Abani together with his brother Anadi and Swarnalata went on Falgun 28 last to Gokul's house. The report then proceeds to describe the hostile reception they received. Swarnalata begged for the child and these words appear:

"And she began to cry, saying that she would commit suicide, would place her head under a running train, and such other things, unless her son was given to her. Gokul Chattopadhya, Satyabala, Biswaranjan and Bankim abused her in indecent language and said, 'Come, let us get thee into a train; go, place thy head

that Bankim was present on the first occasion though the evidence is that Bankim only returned and was present on the following day when the two uncles of the girl returned to the house. The report then refers to Swarnalata being brought to the train by Gokul and his sons and being pushed by force into a women's compartment. Swarnalata is said to have cried: "Give me my son. Allow me to stay in your house, otherwise I will commit suicide by laying my head under a running train" and such other things. Nothing is said as to any reply by Gokul, though it is now said that Gukul again instigated her to commit suicide.

[12] The police took up the investigation and in due course the petitioner together with Biswa Ranjan and Bankim were charged. Bankim however was discharged by the Magistrate conducting the preliminary enquiry, but the petitioner and Biswa Ranjan were committed to stand their trial in the Court of Sessions. They were tried and dealt with as I have indicated.

[18] A good deal of evidence was called at the Sessions trial with a view to showing in the first place the cruel conduct of the accused person. Letters were also put in evidence said to have been written by the deceased to Gokul and members of Gokul's family. The last of these letters was written about five months before the suicide and the first of them about eight months before that incident. I shall discuss at a later stage whether these letters were admissible. They were tendered to show the state of the woman's mind which it is alleged was the result of cruelty on the part of Gokul and members of his family. Evidence was also called concerning the incident at Gokul's house on 18th March and the incident at Bankura raliway station on 16th March.

urged that there was a grave misdirection in the charge in that the learned Judge did not make it clear to the jury that the charge related to instigation or abetment of suicide on two days, namely, 13th March and 14th March. As I have said there was a good deal of evidence tending to show cruelty on the part of Gokul and members of his family previous to 13th and 14th March. In fact the evidence tended to show that the accused acted cruelly towards the deceased for some years before the deceased took her life.

[16] It was not the case of the prosecution that this sustained and continuous cruelty amounted to an instigation or abetment of suicide. The case for the prosecution was that Gokul and his co-accused had on 13th and 14th March instigated this woman to do away with herself. The learned Judge should have made it clear to the jury that the success or failure of the prosecution depended entirely upon whether the jury accepted the evidence relating to the two incidents of 13th March and 14th March during which incidents it is alleged that Gokul and his co-accused actually by words instigated the deceased to comit suicide. The evidence as to cruelty was only relevant to explain how Swarnalata came to be at Gokul's house on 13th march and explained the conduct of Swarnalata and the conduct of Gokul and the members of his family. This evidence as to cruelty to the girl before 13th March 1948 though relevant was not evidence which established the charge and the evidence could never establish the charge unless the jury were satisfied that the words alleged to have been spoken by Gokul and his co-accused were spoken on 13th and 14th March 1948. In my view, the charge does not state with sufficient clearness the relevancy of the general evidence with regard to cruelty. The jury might well have come to the conclusion that the charge of abetment had been made out though they might not have been satisfied with the evidence relating to the two specific incidents relied on by the prosecution. The charge should have made it clearer that the evidence of cruelty though established would not prove a case of abetment and that the charges were bound to fail unless the jury were satisfied that the evidence relating to the two incidents of 18th and 14th March 1948 was true; his failure to direct the jury properly as to the relevancy of the evidence of cruelty does to my mind vitiate the charge. The jury might well have convicted because of this evidence of cruelty and that evidence alone.

[17] As I have stated earlier, letters were admitted in evidence which were proved to have been written by the deceased woman during a period of three or four months the first letter being written about eight or nine months before her death and the last letter about five months before her death. These letters show that the deceased woman was suffering acutely from the fact that she was being refused access to her child. They are letters which show that her state of mind was seriously affected by the cruel conduct of the accused.

[18] These letters were admitted in evidence by the learned Judge in spite of objection by the defence. In the view of the learned Judge the letters were admissible under S. 32 (1), Evidence Act. That section in so far as it is relevant reads as follows:

"Statements, written or verbal, of relevant facts made by a person who is dead, or who cannot be found, or who has become incapable of giving evidence, or whose attendance cannot be procured without an amount of delay or expense which under the circumstances of the case appears to the Court unreasonable, are themselves relevant facts in the following cases.

(1) When the statement is made by a person as to the cause of his death, or as to any of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death in cases in which the cause of that person's death comes into question.

Such statements are relevant whether the person who made them was or was not, at the time when they were made, under expectation of death, and whatever may be the nature of the proceeding in which the cause of his death comes into question."

were written statement made by a person who was dead at the time of the trial. The statement could only be admissible if they were statements made by the deceased as to the cause of her death or as to any of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in her death.

[20] These are not statements as to the cause of her death but it is contended that these letters are statements as to some of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in her death.

[21] According to the prosecution the transaction which resulted in her death was the instigation of the petitioner Gokul and members of his family and the tragic act of the girl in standing before a moving train and thus being run over and killed.

[22] Mr. Debabrata Mookerjee on behalf of the State has contended that the previous cruelty referred to in these letters were part of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in her death and as the letters related to such circumstances they were admissible.

[23] The meaning of the phrase "the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death" was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Pakala Naraya Swami v. King-Emperor, 43 C. W. N. 478: (A. I. R. (26) 1939 P. O. 47 : 40 Cr. L. J. 864). In that case the question arose whether a statement made by the deceased to his widow that he was going to Berhampur was admissible in evidence under S. 32 (1), Evidence Act. The deceased was killed at Berhampur and their Lordships held that the statement to the widow that he was going to Berhampur was a statement as to one of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death. But for the fact that he went to Berhampur he would not have been killed there and his going to Berhampur was one of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in his death. The statement that he was going to Berhampur therefore was a statement concerning one of the circumstances of the transaction relating to his death and therefore their Lordships of the Privy Council held the statement to be admissible.

"The statement may be-made before the cause of death has arisen, or before the deceased has any reason to anticipate being killed. The circumstances must be circumstances of the transaction, general expressions indicating fear or suspicion of a particular individual or otherwise and not directly related to the occasion of the death will not be admissible. But statements made by the deceased that he was proceeding to the spot where he was in fact killed, or as to his reasons for so proceeding, or that he was going to meet a particular person, or that he had been invited by such person to mest him would each of them be circumstances of the transaction, and would be so whether the person was unknown or was not the person accused. Such a statement migh indeed be exculpatory of the person accused. 'Circumstances of the transaction' is a phrase no doubt that conveys some limitations. It is not as broad as the analogous use in 'circumstantial evidence' which includes evidence of all relevant facts. It is on the other hand narrower than 'res gestae.' Circumstances must have some proximate relation to the actual occurrence: though as for instance in a case of prolonged poisoning they may be related to dates at a considerable distance from the date of the actual fatal dose."

contended that evidence of previous crulety though such evidence might be relevant is not evidence relating to any circumstances of the transaction. As Lord Atkin has pointed out "the circumstances must be circumstances of the transaction" which resulted in death and evidence of previous crulety, to my mind cannot be regarded as evidence of the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in death. For example, if one of the letters contained a statement that she was going to her father-in-law's house on the following day to try and obtain the child, it might be argued that such a statement would be a statement of the circumstances of but for the fact that she went to the house the alieged instigation by Gokul could never have taken place. However, as I have said, the last letter written was about five monts before the death and it appears to me that the connection between the letters and the death is not sufficiently close to make the letters statements of circumstances of the transactions resulting in death. As Lord Atkin put it "the circumstances must have some proximate relation to the actual occurrence."

[26] Lord Atkin gave as an example that a man might express the fear or suspicion that a particular individual might harm him or even kill him but if this was a general expression indicating fear it would not be admissible in evidence under S. 32, Evidence Act as it could not be said to have some proximate relation to the actual occurrence. In the present case, it cannot be said that statements in the letters have no relation to the cause of death. What drove her to kill herself was undoubtedly her unhappy state of mind, but the statements in my view have not that proximate relation to the actual occurrence as to make them admissible under S. 32 (1), Evidence Act. They cannot be said to be circumstances of the transaction which resulted in death. In other words, they are not sufficiently nor closely enough connected with the actual transaction and that being so the letters were not, in my view, admissible and were wrongly admitted by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge.

"The improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision."

[28] If we were satisfied that apart from this inadmissible evidence there was sufficient good evidence on the record to justify the verdict of the jury and the conviction, we should not interfere in this case. On the other hand, if we are satisfied that the admission of this evidence might have seriously influenced the minds of the jury and made them return an erroneous verdict, then the Court must set aside the verdict and the conviction and either order a retrial or proceed to decide the case itself upon the evidence on the record in accordance with the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the comparatively recent case of Abdul Rahim v. Emperor, 78 I. A. 77: (A.I.R. (98) 1946 P. C. 82 : 47 Cr. L. J. 616).

[29] A case of this kind is a very difficult case for a jury to try as they might well be swayed by sympathy for the deceased young woman and her relatives. The jury might come to the conclusion that even though there was no verbal instigation by Gokul, nevertheless his conduct was the real cause of the suicide and that being so they might erroneously hold him guilty. Cases where the decision might be influenced by sympathy or sentiment are not cases which a Court would readily send back to the lower Court to be tried by a jury if this Court could lawfully decide the question itself. It appears to me that this is a case where this Court is more likely to arrive at a correct conclusion than a jury who are more likely to be swayed by sympathy and pity for the deceased young woman and her near relations. That being so, this Court should, following the decision of Atdul Rahim v. Emperor, 73 I. A. 77: (A. I. R. (33) 1946 P. C. 82: 47 Or. L. J. 616), proceed to decide this case itself on the admissible evidence on the record.

[30] As I have said the whole case turns on the view the Court takes of the evidence adduced by the prosecution concerning the first incident of 13th March 1948, which took place at or immediately outside Gokul's house and of the second incident which took place on 14th March at Barkura railway station. [His Lordship then discussed evidence and proceeded:1

[31] As a Judge of fact, I find it quite impossible to act upon the evidence of Anadi and Abani with any confidence and it appears to me that the jury were in the same difficulty. The evidence is that Gokul and Biswaranjan both incited this girl; yet the jury convicted Gokul and acquitted Biswaranjan. How they could do that upon the evidence it is quite impossible to say, yet they did so. If the evidence was unsatisfactory against Biswaranjan, it was equally unsatisfactory against Gokul and the jury admittedly thought the evidence unsatisfactory against Biswaranjan. That makes me suspect that the verdict of the jury was to a very large extent influenced by their sympathy for the deceased woman and their verdict is an expression of their abhorrence of the cruel conduct of Gokul in refusing Swarnalata access to her son.

[32] It appears to me that it would be highly dangerous to convict Gokul upon this evidence and that being so he must be acquitted.

[33] I, like my learned brother, have every sympathy with the relatives of this unbappy girl, and we have no sympathy whatsoever with the petitioner. He was guilty of what I think to be inhuman conduct in separating this poor girl from her baby son, but we cannot convict Gokul because we disapprove of his conduct and his attitude towards this young girl. Gokul can only be convicted if there is unimpeachable evidence, which we can rely upon, that he instigated or incited this young woman to throw herself under a train. There is in my view no such evidence and that being so the petition must be allowed; the conviction and sentence are set aside and the petitioner is acquitted. He need not surrender to his bail and his bail bond is discharged.

[34] When the Rule first came on for hearing a Bench issued a Rule for enhancement of sentence. That Rule apparently was issued to make it easier for the Court to consider the facts. However, it is not necessary to consider this Rule any further because we have acquitted the accused. The Rule for enhancement is ac-

[35] We are informed that a case under the same section is now pending against Satyabala, Gokul's wife. Having regard to the view which we have expressed in this judgment the prose. cuting authorities should consider whether that case should proceed in the absence of other evidence which was not considered in the present case.

It is an elementary principle of criminal administration that counsel can make no admission binding on his client. That being so, his client is not bound by the fact that counsel is not astute enough to discover some obvious flaw in evidence. Further, if such a flaw in the evidence exists and has been overlooked by counsel, that does not exonerate the Sessions Judge from putting the case fairly and properly before the jury. It counsel for the defence does not notice that a document is highly suspicious it is the duty of the Court to point that fact out if the document is suspicious. The Court cannot shelter itself behind a plea that as the attention of the Court was not drawn to it the Court did not look at the document. Annotation: ('49-Com.) Cr. P. C., S. 297 N. 6.

J. M. Banerjee - for the State.

Harries C. J. - These are two appeals from convictions under S. 395, Penal Code. The appellant Kailash Nath Shaw, who is the sole appellant in Appeal No. 213 of 1949 was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment. The seven persons who are the appellants in Appeal No. 220 of 1949 were each sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

(2) The offence with which these eight persons were charged, was a most serious one of dacoity and if they were guilty of the offence the sentences imposed, namely, three years' and two years' rigorous imprisonment, were far too lenient. As the learned Judge accepted the jury's verdict he was in my view bound to impose very much more severe sentences than those which he did.

[3] The eight appellants were tried by a learned Sessions Judge and a jury upon this charge of dacoity. The jury by a majority of 3 to 2 found all the eight appellants guilty. The learned Judge apparently agreed with the verdict and sentenced the appellants in the manner I have indicated.

[4] Mr. Sudhansu Mukherji who has appeared on behalf of the appellants in both the appeals, has contended that the charge to the jury in this case was grossly inadequate and that it contained such misdirections that the verdict of the jury must be held to be vitiated. What Mr. Mukherji suggests is non-direction rather than misdirection. It is clear however that where a learned Judge fails to direct the jury on material matters such failure to direct amounts in law to a misdirection.

[5] The case for the prosecution is a somewhat astounding one. The occurrence is said to have taken place on 11th May 1948 at about 8 A. M. at or near a railway yard known as Halisabar Railway Yard which seems to be some distance from Halisahar Railway Station.

[6] According to the prosecution two constables, one of whom certainly was armed, if not both, saw a lorry approaching the railway yard from a distance of about a quarter of a mile. The lorry had its headlights on and apparently was approaching towards the constables. According to Constable Biswanath, P. W. 6 who was the principal witness in the case, he walked forward about half a mile when he found the lorry stationary alongside the siding but with its headlights full on. He noticed, so he says, a number of people loading railway wagon springs into the lorry and he advanced with a view to preventing what in his view was obviously theft. It may be observed that there were a number of condemned railway wagon springs lying at the siding which had been sold to a private firm. According to Biswanth, as he approached somebody came from the lorry and threatened him with the result that he retreated. He withdrew, so it is said, a matter of 20 or 25 cubits and remained under a tree. After a short lapse of time Biswanath says that somebody tried to start the lorry which was still standing with its headlights full on. Fearing that the lorry might escape Biswanath fired one shot and then, according to him, remained at the spot under the tree for about eight to ten minutes. Others then came up and the party advanced towards the lorry and found the driver sitting in his seat apparently dead. Alongside bim was the appellant Kailash Nath Shaw and in the lorry itself were the seven other appellants.

[7] According to the prosecution, after the shot some people apparently ran away. It is said by some witnesses that 20 or 30 people ran away, but the appellants, for reasons best known to themselves, are said to have remained quietly in the lorry for a period of eight to ten minutes to await arrest and they were in due course arrested. According to the prosecution there were at that time a large number of springs in the lorry.

[8] A first information report was not made until 12 noon and in that report it is stated that when Biswanath and the constable who accompanied him, Chittaranjan Dutta, saw the lorry there were about 30 or 40 men loading the lorry. Biswanath is said to have shouted to them to stop whereupon one man threatened him at the point of a revolver to remain silent. Biswanath finding himself in danger fired a round which killed the driver who was attempting to start the lorry. On hearing the firing it is said that other constables came up and managed to arrest the eight appellants, but the other culprits made good their escape.

(9) The investigating officer appeared and according to the prosecution there were 45 wagon springs in the lorry. A search list was prepared of what was found in the lorry and on the persons of the appellants who were found in it. That search list was witnessed by two persons. But that list contains no reference whatsoever to springs in the lorry but to one spring lying near where the lorry was standing. However a second search list is said to have been drawn up and this is also said to be witnessed by two persons, one of whom is said to have witnessed the first search list. Why the same persons did not witness the second list was not explained by the prosecution and indeed none of the search witnesses were called at all. The learned Judge in his charge to the jury dealt at very great length with the law and with the evidence given by each of the witnesses and the defence must concede that the learned Judge pointed out to the jury very serious discrepancies in the evidence for the prosecution. No point can be made by the appellants on that aspect of the case. The learned Judge, for example, pointed out quite fairly the conflict between Biswanath's evidence and the evidence of other witnesses, and the conflict between Biswanath's evidence in the Sessions Court and the first information report. In the Sessions Court Biswanath did not state that somebody came forward and threatened him with a revolver. All he said was that they threatened him with something that looked like a revolver. Quite obviously at the Sessions trial the story of threat by pointing a revolver had to be abandoned as no revolver was found on any of the appellants. In fact no weapon of any kind was found on any of the appellants and what is stranger still Kailash Nath Shaw, who according to the prosecution had come to commit a dacoity, had come with a sum of Rs. 500 in his pocket.

[10] Learned advocate for the appellants however has stressed the fact that the learned Judge in his charge to the jury makes no reference whatsoever to the suspicious circumstances surrounding the bringing into existence of two search lists to which I have made reference.

[11] The essential fact which the prosecution had to prove in this case was the presence of these railway springs in the lorry. Unless there was evidence that the persons in the lorry had moved or attempted to move property into the lorry then no case of dacoity could possibly be made out. It must be remembered that the case for the defence was that this lorry was travelling along a kutcha road where it was eventually found stationary and was brought to a standstill by shots being fired by somebody nearby. According to the defence this lorry which belonged to Kailsh Nath Shaw, had been delivering materials to purchaser earlier in the evening and was returning with Kailash Nath Shaw in it when it was stopped by this firing. Whether the defence version was true or not would depend largely on whether or not railway springs were found in this lorry when Biswanath and the persons who had joined him rushed up.

[12] That there were railway springs in the lorry at a later stage there can be little doubt. But it seems clear that whereas there were 45 springs in the lorry when the investigating officer is said to have counted them, there were only 35 when another Sub-Inspector counted them a little earlier. That Sub-Inspector in the Court of the committing Magistrate stated that there were 35 when he counted them, but in the Court of Sessions he tried to resile from that position as obviously the evidence did not fit in with the evidence of the investigating officer who had counted 45. If the number of springs had increased that would suggest that somebody was putting railway springs into that lorry in order to create evidence. The learned Judge pointed out this aspect of the case to the jury and no complaint can be made against the summing up on that ground. What however is said against the summing up is that it makes no reference whatsoever to the two search lists beyond the fact that they were produced as evidence in Court.

[13] Why two search lists were prepared it is impossible to say and why 45 springs should not have been included as the first item in the first search list only the police can explain. The 45 springs were the essential piece of evidence in this case. Yet we find that a search list was laboriously drawn up and the only mention of wagon springs in that search list is the mention of one spring found near the lorry.

[14] That search list appears to have been attested by two search witnesses who must be respectable persons of the locality. The learned Judge did not point out to the jury that neither of these search witnesses were called. The prosecution stated that they could not be found. But there is no evidence at all that any attempt was made to find them and it is difficult to believe that two respectable persons of the locality can disappear completely without the possibility of being traced. The jury should have been told that if they were not satisfied with the explanation that these witnesses could not be found they might infer that the witnesses would not have supported the prosecution if they had been called. The learned Judge, as I have said, makes no reference at all to the fact that neither of these search witnesses were called, and to the further fact that in that search list there is no reference at all to springs in the lorry, but there is reference only to a spring lying on the ground near the lorry.

[15] The second search list is a most suspicious document and a most cursory glance at it must inevitably raise suspicions. Whether the learned Judge or the jury ever looked at this document it is impossible to say, and it appears to me that learned advocate for the defence could not have looked at it either, because certain features would have inevitably impressed themselves on him if he had done so.

them being a witness to the first search list. Why the second witness to the first list did not attest the second list no explanation is given and it would appear as if these lists were made and drawn up at a different time. But why that should be so it is impossible to say if the springs were in the lorry at the time the first search list was drawn up. If the wagon springs were in the lorry when the first search list was drawn up, why were they not included in the first list and why was it necessary to obtain a different witness, and in any event why was not this other witness, the new witness in the second list, called? He should have been a respectable person of the locality, but apparently he also disappeared from this locality leaving no trace. It is indeed astounding to find that three search witnesses should disappear in this most amazing fashion leaving no trace whatsoever behind them. The rather astounding nature of this disappearance I think should have been mentioned to the jury as the latter might have drawn a quite different inference from the failure of the prosecution to call these witnesses.

[17] A glance at this second search list also shows that the signatures of the two witnesses appear to be in the same hand. Whether the two signatures were written by the same person would of course be a matter for the jury, but I think the jury should have been warned about it and asked to consider whether these signatures were genuine at all, particularly having regard to the fact that neither of the persons who are supposed to have signed is called as a witness. Further, the names of these search witnesses which have to be inserted at the head of search list appear to have been inserted by the same hand as that which wrote the signatures in the search list. Of course, it would be for the jury to say whether the writing was in the same hand, but the similarity is such that that point should have been made to the jury in the summing up and they should have been asked to consider whether the names of the witnesses at the head of this document and their signatures at the foot were or were not all written by the same person.

[18] Further, a comparison of these documents makes it quite clear that the person who wrote the names of the witnesses in the first search list could not possibly have written their names in the second search list because even to a person without the slightest knowledge of handwriting, the handwriting is entirely different. Why was it necessary to obtain the services of some other person to write the names of the witnesses in the second search list? Why could not the officer, who wrote the headings of the first search list, have written the headings of the second search list? The prosecution offered no explanation and the jury were never asked to consider these facts.

[19] Mr. Banerjea has contended that the police were not bound in law to draw up a search list. But I need not enter into that question. Search lists are said to have been drawn up and were put in evidence and one of those documents appears on the face of it to be a highly suspicious document. Further, the persons who are supposed to have witnessed both these documents were never called. If those documents are genuine and were supported by the search witnesses the prosecution would have gone a long way to proving that there were springs in the lorry. But the jury should in my view have been carefully directed to consider whether the second search list was not an entirely bogus document. If the jury had come to the con. clusion that it was, it might well then have come to the conclusion that the case for the prosecution, that springs were found in this lorry, was false. Mr. Banerjea also contended that as learned advocate for the defence had not noticed the suspicious features in this second search list the Judge was under no duty to make any point about the search list to the jury.

[20] It is an elementary principle of criminal administration that counsel can make no admission binding on his client. That being so, is his client bound by the fact that counsel is not astute enough to discover some obvious flaw in evidence? Further, if such a flaw in the evidence exists and has been overlooked by counsel, does that exonerate the learned Judge from putting the case fairly and properly before the Jury? If counsel for the defence does not notice that a document is highly suspicious it is the duty of the Court to point that fact out if the document is suspicious. The Court cannot shelter itself behind a plea that as the attention of the Court was not drawn to it the Court did not look at the document. It appears to me in the present case! that the learned Judge should have most carefully warned the jury about these search lists and have warned them further that a serious inference could be drawn against the prosecution by their failure to call any of these search witnesses, if the explanation that the search witnesses had miraculously disappeared was not accepted by the jury. Nothing whatsoever was said upon this matter.

[21] There is one other feature which is rather striking and which the learned Judge omitted to notice in his charge to the jury. Biswanath in his evidence stated that he fired only one shot. But a Sub-Inspector who came on to the scene-fairly scon afterwards stated in the Court of the committing Magistrate that he found a number of cartridges near the lorry, though he tried in the Court of Session to resile from that state. ment. The first information report only mentions one shot and there is only one cartridge mentioned in the first search list. There were however three wounds on the deceased driver, a graze on the forehead, a serious wound on the neck which was obviously a gunshot wound and the gunshot had fractured the vertebrae and there was also what was obviously a gunshot wound on the left side of the chest. The doctor who was called as a witness stated in the Court of the committing Magistrate that all these three wounds could have been caused by one bullet, but how one bullet could cause a graze on the forehead, a serious deep wound on the neck, and a fractured vertebrae and a wound which appeared to have been bone deep in the chest, is wholly impossible to understand. I cannot believe that the doctor really meant that these three wounds could possibly have been caused by one bullet, but that is what he is recorded as having said. The wounds would suggest that there was a number of shots which would leave a number of cartridges lying near the lorry as spoken to by a witness in the Court of the committing Magistrate. The learned Judge says nothing about this very odd piece of medical evidence. He did mention that the Sub Inspector had stated in the Court of the committing Magistrate that he had found cartridges and had later resiled from that statement, but he never asked the jury to consider whether the wounds did not show that there must have been more than one shot and that the evidence of Biswanath was obviously untrue.

[22] If there is any truth in the defence vergion, a number of shots might well have been fired to stop this lorry. Biswanath might have suspected that this lorry was after no good although admittedly it was standing on a kutcha road which was a public road and it might well have been there for purposes which were entirely innocent. If a constable suspected that the occupants of the lorry had some criminal designs he might well have fired to stop the lorry and accidentally hit the driver and he might well have fired a number of shots. This aspect of the case was never brought to the attention of the jury although it is not of such importance. The failure however to draw the attention of the jury to the suspicious character of at least one of the search lists and the suspicious nature of the evidence accounting for the failure to call any of these search witnesses was to my mind a most material non-direction which might well have led to a gross miscarriage of justice in this case.

[23] In my view, the summing up in this case was so defective that the verdict of the jury which was a majority verdict of guilty by 3 to 2, cannot possibly be sustained and must be set aside.

[24] The question then arises what should the Court do? Mr. Banerjea on behalf of the prosecution has asked us to order a retrial. But it appears to me that the evidence in this case is so unsatisfactory that it would not be safe to order a retrial. [His Lordship considered the evidence and proceeded:]

[25] In my view the evidence in this case is not such that would warrant a Court ordering a retrial and that being so I would allow these appeals set aside the convictions and sentences and acquit the appellants of the offence of dacoity.

[26] The two persons who are on bail need not surrender to their bail and their bail bonds are discharged. The remaining appellants must be released forthwith unless required by the authorities on any other charge.

Order.-This Rule has been obtained by the Corporation of Calcutta against an order passed by Sri P. Basu, Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta, awarding costs against the Corporation and directing the Corporation to pay compensation to the complainant. The proceedings were under 8. 535. Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923. One Krishna Chandra Sil filed a petition before the Magistrate complaining that a nuisance was being caused by a Dal mill. This matter was gone into by the learned Magistrate and he directed the Corporation to close down the mill within one month from the the date of his order and in the same order he passed the order for costs and compensation. This was done behind the back of the Corporation as no notice was served upon the Corporation before the order was passed. It is true that S. 535, Calcutta Municipal Act does not provide for any notice being served but in my opinion it would be entirely! law to pass an order penalising a party without giving the party an opportunity of being heard.

The principle audi alteram partem is applicable to a case of this description.

[2] I therefore set aside the order of the learned Magistrate as regards costs and compensation and direct that notice be served the on Corporation to show cause why the costs and compensation should not be paid by the Corporation. Thereafter the learned Magistrate shall hear the parties and pass orders according to law.

Commissioner of Income-tax Central, Calcutta — Applicant v. Messrs. Dudwala and Co., Calcutta — Respondent.

Income-tax Act (1922), S. 26A — Karta of Mitakshara joint family entering into partnership with stranger — Dissolution of joint family — Registration of firm.

The partners of a firm were N representing a Mitakshara joint family and A. A suit for partition instituted by one of the members of the joint family resulted in a compromise and a consent decree which stated the shares of each of the members of the family after the partition. It was further stated that in the firm the Parties had twelve acres share that it would remain joint and that the parties would be entitled thereto according to the shares mentioned in the decree. An application under S. 26A having been made on behalf of the firm it was refused on the ground that as the joint family had come to an end it could not form a partner-hip with a stranger as such until and unless the separate members of the family along with the stranger formed themselves into a partnership and asked for registration :

Held that the fact that there was a dissolution of the joint family had no effect at all on the constitution of the firm and that, therefore, the firm should be registered.

Annotation : ('46-Man.) I. T. Act, S. 26A .N. 1.

S. K. Gupta and J. C. Pal — for Income-tax Dept. Atul O. Gupta and Hemania Bose — for Respondent.

Chatterjee J.—At the instance of the Commissioners of Income-tax, the question of law which has been referred to this Court for its opinion by the Tribunal is in these terms:

"Whether on the facts and in the circumstances of this case the Tribunal was right in holding that the partnership firm of Dudwala & Co. should be registered under S. 26A of the income-tax Act."

[2] The facts shortly are as follows. The partners of the firm were Rai Bahadur Rameshwar Nathany, representing the Mitakshara joint family under the name and style of Baldeodas Rameswar, one Mannalal Musuddi and one Ramkumar Agarwal. Mannalal Musuddi went out of the partnership in November 1942 and a fresh deed was executed by which the two partners carried on the business of the firm, in which the share of Rameswar Nathany (representing Baldeodas Rameswar) was twelve annas and Ramkumar Agarwala three annas. The remaining one anna share was devoted to charity. The deed was dated 10th February 1946.

- [3] A suit for partition was instituted by one of the members of the Hindu undivided family. That suit was instituted on the original side of this Court and was marked No. 1436 of 1943. That litigation resulted in a compromise and a consent decree was passed. The relevant clauses are set out in para. 4 of the referring order.
- [4] By cl. 1 of the terms of Settlement, the joint family came to an end on 21st September 1943. In cl. 3 the shares of each of the members of the family after the partition are stated. Clauses 7 and 10 are important and they are set out below.

Clauss 7. "The business carried on under the names and Styles of Rai Babadur Baldeodas Rameswar and Rameswar Nathany & Co. shall be stopped from the date hereof but this is not to affect the partnership carried on under the name and Style of Messrs. Dudwala & Co. in which Messrs Baldeodas Rameswar are the partners and the said partnership shall be continued as provided in Cl. 10 hereof."

Clause 10. "In the firm of Dudwalla & Co. the parties hereto have twelve annas shares and it shall remain joint and the parties shall be entitled thereto according to the shares mentioned in Cl. 3 thereof."

[5] An application was made in this case under 8. 26A. Income-tax Act. That section is in the following terms.

(1) Application may be made to the Income-tax officer on behalf of any firm, constituted under an instrument of partnership, specifying the individual theres of the partners, for registration for the purposes of this Act and of any other enactment for the time being in force relating to Income-tax or super-tax.

(2) The application shall be made by such person or persons, and at such times and shall contain such particulars and shall be in such form and be verified in such manner, as may be prescribed; and it shall be dealt with by the income-tax officer in such manner as may be prescribed."

[6] Dr. S. K. Gupta, learned counsel for the revenue authorities, drew our attention to the rules bearing on the subject under R. 2.

"Any firm constituted under an Instrument of partnership specifying the individual chares of the partners may under the Provisions of S. 26A, Incometax Act register with the Incometax officer the particulars contained in the said Instrument on application made in this behalf."

[7] Such application shall be signed by all the partners.

(8) In the schedule to the form set out in R. 8. there is a note which says that the application must be signed by all the partners (not being minors) in the firm as constituted at the date on which the application is made and it must specify the names of the partner, the address, the date of admittance to partnership, interest on capital or loans, salary or commission from the firm and share in the balance of profit or loss.

[9] Dr. Gupta also drew our attention to R. 4 which states that if on receipt of application referred in R. 3 the Income-tax officer is satisfied that there is a firm in existence constituted as shown in the Instrument of Partnership, and that the application has been properly made we shall grant a certificate stating that the instrument of partnership has been registered with him under Section 26A, Income tax Act.

[10] The application under S. 26A was refused by the Income-tax Officer on the ground that (as?) the joint family had come to an end it could not form a partnership with a stranger as such until and unless the separate members of the family along with the stranger Ram Kumar formed themselves into a partnership and asked for registration.

[11] On appeal the Assistant Commissioner took the same view. But the Tribunal held, and in our opinion rightly that the application ought not to have been refused and that the application was maintainable under S. 26A.

[12] Inasmuch as the Tribunal allowed the appeal of the assessees and ordered that the firm of Dudwala and Company should be registered the revenue authorities wanted the above question to be referred to this Court.

[13] In our opinion, the Appellate Tribunal was justified in taking the view that S. 26A did apply to this case. All that the section requires is that there should be a firm constituted under an instrument of partnership and that the deed of partnership must specify the individual shares of the partners and that an application should be made in the prescribed form and should comply with the Rules.

[14] Dr. Gupta's point is that in the application form it was stated that Nathany was the Karta or manager of a Hindu undivided family. If so it was a mere surplusage. The fact that there was a dissolution of the joint family which was governed by the Mitakshara School of law had no effect at all on the constitution of the firm. It was rightly conceded by Dr. Gupta that the members of the Joint family were not partners of the firm of Dadwala and company. Where A, the karta or managing member of a Hindu joint family enters into a partnership with B, a stranger, then A alone can be taken to be a partner and B is entitled and bound to treat only with A as a co-partner. In a suit for dissolution only A and B would be parties. To enable the members of A's family to inter. vene in the affairs of the firm would introduce confusion into partnership law and would paralyse trade and business. Coparcenary is the result of status but partnership is constituted by contract and the members of A's family have no contractual relations with B. The Karta, Rai Bahadur Rameswar Nathany, was thus one of the partners and the fact that there was a disruption of the coparcenary to which he belonged did not affect his status as a partner of the firm.

[15] It was urged by Dr. Gupta that a Hindu undivided family governed by the Mitakshara school of Hindu law ceased to exist as such on the institution of the suit and in any event on the consent decree being passed therein. According to the true notion of an undivided Mitakshara family, it is settled law that no individual member can predicate of the joint property, that he as a member of a joint family, has a certain definite share. Partition, therefore, consists in ascertaining and defining the shares of the coparceners in the joint properties and the actual division of the properties by metes and bounds is not necessary.

[16] Dr. Gupta argues that under Cl. 10 of the decree, it was stated that in the firm of Dudwala and Company the parties had twelve annas share and it was stated that it shall remain joint. But he points out that the consent decree further provided in that clause that the parties shall be entitled thereto according to the shares mentioned in cl. 3 thereof which defines the shares of each of the members of the family in the joint family assets or properties.

[17] In our opinion, even if ol. 10 did not state that the parties would be entitled to the 12 annas in the partnership according to the shares mentioned in ol. 3 of the terms of settlement, the effect would be the same. After the shares have been defined the members of the Mitakshara joint family may divide the property by metes and bounds or they may continue to live together and enjoy the property in common. Yet, that would effect the mode of enjoyment but not the tenure of the property. Therefore, the mere mention that the parties would be entitled to twelve annas share of the firm of Dudwala and Company according to the shares specified in the terms of settlement did not make any alteration as [to the real character of the property. The family ceased to be joint and the shares were defined, and the necessary consequence is that any property, e. g., the twelve annas share in that firm would be held by the members of the family as tenants in common.

[18] But that has no effect whatsoever onthe rights of the Rai Bahadur as a member of the firm. It cannot be contended that the firm was dissolved because the consent decree had been passed in the suit brought by one of the Nathanys in this Court. The revenue authorities are really refusing to register the firm so as to exact higher tax on the basis that they were an unregistered firm. It is not really their case that Dudwalla & Co., ceased to be a firm. Only the nature of the liability of the Rai coparcenera Bahadur vis-a-vis his Was changed as a result of that decree in the partition suit. Before the disruption he as Karta was liable to account in a very limited sense. A co-parcener seeking partition is not entitled to require the Karta to account for his past dealings in the family property. All that he is entitled to is an account of the family property as it exists at the time he demands a partition. That law was settled in this High Court in the case of Parmeshwar Dube v. Gobind Dubs, 43 Cal. 459: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Cal. 500). After the partition decree was passed, the Rai Bahadur would be liable to render account in respect of the twelve annas share on a different basis. But still he would continue to be a member of that firm and the partnership would not be in any way affected by the passing of that decree in the partition suit.

(19) In my opinion the Tribunal was right when it took the view that the partnership con.

tinued and S. 26A was applicable.

[20] Vis-a-vis the members of the family of the Rai Bahadur might be liable to account, as I said before, on a different footing. But he did not cease to be a partner of the firm and as such the application was rightly made under S. 26-A on behalf of the firm which was constituted under a proper instrument of partition which specified the individual shares of the partners.

[21] The answer to the question put to us must therefore be in the affirmative. The assesses are entitled to their costs of this Reference. Certified for two counsel.

of-Inherent powers of Court.

So far as the Code of Criminal Procedure is concerned, the power of the Court to discharge a jury is confined to Ss. 282 and 283 thereof. The Court has, nevertheless, an inherent power to discharge a jury which is not confined to cases of misconduct as such, but plainly extends to a case where the Judge finds reasons for doubting the impartiality of the jury. Thus where the foreman of the jury expresses his opinion as to the veracity of a prosecution witness in open Court at an early stage, the Judge can discharge the jury and order fresh trial with a new jury: A. I. R. (23) 1936 Oudh 268, Ref. [Paras 4, 6]

Order.— In this case, the three accused persons—Alfreed D'Cruz, Shiral D'Cruz and one Lakhi Dasi—have been charged under S. 363 and 366, Penal Code. The two charges relate respectively to abduction and kidnapping from lawful guardianship of a girl called Teresa Gomes.

[2] The jury were empanelled on the 8th and after the opening of learned counsel for the prosecution, Dr. Kabir Hossain, Professor of Medical Jurisprudence, Medical College, Calcutta, and one Dr. A. K. Chakravarty, radiologist, Calcutta Police Hospital, were examined. The evidence of these witnesses was concerned with the age of the girl in July this year. The next and the third witness for the prosecution was the girl said to have been abducted and kidnapped, that is, Teresa Gomes.

[3] At the conclusion of the last named witness's evidence I asked the gentlemen of the jury if they had any questions to put to the witness, whereupon the foreman of the jury, instead of putting any question, expressed the view that the story told by the said witness was untrue. This expression of opinion in open Court at an early stage of the trial is, in my opinion, calculated to cause a miscarriage of justice.

[4] So far as the Code of Criminal Procedure is concerned, the power of the Court to discharge a jury is confined to 8s. 282 and 283 thereof. The Court has, nevertheless, an inherent power to discharge a jury in a case such as this. That power is not confined to cases of misconduct as such, but plainly extends to a case where the Judge finds reasons for doubting the impartiality of the jury.

[6] There is authority for discharging a jury in circumstances such as these. In a case reported in Bindeshi v Emperor, 37 Cr. L. J. 749:
(A. I. R. 23) 1936 Oudh 268), it was held that if a jury expresses an opinion clearly regarding the guilt or innocence of an accused person before the charge to the Jury has been delivered, the Judge would be well advised in discharging the jury and to hold a fresh trial with a fresh jury.

[6] In this case, the expression of opinion by the foreman of the jury happens to be in favour of the accused persons. But a premature expression of opinion adverse to an accused person would be a very grave matter, and, consequently, as a matter of principle, and having regard to all the circumstances of this case, I feel that this jury should be discharged and that the accused persons be remanded for a fresh trial before a fresh jury.

[7] This jury is, therefore, discharged. I direct that there be a new trial of the accused persons with a new jury.

Civil Appln. arising out of Federal Court Appeal No. 18 of 1949, D/ 1-3-1950, Civil P. C. (1908) O. 45, R. 7 (1) - Supreme Court Rules (1950), O 12, R. 3 -Power to accept security other than cash or Government securities.

The High Court has power to accept security in immovable property instead of cash or Government securities, if that is tendered in time permitted by O. 45, R. 7 and if it is an order which the justice of the case requires, though no application was made to the Court for permission to deposit such security in accordance with the proviso to O. 45, R. 7 (1).

Annotation: ('44-Com.)Civil P. C. O. 45 R.7, N.4, 6, Nirmal Chandra Chakravarty and Kshetra Mohan Chaterjee -for Appellants.

Benoy Behari Sen -for Respondents.

Harries C. J .- This is a somewhat unusual application. The petitioners were given leave to appeal to the Federal Court and the last day for depositing the security required by O. 45, R. 7, Civil P. C was 28th February 1950. On 27th February 1950, the proposed appellants security in immovable property tendered which they value at over Rs. 20,000. This security was tendered in this Court within time and the question arises whether this Court can accept that security in lieu of cash or Government securities. Order 45, R. 7, of the Code provides;

"Where the certificate is granted, the applicant shall, within ninety days or such further period, not exceeding sixty days, as the Court may upon cause shown allow from the date of the decree complained of, or within six weeks from the date of the grant of the certificate, whichever is the later date,-

(a) furnish security in cash or in Government securities for the costs of the respondent, and

(b) deposit the amount required to defray the expense of translating transcribing, indexing and transmitting to His Majesty in Council a correct copy of the whole record of the sait

Provided that the Court at the time of granting the certificate may, after hearing any opposite party who appears, order on the ground of special hardship that some other form of security may be furnished:

Provided further that no adjournment shall be granted to an opposite party to contest the nature of such security "

[2] It is to be observed that the amount required to defray the expenses of translating and forwarding the record to 'Delhi has been deposited in cash and .the only question is whether security in immovable property can be accepted in lieu of Rs. 4,000 in cash or in Government securities.

[3] There can be no question that the propos. ed appellants could have asked for such an order when they obtained leave to appeal. The proviso to sub-r. (1) of R. 7, expressly permits the Court to allow such an application. How. ever, no application was made at the time of granting the certificate for leave to appeal and the question arises whether it can be made now.

[4] I do not think that this is a case where the proposed appellants ask for an extension of time. It is true that time has elapsed, but as I have already said, this security was tendered within time and the only question that we have to decide is whether or not the Court has power to accept security in immovable property instead of cash or Government securities. I may say that learned Advocate for the proposed appellants informed this Bench on 27th February that he had tendered security in immovable property and asked the Bench then to decide the matter. But we could not do so and adjourned the matter to today for decision. The application must therefore be treated as having been made to this Court within time.

[5] We must now consider whether the Court has power to accept security in immovable property, though no application was made to the Court for permission to deposit such security in accordance with the proviso to O. 45, R.7(i).

[6] The Privy Council had drafted certain rules lelating to orders which this Court could make when the provisions of O. 45, R. 7 had not been complied with. These rules have now been adopted by the Supreme Court. The Privy Council rule was R. 9, of the Privy Council Rules dated 9th February 1920. The rule was in these terms:

"Where an appellant, having obtained a certificate for the admission of an appeal falls to furnish the security or make the deposit required (or apply with due diligence to the Court for an order admitting the appeal), the Court may, on its own motion or on an application in that behalf made by the respondent cancel the certificate for the admission of the appeal and may give such directions as to the cost of the appeal and the security entered into by the appellant as the Court shall think fit, or make such further or other order in the premises as, in the opinion of the Court, the justice of the case requires."

[7] This rule has been adopted by the Sup. reme Court and appears as B. 8 of O. 12 of the Supreme Court Rules, 1950.

[8]. This Court has uniformly held that B. 9, Privy Council Rules of 1920 did not give this Court a right to extend the time to make a deposit and that if deposit was not made as provided by O. 45, R. 7, the Court was bound to cancel the certificate. Other Courts have taken a different view.

[9] This Court however has never been called upon, as far as I can see, to consider whether or not the Court can accept security other than money or Government securities, especially if that security is tendered within the period allowed by O. 45, B. 7. The Bombay High Court has clearly held that a Court can accede to an application to allow a change in the form of security though the time for making the deposit and for furnishing the security has elap. sed. The matter was considered in the case of Revanshidaya Sangava v. Gudnaya Ningava, A. I. R. (18) 1931 Bom. 278: (192 I. O. 488) in which it was held that notwithstanding the proviso to B. 7, O. 45, the Rule 9 prescribed by the Privy Council prevails under S. 112 and the High Court has jurisdiction not only to extend the time for making the deposit and for furnishing the security but also to change the form of security in a fit case.

[10] It will be impossible having regard to the authorities of this Court for this Bench to hold that we could extend the time for making the deposit, but I do not think that the authorities of this Court touch the question whether we could allow a different security, particularly if that was tendered within the time permitted in O. 45, R. 7. It seems to me that we can make such an order if we are of opinion that it is an order which the justice of the case requires.

[11] The proposed appellants are members of a well-known family owning large zemindary properties in East Bengal. The proposed appellants will take their father's property if they take it at all under the terms of a will made by their father. It appears that disputes have arisen and a learned Judge of this Court has appointed the Administrator General of West Bengal as trustee and executor de bones non of the estate of the late father of the proposed appellants and at the moment the proposed appellants are only receiving a sum of Rs. 2500 each for maintenance. Learned advocate informs us and we have no reason to disbelieve this statement that the Administrator General is finding it extremely difficult to pay the maintenance. The income must come out of this zemindary property, mainly out of the zemindary property in East Bengal and it is notorious that Zemindars residing in India find it practically impossible to trealise the rents of their property in Pakistan. That being so, it appears to me that the proposed appellants are in very serious difficulty about providing the security in cash or in Government securities. Fortunately, however, one of them owns house property in Uttarpara outside Calcutta. It was bought in 1988 for Bs. 8,000 and it is certainly worth three or four times that sum now as the yalus of property has increased enormously in the industrial suburbs of Calcutta. It seems to me that this is a case where the justice of the case demands that we should accept some security other than cash or Government securities. Owing to partition and the state of feeling between the two countries, for which the proposed appellants are in no way responsible, they find themselves in serious difficulties with regard to cash. They can provide ample security in immovable property and I think we should accept that as security deposited within the period allowed by 0. 45, R. 7, Civil P. C.

has held that R. 9, Privy Council Rules, does not permit the Court to extend the time it cannot be held to permit the Court to change the form of security. It appears to me that the authorities of this Court deal only with the extension of time and where the justice of the case demands that some other form of security should be accepted, I think this Court has jurisdiction to do it. If security in immovable property be not accepted in this case very grievous injustice might be done to the proposed appellants for no fault of their own.

[13] In the result therefore we hold that the security in immovable property deposited must be accepted subject to the learned Registrar of the Appellate Side of this Court satisfying himself as to the title.

(14) The proposed appellants have given an undertaking that they will again within sixmonths deposit four thousand rupees in cash or Government securities in place of the immovable property now deposited as security. If that is done the immovable property given as security will be released. If that is not done, liberty is given to the proposed respondents to apply for further orders.

[15] The costs of this application will be costin the appeal, hearing-fee being assessed two goldmohurs.

Oivil Rule No. 1927 of 1949, D/- 7-3-1950, against order of Munsif, 1st Court, Alipore, D/- 12-9-1949.

(a) Tenancy Laws—Calcutta Thica Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1949), S. 28—Order under—Appeal.

The power given under S. 28 is a special and extraordinary statutory power given by the statute and an appeal against an order under the section would only lie if special provisions were given by the Act for an. appeal creating a power. [Para 8]: (b) Tenancy Laws—Calcutta Thica Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1949), Ss. 28 and 31— Pre-Act consent decree—If can be rescinded.

It cannot be said, in view of the provisions of S. 31, that a consent decree, even if in some points it is not in conformity with the Act, is not in a broader sense in conformity with the Act, in the view that pre-Act contracts may exist having the effect of barring the provisions of the Act.

[Para 6]

Where in a suit in ejectment a consent decree was passed before the Act came into force on the grounds that proper notice giving at least 15 days' notice had been given to the tenant and that there were arrears of rent and there was no agreement by the tenant to overlook the fact that full one month's notice had not been given to him as required by S. 4 of the Act as there was no such requirement of notice before the Act was passed:

Held, that the consent decree could not be rescinded.
[Paras 7 and 8]

Sarat Chandra Jana-for Petitioner.

Amaresh Chandra Roy-for Opposite Party.

Order. — This is a Rule against an order of the Munsif, 1st Court, Alipore purporting to be under S. 28, Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949, rescinding a compromise decree for ejectment made in the suit before him on 15th July 1948. The petitioner here, as plaintiff, brought a suit on 9th April 1948, for ejectment of the opposite party alleging that five months' rent was due and also that notice under S. 106, T. P. Act, had been served requiring the defendant to vacate on the expiry of the month of October 1947. It may be noted that in his petition the petitioner alleges that the tenant was in occupation on two leases which expired with the month of October, 1947 and that the notice in question was merely issued out of abundant caution. No reference to the fact of the leases, however, was made in the original suit. The suit was compromised and a decree passed in accordance with the terms thereof. These were, briefly: The plaintiff was to get a decree for ejectment with costs and also a decree for Rs. 125 on account of arrears of rent and Rs. 40 as damages, but the defendant was given an option to remain on the land until the 15th october and then give up peaceful possession by removing some of the structures. For the remainder the plaintiff was to pay Rs. 500. Further, if the tenant vacated in accordance with the terms he was to get an extra Rs. 250 as compensation and then the decree was to have no effect. The decretal amount for arrears of rent, damages and costs was to be deemed to be fully satisfied. If the terms were not complied with, the decree was to remain in full force and effect. The tenant did not vacate and comply with the terms of the contract although the plaintiff deposited Rs. 750 in Court. On 28th February 1949, the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act came into force and thereafter the tenant made an application under S. 28 thereof and the Munsif has allowed the application and rescinded the decree. [2] The Munsif had power under S. 28 of the Act to rescind the decree if he was

"of opinion that the decree or order was not in conformity with any provision of this Act other than sub-s. (1) of S. 5 or S. 27."

The Munsif has interpreted this to mean that he is to treat the suit as though wholly governed by the provisions of the Act although the Act was not in force either at the time of institution of the suit or at the time of the decree. He has held that although strictly speaking the decree could not be said to have been made on the "ground" of existence of arrears of rent, a ground which, in S. 3 (1) of the Act, has been now made one of the grounds for eviction, nevertheless, as there was a claim for arrears and a decree for arrears, he thought that the decree was, even on his interpretation, in this respect in conformity with the provisions of the Act. He has however held that it is not in conformity with the provisions of the Act because the notice given, as appears from the record, was not in accordance with the provisions of S. 4 of the Act which requires at least one month's notice in writing expiring with the end of the month of the tenancy. A notice was sent by ordinary post on 80th September and there was a registered notice, the receipt whereof shows that the notice was refused on 2nd October. Without going into the question further the Munsif has assumed that this shows that at least one month's notice was not in fact given.

[3] A preliminary point was taken against this application in revision on the ground that the order of the Munsif under S. 28 rescinding the decree was itself a decree and was therefore appealable to the District Judge. In my opinion the contention is not sound. The power given under S. 28 is a special and extraordinary statutory power given by the statute and an appeal would only lie, in my opinion, if special provisions were given by the Act for an appeal creating a power.

[4] Many points were canvassed before me which I do not think it necessary to discuss. In my opinion, the special feature of this case is that the decree in question was a consent decree and although S. 31 of the Act specially provides that nothing in any contract between a landlord and a Thika tenant after the commencement of the Act shall take away or limit the rights of the tenant, by implication there is no bar in the case of a contract made, as in the case of this consent decree, prior to the commencement of the Act.

[5] In a proper case, it will be necessary to consider what exact difference was intended by the Legislature between the provisions of S. 28, which deals with rescinding pre-Act decrees which had not been executed, and S. 29, which deals with pending suits and preceedings in execution (necessarily of pre-Act decrees). The latter enjoins the controller on transfer of the pending case,

"to deal with it in accordance with the provisions of this Act as if this Act had been in operation on the date of institution of the suit or proceeding."

Section 23 also specifically makes a provision excluding the operation of S. 4 (requiring notice) whereas no such exclusion is made in S. 23. On the other hand S. 23 excludes sub-3. (1) of S. 5, (which requires proceedings in ejectment to be instituted before the Controller) whereas S. 29 makes no such exclusion. Section 23 again excludes S. 27 which deals with appeal, review and execution. How this section could ever have been thought to have had any bearing on any question of rescinding a pre-Act decree is beyond my comprehension, but the fact that these exceptions were inserted in S. 28 will in due course have to be considered in trying to interpret exactly what S. 28 means.

[6] In any view of S. 29, I cannot see how it can be said, in view of the provisions of S. 31, that a consent decree, even if in some points it is not in conformity with the Act, is not in a broader sense in conformity with the Act in the view that pre-Act contracts may exist having the effect of barring the provisions of the Act.

[7] The question of whether a consent decree could be set aside under S. 9B (3), Calcutta House Rent Control Order, 1943, was considered in the case of Haji Mohammad Ekramal Haque v. Rebati Bhusan Mukher jee, 53 O. W. N. 859, in which reference was made to previous cases, some of which were dissented from. The wording of that section is of course different from the wording of either S 28 or S. 29, Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, but the view was held that the consent decree could only be set aside where either the decree or the proceedings in the suit showed that the real ground on which the landlord sought eviction was non-payment of rent by the tenant, that is to say, where the tenant had agreed to a decree being made on a ground which was specifically not a sufficient ground under the new Act If arrears had been paid up. Even applying the principle in the present case it would not operate to upset the decree passed. The decree in the case was passed on the ground that proper notice giving ht least 15 days' notice had been given to the tevant. There was also the fact, which has now become a "ground", namely, that there were arrears of rent. There was no agreement by the tenant to overlook the dant that full one month's notice had not been given to him as now required by S. 4 of the Act.

The question of one month's notice could never have been present to the minds of the parties for the simple reason that until the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act was passed there never was any such requirement of notice.

[8] Hence for both these reasons I hold that the learned Munsif was in error in his interpretation of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act and should not have rescinded the decree.

[9] It remains to mention one other point arising out of decisions in the cases of Mohammad Mateen v. Baijnath Bajoria, $4 0. W. N. 287: (85 C. L. J. 66) and Murari Mohan v. Prokash Chandra, 53 C. W. N. 610: (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Cal 580), where it has been held that before a tenant can claim any of the benefits of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, he is required to show that he is a thika tenant within the meaning of S. 2 (5) of the Act which requires him to show that he holds

"ander the system commonly known as 'Thika' 'Thika Masik Utbandi', 'Thika Masik' 'Thika Bastu' or any other like system."

The learned Munsif has simply assumed without further investigation that the defendant was such a tenant. It was suggested in argument before me that the use of the word "system" in S. 3 (iv) shows that the wording as used in the Act has a somewhat colourless connotation and that too much stress has been laid in the cases cited on the use of the word in the definition of thika tenant. The practical difficulty seems to be that nobody but the drafts. man apparently knows of any real 'system' and therefore it is a matter of some practical difficulty for any thika tenant commonly understood as such, to show that he is a thika tenant with. in the meaning of the definition It is true that on the other side of the picture, unless some distinction is made, then all monthly tenants of many different kinds of premises which nobody would think of describing as "thika" tenants may bring themselves under the provisions of the Act, provided they put up a suitable shed or two on some open space attached to the premises. These are matters for the Legislature. I see no reason to differ from the view expressed in the cases cited, so that even had I been disposed on other grounds to a'low this Rule, it would have been necessary to have sent the case back for the learned Munsif to see if this particular thika tenant could succeed in showing that he belong. ed to that apparently rare (if at all existent) variety defined in S. 2 (5) of the Act.

[10] The result is that this Rule is made absolute. The order of the learned Munsif rescinding the decree is set aside. The case will go back to him for disposal in accordance with the provisions of S. 28, namely, by transferring it to the Order. — This Rule raises the question whether the Court, in ordering delivery of possession under O. 21, R. 95, Civil P. O. can order removal of the huts standing on the land, where the auction-purchaser, who asked for delivery of possession, had purchased the land but had not purchased the huts.

[2] The words of O. 21, R. 95 make provision for removing any person who refuses to vacate the property of which possession is to be given. Specific provision has not, however, been made therein for removal of any structures.

(3) Reliance is placed by Mr. Bakshi, on behalf of the petitioner, on the observations of Rankin O. J. in the case of The Government of Bengal v. Alimaddin, 57 C. L. J. 41 : (A. I. R (20) 1933 Cal. 469: 34 Cr. L J. 826), which though a criminal case, did raise this question of the duties of the Court's officers acting under a writ under O. 21, R. 95, Civil P. C. The question which arose there was whether the accused persons had any right of private defence against the act of the officer in demolishing the huts. The Nazir was cent there to execute a writ under O. 21, R. 95. The learned trial Magistrate had held that the Nazir was not entitled to demolish the structures and so the plea of private defence was available to the accused persons. In considering this question, Rankin C. J. said that it cannot be said for a moment that because the ordinary writ under O. 21, R. 95, Civil P. C., does not particularly mention delivery of huts, or removal of huts, the huts cannot be removed. His Lordship proceeded to observe:

"The auction-purchaser is entitled to get the property without the property being burdened with those huts. As a part of delivering possession, the taking down of those huts does not appear to have done with any disregard to any right of the judgment debtors which they had under the proper procedure."

[4] Even though this decision was in a criminal case, I have no doubt in my mind that this is a clear and good authority for holding that O. 21, R. 95, Civil P. C., does entitle the auction purchaser to get the property without its being burdened with those huts and that as a part of delivering possession the Court's officer can take down those huts provided he does it with due regard to the right of the judgment-debtor.

[5] Against this, reliance was placed by the learned advocate for the opposite parties on two decisions—one in the case of Radha Gobind v. Brijendro Coomar, 18 W. R. 527, and the other, a more recent decision, in the case of Bir Bikram Kishore v. Raj Kumar Pal, 38 C. W. N.

[6] In the first case, the plaintiff had obtained a decree in a suit for possession and the question arose whether in executing a decree for khas possession, the executing Court could direct demolition of the building situated on the land. As a result of an agreement between the parties, the actual order passed was that the defendant was allowed two months' time "within which, if he so pleases, he may vacate the land and carry away the material of any buildings thereon," On the question of law, whether the executing Court has a right to direct demolition the opinion was expressed thus:

"In our opinion, it is hardly within the province of the Court executing a decree to direct that the building should be pulled down; that is a matter for the decreeholder to consider after he has obtained possession. Any opposition or resistance for removing out of the way by proceedings under S. 223, it will remain open to do what he thinks proper in the matter."

[7] It is to be noticed that in this case as there was an agreement between the parties the actual decision given was not based on this expression of opinion. It is further to be noticed as already indicated, that this was a decree for khas possession and the decree had not mentioned anything as regards whether the huts should be removed or not.

[8] In the latter case, the head note runs

"When there are certain structures on land purchased in execution of a decree, such structures not being covered by the sale, there can be no demolition of the structures for the purposes of delivery of possession under O. 21, R. 95 of the Code which only contemplates removal of persons refusing to vacate the purchased properties, i. e. in the present case the land.

The possession which the Court will give will be mere vacant possession but will not be concerned with any act of demolition. Any further action which the purchaser will take will be his own act and must be such as the law will allow."

[9] From the judgment of the Court, however, it appears that the decision was not in as wide a language as indicated in the head-note. In this case the appellant had prayed for delivery of possession by demolition of certain pucca structures. The decision of the Court was that this prayer for demolition of the pucca structures cannot be allowed and after discussing the words of O. 21, B. 35 and O. 21, R. 95, their Lordships proceeded to remark:

"Nowhere is it said in the law that the demolition of a pucca structure which is on the land covered by a decree or by a purchase made in execution of a decree is necessary in order to make the possession delivered effective and complete as actual or khas possession. The prayer for demolition of the structure has, therefore,

[10] Thereafter the Court proceeded to mention the judgment of Rankin C. J., in the case of the Government of Bengal v. Alimaddin, 57 C. L. J. 41: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 469: 34 Cr. L. J. 826), as mentioned above, and also the case of Radha Gobind v. Brijendro Coomar, 18 W. R. 527, and said that the view they were taking found support in the Court's decision in the above Weekly Reporter case.

[11] I am unable to see any observation in this judgment on the question indicating that the observations of Rankin C. J., in the case referred to above were incorrect in law. There is just a statement that "the observations were not pronounced as a decision on any contention to that effect." As I have already pointed out, however, these observations were directly a decision on the claim of the right of private defence which was raised on behalf of the accused.

[12] The position, therefore, is that the decision of the Court in the case of Bir Bikram Kishore v. Raj Kumar Pal, 38 C. W. N. 1051: (A. I. B. (21) 1934 Cal. 751) was on the question of demolition of a pucca structure and as I have already pointed out in dealing with the question the Court, at least in two parts of its judgment, laid stress on the word "pucca". The decision of Rankin C. J. was as regards kutche huts. In the present case, the structures on the land are admittedly kutchs. On consideration of all these circumstances, I have no hesitation in respectfully following the view of law which was laid down by Rankin C. J., in the case of the Government of Bengal v. Alimaddin, 57 O.L.J. 41 : (A.I.R. (20) 1988 Cal. 469 : 84 Or, L.J. 826).

tioner will obtain delivery of possession of the land after demolition of the buts, if necessary in case the opposite parties refuse to remove the huts within a reasonable time. The opposite parties are allowed time till 1st October 1949, for removing the huts. If that is not done, the Court will direct removal by the Court's Officers who may be entrusted to give delivery of possession under O. 21, B. 95, Civil P. C. The Court will not direct any delivery of possession to be made before 1st October 1949. If before that date, the opposite parties do not vacate the land, the Court should, in directing delivery of possession under o. 21, R. 95, Civil P. O., pass such orders as may be necessary for removing all persons from the property and also for demolishing the hats.

[14] I make no order as to costs.

D.B.R. Order accordingly.

Apurbadhan Mukher jee -tor Appellants.

Paresh Nath Mukher jee -tor Respondent.

Guha J.— This appeal by the defendants arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent in respect of a dar-patni jama. By a subsequent amendment of the plaint, the plaintiff prayed for a declaration of a charge upon the defendant's one-sixth share in the superior patnin terms of a Jaminnama for securing the payment of the dar-patni rent.

[2] The facts which are not in dispute are briefly as follows:

[3] The father of the defendants took settlement of one-sixth share of the patni of the plaintiff in dar patni right upon a potta executed in 1326 B.S. In the said patni the defendants' father had also one-third share and on the same date as the date of the dar-patni potta he executed a jaminnama by which he purported to create a charge upon his one-sixth share in the patni for rent of the dar-patni in dispute. By his amendment of the plaint, the plaintiff wanted to make one-sixth share of the defendants in the patni liable for his dues in respect of the present suit.

[4] The defence inter alia was that the provisions of S. 168-A, Bengal Tenancy Act, stood in the way of the plaintiff in enforcing the contract entered into between the parties upon the jaminnama.

[5] The trial Court decreed the suit in part upon the finding that the plaintiff would get a decree for the amount claimed without any charge upon the patni interest of the defendants for the realisation of the dues and that the plaintiff would be entitled to execute the decree against the defaulting tenure only. Against this decision the plaintiff preferred an appeal before the District Judge of Howrah. This appeal was successful. The decision of the trial Court was modified and the plaintiff's suit was decreed in full. In the opinion of the Court of appeal below, S. 168-A, Bengal Tenancy Act, was not a bar to the enforcement of the charge provided for in the jaminnama. Against this decision the de. fendants have preferred this appeal.

[6] It has been contended before us by Mr. A. D. Mukherji on behalf of the appellants that upon a proper construction of the jaminnama it did not create a charge and we have been taken in this connection through the various provisions of the jaminnama. As regards this contention, it may be observed at the outset that in the Courts below it was conceded on behalf of the defendants that the jaminnama did create a charge. Be that as it may, upon considering the terms of the document carefully we have reached the conclusion that a charge was created by the jaminnama. The terms of the document come within the clear words of S. 100, T. P. Act. It is clear from the recitals of the document that a certain share of the defendant's patni interest was made security for the payment of money to the plaintiff in respect of the darpatni rent. The contract accordingly amounted to a charge, as has been found by the Courts below. As the contract amounted to a charge, no attachment would be necessary in execution of the decree, as pointed out by the Court of appeal below. No attachment of the defendants' patni interest will be necessary in execution of a decree with declaration of a charge, if any such decree is passed in favour of the plaintiff.

[7] The next point for consideration is whether in these circumstances S. 1684, Bengal Tenancy Act, stands in the way of the plaintiff. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that S. 168A stands as a bar in way of the the plaintiff in enforcing the contract upon the jaminnama. Section 168-A (1) (a) lays down that notwith. standing anything contained in any contract a decree for arrears of rent due in respect of a tenure or holding, whether having the effect of a rent decree or money decree, shall not be executed by the attachment and sale of any property other than the entire tenure or holding to which the decree relates. In the present case, as has been observed before, no attachment of the defendants' patni interest will be necessary in execution of the decree obtained by the plaintiff with declaration of a charge. Now the question is whether in these circumstances S. 168-A (1) (a) can defeat the right of the plaintiff. In our opinion the answer should be in the negative. As pointed out in the case of Pratul Chandra v. Naresh Chandra, 50 C. W. N. 655: (A. I. R. (33) 1946 Cal. 498) as S. 168-A is an encroachment on the rights which the landlord decree-holder had under the ordinary law the ambit of that section ought not to be extended beyond what is warranted by its actual language. In S. 168-A (1) (a) the words used are attachment and sale". In the present case there will be no attachment and on a plain reading of the section, therefore, it would appear that it will not stand in the way of the plaintiff. Mr. A. D. Mukherjee on behalf of the appellants has, however, drawn our attention to certain observations of Mukherjea J. in the case of Anil Kumar v. Roy Biman Behari, 48 O. W. N. 344: (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 240). He has laid particular stress upon the following passage in the judgment of Mukherjea J:

"The intention of the Legislature was obviously to prevent the sale of any property belonging to the judgment-debtor other than the tenure in execution of a rent decree. An attachment comes within the prohibition of the section only so far as it is a necessary step to the sale of the property."

Relying upon this passage Mr. Mukerjee contends that the primary intention of the Legis. lature in enacting S. 163-A being to prevent the sale of any property of the judgment-debtor other than the tenure, in the present case as well, which is one of sale without attachment of the defendants' paini interest, S. 163-A will be applicable. This contention appears to us to be without much substance. In the passage in question upon which such strong reliance has been placed by Mr. A. D. Mukherjee, it appears that the word "sale" was used in a somewhat broad sense, as certain other passages of the judgment will show. It is significant that in S. 168-A the relevant words are "attachment and sale" and not "attachment or sale." As pointed out in the case in Anil Kumar v. Ray Biman Behari, 48 C. W. N. 344: (A. I. B. (31) 1944 Cal. 240) referred to above, the words have been taken verbatim from S. 51 (b), Civil P. C., the latter part of the clause, namely, "by sale without attachment of any property" being not reproduced in S. 168-A, Bengal Tenancy Act. The omission of those words "by sale without attachment of any property" is significant and it seemed to imply that it is only that mode of execution, namely, by attachment and sale, which is affected by S. 168-A, Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 168-A has to be construed strictly and upon such strict construction the present case does not, in our opinion, come within the mischief of that section. That being so, S. 168-A cannot stand as a bar in the way of the plaintiff in enforcing the contract upon the jaminnama.

[8] In the result, the decision of the Court of appeal below is upheld and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

[9] The decree, however, will be drawn up by the Court below according to Form No. 5-A of Appendix D, Civil P. C., so far as is practicable.

Guha J. — This rule at the instance of judgment-debtors is directed against certain orders passed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Asansol in Title Execution Case No. 43 of 1948 arising out of Money Suit No. 30 of 1944 brought by the plaintiff opposite party for recovery of Rs. 29,995-10.6 and for certain other reliefs. That suit was decreed by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge of Asansol in part for Rs. 26,666-8-3 with proportionate costs and also for half the share of the profits of the "Master Engineering Concern" a partnership business. An appeal (appeal from Original Decree No. 334 of 1947) against that decree preferred by the present petitioners is pending in this Court. After the filing of that appeal, the judg. ment-debtors-petitioners filed an application in this Court for stay of the execution of the decree on the grounds inter alia that the plaintiffopposite party was in embarrassed circumstances and an order was passed on 27th February 1948, by this Court permitting the opposite party to withdraw the money deposited in the lower Court provided that he furnished security to the satisfaction of that Court. Pursuant to that order the opposite party offered to give personal security to the extent of Rs. 29,512-14-3 and this was accepted by the learned Subordinate Judge. The judgment debtors were dissatisfied with that order of the learned Subordinate Judge, their contention being that the order of this Court on 27th February 1948, meant security in immovable property and not personal security and they moved this Court once again (Civil Rule No. 809/48). The rule was made absolute by this Court on 10th May 1949 on the following term amongst others:

"If the decree-holder opposite party wishes to withdraw the money deposited in Court, he may be allowed to do so on furnishing security in immovable property to the satisfaction of the Court below."

Thereafter the opposite party submitted a draft joint security bond in the lower Court along with one Jagadish Chandra Mukherjee in purported compliance with the above mentioned order of this Court and the Sheristadar was directed to check the bond and report to the lower Court. On 2nd June 1949 the judgment debtors filed a petition before the lower Court raising various objections to the acceptance of the security bond offered by the decree-holder, one of the objections being that the value of the properties offered as security did not exceed Rs. 5,000. The Sheristadar submitted a report to the Court stating that the sureties were "quite solvent and fit to stand as such for Rs. 80,000 and recommending that the draft security bond might be accepted.".

Thereupon the learned Subordinate Judge took up the security matter for hearing on 11th June 1949 and overruled most of the objections of the judgment-debtors. It is necessary for our present purposes to quote one passage from the order (dated 11th June 1919) of the learned Judge. It runs as follows:

"Secondly, it is contended that properties are insufficinet. The Sheristadar tested the properties and he found that they are valued at about Rs. 30,000 which are sufficient for the present purpose."

Ultimately the draft bond was approved by the learned Judge and the decree-holder was directed to get it written on duly stamped paper and registered (vide Order No. 28 dated 17th June 1949).

[2] It is against the orders referred to above viz., Order No. 24 dated 11th June 1949 and Order No. 28 dated 17th June 1949 that the present rule has been obtained by the judgment. debtors. It has been contended on their behalf that the learned Judge did not consider properly the objections urged on their behalf and that he has failed to exercise his jurisdiction properly by simply accepting the Sherietadar's report about the valuation of the properties offered as security. On going through the records we are of opinion that the grievance of the petitioners is not without substance. Determination of the sufficiency or otherwise of security offered by the parties is a judicial act and such act has to be performed judicially. Mere acceptance of the report of a ministerial officer on the point without applying the judicial mind to the consideration of the various factors bearing on it cannot be said to be a proper or adequate performance of a judicial act. The judgment. debtors had in their petition dated 2nd June 1949 before the lower Court raised various objections to the acceptance of the security bond. Reference may, in this connection, be made specially to Paras. 4, 5, 6 and 7 of that petition. There is some reference to these objections in the Sheristadar's report dated 30th May 1949. These objections were elaborated further in Paras. 16 and 19 of the revision petition filed in this Court on 22nd June 1949. The order of the learned Judge makes it abundantly clear that he did not deal with these objections in a manner which can be said to be adequate or proper and as such we are unable to uphold that order.

[3] In the result, this rule is made absolute, the orders in question are set aside and the case is remitted to the lower Court. The learned Judge is directed to come to a proper decision on the question of the adequacy or otherwise of the security offered by the decree-holder. His attention is drawn specially to Paras. 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the objection petition filed by the judgment-debtors on 2nd June 1949 as also to Paras. 16 and 19 of the revision petition filed in this Court on 22nd June 1949. The parties should be given reasonable opportunity to adduce such evidence, oral or documentary as they desire.

[4] There will be no costs of this rule. It is desirable that the security matter should be disposed of as speedily as possible.

Harries C. J.—This is an application for revision of an order made by a learned Sub-ordinate Judge refusing to allow certain signatures to be examined by an expert and further refusing to summon the expert to give evidence at the cost of the petitioner.

[2] The plaintiff desired that the genuineness of certain signatures should be considered and he applied that an expert should be summoned by the Court to examine the signatures and report thereon. This petition was refused as it was a belated one.

[3] The plaintiff then applied that a summons should be served by the Court on a Mr. Bennet of Calcutta who is a hand-writing expert to appear in Court and give evidence as to the genuine. ness or not of the signature or signatures in question. The plaintiff asked for the summons to be issued at his expense; but the Court refused to issue the summons on this witness because the application was made at such a late stage:

[4] The power of a Court to issue summonses to witnesses to attend to give evidence is dealt with in O. 16, R. 1. The rule is as follows:

"At any time after the suit is instituted, the parties may obtain, on application to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf, summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents."

[5] It has been held that a party is entitled as of right to a summons so long as the application is made after the institution of the suit and before it is decided. It has further been held that it does not matter that the application is made at a late stage of the proceedings. The Court must grant the application though it need not adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witness summoned.

[6] In the case of Krishna Churn v. Protab Chunder, 7 Oal, 560, it was held by a Bench of this Court that in all cases in which parties apply for a summons to compel the attendance of witnesses, or a summons to produce documents, or apply to have a document sent for under S. 197, Civil P. C., the Court ought not to refuse such application, merely because in its opinion the witnesses cannot be present, or the documents cannot be produced, before the termination of the trial.

[7] In Bhagwat Das v. Devi Din, 16 ALL. 218: (1894 A. W. N. 45), a Banch came to the same conclusion. In that case they held that where a person making an application to a civil Court for witnesses to be summoned has negligently or with intention to delay the hearing postponed the making of his application for a summons until a time when it would be impossible to obtain the attendance of the witnesses at the hearing, the Court might properly refuse to adjourn the hearing, but nevertheless it would be the duty of the Court to order the summons asked for to issue.

[8] From these authorities it is clear that the Court below should have issued the summons though it was not bound to adjourn the date of the hearing which had been fixed for 25th April 1949. Unfortunately, however, the Court refused to issue the summons.

[9] In the result, therefore, this petition must be allowed and the order of the learned Judge set aside. The records must be returned forthwith to the lower Court and the parties should attend before that Court on Wednesday, 8th February 1950, when the learned Subordinate Judge should issue the summons asked for by the plaintiff and fix a date for hearing.

[10] The rule is made absolute in these terms with costs.

[11] Let the counter affidavit filed in Court to day be kept on the record.

Chunder J .- This is an appeal against the conviction and sentence of the appellant under S. 395, Penal Code. Briefly, the fasts are that there was a decoity in the house of the complainant Jiten. There were three other inmates in the house, of them P. W. 2 is said to have fainted and P.W. Nos. 3:and 4 were two ladies. P.W. Nos. 6, 7 and 8 are three neighbours who came the next morning some hours later.

[2] As the learned Magistrate's order sheet seems to show, he considered that the public prosecutor had good reason to think that P. Ws. Nos. 6, 7 and 8 will not be witnesses of truth, but as the defence wanted them to be tendered for cross-examination, he directed that they should be so tendered, purporting to follow a decision of this Court, and at the same time when calling upon the public prosecutor to do so he gave him an opportunity to cross-examine these witnesses later.

[3] Mr. Mukherjee, appearing for the defence, has rightly pointed out that the learned Magis. trate could have saved himself all the trouble and the complication he had later created in his charge if he had excluded all this evidence. It is clear that his charge as to how the evidence of hostile witnesses should be valued is not at all happy. What the learned Judge did not notice was that the evidence of these witnesses was really not relevant. To be evidence of corroborative value "It must be at or about the time of the occurrence" which means that the evidence should be by persons who had heard the occurrence before there was sufficient time for concoction. That is the criterion. Ther evidence of witnesses who came several hours after the occurrence may be very interesting as village gossip, but is not ordinarily proper evidence over which a Court should spend its time. Such evidence has ordinarily got to be excluded.

[4] In the re-trial we are going to order, the learned Judge will exclude the evidence of all these three witnesses. Mr. Mukherjee has right. ly controverted about the hopeless way in which the learned Judge has dealt with the evidence of identification and, if we may add, really the whole case in his charge. What he has done is he has begun telling the jury in sentences after sentences of what the Public Prosecutor had said and then after exhausting their patience he must have exasperated them by repeating to them in a succession of sentences of what the learned pleader for the defence had said and then left the jury without any direction as to what the learned Judge has to say. As a charge, the charge is hopeless and could not under any possible circumstances have given any belp to the jury in deciding the case. It is, therefore, necessary that the case should be retried and in view of this we refrain from passing any opinion whatsoever on the merits of the case, excepting to point out that there should be some explanation for the nonexamination of Lakshmi Narayan who appears to have been examined by the committing Magistrate.

[5] The conviction and sentence of the appellant are set aside and the case is remanded for retrial by some other Judge selected by the Sessions Judge.

[6] The appellant will continue in the same bail.

Lahiri J.—This is an appeal by the unsuccessful plaintiff in a suit for recovery of damages and mesne profits for mischief and wrong done to his land by the defendants. The plaintiff's case in the plaint is that under defendant 3, Apcar Collieries Limited, who are the taluquars of mouza Sitarampur, the plaintiff is an occupancy raiyat in respect of 14 plots of land enumerated in the plaint. Defendant 3 gave a mining lease of the under-ground rights to defendant 2, New Birbhum Coal Company Limited and defendant 2 in its turn granted a sub-lease in favour of defendant 1 Pare Dishargarh Colliery Company. The plaintiff's case is that the defendants for the purpose of carrying on their colliery work erected a bungalow on one of the plots, laid tram lines on other plots, for the purpose of carrying coal and made roads by throwing cinders. The plaintiff further alleges that the defendants carried on their mining operations in such a way as to cause subsidence of one of the plots. The plaintiff filled up the subsidence with earth but defendant 1 opened an airshaft on that plot by removing the earth. The plaintiff accordingly claimed damages to the extent of Rs. 600 for the purpose of reconditioning the land and making the land fit for cultivation, and also a sum R3. 195 as mesne profits.

[2] The suit was contested by defendants and 2 inter alia on the allegation that the suit was barred by limitation, that the plaintiff had no title to the suit lands, and that the defendants did not encroach upon the plaintiff's land, nor rendered it unfit for cultivation, and that the defendants never agreed to pay any compensation to the plaintiff for any wrong,

[3] The learned Munsif who tried the suitfound that the plaintiff had title as an occupancy raiyat to all the plots of land enumerated in the plaint and that the acts alleged by the plaintiff were done by the defendants, but the trial Court dismissed the suit upon the finding that the acts complained of were committed beyond the period of limitation. The trial Court took the view that the Article of the Indian Limitation Act applicable to the facts of this case would be Art. 36 under which the period of limitation was two years from the date when malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance took place.

[4] On appeal by the plaintiff, the lower appellate Court has affirmed the decision of the Court of first instance upon the findings that the tram lines, pathway, bungalows and other offices were on the land since the time of the defendant and that defendant 2 made the air-shaft at least ten years ago.

[5] It is in evidence in this case that defendant 3 granted the lease to defendant 2 in the year 1893, and defendant 2 granted the sub-lease to defendant 1 in the year 1924. So upon the above mentioned findings arrived at by the Court of appeal below, it is quite clear that the wrongful acts alleged by the plaintiff took place long before the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 36.

[6] Against that decision of the lower ap. pellate Court, the present second appeal has been filed by the plaintiff and Dr. Sen Gupta appearing in support of the appeal has argued that the acts complained of by the plaintiff in the plaint come under S. 23, Limitation Act, because they are in the nature of continuing wrongs In support of this contention, De. Sen Gupta has placed before us various authorities showing what are said to be continuing wrongs within the meaning of S. 23, Limitation Act. Amongst other authorities, Dr. Sen Gupta places before us the decision of the Fall Bench of the Lahore High Court in Khair Mahammad Khan v. Mt. Jannat, 191 I. O. 42: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Lab. 359) where it has been said that in considering whether a particular act complained of constitutes a continuing wrong, it is necessary to keep in mind the distinction between an injury and the effects of that injury; where the injury complained of is complete on a certain date, there is no continuing wrong even though the damage caused by that injury might continue; if however the act is such that the injury itself is continuous, then there is a continuing wrong and the case is governed by 8. 23. This principle was also laid down by this Court in Brajendra Kishore v. Ablul Razac, 22 C. L. J. 283 at p. 259: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Cal. 751), where it has been stated that there is a real distinction between continuance of a legal injury and the continuance of the injurious effects of a legal injury.

[7] The point raised by Dr. Sen Gupta was not raised by the plaintiff in any of the Courts below, and although Dr. Sen Gupta now makes out the case that the acts complained of constituted isolated acts of trespass, they did not amount to dispossession of the plaintiff and themselves constituted a continuous legal injury, it is impossible to say in the absence of any evidence whether the acts complained of were ceally of that nature. Moreover, the lower appellate Court has found that according to the admission of the plaintiff, he has been dispossessed from the plaint lands; the plaintiff admits at p. 13 of his deposition that he recovered possession in all the plaint plots, except plot No. 100, after the institution of this suit. Upon this finding, it is difficult to hold that the acts complained of by the plaintiff did not amount to dispossession, but merely to isolated acts of trespass. In this view of the matters as the point raised by Dr. Sen Gupta is a mixed question of law and fact it cannot be decided with. out fresh evidence, and we cannot allow the appellant to raise this mixed question of law and fact for the first time in second appeal.

[8] This appeal is accordingly dismissed with. costs.

Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 112 - Motor Vehicles Rules, R. 174 (d)—Cab with defective meter produced for renewal of certificate-Producer if can be convicted for use of defective meter.

Mere production of a cab with a meter attached for renewal of a certificate of fitness does not amount to an user within the meaning of R. 174 (d). Hence where the evidence merely shows that the defective meter was produced on the cab at the time the cab was brought for renewal of the certificate, conviction for user of a defective meter cannot be substained.

Order .- This is a rule against an order of conviction under S. 112, Motor Vehicles Act, read with R. 183 (d), Motor Vehicles Rules, 1940, and sentence to pay a fine of Rs. 20, in default seven days' rigorous imprisonment. The appropriate rule is in fact not 180 (d) but 174 (d).

- [2] The facts are that the taxi B. L. T. 669 was produced before the Motor Vehicles Department. for renewal of the certificate of fitness as required by S. 38, Motor Vehicles Act. On test, the taxi meter was found to be defective, registering one anna per mile in excess. The police thereupon prosecuted the owner and the driver, The driver was acquitted and the owner has been. convicted and has moved this Court.
- [8] The driver was acquitted on the ground that it was not proved who had produced the car. an omission which surely the Magistrate himself ought to have noted and should have been remedied. However the owner now objects that he ought not to be convicted, on the evidence, for a breach of the rule which runs as follows: "No taxi-meter which is in any way defective shall be used upon a motor cab."
- [4] It seems to me that it cannot be said that mere production of a cab with a meter attached for renewal of a certificate of fitness amounts to an user within the meaning of the rule. Any owner of an old cab who may be doubtful as to whether it will really pass the test of fitness is surely entitled to take his cab to the authorities. for the certificate and it is for them to pass it. or not after test. Mere taking is not user of the.

cab or a meter as such within the meaning of the rule in my opinion.

[5] It might have been possible to found a conviction in this case on the grounds that from the nature of the circumstances, the nature of the taxi meter, the nature of the defect, the defect could not have occurred suddenly as the car drove through the gates of the Motor Vehicles Department and that the defect must have been present for sometime previous, and if evidence had been given that the car had been used as a taxi cab, shall we say, within an hour or two prior to its being brought to the department. On these facts a conviction might have been founded, but I do not think that in the circumstances in this case, the evidence merely being that the defective meter was produced on the cab at the time the cab was brought for renewal of the certificate, conviction for user of a defective meter can be sustained.

[6] The rule is accordingly made absolute. The conviction and the sentence are set aside. The fine, if paid, shall be refunded.

Amaresh Chandra Roy for Bireswar Chatterjes -for Petitioner.

Order.-This rule has been obtained by an accused person who has been convicted for having committed an offence punishable under

S. 290, Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 100, in default to undergo simple imprisonment for one month.

[2] The facts alleged against the petitioner briefly are as follows: He is the tenant in respect of certain premises in Nabalwip. In these premises live a number of young women of immoral character. Men of bad character come to the house and disturb the neighbourhood by singing obscene songs and having drunken brawls. The occupants of the premises also throw dirty rags on the road and near the premises occupied by the neighbours. The defence taken is that the petitioner is the Secretary of an institution known as the Nari O Shishu Ashram. The Society carried on philanthropic work by rescuing unfortunate women and giving them protection in the premises where it is alleged by the prosecution this public nuisance has been committed. The petitioner is the S. cretary of this Association and he lives at Calcutta. He goes to the house occasionally. He denies that there was any public nuisance committed and in any event he states that he cannot be made liable for committing any public nuisance upon the evidence adduced.

[3] The trial Magistrate convicted the petitioner and this conviction has been upheld by the Sessions Judge of Nadia. Against the order of conviction and sentence the present rule has been obtained. Learned advocate on behalf of the petitioner contends firstly that the evidence does not establish that any public nuisance has been committed and secondly that the commission of such public nuisance cannot be brought home to the petitioner inasmuch as he does not reside in the aforesaid premises but is an occasional visitor therein. Lastly, he argues that the petitioner was not properly examined in accordance with the provisions of S. 312, Criminal P. C., inasmuch as the salient points alleged against him were not brought to his notice.

[4] In my opinion all these grounds should prevail. The evidence adduced is contradictory and in my opinion does not lead to any reasonable conclusion of the commission of a public nuisance. It seems to me that the Courts below have constituted themselves not only as Courts of law but also as Courts of morals. It may be (I do not say that this is so) that in the premises some immoral acts may have been committed but although that may offend the susceptibilities of the neighbours it certainly does not constitute a nuisance. The learned Magistrate in the opening part of his judgment indicates that he has no clear idea of what a public nuisance is. He says that the allegation is that clandestine prostitution is being carried on in this house.

If the prostitution is carried on in a clandestine or hidden manner, there can be no public nuisance although persons who come to know of the immoralities committed in the house may feel their moral sense outraged. 'Public nuisance', has been defined in S. 268, Penal Code, and before any finding can be arrived at that a public nuisance has been committed the elements contained in that section must be established. Common injury, danger or annoyance mentioned in the section must be to the public at large dwelling in the vicinity and not to a particular individual. In my opinion the evidence is discrepant and the conviction cannot be based upon such evidence. Further, I would point out that the petitioner has been found guilty of a public nuisance by virtue of an illegal omission. That is the finding of the Court below. I cannot understand how the petitioner can be found guilty of any illegal omission. There is no evidence given that he has failed to do something which he was lawfully bound to do. Again, it is established from the evidence that the petitioner is not a resident of the premises but he visits it occasionally. I do not see in these circumstances how he could be found guilty of committing a public nuisance unless it is found also that he engaged the premises for such purposes as would inevitably result in a public nuisance. There is evidence to prove that the premises were engaged for a very laudable purpose. If in the absence of the petitioner there were irregularities or misconduct on the part of the occupants I cannot see how the petitioner can be found guilty.

[5] As regards the complaint that the provisions of S. 842, Criminal P. C., have not been observed I am of opinion that it is well founded. All that the petitioner was asked was this: "You have heard all the evidence. Have you anything to say?' The petitioner replied that he was not guilty. This sort of perfunctory examination does not constitute a proper examination under the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. It was not explained to the accused what the circumstances against him were. The duty of the Court in an examination under 8. 842, Oriminal P. C, is to explain to the accused the facts appearing against bim. This is very necessary in a case of the present description. The defence suggestion is that the landlord of the premises wishes to eject the petitioner and that this case has been got up by the landlord with the help of certain neighbours. In my opinion this suggestion of the defence is not without foundation.

[6] In the circumstances I set aside the order of conviction and sentence and make this rule absolute. The fine, if paid, shall be refunded.

Evidence Act (1872), S. 80—Confession of accused induced by police by torture—Recording of, by Magistrate satisfied of its voluntariness—Admissibility—Inclusion of such confession in charge to jury—Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 297, 164.

Where having regard to the evidence the Sessions Judge was of opinion that the confession of the accused was induced by torture by the police but admitted it in evidence under S. 80 as having been properly recorded by a Magistrate who had stated that he was patisfied that the confession was made voluntarily, and the Sessions Judge included this confession in his charge to the jury though he had done his best to tell them that it was worthless:

Held, that the Sessions Judge had to some extent misunderstood the effect of the provision of S. 80. His duty in the circumstances was not to leave the confession to the jury at all but to exclude it entirely from the evidence. Leaving the confession for the jury's consideration was a patent error of law. [Para 4]

8. S. Mukherjee -for Appellant. Bireswar Chatterji -for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by one Based Sheik who has been convicted of dacoity under 8. 395, Penal Code, on a majority verdict of 4 to 1 and has been sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

[2] The evidence against the accused may be briefly summarised as follows: There were two eye-witnesses who identified him; they had also previously identified him at a test identification parade. There was some evidence of association with his co-accused both before and after the occurrence and there was evidence of a confession made by the accused Based.

[3] The learned Sessions Judge has not properly dealt "with the last piece of evidence, namely, the confession. He admitted the confession as evidence on the ground that he had accepted it as admissible as having been properly recorded by a Magistrate who had stated that he was satisfied that the confession was made voluntarily. The accused made a statement alleging torture by the police to extort the confession and there was some evidence of injuries found on him which the learned Judge considered supported this contention. The learned Judge thus placed the matter before the jury:

"The confession was therefore admitted in evidence under S. 80, Evidence Act. The section is explained. As the confession was taken in accordance with law the Court shall presume it to be genuine and therefore

I admitted the document in evidence as prima facie; it looked as having been made voluntarily. But nevertheless it is for you, gentlemen of the jury, to consider the weight to be attached to it and to decide whether it is true or not and in doing so you should also consider whether it was made as a result of any torture, inducement or threat. The voluntary character of a confession is a mixed question of law and fact. You will exclude it altogether from consideration if it appears to you not to have been made voluntarily, when you consider the question in connection with the truth or otherwise of the confession. You will consider the volitional character of the confession as detached from its credibility and in deciding its truth, you can as a part of it consider whether it was voluntary. The first thing that struck me was that the Magistrate who recorded the confession did not question Based as to whether he was being ill-treated or tortured or whether anybody had offered any inducement or threat to him. So the Magistrate did not duly caution the accused before he recorded the confession. Based had made a somewhat long statement before you and it is fresh in your mind. He stated that the Investigating Sub-Inspector Moni Babu entered the lock-up with two police constables and asked him to implicate Guljar, Nirode, Kalu and Hedayet and four or five others, but he denied. Then he was abused and under the orders of Moni Babu the two police constables fisted him and assaulted him with ruler mercilesely as a result of which he sustained an injury on the upper pine of the left ear. Then he was given capsicum smoke to inhale and he was hung up with his head downwards tied by his leg to a rod. Then he consented to say whatever he was wanted to say. Then he again retracted. Then a constable pierced an iron nail incide the sole of his left foot. Then he consented to confess. On the following morning he was again given capsicum smoke to inhale and he was almost senseless and then even after he was taken to Court room, Moni Babu threatened him from outside and during the temporary absence of the Magistrate came into the Court room and exhorted him to confess just as he had been tutored. Gentlemen, you should remember that the statement of the accused is not made on oath but it is a mere statement. Nevertheless you should consider for what it is worth. It contains serious allegations against the investigating Sub-Inspector. It is very difficult for an accused person in dook to prove torture. But on a petition filed by his mother on 3rd June 1948 after her interview in the sub-jail with Based in which she complained about injuries on Based, the S'D.O. directed a medical examination and P. W. 16 Dr. Pal examined him on 3rd June 1948 and found (1) one prick mark at the inner aspect of the sole of the right foot through which a little pus came out on squeezing, (2) one little swelling mark 1/3 x 1/6° on the upper margin of the pins of the left ear, (3) one ulcerated abrasion on the inner side of the lower part of the right leg 12 above the ankle joint. The doctor also said that Based complained of pain in the back and chest. He added that the duration of the wounds were 5/6 days and so there might be caused on 28th May night. He said that injury No. 1 might be caused by a pointed weapon and others by a blunt substance. So the medical evidence corroborates the statement of the accused. Based had also pain in the chest and back. According to the Magistrate he insisted on making confession which shows that he was unable to wait in the court room. Lyons in his Jurisprudence and Modi in his Jurisprudence have both stated that capsicum smoke is a common form of torture in India and this is a great irritant. You will consider whether the pain in the chest and back were not due to the inhalation of capsicum smoke.

It is true that he did not complain of any torture before the Magistrate on 29th May 1948; nor did he make any complaint in the time of the T. I. Parade on 2nd June 1948 or to the Jail doctor before he was medically examined. But the facts in this case are telling. Based stated that he was pricked on his left foot. But the medical evidence is that there was a prick mark on his right foot. You will consider whether Based was not mistaken in making the statement.

Gentlemen, I have placed before you all the facts bearing upon the volitional nature of the confession. The confession is read out. You will consider whether it was true and in deciding its truth you will take into consideration its volitional character. Under S. 24, Evidence Act, a well founded conjecture reasonably based upon circumstances disclosed in the evidence is sufficient for you to exclude the confession because it is idle to expect the accused to prove torture, threat or inducement and in most cases it is difficult. If there is any conflict or doubt as to the manner in which the confession was obtained the accused should be given the benefit of that doubt and in the present case I have no hesitation in directing you that you should hold the confession to have been extorted by the police by severe torture and threat and in that view of the matter you should totally exclude it from your consideration. Supposing you disagree with me, which I do not think you will, it would be my duty also to say what value you will attach to a retracted confession. As against Based who made the confession and then retracted it, it should not be acted upon unless it is corroborated in material particulars, that is, unless you can hold that he has been properly identified by Subodh and Panchurani at the T. I. Parade and unless you can hold that he was seen in the locality immediately before and after the occurrence. As against his co-accused Kalu, Guljar and Hedayat, its value is nil and the word means what it says; and unless there is other evidence which can stand on its own legs the retracted confession of a co-accused should not in any way be used to support a conviction. It comes to this therefore that as against the other accused, if you cannot believe the recognition of Kaly by Subodh and of the identification of Guljar and Hedayat by Panchurani, there is an end of the matter and the accused persons must be acquitted. I have cautioned you that you should be very slow to accept the identification of Kaly by Panchurani for, if Kaly had snatched away the necklace from her neck, Sabodh would have been able to recognise him. So unless you can believe the recognition of Kaly by Subodh, he too must be acquitted."

Judge has to some extent misunderstood the effect of the provisions of S. 80, Evidence Act. It is clear that his own opinion was, having regard to all the evidence, that the confession had been induced by torture. His duty, therefore, in the circumstance was not to leave the confession to the jury but to exclude it entirely from the evidence, it is true that the learned Judge while leaving the confession to the jury for consideration, has done his best to tell them that it is worthless, but there is a patent error of law in his procedure in leaving the confession for the jury's consideration at all.

that the learned Judge himself was not satisfied with the evidence of identification as regards the present accused. The matter was complicated by the fact that the accused had a defective eye and there was also evidence that he was a man well-known in the locality. The learned Judge was clearly impressed by these facts because the complainant in the case had failed to name the present accused in the first information report although he did state therein that one of the dacoits was a man with a defective eye. The evidence is that there are two such men well-known in the locality.

(6) The only question that remains for us to consider then is whather we should order a re-trial, or deal with the matter ourselves on the evidence as it stands. If we take the latter course we should see no reason to differ from the view of the learned Judge that the evidence was in the circumstances not reliable to support the conviction. On the whole we think that the proper course in the case is not to order a re-trial.

[7] We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the accused and acquit him of the offence and direct that he be set at liberty at once.

A. C. Miller-for Plaintiffs. H. Banerjee-for Defendants.

Judgment .- This is a suit by the plaintiffs for specific performance of an agreement for sale dated 12th March 1946 in respect of premises No. 21, Madan Gopal Lane, Calcutta, and for compensation for the delay in executing the conveyance and for turning out the trespassers. The agreement is in writing signed by Rai Chand Bural, Kissen Chand Bural and Bissen Chand Bural. They are the vendors and plaintiff Rai Bahadur Soshi Bhusan Dey is the purchaser. The agreement provides that the vendors shall sell the said premises to the Rai Bahadur free from all encumbrances at a price of Rs. 45,000 and that the vendors shall within 15 days deliver all documents of title and shall at their expense make out a marketable title and cause the property to be freed from all encumbrances. The agreement also provides that the conveyance is to be executed in favour of Rai Bahadur or his nominee or nominees. The sum of Bs. 1,000 was paid as earnest money and in part. payment of the purchase price on the execution of the agreement.

[2] The plaintiffs in their plaint referred to a deed of trust dated 15th March 1939 alleged to have been executed by defendant Rai Chand Bural whereby he appointed Kissen Chand Bural and Bissen Chand Bural the other two defendants as the trustees and conveyed this property to such trustees upon trust. Rai Chand Bural was the absolute owner of the premises. The deed of trust was declared void and inoperative and not binding on the defendant Raichand Bural by decree made in suit No. 986 of 1946 of this Court made on 19th December 1946. It is alleged in the plaint that in those circumstances Rai Chand Bural is the owner of the premises and defendants 2 and 3 Kissen Chand Bural and Bissen Chand Bural are joined only as pro forma defendants and no relief is claimed against such pro forma defendants. Plaintiffs 2 and 3 are the relations and nominess of plaintiff 1 Rai Bahadur Soshi Bhusan Dey. The title was approved and the draft conveyance was also approved subject to the objections of the Attorney of Rai Chand Bural as pleaded in para. 5 of the plaint.

[3] The defendants' attorney cancelled the agreement for sale on 14th May 1947 and forfeited the earnest money. The plaintiffs contend that such cancellation and forfeiture are unjusti-

[4] The central dispute in this suit relates to the question of vacant possession. In the plaint it is alleged that one Karim Bux Mullick is a tenant of the said premises under the defendant Rai Chand Bural and that the defendant Rai Chand Bural received rents up to July 1946 from such tenant. That tenant died some time ago and that tenant's nephew one Sadek Ali Mullick was alleged to be in occupation as a tenant of the said premises but no counterfoil of any rent bills have been produced in spite of demands. There was another person by the name of Dunia Lal Das who also, it is alleged in the plaint, was in wrongful occupation of the said premises. The plaintiffs' grievance is that the defendants should have turned out these trespassers from the said premises and given over vacant possession to the plaintiffs and that the delay in completion of the sale was due to the fault of the defendants.

[5] A joint written statement has been filed by the defendants where it is admitted that Rai Chand Bural was and is the owner of the premises No. 21, Madan Gopal Lane Calcutta. It is denied the title was duly approved or that the only objection was as alleged in para. 5 of the plaint and that the plaintiffs wrongfully refused to complete the transaction. The defendants further contend that the demand of the plaintiffs for ejectment of the trespassers and for delivery of vacant possession was wrongful and unjustified. It is also denied that the plaintiffs were ready and willing to perform the said contract. The written statement also admits that Dania Lal Das has been in wrongful possession of a portion of the said premises as trespasser. The defendants justify cancellation of the agreement and forfeiture of the earnest money.

[6] The following issues were raised by Mr. H. Banerjee appearing for the defendants:

"(1) Were the plaintiffs entitled to demand vacant possession of the said premises under the Agreement dated 12th March 1946?

(2) Have the plaintiffs been ready and willing to perform their part of the Agreement dated 12th the question of title or approval of title because as he said that the plaintiffs were now willing to take the title as it is in the sense that they were prepared to take over with the trespassers and his clients were willing to hand over such possession and the only question on that point was whether the plaintiffs were entitled to claim any compensation. Issue of compensation has been raised as I have indicated above. On behalf of the plaintiffs the learned counsel also accepts this position, and he says that the plaintiffs were prepared to take the premises with the trespassers.

The junior counsel for the plaintiffs called plaintiff Prosad Das De on the first day of the hearing on 3rd March 1949 but the leading counsel Mr. Mitter on the following day did not wish to proceed with the examination-inchief of such witness and submitted that the agreed brief of correspondence which is marked as Ex.-A in this suit was enough and he did not call any witness. In the result the evidence which was only partly given in chief by the plaintiff Prosad Das De and whom the defendants had no chance to cross-examine will be expunged from the record. On behalf of the defendants two witnesses have given evidence.

[9] Clause 1 of the agreement for sale provides for sale of the said premises "free from all encumbrances", and "with all rights". Clause 2 of the agreement for sale provides that the yendor shall cause the said premises to be freed from all encumbrances. It is argued by Mr. Banerjee on behalf of the defendants that there is no stipulation in the said agreement that his clients have to deliver vacant possession. Therefore demand for vacant possession on behalf of the plaintiff was unjustified. In support of this argument Mr. Banerjee has relied on a passage in Gour's latest edition of the Law of Property at p. 772 para 1228 where it is said that the term possession is open to great variety of meanings and delivery of possession as the nature of the property admits may be satisfied by handing over the title deed when the property is in occupation of the tenant. Mr. Banerjee also relied on a decision of Iower Burma Chief Court. Suliman v. Palaneappa, 8 I. C. 605: (3 Bur. L. T. 29).

(10) This question depends on the construction of S. 55 (1) (i). T. P. Act, and the meaning to be given to the words "as its nature admits". There is very little authority on this point. Where a buyer has notice of a tenancy he cannot have actual possession but is only entitled to symbolic possession. On the evidence here I find that the plaintiff had no notice whatever at the time of the execution of the agreement for sale that there were tenants in the premises. [After discussion of the evidence the judgment

[11] The question on the facts of this case therefore is not whether a vendor is liable to deliver possession with or without tenants under the agreement for sale. The question is has the vendor any liability for the two trespassers Dunia Lal Das and Amar Nath Sein who are now occupying the said premises. The defendants admit that Dunia Lal Das is a trespasser in para. 11 of their written state. ment as well as in the evidence of Gopal which I have noticed above. The defendants treated Sein also as a trespasser in the sense that the defendants have refused to have any relation. ship of landlord and tenant between him and them by either demanding rent or accepting it. On the evidence, therefore, the question of delivering possession with or without tenants does not arise because there are no tenants of the defendant in the premises in fact. The question is only whether the defendants are liable for the trespassers and if so, to what extent.

[12] On a construction of the words "as its nature admits" in S. 55 (1) (f), Transfer of Property Act, and of the agreement for sale in this case I am of the opinion that the defendants were not justified in saying that they had no liability for the trespassers. Mr. Banerjee has argued on the evidence that such trespassers came to the premises after the agreement for sale and therefore his clients the vendors have no liability in respect of the occupation of such trespassers. It is, however, clear from the evidence that no attempt was made by the defendants either to prevent the trespassers from entering the house or for turning them out.

[13] I propose to deal with Mr. Banerjee's argument that the trespassers came after the agreement for sale. Under 8. 55 (1) (e). Transfer of Property Act, the vendor has the duty and is bound to take as much care of the property as an owner of ordinary grudence would take of such property between the date of the contract of sale and the delivery of the property. During this period between the contract for sale and the delivery of property the vendor is in the position of a trustee as pointed. out by Lord Selborne in Phillips v. Silvester. (1878) 8 ch. A. 173 at p. 177: (42 L. J. ch. 225). In my judgment the seller must do what a prudent owner ought to do and must protect. the property from injury by trespassers and that an owner of ordinary prudence would take. this care to see that trespassers do not occupy his property. If the vendor is a trustee for the purchaser, as I consider him to be so under the law, his duty as such trustee is not fulfilled when at the time of the delivery of possession it is found that trespassers are having a free run and occupation of the property. In the case of Royal Bristol Permanent Building Society v. Bomash, (1887) 35 Ob. D. 390: (56-L. J. Ch. 810), the learned Judge after discussing the law on this point at p. 398 says as follows:

"Therefore I regard the vendors in this case as trustees for the purchaser from the date of the contract. I think they ought to have taken that reasonable care of the property which would have prevented it being damaged by any one who removed the fixtures or by vagrants or other persons coming in." The evidence proves that the vendors did not take the least interest in the property far from taking the standard of care enjoined by the statute. Sir Dinshaw Mulla in his commentary on the Transfer of Property Act, 1933 Edn. at p. 268, approves of the proposition that under S. 55 (1) (e) the seller must protect the property. from injury by trespassers. Injury by trespassers does not consist merely of damage done to fixtures or other parts of the property bysuch trespassers but also includes wrongful occupation by the trespassers.

[14] In my judgment the correct legal position is clearly stated in Williams on Vendor and Purchaser, 4th Edn , Vol. 1, p. 593 in the following terms:

"He (vendor) must eject disselsors and others wrongfully in possession of the property sold or any part of it (Engell v. Fitch L. R. 4 Q. B. Cases 659) and take proper precautions against injury to the lands by trespassers Clarke v. Ramus, (1891) 2 Q. B. D. 456) and if he fails in any of these duties, the purchaser will be entitled to an allowance by way of compensation to be deducted from purchase money."

336 Calcutta

[15] On a construction of S. 55 (1) (f), Transfer of Property Act, I am of the opinion that if the property is the house (and not a joint property) the possession that its nature ordinarily admits is vacant possession and in the absence of any agreement to the contrary the transfer contemplated is transfer of vacant possession and it is not enough to prove that there was even a tenant in occupation actually to the knowledge of the purchaser. In the facts however of this case no knowledge of the purchaser about the existence of the tenant at the time of execution of the agreement is proved. The word 'its nature' in the section mean in my judgment an incident which is inherent in the property which could be called as its nature. For example if the property is a joint and undivided property the possession can only be as its nature admits and therefore symbolic and not actual physical possession. Again the property might be intangible as for instance the right of easement, the possession which its nature will admit is also necessarily symbolic, and not actual and physical. It is in this sense that the word 'nature' has to be construed. Ordinarily therefore in the absence of any contract to the contrary if the agreement is to sell a house in which the seller has the sole and absolute interest the possession contemplated under S. 55 (1) (f), Transfer of Property Act, is in my judgment vacant possession. The decision of Madhavan Nair and Jackson JJ. in Panchapagesa Ayyar v. Arunachala Mudaliar, 1932 M. W. N. 129, supports the view of construction that I have taken.

[16] Presence or absence of tenants in the house agreed to be sold in that sense does not in my judgment affect the 'nature' of property. It may very well be that the parties intended that the tenants could be removed before possession is given. 'Nature' is something which in this context is irremovable. But whatever may be the position of a house with tenants, a house with trespassers can never in my judgment be said to be a property whose 'nature' does not admit actual and physical possession.

[17] Besides the words "free from all encumbrances" in the agreement have to be construed. The stipulation under the agreement was that the vendor shall cause the property to be freed from all encumbrances. A lease or tenancy is in my opinion an encumbrance. (See Williams 'Vendor and Purchaser' 4th Edn. Vol. 2 App. C.clause 1) A house in the occupation and possession of a trespasser and wrong. doer cannot be said to be free from all encumbrances. As pointed out in Wallace v. Love. 31 Com. L. R. 156 at p. 164.

"The word 'encumbrance' in its ordinary connotation means that the estate is burdened with debts, obligations or responsibilities. The word is in law specially used to indicate a burden on property."

A trespasser's possession or occupation is in'my view a burden on property although a trespasser may have no lawful title to remain in such possession. Romer J. in Jones v. Barnett, (1899) 1 Ch. D. 611 says at p. 620 that encum. brance' means 'a claim, lien or liability attached to property'. In my view trespasser's possession, or occupation is a liability on the property. Removal of trespassers ordinarily involves litigious proceeding and such litigation is a liability or impediment within the ordinary meaning of the word 'encumbrance'.

[18] As I have indicated above cl. 1 of the agreement for sale provides that the said property is agreed to be sold with all rights'. I consider right of occupation and possession as a very important right of the purchaser under such an agreement. Such right is in my view certainly impeded and obstructed by the wrongful occupation or possession of the treepassers.

[19] I hold that under the agreement dated 12th March 1946 and on the construction thereof and on the facts of the case plaintiffs are entitled to vacant possession and I accordingly answer Issue No. 1 in the affirmative.

[20] The agreement for sale was made on 12th March 1946. On 14th March 1946 the solici. tors of the purchaser requested the defendant Rai Chand Bural to send the title deeds. On 18th March 1946 the vendors' solicitor sent the title deeds. Requisitions on title were made by the purchaser's solicitors who sent a reminder to vendor's solicitor on 30th May 1946 to answer them. From June to December 1916 the delay was entirely due to defendants trying to clear the title of the trust I have mentioned before. Actually a suit was filed in this Court for that purpose being Suit No. 996 of 1946 and a decree was made on 19th December 1946. But the certified copy of the decree was not sent to the purchasers' solicitors until 26th February 1947.

[21] The question of vacant possession and whether the house was tenanted or not was raised by the purchasers' solicitors on 19th March 1947. Correspondence followed between the respective solicitors on this point about vacant possession until 14th May 1947 when the vendor's solicitor refused to comply with the requisition for vacant possession and cancelled the agreement for sale and forfeited the earnest money. This suit was filed within about six weeks thereafter on 30th June 1947.

[22] I find at these different stages that the plaintiffs were all along ready and willing to perform their part of the contract. If they insisted on vacant possession that was, I think, justified having regard to the view that I have taken of the construction of the agreement for sale and having regard to my findings under issue 1.

[23] On 18th April 1947 the purchaser's solioitors sent the draft conveyance for approval of the vendor's solicitor. On 25th April they sent a reminder. On 1st May 1947 the vendor's solicitor returned the draft conveyance duly approved as altered in red ink and asked for an early date for execution and registration of the conveyance. The draft conveyance in Ex. B is this suit. The deletion of the words 'ancestors and predecessors in title' was one of the points in controversy in respect of the covenants in the conveyance and on 2nd May 1947 the purchasers' solicitors returned the draft conveyance to the vendor's solicitor for re-approval. On 4th May 1947 the vendor's solicitor objected to the words 'ancestors and predecessors in title' on the ground that the purchasers were taking the property after thorough search and enquiry. I do not consider the vendor's objection on this score to be at all justified. As I construe the agree. ment it was for sale of the house with all rights, privileges, easements and appurtenances and free from all encumbrances and the vendor's obligation under cl. 2 of such agreement was to make a marketable title. The title after searches and enquiry was approved by the purchaser's solicitors and I do not see any reason, why this usual covenant should not be made by the vendor when under the agreement the premises are agreed to be sold 'free from all encumbrances'. It is a common covenant and is found in all standard forms and precedents for conveyances whenever property is sold under the agreement of the pature as described in this suit. If the property was sold subject to encumbrances then the vendor would have been entitled to qualify his covenant but not in my opinion in a case like where there is an unqualified agreement to sell free from 'all' encumbrances. See Williams on Vendor Purchaser 4th Edn. Vol. I pp. 662-8. In any event this was no lack of readiness or willingness on the part of the plaintiffs. The insistence on a covenant like this by the purchaser's solicitor is not, in my opinion, disapproval of title. On the contrary I think because they had approved the title they were justified in calling upon the vendors to make this usual covenant.

[24] On the facts as stated above which are amply borne out by the admitted brief-of correspondence which is marked as Ex. 'A' in this suit I hold that the plaintiffs have been ready and 1950 C/48 & 44 willing to perform their Part of the agreement. In fact by the letter of 28th March 1947 the purchasers' solicitors were even ready to take the house with tenants who would be prepared to attorn and pay rent to the plaintiffs on the completion of the purchase. But then as I indicated and as it transpired in evidence there is in fact no tenant but trespassers in the house.

[26] I accordingly answer Issue 2 in the affirmative.

Issue 3:

[26] On my findings on Issues 1 and 2 on the same facts I hold that the defendant's cancellation of the agreement and forfeiture of the earnest money were not justified. I answer accord. ingly Issue 3 in the negative.

Issue 4:

[27] The objection of the vendors on this point was that the purchaser was only the plaintiff Rai Bahadur Soshi Bhusan Dey under the agree. ment for sale and not the other two plaintiffs. This objection I consider to be completely with out substance under S. 55 (1) (f), Transfer of Property Act, which provides that the seller shall give posssession to the buyer 'or such other person as he directs'. Besides by letters dated 4th May 1947, 7th May 1947 and 9th May 1947 the defendants finally accepted the position that the other two plaintiffs could come in as nominees of plaintiff 1 or as persons directed by plaintiff 1. In Williams Vendor and Purchaser 4th Edn. vol. 1, p. 642, it is said that the purchaser is entitled to require a conveyance to be made to some other persons or to himself and others and the vendor is bound to assure the property sold accordingly.

[28] Under Ss. 55 (1) (f), Transfer of Property Act, and on the correspondence I have mention. ed above I hold that the suit is maintainable. Issue 5:

[29] Mr. Banerjee has argued that this suit is bad by reason of the provisions contained in O. 2 R. 4, Civil P. C. His contention is that the claim for damages and compensation and claim for immovable property are hit by that provision in the Code of Civil Procedure, I am unable to accept that argument I consider the suit is protected by O. 2 R. 4 (c), Civil P. C. I am of the opinion that it is the same cause of action inasmuch as the law allows specific performance of a contract with or without compensation. In my view the claim for damages is based on (a) delay in completion of sale and (b) for failure to deliver vacant possession and such claim arises out of the same cause of action and on the breach of the agreement for sale by the defendants.

[30] I, therefore, hold that the suit is not bad for misjoinder of cause of action and I accordingly answer issue 5 in the negative.

[31] Section 19, Specific Relief Act, permits a suit for specific performance with a claim for compensation in addition to or in substitution of such performance. In fact paragraph 3 of that section definitely lays down that if in any such suit the Court decides that specific performance ought to be granted but that it is not sufficient to satisfy the justice of the case and that some compensation for breach of the contract should also be made to the plaintiff it shall award him such compensation accordingly and the statutory illustration of para. 3 makes it abundantly clear. Compensation awarded under this section may be assessed in such manner as the Court may direct. The authority in Royal Bristol Permanent Building Society v. Bomash, (1887) 85 Ch. D. 390: (56 L. J. Ch. 840)as also the observations of both Cotton and Lindley L. JJ. in Marsh v. Jones (1889) 40 Ch. D. 563:60 L. T.

610) are also on the point. [32] The first ground on which compensation is asked is the ground of delay. It is clear that from June to December 1946 when the defendants were clearing the title of the trust the defendants alone were responsible for the delay. The defendants concealed the fact of such trust in the agreement for sale. The existence of such trust was disclosed by the vendor's solicitors' letter dated 1st June 1946. Under cl. 3 of the agreement for sale the purchasers' obligation was to complete the sale-within 2 months as specified therein. That clause provides that upon the title being approved by the purchasers' solicitors which I hold was done on 18th April 1947 when the purchasers' solicitors sent the draft conveyance for approval, the purchaser was to complete the purchase within two months from the date of the delivery of the document of title. The documents of title were first delivered on 18th March 1946 but were returned on 25th April 1947. Later on the title deeds were sent again by the vendors solicitors to the purchasers solicitor on 26th February 1947 along with the certified copy of the decree in Suit No. 996 of 1946. From 1st June 1946 (when the defendants started to clear the title of the trust) until 26th February 1947 (when the certified copy of the decree declaring the trust void was sent to the purchasers' solicitors) the defendant Rai Chand Bural alone is responsible for the delay. Of this period plaintiffs were agreeable to allow time till the end of June 1946. I, therefore, would have awarded compensation to the plaintiffs for the loss as contemplated in the statutory illus. tration of Para. 3 of S. 19, Specific Relief Act, from 1st July 1946 but I find that the purchasers solicitors approved title by sending draft con. veyance only on 18th April 1947. In my opinion the proper date from which I should award compensation is from 26th April 1947 which is within a week from the date when draft conve. yance was sent and which is within two months from 26th February 1947 being the date of delivery of title deeds. The evidence of Gopal in answer to Qs. 44 to 47 is that the house fetched a rent of Rs. 100 per month in 1946 but will now fetch something like Rs. 200 per month. I assess the compensation on this evidence at Rs. 150 per month payable from 26th February 1947 until execution of the conveyance, on the ground of dealy.

[33] The plaintiffs claim compensation also for turning out the trespassers. I do not consider that it is possible to make any assessment on that point and the claim is at present indeterminate. Besides after the conveyance the plaintiffs will be entitled to sue the trespassers for damages for the period they are kept out of possession after the conveyance Plaintiffs therefore suffer no injustice. I do not, in my discretion, therefore, make any separate assessment of extra compensation on this ground, as I do not consider the justice of the case so requires under Para. 8 of S. 19, Specific Relief Act.

[84] Accordingly I answer Issue No. 6 in the affirmative and I award and assess compensation at the rate of Rs. 150 per month from 26th February 1947 until registration of the conveyance that I propose to direct. [35] There will be a judgment for the plaintiffs for specific performance of the agreement for sale dated 12th March 1946 in terms of prayers (1), (2), (3) and (4) of the prayers in the plaint. The draft conveyance shall be in the form approved by the respective solicitors in Ex. B in this suit except that the usual covenant with the "ancestors and predecessors in title" as required by the purchasers' solicitors should be given. Plaintiffs will take delivery of possession with the trespassers. There will also be a decree for compensation at the rate I haveindicated above and for costs against the defendant Rai Chand Bural. The plaintiffs shall deposit the balance of the purchase price in Court within a week from date and will beentitled to be paid the compensation out of such purchase money and the balance of purchase price will be handed over to the defendant Rai Chand Bural on the execution and registration of the conveyance. I direct also that the defendant Rai Chand Bural do execute the conveyance within a week after the balance of the purchase price is deposited by the plaintiffs in Court and notice given to such defendant, In default of such defendant executing and registering the conveyance the Registrar of this Court will do the same on his behalf.

STATE OF STREET

[36] The decree for specific performance and for compensation as aforesaid and for costs is made against the defendant Rai Chand Bural. No relief and no costs are claimed against defendants 2 and 3 and no decree or order is made against them.

[97] Certified for two counsel.

[33] The defendants applied for stay of exeoution but as counsel for the defendants was not prepared to give any security for costs and any undertaking not to dispose of the property pending proposed appeal the stay is refused.

To say something of a person which holds him to contempt is defamatory. If what is said is true then that is a defence of justification under the exception. On the other hand, if there is a doubt as to whether it is true or not, there is no defence at all and as the matter tends to bring the person defamed into contempt it is defamatory under S. 500. Ajit Kumar Dutta and Satis Chandra Ray-lor Petitioner.

Dwijendra Krishna Dutt-for Complainant.

Order.—This is a petition for revision of an order of the learned Chief Presidency Magis. trate convicting the petitioner of an offence under s. 500, Penal Code, and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 200 and in default of payment of the fine, to simple imprisonment for one month.

[2] The charge arose out of a letter which the petitioner wrote to the Editor of the Newspaper Swaraj, for the purpose of publication. To understand the allegations in the letter it will be necessary shortly to set out the facts of the case.

[8] The complainant was the owner of a certain premises No. 24, Hyat Khan Lane, Calcutta. It appears that one Amar Guha had somehow obtained possession of part of these premises, but it is common ground that later he was treated as a tenant. Amar Guha was an evacuee from East Bengal. Later, one Sitanath with the assistance of Amar Guha came into these premises and took possession of part of them, but it is clear from the findings of the learned Magistrate that the complainant never recognised Sitanath as a tenant. Even. tually Sitanath and Amar Guha fell out and an incident took place in these premises which gave rise to the letter to which I have referred. It seems that in the absence of Sitanath, Amar Guha with a number of other persons tried to occupy by force the part of the premises occupied by Sitanath and that they manhandled Sitanath's wife and daughter and caused considerable damage to movable property of Sitanath.

[4] That some such incident did take place seems to be clear. But the suggestion in the letter which the petitioner wrote to the Swaraj Newspaper is that the landlord, the complainant in the case, was behind this attack by Amar Guha on Sitanath, and that the attack was made as a result of a conspiracy between them. This was a serious allegation against the complainant.

It attempts were made in the Court of the Presidency Magistrate to prove that the complainant must have been a party to this attack on Sitanath's premises, but the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate has, I think, rightly held that the evidence does not show that the complainant was a party to these proceedings at all. In other words, the evidence which went to show that the allegations in this letter defence raised in Exception 1 to 8. 499 which is the defence of justification. As I have said, the learned Magistrate held that the evidence which went to justify the allegations failed. Mr. Dutta has argued that his client would still be entitled to an acquittal even though his evidence failed to prove the truth of the allegations, if the evidence had raised a reasonable doubt as to the truth of the allegations. He has relied upon the well known Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court dealing with the onus of proof in the case of Exceptions.

[7] It is to be observed that Exception 1 requires that the allegation is true and if Mr. Dutta's argument is accepted Exception 1 should read: "It is not defamation to impute anything which may or may not be true." I do not think that the principle of the Allahabad Full Bench case can be made to apply in the present case. To say something of a person which holds him to contempt is defamatory. If what is said is true then that is a defence, On the other hand if there is a doubt as to whether it is true or not, there is no defence at all and as the matter tends to bring the person defamed into contempt it is defamatory under s. 500, Penal Code. It seems to me quite clear that the plea of justification wholly failed! in this case and no reliance can be placed on Exception 1 to S. 499.

[8] It was then suggested that Exception 9 to S. 499 afforded a defence. That Exception reads:

[9] Assuming that these allegations were made in good faith which is at least doubtful, they were certainly not made for the protection of the petitioner who wrote the letter. How could they be said to have been made for the protection of Sitanath? And it certainly was not for the public good that such a charge should have been made. I do not think that Exception 9 could have any application at all. This letter was clearly written to try and force the landlord's hands and if that is so there can be no question that Exception 9 can ever apply.

[10] It seems to me that this is a clear case and the petitioner was rightly convicted. sentence is by no means severe and I would affirm the conviction and sentence and discharge The order staying the fine is the rule.

[2] The case for the prosecution is that Kalu Santal was in possession of certain land as the adiar of one Charan Das Chatterjee. He grew paddy on the land and reaped it. On the date of occurrence the two accused persons came there and removed paddy and straw in spite of protests. The defence taken is a denial of the occurrence and it was contended on behalf of the defence that the land on which the paddy was grown belonged to the accused Yakub. The learned Magistrate has disbelieved the defence case and convicted the accused. On appeal the Additional District Magistrate has after criticis. ing the judgment of the learned trial Magistrate somewhat adversely upheld the decision and dismissed the appeal.

[8] The point raised before me is a pure point of law. It is said that the learned Magistrate has committed certain illegalities in the trial which are fatal and that therefore the entire proceedings are without jurisdiction. The facts which give rise to this contention are these: Kalu Santal lodged a petition of complaint before the Magistrate making the allegations which are the substance of the prosecution. The learned Magistrate passed an order upon the complaint in these terms:

"Send this to O/O Kalna p. s. for taking cognizance under S. 379/147, Penal Code, and finishing investigation early."

Upon this order being communicated to the police they investigated the case and returned a charge sheet. Thereafter the accused were tried. I may mention here that on the petition of complaint being filed the complainant was not examined on oath.

[4] It is contended that the learned Magistrate has erred in law in sending the matter to police and asking the police to take cognizance. He has also erred in law in not examining the complainant on oath. In my opinion both these grounds are substantial. The law is quite clear on the point. When a complaint is filed before a Magistrate, unless there is any legal bar to the entertainment of the complaint such as is mentioned in S. 195, Criminal P. C., and any other section, the Magistrate is bound to take cognizance of the offence. He has no option in the matter. Section 190 (1), Criminal P. C., is quite clear. It says that a Magistrate may take cognizance of an offence (a) upon receiving a complaint of facts which constitute such offence, (b) upon a report in writing of such facts made by any police officer, and (c) upon information received from any person other than a police officer. The word 'may 'here means must. The word may is used because there are three separate sets of circumstances laid down upon which cognizance may be taken. This is the view I held in the case of A. C. Samaddar v. Suresh Chandra, 53 C. W. N 270: (A. I. R. (86) 1949 Cal. 197: 50 Or. L. J. 968) relying upon the case of Kashmiri Lal Garga v. Ismail, an unreported decision which is Cri. Ref. No. 40 of 1940. In this case the Magistrate should have taken cognizance of the complaint as there was no legal bar against taking such cognizance. That being so, he had no jurisdiction to refer the matter to the police directing the police to take cognizance and investigate. The learned Magistrate apparently relied upon the provisions of s. 156 (3), Oriminal P. C. That sub-section has no application whatsoever in a case where cognizance is taken upon a complaint. This view was also expressed by me in the abovementioned case and I find that the same view has been taken in the case of Pulin Behari v. The King, by the Chief Justice and Das J. The case is reported in 53 C. W. N. 658.

[5] Next, the learned Magistrate when he takes cognizance upon a complaint is bound under the provisions of S 200, Oriminal P. C., to examine the complainant on oath at once. The failure to do this is fatal. This was held in the abovementioned two cases. It is thus clear that the Magistrate has committed several illegalities in this case.

[6] It was argued by learned advocate appearing for the Orown that although the facts disclosed that the Magistrate had committed certain irregularities, they were curable by virtue of the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C., inasmuch as the accused were not prejudiced by these irregularities. In my opinion this argument cannot be accepted. These are not mere irregularities but illegalities which affect the question of jurisdiction of the Magistrate. The learned Magistrate really had no jurisdiction to try the case upon a charge sheet once the petition of complaint was filed, nor did he have any jurisdiction to refer the matter to the police in order that the police might take cognizance of the offence. These errors relate to jurisdiction and are not mere irregularities.

[7] In my opinion the trial has been without jurisdiction and, therefore, the order of conviction and sentence must be set aside. The case shall be retried by some other Magistrate to be appointed by the District Magistrate for this purpose. He shall try the case according to law and in the light of the observations made above. The rule is made absolute.

Harries C. J. — This is a petition for revision of an order of a learned Subordinate Judge, made in a claim case.

[2] Certain property had been attached before judgment and the property was claimed by the petitioners in this case. They made their application under the provisions of O. 38, R. 8, Oivil P. C. That rule provides that where any claim is made to property attached before judgment the claim is to be investigated in the manner provided for the investigation of claims to property attached in execution of a decree for the payment of money. In other words, the claim is to be investigated under the provisions of O. 21, R. 58, Civil P. C.

[3] The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the company were not in possession of certain bricks which had been attached before judgment. The company claimed to be in possession of these bricks under a document which purported to transfer the bricks to them. The learned Judge, however, was not satisfied that this document really transferred the bricks to them and he winds up his judgment in these words:

"I dilate no more on the merits of these papers and writings because I have already said that I am not impressed that the Company hold these bricks on their own account."

[4] In short, he held that the company were mere benamidars of the defendant Girija Prosad Pal and, therefore, they could make out no claim to these bricks.

[5] Mr. Paresh Nath Mokerjee on behalf of the petitioners has contended that it was not open to the learned Judge to decide—whether or not the company were mere benamidars of the defendant. He has pointed out that it has been repeatedly held in this Court and in other Courts that in proceedings under O. 21, R. 58 a Court is not entitled to go into the question as to whether a transaction is benami or not. The Court is solely entitled to deal with the question of who is in possession and the Court is prohibited from entering into a question of title.

A. I. R.

[6] It is true that the words of O. 21, R. 58 would suggest that the Court could go into a question such as benami. But as I have said the authorities of this and other Courts forbid the investigating Court so to do. The very same question came before me in the case of Protiva Sundari v. Reliance Bank Ltd., 52 C. W. N. 56, in which I had to hold that the Judge in that case could not go into the question of the benami nature of a transaction. In the judgment I have cited certain cases of the Patna High Court and of this Court and it is quite clear that this Court has over a considerable length of time consistently held that in a claim case the Judge cannot go into the question of benami. The learned Subordinate Judge in this case did go into this question and decided that the company was a mere benamdar and that they did not hold the bricks on their own account, but on account of the true owner, the defendant.

bound to hold that the decision of the learned Judge cannot be sustained and must be set aside. The case should, in my view, be sent back to the learned Subordinate Judge for him to decide it upon the evidence relating to possession which was before him and on that evidence alone. If he can decide the matter he must do so, but he cannot go into the question of benami and hold that the petitioners are mere benamdars. If there is nothing to suggest that the possession of the petitioners is other than genuine he will have to find for the petitioners. He cannot find for the opposite parties on a finding that the

[8] In the result, therefore, this petition is allowed, the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside and the case is remanded to him to be decided in accordance with the observations made in the judgment and according to law. The costs of these proceedings will abide the event before the learned Subordinate Judge. The rule is disposed of in these terms.

[9] The interim order of attachment continues pending the disposal of the application before the learned Subordinate Judge.

Order.—This rule has been obtained by two persons who were tried for having defamed the Chairman of the Howarh Municipality. They were convicted and sentenced to pay certain fines, in default to undergo simple imprisonment for certain terms. Out of the fines compensation was directed to be paid to the complainant. The decision of the trial Court was upheld in appeal by the Sessions Judge and it is with respect to the last decision that the present rule has been obtained.

[2] The facts briefly are as follows: The accused Radha Gobinda Dutta was the Editor and the accused Lakshmi Kanta Bhattacharjee was the printer of a Bengali daily newspaper known as the Paschim Banga Patrika. On 8th July 1948 an article was published in that paper in the form of a questionnaire. This is Ex. 1. It is the case for the prosecution that this article defamed the complainant Saila Kumar Mukberjee, the Chairman of the Howarh Municipality and that the accused committed an offence punishable under S. 500, Penal Code. The defence taken is that the questionnaire which admittedly was published in that newspaper did not contain any defamatory matter, that is to say, it did not contain any matter which may be described as making any imputation regarding the complainant which would harm his reputation. Next, the defence was that the accused were protected by Exceptions 1, 2, 3, and 9 mencioned in S. 499, Penal Code, which defines the offence of defamation. As I have stated before both the Courts below have rejected the defences.

[3] Learned advocate for the petitioners gives up the defence of Exception 2, and he relies upon all the other defences taken in the Courts below. The learned Sessions Judge in a very detailed and able judgment has discussed all the points raised by the defence and he has come to the conclusion that the statements contained in Ex. 1 are defamatory and that none of the Exceptions can be availed of by the accused. In my view this decision is perfectly correct. I shall first deal with the question whether the statements published in Ex. 1 come within the mischief of 8. 499, Penal Code. In this connection certain surrounding circumstances must be considered. A few days prior to the publication, leaflets were distributed in Howarh containing imputations against the complainant which are clearly defamatory and indeed on this point there was no dispute. This leaflet is Ex 2. Now, the leaflet and the so called questionnaire published in the Paschim Banga Patrika should be considered together and if they are considered together it becomes abundantly clear that the questions contained in the Paechim Banga Patrika, although they were in the form of mere questions, were defamatory in character. I reproduce below the leaflet Ex. 2 leaving out certain paragraphs therein which are not relevant to the case and also the questionpaire Ex. 1:

Exhibit 2. "A few questions about the Howrab Municipality.

Will the Chairman Saila Babu reply?

Sri Saila Kumar Mukherjee, the Congress Chairman of the Howrah Municipality tries to extort cheap praise by speaking at intervals in throatful voice about laudable long range and short range schemes for the betterment of the Howrah Municipality. But the following few facts will clearly manifest his depth of feeling for the betterment of the Municipality. We hope Saila Babu will have sufficient moral courage to refute the facts, if groundless, by his replies.

1. After the self-immolation of Mahatma Gandhi arrangements were made for a Sradba Basar at the Howrah Town Hall. Newspapers and handbills published by the Municipality indicate that it was held under the auspices of the Municipality and the Chairman of the Municipality Sri Saila Kumar Mukherjee himself raised about Rs. 13,500 (Thirteen thousand and a half) for this function from wealthy persons, rich marwarls and the public. But he has not as yet submitted any account to the Municipal Meeting. Questioned he says this function has no connection with the Municipality and thus he evades. Will he, without any further delay, submit an account to the public?

2. It is known to us that the expenses of the case of the Commissioners of the Howrah Municipality against Mr. Nomani appointed by the late Government of Bengal that rolled up to the Privy Council were by the citizens of Howrah and some Commissioners personally. Government lost the case and about Rs. 11000 (Eleven thousand) was allowed as costs. But we have been astonished to hear that Saila Babu has misappropriated the said amount of Rs. 11000 (Eleven thousand).

What is the reply of Saila Baba to this?

3. It is true that for some special reason he appeared at the appeal Committee at the time when the question of assessment of the Allenberry Workshop run by Messrs. Dalmia Jain was being decided and reduced the valuation of only the Allenbery Company from Rs. 83,065 to Rs. 61,936. What is the reason of reducing the three monthly income by Rs. 1000? It is heard that just after this Saila Babu purchased a motor car cheap. Is it true?

4. Why was the contract for Rs. 60,000 of the Road Board given to the lowest tenderer Sri Kumar Pal without the consent of the Commissioners? Is it true that a large sum of money has been paid to the said contractor Sri Kumar Pal though the work has not been finished up to the sixteenth part? It is heard that just after getting this contract the said contractor was engaged for repairing the house of Saila Babu and wicked people are saying that it is for this reason that Saila Babu has special favour for this contractor:

What does Saila Babu say?

5. Will Saila Babu say why he has got the lease of the Municipal tank given to B. K. Sarkar & Co. at a low rate or at a nominal rate disregarding the resolution and direction given in a general meeting of the Commissioners? Is it true that the contract for bran has been given to the said B. K. Sarkar & Co. disregarding the clear direction of the Commissioners? Wby was the contract for the supply of bran given to the said Contractor at the rate of Rs. 14.4.0 although the market rate is Rs. 13? Besides this, why was the charge at the rate of 0-8-0 for bags of bran allowed separately? Though no price is ever paid for the bags of bran. Why did Saila Babu allow this extra price of bage at the rate of Rs. 0-8-0 over-riding this practice? Will Saila Babu say whether this contractor B. K. Sarkar & Co. is his benamdar and whether a large sum of his money has been laid out in the work of this contractor?

6. It is true that the value of land in Ward III where are situate Saila Babu's paternal house and landed property assessed at a rate lower than what has been done in respect of Wards VI and II of the Municipality during the revision of assessment. According to which reason or principle has the value of the land on which Saila Babu's house stands assessed at Rs. 300 (Three hundred rupees) per cottah and that in Ward VI at Rs. 600 (six hundred rupees) per cottah? Will our Chairman who has a soft corner for the public throw light on this matter?

7. Will Saila Babu inform why was the valuation sketch of his own house increased by penning through and why was the valuation sketch done by one of his friends Jyotish Chandra Mitra erased and re-written?

8. In the house of Saila Babu at 21 Ramla Mukherjee Lane, there are 7 rooms and 4 bath rooms in the 2nd story, 12 rooms and 2 halls and one bath room in the 1st story and 26 rooms, 4 halls, one puja dalan and 3 tin sheds in the ground floor and attached with the house is a land measuring 2 bighas 3 cottahs and 3 Ch. Why was the valuation of this building fixed at Rs. 3100?

9. Has there been a shortage of money of Saila Babu after he became the Chairman of the Municipality? We are awaiting Saila Babu's reply in this matter.

10. On this shortage of money we are whispering a small question to Saila Babu. Is the pay of the driver of Saila Babu's personal motor car paid from the Municipal fund?

11. Why has (sic) Saila Babu is the leader of the Municipal Party disregarding the written instruction of the Congress Municipal party from the words "Howrah Municipality from the Howrah Municipality jeep car." Has it been removed lest it might stand in the way of its arbitrary use by him or least it might lower his prestige to the people of High Court? The people demand an explanation from Saila Babu in this respect.

In the end we want to speak of a small matter to Saila Babu. The Howrah Municipality is the property of the citizens of Howrah. It would have been better if the relatives and friends were nourished from his own property rather than from the money of the rate-payers. May he not forget this knowledge."

Questions for the Chairman, Howrah Municipality to answer.

We have received number of complaints against Sri Saila Kumar Mukhopadhyay, Chairman. Howrah Municipality. We hope he will remove all doubts in the minds of the public by stating as to whether such complaints are correct.

1. Did Sri Saila Kumar Mukhopadhyay collect from wealthy persons, rich Marwaris and from the members of the public a sum of about Rs. 13,500 in connection with Gandhi Sradhha Basar? Is it correct that he has not as yet furnished before any meeting of the Municipality any account for such sum?

2. Is it not correct that the cost of the litigation between the Commissioner for the Howrah Municipality and Mr. Nomani appointed by the then Government of Bengal up to the Privy Council had been borne individually, by the citizens of Howrah and certain Commissioners? Is it not true that the Howrah Municipality won the case and got about Re. 11,000 as damages? Who has taken the money?

3. Is it true that for certain special reasons he, by being present in the Appeal Committee meeting had the assessment of only Allen Berry and Co., run by Mesers. Dalmia Jain reduced from Rs. 83,065 to Rs. 61,936?

4. Is it true that a Road Board contract for Rs. 60,000 was denied to the party who quoted the lowest tender and was given without the consent of the Commissioners, to one Srikumar Pal whose tender was third from the lowest? Is it true that large sums have been paid to the said contractor Srikumar Pal although one-sixteenth of the work has hardly been completed?

5. Did he cause a lease of a Municipal tank to be granted to B. K. Sarkar Co., at a small or nominal value, by ignoring the resolution and direction of Commissioners in a General Meeting? Is it true that a contract for gram has been given to the said B. K. Sarkars Co., notwithstanding specific instructions of the Commissioners to the contrary? Was the said contractor allowed Rs. 14-4-0 for supply of gram although the market rate was Rs. 13?

6. Is it true that in connection with re-assessment, valuation of the land has been made at a reduced rate in Ward No. III where Saila Babu's ancestral home and properties are situate, compared to the valuation of land.

in Wards Nos. II and VI?

7. Has the valuation of his residential house been increased by tampering with sketch book? Has the valuation Sketch Book of the house of his friend Babu Jyotish Mitra, a Commissioner, been erased and re-written? Saita Babu's residential house at 21, Ram Lal Mukherjee Lane consists of 7 rooms and 4 bath rooms in the second floor, 12 rooms, 2 halls and one bath room in the first floor and 26 rooms, 4 halls, 1 Puja Dalan and 3 rooms in the ground floor. The said house is on a plot of land 2 bighas 2 cottas 3 chattacks in area. Has this palace been valued at Rs. 3100?

8. Is the driver of Saila Babu's private car paid out of the funds of the Municipality?

9. Have the words "Howrah Municipality" been deleted from the Jeep Car of the Municipality?

A comparison of these two documents makes it quite clear that the questionnaire was referring to the defamatory allegations made in the leaflet. They virtually amounted to a re-publication of the defamatory statements contained in the leaflet. It is quite a common ruse to make defamatory statements in the form of questions. What the Editor is saying in Ex. 1., is this? "We have received a number of complaints against you and we hope you will clear yourself by answering the following questions." Thereafter he puts the questions in a sly manner omitting from the questions any direct imputation. It is quite clear however that the questions and the preface to the questions indicate that the Chairman was being charged with having done dishonest things and he is asked to answer the charges. A state. ment of this nature would amount, in my opinion, to defamation and the publishers of such statements would be guilty of the offence of defamation unless he is protected by the Exceptions mentioned in S. 499, Penal Code. A simple illustration will, I think, prove the point. Suppose a newspaper published the following statement? "To Mr. A: We have heard that people are saying that you commit theft and dacoity. We give you this opportunity of clearing yourself by answering the following questions." Would not that amount to defamation? In my opinion it certainly would. It really amounts to a re-publication of the defamatory statements which the person is called upon to answer. Merely because the publisher of the defamatory statements asks the person defamed to exonerate himself, that does not in any way protect the publisher.

"It is not defamation to impute anything which is true concerning any person, if it be for the public good that the imputation should be made or published. Whether or not it is for the public good is a question of fact."

To get the benefit of this Exception the accused must prove that the statements contained in the questionnaire are true and that they are made for the public good. Learned advocate for the petitioners contends that it is sufficient if the petitioners can prove that the statements made in the questionnaire are substantially true. He relies upon an unreported decision of this Court in Criminal Revision Case No. 1148 of 1947 (Prabhat Chandra Ganguly v. A. H. R. S. Doha). There can be not quarrel with this proposition, but the words "substantially true" mean true in regard to the material portion of the allegation or insinuation As an example I would take the first question. "Did Sri Saila Kumar Mukhopadhyay collect from wealthy persons, rich Marwaris and from the members of the public a sum of about Rs. 13,500" etc. It is true that some money was collected in connection with the Gandhi Sraddha Basar. The truth regarding that allegation cannot make the insinuation contained in paragraph I substantially true. The insinuation there is that the complainant acted on behalf of the Municipality and collected this sum on behalf of the Municipality and neglected to furnish accounts. Now, it has been established that the money was not collected on behalf of the Municipality at all and that there was no duty upon the complainant to furnish any account to the Munici. pality. It is thus clear that the accused have not succeeded in showing that the insinuation contained in the first question is substantially true. The same may be said with respect to all the questions. Certain facts therein are no doubt substantially correct, but the insinuation underlying these facts is not substantially correct. Exception I therefore has no application.

[5] As regards Exceptions II and III I am of opinion that they have no relevancy. They deal with expressions of opinions in respect of the conduct of a public servant or in respect of the conduct of any person touching any public question. In the present case we are not concerned with the expression of any opinion at all. The case relates to defamatory imputations which are allegations of fact and not expressions of opinions. I need not therefore consider these two Exceptions.

[6] The last (Ninth) Exception is in the

following terms:

"It is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another, provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it, or of any other person, or for the public good."

To get the benefit of this Exception the accused must prove that he acted in good faith and for the public good. He must establish both these points. There is certainly no good faith established in this case. The question has been dealt with very well by the learned Judge. If the accused were acting in good faith, one would have expected them to go to the Chairman of the Municipality and ask him for an explanation. Nothing of the kind was done. The accused relying upon anonymous leaflets drew up a sort of a charge sheet against the Chairman. Such conduct is clearly not in good faith. For this reason I hold that Exception IX has no application.

[7] In my opinion the charge has been fully proved and I discharge this rule.

Sen J.—This rule came up for hearing before Mookerjes and Das Gupta JJ. As there was a difference of opinion between them the matter has been placed before me for disposal by my Lord the Chief Justice.

[2] The facts giving rise to this rule briefly are as follows. The Maharaj Kumari Binodini Devi of Manipur deposited the sum of Rs. 5,000 (rupees five thousand only) as a fixed deposit for six months in the Calcutta Mercantile Bank Limited at the Nabadwip Branch. Six months expired on 5th February 1947. On 6th of that month Maharaj Kumari Binodini Devi send her agent, Paresh Chandra Bhowmik, who is the complainant in this case, to get back the money deposited as the date of maturity had passed. Bhowmik appeared at the Nabadwip Branch of the Bank but he was told that there was no money there and he was asked to come to Calcutta to take money. On 7th February 1947, Bhowmik came to the Calcutta Head Office and he was put off for a week. He went to the bank from time to time and payment was deferred. Finally, on 25th February 1947, he went to the Bank and insisted on payment saying that he would not leave the bank until he was paid. The fixed deposit receipt was taken from him by Prova Ranjan Ghose, one of the accused, who went into a room where the other two accused Usha Ranjan Ghose and Suresh Ghosh were seated. Thereafter Bhomik was called into the room and the receipt in a folded condition was returned to him. He was asked to wait for a few days as some Government papers had to be cashed and he was promised payment. On 28th February 1947 a letter was received by Maharaj Kumari Binodini Devi which was dated 10th February 1947, informing her that her Fixed Deposit had been automatically renewed as per rubber stamp on the receipt as she had not applied to receive payment within three days of the date of maturity. The case for the prosecution is that there was no rubber stamp on the receipt at all on 25th February 1947, and that the rubber stamp was put on the receipt on that date when the receipt was taken away from Bhowmik by Probba Ranjan Ghose. It is also the case for the prosecution that the letter was fraudulently ante-dated. When this letter was received criminal proceedings were initiated by Paresh Chandra Bhowmik alleging that the three accused persons were guilty of forgery, of using a forged document, of cheating and of forgery for the purpose of cheating. Upon this complaint being made summonses were issued against the three persons only with respect to the allegation of cheating, that is to say, summonses were issued stating that the accused had been charged with having committ. ed an offence punishable under S. 420, Penal Code. The accused appeared and were tried by Mr. H. K. Bose, Honorary Presidency Magistrate. He discharged the accused with respect to the offence punishable under 8. 420, Penal Code. He did not make any investigation regarding the other charges alleged in the petition of complaint in any detail and passed no specific orders with respect to those offences. Against this order of discharge this Court was moved and a rule was issued which was heard by Roxburgh and J. N. Mujumdar JJ. The complainant who obtained this rule stated that the learned Magistrate was wrong in discharging the accused on the charge of cheating and he also complained that the Magistrate had not investigated the case with respect to the other allegations made charging the accused with forgery, the forgery consisting in putting in the rubber stamp entry on the receipt. Their Lordships remanded the case to the trial Court for rehearing and in the order of remand certain observations were made which are of great importance for the decision of this rule. I shall therefore quote those observations which were made in the remand order:

"The learned Magistrate in discharging the accused has taken the main prosecution case to be one of cheating for non-payment of money and he holds that the case is really one of debtor and creditor and not a criminal case. He briefly refers to the rubber stamp question but says that as the prosecution could not say who was responsible for it no prima facie case had been made out.

So tar as the first reason given by the learned Magistrate is concerned, we have nothing to say.

In so far as the matter of the ruther stamp is concerned, we note that on the back of the printed application for fixed deposit account, Ex. 5 which was submitted by the Maharaj Kumari when the amount was deposited, cl. 6 is in very similar terms to those in the rubber stamp and now challenged. The only material difference being that the period is seven days and not three days. In those circumstances, it would be difficult for a charge of forgery to succeed in our opinion.

But there remains the prosecution case that the accused have fraudulently dealt with the Maharaj Kumari in obtaining the receipt from the complainant on the pretext of paying the money and then sending an ante-dated letter alleging that the receipt had been automatically renewed. Without wishing to express any opinion on this point, we think that this aspect of the case requires further enquiry. With these comments we therefore set aside the order of discharge and remand the case for disposal by the Chief Presidency Magistrate or some other Presidency Magistrate to whom he may transfer it other than Mr. H. K. Bose."

[3] The case sent back on remand was heard by Mr. A. Mukherjee, Additional Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta. He interpreted the order of remand of this Court as limiting the scope of his enquiry to the charge of cheating only. This is What he says:

"By orders passed by the Hon'ble High Court in previous proceedings relating to this case the scope of enquiry was limited to fraud and no other offence. It was seen from the evidence adduced by the prosecution " He thereafter proceeded to try the accused on a charge of cheating punishable under S. 417, Penal Code, and holding that this charge has not been made out, he acquitted the accused. Against this order of acquittal this Court was again moved and the present rule was issued. As I have stated before it was heard by Mookerjee and Das Gupta JJ. They have differed. Mookerjee J. says that as the order passed by Mr. Bose was an order of discharge, this Court in remanding the case had no power to limit the trial. In this view he held that the order of remand must be construed an order remanding the entire case for retrial, that is to say, the order imposed a duty on the learned Magistrate to investigate not only the charge of cheating but also the charge of forgery and the other allied offences. He supports this view by saying that an order of discharge is different from an order of acquittal and that a person discharged could not take the benefit of S. 403, Oriminal P. O., which lays down the doctrine of autrefois acquit and that he was liable to be tried again for the same offence on a fresh petition. In support of this view he cites two Fall Bench decisions, namely, the cases of Dwarkanath v. Benimadhab, 28 Cal. 652: (5 C. W. N 457 F. B.) and Emperor v. Chinna Kaliappa, 29 Mad. 126: (3 Cr. L. J. 274). His view is that these decisions are authority for the proposition that when an order of discharge is set aside by the Court on revision the entire case is open to the Magistrate and he has the jurisdiction to hear the entire matter, and that it was not open to this Court to set aside the order of discharge and remand the case for a re-hearing with respect to any particular charge. In my opinion this view of Mookerjee J. is wrong. It is true that an order of discharge is different from an order of acquittal and such an order does not protect a person discharged from being subject to fresh proceedings in regard to the offence with respect to which he was discharged, but it does not follow from this that where an order of discharge comes up before this Court in revision the jurisdiction of this Court is fettered in the way suggested by Mookerjee J. This Court has ample jurisdiction to send the case back on remand for the retrial of any particular offence while upholding the decision of the Court below with respect to other offences. In my opinion this view is clearly supported by the provisions of S. 439 (1), Criminal P. C. That section says that this Court on revision may exercise in its discretion any of the powers conferred on a Court of appeal by ss. 423, 426, 427 and 428 of the Code. Now, it is quite clear that when there is an appeal the Court may remand the case with respect to one of several offences and accept the lower Court's decision with respect to the other offences. A limited order of remand is clearly allowed to an appellate Court and there are innumerable decisions where this power has been exercised. This Court in its revisional jurisdiction has all these powers and perhaps something more. In this connection I may refer to 8. 429, Oriminal P. C., which mentions some of the powers of the appellate Court. Section 429 (1) (a) of the Code states what the Court of appeal may do in the case of acquittal. Sub-section (b) of S. 423 (1) states what the Court may do in a case of conviction. Sub section (c) deals with an appeal from any other order and says that the appellate Court may alter or reverse such order. Sub-section (d) says that the appellate Court may make any amendment or any consequential or inciden. tal order that it may think just and proper. The case falls under sub-s. (d) of 8. 428 (1) of the Code. The order here is a consequential or incidental order. If the Court finds that the charge of forgery cannot be established but that there are materials for investigating a charge of cheating, the Court may remand the case for the trial of the charge of cheating only on an application against an order of discharge.

[4] Again even if the order passed by Roxburgh and Majumdar JJ. be not an order according to law, this Court cannot sit on appeal on such an order and say that it is a bad order. The order is binding on the lower Court and also binding on this Court until it is set aside in appropriate proceedings. For these reasons I hold that Mooker. jee J.'s view in respect of the above matter is not correct.

[5] The next point for consideration is whether the order passed by Roxburgh and Majumdar JJ. was an order of the limited nature contended for on behalf of the bank. This question has caused me a certain amount of trouble, but after careful consideration I am of opinion that the order of remand was not a 'limited' order. I have quoted the order in extenso. It was argued that the learned Judges mentioned above came to a definite conclusion that a charge of forgery was not maintainable and that they directed the Court below not to deal with any charge of forgery but to confine the trial to a charge of cheating. In Para. 2 of the order of Roxburgh and Majumdar JJ. as reproduced by me there is no final decision on the question of forgery. What their Lordships said is that it appeared to them having regard to the circumstances that a charge of forgery would be difficult to establish. It was merely an expression of opinion regarding the difficulty in establishing a charge of forgery upon the materials then before their Lordships. Their Lordships nowhere say that the charge of forgery had failed and that therefore the learned Magistrate should not investigate that charge. When the case was sent back for retrial it was tried de novo and fresh evidence was taken. Upon that fresh evidence the charge of forgery may well have been established. This contingency may have been in the minds of the learned Judges and it is for this reason perhaps they did not express any definite opinion that the charge of forgery had failed and did not expressly limit the retrial to the charge of cheating only. In this connection I would draw attention to the last paragraph of the order of remand. Lordships do not use the word 'cheating.' They used the words 'fraudulently dealt with.' Now, a person may be fraudulently dealt with by the commission of forgery or by some other offences. It seems to me therefore that the Court below was directed to rehear the entire matter and to decide whether on the evidence it could be said that the Maharajkumari had been fraudulently dealt with. If that is the correct interpretation, then it was open to the Magistrate to consider the allegations of forgery and of the use of a forged document. He has the power to investigate any other allied offences which the evidence might disclose as showing fraudulent dealing. In my opinion the order of remand did not limit the Magis. trate's scope of enquiry to one of cheating but it directed the Magistrate to consider all the evidence and to decide whether the evidence disclosed that the Maharajkumari had been fraudulently dealt with and whether such fraudulent dealing would amount to an offence punishable under the Penal Code. As I have said before the interpretation of the order of remand has presented some difficulty to me but I think that this is what their Lordships intended. That being so, I hold that the learned Magistrate was quite wrong in limiting the scope of his enquiry to one of cheating only. By reason of this error the whole trial has been vitiated.

[6] It was next argued by learned advocate appearing for the bank that this Court in revision should not easily interfere with an order of acquittal, and he has cited a case decided by me which lays down this proposition, Harendra Nath v. Bejoy Krishna, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal 171: 50 Or. L. J. 241. I am always averse to interfering with orders of acquittal but in the present case I consider that this; order should be set aside. There has been no real trial because the learned Magistrate has erred in interpreting the order of remand. The order of acquittal passed in such circumstances is really no order at all and in my opinion a serious error of law of this description which results is an order of acquittal should be taken notice of and such an order should be set aside. Further, the case is one of public importance. If the case be true, then it shows that a bank which is entrusted with public money has by forgery and cheating deprived its client of her dues. It is of utmost importance that banks should conduct their business in a scrupulously honest manner and when charges like these are brought against a bank there should be a proper investigation. reason the order of acquittal which is bad because of an error of law should be interfered with.

[7] Mookerjee J. has not expressed any opinion on the question whether the evidence established the charge of cheating or not, Mr. Das Gupta J. has expressed the view that the evidence adduced does not establish the charge of cheating. Having regard to the decision at which I have arrived I do not think that I should give expression to any opinion on the matter as it may impede a free decision of the matter by the learned Magistrate.

[8] I accordingly set aside the order of acquittal and remand the whole case for rehearing by the learned Magistrate in accordance with law and in the light of the observations made above. The rule is made absolute.

Criminal Revn. No. 1106 of 1949, D/- 3-2-1950.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 133 (1), para. 3 — Community - Meaning of -Public nuisance - Penal Code (1860), S. 268.

The word 'community' cannot be taken to mean residents of a particular house. 'Community' means something wider than that. It means the public at large or the residents of an entire locality.

[Para 5]

Where the finding was that the noise of the icecream making machinery constituted a nuisance to the residents of the building whose flats were adjacent to the place where the machine was running:

Held that this was not a finding that a public nuisance existed and consequently, S. 133 had no application.

(b) Interpretation of Statutes - Title of Chapter -

The title of a Chapter is not a determining factor regarding the interpretation of the provisions of a section in the Chapter but the title certainly throws conciderable light upon the meaning of the section and where it is not inconsistent with the section one should presume that the title correctly describes the object of the provisions of the Chapter. [Para 51]

S. S. Mukherjee and Prili Bhusan Barman

- for Petitioners.

N. K. Sen and J. M. Banerjes .- for the State. Chintaharan Roy - for Opposite Party.

Sen J.—This rule was obtained by the petitioners against whom an order has been passed in proceedings under s. 183, Criminal P. C., by the Sub Divisional Magistrate of Asansol directing the petitioners to refrain from working in icecream making machine between the hours of 11 P. M. and 5 A. M.

[2] The case against the petitioners briefly is as follows: The petitioners have a shop in certain premises where they make icecream. The icecream is made in a refrigerator. It is said that the noise created by the working of the refrigerator constitutes a public nuisance. The defence taken is that the noise made is not a public nuisance. The learned Magistrate, as I stated before, has passed an order restraining the petitioners from working this machine for a certain period. A motion was taken from this order to the Sessions Judge and he has confirmed it.

(3) The first point raised by learned advocate appearing for the petitioners is that the alleged nuisance, if it be a nuisance at all is not a public nuisance and therefore proceedings under 8. 139, Criminal P. C., to abate the nuisance are not permissible. His contention is that proceedings under S. 133, Criminal P. C., relate to public nuisance and not to private nuisance Next, he points out that the finding of the learned Magis. trate is not sufficient to show that the petitioners are creating a public nuisance.

(4) Learned advocate appearing for the State contends that the evidence discloses that a number of persons occupying the other portion of the premises where this business is carried on are disturbed by the noise and that therefore the Court below was right in holding that there was a public nuisance.

[5] In our opinion the contention urged on behalf of the petitioners must prevail. Section 133, Criminal P C., appears in Chap. x of that Code which is entitled "Public Nuisance." We realise that the title of a Chapter is not a determining factor regarding the interpretation of the provisions of a section in the Chapter but the title certainly throws considerable light upon the meaning of the section and where it is not inconsistent with the section one should presume that the title correctly describes the object of the provisions of the Chapter. As we have said before the Chapter is headed "Public Nuisances." Section 133 deals with various matters which constitute a public nuisance within the legal meaning of that term. We are concerned in this case with para. 3 of sub-s. (1) of S. 133, Oriminal P. C., which is as follows:

"That the conduct of any trade or occupation, or the keeping of any goods or merchandise, is injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community, and that in consequence such trade or occupation should be prohibited or regulated or such goods or merchandise should be removed or the keeping thereof regulated, or."

It is quite clear from this paragraph that the section aims at preventing any conduct which would be injurious to the health or physical comfort of the community. The word 'community' is used and that word has a definite meaning. The word 'community' cannot be taken to mean residents of a particular house. Community means something wider than that. It means the public at large or the residents of an entire locality. If we look at S. 268, Penal Code, we find the definition of 'public nuisance.' It defines 'public nuisance' as an act or illegal omission which causes any common injury, danger or nuisance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity. The words "public", "in general" and "vicinity" clearly indicate that there can be no public nuisance unless the general public of the locality is affected by the nuisance. In this case there is really no evidence to show that anybody was affected by the sound of this machine except some persons living in the same house. The evidence of some witnesses that the noise constituted a public nuisance is really evidence of opinion and as such is not admissible. We find further that the learned Magistrate in the last paragraph of his judgment does not find that the persons in general of the locality have been affected by the sound emanating from the machine. This is what he says:

"Taking all these various facts into consideration together with the impression I got when I made a local inspection I am of the opinion that the working of this icecream making machine at night in a congested area does constitute a nuisance to the residents of the building whose flats are adjacent to the place where the machine is running and hence order that the orders passed by the learned Magistrate under S. 133, Criminal P. C., on 20th April 1949, be made absolute with this exception that the second party should be restrained from working the machine after the hours of 11 P. M. till 5 A. M. Let my orders stand."

He finds that the noise constitutes a nuisance to the residents of the building whose flats are adjacent to the place where the machine is running. He does not even find that the noise of the machine constitutes a nuisance to all the residents of the building. He says that it constitutes a nuisance to the residents of the building whose flats are adjacent to the place where the machine is running. Now, a finding of this description is clearly not a finding that a public nuisance exists.

- [6] In these circumstances we are of opinion that S. 133, Criminal P. C., has no application and that the order of the learned Magistrate is bad.
- [7] We accordingly set aside the order and make the rule absolute.

Anila Bala Devi-Petitioner v. The Chairman, Kandi Municipality-Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 543 of 1949, D/- 21st November 1949.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 205—Pardanashin lady summoned under S. 349/500, Bengal Municipal Act—Appearance by pleader.

Where a pardanashin lady belonging to a very respectable family being summoned under S. 349/500, Bengal Municipal Act, applied to the Magistrate for permission to appear by pleader but the permission was refused:

Held, that the conduct of the Magistrate in insisting upon dragging a respectable lady to Court in a petty case cannot but be seriously condemned. (Para 5] Annotation: ('49-Com) Criminal P. C S. 205 N. 6.

C. F. Ali and S. B. Chaudhuri-for Petitioner.

Order.—This rule was issued at the instance of Anila Bala Devi, who is a Purdanashin lady belonging to a very respectable family and is called the Rani of Jemo Rajbati Madbyam Taraf. On the complaint of the Chairman of the Kandi Municipality, she was summoned under 8.349/500, Bengal Municipal Act (Act XV [15] of 1932, Bengal).

[2] Section 349 gives power to the Commissioners of a Municipality to require cleansing of sources of water used for drinking or culinary purposes. Section 500 deals with non-compliance with the orders of the Commissioners. The punishment in the present case at the maximum was a fine of Rs. 50.

[3] This respectable Purdanashin lady applied before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kandi for permission to appear by a pleader. What has surprised us most is why the Sub-Divisional Magistrate did not exercise his powers under 8. 205, Oriminal P. C., and allow the lady to do so. It seems various proceedings took place including an examination under orders of the Court by the Assistant Surgeon and allegations also against the Assistant Surgeon.

[4] The Sessions Judge was of opinion that the order of the Magistrate in not allowing the lady to appear by pleader was an improper order, but as it was not an illegal order he had no power to interfere with the same. The petitioner then moved this Court and obtained the present rule.

[6] Obviously, the learned Magistrate is not aware of two decisions of this Court, one in the case of Raj Rajeswari Debi v. Emperor, 15 Ori. L. J. 281: (23 I. C. 489 Cal.) and the other In re Mrs. Sukhalata Gupta, 21 O. W. N. 168, in which, even in stronger cases than this, Divisional Benches of this Court have allowed Purdanashin ladies to appear by pleader. In the first case mentioned the charges were very serious ones under 8s. 307, 308, 325 and 326, Penal Code, and the ladies were even permitted to appear through pleader in the Court of Sessions should the cases be committed. The other case was one under S. 420, Penal Code, and the lady was allowed to appear by pleader, till her conviction. We have not been able to understand at all why in a petty case involving at the most a fine of Rs. 50 the Magistrate insisted upon dragging a respectable lady to Court. Such conduct cannot but be seriously condemned.

(6) We make the rule absolute. The petitioner will be allowed to appear before the Magistrate by her pleader and in view of the unseemly wrangling that had gone on in the Magistrate's Court, the case should be tried by some other Magistrate selected by the District Magistrate.

Rajlakshmi Dasi w/o Tulsi Charan Das — Defendant 4—Appellant v. Sm. Susilabala Dasi and others—Respondents.

A. F. A. D. No. 1627 of 1945, D/- 9-2-1949, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Second Court, Alipore, D/- 22-3-1945.

Evidence Act (1872), S. 115—Estoppel by silence —Estoppel by record and estoppel in pais—Applicability—Held, on facts, that plaintiff was estopped by his conduct, from raising plea that detendant was not subordinate tenant—Decision of Small Cause Court as to under-raiyati tenancy of defendant in defendant's suit held not res judicata—Civil P. C., (1908), S. 11.

In proceedings for execution of a rent decree, one A purchased the holding in sult and after obtaining possession created under-raigati tenancy in favour of B. In execution of another rent decree one C purchased the interest of the tenant. In subsequent execution of a rent decree the holding was purchased by the decreeholders landlords. In these proceedings A and C were made parties. After the purchase by the landlords, B made an application for setting aside the sale. In the presence of A and C the sale was set aside and C got back the property. B's suit for contribution against A and C for realising a portion of the amount deposited by her to have the sale set aside was decreed by the Small Cause Court holding that under-rayati existed in favour of B. C filed a suit for declaration of title and for khas possession alleging that B had neither any title nor any right to possess a portion of the holding :

Held (1) that as the suit for contribution was brought in the Small Cause Court, the decision in that suit would not be res judicata in subsequent proceedings;

(2) the presence of the silent party C, the plaintiff, in the proceedings for setting aside the sale made out a much clearer case for estoppel than if he had been absent. The plaintiff had by his conduct induced B to proceed on the basis of a particular position deliberately taken up in the previous proceedings and he could not be allowed to approbate and reprobate. This conduct on the part of C may be taken to lead to a species of estoppel which may be described to be an intermediate one between estoppel by record and estoppel in pais. This doctrine applies not only to successive stages of the same suit but also to suits other than the one in which the position had been taken up; [Para 6]

(8) it must, therefore, he held that the plaintiff was estopped from raising the plea in the present suit that B was not a subordinate tenant as claimed by him.

Amrita Lal Mukherji —for Appellant. Shyama Charan Mitra—for Respondents. Judgment.—This is an appeal on behalf of defendant 4 in a suit brought by the plaintiff for declaration of her title to the disputed lands and for recovery of khas possession thereof.

[2] The only material question in issue in this appeal is whether Rajlakshmi Dasi, defendant 4, has got a subsisting right of tenancy or not. It will not be necessary to go into the series of litigations in respect of this holding but we may limit ourselves to the relevant facts pertinent for a decision of the only point which is raised in this appeal. The hold. ing in question originally belonged to three brothers Krisha, Rakhal and Tulei. The plaintiff Sushilabala is the daughter in-law of Krishna. Defendant 2. Sashi, is the son of Rakhal and defendant 4, the appellant before this Court, Rajlakshmi, is the wife of Tulsi. In 1929, the landlords obtained a rent decree against the three brothers in respect of arrears of rent due in respect of this holding. In the execution proceedings which followed one Bishnupada Chakravarty purchased the bolding in July 1991 and ultimately took possession. The next year, it is alleged by defendant 4, Bishnupada. Chakravarty had created an under-raiyati tenancy in favour of Rajlakshmi, defendant 4. The creation of this subordinate tenancy is denied by the plaintiff. There had been successive suits for the realisation of arrears of rent and in one of those, namely, Rent Suit No. 244 of 1938, brought by one set of landlords, namely, the Banerjie, impleading the other co-sharer landlords, a decree was obtained. In execution of the said decree the decree-holders, the Banerjis, purchased the holding. In these proceedings Sushila who is alleged to have purchased the interest of the tenant in execution of an earlier rent decree as also Bishnupada were made parties. After the purchase by the Barerjis an application for setting aside the sale was filed by Rajlakshmi under S. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, alleging that she was interested in the propety sold. In the presence of Sushila and Bishnupada among others the sale was set aside and Sushila got back the property. Subsequently, Rajlakshmi brought a suit for contribution against Sushila and Bishnupada for realising a portion of the amount deposited by her to have the sale set aside. Rajlakshmi's suit had been brought before the present suit was filed on 11th December 1943 in the Court of 2nd Munsif Baruipore. The suit out of which this appeal arises was filed by the plaintiff for declaration of her title and for khas possession on the allega. tion that Rajlakshmi had neither any title nor any right to possess a portion of the holding. While this suit was pending in the trial Court, the suit for contribution brought by Rajlakshmi was decreed. One of the issues raised in the said suit for contribution was whether the underraiyati as claimed by Rajlakshmi actually existed or not That point was decided in favour of Rajlakshmi. As the suit was brought in the Court of Small Causes, the decision in that suit would not be res judicata in the present proceedings. It was, therefore, necessary for the Court to go into that issue once again and to come to a decision on the facts and materials available.

[3] The trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's claim as regards khas possession on the ground that the plaintiff was estopped from raising the plea that defendant 4 Rajlakshmi was not a tenant under her as she had not raised any objection to Rajlakshmi filing the application for setting aside the sale which had been brought about by the Banerji landlords in execution of the decree in Rent Execution Case 368 of 1939 while executing the decree obtained in Bent suit No. 244 of 1938. The learned Munsif further held that on the evidence Rajlakshmi had been able to prove that the tenancy as alleged by her had been created by Bishnupada while his interest subsisted and the said tenancy had not been terminated legally.

Additional District Judge, 24-Perganas, by the plaintiff. The learned Additional District Judge came to the conclusion that on the facts of this case there could be no estoppel against the plaintiff and on the merits also he came to the conclusion that the dakhilas which had been produced by Rajlakshmi could not be believed. The decision on the question of the factum of the creation of the tenancy was rested solely on the point as to whether these dakhilas could be believed or not. In this view, the plaintiff's suit was decreed in full. The plaintiff's title was declared and she was held to be entitled to get khas possession of the suit-lands.

(5) The present appeal is on behalf of defendant 4. Rajlakshmi, and the questions to be considered in this appeal are (1) whether the plaintiff is estopped from questioning the subordinate tenancy and (2) whether on the facts, the tenancy has been proved to exist or not.

[6] As regards the question of estoppel, the relevant facts as regards the conduct of the parties in Miscellaneous Case No. 101 of 1941 for setting aside the sale in Rent Execution Case No. 368 of 1939 have already been stated. The application on which the miscellaneous case was started was one under S. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act. The judgment debtor or any person whose interests are affected by the sale are the only persons who are entitled to make an application. The claim put forward by Rajlakshmi was that she had a subordinate tenancy which would, if the sale were to be effective, be liable to be destroyed or affected. Sushila, the present plaintiff, was the person who was the judgment. debtor in that suit and it was her tenancy right which had been lost by the sale. Sushila had notice of the application. She did not object to the claim put forward by Rajlakshmi and got the fullest advantage of the result of the proceedings initiated by Rajlakshmi. It was not merely a case where Sushila had simply remain. ed silent but in addition she had got a substan. tive benefit as a result of the action initiated by Rajlakshmi. In Thomas Barclay v. Hossain Ali Khan, 6 C. L. J. 601, it was held that no general rule could be formulated as to when silence might be unlawful in transactions between men at arms length. The presence of the silent party, when the transaction takes place, makes a much clearer case for estoppel than when he is absent. Where a party fails to make his rights known (as in the present case, the right of Sushila to claim that Rajlakshmi held no subordinate tenancy in respect of this holding giving her a right to initiate the proceedings for setting aside the sale), where fairness and good conscience require that the party should do so to protect the interest of others that party cannot be heard as against them to assert such rights. The case on behalf of defendant 4 becomes the stronger as the plaintiff Sushila had obtained the benefit under the proceedings which had been started by the Rajlakshmi. While considering the effect of silence, the Court has further to consider whether there was any occasion for words and reasonable explanation of the silence. Here was a landlord who did not challenge the title of the applicant under S. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, and the presence of the silent party when the transaction took place made out a much clearer case for estoppel than if she had been absent. The present plaintiff had by her conduct induced defendant 4 to proceed on the basis of a particular position deliberately taken up in the previous proceedings and she cannot be allowed to approbate and reprobate. This conduct on the part of the plaintiff may be taken to lead to a species of estoppel which may be described to be an intermediate one be tween estoppel by record and estoppel in pais. This doctrine applies not only to successive stages of the same suit but also to suits other than the one in which the position had been taken up. A party must not be heard to allege things contradictory to each other. The doctrine of approbate and reprobate is not applicable in the case where there are clear provisions of a statute but applies only to the conduct of parties. On the facts of the present case, it is incontestable that the plaintiff is estopped from taking up a position which is altogether contradictory to the one which she had adopted in the earlier proceedings. It must therefore be held that the plaintiff is estopped from raising the plea in the present suit that defendant 4 is not a subordinate tenant as claimed by her.

[7] Apart from the question of estoppel, the judgment of the Court of appeal below cannot be supported on the fact of the proof of the tenancy. The learned Additional District Judge has proceeded only on certain circumstances about the proof as made available of the genuineness of the dakhilas. Whether the dakhilas are genuine or not ought not to have been decided without a reference to the conduct of the present plaintiff in the sale set aside case: namely, Miscellaneous Case No. 101 of 1941. It must have been known to Sushila, the present plaintiff, when the proceedings for setting aside the sale were in progress that Rajlakshmi had no title to the land, holding a subordinate tenancy, if the claim as made by the plaintiff is true. The present plaintiff however did not raise any objection to the claim as put forward by Rajlakshmi and that conduct on the part of Sushila is a very strong piece of evidence which would have to be taken into consideration for determining whether the tenancy has been proved or not. If that fact is taken into consideration apart from the question of estoppel, as already discussed above, I have no doubt that the Court of appeal below would have come to the conclusion that the fact of the subordinate tenancy having been created by Bishnupada was proved and made out.

[8] The appeal must accordingly be allowed. The judgment and decree of the Court of appeal below are set aside and those of the Court of first instance restored. The claim for khas possession is dismissed. The appellant will be entitled to the costs of this Court and of the Court of appeal below.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 162-Acquised's right

The accused must be furnished with copies of statements of witnesses recorded by the police under 8. 161 when the witnesses are examined in Court, whether 1950 C/45 & 48 the statements are recorded in full or whether the record consists only of the gist of the statements.

—for Petitioner.

Order.—This rule has been obtained by the accused who has been convicted of having committed an offence punishable under S. 14, Bengal Motor Spirit Sales Taxation Act of 1941, and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 300 in default to undergo simple imprisonment for 2 months. This sentence was upheld on appeal and the accused has obtained this rule.

[2] Several points were taken in the petition. applying for this rule. Only one point has been pressed, viz. that the accused has been prejudiced by reason of the refusal of the Magistrate to allow the accused to have copies of the statements made to the police by witnesses under S. 161, Criminal P. C. I have seen the learned Magistrate's reply to this ground. He says that the matter was not pursued on the date fixed. It seems however from the record that there were two applications; the first application apparently was a verbal one and it was rejected. Thereafter, there was a written application referring to the prior application and asking the Magistrate to grant copies. The learned Magistrate passed an order upon this latter application. It is difficult to say that the acoused did not pursue the application. Next, the learned Magistrate says that as the case depended on documentary evidence there was no question of prejudice to the accused. I cannot accept this view. Further the learned Magistrate says that the statements were "boiled statements" and therefore the accused was not entitled to them.

[3] I cannot agree with this view of the learned Magistrate. I do not know precisely what he means by "boiled statements". I presume he means statements not recorded verbatim but recorded briefly. Whether the statements were boiled or unboiled an accused is entitled to get copies thereof. These statements are very valuable to an accused person for the purpose of cross-examination and until the statements are seen it is not possible to say whether or not the accused has been prejudiced by the failure of the Court to give copies of the statements.

[4] I therefore set aside the order of conviction and sentence and direct that the accused be furnished with copies of statements made by the witnesses examined in Court before the police whether they were recorded in full or whether the records consisted only of the gist of the statements. The case started under

S. 14, Bengal Motor Spirit Sales Taxation Act of 1941 shall be retired from the stage at which the accused should cross examine the prosecution witnesses. The case shall be retried by some other Magistrate. The Rule is made absolute.

(a) Tenancy laws—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), Ss. 193, 153, Exception — Applicability—Suit to recover rent for fishery — Second appeal, whether lies.

Section 193, Ben. Ten. Act, attracts not merely the procedural part but also the substantive part of the Act and as such the provisions of S. 153 are applicable to suits for recovery of rent in respect of rights over fisheries. Where there is a clear conflict between the parties as regards the right to recover such rent, the exception to the first part of S. 153 applies to the case as the words 'land or some interest in land' in the exception mean the subject-matter in respect of which a claim for rent is made and hence second appeal to High Court is not barred. arise out of suits for recovery of rent in respect of a jalkar in the river Ichhamati which again is a part of a bigger jalkar called Jalkar Jainti Gachi. The defendants are the appellants in this Court. The plaintiffs claim rent at the rate of Rs. 1-6-0 per boat and 0-11-0 as per man. The claim is for the period 1344 to 1347 B. S. The plaintiffs claim the right to recover rent as lessees from 9½ As. as proprietors of the jalkar. The proprietors are said to be entitled to an exclusive right of fishery in the said jalkar. The remaining 6½ as. proprietors are not parties to the present suits. The plaintiffs however claim 16 As. rent on the ground that they have acquired a right

As. proprietors and by long possession. The basis of the claim is a settlement alleged to have been taken by the defendants from the plaintiffs. In the plaint the plaintiffs claim either rent on the basis of the settlement or in the alternative if the settlement is not proved, a fair compensation.

(1) that the plaintiffs are not the 16 As. proprietors and in the absence of the 6½ As. co.sharer proprietors the suits are not maintainable. (2) The plaintiffs' right to the several fisheries on the basis of the lease was disputed. (3) It was also asserted that the tenancy set up by the plaintiffs was unknown to law. (4) It was further pleaded that the defendants as members of the public are entitled to fish in the disputed fishery without payment of any rent, the fishery being a part of the public domain.

[3] The trial Court was of the opinion that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim 16 As. rent on the basis of their lease from 9½ As, proprietors and long possession. On this ground it was held that the 6½ As. proprietors were not necessary parties. The tenancy pleaded was held to be not unknown to law. The Court found that the settlement by the plaintiffs to the defendants for the period in suit was not proved. The Court, however, passed a decree for the amounts claimed on the ground that even in the absence of proof of tenancy right the plaintiffs should be entitled to damages from the defendants. The suits were accordingly decreed.

[4] The defendants preferred appeals to the lower appellate Court. The first lower appellate Court affirmed the decrees of the trial Court. It came to the finding that the defendants were not entitled to fish in the disputed jalkar as a part of the public domain. The plaintiffs' title to claim 16 as. rent from the defendants was found by that Court. The settlement with the defendants for the period in suit was not established but the decrees of the trial Court were maintained on the ground that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amount claimed either as rent or as damages.

[5] Against the decrees passed by the first lower appellate Court second appeals were taken to this Court. The second appeals were heard by our learned brother Mookerjee J. At the time of the hearing of the second appeals a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the respondents that the second appeals were incompetent being barred under the provisions of S. 153, Ben. Ten. Act read with S. 193 of the said Act. The preliminary objection was sustained by the learned Judge and the second appeals were dismissed on this ground. Leave to appeal under the Letters Patent was given by the learned Judge. Pursuant to the leave so granted these appeals were filed by the defendants.

[6] The first question which calls for our determination is whether the second appeals were competent. I have already stated that the first lower appellate Court overruled the defendants' plea that they had a right to fish in the jalkar as a part of the public domain and upheld the claim of the plaintiffs to recover either rent or damages from the defendants on the ground that the plaintiffs have established their 16 As. right to claim rent or damages in respect of the fishery. The question whether the appeals to this Court were barred or not, depends on the interpretation of Ss. 193 and 153, Ben. Ten. Act. Section 193 states that the provisions of this Act applicable to suits for the recovery of arrears of rent shall, as far as may be, apply to suits for the recovery of anything payable or deliverable in respect of rights of pasturages, forest rights or rights over fisheries and like. Our learned brother Mookerjee J. was of the opinion that S. 193 attracted not merely the procedural part but also the substantive part of the Act and as such the provisions of S. 153 were attracted to suits for recovery of rents in respect of rights over fisheries. On this ground the appeals were held to be incompetent. Before our learned brother no question was raised about the applicability of the exception to S. 153, Ben. Ten. Act.

[7] Conceding that S. 153, Ben. Ten. Act applies to suits for recovery of rent in respect of rights over fishery a further question as regards the applicability of the exception to the first part of S. 153 has to be considered. The exception applies in cases where "the decree or order has decided a question relating to title to land or to some interest in the land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto or

In the present case, the plaintiffs claim a right to recover rent in respect of their right to the fishery. The defendants dispute that right and set up in themselves an independent right to fish free of the obligation to pay any rent or damages to the plaintiffs. There is thus a clear conflict between the parties as regards the right to fish in the Jalkar. The first lower appellate Court decided this conflict in favour of the plaintiffs and against the defendants. Prima facie, therefore, the exception would apply. Mr. Paresh Nath Mukherjee, appearing for the respondents, however, contends that the conflicting claims between the parties do not relate to "title to land or to some interest in land" and as such the exception to the first part of S. 158 does not apply. This contention receives support from the literal sense of the words used. We are however to consider the general intention of the Legis. lature as manifest in S. 193 which seeks to incorporate all the provisions of Act relating to suits for recovery of rent. In my opinion, the Legislature never intended that the main part of S. 153 would be attracted and the exception thereto would be inapplicable. A liberal and reasonable construction has to be put upon the words used, a construction which would advance the clear intent of the Legislature in enacting S. 193. In my opinion, the words 'land or some interest in land" must be read as meaning the subject-matter in respect of which the claim to recover rent is made. If the words are so construed it follows that the exception to first part' of S. 153 applies to the facts of this case. This aspect of the matter was not placed before our learned brother. In my opinion the second ap. peals preferred to this Court were competent and the decision has to be set aside on that ground.

[8] The merits of the controversy were not gone into in this Court. Learned advocates appearing before us stated that instead of the case being remitted to our learned brother the same may be considered by this Court. We have accordingly heard the learned advocates on this point and proceed to record our opinion on the points raised.

[9] Mr. Roy Chowdhury appearing for the defendants-appellants first contends that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their exclusive title to recover rent in respect of the jalkar as a part of the exclusive fishery of the plaintiffs lessors. It appears from the judgment of the first lower appellate Court that the title of the plaintiffs lessors to the jalkar as their exclusive fishery was not seriously disputed before that Court. The question of the plaintiffs' title under the lease 5 annas proprietors was also not disputed. The only point which was canvassed was whether the plaintiffs as lessees only from 93 annas proprietors were entitled to realise 16 annas of the rent claimed. So far as this point is concerned there is a clear finding of the first lower appellate Court. The lower appellate Court points out that in the suit of 1889 the present plaintiffs asserted their exclusive title to the jalkar. The remaining 61 annas proprietors were parties to that suit. The trial Court decreed the plaintiffs claim. On appeal to this Court the title of 61 annas proprietors was, however, left open. The lower appellate Court has further found that since that suit the plaintiffs have been realising 16 annas rent from the fishermen including the defendants. Such possession following upon an assertion of 16 annas title of the plaintiffs is sufficient to support the finding of the first lower appellate Court so far as the plaintiff's right to recover 16 annas rent or damages is concerned. The first contention raised by Mr. Roy Choudhury must, therefore, be overruled.

[10] Mr. Roy Choudhury next contends that even assuming that the plaintiffs have the right to recover 16 annas rent from the defendants, in view of the findings of the first lower appellate Court that the plaintiffs have failed to prove settlement for the period in suit, the plaintiffs cannot claim rent from the defendants on the basis of an implied agreement spelt out by the first lower appellate Court. This contention may be correct. The first lower appellate Court has, however, based its decision on the ground that the plaintiffs are entitled to claim the amounts stated in the plaint either as rent or as damages. We have therefore to consider whether the plaintiffs can claim the amounts in suit as damages. Mr. Roy Choudhury contends that there was no basis for supporting the claim for damages which was sustained by the first lower appellate Court. In my opinion, this contention cannot be accepted. The first lower appellate Court has found that for a long series of years the plaintiffs have been realising from the defendants as also from various other fishermen rent at the rates claimed. It is a fair inference to draw that the fishermen including the plaintiffs were content to pay such rents because a margin of profit was left to them. As such if the claim has to be decreed as damages the amount claimed by the plaintiffs would fall short of the compensation which would be properly leviable from the defendants. In this view the decrees passed by the trial Court and affirmed by the first lower appellate Court cannot be said to be unjust. The contention raised by Mr. Roy Chowdhury on this head must also be overruled.

[11] There is, however, another point which requires consideration. As the basis of the plaintiffs' claim as decreed proceeds on the ground of damages, the plaintiffs are entitled to claim damages only for three years prior to these suits. The claim in these suits were for a period of four years from 1344 to 1347 B. S. The plaintiffs' claim can, therefore, be decreed only for three years prior to these suits, that is for the years 1345 B. S., 1346 B. S. and 1347 B. S. The decrees passed in these cases must be modified accordingly.

[12] The appeals are accordingly allowed in part. The plaintiffs respondents will have proportionate costs of the trial Court and of the first lower appellate Court. Parties will, however, bear their own costs before this Court and before our learned brother Mookerjee J.

In computing the period of limitation for an appeal under S. 3, Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act, 1911, against the decision of the Tribunal constituted under the provisions of Chap. IV, Calcutta Improvement Act (V [5] of 1911), the appellant is entitled to deductions under S. 12, Limitation Act. That section is applicable either by reason of S. 29 (2) or otherwise. [Para 5]

The time during which the application for the certificate that the case was fit for appeal, asked for under S. 3 (b) (i), Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act, was pending before the President of the Tribunal constituted under the Calcutta Improvement Act (V [5] of 1911) cannot be excluded in computing limitation under the provisions of S. 12 and there is no provision in the Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act for excluding this period of time in making the computation of the limitation for appeal against the decision of the Tribunal.

This period of time, however, can be excluded by the Court under the provisions of S. 5, as that section applies to such appeals. The whole of the period during which the appellant's application for certificate was kept pending through no fault of his should be excluded.

(d) Limitation Act (1908), Ss. 3, 29 (2) — Special or local law — Applicability of S. 3 — Effect of Amendment of 1922.

Where the Iccal or specials law is silent on the matter of limitation in respect of suits, appeals or applications contemplated or authorized by it, and some Article of Sch. I, Limitation Act, would cover them, the whole of S. 3 would be applicable. The amendment of S. 29 by Act X [10] of 1922, does not affect the position.

Article of Sch. I, either by altering the period of time mentioned in column 2 of the relevant Article of Sch. I or by prescribing a starting point different from that indicated in column 3 thereof, the whole of S. 3. Limitation Act is made applicable unless that section had been excluded by the special or local law, with the result that in that type of cases it would be legitimate for the plaintiff, appellant or applicant to invoke the aid of Ss. 4 to 25, Limitation Act, to save his suit, appeal or application from being dismissed for having been filed beyond the period of time prescribed. [Paras 15 & 17]

Obiter. - Where none of the Articles of Sch. I would have covered such appeals or applications and the local or special law itself prescribed limitation, Ss. 4, 9 to 18 and 22 are made applicable unless the special or local law excluded them or any of them, and the remaining sections, namely, 5 to 8, 19 to 21 and 23 to 25 are not to apply, unless they or any of them are made applicable by the special or local law. The very fact that a period of limitation had been prescribed by the local or special law would carry with it the power to dismiss the suit, appeal or application contemplated or authorised by the local or special law, if presented out of the time prescribed, provided that the suit, appeal or application had not been filed in circumstances which would have attracted any of the Ss. 4, 9 to 18 and 22, Limitation Act. R. C. Mitter J. - Premises No. 19, Surah Third Lane, was acquired for the purpose of Improvement Scheme No. IV (Maniktolla) made by the Board of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta and sanctioned by the Local Government under the provisions of the Calcutta Improvement Act, V [5] of 1911 B. C. The said premises was at all material times an open piece of land comprising an area of 10 bighas 12 cottas 36 square ft. There were two tanks within it. It abutted on the Sura third Lane which was to its East. It had a vista on a blind lane which stopped at a point of its Southern boundary, There was no roadway on the acquired premises in continuation of that blind laner The said blind lane is a public one. The plot is shown in the Key plan, BX. 1. On 27th August 1948 the Collector made his award, He gave Rs. 61548-14-0 for the land, Bs. 725 for the trees and Rs. 9841-1-0 as statutory allowance—total Rs. 71614-15 odd.

(2) The claimants, who are the respondents before us, were dissatisfied with the Collector's award. At their instance the Collector made a reference under the provisions of S. 18, Land Acquisition Act, to the Tribunal constituted under the provisions of Chap. IV, Calcutta Improvement Act (v [6] of 1911 B. C.). The Tribunal enhanced the compensation by Rs. 18913-1 0. The judgment of the Tribunal was delivered and signed on 30th January 1947, and the schedule of costs, which is to be taken as equivalent to a decree, was signed by the President of the Tribunal on 7th May 1948. The Province of Bengal after obtaining a certificate from the President of the Tribunal to the effect that the case was a fit case for appeal filed the Memorandum of Appeal in this Court on 26th August 1947 and the appeal was duly registered after the Stamp Reporter had reported on the day of the presentation of the Memorandum of Appeal that it was properly stamped, was in form and had been presented in time. At the time of the presentation of the Memorandum of Appeal, the appellant had doubts as to whether the appeal was still in time. So on the same day an application was filed with an officer of this Court under S. 5, Limitation Act for extending the time for filing the appeal. As, however, the Stamp Reporter reported that the appeal had been filed in time the appellant's advocate took back the said application.

(3) When the appeal was opened before us the respondent's advocate took a preliminary objection to the competency of the appeal on the ground that at the date of the presentation of the Memorandum of Appeal it was already barred by time. In these circumstances we allowed the appellant to move with due notice to the respondent's advocate the application which had been filed under S. 5, Limitation Act on the date when the Memorandum of Appeal was presented in this Court but which had been taken back by the appellant's advocate in the circumstances stated above.

Was in time on 26th August 1947, and if not (2) whether S. 5, Limitation Act can in law be invoked and (3) that if that section could be invoked whether sufficient cause has been made out for extending the period of limitation. The article in the schedule to the Limitation Act which has been made applicable to appeals against the decision of the Tribunal is Art. 156 of Sch. I, Limitation Act. According to that article, the period of limitation is 90 days from the date of the decree or order appealed from. Having regard to the fact that the decree is to bear the same date as the judgment bears the starting point of limitation would be the date when the judgment was delivered. This is admitted before us. The relevant dates for deciding the question as to whether, the appeal had been presented in time are as follows:

30-1-1947 ... Date of the judgment.

7-5-1947 ... Decree (schedule of costs) made and signed.

27-2-1947 ... Application by the appellant for certified copy of judgment.

29-3-1947 ... Court-fee payable for that copy as-

3-4-1947 ... The said court-fee paid.

15-5-1947 ... Copy of the judgment ready for deli-

13.5-1947 ... Application by the appellant for certified copy of the schedule for costs (decree).

16-5-1947 ... Court-fee payable for the same assessed and notified.

22-5-1947 ... Court-fee paid.

26-5-1947 ... Copy ready for delivery.

30.7.1947 ... Application by the appellant filed before the President of the Tribunal praying for a certificate under S. 3 (b) (l), Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act, XVIII [18] of 1911 I. C., that the case was a fit one for appeal.

23-8-1947 ... Certificate as prayed for given by the President.

26-8-1947 ... Memorandum of Appeal presented in this Court.

[5] The appellant is entitled to the following deductions under the provisions of S. 12, Limitation Act. That section would be applicable in any view of the matter either by reason of S. 29 (2), Limitation Act or otherwise: (a) the period between the date of the judgment and the date when the schedule of costs (decree) was signed (Beni Madhub v. Matangini Dassi, 13 Cal. 104 F. B.), (b) the period of time requisite for obtaining copies of the judgment and decree. In this case these periods overlapped each other to some extent. This was apparently overlooked by the Stamp Reporter when he made his report that the appeal had been presented in time. The periods of time which overlapped and which the Stamp Reporter apparently counted twice over are (a) the period between 27th February and 7th May 1947; (b) the period between 18th and 15th May. Bearing in mind these overlappings, the last date for filing the appeal would be 19th August 1947, after excluding the period of time allowable by S. 12. Limitation Act. The time during which the application for the certificate, asked for under s. 3 (b) (i), Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act was pending before the President cannot automatically be excluded in computing limitation under the provisions of S. 12 or any other section of the Limitation Act and there is no provision in the Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act for excluding this period of time in making the computation. This period of time, however, can only be excluded by the Court under the provisions of S. 5, Limitation Act, if that section is applicable to such appeals, namely, appeals allowed under the provisions of the Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act, XVIII [18] of 1911 I. C. This is the second and the more important question which we will not take up. The question is not free from difficulty.

[6] The Calcutta Improvement Act, v [5] of 1911 B. O., has to be classed as special and local law within the meaning of S. 29, Limitation Act. It was passed by the local Legislature and is to have operation in a portion of the Province. namely the municipal limits of Calcutta and its vicinity to which the Act may be extended by a notification of the Local Government. It is, also special law having for its purpose a special object to be accomplished through a special machinery provided for in the Act. There is, however, in this statute (Act V [5] of 1911 B. C.) no provision giving the right of appeal against the decision of the President or of the Tribunal, as the case may be. That right is given by Act XVIII [18] of 1911 passed by the Governor-General-in-Council — the Central Legislature. In a case concerning the Bombay Improvement Trust Act, IV [4] of 1898, on which the Calcutta Improvement Act, Act V [5] of 1911, B. C., is modelled, the Bombay High Court had decided in Hari Pandurang v. Secretary of State, 27 Bom. 424: (5 Bom. L. B. 431) that a Provincial Legislature is incompetent to confer a right of appeal to the High Court against an order passed under the provisions of that special or local law, as a Provincial Legis. lature has no power to modify or add to the Letters Patent of the Chartered High Courts. It is only by reason of Art. 44 of the relevant Letters Patent that the Central Indian Legislature has that power delegated to it by Parliament. It is for this reason that the Central Indian Legis. lature had to pass the Calcutta Improvement (Appeals) Act XVIII [18] of 1911, which came into force on the same date as Act v [5] of 1911 B. C. So in substance this Central Act supplements the said Bengal Act and the Central Act must therefore be considered also to be local and special law.

[7] In 1911, when Act XVIII [18] of 1911 (1. C.) came into force the relevant part of S. 29 (1) (b), Limitation Act stood thus:

Nothing in this Act.... shall affect or alter any period of limitation specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India."

The section stood in that form up to 1922, when it was amended by Act x [10] of 1922.

[8] Section 29 (1) (b), Limitation Act as it stood then would have made inapplicable the provisions of Ss. 4 to 25, Limitation Act, where the special or local law had specially prescribed a period of limitation for a suit, appeal or application permitted or authorised by that special or local law. If that was not done by the special or local law but such a suit, appeal or application came within the purview of any of the Articles of Sch. 1, Limitation Act, S. 29 (1) (b), Limitation Act would have been out of the way, on the ground that the special or local law had not specially prescribed a period of limitation. In such a case the general provisions of the Limitation Act would have been applicable. In the light of these observations the provisions of Act (XVIII [18] of 1911 I. C.) have to be examined.

[9] Section 3 of that Act gave the right of appeal to the High Court against the decision of the President of Tribunal established under the Bengal Act (V [5] of 1911) when sitting singly without any qualification, and against the decision of the Tribunal (the President sitting with the Assessors) with certain qualifications and on grounds of appeal similar to the grounds of Second Appeals provided for by the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 4 then enacts that

"rubject to the provisions of S. 3, the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, with respect to appeals from original decree shall, so far as may be apply to appeals under this Act."

[10] If this section stood without the qualifying words underlined (here italicised) above then there would not have been any doubt that Art. 156 of Sch. 1, Limitation Act would have applied proprio vigore to appeals given by S. 3 of the Act, for it has been held that the opening words of that Article-"Under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1909"—mean an appeal governed by the Code of Civil Procedure as regards procedure. Consequently, where the procedure prescribed for an appeal given or authorised by the special or local law is the procedure provided by the Code of Civil Procedure that Article would be applicaable (Aga Mohamed v. Cohen, 18 Cal. 221 at p. 224; Ramaswami v. Deputy Collector of Madura, 48 Mad. 51: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Mad. 407). In that case it could not have been said that the Special Act, namely Act XVIII [18] of 1911 had specially prescribed a period of limitation for appeals permitted by S. 3 of that Act. Section 6 then proceeds on to state that:

"In appeal under S. 3 shall be deemed to be an appeal under the Gode of Civil Procedure 1908, within the meanidg of Art. 156 of Soh. 1, Limitation Act."

[11] This provision in our opinion did away for the purpose of limitation the effect which the phrase in 8.4 which we have underlined, (here itali. cised) might have had otherwise. Besides, this section namely 6, may be looked at from another point of view that in substance it added by way of amendment an explanation to Art. 156 of Sch. I. Limitation Act, and so did not specially prescribe a period of limitation within the meaning of S. 29 (1) (b), Limitation Act, as it stood at the time of the passing of Act XVIII [18] of 1911 and up to 1922 when it was amended by Act X [10] of 1922. The result is that up to the time of the afore. said amendment of S. 29 (1) (b), appeals preferred to this Court by virtue of S. 3 of Act XVIII [18] of 1911 would have come within the purview of 8. 3, Limitation Act, and could not have been dismissed as bing filed out of the time limit prescribed by Art. 156 by ignoring and in disregard of any one of the provisions of Ss. 4 to 25, Limitation Act. During that period between 1911 and 1922 S. 5, Limitation Act, could in law be in a fit case invoked to his aid by an appellant to save his appeal filed out of time from being dismissed.

[12] The next point is whether the amend. ment of S. 23 (1) (b), Limitation Act, by the Act x [10] of 1922 has affected or altered this position.

[13] The weight of decisions of this Court before the amendment of S. 29 (1) (b) in 1922 was that if the special or local law had specially prescribed a period of limitation none of the general provisions of the Limitation Act namely Ss. 4 to 25-could be applied to a suit, appeal or application contemplated or authorised by the special or local law, unless the local or special law itself had made any or all of those general provisions of the Limitation Act applicable, though on a few occasions a different view had been expressed. In 1920 a Full Bench of this Court resolved the conflict by holding that in the face of the words of 8. 29:(1) (b), Limitation Act, as it stood then S. 14, Limitation Act, and -necessarily all the other general provisions of the Limitation Act,—S. 5 could not be applied to a suit filed under the provisions of S. 77, Registration Act. Kalimuddin v. Shahibuddin, 47 Cal. 300: 24 O. W. N. 4: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 14 F.B.). Shortly after this decision, the matter of amendment of S. 29 (1) (b) was taken up by the Legislature and the section was eventually amended in 1922. The Legislature thought fit to mitigate to some extent what it considered to be a hardship to the plaintiff, appellant or applicant caused by the rigorous interpretation of the original section. Generally speaking it did so by making S. S as also Ss. 4, 9 to 18 and 22, Limitation Act, pplicable unless hespecial or local law had excluded those or any one of those provisions, and the rest of the general provisions inapplicable, unless the special or local law had made themtapplicable, Neelratan Ganguly v. Empsror, 60 Cal. 571: (A.I.R. (90) 1938 Cal. 124: 34 Or. L. J. 633). In some of the cases decided after the amendment the view has been expressed that the amended section is applicable only when the special or local law had prescribed a period of limitation different from that prescribed in Sch. 1, Limitation Act. The case of Venkatramayya v. Venkata Subbayya, A.I.R. (33) 1946 Mad. 351: (1946-1 M.L.J. 271) has given expression to that view, as the following observations made therein would indicate:

"In S. 25A newely introduced into the Act (Madras Act IV [4] of 1938) though a right of appeal is given, no period of limitation different from the period prescribed by Sch. 1, Limitation Act, is indicated. Therefore the provisions of S. 29 (2) have no application so as to exclude the provisions of S. 5, Limitation Act, from being applied to appeals under the Special Act."

[14] Some of the decisions have also proceeded on the assumption that where none of the Arts. of Sch. 1, Limitation Act covers an appeal or application allowed by the special or local law and the local or special law prescribes the period of limitation, the case is to be considered to be a case where the special or local Act had prescribed a period of limitation different from that prescribed in Sch. 1, Limitation Act. On this basis, it has been laid down that the effect of S. 29 (2), Limitation Act (the amended section) attracts proprio vigore only the last part of S. 3, Limitation Act, which empowers the Court to dismiss suo motu a suit, appeal or application filed beyond time, and also 8s. 4, 9 to 18 and 22 but not the other sections of the Limitation Act mentioned in the first part of S. 8 unless the local or special law by its own provisions make any of those excluded sections applicable. The case of Nestratan Ganguly v. Emperor, 60 Cal. 571: (A.I.R. (20) 1938 Cal. 124: 84 Cr. L. J. 633) expounds this view. Strictly speaking although it is not necessary for us in this case to consider the correctness of these views, we may state that as at present advised we are not prepared to fully endorse them for the following reasons.

[15] Cases calling for decision would necessarily fall into four types, namely, (1) Where the local or special law is silent on the matter of limitation in respect of suits, appeals or ap. plications contemplated or authorised by it, and some Article of sch. I, Limitation Act, would cover them; (2) Where some article of that schedule would have covered such suits, appeals or applications, but the local or special law had prescribed a period of limitation different from that prescribed in the relevant Article of Sch. I, either by altering the period of time mentioned in col. 2 of the relevant Article of sch I or by prescribing a starting point different from that indicated in col. 3 thereof; (3) Where none of the Articles of Sch. I would have covered such appeals or applications and the local or special law itself prescribed limitation. In this head and the next we are omitting a reference to suits for the reason that the residuary Article, namely 120 of Sch. I would in any event cover any class and every class of suits contemplated or authorised by the local or special Act, and we would fall either within type (1) or (2). We are however including applications, because of the view taken in some cases that Art 181 of Sch. I, has a restricted application. (4) Where none of the Articles of Sch. I, would have covered such appeals or applications and the special or local law prescribed none. It is not necessary to consider this case for the purpose of our discussion.

[16] In the first type what is contained in S. 3, Limitation Act—the whole of it—would be applicable as before. The amendment of 1922 does not touch that case. The case we are considering would in substance fall within this type.

[17] In our view, S. 29 (2), deals with the second and third types and that in a distinctive manner. The first part of that section contemplates the second and the last part the third type. The language employed in the opening paragraph would suggest that - the use of conjunctive particle "and" and the repetition of the phrase "prescribed for appeal or application by any special or local law" in the second part. The result is that for the second type the whole of S. 3, Limitation Act is made applicable, unless that section had been excluded by the special or local law, with the result that in that type of cases it would be legitimate for the plaintiff, appellant or applicant to invoke the aid of Ss. 4 to 25, Limitation Act to save his suit, appeal or application from being dismissed for having been filed beyond the period of time prescribed. It seems to us that what has been overlooked in previous cases is that S. 3 does not provide simpliciter for dismissal of suit etc . . . filed out of time, but itself subjects that power to certain qualifications.

[18] In cases falling within the third type, Ss. 4, 9 to 18 and 22 are made applicable unless the special or local law excluded them or any of them, and the remaining sections, namely, 5 to 8, 19 to 21 and 28 to 25 are not to apply, unless they or any of them are made applicable by the special or local law. The very fact that a period of limitation had been prescribed by the local or special law would carry with it the power to dismiss the suit, appeal or application contemplated or authorised by the local or special law, if presented out of the time prescribed, provided that the suit, appeal or application had not been filed in circumstances which would have attracted any of the SS 4, 9 to 18 and 22, Limitation Act. Our view is that the amendment of S. 29 by Act X [10] of 1922 has liberalised the law as laid down before the amendment to the utmost extent in regard to the second type of cases and to a lesser extent with regard to the third type. We need not pursue the matter further, for, as we have already stated the case before us falls in substance within the first type.

[19] These being the results of amendment of 8. 29 of 1922, the effect which 8. 6 of Act XVIII [18] of 1911 (I. C.), had upon the question of limitation at the time when S. 29 (1) (b), Limitation Act stool in its original form, and which we have indicated in the earlier part of our judgment, has not therefore been in any way modified or affected by the amendment. In Venkstaramayya v. Venkata Subb iyya, A. I. B. (33) 1946 Mad. 351 : (1946-1 M. L. J. 271) referred to above, the position was the same as in the case before us, for the relevant provisions of the amending Act under consideration in that case was that an order made under Madras Act, IV [4] of 1988, refusing relief to a judgment-debtor was to be subject to appeal 'as if it was an order falling under S. 47, Civil P. C." That brought the appeal within the purview of Art 152 of sch. I Limitation Act. So it could be said that the Special Act had not prescribed a period of limitations at all, but an substance had the effect of adding an explanation to Art. 153 of sch. I, Limitation Ast.

[20] We accordingly hold that S 5, Limitation Act is applicable to an appeal against the decision of the President or the Tribunal, as the case may be, established under the Calcutta Improvement Act, V [5] of 1911 B. C.

[21] The next question is whether the appellant has shown sufficient cause for extension of time. [After discussing the facts his Lordship proceeded:] On these facts, we hold sufficient cause has been shown by the appellant and we extend time to 26th August. Certainly the appellant should have the period of time during which his application for certificate was kept pending through no fault of his, namely from 30th July to 23rd August. That is enough for the appellant.

[22] We will now proceed to determine the merits of the appeal.

[23] For the purpose of determining fair market price of the land, the Province of Bengal examined a valuation expert, Atul Chandra Bose and the claimants another expert, Hirendra Kumar Sarkar. In view of the depth of the plot, both the experts agreed that the market price has to be determined by adopting the belling method. The land had one road frontage. It abutted on a public street, namely Sura 3rd Lane. Bose started his belting from this lane. He took as his first belt a depth of 100 feet from the existing lane. The second belt was taken by him to be the next strip of 150 feet. The rest of the back land be put in his 3rd belt. He took the market value of the two tanks at half the value of the firm land. On this basis he reduced the whole area to 105.6582 solid first belt units. He added 5% for the vista on the blind lane and deducted 15% on account of the shape and size of the land. The net result was that he valued the land on the basis of 943 net solid first belt units. He took the price of an unit of first solid belt to be Rs. 650.

[24] Sarkar on the other hand took an imaginary roadway right across the land in continuation of the blind lane on the south on which the land had a vista. By this division the land was divided in three blocks A, B & C. Block A abut. ted on Sura 3rd Lane as it actually did, and blocks B & C abutted on the two sides of the imaginary roadway. These three blocks have been marked in the key plan, Ex. I. Thus by this disposition of the land, which it did not actually have, he conceived the land to be divided in such a fashion as to have three blocks, each of such blocks having a road frontage. whereas in fact the land was a compact block which had only one road frontage. He then proposed to apply the belting method to each of these three blocks A, B & C. He appraised thevalue of the tank at 2/3rds of the value of the firm land. He estimated the value for the solid front belt unit of block A at Rs 750 and of the solid first unit of blocks B & C at Rs. 650. The. Tribunal accepted this methol on which Sarkar proceeded for valuing the property, namely, by imagining a roadway and so making three blocks with road frontages. This method means that the land could have been developed to its best advantage by driving that roadway. The Tribunal, however, held that the tank was to be valued at half the rate of the firm land, that only 5 per cent. deduction ought to be allowed for the shape and size of the land, and the market value of the solid front belt unit of block A ought to be Rs. 675 and of that of blocks. B & O Rs. 576.

[25] If the valuation had to be made in accordance with the provisions of S. 23 (1), Land Acquisition Act as it stands in the Land Acquisition Act, there cannot be any question that the method of valuation on which Sarkar proceeded by imagining a road right across the acquired land could have been adopted. Market value is what an owner not obliged to sell would have got from a free buyer. Certainly afree buyer in estimating the price would have taken into consideration the fact that he would be able to develop the land,—to have the best. user,—by dividing it into three blocks by constructing a road across the land at the place suggested by Sarkar, but the question is whether such a method is allowable in view of provisions of the Calcutta Improvement Act. V [5] of 1911 (hereafter called the Act). The Board of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta can acquire land for carrying out the purposes of the Act either through private treaty or by compulsory acquisition through machinary of the Land Acquisition Act, 1834 (Ss. 68 and 69). But in case of compulsory acquisition, some of the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, are to be applied with the modifications indicated in the schedule to the Act (in S. 71 (b) of the Act). By reason of Art. 9 of that schedule "the market value of the land acquired for the Board of Trustees' shall be deemed to be the market value according to the disposition of the land at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under S. 6" of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894. Bearing this in mind, a Division Bench of this Court observed in cases of compulsory acquisition of land for the Board of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta that the "development method" is not permissible: Hindusthan Co-operative Insurance Society Ltd. v. Secretary of State, 56 Cal. 989: (A.I.B. (17) 1930 Cal. 230). The land has to be valued according to its disposition at the date of the declaration. It cannot be imagined to be in a different state than what it actually was at that point of time, nor can it be valued with reference to its possible future user by proposing a plysical change.

[26] The question which we are considering was considered in detail in at least three cases : (i) Harish Chunder Neogy v. Secretary of State, 11 C. W. N. 875, (ii) Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Secy. of State, 41 Cal. 967: (A.I.B. (1) 1914 Cal. 198) and (iii) Shrosbree v. Secy. of State, F.A. No. 192 of 1933—not reported—decided by Mitter & Patterson JJ. on 30th April 1936. These cases no doubt were not cases of compulsory acquisition under the Calcutta Improvement Act, but the point under consideration was dealt with in them. The first two were cases of compulsory acquisition under the provisions of the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1899 (Bengal Act III [3] of 1899) and the third was a case under the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923 (III [3] of 1923 B. C.). Section 557 (c) of the first mentioned Municipal Act and S. 475 of the second mentioned Act on the construction of which the decisions were given are expressed in the same language which runs as follows : We are quoting S. 475 of the Act III [3] of 1923 B.C.

"Any land or buildings which the Corporation are authorised by this Act to acquire may be acquired under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and for that purpose the said Act shall be subject to the amendment that the market value of any land or building to be acquired shall be deemed, for the purpose of clause first of sub-s. (1) of S. 23 of the said Land Acquisition Act, to be the market value according to the disposition of such land or building at the date of the publication of the declaration relating thereto under S. 6 of the said Land Acquisition Act."

[27] This is exactly the manner in which the Calcutta Improvement Act by its schedule has modified S. 23 (1) first of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.

[28] In Harish Chandra Neogy's case (11 O. W. N. 875) Mitra and Casperz JJ. observed as follows: "Section 557 of the Calcutta Municipal Act precludes any valuation based on the most advantageous disposition of the land." This passage directly and squarely hits the method adopted by Sarkar. There was no road running right across the land at the time of the declaration under 8.6 and none at any material time. The whole of the acquired premises was one compact block, abutting on one land, namely, the Sura third Lane, and so had only one road frontage. The attempt on the part of Sarkar was an attempt to create a more advantageous disposition of the land.

[29] This passage in Harish Chandra Neogy's case (11 O.W.N. 875) together with the passage immediately following, which was an illustration, was expressly approved by a Division Bench in Manindra Chandra Nandy's case: (41 Cal. 967 : A. I. B. (1) 1914 Cal. 198). In the unreported judgment, Mitter and Patterson JJ. noticed Manindra Chandra Nandy's case : (41 Cal. 967: A. I. B. (1) 1914 Cal 198) and said that 8. 475 of Act III [8] of 1923 which corresponded to 8. 557 (c) of Act III [3] of 1899 and which had modified the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, in that manner meant that where land is compulsorily acquired under the provisions of S. 475, Calcutta Municipal Act, in assessing its market value any user to which it could be put in future should not be taken into consideration. The last part of the judgment where the learned Senior Government Pleader's extreme contention was overruled does not mean that in compulsory acquisitions under S. 475, Calcutta Municipal Act, a claimant can value the acquired land by the adoption of the "development method.' That part means that where the acquired land is an undeveloped area its value can still be determined by a reference to the value of developed land in a nearby area, e.g., value of building sites-by deducting a reasonable estimated percentage.

[29] We accordingly hold that the tribunal has committed an error of law by ignoring, and by not giving proper effect to the provisions of cl. 9 of the schedule of the Calcutta Improvement Act by which S. 23 (1) first of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, was modified in the manner indicated above. It is not necessary for us to consider whether there was any legal difficulty under the Calcutta Municipal Act in having such a road across the land as Sarkar had imagined. We generally agree with what has been said in the decision under appeal on this point.

[30] The belting method adopted by Bose has, therefore, to be adopted. The respondent's advocate admits that in that event depth of the first belt is to be 100 feet from the road frontage on Sura 3rd lane, of the second 150 feet and the rest of the land is to be in the third belt as has been done by Bose. The Tribunal has given a deduction of 5 per cent. for size and shape, have taken the value of tank at half of the first land and valued the first solid belt abutting on Sura 3rd lane at Bs. 675 per unit. These are all findings of fact and so cannot be reviewed by us. The respondent can at most press for a remand on one point only, namely, what should be percentage of increase by reason of the vista on the blind lane. We have however, the power to review the evidence on the record and come to a finding ourselves. On the evidence we find 5 per cent. increase on this head to be sufficient. The land acquired is of considerable size, and the blind lane touches a very insignificant portion of the land. The vista is not a wide one.

aside the award of the Tribunal and remand the case in order that the amount of the compensation may be assessed in accordance with our findings and conclusions after checking the figures. This would only involve the determination of the number of net solid first belt units, according to the belting method adopted by Bose, the price for each solid first belt unit being Bs. 675. The respondents must pay to the appellant the costs of this appeal.

Non-compliance with the provisions of S. 161 (3), however, does not make the evidence of the witnesses inadmissible though it is a matter which the Court is entitled to consider when dealing with credibility.

Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherji and Nripendra Nath Dutt Roy — for Appellant. Ajoy Kumar Basu — for the State.

Harries C. J. — This is an appeal from a conviction under S. 307, Penal Code, and a sentence of six years' rigorous imprisonment.

Manishi Kumar Das — for Complainant.

[2] The charge against the appellant was that he on 13th July 1949 had attempted to murder his cousin, Kumud Chandra Patra, P. W. 1. The trial took place before a learned Assistant Sessions Judge sitting with a jury. The jury unanimously returned a verdict of guilty under S. 307, Penal Code, and agreeing with that verdict the learned Assistant Sessions Judge sentenced the appellant as I have indicated.

[3] The facts of the case were comparatively simple. The appellant and the injured man, Kumud, were cousins and apparently were cosharers in a tank near the village. Alongside this tank ran a roadway or a pathway and it is said on behalf of the prosecution that the appellant claimed the sole right in this approach to the tank. His right was disputed by the injured man and this, it is alleged, led to a quarrel between them sometime before the occurrence. On the day of the occurrence, namely, 19th July 1949 the injured man Kumud was standing at the edge of the water of the tank washing his hands when it is alleged that the appellant came from behind and struck Kumud with a big bhojali causing a severe bleeding injury. Kumud turned round, but the appellant showered further blows on him. Kumud being injured, amongst other places, on his hands as he was endeavouring to ward off the blows. The prosecution states that as many as 17 injuries were caused and Kumud was felled to the ground.

[4] The shouts of the injured man brought a number of persons to the scene and on seeing these persons the appellant, it is said, ran away. In due course information was given to the police and this case was instituted against the appellant.

[5] The defence was that the injured man had been injured by the appellant's wife who had to defend herself against an attempt by Kumud Patra to outrage her modesty or worse.

[6] There were a number of eye-witnesses or people who heard cries and rushed to the scene. These persons appear to have been examined by the police under S. 161, Criminal P. C., but the police had not complied with the mandatory provisions of that section.

[7] Section 161, Criminal P. C., is in these terms:

"(1) Any police officer making an investigation under this chapter or any police officer not below such rank as the Provincial Government may, by general or special order, prescribe in this behalf, acting on the requisition of such officer may examine orally any person supposed to be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case.

(2) Such person shall be bound to answer all questions relating to such case put to him by such officer, other than questions the answers to which would have a tendency to expose him to a criminal charge or to a penalty or forfeiture.

(3) The police officer may reduce into writing any statement made to him in the course of an examination under this section, and if he does so he shall make a separate record of the statement, of each such person whose statement he records."

[8] An investigating officer is not bound to record the statements of a witness. That seems clear from sub-s. (8) which says that the police officer may reduce into writing any statement made to him. However, the sub-section provides that if he does reduce statements into writing he must make a separate record of the state. ment of each of the persons whose statements he records. In other words, if a police officer examines a number of witnesses he cannot record a condensed version of the examination of all of them or a precis of what the witnesses are supposed to have said. He must record what each witness says. He cannot for example record that witnesses A, B and C said so and so. Neither can he lawfully do what police officers frequently do, that is, record the statement of A and then add that witnesses B and O corroborate what A says. If he purports to reduce the statements into writing he must record the statement of each of the witnesses whom he examines.

[9] In this case, as I have said, although a number of witnesses were examined their exact statements were not recorded. Whilst the investigating officer was being cross-examined an attempt was made to prove from him certain statements which the witnesses must have made in their examination under S. 161. The prosecution objected because the statements had not been separately recorded and were in a condensed or what has been referred to in this Court as a boiled form. The learned Assistant Sessions Judge upheld this objection in an order dated 16th November 1949 and observed as follows:

"I have gone through the police diary; no statements appear to have been recorded by the S. I. (P. W. 12) under S. 161, Criminal P. C. What he did was only to note the gist of the statements of the persons examined by him. So the learned pleader for the defence cannot be allowed to cross-examine the said witnesses with reference to the so-called statements of the prosecution witnesses named above in the police diary under S. 162, Criminal P. C. The prayer is refused."

[10] There appears to be no doubt that a number of witnesses were examined and the police purported in the diary to give the gist of the statements of the witnesses examined. Section 161 (3) of the Code makes it clear that if a police officer reduces into writing any statement made to him in the course of the examina. tion he shall make a separate record of the statement of each person whose statement he records. He cannot give the gist of what a witness or witnesses have said. If he has recorded the gist then he has improperly recorded the statement which he should have recorded in full in the case of each witness under sub-s. (8) of S. 161. It appears to me in this case that the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that a precis or gist of statements were recorded and that is contrary to S. 161 (2).

[11] It has been held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that though the police are bound to record the statement as made, nevertheless if such is not done the evidence of the witness does not become inadmissible. The cases of their Lordships of the Privy Council are Pulukuri Kottaya v. Emperor, 51 C. W. N. 474: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. C. 67: 48 Cr. L. J. 533) and Zahiruddin v. Emperor, 51 C. W. N. 555: (A.I.R. (34) 1947 P. C. 75: 48 Cr. L. J. 679). Their Lordships however in both these cases pointed out that the failure to comply with the provisions of S. 161, Criminal P. C., might throw very grave doubt upon the evidence of the witnesses and it was a matter which the Court was entitled to consider when dealing with the credibility of the witnesses.

[12] This point as to the admissibility of evidence of witnesses whose statements have been improperly recorded by the police was considered by a Bench of this Court in the case of Lakshman Chandra v. Emperor, 52 C. W. N. 401 : (A.I.B. (35) 1948 Cal. 278: 49 Cr. L. J. 469). The Bench held that failure to supply copies of statements of witnesses recorded under S. 161, Criminal P. C., either because the statements were lost, destroyed or were recorded in a boiled form in contravention of sub-s. (3) of that section does not make the evidence of those witnesses inadmissible. The Bench however held that in such circumstances if the trial is by a jury, the Judge should give proper directions to the jury as regards the weight to be given to such evidence which the accused had no opportunity to test by cross examination in some particulars. If such statements were deliberately destroyed or were recorded in a boiled form in contravention of law, that would be tantamount to withholding of evidence by the prosecution and a presumption might be raised under S. 114, Evidence Act, 1872, that the evidence if produced would have gone against the prosecution.

[13] The statements of witnesses were undoubtedly recorded in this case in a condensed or, if I may use the words of the Bench which decided Lakshman Chandra Ghose's case (52 C. W. N. 401 : A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 278 : 49 Cr. L. J. 469), in a boiled form contrary to the express provisions of sub-s (3) of 8. 161. This Bench held that where such was the case the jury should be directed that the police had not observed the law and that the jury might, if they thought proper, presume under 8. 114, Evidence Act, that if these statements had been recorded the witnesses might well have been flatly contradicted.

[14] We are bound by the case of Lakshman Chandra Ghose v. Emperor (52 O. W. N. 401: A. I. R. (95) 1948 Cal. 278 : 49 Cr. L. J. 469) and therefore we are bound to hold that in this case where no reference whatsoever is made to the manner in which these statements were recorded in the charge to the jury, the charge is defective. The jury should have been warned as to the danger of accepting these witnesses in the circumstances as witnesses of truth and should have been told that it was open to them, if they thought proper, to disbelieve these witnesses on the assumption that their statements, if properly recorded, would have contradicted their evidence in Court. It appears to me that in the present case the failure to warn the jury of the effect of the non-compliance with sub s. (8) of S. 161 vitiates the verdict. The verdict may well have been otherwise if the jury had been warned and properly directed concerning their duty in approaching the evidence for the prosecution. That being so, the verdict cannot stand and must be set aside.

[15] It appears to me that this is a case in which there should be a retrial. There is a good deal of evidence, but that is hotly denied and the defence have put forward a very different version. It is a case pre-eminently fitted for decision by a jury and that being so I think a new trial should be ordered.

[16] I should like to mention that when the new trial is held the learned Judge presiding must carefully consider whether or not cross examination to contradict the witnesses is possible from the condensed or boiled statements recorded by the police. If it is possible from those condensed statements to make out what a witness said to the police then such can be put to the witness to contradict him or her under 8. 169, Criminal P. C. On the other hand, if the actual statements of the witnesses cannot be deduced from the gist which was recorded then the learned Judge must treat the case as one in which statements of witnesses were recorded but in contravention of S. 161 (3) of the Code, and consequently must direct the jury as provided for in the case of Lakshman Chandra Ghose v. Emperor, 52 C. W. N. 401 : (A I.R. (95) 1948 Cal. 278: 49 Cr. L. J. 469) and in accordance with the observations which I have made in this judgment.

[17] If, however, the witnesses can be cross examined and confronted with what must have been their statements to the police in order to contradict the witnesses then of course the jury can draw no adverse inference from a failure properly to record the statements. The learned Judge should consider the statements as recorded and come to the conclusion whether or not they can be intelligently put to the witnesses. If they can be put then it cannot properly be held that the statements were improperly recorded in violation of S. 161 (3). For the purposes of this judgment, I must assume that they were improperly recorded by reason of the order which the learned Judge passed forbidding any questions on these statements.

[18] Before concluding I should like to point out that if it is possible to deduce from the gist recorded what witnesses said then what each witness said must be put to the witness if it is intended to contradict the witness by use of such statement. It is not sufficient to obtain proof of the statements from the investigating officer and then ask the jury to hold that the witnesses have contradicted themselves. A previous statement in writing cannot be used to contradict a witness unless that witness has had an opportunity of dealing with the statement and explaining it away if possible. This is clear from S. 145, Evidence Act, which provides:

"A witness may be cross examined as to previous statements made by him in writing or reduced into writing, and relevant to matters in question, without such writing being shown to him, or being proved; but if it is intended to contradict him by the writing, his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him."

[19] I merely point out the proper procedure to be followed because in the hearing the first attempt to use these statements if they could be used at all appears to have been made in the cross-examination of the investigating officer.

[20] In the result therefore this appeal is allowed and the verdict of the jury and the conviction and sentence are set aside and the appellant will be retried by a Judge of the rank of Sessions Judge, other than the Judge who presided over the original trial, sitting with a jury. In this trial the statements of witnesses if they can be deduced from the gist must be allowed to be put to the witnesses to contradict them. But if the statements of witnesses cannot be deduced from the gist then in his charge to the jury the learned Judge will deal with the failure properly to record these statements as directed in Laksh. man Chandra Ghose's case (52 O. W. N. 401: A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 278: 49 Cr. L. J. 469) and in this judgment. The accused should be furnished with a copy of this gist of the statements whether such can or cannot be used in crossexamination. The fact that the statements cannot be used is no ground for denying the right of the accused to these statements.

[21] The appellant will continue on the same bail until the commencement of the retrial. Whether he will continue on bail during that trial will be a matter for the learned Judge presiding.

Bhujagendra Bhusan Banerjee — Plaintiff — Appellant v. Dist. Board of 24-Parganas, Alipore—Defendant—Respondent.

A. F. A. D. No. 1090 of 1946, D/- 16-3-1950, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Second Court, Alipore, D/-8-12-1945.

(a) Bengal Service Rules, Part I, R. 46 - Time scale - Increments above efficiency bar when can be claimed-Fundamental Rules, R. 25.

Where an efficiency bar is prescribed in a time scale, the increment next above the bar shall not be given without specific sanction of the authority empowered to withhold increments. Hence, where a servant of a District Board drew for some time a salary above the limit of the efficiency bar without any express order of the Chairman of the District Board sanctioning the removal of the bar nor did the Board acquiesce in the position that the servant had been permitted to cross the efficiency bar, the principle of the above rule will apply and the servant will not be entitled to claim the arrears of pay with respect to increments above the efficiency bar. [Para 4]

(b) Bengal Local Self-Government Act (III [3] of 1885), S. 35A — Rules under — Provident Fund Rules, R. 5A — Scope of — Payment of additional provident fund whether discretionary.

The payment of additional amount of provident fund under R. 5A is absolutely at the discretion of the District Board and the amount mentioned in the rule is not imperative if the District Board chooses to exercise the discretion. The rule only fixes a maximum that could be paid: A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 447, Rel. on.

By its resolution a District Board granted to the plaintiff, a retired servant of the Board, additional provident fund 'due to him' but the Board did not decide what would be the rate of additional contribution nor did it decide for what period it was to be paid. On the strength of this resolution the plaintiff sued for recovery of additional provident fund:

Held, that the claim was premature as the Board by its resolution merely conceded in principle that the plaintiff would get additional provident fund but did not in fact exercise the discretion under R. 5A by fixing the rate and certain other matters which were essential to the exercise of the discretion. [Para 6]

C. S. Sen and Kamjit Mookerjes-for Appellant. Purnendu Sekhar Bose-for Respondent.

Guha J.—This appeal by the plaintiff arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of increased pay amounting to Rs 1327-8-0 and for additional provident fund dues of Rs. 1250. The facts which gave rise to the present litigation are briefly as follows.

[2] The plaintiff was an employee under the District Board of the 24-parganas who are the defendants in this suit. He joined the service of the District Board on 1st June 1915. On 1st January 1920 a time scale for clerks was introduced, the time scale being Bs. 45/3/75 (efficiency bar) 22-100. On 1st January 1922, the plaintiff was allowed to draw the pay of Rs. 66 and in June 1924 his pay became Es. 72. He continued to draw the same say till June 1928, when he was transferred to Basirhat. From 1st August 1928 he drew pay at Rs 82-8-0. From 1st June 1930 he drew pay at Rs. 87-8-0 but the amount was reduced by Rs 2-8-0 with effect from 1st July 1930. From 1st July 1930 to 23rd April 1940 when he retired from service he continued to draw pay at the rate of Rs. 85 without having any increment during this period of about ten years. The plaintiff's grievance was twofold. He claimed that some arrears in pay were due to him under the rules and secondly, he claimed that though by a resolution of the District Board on 22nd May 1940 confirmed on 19th June 1940 he was entitled to additional provident fund money, no such sum was paid to him till the institution of the suit which was filed on 7th May 1949. The defence of the District Board was briefly to the effect that the plaintiff was not entitled to any arrears of pay as he had not crossed the efficiency bar. As regards the claim in respect of the provident fund, the defence inter alia was that the claim was premature. On both the points the lower Courts have found in favour of the defendant and dismissed the plaintiff's suit accordingly.

[3] It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the decision of the Courts below on both the

[4] We propose to take up the first point about the plaintiff's right to recover the arrears of increment of pay as claimed by him. It will be noticed from the time scale mentioned above that efficiency bar is reached at the stage of Rs. 75. It has been held by the Courts below upholding the contention of the defendant District Board that in the circumstances of the present case the efficiency bar was not crossed by the plaintiff. Where an efficiency bar is prescribed in a time scale, the increment next above the bar shall not be given without specific sanction of the authority empowered to withhold increments. That is the provision contained in Fundamental R. 25 which corresponds to R. 46 of the Bengal Service Rules Part I. The principle contained there will govern the present case. In the present case there was no specific order by the Chairman of the District Board sanctioning the removal of the bar. It is argued however, on behalf of the appellant that though there was no such order in so many words there are circumstances which unmistakably go to show that the District Board authorities treated the case as if the bar had been removed. It is pointed out that on 1st August 1928 the plaintiff was allowed to draw pay at a rate above Rs. 75 and this, it is argued, is consistent with the position that the District Board authorities did in effect waive the bar. In this connection our attention has, however, been drawn to the series of correspondence that passed between the Chair. man of the District Board, 24 Parganas, and the Chairman of the Local Board, Basirhat, various office notes regarding fixation of the pay of the appellant, and the series of orders passed by the Chairman of the District Board upon them. On a consideration of all these letters and orders it appears abundantly clear that the appellant drew pay at rates higher than Rs. 75 in spite of the directions of the Chairman of the District Board. There is a letter by the Chairman of the District Board to the Chairman of the Local Board pointing out clearly that the removal of the efficiency bar required the sanction of the Chairman of the District Board and that the appellant's pay should be drawn below the efficiency bar pendingthe order of the Chairman of the District Board. This position was pointed out again and again. but somehow or other the directions of the Chairman of the District Board were not carried out and the appellant continued to draw pay at rates higher than what he was strictly entitled to. There is another circumstance which goes to show that the District Board did not acquiesce in the position that the appellant had been permitted to cross the efficiency bar. It is pertinent in this connection to refer to certain resolutions passed by the District Board. Reference may inthis connection be made to the resolution No. 507 passed by the Board on 22nd May 1940 and toresolution No. 530 of the Board passed on 19th June 1940. Resolution No. 507 runs thus :

"Considered the prayer of Babu Bhujagendra Bhusan-Banerjee, Clerk, on the following points:

(5) Granted pay at the increased rate with all arrear increments due."

The proceedings of the meeting held on 22nd May 1940 came up for confirmation on 18th June 1940, and the relevant resolution, viz., resolution No. 530 passed on that date shows that the word-"granted" was a mistake for "refused". Reading the two resolutions together it is clear enough that the District Board did not consider that the appellant had crossed the efficiency bar and the District Board decided that the plaintiff was not entitled to arrear of increment at the increased rate. Whatever the reason, the District Board did not choose to claim any refund from the plaintiff. That, however, was in the nature of some indulgence or sympathy shown to the plaintiff, but that circumstance cannot be turned into an argument in support of the plaintiff's. claim. In our opinion there is no sufficient reason for us to interfere with the decision of the lower Courts dismissing the claim of the plaintiff for arrear increment.

[5] The next point that falls for determination. is whether the lower Courts were justified in. rejecting the plaintiff's claim for additional provident fund money. The Courts below have held that this claim was premature. It is necessary in this connection to refer again to resolution No. 507 passed by the District Board on 22nd May 1940. Item (7) of the resolution runs as follows: "Granted additional provident fund due to him (i. e., Bhujagendra Bhusan Banerji)". This part of the proceeding, it may be mentioned in passing, was confirmed in the meeting held on 19th June 1940. On the strength of the resolution it has been urged on behalf of the appellant that there is absolutely no reason why after the District Board had finally passed and con. firmed a resolution granting additional provident.

fund due to the plaintiff, he should be debarred from getting the amount. At the first sight the argument looks attractive but on further scrutiny we are of opinion that the prayer of the plaintiff for additional provident fund money cannot be allowed. Reference may, in this connection, be made to the case of District Board of Khulna v. Jogesh Chandra Basu, 47 C.W.N. 823: (A.I.R. (30) 1943 Cal. 447). The matter under consideration depends upon proper construction of R. 5A regarding additional contribution. This rule was construed in the case referred to above and it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that the payment of additional amount of provident fund was absolutely at the discretion of the District Board and that the amount mentioned in the rule was not imperative if the District Board chose to exercise the discretion. The rule only fixed a maximum that could be paid.

[6] Mr. Sen appearing for the appellant argued that by virtue of the resolution No. 507, item (7) referred to before the case cited above does not stand in his way. His argument boils down to this: By that resolution the District Board decided practically everything in regard to the additional provident fund money claimed by the plaintiff and all that remained to be done was to make a simple arithmetical calculation. We are unable, however, to construe the resolution in the way that Mr. Sen has invited us to do. By the resolution the plaintiff was granted additional provident fund due to him. The phrase "due to him" is significant. It appears to us that by the resolution what was meant was this: The District Board decided that the plaintiff was entitled to additional provident fund but what exactly was due to him was dependent upon certain other circumstances which were not merely of ministerial calculation. The Board conceded in principle that the plaintiff would get additional provident fund money but the Board did not decide what would be the rate of additional contribution nor dit it decide for what period it would be paid. These were matters which were left undecided and these again were matters which could not be decided on mere calculation because in respect of these matters the Board would have to exercise certain discretion which, we hold, has not yet been exercised by it. This being so, we are inclined to hold that the claim of the plaintiff in regard to additional provident fund money is premature as held by the Courts below, though the grounds on which we have come to this decision are not exactly the same as those of the lower Courts.

[7] The result, therefore, is that both the points urged before us on behalf of the appellant must be decided against him.

[8] The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Jagadish Chandra Ghose - for Appellant.

Dr. N. C. Sen Gupta with Sudhansu Bhusan Senfor Respondents.

Sarkar J .- This is an appeal from an order made by the learned Subordinate Judge at Asansol, directing an attachment before judgment. The suit is on a loan which was said to have been advanced by the plaintiffs to one Kaliprosad Jhunjhunwalla who was in charge of a business. Kaliprosad being dead the suit has been brought against the members of the family which carried on that business.

[2] The plaintiffs applied for attachment before judgment in respect of their claim in this suit of a certain decree which had been passed in favour of defendant 1 who is the senior most member of the family, on 28th January 1948. Notice was issued by the learned Subordinate Judge which was served by affixation at the door of the residence of the defendants. The defendants' case is that they did not get this notice and in those circumstances they did not appear to show cause. The learned Subordinate Judge thereupon passed an order for attachment before judgment ex parts. Subsequently, the defendants made an application that they should be allowed to show cause and on that application the order appealed from was made.

[3] Learned Advocate appearing for the appellant has taken two points. The first point taken was that the provisions of O. 38, R. 5, Civil P. C., had not been complied with. His contention is that an order for attachment before judgment can be made only under 0.38, R. 6 and in order that that rule may apply the conditions laid down in R. 5 must be satisfied. The point that is made is that the notice that was issued by the learned Subordinate Judge before he ordered attachment before judgment was a general notice. It did not specify that the defendants would have either to furnish security in case the application succeeded and that on their failing to furnish security attachment before judgment would issue. Learned advocate for the appellant has drawn our attention to the case of Prag Nath v. Mt. Indra Devi, A. J. R. (21) 1934 ALL. 456 : (148 I. C. 509). In this case Sulaiman C. J., and King J. said that non-compliance with Rr. 5 and 6 of O. 38 amounted to an irregularity, and the order passed without complying with these rules was as both irregular and objectionable. They, however, went on to hold that the order was not in those circumstances necessarily ultra vires or void ab initio. Their decision in that case was that the order for attachment before judgment should be set aside, but a conditional attachment should be maintained and the case should be sent back to the Court which levied the attachment to go into the question after issuing a proper notice in accordance with the rules. I think that that is the most that the appellant can get in this case. This point about the notice being defective was not raised in the Court below and it strikes me that if this irregularity was really felt as a hardship, it would have there been taken. Dr. Sen Gupta appearing for the respondents made an offer that he was prepared to accept security here if security was offered. Learned advocate for the appellant was, however, in the absence of his client not in a position to make any offer as to security.

[4] The next point that was raised was that the suit was defective inasmuch as the plaint showed that the money had been borrowed by Kaliprosad who it appears is now dead and that Kaliprosad was the son of defendant 1. It is contended that so long as the father is alive it is not possible under the Hindu law for the son to incur a debt which would be binding on the joint family. It appears to us that as to whether Kaliprosad had the power to bind the entire family by a debt incurred by him is a question of fact. He could have been held out as a person who had the power to incur a debt for the purposes of the entire family. We do not propose at this stage to go into that question of fact. The learned Judge in the Court below had held on the prima facie evidence before him that Kaliprosad had power to bind the whole family and it has not been shown to us that that decision is in any way wrong. In those circumstances the second point taken on behalf of the appellant must feel behalf of the appellant must fail.

(5) In the view that we have taken of the judgment of Sulaiman C. J. and King J., we think that we should make in this case an order as was there made. We would therefore set aside the order for attachment and send the case back to the Subordinate Judge, Asansol, to proceed with the matter in compliance with 0.38, Br. 5 and 6. In the meantime, however, there will be a conditional attachment of the property which has already been attached and this will last till the final order is made by the learned Subordinate Judge. As to costs we do not think that any order for costs should be made in this appeal for this point was not taken in the Court below. The only point that the respondents will be entitled to raise in the Court below will be as to the amount of security to be furnished. They will not be entitled to contend that the order for attachment before judgment should not be made.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 517, 520 and 145— 'Concluded' — Meaning of Dropping of proceedings under S. 145(5) —Order for disposal of property

-Validity.

The word "concluded" in S. 517 has been used to mean conclusion after full enquiry. The cancellation of proceedings under sub s. (5) of Section 145 cannot be considered to amount to conclusion of enquiry. Hence, where the Magistrate has dropped the proceedings he cannot pass an order of disposal of the property under S. 517 in favour of either party. Any such order passed by the Magistrate would be without jurisdiction and will be set aside in revision by the High Court: A. I. R. (12) 1925 Mad. 1252, Rel. on. (The High Court directed the sale proceeds of the crops raised on the land to be deposited till one of the parties established his right thereto in a civil Court.)

Das Gupta J.—The proceedings under S. 145. Criminal P. C., which were drawn up on the application of the present petitioner were "dropped" on 21nd December 1949, on an application by the petitioner that there was no longer any likelihood of any apprehension of the breach of the peace over the possession of the property. The question then arose as to the disposal of the sale proceeds of the crops which had been sold by the receiver. The learned Magistrate passed an order for payment of this money which amounted to almost Rs. 2,000 to the second party as he was of opinion that the documents produced before him showed that the second party had title to the crops.

[2] An application against this order before the learned Sessions Judge was unsuccessful.

[3] We are now asked to interfere with the order passed by learned Magistrate on the ground that he had no jurisdiction to pass such an order. Obviously, unless he could be considered to have exercised jurisdiction under S. 517, Criminal P. C., the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass an order as regards the disposal of the sale proceeds after the proceedings had been dropped and he had not come to any conclusion as regards the party entitled to possession.

[4] Whether such an order could be passed under S. 517, Criminal P. C., depends really on the answer to the question whether when the proceedings are terminated by an order of cancellation passed under sub-s. (5) of S. 145, Criminal P. C., it can be said that the enquiry in S. 145 proceedings is concluded. In a case which came up before this Court very many years ago, an order directing the first party to reap the crops after the proceedings had been dropped was claimed to have been passed under S. 517, Criminal P. C. This Court said, "If that be so, we have jurisdiction to interfere under S. 520 of the same Code" and the Court for reasons recorded cancelled the order passed. It will be noticed that the Court did not discuss or determine the question whether in fact such an order could be passed under S. 517 of the Code, but proceedings on the assumption that this was so, held that the Court could interfere under S. 520, Criminal P. C., and the order was passed.

ceedings cannot be considered to amount to a conclusion of the enquiry. I think that the word 'concluded' in S. 517, Criminal P. C., is used to mean 'conclusion after full hearing'. We are fortified in this view by a decision of the Madras High-Court in the case of Narasayya v. Venkiah, 49 Mad. 232: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Mad. 1252: 27 Cr. L. J. 95), where it was held that when a Magistrate has dropped a proceeding, he cannot pass any order in favour of either party as regards the disposal of the sale proceeds of the crops raised on the land in dispute but should keep the same in deposit pending orders of Civil Court.

[6] I am, therefore, of opinion that the order passed by the learned Magistrate was without jurisdiction. I would, therefore, set aside that order and direct that the money be kept in deposit till one of the parties has established his right by suitable proceedings in the Civil Court. The Rule is accordingly made absolute.

Harit Krishna Deb - Decree-holder - Appellant v. Anil Krishna Deb - Judgment debtor -Respondent.

A. F. O. O. No. 49 of 1946, D/- 17-3-1950, against order of Sub-Judge, 1st Court, 24 Parganas, D/-8-12-1945.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 182 (5)—Final order. A decree dated 15th September 1936 was put into

A decree dated 15th September 1936 was put into execution on 15th September 1939. The judgmentdebtor's objection under S. 47, Civil P. C. as to the maintainability of execution was dismissed on 17th June 1940 as a miscellaneous case. Subsequently, on 31st August 1940, the Court dismissed the execution case for non-prosecution. On 21st November 1940 an appeal against the order dated 17th June 1940 was filed and the order was confirmed on 20th August 1942 with a direction that "the costs of this appeal will abide the ultimate result." On receipt of the record on 9th September 1943 from the High Court the executing Court directed the decree-holder to proceed with execution and ultimately dismissed the execution on 2nd Desember 1943 for non-prosecution. The question was whether subsequent execution filed on 18th August 1945 was within limitation :

Held, that (i) the order of the High Court dated 20th August 1942 was an order in the execution case itself and the subsequent execution filed on 18th August 1945 was within limitation. [Para 5]

(ii) that the effect of the High Court's order dated 20th August 1942 was to supersede the order of dismissal dated 31st August 1940 and the executing Court was perfectly justified in calling upon the decree-holder to proceed with the execution on 9th September 1943 and the subsequent proceedings in execution were not without jurisdiction. The order dated 2nd December 1943 dismissing the previous execution for default was therefore the final order and in that view the subsequent execution was admittedly within limitation.

Judgment. — This appeal by the decree-holder arises out of an order under s. 47, Civil P. C. by which his application for execution has been dismissed as barred by limitation. The facts material for the purposes of the present appeal are as follows:

[2] On 15th September 1936, the appellant obtained a decree in an administration suit and he put that decree into execution on 15th September 1939 in Title Execution Case No. 71 of 1939. The judgment-debtor filed an objection under 8. 47 raising the question of the maintainability of the execution and this objection

This case was dismissed by the executing Court by an order dated 17th June 1940. Thereafter the judgment-debtor intimated to the Court that he proposed to file an appeal to this Court against the order of dismissal and prayed for stay of execution. This prayer was granted for a limited period but eventually the executing Court wanted to proceed with the execution as no order for stay of execution had been received from the High Court. The decree-holder was called upon to take steps which he did not do with the result that execution case No. 71 of 1939 was dismissed for non-prosecution on 31st august 1940.

[3] On Mist November 1940, the judgmentdebtor filed an appeal to the High Court against the order of the executing Court dated 17th June 1940, and this appeal was registered and num. bered as F. M. A. 307 of 1940. By a judgment dated 20th August 1942, this Court upheld the order of the executing Court dated 17th June 1940 but gave certain directions to the executing Court and made an order with regard to costs. On 9th September 1948, when the record of the case was received back by the executing Court from this Court, the executing Court directed the decree-holder to take steps in the execution case but as the decree-holder failed to do so, the execution case was eventually dismissed on and December 1948.

(4) On 18th August 1945, the decree-holder started the present execution case which was registered as Title Execution Case No. 22 of 1945. The judgment.debtor filed an objection under S. 47, Civil P. C. on the ground that this execution case having been filed more than three years from the dismissal of the first execution case on 31st August 1940, it was barred by limitation. The decree-holder maintained that the starting point of limitation was not sist August 1940, but 2nd December 1948, when the first execution case was finally dismissed after the decision of the High Court in F. M. A. 807 of 1940. The learned Subordinate Judge has upheld the contention of the judgment-debtor and dismissed the execution case as barred by limitation. In dismissing the application for execution the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the starting point of limitation is 31st August 1940, and not 2nd December 1948, and that all the proceedings taken by the executing Court after the return of the record on the decision of F. M. A. 807 of 1940 were without jurisdiction.

[5] Against this decision, the decree holder has filed the present appeal and in support of this appeal Mr. Gupta has argued in the first place that the final order in the previous execution case under Art. 182, cl. (5), Limitation Act, was the order made by the High Court in F. M. A. 307 of 1910 on 20th August 1912, and the present application being within three years of the date, it cannot be said to be barred by limitation-The learned Subordinate Judge repelled this contention on the ground that the order of the High Court was not an order in the execution case itself but an order in a proceeding under 8. 47, Civil P. C. Dr. Pal appearing for the respondent has tried to support that reason and has argued that an order relating to an execution case is not an order in the execution itself. The previous objection filed by the judgment-debtor related to the maintainability of the execution case itself and if that objection succeeded, the execution case would be dismissed on that ground and it could not be said that the order did not relate to the execution case. We therefore did not see any reason to hold that the order would not relate to the execution case if the objections of the judgment-debtor were overruled. By its judgment dated 20th August 1942, this Court held that the objection of the judgment-debtor had no substance and that there was no bar to the maintainability of the execution case. We are inclined to think that the order made by this Court in F. M. A. 307 of 1940 was an order in the execution case itself and the decree-holder was entitled to apply within three years from the date of that order. The first point raised by the appellant must therefore succeed.

[6] Mr. Gupta has argued in the second place that the order of the High Court in F. M. A. 307 of 1940 superseded the order of dismissal dated 31st August 1940, and the executing Court was perfectly right in starting the execution case afresh on 9th September 1943, after the arrival of the record in that Court and the real order of dismissal of the previous execution case was the order dated 2nd December 1943. In the concluding portion of the judgment of this Court in F. M. A. 307 of 1940 there, is the following direction

"the costs of this appeal will abide the ultimate result, the hearing fee in the High Court being assessed at 8 gold mohurs."

This direction, according to Mr. Gupta, relates to the first execution case which was ordered to proceed.

[7] Dr. Pal has argued that this direction should be held to apply to a future execution case that might be started by the decree holder and he has further argued that as the order of dismissal dated 31st August 1940, was made before the filing of the appeal to this Court, the order of this Court cannot be held to apply to the order of dismissal dated 31st August 1940. The concluding portion of the order of this Court which we have already quoted shows that this Court contemplated the passing of further orders by the executing Court at least with regard to costs. We do not think that the order as to costs related to the result of a future execution case that might be started by the decree. holder. The second part of Dr. Pal's argument that the order of dismissal dated 31st August 1940, was not affected by the order of this Court as it was passed before the filing of the appeal is also unacceptable, because this Court clearly directed that the costs of this Court should abide the result of the execution case which meant that the executing Court should make a further order as to costs on receipt of the record from this Court. For these reasons, the executing Court was perfectly justified in calling upon the decree holder to take further steps by its order dated 9th September 1943, and in dismissing the execution case on 2nd December 1943, on the decree-holder's failure to do so. We cannot agree with the Subordinate Judge that the orders of the executing Court beginning from 9th September 1943, and ending with 2nd December 1943, were without jurisdiction. The decreeholder was therefore entitled to file a second application in execution within three years from 2nd December 1943 which was the final order made in the previous execution case.

[8] In the result this appeal is allowed with costs throughout the order of the Court below is set aside and the execution case ordered to proceed according to law.

Jajneswar Majumdar with Uma Prosad Mookerjee - for Appellants. Jyotis Chandra Pal — for Respondents.

Bachawat J. - This is an appeal from a decree of the District Judge of Darjeeling, dated 9th September 1942.

[2] The matter arises out of an application made under S. 38, Bengal Money-lenders Act by the respondent who was the borrower against the appellant. The appellant contested the application and two points arose before the learned Subordinate Judge. The first issue was: "Is the loan a commercial loan ousting the scope of the Bengal Money-lenders Act, 1940?" The second point was if it was not a commercial loan what should be the amount of the liability of the applicant calculated in accordance with the Bengal Money-lenders Act. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the loan was not a commercial loan and therefore the provisions of the Bengal Money-lenders Act applied. He further held that the applicantrespondent was liable for the sum of Rs. 2029. Eventually by an order dated 25th April 1942 he declared that the debtor was liable to the creditor for the sum of Rs. 2029 and that was the maximum amount that was recoverable by the creditor. An appeal by the applicant-respondent was filed against that declaration before the Court of the District Judge. His contention was that he was liable to pay a much lesser sum of money. The appellant Ramasray did not file an appeal before the District Judge, but he filed a cross-objection in time. In so far as the appeal of the respondent Bibhisan Singh before him was concerned, the District Judge found that he was in fact liable to pay the sum of Rs. 1956 and not the sum of Rs. 2029 as found by the learned Subordinate Judge. In so far as the cross-objection filed by the appellant Ramasray Singh was concerned, the District Judge held that the cross-objection was misconceived and that the appellant Ramasray Singh ought to have filed an appeal before him and in the circumstances he refused to entertain the cross-objection and he dismissed it with costs. It is from that order of the District Judge that this appeal has been filed.

[3] The only point which has been argued before us is as to whether the learned District Judge was wrong in refusing to entertain the cross-objection and deciding the objection of the appellant on its merits.

[4] Section 38 (3), Bengal Money-lenders Act

reads as follows:

"A proceeding under this section shall be deemed to be a suit for the purposes of S. 11, Civil P. C., 1908, and a declaration under this section shall be subject to appeal, if any, as if it were a decree of the Court, and every decision in appeal shall be subject to appeal to the High Court in the same manner as a decree passed in appeal."

[5] It is contended by learned advocate appearing on behalf of the respondent that a statutory right of appeal is given under this sub-section and no right of cross-objection is conferred by S. 38 and his contention is that if any litigant is aggrieved by a decision of any Court under S. 88 his remedy is to file an appeal and not to agitate the matter by way of cross-objection.

[6] In this connection, I would like to draw attention to the observations of Viscount Haldane L. C., in National Telephone Co. Ltd. v. Post-Master General (No. 2), (1913) A. O. 546 at p. 552; (82 L. J. K. B. 1197) where he observes as follows:

"When a question is stated to be referred to an established Court without more, it, in my opinion, imports that the ordinary incidents of the procedure of that Court are to attach, and also that any general right of appeal from its decision likewise attaches."

[7] It is to be observed that by S. SS, Bengal Money lenders Act, a right of appeal is given in express terms. By sub-s. (3) of S. SS, a declaration under that section is to be subject to an appeal, if any, as if it were a decree of the Court. The right of appeal, under that section is given to an established Court, namely, the Court of the District Judge. Nothing is stated expressly in the sub-section as to the procedure regulating such appeal. In our view, where nothing is stated expressly as to the procedure of an appeal before a District Judge, the law will import that the ordinary procedure of that Court on appeal will apply. The ordinary procedure of an appeal is that the respondent has the right to file cross-objection and therefore it is quite clear that the respondent has the right to file a cross-objection.

Is If the appeal before the District Judge was an appeal under the Code of Civil Procedure the whole of O. 41, Civil P. C., would apply to such appeals. It is and must be conceded that the appeal before the District Judge was under the Code of Civil Procedure. If it were not so, Art. 152, Limitation Act, would not apply and there would be no period of limitation applicable to an appeal before the District Judge under S. 88, Bengal Money lenders Act, and in that event the District Judge could treat the cross objection as an appeal inasmuch as there was no bar of limitation.

[9] Learned advocate on behalf of the appellant has also drawn our attention to the case of Pramatha Nath v. Sanat Kumar, 53 C. W. N. (F.R.) 12: (A. I R. (86) 1949 F.C. 60). The Federal Court there held that although no further right of appeal from the decision of a High Court is expressly given under 8. 88 (a), Bengal Moneylenders Act, the question whether an appeal lies in a given case from a declaration made under 8. 88 (a) is left to be determined by the general law, that is, the provisions of the Civil Procedure

Code, and that once a proceeding under S. 88 reaches the High Court, further rights of appeal are governed by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. The reasoning of the Federal Court in that matter supports our conclusion. Once a proceeding in appeal has reached the Court of the District Judge the incidents and procedure applicable to that appeal are governed by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. In that view of the matter, once an appeal is filed before the District Judge the respondent will have the right to file a cross-objection.

[10] It is further contended by learned advocate on behalf of the respondent that even if O. 41, R 22 applies to the matter before the learned District Judge, even then the appellant had no right to file a cross-objection in this matter.

[11] Order 41, B. 22 reads as follows :

"Any respondent, though he may not have appealed from any part of the decree, may not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below, but take any cross-objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal provided he has filed such objection in the appellate Court within one month from the date of service on him or his pleader of notice of the day fixed for hearthe appeal, or within such further time as the appellate Court may seem fit to allow."

appearing on behalf of the respondent was that before a party can file cross-objection he must accept some part of the decree as good. If he challenges the whole of the decree in that case according to him the respondent to the appeal has no right to file a cross-objection. In our view that contention is unsound.

[18] Order 41, R. 22 consists of two parts—the first part confers a right upon the respondent to support a decree on any ground decided against him although he may not have appealed from any part of the decree. If the respondent has not appealed or filed any cross objection he cannot ask the appellate Court to set aside the decree of the lower Court so far as it was against him but he may support the decree even on a ground which has been decided against him. The second part of R. 22 gives the respondent a right to file a cross-objection which he could have taken by way of appeal. This right to file! a cross-objection is not limited in the way sug. gested by the respondent. If an appeal is filed the respondent to the appeal without filing any appeal can take cross objection to the decree on any ground on which he could have filed an appeal, [14] It follows, therefore, that the learned District Judge was wrong in refusing to entertain the cross-objection and dismissing it.

The order of the lower appellate Court is set aside and the case is sent back to the lower appellate Court to be heard and decided on the merits in accordance with law. The appellant will have costs of this appeal the hearing fee being assessed at three gold mohurs.

On the plain meaning of the words used in R. 89, a cosharer is certainly a person whose interest is affected and hence he is entitled to apply under O. 21, R. 89. Thus, a cosharer who is not in any way a party to the suit or execution proceedings in which a share of a joint tank has been sold can make an application under O. 21, R. 89: 5 All. 42; A. I. R. Order.—This rule raises the question; can a cosharer who is not in any way a party to the suit or execution proceedings in which a share of a tank has been sold in execution make an application under O. 21, B. 89, Civil P. C. The trial Court has decided that he can; the lower appellate Court relying on an incorrect version of B. 89 as in force in West Bengal, has decided that he cannot.

[2] The tank in question was part of the joint property of three brothers, one of whom is the depositor under R. 89 and another the deceased father of the judgment debtors. The other joint properties of the brothers were partitioned, the tank remaining joint. The sale was held in execution of a money-decree.

meagre, no case of this Court directly in point had been cited before me. It was considered in Bisheshar Kuar v. Hari Singh, 5 ALL 42: (1882 A. W. N. 146) in 1882 under the provisions of the Old Code, but in relation to 8. 311 or 0. 21, R. 90 as it then stood. The cosharer there had actually made a bid at the sale and relied in his application under 0. 21, R. 90 (8. 311) on 0. 21, R. 68 (8. 310). His application was rejected on the ground that he was not "either the decree-holder or a person whose immovable pro.

perty had been sold." The decision is not of assistance in interpreting the present R. 89 (as introduced in 1933) "any person, whose interest is affected by such sale," or the similar words of R. 90 "any person. . . . whose interests are affected by the sale."

[4] In Ramchandra v. Srinivasa, 51 Mad. 246: (A.I.R. (15) 1928 Mad. 399) in 1927 it was held that the cosharer was a "person holding an interest in the property sold," as every member of an undivided family has an interest in joint family property, that is to say, not the share of each, but the whole corpus of the property. The case was one under R. 89, Jackson J. remarking that if one brother chose to pay another brother's debts rather than see the ancestral property pass to stranger (a transaction which may easily involve the family in discredit and inconvenience) there is no objection to his doing so. The decision was not under the wider terms of R. 89 as in force here.

[6] A cosharer is given a right under O. 21, B. 88 to have priority if he makes an equal bid with a stranger. (It is true the right seems not to be one of much substance). This surely recognises that he has some interest in the sale, if not 'in the property sold' in the strictest meaning of the term. But R. 89 does not specifically require the depositor's interest that is affected is to be strictly in the property sold. The rule has been amended to give a wider application. It seems anomalous to suggest then that if a cosharer fails to take advantage of R. 83 (or misses an opportunity to do so through no fault of his own) he should not be able to take advantage of R. 89 to protect the same interest as is apparently intended to be protected (however inadequately) by R. 89. On the plain meaning of the words now used, it seems to me clear that a cosharer is certainly a person whose interest is affected by the case and he is entitled to apply under R. 89. If the sale happens to be a share of an occupancy holding his interest is now recognised to the extent that he is given a right of pre-emption under S. 26F, Bengal Tenancy Act.

Cal. 82: (97 I. O. 757) relied on by the opposite party in this rule, there are some remarks which appear opposed to the above view, but examination of the case shows that the present point was not really in issue. The facts are not very clearly stated in the judgments delivered, but I have referred to the original records, which show that the defendants were cosharers as heirs of the original holder Hanif. They also claimed to have purchased the share of Keshab one of the sons of Hanif from Keshab's daughters. The suit was for partition the plaintiffs claiming to have purchased the share of Keshab by a kobala, and the share of Sabdan, another son of Hanif, in execution of a decree against him. The plaintiffs failed so far as the alleged purchase of Keshab's share by kobala was concerned, but succeeded in respect of the share of Sabdan. The argument put forward for the plaintiff appellants as regards the share of Sabdan was that:

"the only person who could raise the question (as to the irregularity of the sale) would be either the decreeholder or a person whose interest was affected by the sale, that these persons could only raise the question under the provision of O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. O."

Ouming J. remarked on this:

"This contention, I think, is correct. So far as regards the third party it is not open to them to challenged the validity of the sale. It is not contended for the respondents that the sale was void. The irregularities of which they complain were admittedly irregularities which might or might not render the sale voidable. But it would be voidable only at the instance of the judgment-debtor whose interests were affected by the sale (sic) and the judgment-debtor alone could get the sale set aside if he succeeded in proving that he had sustained substantial loss by reason of the irregularities. To succeed in their defence, the respondents must be able to set aside the sale. If they cannot set aside the sale the title of the plaintiffs is perfectly good title."

He, therefore held that the defendants could not raise the defence that the sale was not valid. Page J. agreed, but added a comment suggesting that he was of opinion that the defendants had acquired their interest as co-sharers by purchase after the execution sale. In fact this was not so. It was their purchase of Keshab's share (which the plaintiff also claimed to have acquired by Kobala) which took place of the execution sale of Sabdan's share; they were already co-sharers as heirs of Hanif.

171 The argument put forth was clearly sound but it was entirely unnecessary to hold that the defendants could not have made an application under O. 21, R. 90. The only question for decision was whether an execution sale could be set aside by the suit (or more strictly by way of defence in a partition suit). The basis of the decision is that no one can do this; it is immaterial whether the person seeking to do it is one who might have succeeded in an application under O. 21, R. 90. The position is clear. A third party whose interest is not affected by the sale cannot challenge the sale either under O. 21, B. 90, or by suit. Certain persons can challenge the sale under O. 21, R. 90 but not by suit. When the question is whether the sale can be challenged by way of suit, it is immaterial therefore whether the challenger could have challenged it under O. 21, B. 90 or not. It is possible perhaps to read into the remarks of Cuming J. an expression of opinion that the defendants as co-sharers could not have challenged the sale under O. 21, R. 90, but the opinion is not clearly expressed, and was quite unnecessary to the main decision, namely, that they could not challenge it by way (?) of detence in the partition suit.

(8) Page J. twice stated that the defendants were not persons competent to apply to have the sale set aside under O. 21, R. 90 but gave as his reason that they were persons "who acquired an interest in the property after the sale had become absolute and the sale certificate had been issued",

a reason which I think is not supported by the actual facts, but makes the decision no authority on the question of the rights of a co-sharer who had acquired or inherited his interest before the execution sale.

[9] This case, therefore, is no authority conflicting with the view I have expressed above.

[10] In Kanhairam v. Kalicharan, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Nag 63: (91 I. O. 218), the position of co sharers in a partition suit with reference to an execution sale against a co sharer came also into consideration. There the argument put forward was in the opposite form, namely, that because the co-sharer could have applied under O. 21, R. 90 he was not entitled to raise the question of the validity of the sale in the partition suit. The case is not of any real assistance in the present matter as in effect the co-sharer did not seek to have the execution sale set aside. The execution sale was in respect of a decree against the plaintiff's brother Karu, and purported only to sell Karu's interest, but described his interest as being the whole house in which the plaintiff's brother claimed a share. The plaintiff was allowed to to establish that he had such share.

[11] The circumstances in Mehdni Prasad Singh v. Nand Keshwar Prasad Singh, 2 Pat. 386 : (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 451) were somewhat similar. The shares of plaintiff's 1 and 2, cosharer in a Mitakshara family had been sold in execution. They had failed in an application under O. 21, R. 90. Then they along with plaintiff 3, their brother and plaintiff 4, son of plaintiff 1, brought a suit apparently in form for setting aside the sale. The Subordinate Judge held that as plaintiff 3 could have applied under O. 21, R. 90 and had not done so he could not bring a suit. The High Court held that if the property was joint (and not separate as the defendants claimed), there would not be a decree setting aside the sale, but a decree should be made in a particular form defining the position of the defendants as purchasers in execution of a share of a Mitakshara joint family, and giving plaintiff 8 a right of possession.

[12] Except that the cases have some discussion of the position of co sharers in relation to execution sales in particular circumstances they are not of much assistance in the present matter.

[13] For the petitioner I have also been referred to two cases in which it is contended that a broad interpretation of the phrase whose interests are affected' have been taken. Mundrika Sing v. Nand Lal Singh, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 204: (191 I. C. 639) and Kamiruddin Khan v. Sachidananda Jana, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 66: (13 Cut L. T. 25). These lend some support to the view I have expressed.

[14] I hold therefore that the learned munsif was correct in his view that the applicant before him was entitled to make a deposit under O. 21, R. 89. I therefore make the rule absolute setting aside the order of the learned District Judge, and restoring that of the trial Court. I make no order as to costs.

Chunder J. - This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan in a suit for partition.

[2] It appears that there were four brothers Bidhusekhar, Adyanath, Akul Nath and Kali Nath. It was alleged in the partition suit that Akul Nath and Kali Nath separated and Bidhusekhar and Adyanath were joint in property. Adyanath's widow Bhuban Mohini sued the heirs of Bidhusekhar, who was then dead, for a partition of the joint properties. It was numbered as Partition Suit No. 252 of 1931 and was filed on 21st February 1931. The suit was dismissed on 5th April 1933 and on an appeal being taken to this Court, being Appeal No. 148 of 1933, a preliminary decree was passed for partition by this Court on 8th June 1936. It appears that no further steps were taken towards the final decree in the Subordinate Judge's Court and the Subordinate Judge consigned the record to the record room by his order dated 10th December 1936. It appears that Bhuban Mohini died on 6th November 1943. At the time of her death, it is said that Kali Nath was dead and Akul Nath was the sole surviving reversioner. It appears that Akul Nath did not get himself substituted in the partition suit nor did he take any steps. On 26th January 1944, he transferred the properties he has inherited as reversioner to Gopinath Mukherjee who is the petitioner in this case and is the respondent in this appeal. Gopinath applied to be substituted in the suit and the defendants, that is, the heirs of Bidhusekhar filed an objection. The objection was fought out by defendant 4 who is the appellant before us. The Subordinate Judge refused the prayer for substitution by his order dated 31st August 1945 and on revision proceedings being taken in this Court in Revision Case No. 94 of 1946 the case was sent back to the Subordinate Judge for decisions on the merits. The Subordinate Judge has now allowed substitution. He has held that O. 22, R. 3 and O. 22, R. 10, Civil P. C., do not apply. He has further held that S. 146 of the Code applies and he has allowed substitution under 8. 146 of the Code. The present appeal relates to that order.

[3] The first point that arises is whether an appeal at all lies. An appeal is a creature of statute and in the Code of Civil Procedure an appeal is given against a decree and against some orders which are considered as in the nature of a decree, for example, decisions under S. 47, Civil P. C. As against other orders to have a right of appeal the case must come within O. 43, R. 1. Order 43, R. 1 of the Code gives a right of appeal as against certain orders under O. 22, but gives no right of appeal as against an order under S. 146, Civil P. C. Therefore in the present case no appeal lies and the appeal is dismissed.

[4] There has been filed a petition to treat this as a petition in revision in case an appeal does not lie. We are, therefore, taking it up as a matter in revision under S. 115, Civil P. C.

(5) The very short point which really arises in this case is whether Gopinath can come under S. 146, Civil P. C. Reliance has been placed upon a decision of the Patna High Court in the case of Gobardhan v. Saligram, 15 Pat. 82 : (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 123). In that case it was decided that the transferee from the legal representative of a deceased party had no right to come either under R. 10 of O. 22 or R. 3 of that Order. In the present case such has also been held rightly by the Subrdinate Judge. Then in that case it was further said that "Section 146 authorises a person claiming under another person to make an application which the other person could have made. The appellant can make an application which Priyasakhi (that is the person through whom the claim was filed) could have made namely for substitution of her name. I fail to understand how he can apply for substitution of his own name."

In other words, according to the Patna decision as applied in this case the position would be that Gopinath may be entitled to ask for substitution of the name of Akul Nath but not for substitution of his own name. With great respect to the learned Judge of the Patna High Court, we are unable to agree with this view. To take a very simple contingency: If Akul Nath had died in the present case a day after the death of Bhuban Mohini, that is after having succeeded to the estate, would it be necessary for Akul's heirs to age the Court to substitute a dead person instead of themselves in place of Bhuban Mohini? In the present case, on the same analogy as Akul had no further interest in the property to be partitioned we do not see why it should be necessary for Gopinath to ask for the substitution of the name of Akul. What S. 146 of the Code means is that an application or proceeding of a like nature can be taken by the transferee as could have been taken by the transferor, not that he should make the identical application. As Akul could have asked for substitution and made an application to that effect, the transferee from Akul also as claiming through him under S. 146 of the Code can apply for substitution and the application in his case will be for the substitution of his name as the interest has now devolved upon him.

(6) The Subordinate Judge, therefore, rightly decided that under S. 146, Civil P. C., Gopinath could ask for substitution of his name in place of Akul though Akul had not applied for such substitution himself. The Subordinate Judge rightly allowed the prayer of Gopinath.

[7] The revision petition is, therefore, rejected with costs.

A High Court Judge on the Original Side has concurrent jurisdiction with the District Judge in all testamentary matters. Section 300 (1) does not require that any portion of the property should be within the limits of the ordinary Original Civil jurisdiction of the High Court. The High Court, therefore, has jurisdiction on the Original Side, to entertain a suit for grant of probate in respect of property situated beyond those limits. [Paras 10 11, 12]

Judgment. — This is a suit in the testamentary jurisdiction of the Court for the grant of probate of the Will of one Narsing Prosad Shaw, deceased. The plaintiff Maniklal is the executor under the Will and is the elder of the two surviving sons of the testator. The defendant Hiralal is the other son.

[2] The original application for grant of probate was presented on 18th December 1947. Hiralal's name not having been mentioned in the said application as one of the sons of the the testator, no citation was issued to him, and in due course, probate of the Will, which is dated 12th October 1946 was issued on 22nd December 1947. On 7th May 1948, Hiralal made an application for the revocation of the probate on the ground of absence of citation on him. This application was heard by Majumdar J. who held that the want of citation was a just cause within the meaning of S. 263, Succession Act, and by his order dated 20th July 1948, he revoked the said grant. The directions given by Majumdar J. as to the filing of the caveat and the supporting affidavit as also those in respect of discovery and inspection were complied with and the proceedings were marked as a contentious cause.

[3] The testator Narsing Prosad Shaw, who was a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law, lived at Dum-Dum. He had three sons, Maniklal—the plaintiff, Hiralal the defendant and one Pannalal who predeceased the testator. Pannalal's widow Binapani and his son Mrityunjoy are living. The testator who was a well-known wrestler in the locality died on 5th November 1946, admittedly at a very old age. As I have said before, the disputed Will is alleged to have been executed on 12th october 1946, that is, less than a month before the testator's death. By the said Will, which is in the Bengali language and character, he bequeathed all his properties and credits to the plaintiff and his grandson, the said Mrityunjoy Shaw, in equal shares, and appointed the plaintiff the sole executor. Hiralal was completely left out. The reason for Hiralal's exclusion from the Will is stated in the within the following terms:

"My second son Sreeman Hiralal Shaw left me long ago and having built houses etc. at a different place is in the enjoyment and possession of the same. His financial position is also good. But it never strikes him that he ought to be tending and nursing his aged father."

[4] Defendant Hiralal's case, inter alia, is that the testator was about 100 years of age when the Will is said to have been executed and that by reason of his old age and illness to which he later succumbed, his father had no testamentary capacity, that the alleged signatures of the testator in the Will did not appear to be in the handwriting of the testator and that, if the signatures be held to be genuine, the plaintiff in collusion with two lawyer friends of his -Surath Nath Ganguli and Sachindra Nath Mitracaused the alleged Will to be executed by his father "by undue influence, fraud and coercion." No particulars of the allegations of undue influence and coercion and of fraud were given and, curiously enough, no particulars were asked for on behalf of the plaintiff. After the opening by learned counsel on behalf of the plaintiff, the following issues were raised:

"(1) Had the deceased any testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the Will?

(2) Was the Will validly executed?

(3) Was the Will executed under the undue influence of Maniklal?

(4) Has this Court jurisdiction to entertain and try this suit ?"

To support his case the plaintiff, besides examining himself, called the two attesting witnesses to the Will—Surath Nath Ganguly and Sachindra Nath Mitra, as well as a neighbour by name Charu Chandra Samanta. (After dis. missing the evidence His Lordships proceeded:) This brings me to the certified copy of the entry in the Register maintained by the Calcutta Corporation at the Cossipore Cremation Ghat. Chapter 31, Calcutta Municipal Act (1923) deals with the registration of births and deaths and disposal of the dead. Under this Chapter it is the duty of the Sub-Registrar for each registered burial or burning ground to maintain a register of deaths in which the particulars prescribed in Sch. 22 to the Act have to be entered in respect of every death. Exhibit 2 is in the form prescribed by the said Schedule which is a form for registration of deaths with some fourteen columns with such heads as 'date of death', 'age', 'cause of death', 'signature', 'description and residence of informant.' This register is thus kept by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and is admissible under S. 35, Evi. dence Act. Any entry in such a register can be proved under S. 77, Evidence Act by the pro duction of a certified copy thereof. The question is how much of the entry in this register is evidence. Clearly the entry is evidence of the fact of death. Other particulars such as 'the cause of death', 'the deceased's age' etc., as to which the officer concerned can have no personal knowledge or any means of checking, cannot be treat ed as evidence. [After discussing the evidence further His Lordship proceeded:1

I hold that the plaintiff has proved that the testator had the requisite testamentary capacity, that the will was validly executed and that the defendant has failed to prove that the execution of the will was caused by undue influence or coercion. It must be borne in mind that by his will, the testator bequeathed his property in equal shares to the plaintiff and the deceased Pannalal's son. Had the plaintiff had the testator completely under his control, I see no reason why he could not have persuaded the testator to leave all his property to the plaintiff abso-

[6] Mr. J. K. Ghosh on behalf of the defendant has taken the point that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain and try this suit. His reasons are, firstly, that the property which is the subject matter of the Will is situated outside the local limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of this Court and secondly, that the testator lived and died in Dum Dum which is also outside the local limits of the said jurisdiction.

[7] Mr. Ghosh says that the concurrent jurisdiction which the High Court has with the District Judge under sub-s. (1) of s. 800, Succession Act, 1925, is restricted by sub-s. (2) of that section.

It is pointed out that the present case is one to which 8. 57 of the Act does not apply, and accordingly the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain it in the absence of a notification in the official gazette as required under sub-s. (2). He says further that this limitation imposed on the High Court's concurrent jurisdiction with the District Judge is not in any way affected by cl. 34 of the Letters Patent of 1865, as the proviso to cl. 34, says:

"nothing in these Letters Patent contained shall interfere with the provisions of any law which has been made by competent legislative authority for India by which power is given to any other Court to grant such probates and letters of administration."

Mr. Ghosh contends that by reason of this proviso the wide testamentary jurisdiction of the High Court under the first part of cl. 34, is controlled by sub-s. (2) of S. 300, Succession Act.

(8) The present Indian Succession Act (Act XXXIX [39] of 1926) is a consolidating Act, into which has been consolidated, amongst others, the Probate and Administration Act V [5] of 1881. Sub-section (2) of S. 800 of the present Act is toti dem verbis S. 2. Probate and Administration Act V [5] of 1881. I find that a notification such as was required under S. 2. Probate and Administration Act V [5] of 1881 was issued by the local Government in its official gazette on 20th April 1881. The said notification is at page 445, Part I of the Calcutta Gazette of that date and is in terms as follows:

"The 1st April 1881.—In exercise of the power conferred by S. 2, Act V [5] of 1881, His Honor the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, is pleased hereby to authorise the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, throughout the territories subject to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and all District Judges as defined in the said Act within the said territories, and such judicial officers as the said High Court may from time to time appoint as district delegates, to receive applications for probate and letters of administration."

(9) The provisions of S. 2, Probate and Administration Act having been re-enacted as indicated above, the said notification, to my mind, is sufficient compliance with the provisions of sub-s. (2) of S. 300, of the present Act.

[10] There is a further answer to Mr. Ghosh's contention. The definition of "District Judge" given in S. 2 (bb) of the amending Act XVIII [18] of 1929 includes a Judge of the High Court on the Original Side (see Manubhai v. General Accident, Fire and Life Assurance Corporation Ltd., 38 Bom. L. R. 632 at p. 655: (A. I. R. (28) 1936 Bom. 863). The result is that a High Court Judge on the original side has concurrent jurisdiction with the District Judge in all testamentary matters. In the case of In the Goods of Mohendra Narain Roy. 5 C. W. N. 317. Sale, J., held that the "High Court" in S. 87, Probate and Administration Act (v [5] of 1881) was not merely confined to the Appellate Jurisdiction of that Court, but included its Original Jurisdiction and that under section the High Court, exercising its Original Jurisdiction, had concurrent jurisdiction with the District Judge.

[11] In Nagendra Bala v. Kasipati, 37 Cal. 224: (5 I. C. 1003), Fletcher, J. held that the High Court had jurisdiction to grant probate and letters of administration, on its original side, in any case which could have been brought before any District Judge in either of the two Provinces of Bengal. This decision involved the consideration of Sp. 2, 51 and 87, Probate and Administration Act V [5] of 1881, and Fletcher, J., summarised his conclusions thus: "I think, from 88. 2, 51 and 87, it is clear that the High Court has jurisdiction in all districts." These three sections of the Probate and Administration Act correspond to Es. 200 (2), 264 (1) and 300 (1) of the present Act respectively. Like S. 87, Probate and Administration Act, the corresponding 8. 800 (1), does not require that any portion of the property should be within the limits of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court.

High Court's jurisdiction in testamentary matters is co-extensive with the limits of the Province. This jurisdiction cannot be said to interfere with those provisions of the Indian Succession Act which confer jurisdiction on District Judges to grant probates. The exercise by the High Court of its testamentary jurisdiction beyond the local limits of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction is not exclusive of, but concurrent with, the jurisdiction of the District Judge. I hold therefore that this Court has jurisdiction to entertain and try this suit.

[13] In the result I decree that probate of the Will of Narasingh Prosad Shaw, deceased, dated 12th october 1946 be granted to the plaintiff Manik Lal Shaw. (The rest of the judgment is not material for purposes of reporting—(Ed.).)

Harries C. J. — This is a petition for revision of an order of a learned Subordinate Judge refusing to amend a plaint. The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration of his title in certain land of which he claimed to be in possession. The land was described in Sch. Ka of the plaint and the plaintiff claimed a six anna interest therein. On one reading of the plaint it would appear that the plaintiff claimed an undivided six annas in the plots mentioned in the schedule. But we cannot overlook the fact that in the body of the plaint he claimed that he had been in exclusive possession of the six annas which had apparently been allotted to him on a partition. Being in exclusive possession of his share suggests that the six annas in the property mentioned in schedule Ka must have been demarcated and therefore his claim was to specific portions of each of the plots mentioned in the schedule.

[2] As the case proceeded, the plaintiff realised that it would be necessary to amend the plaint in order to claim specific portions of the plots in question. The learned Subordinrte Judge refused to grant the amendment asked for. He says that there is nothing in the plaint to show that the plaintiff possessed any demarcated portion of any of the plots of the suit land. That is true to some extent, but, as I have said, there is also a plea that the plaintiff was in exclusive possession of his share by cultivation and it is impossible to cultivate exclusively six annas of any property unless that share has been demarcated or separated from the remaining ten annas.

[3] The learned Judge also points out that in evidence the plaintiff was very vague as to the properties he actually claimed. The learned Judge says that the demarcation now alleged must be regarded as illusory. In other words the learned Judge appears to think that if the plaint was amended and specific portions of each of the plots claimed, the plaintiff could never hope to establish his claim. That however is no ground whatsoever for refusing an amendment. If the amendment is necessary to decide the real issue between the parties the amendment should be granted, even though the Court may think that the plaintiff or the defendant who seeks the amendment will not be able to establish the facts necessary to support the amendment plea or defence. It seems to me that as the case proceeded justice required that the plaintiff should be given leave to amend the schedule to his plaint so that the Court could decide the real issue in the case; that is whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to portions of these plots which he alleged he had possessed exclusively by cultivation. That being so, if we have power to interfere, I would be inclined in this case to set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and direct him to allow the amendment.

[4] It was, however, urged before us that we could not interfere under s. 115, Civil P. C. Whether an amendment should or should not be granted is a matter within the discretion of the Court and it is urged that this Court cannot interfere under S. 115, Civil P. C. with the exercise of such discretion.

of this Court in Loke Nath v. Abani Nath, 37 C. W. N. 1093: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Cal. 102). This was a case decided before the Government of India Act, 1935. A Bench which decided the case held that there is no hard and fast rule that in no circumstances can a discretionary order by a Judicial officer be reviewed either under S. 115, Civil P. C. or under S. 107, Government of India Act or under the combined operation of both. The Bench further held that the Court could interfere where the lower Court had wrongly rejected an application to amend.

[6] It might be suggested that the recent pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council are not consistent with this case. But it must be observed that this case deals not only with S. 115, Civil P. C., but with S. 107, Government of India Act, 1919. Courts have held that under S. 107, Government of India Act, 1919, orders in the nature of orders in revision could in proper cases be made. Any right to make such orders however was expressly taken away by the Government of India Act, 1935, which limited the rights of superintendence to what I may describe as purely non-judicial matters. In the new Constitution however that limitation has been removed and the right of superintendence which this Court now has is practically the right it had under the Act of 1919. The position today, therefore, is precisely the same as it was when Loke Nath's case, (37 C. W. N. 1093 : A.I.R. (21) 1934 Cal. 102) was decided, and therefore, it appears to me that we must follow that decision as it is binding on us. We, therefore, must hold that we now can interfere, either under S. 115, Oivil P. O. or under powers which we now possess under the new Constitution to superintend the lower Courts.

cation, set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and remand the case to him, with the direction that he should allow the amendment of the plaint as prayed. An opportunity of course must be given to the defendants to file amended written statements and then the case will proceed.

[8] The Rule is, therefore, made absolute in these terms, but in the circumstances I would direct that costs of this application be costs in the suit.

In order to determine whether a decree passed before the Act can be varied under S. 28, the Court has (1) to see if it amounts to the sort of order that would have been passed by the Controller in a case under the Act, in other words, whether the conditions of S. 8 are fulfilled which lays down the grounds on which a thika tenant can be ejected and (2) whether in form the order is of the type that would be passed under S. 6 of the Act.

[Para 13]

(b) Tenany Laws—Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1949), S. 28—Decree for ejectment and for arrears of rent—Variation of.

Under S. 5 of the Act, the Controller is only given power to pass an order for ejectment. He cannot pass any order which can be executed for recovery of arrears of rent. Where, therefore, a decree passed before the Act is both for ejectment and for payment of arrears of rent, it is clearly necessary to separate the two. It is only the decree for ejectment which is to be converted into an order such as the Controller could pass and could execute, under the powers given to him under S. 27 (6) of the Act.

(c) Tenancy Laws—Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1949), Ss. 6, 28—Decree for ejectment with damages from date of suit till delivery of possession—Variation of.

Where a decree for ejectment of a Thika tenant passed before the Act includes also a decree for damages from the date of the suit till delivery of possession, it is not an order which the Controller could pass. Under S. 6, the limit of the Controller's powers is to specify the actual arrears, the costs and the damages if any, and the total is to be an amount which the tenant may pay within 80 days of the date of the order and so save himself from ejectment. In such a case, the decree has to be divided into two separate decrees and the decree for ejectment must be limited to one containing the actual order of ejectment plus the specification of arrears, costs and damages, limited to damages upto the date of the order. [Para 20]

(d) Tenancy Laws—Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1949), Ss. 6, 28—Decree for ejectment and for arrears of rent—Date of varied decree—Tenant, whether entitled to time for payment under S. 6.

The varied decree is to be executed as if it was an order made under and in accordance with the provisions of the Act. It, therefore, follows that the varied decree, to be treated as such order, must be dated after the commencement of the Act. S. 28 seems to mean that the variation is not to be one of mere form, but that the whole proceedings have to be gone over to see if the landlord can bring his case under S. 3. Hence, in cases where under the Act the decree is amended to an order for ejectment under S. 3 (1) of the Act, and the provisions of S. 6 are to be carried out, the date of the order will be the date of the varied order, and thus the tenant will have the opportunity of paying the arrears.

(f) Tenancy Laws—Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act (II [2] of 1949), S. 28—Variation of decree under—Nature of — Both sides must be given opportunity

Section 28 seems to mean that the variation is not to be one of mere form, but that the whole proceedings have to be gone over to see if the landlord can bring his case under S. 3. The whole law of ejectment has been changed by the Act; it is surely unfair to the either the landlord or the tenant to pleadings and evidence led when the matter in issue was entirely different. If the conformity is to be with the whole new Act, in particular S. 3, and not merely some change in the decree itself both sides must be given opportunity to establish a case of conformity or non-conformity.

Order.—This is a Rule for action to be taken under S. 28, Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949, hereafter referred to as the Act, and an application in revision against an order of a Munsif refusing to take such action. The decree to be dealt with under that section was passed in Title Suit 123 of 1989, a suit for ejectment and recovery of arrears of rent which was filed in the 3rd Court of the Munsif at Alipore. The suit was decreed on 28th June 1940 for rent only. On appeal by the landlord, the Subordinate Judge of Alipore added a decree for ejectment. There was a second appeal to this Court and on 22nd December 1948, Lodge J. dismissed the appeal. There have been subsequent proceedings under 8, 47, Civil P. C. but I do not think they have any bearing on the present matter.

(2) The tenant applied to the original Court which passed the decree under S. 28 of the Act. The Munsif held that the case was covered by the provisions of S. 8 (1) of the Act as the landlord had sued for arrears of rent as well as ejectment but refused to take action on the application. The landlord had mentioned in his plaint that he required the land for his own use. This was quite unnecessary in the state of the law at the time the suit was filed, but might if established bring the case under ground 3 (iv) of the Act. The matter was admittedly not in issue in the suit as tried, but the learned Munsif seems to have held that this ground was established, though his judgment is not quite clear on the point. The learned Munsif also considered the question whether the case came under ground 3 (vi) of the Act, namely, that the tenant held under a registered lease which expired. The learned Munsif found some references to a lease in the judgments in the case, but was unable to conclude whether it was registered or not, and held that to bring their case under this ground the plaintiffs must substantiate their case by furnishing the lease.

[3] It is not clear what the learned Munsif would have done if he had not found that the application was in any case liable to dismissal as the plaintiffs could show that there existed arrears of rent at the time of the suit, so as to bring the case under ground 3 (1) of the Act.

[4] The tenant made an application in revision and obtained a rule solely on the ground that the Munsif acted without jurisdiction. Later he made an application direct to this Court for action under S. 28, evidently on the basis of the decision in Gostha Behari v. Panchu Gopal, (Civil Rev. No. 861 of 1941) in which it was decided that applications under 8.18, West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act must be made to the appellate Court, as being "the Court which made the decree' within the meaning of the words used in that section. It was apparently assumed that the decision necessarily also covers the same phrase used in S. 28 of the Act. Whether it does so or not seems to depend on the whole interpretation of S. 28 of the Act, which question I proceed to discuss.

[5] The decree as it stands is (1) for ejectment, (2) for arrears of rent, (3) for interest and costs and (4) for damages at the rate of Rs. 7 per year until delivery of possession.

[6] Section 28, Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, runs as follows:

28. Power of Court to rescind or vary decrees and orders in certain cases :

"Where any decree or order for the recovery of possession of any holding from a thika tenant has been made before the date of commencement of this Act but the possession of such holding has not been recovered from the thika tenant by the execution of such decree or order, the Court by which the decree or order was made may, if it is of opinion that the decree or order is not in conformity with any provision of this Act other than sub s. (1) of S. 5 or S. 27, rescind or vary the decree or order in such manner as the Court may think fit for the purpose of giving effect to such provision and the decree or order so varied by any Court shall be transferred by such Court to the Controller for execution under this Act as if it were an order made under and in accordance with the provisions of this Act."

We have to try and give an intelligible, workable interpretation of these provisions without straining the canons of interpretation of statutes. The material words are:

"If it is of opinion that the decree or order is not in conformity with any provision of this Act other than sub-s. (1) of S. 5 or S. 27."

What precisely does this mean?

[7] If the Court thinks the decree or order is not in conformity with the provisions of the Act it is to rescind or vary it for the purpose of giving effect to such provision, and the decree or order is to be transferred to the Controller for execution "as if it were an order made under and in accordance with the provisions" of the Act. The Act itself makes no provision for any decree, but only for an order for ejectment by the Controller. The intention seems to be that the decree or order varied is to be in all respect the same as if it were an order passed by the Controller.

[8] At first sight, one might think that the words had some reference to some provision of the Act which required a decree to be in some particular form. The only section which apparently would have any bearing in that view would be S. S, which requires that when the Controller makes an order for ejectment his order "shall specify the amount of the arrear and of the interest, if any, due thereon" and then adds

"and no such order shall be executed if that amount the costs of the proceedings arising out of such application and such damages as the Controller may allow are deposited with the Controller within thirty days from the date of the order."

[9] But at once one asks what is the significance, if any of the reference to sub-s. (1) of S. 5 and to S. 27 of the Act? If we examine the Act these will be seen to be, so to speak, the alpha and omega of proceedings for ejectment as provided for in the Act. Section 5 shows that the only way for a landlord to obtain ejectment of a thika tenant is to move the Controller, while S. 27 provides for appeal, review and execution. The reference to these sections is somewhat obscure but it does appear sufficiently clear I think that the intention is that in examining whether the decree is in conformity with the Act, we have not only to look at the mere actual form of the decree itself but also to the whole proceedings except the naturally impossible requirement that they should have been held before the Controller.

[10] This view is supported by reference to the following 8. 29 which deals with ejectment suits pending at the time when the Act came into force: There, a different phraseology has been employed. The section runs as follows:

29. Application of Act to pending suits and proceedings:

"The provisions of this Act shall apply to all suits and proceedings, including proceedings in execution, for ejectment of a thika tenant which are pending at the date of commencement of this Act, and if any such suit or proceeding relates to any matter in respect of which the Controller is competent after the date of such commencement to pass order under this Act, such suit or proceeding shall be transferred to the Controller who shall on such transfer deal with it in accordance with the provisions of this Act as if this Act had been in operation on the date of institution of the suit or proceeding:

Provided that in applying the provision of this Act to any suit or proceeding instituted for the ejectment of a thika tenant so transferred, the provisions regarding notice in S. 4 of this Act shall not apply."

In pending cases for ejectment, the Controller is to take over the proceedings and deal with them as if the Act had been in operation at the date of the institution of the suit or proceeding. In other words, he will deal with the whole proceedings in conformity with the Act and necessarily at the end pass an order in conformity with the Act. Now, it would be strange if the Act made any substantial distinction between a case where a decree for ejectment had been passed by the Court, shall we say, on 27th February 1949, the day before the Act came into force and another case which happened to last one day longer and, therefore, was pending on 28th February 1949, when the Act came into operation.

[11] I think this view is further re-enforced if we look at the Thika Tenancy Ordinance 1948, which came into force a few months previously on 26th October 1948. The substantial provision there was that although a decree for ejectment might be passed it could not be executed, provided, in a case where the tenant was in arrears with his rent, he deposited into Court the amount of the decree and costs within 80 days from the date of the decree or order. One may surely gather from this the intention that from the date of the Ordinance decrees for ejectment against thika tenants were, subject to their paying arrears if any (in time) to be kept in suspense till further provision was made. The intention is in fact indicated in the preamble to the ordinance. The further provision is made in the Act in S. 28 and we may at any rate assume that the intention was by S. 28 to give similar treatment to such tenants against whom such decrees had been passed, as to tenants against whom suits are proceedings for ejectment were pending when the Act came into force. The interpretation I suggest carries out that intention.

[12] It is to be noted also that in cases where there are no arrears, S. 6 would have no application. Execution of the decree would have been stayed under S. 3 of the Ordinance, and if all that was required to bring the decree into conformity with the Act (under 8. 28) were to amend the decree in conformity with S. 6 then nothing would be required to be done in such cases. The suspension of execution by the Ordinance would have given no benefit to the tenant. It seems to be sufficiently clear that a tenant who was not in arrears and who thus under the Act would not be liable to ejectment, unless the landlord could show the case came under one or other of sub-cls. (ii) to (vi) of s. 8, and who was protected temporarily by the provisions of S. 3 of the Ordinance, was also intended to get the benefit of the Act by operation of the pro. visions of S. 28. If this were not so, tenants in cases where there were arrears, and where variation was necessary in the decree to make it conform with S. 6, would be in a better position than tenants who were never in arrears. I think then it is clear that a decree is to be varied or rescinded under S. 28 if the tenant can show it is equivalent to an order that the Controller would not be competent to pass under the Act because of the non-existence of one of the grounds' for ejectment given in S. 3 of the Act. (In parenthesis I may point out that under S. 28 the only decrees to be 'transferred' by the Court are those which are decrees or orders 'varied' by the Court. If no variation is made, as unnecessary, there is no provision for transfer, though S. 29 assumes that pending proceedings for execution are to be dealt with by the Controller. The flaw is perhaps not serious, but S. 28 should have also provided for transfer of "unvaried" decree also).

[13] From the above then it would appear in dealing with the decree in question, we are, in substance, (1) to see if it amounts to the sort of order that would have been passed by the Controller in a case under the Act, in other words, whether the conditions of S. 3 are fulfilled which lays down the grounds on which a thika tenant can be ejected and (2) whether in form the order is of the type that would be passed under S. 6 of the Act.

[14] As I have pointed out in Panchanan Shaw v. Satya Bandhu Mukherjee, Civil Revn. No. 1927 of 1949: (A. I. R. (37) 1950) Cal. 319) trouble may arise in some cases because S. 28 has not excepted S. 4 (requiring 30 days' notice) as one of the sections with which conformity is necessary, though S. 4 is excepted in S. 29. No such difficulty arises in the facts of the present.

case. It would be argued that this shows a deliberate intention to distinguish between completed cases dealt with by S. 28 and pending cases dealt with by S. 29, but I think it is a case of oversight. There is the equally anomalous omission of an exception of sub-s. 1 of S. 5 (requiring intitial approach to the Controller) from S. 29 though it is specifically excepted in S. 28.

[15] Here it seems to me to be important to note carefully that the Controller is only given power to pass an order for ejectment. He cannot pass any order which can be executed for recovery of arrears of rent. It is true that under s. 6 under the words previously cited above he has to state the amount of the arrears, and costs (I think also the damages; vide below) and if the tenant pays them he will not be ejected, and in that sense the Controller will collect the rent for the landlord, but I can find nothing in the Act which will allow the Controller to pass an order for actual payment of arrears in the event that the tenant does not pay up within the time specified in S. 6; on the contrary, there are several indications that the Controller has no such power. Section 5 itself clearly only bars a landlord going to Court for an ejectment order. It does not bar him suing for arrears of rent, and the order to be made under S. 5 is "directing the thika tenant to vacate the holding and subject to the provisions of S. 10, to put the landlord in possession thereof."

Again, if we turn to S. 29 of the Act, we will see that the provisions of the Act are to apply

"suits or proceedings, including proceedings in execution, for ejectment of a thika tenant, which are pending at the date of the commencement of the Act."

[16] Reference may also be made to S. 23 of the Act which refers to "the institution of the suit", clearly contemplating a separate suit for recovery of arrears of rent.

such as the present where there is a decree both for ejectment and for payment of arrears of rent, it is clearly necessary to separate the two. It is only the decree for ejectment which is to be converted into an order such as the Controller could pass and such as the Controller can execute, under the powers given to him under 8. 27 (6) of the Act.

[18] In the present case, so far as S. 3 (1) of the Act is concerned, there is no difficulty as the landlord not only sued for ejectment under the law then in force in 1939, but also sued and obtained a decree for arreas of rent. So the case is one under cl. 3 (1). The only question that gives rise to difficulty in this connection is the matter of the applicability of S. 6 and in short the question whether the amendment of the decree is to give the tenant some opportunity to pay up the arrears. On 22nd December 1943, there was a decree for arrears of rent and it is admitted on behalf of the tenant that the arrears in fact were not cleared up until a payment was made on 1st March 1949.

[19] If he is to be given such opportunity the question then arises whether the landlord in turn should be allowed to show that the case comes under S. 3 (iv) or 3 (vi) and if so how.

[20] I have stated that the decree as it stands, includes a decree for damages from the date of the suit till delivery of possession. That is not an order in my opinion which the Controller could pass. Under S. 6, the limits of the Controller's powers are to specify the actual arrears, the costs and the damages, if any, and the total is to be an amount which the tenant may pay within 30 days of the date of the order and so save himself from ejectment. Clearly, powers, the Controller cannot under those direct the tenant to go on paying further sums in the event of his not depositing the amount within those 30 days. Therefore, the decree in this case must be altered. The decree as I have said has to be divided into two separate decrees, in so far as there is a decree for arrears of rent and damages; this is not a decree or order which the Controller himself could pass at all. Again, the decree for ejectment, in view of what I have just said must be limited to one containing the actual order of ejectment plus the specification of arrears, costs and damages, limited tol damages upto the date of the order.

[21] On this matter, I may refer to an argument put forward by Dr. Sen Gupta based on the wording of S. 6. Literally, it would appear that the Controller's order is merely to show arrears, interest and costs and the tenant is then to come within 30 days to pay them and, as he is about to pay, he is to be told that in addition certain amount of damages also would be paid. I do think, clumsy as the wording of the section is, that it is necessary to say that it must be interpreted as literally as this, and it may be fairly interpreted as meaning that the Controller's order itself will state all the items to be paid within 30 days including damages so that the tenant will know exactly what he has to pay and if he does pay the amount he will get the benefit of the section and avoid ejectment.

ther the amendment is to be of any substantial use to a tenant in arrears in giving him an opportunity to pay the arrears. As Dr. Sen Gupta urges the decree here as it stands is in conformity with the Act. I have pointed out why I think, in any view, of the matter, it must be amended to some extent. The really material point is in fact what is to be the date of the amended decree. If it is dated as from the date of the order, varying the decree, the tenant will have his opportunity to pay up the arrears. In the present case, it is stated that the tenant had already paid the arrears on 1st March 1949, after the conclusion of the appeal in this Court arising out of proceedings under S. 47, Civil P. C. If the date of the decree, however, is to remain as the date of the order of Lodge J., viz., 22nd December 1943, then the one month's grace given by S. 6 has long passed.

[23] It seems to me this question is closely related to the whole question of how to interpret the intention as to how the provisions of 8. 28 are to be carried out. I have pointed out the apparent connection between the provisions of S. 28 and S. 29. The varied decree is to be executed as if it was an order made under and in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Does it not follow that the varied decree to be treated as such order must be dated after the commencement of the Act. Again I have said that S. 28 seems to mean that the variation is not to be one of mere form, but that the whole processedings have to be gone over to see if the landlord can bring his case under 8. 3. The anomaly in the learned Munsif's treatment of this case is obvious. The whole law of ejectment has been changed by the Act; it is surely unfair to tie either the landlord or the tenant to pleadings and evidence led when the matter in issue was entirely different. Before the Act the ground for ejectment was termination of the tenancy on expiry of the lease, or on notice, and other grounds given in the Transfer of Property Act. If the conformity is to be with the whole new Act, in particular S. S, and not merely some change in the decres itself both sides must be given opportunity to establish a case of conformity or non-conformity. Surely we must interpret S. 28 as meaning this. Does it not follow then that the only possible Court that can properly do this is the Court which passed the original decree, the trial Court. And does is not also follow that the order passed as to be executed as one under the Act must be dated as passed, so that an intelligible and meaningful order can be passed under S. 6 in cases of arrears. If the latter be not the case then the Court will amend a decree in a case of arrears specifying the amount of arrears and so forth on the lines I have indicated, but the whole will be maeningless, as the object of the specification, namely the opportunity to pay up the amount specified will be non-existent, as the 'date of the order' will be some date much in excess of thirty days prior to the actual date on which it 1950 C/49 & 50 is made, the date on which the original order was varied. I think, therefore, in cases where under the Act the decree is amended to an order for ejectment under S. 3 (1) of the Act, and the provisions of S. 6 are to be carried out, the date of the order will be the date of the varied order, and thus the tenant will have the opportunity of paying the arrears. Section 6 of the Act requires that they along with the other items mentioned herein be deposited with the Controller.

[24] From the above it follows that the decision in Gosta Behari Sadhu Khan's case, Civ. Revn. No. 861 of 1941, however applicable to the provisions of S. 18, West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, cannot apply to 8. 28 of the Act. The phrase 'Court which made the decree' has to be interpreted in the particular context in which it appears, and if the view I have taken of the interpretation of S. 28 is correct, the legis. lature cannot possibly have intended that the investigation as to conformity was to be made by other than the trial Court. I may point out that there is a considerable distinction between the provisions of S. 18, West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, and S. 28 of the Act, in particular if my interpretation is correct that we are to look to the provisions of s. 29 to assist in the interpretation S. 18 of the former Act speaks of the decree being varied if the Court 'is of opinion that the decree or order would not have been made if this Act had been in operation at the date of the making of the decree or order. Section 29 of the latter Act requires the Controller in pending cases to deal with them 'as if this Act had been in operation on the date of institution of the suit or proceeding. Again in the case of the Rent Act the varied decree is still a decree of Court to be executed by the Court, whereas under the Act as far as it relates to ejectment it is to be executed as "an order made under and in accordance with the provisions of this Act," i. e., as an order of the Controller.

[25] The result is that in my opinion the learned Munsiff had jurisdiction to deal with the application under S. 28, but there has been material irregularity in his exercise of his jurisdiction. Rule No. 1870 is accordingly made absolute without costs and the application of the tenant is directed to be re heard and disposed of in the light of what I have said above. The learned Munsif should give the plaintiff an opportunity of showing that the case is governed by S. S (iv) or (vi), and the defendant an opportunity of meeting the plaintiff's contention, evidence may be taken if necessary. If the tenant is held to be liable to ejectment on the ground of arrears only the decree will be amended to consist of (1) an order in the form indicated in S. 6 showing arrears, interest, costs, and damages to the date of the new order; this will be transferred to the Controller for executions and (2) a decree for arrears, interest, costs. damages at Bs. 7 per year till the date of recovery of possession to be executed by the Court.

Section 13 presupposes that there is no person in existence whose prima facie claim can be recognised by the Court of Wards and that being so the section entitles the Court of Wards to continue to manage the property and to hold it until one of the claimants to the property establishes his claim. On the other hand, S. 13A presupposes the existence of a rightful successor or of a proprietor not disqualified but merely gives the Court of Wards power to retain management of the estate of such successor or proprietor until certain debts of his predecessor have been discharged. The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration against the defendant represented by the Manager, Court of Wards, that the property in suit belonged to him. The property was under the management of the Court of Wards under S. 13A, Bengal Court of Wards

Act. In an earlier litigation an injunction had been issued restraining the Court of Wards from giving possession of the property to the defendant. This injunction was in existence when the suit for declaration was filed although it was discharged later on. The question was whether the suit was maintainable without the relief for possession :

Held, that the plaintiff could have claimed possession against the defendant through the Court of Wards, and that being so, no declaration could be made by reason of S. 42 and the suit was consequently not maintainable;

Held further, that the injunction was no bar to a suit for possession brought against the defendant as represented by the Court of Wards, because once it was established that the defendant had no title and that the same was in the successful plaintiff the Court of Ward's right to manage would cease. By these orders the learned Subordinate Judge held that two suits filed by the petitioners were not maintainable by reason of S. 42, Specific Relief Act.

the uncle of the other. Each of the petitioners had brought a suit claiming that the Bijni Raj which owned extensive zamindary property in Assam and other properties in Calcutta and Benaras, belonged to them. One based his claim on lineal primogeniture and the other on the rule of ordinary primogeniture. In both the suits two defendants were impleaded, namely, Kumar Bhairabendra Narayan Deb, the present holder of the Raj as defendant 1 and the same Bhairabendra represented by the Manager of the Bijni Raj Wards Estate, as defendant 2.

[3] To appreciate the points at issue it will be necessary shortly to set out the history of litigation relating to this estate. The litigation actually started soon after March 1883 when the then holder of the Raj, Raja Kumud Narayan Bhup died. The Raja left surviving him two widows-Rani Abhoyeswari and Rani Siddheswari-and these two Ranis litigated. After the death of Rani Abhoyeswari Raja Jogendra Narayan Bhup, a brother's son of Raja Kumud Narayan, became the holder of the Raj. Raja Jogendra Narayan Deb, however, became insane and the Court of Wards took over the management of the estate in December 1918. It is to be observed that litigation went on relating to this estate and eventually the dispute was decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council who pronounced judgment on 16th February 1942.

[4] In order to put an end to this dispute relating to this Raj the Assam Government in the year 1931 enacted the Bijni Succession Act (Assam Act II [2] of 1931) which came to be considered in the Privy Council case which brought one stage of this litigation to a close. This Act declared that the then holder Raja Jogendra Narayan, was the owner of the estate and provided that the next holder of the estate would be Bhairabendra Narayan Deb, defendant 1 in the present suits. Raja Jogendra Narayan whose estate was still being managed by the Court of Wards died on 18th June 1937 whereupon the Assam Government by a notification in the gazette declared that Kumar Bhairabendra Narayan Deb, defendant 1 in these suits had become the proprietor of the Bijni Raj. The Court of Wards continued in the management of the estate ostensibly for the purposes of paying off certain debts and expenses incurred during their management of the estate for Raja Jogendra Narayan.

(5) The two suits previously referred to which were brought by the plaintiffs were filed in the year 1940 and in each of the suits there is a prayer for a declaration that the plaintiff of that suit is entitled to the Bijni Raj. Both the plain.

tiffs in their respective plaints have made it clear that the decision of the Judicial Committee in the earlier suit was not binding upon them. Both the suits are purely declaratory suits and a court-fee of Rs. 20 was paid in respect of each of them. The suits are valued for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 92,000,00 and Rs. 89,60,931.

Court of Wards on 1st October 1914, released the estate in favour of defendant 1 Raja Bhairabendra Narayan. Shortly after the estate had been released, Bhairabendra, defendant 1 in the suits, raised a preliminary issue regarding the maintainability of each of these suits. It was contended on his behalf that 8.42, Specific Relief Act, was a bar to each of the suits and eventually this Court directed the trial Court to decide this preliminary issue before proceeding further with the case.

[7] The preliminary issue was raised in two issues which had been framed by the lower Court:

Issue 7: Can this suit proceed as framed? Is it maintainable in view of S. 42, Specific Relief Act? Has the plaintiff paid proper court fees?

Issue 27: Is the possession of the Court of Wards that of a stake-holder? Has it retained charge of the properties in suit for and on behalf of the defendant Raja Bhairabendra Narayan Bhup?

[8] On behalf of the petitioners it was argued in the Court below that the suits were maintainable as in the circumstances existing when the suits were filed no relief other than that of a declaration was open to either of the plaintiffs. It was contended that the defendant Raja Bhairabendra was not in possession and that the Court of Wards was in possession as a stakeholder. That being so, a declaration in favour of either of the plaintiffs would have the effect of compelling the stake-holder to hold the property for the successful plaintiff. As the Court of Wards was actually in possession as a stakeholder, a claim for possession by either of the plaintiffs was inappropriate and could not be made. Therefore, S. 42, Specific Relief Act would be no bar to the suits.

it was argued in the first place that even if the suits when filed were properly framed a claim for possession had become essential in the events that had happened. As I have said, the Court of Wards gave up the management of the estate and released the same to Bhairabendra during the pendency of the suit. Bhairabendra was thereafter clearly in possession and no declaratory suit could possibly, it was argued, be maintained after such release. It was contended, therefore, that even if S. 42, Specific Relief Act did not bar these suits when they were originally instituted, the section certainly barred each of the suits after the estate had been released in favour of Bhairabendra, defendant 1.

[10] Section 42. Specific Relief Act, in so far as it is material is as follows:

"Any person entitled to any legal character or to any right as to any property, may institute a suit against any person denying, or interested to deny, his title to such character or right, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled and the plaintiff need not in such suit ask for any further relief:

Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so."

[11] It will be observed that the section does not actually state that where a plaintiff is able to seek further relief but seeks merely a declaration the suit should be dismissed, but it does provide that in such a case no Court shall make the declaration prayed for. What is suggested in this case is that each of the plaintiffs was able to seek further relief, namely, possession of the estate and that being so, a Court could not make a declaration simpliciter. After the estate was released during the pendency of the suits the plaintiffs could have asked for possession. But it is contended on behalf of the petitioners that if the suits as originally framed were properly constituted the release of the property by the Court of Wards at a later stage could not affect the maintainability of the suit.

[12] Before us, it was not contended with any persistency that the subsequent release by the Court of Wards in favour of Raja Bhairabendra made these suits unmaintainable if they were maintainable when they were actually filed. The effect of subsequent events on the maintainability of a suit of this nature was discussed in a Bench case of the Madras High Court in Govinda v. Perumdevi, 12 Mad. 136, in which it was held that where a suit was brought for a declaration that certain alienations of land made by a Hindu widow to the defendants were not binding on the plaintiff, her reversionary heir, and pending appeal by the plaintiff, the widow died, the plaintiff was entitled to proceed with his appeal and further that he could not be permitted to amend his plaint and claim possession. It is unnecessary in the present cases to consider whether an amendment could be allowed. But there can be no doubt that this case is clear authority for the fact that where a suit for a mere declaration was properly constituted when filed it does not become unmaintainable by reason of the fact that subsequently the defendant acquires actual possession of the property.

[13] The same view was taken by a Bench of this Court in the case of Sm. Annapurna Dasi v. Sarat Chandra, 46 C. W. N. 355: (A.I.R. (29) 1942 Cal. 394). In that case the learned Judges who constituted the Bench were of opinion that where there is properly framed declaratory suit at the time of the institution thereof, but by reason of subsequent events a prayer for consequential relief becomes necessary, the suit will not be hit by S. 42; the Bench was of opinion that a Court of Justice could take note of subsequent events and could mould the decree according to the circumstances.

[14] The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the suits were not affected by the release which took place after the suits had been instituted and with that view I agree. Subsequent events could not attract the operation of S. 42 and, therefore, this Court must consider whether or not the suits were maintainable when they were actually filed.

[15] There can be no doubt that when these suits were instituted the estate was under the management of the Court of Wards. On 21st June 1937 the Assam Government by a notification in the gazette had declared that under the Bijui Succession Act, Raja Bhairabendra was the person who succeeded to the estate. On 28th July 1937 the Assam Government by another notification declared Raja Bhairabendra as a Ward of the Court of Wards under S. 3 and S. 60B, Bengal Court of Wards Act, and declared that the Court of Wards were retaining possession of the estate under Ss. 13 and 13A of the Act. On 1st November 1937, the notification of 28th July 1937 was corrected and it was stated that the Court or Wards were managing the estate on behalf of Bhairabendra under the provisions of S. 13A of the Act and not under Ss.13 and 13A.

of 21st June 1937 that Raja Bhairabendra succeeded to the estate was merely a notification of succession, as provided by the Bijni Succession Act. The Court of Wards had been in possession of the estate of Bhairabendra's immediate predecessor, Raja Jogendra Narayan, and by reason of the notification of 28th July 1937 and 1st November 1937 they continued in management of the estate. Section 13, Bengal Court of Wards Act, 1879, provides the procedure when succession to the property of a ward is disputed. The section reads as follows:

"Whenever, on the death of any ward, the succession to his property or any part thereof is in dispute, the Court may either direct that such property or part thereof be made over to any person claiming such property, or may retain charge of the same until the right to possession of the claimant has been determined under Bengal Act VII [7] of 1876, or until the dispute has been determined by a competent Civil Court."

[17] Section 13A of the Act gives the Court of Wards power to retain charge of the property of a deceased disqualified proprietor or of a proprietor who has ceased to be disqualified until certain debts have been discharged. The section reads as follows:

"If, when any disqualified proprietor dies, or ceases to be disqualified within the meaning of this Act, there remains undischarged any debts or liabilities which were incurred by, or are due from, such proprietor or which are a charge upon his property or any part thereof or any liabilities which were incurred by the Court for the benefit of the property of such proprietor.

Then notwithstanding anything contained in the foregoing sections, the Court may either withdraw from the charge of such property or retain such charge until such debts and liabilities, as the Court considers necessary to be discharged, together with all interest due thereon, have been discharged :

Provided that, after the death of a proprietor, the Court shall not retain charge on account of any debt or liability which has been declared by a competent Civil Court not to be binding on his representative."

[18] As I have said earlier, the Assam Govern. ment by their notification of 28th July 1937 declared that the Court of Wards retained possession of the estate under both 8.13 and 8.13A, Bengal Court of Wards Act. Quite clearly the Court of Wards could not retain possession under both these sections. If possession of an estate is retained under S. 13, there can be no doubt I think that the Court of Wards would retain possession as a stake-holder. They would be holding and managing the property on behalf of the person whose right of possession had later been determined under Bengal Act VII [7] of 1876 or by a competent Court. Section 13 presupposes that there is no person in existence whose prima facie claim can be recognised by the Court of Wards and that being so the section entitles the Court of Wards to continue to manage the property and to hold it until one of the claimants to the property establishes his claim.

[19] Section 13A, however, deals with entirely different circumstances. This section does not presuppose any dispute relating to the right to succeed to the property of a disqualified proprietor, but what it presupposes is the existence of certain debts which it is necessary to discharge before the Court of Wards releases the property to the successor of such disqualified proprietor or to the person who has ceased to be disqualified. The section in fact presupposes the existence of a rightful successor or of a pro. prietor not disqualified but merely gives the Court of Wards power to retain management of the estate of such successor or proprietor until certain debts of his predecessor have been discharged.

(20) The Assam Government realised eventually that the Court of Wards could not retain management under both these sections and by the notification of 1st November 1937 the original notification was corrected and it was declared that the Court of Wards would continue in management of the estate under S. 13A.

[21] It was contended on behalf of the petitioner that the Court of Wards were in fact stake-holders whether they managed under S. 13A of the Act. As I have already stated, the Court of Wards would appear to be stake-holders if they continued to manage the property under S. 13. But in my view they would not be stake-holders if they continued to manage the property of a disqualified proprietor under S. 13A. Under S. 13A the Court of Wards would in fact be managing the property of the heir or successor of the disqualified proprietor or of the proprietor who has ceased to be disqualified but only for certain purposes, namely, the discharge of debts due from the disqualified proprietor's estate.

[22] It seems to me clear that where the Court of Wards manages property under S. 13A, the Court of Wards manages the property of a ward.

[23] A "ward" is defined in S. 3 of the Act and means "any person who is under the charge of the Court of Wards, or whose property is under such charge."

[24] Section 60B of the Act provides:

"For the purposes of S. 10C, Part VII and Ss. 60 and 60A, a person whose property is under the charge of the Court of Wards under S. 11 by reason of the fact that such person has become entitled to the property jointly with a disqualified proprietor, or charge of whose property has been retained under S. 13A, shall be deemed to be a ward, but only so far as regards such property."

[25] It is, therefore, clear that where the Court of Wards retains the management of property under S. 13A the owner of such property, namely, the lawful successor of the disqualified proprietor or the proprietor who has ceased to be disqualified is deemed to be a ward for certain purposes and the Court manages the property on behalf of such ward. It is true that the owner is not a ward in the true sense because he is not a disqualified proprietor. But he is deemed to be a ward in so far as it is necessary to enable the Court of Wards to manage the property and to make provisions for the payments of the debts of the estate. It seems to me clear that under 8. 18A of the Act the Court of Wards is not in the position of a stake holder. It is in much the same position as it is in when it has taken over the management of a disqualified proprietor's estate. It is managing the property of another though for certain limited purposes. The property belongs to the ward and the Court of Wards is merely a manager for certain limited purpose.

[26] Where the Court of Wards manages the property of a disqualified proprietor there can, I think, be no doubt that the disqualified proprietor is the owner of the property and is in possession of it. He cannot sue and be sued except through the Court of Wards and if a person makes claim to property held by a ward he must claim possession of that property and sue the disqualified proprietor as represented by the Court of Wards. In short, he must observe the provisions contained in Part VII of the Act relating to suits brought against the Court of Wards. An outsider claiming possession of the property of a disqualified proprietor would have to sue the proprietor through the Court of Wards. A suit merely against the Court of Wards alleging the latter to be in possession could not possibly succeed as the possession of the Court of Wards if it can be said to be any possession, is merely possession as manager of the estate of the ward.

[27] It appears to me that the position of a ward under Ss. 13A and 60B of the Act is precisely similar to the position of a disqualified proprietor when a third party claims property said wrongly to form part of such ward's estate. The claimant is not claiming property in the possession of the Court of Wards but is claiming property, in the possession of the ward though under the management of the Court of Wards, Section 60B provides that such a person whose property, the Court of Wards is managing, is deemed to be a ward for the purpose of Part VII of the Act and therefore must be sued as a ward through the Court of Wards as provided by S. 51 of the Act.

[28] It appears to me that the provisions of S. 13A of the Act can never be applied if there is no holder of the property who can be regarded as a ward. Where such a person exists, the property is his though subject to the management of the Court of Wards and if possession of the property is claimed from such person then a claim for possession must be made in which the so-called ward, through the Court of Wards, is made the defendant. That was precisely the position when these two suits were instituted by the petitioners. Each of the petitioners was in a position to claim further relief against Bhaira. bendra through the Court of Wards. They could have claimed possession and that being so, no declaration could be made by reason of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, and neither of the suits was consequently maintainable.

[29] On behalf of the petitioners it was contended that no claim for possession could be made in either suit because even if it was established that either of the plaintiffs had a better title to the property than Bhairabendra, nevertheless the Court of Wards would be entitled to retain possession of the estate of the deceased disqualified proprietor until the debts were paid. If that were so the Court of Wards would be in the position of a stake-holder. But in my view by reason of Ss. 3 and 60A of the Act the Court of Wards under S. 13A is clealy managing the property of a ward, and if the ward for whom the Court of Wards is managing has no title to such property, neither has the Court of Wards any right to manage such property. Under the section it has a right to manage the property of a particular person and if that person has no right to such property neither has the Court of Wards a right to continue in management.

[30] It may be that if either of the plaintiffs succeeded in recovering possession of this property the Assam Government might notify that the Court of Wards should take over such property for the payment of the debts of the late Raja Jogendra Narayan. But in my view there could be no management of any estate successfully claimed by either of the plaintiffs without a fresh notification. The management of the estate of Bhairabandra could not become, by operation of law, management of the estate of either of the plaintiffs if he was successful in a claim for possession. Where the Court of Wards manages for a ward, the right of the Court to manage must depend upon the right of the ward to the property. If the ward loses the property to a person with a better title such person does not become ipso facto or by operation of law a ward of the Court. The Court would bel bound to assume management of the estate of the successful claimant by some fresh notification or declaration. The case is entirely different from the case envisaged in S. 13 of the Act where the Court of Wards is merely managing for the person who ultimately succeeds in establishing title to property. In my judgment as Bhairabendra was clearly a ward a claim to property held by him could be made and a suit could be brought for possession by suing Bhairabendra represented by the Court of Wards. This relief was open to each of the petitioners and therefore the suits which they filed which were purely declaratory suits were not maintainable.

[31] It was also contended that declaratory suits were the only form of suits which could be brought in this case by reason of the fact that in earlier litigation an injunction had been issued restraining the Court of Wards from giving possession of the property to Bhairabendra. This injunction was not discharged until the end of the litigation in the Privy Council in 1942 and the injunction was therefore clearly in existence when these suits were filed in 1940. The contention is that as the Court of Wards could not give possession to Bhairabendra a suit for possession against Bhairabendra could not possibly succeed as the latter was not in a position to give possession. Reliance was placed upon an observation of Lord Thankerton in the case of Sunder Singh Mallah Singh Sanatan Dharam High School Trust v. Managing Committee, Sunder Singh Mallah Singh Rajpur High School, 65 I. A. 106 at p. 112: (A. I. R. (25) 1938 P. C. 78). The learned Lord observed:

"The Subordinate Judge held that a suit for declaration did not lie, on the ground that the plaintiff was neither in possession nor in control of the management of the school, and that the proper form of the suit would have been one for possession and management of the school and not merely a declaration of such right, and that the plaintiff had omitted to seek this further relief. The High Court took the contrary view, on the ground that the defendants were not in possession or in a position to deliver possession of the properties and that therefore there was no further relief available to the plaintiffs against the defendants. Their Lordships agree with the High Court in this view."

[32] It is contended that as an injunction existed restraining the Court of Wards from giving Bhairabendra possession the latter was not in a position to deliver possession and therefore no claim for possession could be made and suits for declarations simpliciter would be maintainable.

[83] It appears to me, however, that this injunction was no bar to a suit for possession brought against Bhairabendra as represented by the Court of Wards, because once it was established that Bhairabendra had no title and that the same was in the successful plaintiff the Court of Wards' right to manage would cease. All that the injunction meant was that whilst the Court of Wards was in management of the property which it was entitled to manage, it should not hand over or release the property to Bhairabendra. The injunction would have no effect if it was established that the property belonged not to Bhairabendra but to a third person. He could recover possession as against Bhairabendra through the Court of Wards, as strictly, the possession throughout is the posses. sion of the ward and not of the Court of Wards. All that the injunction really meant was that the Court of Wards should not release the property or give up management in favour of Bairabendra. If, however, a successful claimant made good his title to the property the Court of Wards would not be acting in breach of the injunction in giving up the management. Bhairabendra through the Court of Wards could be ejected in execution of a decree and that being so, the fact that an injunction existed did not, to my mind, make it impossible for the plaintiffs in these suits to claim possession of the property.

[84] Lastly it was argued that if S. 19A contemplated a ward, the ward was in fact the deceased disqualified proprietor. Clearly such a contention is contrary to S. 60A of the Act. But reliance was placed upon the proviso to S. 13A which is as follows:

"Provided that, after the death of a proprietor, the Court shall not retain charge on account of any debt or liability which has been declared by a competent civil Court not to be binding on his representative."

gested that the disqualified proprietor's representative was not a ward as contemplated in the Act. But I can see nothing in the proviso which can affect the matter in any way. The Court of Wards under S. 13A manages the property for its ward who is the legal representative of the deceased disqualified proprietor. If the debts or liability for the discharge of which the Court retains possession, are not binding on the ward then the Court has no right to retain the management of the property.

[36] For these reasons I am satisfied that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that neither of the suits filed by the petitioners was maintainable.

[37] It might be suggested that even if the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong we could not interfere in this case under S. 115, Civil P. C. In my view, however, a wrong decision of the learned Subordinate Judge in this question of the maintainability of these suits would amount to a denial of jurisdiction to decide the suits on their merits and that being so the applications could in my view be brought under 8. 115, Civil P. C., and we could have interfered had we been of opinion that the Subordinate Judge was wrong. The point, however, does not arise, as in our view the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be assailed and therefore the petitions fail and each rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee in each case at ten gold mohurs.

Babulal Dhandhania — Petitioner v. Messrs. Gauttam & Co. — Respondent.

Arbitration Sult No. 141 of 1949, D/- 12th August 1949.

Partnership Act (1932), S. 69 (3) — 'Proceeding,' meaning of — Arbitration clause in contract with unregistered firm — Reference to arbitration if barred — Arbitration Act (1940), S. 2 (a).

The word 'proceeding' in S. 69 (3) means something in the nature of a suit, that is, a proceeding which is instituted or initiated in a Court and does not cover a reference to arbitration aliends the Court. Hence S. 69 cannot preclude a party from making a reference to arbitration without the intervention of the Court, in pursuance of an arbitration clause in a contract with an unregistered firm. [Paras 17, 23]

Annotation: ('46-Man.) Partnership Act, S. 69, N. 9.

K. K. Basu - for Petitioner.

R. S. Bachawat - for Respondent.

Order. — This is an application by the petitioner Babulal Dhandhania for setting aside an award made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, dated 8th April 1949.

(2) On 9th March 1948, the respondent Gauttam & Co. bought from the petitioner 2,000 maunds of linseed oil at Rs. 36 per maund. The terms of the contract will appear from Bought Note No. 2957, a copy of which is annexed to the petition.

[3] There was a clause that any dispute regarding the contract was to be settled by arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce in Calcutta. The petitioner failed to deliver the goods in time and it is alleged by the respondent that at the request of the petitioner the time for delivery was extended from time to time till 21st July 1948.

[4] The petitioner delivered certain quantities but failed to deliver about 1056 maunds.
The time for delivery was further extended till 25th August 1948. Yet the petitioner failed and neglected to give delivery. According to the petitioner there was a frustration of the contract.
But the respondent alleged that the real reason for non-delivery was that the market had gone against the petitioner and he wanted to avoid delivery.

[5] On 19th October 1948, the respondent referred the disputes to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. An award was made on 8th April 1949 by that Chamber which was filed in Court on 9th July 1949. Under the award the petitioner who carried on business under the name and style of Jhowla Prosad Babulal was directed to pay to the respondent Gauttam & Co., a sum of Rs. 18,480 8-9 together with interest and costs as mentioned therein.

[6] The ground on which the petitioner seeks to set aside the award is that the respondent is not a registered firm and in any event was not registered under the Indian Partnership Act at the material time. The letter dated 6th May 1949 from the Registrar of firms addressed to the petitioner's attorney shows that Gauttam & Co. was not registered in the office of the Registrar under the Partnership Act.

[7] Learned counsel for the petitioner, Mr. K. K. Basu, has contended that the effect of non-registration is fatal to the validity of the reference and the award. His argument is based on S. 69, Partnership Act. The relevant portion of that section is set out below:

"69. (1) No suit to enforce a right arising from a contract or conferred by this Act shall be instituted in any Court by or on behalf of any person suing as a partner in a firm against the firm or any person alleged to be or to have been a partner in the firm unless the firm is registered and the person suing is or has been shown in the Register of firms as a partner in the firm.

(2) No suit to enforce a right arising from a contract shall be instituted in any Court by or on behalf of a firm against any third party unless the firm is registered and the persons suing are or have been shown in the Register of firms as partners in the firm.

(3) The provisions of sub-ss. (1) and (2) shall apply also to a claim of a set-off or other proceedings to enforce a right arising from a contract, but shall not affect -

(a) the enforcement of any right to sue for the dissolution of a firm or for accounts of a dissolved firm, or any right or power to realise the property of a dissolved firm, or

(b) the powers of an official assignee, receiver or Court under the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act, 1909, or the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, to realise the property of an insolvent partner."

[8] Mr. Basu contends that the reference to arbitration to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce constitutes a "proceeding to enforce a right arising from a contract" under S. 69 (3), Partnership Act. According to him the effect of subses. (1), (2) and (3) of S. 69 properly read is that no suit or proceeding to enforce a right arising from a contract shall be instituted in any Court or before any arbitrator by a firm unless that firm is registered under the Partnership Act.

[9] No authority has been cited by Mr. Basu in support of his contention. In the affidavit in opposition filed by the respondent it is pointed out that Gauttam & Co. is a registered firm and it was registered under the Partnership Act on 1st June 1949 and this appears from a copy of the certificate of the Registrar annexed to the affilavit of a partner of the said firm. But Mr. Basu contends that on the date the reference was made, which was admittedly 19th october 1948, the firm was not registered and, therefore, the reference to arbitration was bad and the arbitrators had no authority to decide the alleged disputes referred to them. He argues that the reference to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce means the enforcement of an arbitration agree. ment between the parties and therefore it was really enforcing a right arising from a contract between the parties.

[10] The question, I have to determine, is whether the reference to arbitration in this case meant a proceeding to enforce a right arising from a contract within the meaning of S. 69 (3).

Partnership Act.

[11] Section 69 contains one of the most vital provisions introduced by the Partnership Act of 1932. It was suggested in some quarters that it was desirable to make the registration of a firm compulsory but that suggestion was not acceeded to. Yet the practical effect of S. 69 is to make the registration of a firm compulsory. That section forbids the institution of certain suits in respect of a partnership which has not been registered under the Act.

[12] Under sub.s. (1) a partner cannot institute a suit to enforce a right arising from a contract or conferred by the Act against the firm or his co-partners unless the firm is registered.

[13] Sub section (2) lays down that a firm which has not been registered shall not be competent to institute a suit against any third party to enforce a right arising out of a contract until the registration of the firm is effected.

[14] Sub-section (3) extends the provision of sub-83. (1) and (2) to a claim of set-off or other proceedings to enforce a right arising from a contract. But it introduces exceptions in case of suits for the dissolution of the firm or for accounts of a dissolved firm and preserves the power of an Official Assignee under the Insolvency Acts.

[15] Sub-section (2) bars suits by an unregistered firm for the recovery of damages for non-delivery of goods. Obviously if a firm is sued as a defendant and then if it wants to claim a set-off for such damage, then the firm must be registered otherwise the claim would be incompetent.

[16] The question is can the bar be extended to the case of an unregistered firm which claims reference to arbitration under an arbitration clause in a contract between the parties? I am assured that there is no authority directly on the point. In Jamal Usmal v. Firm Umar Haji Karim, I.L.B. (1948) Nag. 540:(A.I.B. (80) 1949 Nag. 175), the learned Judges held that S. 69 (3), Partnership Act has no application to the execution of a decree. They held that the words "other proceedings to enforce a right arising from a contract" are to be taken as sui generis of a claim of set off. Sub-sections (1) and (2) relate to the right of bringing a suit and the opening words of sub-s. (8) relate to the right of setting up a defence and have no relation to the entirely different question of a claim to enforce the execution of a decree. A claim of set off can be a partial defence to a suit and such a claim arising out of a contract may be set up in defence to negative the right of suit altogether, and it is these claims in defence which are placed under the same disabilities as the right to bring a suit at all in so far as unregistered firms are concerned. Sub-section (9) of S. 69 has, therefore, no application in the execution of decrees, whether consent decrees or decrees after contest. I have to point out that such elaborate discussions were not needed because in 8. 69 (4) it is clearly provided that S. 69 shall not apply to any proceeding in execution. Another case cited is Satish Chandra

v. P. N. Das & Co., 16 Pat. 742: (A. I. B. (25) 1938 Pat. 231): Objection was taken to the enforceability of an award in favour of an unregistered firm under S. 69 (1), Partnership Act. It was held that there was no illegality on the face of the award within cl. (c) of para, 14 of Sch. 2 to the Code. No argument was advanced on the basis of S. 69 (3), Partnership Act.

(3) means something in the nature of a suit that is a proceeding which is instituted or initiated in a Court Mr. Bachawet, learned counsel for the respondent, has drawn my attention to Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, (1894) 3 Ch. D. 376. In that case the words "action or proceeding instituted" in S. 2, Married Women's Property Act, 1893 were held to mean some action, or proceeding in the nature of an action, initiated by a married woman as a plaintiff, and do not include a motion or step taken by a married woman in an action in which she is defendant. Davey L. J. observed as follows:

"It must be borne in mind that an appeal is in reality In the nature of a defence by the person against whom an order has been made. Now, I take it that the words 'action or proceeding' must mean some action, or some proceeding in the nature of an action; that is to say, a proceeding in which a lis is initiated; and it appears to me that 'instituted' would be an inapt word for any such proceeding as has been suggested by Mr. Hopekinson. I have never myself heard of an appeal being instituted and I do not suppose any one ever heard of such an expression being applied to an appeal; whereas 'instituted' is an apt word for the commencement of a suit, and I think the use of the words 'from time to time' points out what is meant."

[18] In Sharpington v. Fulham Guardians, 1904-2 Ch. 449: (73 L. J. Ch. 777), it was held that a demand for a reference to arbitration under an arbitration clause in a building contract in respect of an alleged breach of that contract by the guardians of a union was not a commencement of proceedings within the meaning of s. 4, Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859, and a claim for damages for breach of such a contract did not constitute "a debt, claim or demand lawfully incurred or become due" within the meaning of s. 1 of that Act until the amount of the damage had been ascertained either by the award of an arbitrator or in some other manner provided by law.

[19] Stroud in his Judicial Dictionary, Supplementary volume, 1931 Edition, at page 728, cites this case as authority for the proposition that a claim or demand for arbitration under a contract is not a "proceeding" within S. 4, Poor Law Act of 1859.

[20] On the authority of Chhabba Lal v. Kallu Lal, 73 I. A. 52: (A. I. R. (33) 1946 P. C. 72), Mr. Bachawat contends that the petitioner cannot set up the alleged illegality or invalidity of the reference on an application to set aside an award. With considerable cogency Mr. Basu points out that in that case the application was made under paragraph or S. 15 of Sch. II, Civil P. C., which applies to an award made as the result of an order of reference in a suit. The Judicial Committee had to construe the words 'being otherwise invalid' in S. 15. But their Lordships pointed out that by way of contrast the language of S. 21 of Sch. II may be noted. Sir John Beaumont observed:

"That S. 21 empowers the Court to pronounce judgment according to an award made on a reference out of Court, and the opening words require the Court to be satisfied that the matter has been referred to arbitration. There are no such words in S. 16."

Section 21 dealt with the filing and enforcement of an award on a reference without the intervention of Court and in such a case the Court must be satisfied that there was a valid reference to arbitration. It is urged by Mr. Basu that the Privy Council judgment is an authority only for the proposition that when a reference has been made by an order of Court in a suit the validity of the award cannot be questioned on an application for setting aside the award. Really such reference by Court presupposes a valid agreement for arbitration judicially recognised as binding on the parties.

[21] My attention has been drawn to E. D. Sassoon and Co. v. Ramdutt Ramkissendas, 49 I. A. 366: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 374). The Judicial Committee held that where an award is objected to on the ground of want of jurisdiction in the arbitrator, suit can be instituted and also an application can be filed under S. 14, Arbitration Act, 1899 for setting aside the award. How far the present Arbitration Act 1940 reproduces the old law is a debatable point.

[22] I would allow Mr. Basu to urge his point and to treat it as an application under S. 33, Arbitration Act and, if necessary, I would have allowed an amendment of the petition.

[23] On the merits the question raised is one of the proper construction of S. 69, Partnership Act. Under sub-s. (3) the provisions of sub-ss. (1) and (2) shall apply also to proceedings to enforce a right arising from a contract. Let us assume that a reference to arbitration is a proceeding to enforce a right within sub-s. (3). Yet the question is: What is the penalty or disqualification created or imposed by sub ss. (1) and (2) ? These sub-sections merely bar the institution of certain suits in any Court. Therefore applying the provisions in those sub-sections to a case covered by sub s. (3), the penalty or disqualification that the non registration of a firm entails is that it is debarred from instituting proceedings in any Court. In my view, S. 69, Partition Act, does not preclude a reference to an arbitrator without the intervention of a Court and the word 'proceeding' in S. 69 (3) does not cover a reference to arbitration aliunde the Court.

ral or different meanings and its exact meaning can be determined by its association with other words. The language used is not very clear and in case of any doubt or obsecurity the right of a person under a valid and binding contract to resort to a private forum for the determination of his disputes should not be taken away and a new obligation or penalty ought not to be imposed on him so as to bar the exercise of his right in the absence of explicit language in the Statute compelling the Court to decide against such reference to arbitration.

of Munsif, 2nd Court, Burdwan, D/- 31-1-1949.

(a) Railways Act (1890), S. 72 — Risk Note A — Short delivery — Leakage in transit — Railway, when can be absolved from liability.

For the purpose of Risk Note A, shortage in weight of goods is a condition in which the goods are delivered. It does not follow, however, that once Risk Note A has been executed every case of short delivery will be covered by the saving clause. Before the saving clause can have operation, it must appear prima facie that the loss which actually occurred was in some way connected with the defective condition of the packing.

[Paras 7 and 10]

A consignment of rape seed bags under 'Risk Note A' was found on delivery to be short in weight as a result of cuts caused in certain bags through flap-door gaps. The consignee sued for compensation for loss. The defendant Railway failed to prove that the loss was in some way connected with the defective condition of the goods or the shortage was due to circumstances beyond their control:

Held, that the Railway could not claim the special protection afforded under the clause in Risk Note A and therefore it was liable to pay compensation,

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 30, 31—Applicability —Short delivery — Suit for compensation for loss of goods in transit.

Article 31 applies to all cases of non-delivery other than those due to loss of the goods. Hence a suit for compensation for loss of goods in transit and the consequent short delivery would be governed by Art. 30 and not by Art. 31 and in the absence of any evidence to show as to when the loss actually occurred the date of the loss must be taken to be the date on which the loss was first discovered for purposes of starting point of limitation.

(c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 31 - Starting point - "When the goods ought to be delivered".

Obiter.— In deciding what point of time should be held to be the time when the goods ought to be delivered for purposes of Art. 31, it is reasonable to take into account the date when the goods are despatched, the date when the goods reach the destination, the nature of the goods and the manner in which the goods are sent. It seems to be usual for the Railway Administration to send notices after the arrival of goods at the destination with a warning that if the goods are not taken delivery of within a certain period, demurrage will be charged. If and when such notice is issued, the point of time after which demurrage will be chargeable may very well be taken to be the time when the goods ought to be delivered. [Para 18]

Where a wagon full of rape seeds booked on 18th March at Delhi arrived at Burdwan on 28th March, and the consignee took delivery on 18th April without any notice of arrival of the goods from the railway, it was held that the date of delivery could not be considered to be beyond the date when the goods ought to be delivered. [Para 18]

Purushottam Chatterji __ for Petitioner. Bhabesh Narayan Bose __ for Opposite Party.

Order. - 240 bags of rape seed were booked from Delhi to Burdwan on 17th March 1917, the present petitioner being the consignee. He took delivery on 18th April 1947. All the 240 bags were delivered, but of these 7 had been cut and there was a resultant shortage in the contents, of 3 maunds 35 seers, as certified by the goods clerk who gave delivery. The petitioner having sued the Bailway Company for compensation for this loss, the defendants pleaded that due to the special protection afforded by a certain clause in Risk Note A under which the consignment had been sent, the plaintiff could not succeed unless misconduct on the part of the Railway administration's servants was proved and that there was no such misconduct. It was further contended that the plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

(2) The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court who tried the suit came to the conclusion that the defendants were entitled to protection of the clause in Risk Note A, that no misconduct had been proved and also that the suit was barred by limitation.

[8] For the purpose of the present Rule, we must proceed on the assumption that the learned Judge's finding of fact that no misconduct had been proved is correct. The other two questions namely whether the defendant was entitled to any special protection in view of the clause in Risk Note A or the question whether the suit was barred by limitation are questions of law on which it is necessary to consider whether the learned trial Court's conclusion is right.

[4] Risk Note A forms the basis of the contract in cases where articles are tendered for carriage which are either already in bad condition or so defectively packed as to be liable to damage, leakage or wastage in transit. The special clause runs thus:

"I/We, the undersigned do hereby agree and undertake to hold the Railway Administration harmless and free from all responsibility for the condition in which the aforesaid goods may be delivered to the consignee at destination and for any loss arising from the same except upon proof that such loss arose from misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration's servants."

[5] In a recent case of the Patna High Court, viz. Governor General of India in Council v. Firm Bishundayal Ram Gourishankar, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 48, Meredith J. held that the word 'loss' as used in Risk Note A cannot refer to any loss of the goods, but refers to loss arising from the condition in which the goods are delivered; that in other words the Risk Note A has no application at all to cases of failure to deliver, or pilferage, because a thing never delivered cannot be said to have been delivered in any condition, and therefore, no question arises of any loss arising from the condition in which the goods were found on delivery. It was accordingly held that the Railway Administration can never plead the execution of Rick Note A in bar to a claim based on non-delivery, on account of pilferage.

[6] In Bansi Ram v. B. N. W. Rly. Co., 51 ALL. 480: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 ALL. 124), Sulaiman J. took a different view as regards the meaning of the words "loss arising from the same". He held that while this would mean loss arising from condition in which the goods are delivered, a shortage in weight is a condition in which the goods are delivered, and is covered by the saving clause in Risk Note A.

[7] To hold that when, say X goods are consigned and (X-N) goods are delivered, really X goods are being delivered in a condition of shortage, involves some straining of the word 'delivery'. The fact, however, that the clause is clearly intended to cover cases of wastage and leakage of the contents justifies this straining, and I agree that for the purpose of Risk Note A, shortage in weight of goods is a condition in which the goods are delivered. It does not follow, however, that once Risk Note A has been executed every case of short delivery will be covered by the saving clause.

[8] It is necessary to look to the entire document to decide how far the protection of this clause in Risk Note A extends. The form opens with the words:

"To be used when articles are tendered for carriage which are either already in bad condition or so detectively packed as to be liable to damage, leakage or wastage in transit."

This clause was known to and must be taken to have been consciously in the mind of the parties at the time, the risk note was signed. When therefore in the operative portion of the document the signatory agrees to hold the Railway authorities

"free from all responsibility for the condition in which the aforesaid goods may be delivered to the consignee at destination and for any loss arising from the same except upon proof that such loss arose from the misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration's servant,"

the parties must be taken to have also agreed that this would apply only where the condition in which the goods are delivered may either be due to the fact that they were already in bad condition or to the fact that they were so defectively packed as to be liable to damage, leakage or wastage.

[9] It is no doubt true that the very fact that in this case Risk Note A was executed is evidence to show that either the goods were in bad condition when tendered or they were so defectively packed as to be liable to damage, leakage or wastage in transit. The evidence indicates that this was a case of defective packing inasmuch as the bags used were old.

[10] Something more, however, is necessary before the saving clause can have operation. It must appear prima facie that the loss which actually occurred was in some way connected with the defective condition of the packing. That, in my opinion, the defendant has failed to show. When bags are old they may burst and wastage may occur because of that. The defendant's own papers, the U. T. M. Book however clearly indicates that this was not a case of wastage because of the bad condition of the bage; for, it runs thus: "240 bags of R/seed of which found 7 bags cut and slack through flap door gaps." I find it impossible to put any interpretation on this except that the person who wrote this concluded from what he saw of the condition of the 7 bags that they had been cut through the flap door gaps.

special protection afforded by the clause in Risk Note A is not available to the defendant in the circumstances of this case.

[12] It was, however, argued by Mr. Bose on behalf of the opposite party that in any case the liability of the defendant cannot be more than that of a bailee and so the defendant would not be liable to compensate the plaintiff unless it appeared that the shortage was due to circumstances which were within the control of the Railway Administration. The learned Advocate has drawn my attention to a passage in the judgment where the learned Judge observes:

"In the absence of such positive evidence given by the plaintiffs regarding misconduct on the part of the servants of the defendant who has given all material The learned Advocate asks me to consider this as a finding of fact that in fact the Railway defendant has proved that the shortage was beyond the control of the Railway Administration. I am unable to read that passage in that manner. It does not appear that the learned Judge's attention was drawn to the question whether the liability of the defendant would be merely just that of a bailee; in any case, he does not record it as his conclusion that the defendant had proved that the shortage was due to circumstances beyond the control of the Railway Administration. His statement, to my mind amounts only to this that the defendant has given evidence which if believed would tend to show that the shortage was due to circumstances beyond the control of the Railway Administration. I must admit, however, that on going through the evidence of the two witnesses examined on behalf of the defendant, I am unable to understand what evidence the learned Judge was thinking of when he said that the defendant had given evidence to show that the Railway Administration had given all material and necessary evidence to show that the shortage was due to circumstances beyond the control of the Railway Administration. In the present case the shortage was due to presence of some gaps in the flap door. If evidence had been given that the extent of the gaps in the flap door of this wagon was such as cannot be prevented by ordinary care, I could have taken that as evidence to show the shortage was due to circumstances beyond the control of the Railway Administration. Nothing has, however, been said by the witnesses either about the extent of the gaps in this particular wagon or about the question whether such gaps can be prevented or not. The learned Advocate wanted me to assume that some gaps there must remain and argued that the mere existence of such gaps should not be considered to show any omission to take due care on the part of the Railway Administration. I do not see, however, any justification for making such an assump. tion in the absence of proper evidence on the record.

evidence is that it has not been shown that the shortage was due to circumstances beyond the control of the Railway Administration and consequently the defendant would be liable for compensation, unless the plaintiff's claim appears to be barred by limitation.

[14] On the question of limitation, the first point for decision is whether this case is to be governed by Art. 30 or Art. 31, Limitation Act, Article 30 provides one year's limitation from the date "when the loss or injury occurs" for suits "against a carrier for compensation for losing or injuring goods." Article 31 provides the same period of one year from the date "when the goods ought to be delivered" against a carrier for compensation for non-delivery of, or delay in delivering goods. Obviously, any case of loss of goods would, at the same time, be a case of non-delivery. But there may be cases of nondelivery even without any loss. Article 31 should, therefore, be held to apply to all cases of nondelivery other than those due to loss of the goods. In view of this, it would, I think, be proper to treat this case as covered by Art. 30, Limitation Act.

[16] The question would then arise as to when the loss occurred. Obviously, this would be a matter which the carrier is in a much better position to prove than the plaintiff. We may indeed think of many cases where neither the carrier defendant nor the plaintiff is in a position to know when the loss has occured. In the present case, there is no evidence on the record to indicate when the loss did actually occur. The learned trial Court has stated in its judgment that some bags were out during transit between Delhi and Burdwan. The learned Advocate for the opposite party has placed reliance on this statement and has argued that this showed that the loss certainly occurred some day before 28th March when the wagon reached its destination Burdwan. I am unable to see, however, any basis in the evidence on record for the learned Judge's finding that the bags were cut during transit. This appears to be a finding without any evidence and so I cannot attach any weight to this.

[16] In the absence of any evidence on the point, it seems to me that the date of the loss should be taken to be date on which the loss was first discovered, namely, 18th April 1947. This is undoubtedly somewhat arbitrary, but there seems to be no other way in which to deal with a situation of this nature. If the time runs under Art. 30 from 18th April 1947, the suit must be held to be within time after giving the plaintiff two month's time for service of notice under 8. 80, Civil P. C.

[18] Even if Art. 31 is held to apply to this case, it seems to me that the suit is within time. Under Art. 31, limitation runs from the time "when the goods ought to be delivered." In the present case, as in most cases, no special date was fixed as the time on which delivery would be made by the carrier. In deciding what point of time should be held to be the time when the goods ought to be delivered it seems to me to be reasonable to take into account the date when the goods are despatched, the date when the goods reach the destination, the nature of the goods and the manner in which the goods are sent. Thus, if a wagon load of goods is sent, more time should be given after the despatch and the proper time for delivery than in a case where just a few bags are sent. Again, if the goods are of a perishable nature, very little time should be given for delivery after the goods have reached their destination. It seems to be usual for the Railway Administration to send notices after the arrival of goods at the destination with a warning that if the goods are not taken delivery of within a certain period demurrage will be charged. If and when such notice is issued, the point of time after which demurrage will be chargeable may very well be taken to be the time when the goods ought to be delivered. No evidence has been given in the present case whether any such notice was issued. Mr. Bose on behalf of the defendant has suggested that it may very well be that the defendant without obtaining any notice went by chance to the station on that day to see whether the goods had arrived and found that the goods had arrived. I do not think it necessary, however, for the purpose of this case to arrive at any decision as to whether any such notice was served. Even in the absence of such notice, it seems to me clear that when one wagon full of rape seed booked on 18th March at Delhi arrived at Burdwan on 28th March, the 18th of April on which delivery was taken cannot reasonably be considered to be beyoud the date when "the goods ought to be delivered." I am, therefore, of opinion that even if Art. 31, Limitation Act, applies, the suit is with. in time.

[19] The plaintiff's suit should, therefore, succeed except that he is not entitled to the interest claimed for the period prior to the institution of the suit.

[20] Accordingly, I would set aside the order of the learned Munsif and order that the suit be decreed for the amount of Rs. 128-9.0. The plaintiff should get his costs in both the Courts.

Sudhir Kumar Acharya - for Opposite Party.

Das Gupta J. — The petitioner instituted a suit for partition on the allegation that along with the opposite parties he was in joint possession of three plots of lands C. S. Plots Nos. 9313, 9314 and 9315 of Mouza Bali. In view of the allegation and the nature of relief claimed he paid fixed court-fees of Rs. 15. After both parties had examined their witnesses and produced documents and closed their evidence the learned Subordinate Judge heard the arguments of the parties and then passed an order directing the appointment of a commissioner to ascertain the proper valuation of the suit property being of opinion that ad valorem court-fees on the value of the property was payable on the plaint. It is against this order that the plaintiff has filed the application and a rule was issued on the opposite parties to show cause why this order should not be set aside The ground for the learned Subordinate Judge's decision that ad valorem court fee was payable was a statement made by the plaintiff in his evidence that he was not in possession of the suit property.

[2] Mr. Banerjee for the petitioner has contended and there can be no doubt rightly, that the question as to what court fees are payable on a plaint has to be decided on the allegation in the plaint and the nature of the relief claimed. Whatever may transpire in the evidence, the plaint remains the same until and unless it is amended and a conclusion on a consideration of the evidence that the plaintiff is or is not in possession cannot affect the nature of the suit as instituted in the plaint. In this case the plaint as already stated was for partition on the allegation of joint possession with other cosharers and so long as that plaint is not amended it must be held that the court.fees paid are eufficient, no matter what may transpire in the evidence.

[3] If and when a Court comes to the conclusion that the allegation of joint possession in the plaint is not borne out by the evidence the obvious result would be that the plaintiff's suit would fail unless the petition is suitably amended and further court fees paid. In the present case as the evidence on both parties has been closed we are in a position to see for ourselves whether the plaintiff's case of joint possession as made out in the plaint has been proved to be incorrect. Admittedly the plaintiff was recorded in the settlement operation as in possession of ore of the plots. The defendant, who was examined himself, claimed to be in possession of this plot exclusively and that the plaintiff has never been in possession. This statement of the defendant alone cannot be held to be sufficient to rebut the correctness of the settlement record.

[4] Mr. Achary, on behalf of the oppositeparties, laid much stress on the plaintiff's statement in the evidence that he never possessed the suit property. This sentence has, however, to be read with the following sentence that the suit property is lying patit. I have no doubt in my mind that what the plaintiff wants to convey by his statement 'I never possessed the suit property' was that he did not exercise any acts of actual possession such as cultivation or the like, because the land was lying patit. The position in view of the record of the plaintiff's possession in the settlement khatian, which stands unrebutted, obviously is that the possession of the other co-sharers of the suit property must be taken to be also plaintiff's possession.

[5] It may be mentioned in this connection that the defendant has nowhere said anything about ousting the plaintiff from possession. So long as there is no such ouster, plaintiff's possession remains, even though he may not be exercising any actual acts of possession.

[6] Even if, therefore, it was permissible for the learned Court below to go into the evidence, in order to decide whether court fee on the plaint was sufficient, I am of opinion that the evidence on the record does not justfy the conclusion at which he arrives that the plaintiff's allegation of joint possession has been proved to be untrue or that the plaintiff is out of possession.

[7] My conclusion, therefore, is that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in his opinion that ad valorem court-fee is payable on the plaint and that the fixed court-fee of Rs. 15 paid by the plaintiff is sufficient. I would accordingly make this rule absolute and set aside the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge. There will be no order for costs.

Order.—This is an application for sanction of a scheme of arrangement under S. 153, Companies Act. The Company was incorporated in the year 1921 with an authorised capital of Rs. 20,00,000 divided into 80,000 shares of Rs. 25 each. The authorised capital is now divided into 4,00,000 shares of Rs. 5 each. The issued capital is Rs. 20,00,000 and the amount of capital paid up or credited as paid up is Rs. 19,86,898. The Registered Office of the Company is at 18, Netaji Subhas Road, Calcutta. The object of the Company is, inter alia, to deal in cotton and to carry on the business of ginning cotton, spinning yarn and manufacture of linen cloth and other goods.

121 The Managing Agents of the Company are M/s Hemendra Nath Dutta & Sons Limited, a private limited company. They were so appointed on 10th March 1943 for a period of 20 years. Two of the Directors of the Managing Agency Company, viz., Hemendra Nath Dutta and Rabindra Nath Dutta are also Directors of the Company. The business of the Company is at present being carried on by a Board of Directors consisting of persons other than the said Hemendra Nath Dutta and Rabindra Nath Dutta. The present Board of Directors has suspended the said Managing Agents.

[3] On 29th November 1948, an application was presented to me for sanction of a scheme which was annexed to the petition. I admitted the petition and gave directions for holding a meeting and fixed the date of hearing for 26th January 1949. Pursuant to the directions, on 9th January 1949, the meeting was held but it is said that certain creditors whose debts were disputed created disturbances, by reason whereof the creditors could not consider and vote upon the scheme.

[4] The matter came before me on 25th January 1949. I, thereupon, gave fresh directionsfor holding meetings of the creditors and share. holders. I directed that creditors whose claims were disputed by the company would be entitled to attend the meeting and their votes would be separately recorded. I further directed that notice of the meeting together with a proper form of proxy and a copy of the scheme should be sent to each creditor and shareholder to his respective address as recorded in the books of the company. I also directed that any person whose claim was disputed by the company and who applied to the special officer in writing at least 10 days before the date appointed for the meeting would be entitled to be supplied with a proxy form. I fixed the hearing of the application for 29th March 1949.

[5] I have forgotten to mention that on 29th November 1948 I appointed Mr. A. B. Gupta a Chartered Accountant, to investigate the workability of the scheme and the said auditor was to submit his report on 31st December 1948. The report of the auditor was to be available for inspection by the creditors at least a week before the meeting. I also appointed Mr. S. N. Bose, as a Special Officer and ordered him to make an inventory of the books and assets of the applicant. Pursuant to the directions Mr. A. B. Gupta investigated the accounts and made a report. He reported that there was huge loss of liquid assets amounting to about Rs. 29,00,000. According to him the liabilities of the company were Re. 44,00,000 and the available resources for meeting the liabilities was Rs. 27,00,000 and the scheme was likely to founder for want of finance.

[6] On 18th March 1949, meetings of creditors and shareholders were held. Mr. S. Banerji, a. member of the Bar, acted as Chairman of the Meeting. The auditors' report as well as theopinion of M/s K. C. Roy Chowdhury & Co., Auditors, commenting on the report of Mr. Gupta. were placed before the creditors and explained to them. Mr. Keshab Chandra Bose and Mr. B. M. Bagaria, Solicitors attended the meeting as holders of proxies from numerous oreditors of the company. At first the entire scheme was presented to the creditors for their acceptance or rejection and it was rejected by an overwhelming majority of creditors. Votes, of the creditors were not, however, recorded. Thereafter the clauses of the scheme were considered. Mr. Bagaria proposed certain amendments. The Chairman, although he was of the opinion that Mr. Bagaria was not entitled to move any amendment permitted him to do so. The amendments were seconded by Mr. Keshab Chandra Bose who was also not a creditor. The motion of Mr. Bagaria was supported by admitted creditors of the value of Rs. 10,965-9-3 and by disputed creditors whose claims amount to Rs. 11,96,495-7-9. The value of the creditors who opposed the motion was Rs. 4,00,755-7-10. Thereafter, one Mr. Tallaty, moved certain amendments. The motion was supported by admitted creditors of the value of Rs. 4,00-112-9-6 and disputed creditors of the value of Rs. 39,717-10-9. The motion was opposed by admitted creditors of the value of Rs. 10,715-15-3 and disputed creditors of the value Rs. 11,41,981-13-6.

[7] The Chairman reported that the scheme as amended on the motion of Mr. Tallaty was passed by the requisite majority of creditors in number as well as in value whose claims were not disputed by the company. The scheme as amended is annexed to the report of the Chairman, and marked 'G'. At the meeting of the shareholders, the scheme as amended was accepted by the shareholders of the value of Rs. 4,84,080 and opposed by shareholders of the value of Rs. 27,830.

(8) It is submitted that the scheme as amened should be sanctioned by me because it has been passed by the requisite majority of creditors and shareholders.

[9] Mr. S. C. Bose, appearing on behalf of some creditors, whose claims are disputed by the company, submits that the scheme has not been passed by the requisite statutory majority. The disputed creditors may be classed into two categories. There are creditors whose names appear in the books of the company as creditors, and to whom proxy forms were sent by the special officer pursuant to the directions given by the Court. On the date when directions were given their debts were not denied or disputed. There is another class of creditors whose names do not appear in the books of the company. The proxy forms were sent to them on their application to the special officer. The Chairman considered the creditors of both the classes I have mentioned as disputed creditors and in coming to the conclusion whether the scheme was passed by the requisite majority did not take into account both the said classes of creditors. He has only considered creditors whose debts were admitted by the company and on such consideration has reported that the scheme has been passed by the requisite majority.

whether the votes cast by Mr. Bagaria and Mr. K. C. Basu holding proxies from creditors should be taken into account. The Chairman was of the opinion that they were not entitled to be present or vote, though he allowed them to be present and recorded their votes. If the votes cast by Mr. Bagaria and Mr. Basu are taken into consideration it is clear that the scheme has not been passed by the requisite majority.

of this application, the creditors whose names appear in the books of the company should be considered as creditors and their votes would taken into account. The creditors whose names do not appear in the books of the company should not be considered as creditors unless they can show prima facie on this application to the satisfaction of the Court that they are creditors.

[12] I am, however, of opinion that Mr. Bagaria and Mr. Basu were not entitled to be present in the meeting as holders of proxy from creditors. It has been held in England that for the purposes of a meeting of any particular class, proxies can be given only to the members of that class. In other words, at a meeting of creditors, only creditors were entitled to be present. Persons who hold proxies from creditors but who were not themselves creditors could not attend the meeting.

[13] Sir George Jessel held that it was a wellestablished rule that at a meeting held of a class of persons, holders of proxies who do not belong to the class are not entitled to be present or to vote. Mr. S. C. Bose contended that that rule was based on the General Order and Rules of the High Court of Chancery 1863, Rule 46 and should not be followed in India. He has also referred to adverse criticisms of the rule in Palmer on Company Precedents and Buckley on Companies Act. He also referred to a case reported in Re
General Mortgage Society (Great Britain)

Ltd. (1942) 1 ALL E. R. 414: (1942 Ch. 274). [14] It appears, however, that the rule is one of general application. In S. 79, Companies Act, it is provided that a meeting of chareholders cannot be attended by a proxy holder who himself is not a shareholder. A similar rule appears in Art. 65 of Table A, Companies Act. In S. 115 which is the section in the Companies Act of 1929 in England corresponding to S. 79 of the Indian Act, there is no provision similar to the provision in S. 79, Companies Act. The intention of the legislature in the case of meeting of shareholders was that it must be attended by persons of the same class and not by outsiders as holders of proxies from shareholders. It is difficult to see why a different rule should apply in the case of meetings of creditors. There seems to be sound reason why meetings of creditors should be attended only by creditors and not by any outsiders. The rule was said to be well established in the time of Sir George Jesell. That rule has been followed in England except where there is any statutory provision empowering outsiders to be present at meetings of a class of persons. The case reported in Re. General Mortgage Society (Great Britain) Ltd, (1942) 1 ALL E.R. 414: (1942 Ch. 274) is a case of that class. There, R. 150 of the winding up rules clearly provided that the Official Receiver could be present at a meeting of the creditors. There would have been no necessity for such a rule unless it was well established that the meeting could not be attended by any person outside the class of persons who were holding the meeting. For these reasons, I think I should follow the decision of Sir George Jessell in preference to the criticism of the text-book writers.

(15) I am, however, of the opinion that there might have been justifiable misapprehension in the minds of creditors as to whether an outsider can be appointed as a proxy or not. It appears that there is a large number of creditors who wanted to oppose this scheme but whose votes have to be disregarded because of the fact that they appointed as proxy somebody who was not a creditor. I think I should give these creditors a further opportunity to express their wiehes in regard to the scheme by appointing persons as proxies who are creditors.

[16] There has been considerable discussion as to how the scheme should be altered in order to meet the wishes of the creditors. It is more or less agreed that the scheme should be altered in order that it may be workable and fair. I have been asked to make alterations in the scheme pursuant to a clause therein which empowers me to do so. I am, however, unwilling to introduce extensive alterations into the scheme without their being considered by the creditors. I will, however, indicate the alterations which I consider to be desirable and leave it to the oreditors to consider the scheme as altered by me and accept it with or without alterations. I have annexed the scheme as altered by me in my judgment.

sed at the meeting. I direct a meeting of creditors and shareholders to be held on 25th June 1949. Mr. Sankar Banerjee will be the Chairman at the meeting. He will separately record, (a) the votes of creditors whose claims are admitted, (b) votes of creditors whose claims may be disputed but whose names appear in the books of the company, (c) votes of creditors whose names do not appear in the books of the company.

(18) The disputed creditors whose names do not appear in the books of the company and whose debts are disputed by the company will file before the Special Officer, a statement of their claims with particulars on or before 15th June 1949 and I will decide at the time of the hearing of this application whether they are to be treated as creditors or not for the purposes of this application.

[19] I also direct the Special Officer to make a report as to the financial position of the company and as to the workability of the scheme, the report to be filed on or before and July 1949. [The rest of the portion of the judgment which is the scheme mentioned in para. 16 is not material for reporting].

Order accordingly.

A. F. O. D. No. 147 of 1948, D/- 31-8-1949, against decree of D. J. Darjeeling, D/- 9-6-1948.

Succession Act (1925), S. 63 (c) - Scribe as attesting witness-Evidence Act (1872), S. 68.

A scribe can be held to be an attesting witness of the will, only if apart from having seen the document executed and having put his signature on the document in the presence of the testator, he also signed it as a witness. However, the mere description of himself as scribe cannot stand in the way of a finding that he signed as a witness, for, the use of the word "scribe" before or after the signature may be given by way of additional information.

Das Gupta J .- The question for decision in this appeal is whether the signature of one Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay who, apart from having written the will, saw the testator execute the will and affixed his signature in the presence of the testator is sufficient attestation within the meaning of S. 63, Succession Act. The testator Chandra Mohan Roy had in the year 1924 executed a will by which he left certain properties to his two nephews (brother's sons), Kshirode Mohan Roy and Nirode Mohan Roy and left the residue to his daughter's sone. In 1926, he executed another will which is the subject-matter of the present litigation and by this will be left certain properties to Kehirode Mohan Roy and the residue to his daughter's sons. Chandra Mohan Roy, the testator, disappeared shortly after the execution of this will in 1926 and has not been since heard of by the persons who are likely to hear of him if he was living. Charu Chandra Mazumdar, who is Chandra Mohan's daughter's son, applied for letters of administration with a copy of the will annexed and citation having issued on the brother's sons, Nirode Mohan entered caveat. The grounds on which he raised objection were that the alleged will has not been executed by Chandra Mohan; that it had not been attested according to law and that Chandra Mohan at the time of the alleged will had no testamentary caracity.

[2] The learned Probate Court has come to the conclusion that the will was duly executed, attested in accordance with law and that Chandra Mohan had testamentary capacity at the time of the alleged will. It has accordingly ordered letters of administration with a copy of the will annexed to be issued to the applicant Charu Chandra Mazumdar.

[3] In this appeal by Nirode Mohan Roy, the findings of the trial Court on the question of the execution of the will by Chandra Mohan Roy or on the question of his having testamentary capacity at the time of the will are not disputed. The one point on which the appeal has been pressed by Mr. Ghose appearing on behalf of the appellant is that assuming that Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay, the scribe of the will, affixed his signature in the presence of the testator, this would not amount to attestation within the meaning of law. Mr. Ghose contends that while it is necessary for such an act of signature to amount to attestation that the signatory must have seen the testator sign the document and must have signed it himself in the presence of the testator, these facts are not sufficient for the act to amount to attestation. but that it is also necessary that at the time the signature was affixed this signatory did so by way of saying that he had seen the execution. He admits that no words are necessary to be actually put on the document to the effect that he had seen such execution; but it is necessary. according to him, that the Court from a consideration of all the circumstances including the position of the signature in the document and the evidence of the witnesses must be in a position to hold that at the time the signature was affixed, the signatory did do so by way of saying that he had seen the execution. Mr. Ghose has tried to convince us that in this case the circumstances and the evidence do not justify such a conclusion.

[4] Mr. Rajendra Bhusan Bakshi appearing on behalf of the respondent has tried to convince us, on the contrary, that the circumstances of the case including the oral testimony of the witnesses do justify the conclusion that at the very time Sarat Chandra Chattopadbyay, the scribe of the document, affixed his signature he did so in the capacity of a witness, by way of saying that he had witnessed the execution. He has also contended that even if we are not prepared to come to such a conclusion, this appeal should fail; for, according to him, the law does not require for the act of signing to amount to attestation that the signatory must at that very time affix the signature in the capacity of a witness. It is sufficient, according to him, if the signatory has seen the testator execute the will and has put his signature in the presence of the testator.

(5) Before coming to a consideration of the fact whether Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay affixed his signature on this will as a witness or not, it will be proper to arrive at a decision on the question of law which is in dispute.

[6] On the question whether for an act of signing to amount to attestation, it is necessary in addition to the fact of the signatory seeing the testator execute the document and his affix. ing the signature in the presence of the testator, that the signatory must at the time of affixing any signature do so in the capacity of a witness, there has been divergence of judicial opinion. In this Court, the question came up for consideration as early as the year 1880 in the case of Hurro Sundari v. Chunder Kant, 6 Cal. 17: (6 C. L. R. 303). It was held by Garth C. J. sitting with Mitter J. that if the Registrar and the person who identified the testatrix at the time of registration signed their names in the presence of the testarix as attesting her own admission that she had signed the will that would be sufficient, as an attestation, to satisfy the requirements of the law. A different note was struck a few years later by Harrington J. sitting on the Original Side of this Court in the case of Raj Narain Ghosh v. Abdur Rahim, 5 C. W. N. 454. Harrington J. held in that case that "in the absence of anything to show that it is incumbent upon the attesting witness to be described as such in a deed which he attests, that a person who was present and witnessed the execution and whose name appears on the document is a competent witness toprove the execution," and as in this case it was shown that two persons were present and saw the executant sign the deeds and one of them had been called toprove what passed, this proof was sufficient and the execution of the mortgage deeds was good. The same view was taken in the case of Dinamoyee Debi v. Bon Behari, 7 C. W. N. 160 and in the later case of Jagannath v. Bajrang Das; 48 Cal. 61: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 208). In this last mentioned case, objection was clearly taken that where a person who is present and witnesses the execution of a deed is therein described. merely as the writer of the deed, he is not an attesting witness within the meaning of the law. This objection was rejected by the learned Judges. The Privy Council decision in Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir, 39 I. A. 218 : (16 I. C. 250 P. C.), was cited in that case but the learned Judges of this Court held that the Privy Council case turned on the question whether a person could attest a document on an acknowledgment by the executant that the signature on the document was his and did not feel themselves bound.

by the other observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council on what amounted to attestation.

[7] The same view of the law has been taken in a number of decisions of other High Courts. In the case of Radha Kishen v. Fatch Ali, 20 ALL. 632: (1898 A. W. N. 148), it was held that a deed might be legally proved by the evidence of the scribe who had signed his name, but not explicitly as an attesting witness, on the margin and had been present when the deed was exe. cuted. It appears that the learned Subordinate Judge from whose decision the appeal was made to the High Court considered that "as the scriba was not an attesting witness, his evidence was not legally sufficient to prove the bond." The Court held that if the Munsif and the Subordinate Judge believed the evidence of the scribe they were quite at liberty on that evidence alone to find that the bond had been executed. It is not very clear from this report what in fact the evidence of the scribe was, but apparently the evidence merely showed that the scribe had seen the executant execute the bond and bad himself signed in the presence of the executant, and did not show that he had signed as an attesting witness.

[8] In Paramasiva Udayan v. Krishna Padayachi, 41 Mad 535: (A. I. B. (5) 1918 Mad. 491), which was also cited in support of this view, it appears that the learned Judges refused to accept a proposition that merely because a person had called himself a scribe, he was incapable of being regarded as an attesting witness. An observation occurs in one part of the judgment which was delivered by Seshagiri Ayyar J. that "the essence of attestation is that the person must have seen the document executed." This judgment was mainly directed to show that it would be wrong to say that under no circumstances could a scribe be an attesting witness. The question which now demands our consideration namely whether it is also necessary that the scribe should sign as an attesting witness does not appear to have been directly considered there. Another decision of the Madras High Court which has been cited before us is that in Veerappudayan v. Muthukarappan Thevan, 24 M. L. J. 534: (19 I. C. 589) where it was held that when the writer of a document signs his name below the executant's, whether he can be regarded as an attesting witness depend on the facts and circumstances of each case and that to be so regarded it is not neces. sary that he should describe himself as a witness or that there should be a testimonium clause. provided it appears that he intended to attest the execution. An observation on which much reliance was put by the learned Advocate for the respondent runs thus:

"Where he subscribes his name at the time of execution it would not be improper to presume that he intended to attest the execution."

[9] As has been noticed, in the very first case which came before this Court namely the case of Hurro Sundari v. Chunder Kant, 6 Cal. 17: (6 C. L. B. 303), Garth C. J. took care to mention that to prove attestation it must be shown that the persons, namely in that case, the Registrar and the identifying witnesses, signed their name in the presence of the testatrix " as attest. ing her own admission that she had signed the will". This view that it was necessary that the signature should be as attesting the admission of execution was strongly underlined (here italicised by Rankin O. J. in Abinash Chandra v. Dasarath, 32 C. W. N. 1228: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Cal. 123). The question which came up for consideration in this case was whether a person who was in fact the scribe and had affixed his signatureapart from another signature on the margin to the effect that he had read the document out to the executant and also that he had put in certain alterations as the executant desired—underneath the word "scribe", is an attesting witness so as to satisfy the requirements of the law. It was held that unless it was further clear that this signature was by way of saying at the time that he has seen the execution of the document, he is not an attesting witness. Rankin C. J. delivering the judgment of the Court discussed in some detail the definition of "attested", as given by Act XXVI [26] of 1926 amending the Transfer of Property Act. His Lordship pointed out that a man's name may be put on an instrument by way of authenticating a statement that the supposed testator did not execute; it may be put by way of professional advertisement to show that he acted as the scribe or by way of showing that he acted as the scribe for other purposes than professional advertisement; it may be put down for authenticating a particular correction in the body of the deed; and proceeded to say that in all these cases, it seemed wrong to say that because the man's signature is on the document at all disregarding the purpose for which it is on the document and disregarding altogether what his signature is put to authenticate—the man in question is an attesting witness. His Lordship then said:

"To take the ordinary case, a man is an attesting witness when he has seen the execution of the instrument and has put his name on the document by way of saying at the time that he has seen the execution of the document."

[10] In a recent decision of this Court reported, In the goods of Gokulchand Gandhi. I. L. B. (1944) 2 Cal. 388: (A. I. R. (88) 1946 Cal.

168), Sen J. sitting singly accepted this view of the law.

[11] This view found favour with the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Ranu v. Laxmanrao, 33 Bom. 44: (1 I. O. 461). Their Lordships referred to the observation of Lord Campbell in the English decision in Burdett v. Spilsbury, (1843) 10 O. & F. 340: (59 R. R. 105):

"What is the meaning of an attesting witness to a deed: Why, it is a witness who has seen the deed executed and who signs it as a witness,"

and said this was the meaning of attesting witness in S. 68, Evidence Act. On this view of the law, they held that where the writer of the deed in concluding the writing of the body of the document stated that it was written by him he could not be treated as an attesting witness. This decision was followed by the same Court in Dalichand v. Lotu Sakharam, 44 Bom. 405: (A. I. B. (7) 1920 Bom. 249) and it was held that a writer of a document who puts his signature at the end of a document could not be treated as an "attesting witness" unless he actually signed as an attesting witness in the document. The Bombay High Court has accepted this view of the law, again in a very recent decision in Timmavva v. Channava Appaya, 50 Bom. L. R. 260: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Bom. 322). Reference has been made in the judgment of this case to a Privy Council decision, Barnard and Co. v. Alak Manjary Kuari, 26 Bom. L. B. 737: (A. I. B. (12) 1925 P. C. 89), where this view is said by the learned Judge to have been indirectly accepted.

earlier case of Radha Kishen v. Fatch Ali Ram, 20 ALL. 532: (1898 A. W. N. 148), had taken a different view, accepted in the later decision of Badri Prasad v. Abdul Karim, 35 ALL. 254: (19 I. C. 451), the view that to be an attesting witness within the meaning of S. 68, Evidence Act, the witness must have seen the document executed and have signed it as a witness. Reliance was placed among others on the English decision Burdett v. Spilsbury, (1843) 10 C. & F. 340: (59 R. R. 105) mentioned above.

these authorities that though even in recent years a discordant note has now and then been struck, the view that has prevailed in almost all the High Courts in recent years is that in order to be an attesting witness a person need not only see the execution and sign in the presence of the executant but must also sign as a witness. In view of the divergence of judicial opinion mentioned above, I have tried to approach the question myself, as if there was no authority to influence my decision. I have examined for this purpose the phraseology of S. 63, Succession Act which runs thus:

(c) The will shall be attested by two or more witnesses, each of whom has seen the testator sign or affix his mark to the will and each of the witnesses shall sign the will in the presence of the testator "

It seems to me of some importance that although in the latter part of the section the word 'sign' is used, in the clause "each of the witnesses shall sign the will", a different word 'attested' was used in the earlier portion. This difference will be meaningless except on the view that 'attested' means something more than mere signature of a person who has seen the testator sign. We often use the words "attested by me" when putting a signature below the signature of some other person whom we have seen signing. The word 'attest' in such a context can only mean that I have put the signature as testifying to the fact that I have seen the person sign. It is clearly not necessary for a person to be an attesting witness within the meaning of law that words of this nature, "attested by me" or any other words should be used. But the deliberate use of the words 'attested' in preference to the word 'signed' will be meaningless unless it be held that whether or not any words to indicate attestation are there it must appear to the Court that the person has in fact signed in the capacity of a witness.

[14] It seems to me that all doubts in this matter are set at rest by the decision of the Privy Council in Shamu Patter v. Abdul Kadir, 39 I. A. 218 : (16 I. C. 250 P. C.). As I have already indicated above, Newbould and Panton JJ. in Jagannath v. Bajrang Das, 48 Cal. 61: (A. I. B. (8) 1821 Cal. 208), did not consider this Privy Council decision of any assistance to them. With great respect to their Lordships, I am unable to take the same view. The point directly in issue in that case undoubtedly was whether the Transfer of Property Act, S. 59, providing that a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses is complied with when the witness not having been present at the execution of the instrument by the mortgagor attested subsequently thereto on his acknowledgment of his signature. It is hardly necessary to state that this case came up before their Lordships before the recent amendment of 1926 by which attestation of a mortgage deed may take place on acknowledgment by the executor. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held in that case that the requirements of S. 59 were not complied with when the witness without having been present at the execution attested subse quently on his acknowledgment. In course, however, of the discussion of the law, their Lordships made an observation which seems to me of very great importance for our present purpose. It is at p. 226 of the report :

"Section 68. Evidence Act (I (1) of 1872), which declares that 'if a document is required by law to be attested, it shall not be used as evidence until one attesting witness at least has been called for the purpose of proving its execution,' appears to their Lordships to indicate that the Indian Legislature used the word 'attested' in the sense in which it has been construed through a series of decisions in the English Courts."

In an earlier part of the decision, namely, at p. 225 their Lordships quoted on the one hand the opinion of Dr. Lushington in Bryan v. White, 2 Rob. 315 that "attest means that persons shall be present and see what passes, and shall, when required, bear witness to the facts" and the observation of the Lord Chancellor in Burdett v. Spilsbury, (1843) 10 Cl. & F. 340: (159 R. R. 105): "The party who sees the will executed is in fact a witness to it; if he subscribes as a witness he is then attesting witness."

[15] It is true that in Bryan v. White, 2 Rob. 315, Dr. Lushington did not, in his definition of "attest", include the requirement that the signature shall be as a witness. There can, however, be no doubt that under the English law, as it stood at the time of the decision of their Lordships in Shamu Patter's case, 39 I. A. 218: (16 I. C. 250 P. C.), it was already settled that to be an attesting witness it was necessary also that a person should sign as a witness. This is clear from the speeches of Lord Campbell and the Lord Chancellor in Burdett v. Spilsbury, (1843) 10 Cl. & F. 840: (169 R. R. 105). Lord Campbell in the later part of his speech said:

"What is the meaning of an attesting witness to a deed: Why, it is a witness who has seen the deed executed, and who signs it as a witness. He is a good attesting witness, although there should not be upon the deed itself, a memorandum saying that it is signed, scaled and delivered in his presence."

The Lord Chancellor said:
"The party who sees the will executed is in fact a witness to it; if he subscribes as a witness, he is then an attesting witness."

[16] In my judgment, we have the high authority of the Privy Council for holding that the Indian Legislature used the word "attested" in s. 59, T. P. Act in the sense in which it has been construed in the English Courts. It has not been suggested to us that the word should not be taken in the same sense in s. 63, Succession Act. I can see no justification for a view that any distinction should be made between the meaning of the word as used in s. 59, T. P. Act and s. 68, Succession Act.

[17] The position thus is that we have to take the word "attestation" in the same meaning as settled by the English decisions; and there can be no doubt after the House of Lords case Burdett v. Spilsbury, (1843) 10 cl. & F. 340: (159 R. R. 105), that the law as settled in England is that to be an attesting witness a person must also sign as a witness though it is not necessary that there should be any words to that effect in the deed itself.

[18] In a later decision of the Privy Council, Sarkar Barnard and Co. v. Alak Manjary Kuari, A.I.R. (12) 1925 P. C. 89: (26 Bom. L. R. 737), this question whether it is necessary for an attesting witness to sign as a witness did come up for consideration. It was held by the High Court of Patna that a person not having subscribed as a witness was not an attesting witness and was held on that ground that the mortgage bond had not been attested by at least two witnesses and that it could not be enforced against the mortgagors. Lord Shaw delivering the judgment of the Privy Council disposed of this appeal in these words:

"This appeal has been presented as parts. Everything in its favour that could be said has been said. Their Lordships are of opinion that it is a hopeless appeal and will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss it accordingly."

In my view, this case should also be taken to be authority for the proposition that a person who does not subscribe as a witness is not an attesting witness within the meaning of the law.

[19] My conclusion, therefore, is that Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay can be held to be an attesting witness of the will, only if apart from baving seen the document executed and having put his signature on the document in the presence of the testator, he also signed it as a witness. The learned District Judge does not appear to have gone into this question whether the signature was affixed by Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay as a witness. In coming to a conclusion on this very important question of fact namely whether Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay, the scribe of the document, affixed his signature as a witness or not, we have to consider the position of his signature on the document itself and the evidence of Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay himself and the evidence of the only other person who claims to have been present at the time of the execution and at the time when Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay put his signature, namely, Surendra Nath Saba, Surendra Nath Saha has said this:

"The will was then handed over to Chandra Babu who again read the will. Then Chandra Babu signed the will in my presence and Sarat Babu. Then myself and Sarat Babu signed our names as witnesses in the will in the presence of the testator."

If this was all, I should have been prepared to hold that Sarat Babu had affixed his signature as a witness in the will. Sarat Chandra Chatto. padhyay has, however, been himself examined in this case and in reply to an interrogatory: "In what capacities did you sign the will?" made the statement "I put my signature to the will as the scribe." I find it difficult to agree with the learned Advocate for the respondent that Surendra Nath Saha's statement as to the capacity in which Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay signed it should be accepted in preference to Sarat's own statement on the point. It is important to notice in this connection that Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay has not himself made any statement as regards the time when he affixed his signature. There is nothing in his deposition to show that he affixed his signature after the testator had put his signature.

put bis signature. [20] Stress was laid by the learned Advocate for the respondent on the fact that the line in which the word "isadi" appears is above the line in which the signature of Sarat Chandra has been put. He wants us to conclude that Sarat Chandra having put his signature in this line below the position of the word "isadi" did at the time intend to sign as a witness. I am unable to draw any conclusion from the fact that the word "isadi" has been written by Sarat Chandra. It seems to me usual that the word "isadi" should be written by the scribe in the document whether or not he is himself a witness. I would myself have expected to see the word "isadi" written by the scribe himself even where he does not happen to be present at the time of the execution. Some inference favourable to the respondent's case might have been drawn if the signature of Sarat Chandra had appeared immediately below the word "isadi" or in the midst of a group of signatures of attesting witnesses or if it had appeared immediately above the signature of Surendra Nath Saha, admittedly an attesting witness, or below his. The position of the signature of Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay as I see it in this document in a line below the line in which the word "isadi" occurs but a good deal to the left does not, in my judgment, justify the conclusion that Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay has signed as a witness. He himself has prefaced his signature by the word नि॰ read by him at the time of his deposition as लि॰. Whether it is नि॰ or लि॰, there is no doubt that he is thereby describing himself as the scribe of the document. I entirely agree with the learned Advocate for the respondent that the mere description of himself as scribe cannot stand in the way of a finding that he signed as a witness, for, as was pointed out by Rankin C. J. in Abinash Bidyanidhi's case, 32 C. W. N. 1228: (A.I.B. (16) 1929 Cal. 123) and by other learned Judges in some other cases that the use of the word "scribe" before or after the signature may be given by way of additional information. I dol not therefore draw any conclusion from the mere fact that Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay prefaced his signature by the word लि॰. The most important fact in the decision of this matter seems to me to be this that Sarat Chandra him. self in reply to the definite question "In what capacities did you sign the will," has made the clear and unambiguous statement that he signed it as the scribe. There is nothing in his evidence to indicate that he had been won over by the other side or that for reasons of his own he was not prepared to support the propounder of the will. On the contrary the statement he has made on the question of testamentary capacity of the testator, makes it clear that he was willing and ready to support the propounder of the will. When in spite of this we find him making the clear statement in reply to a clear question that he signed the will as a scribe, I am unable to think of any reason why his evidence on this point should not be taken as the full truth.

[21] My conclusion on a consideration of the evidence of the witnesses and the position of the signature in the document in reference to the position of the word "isadi" and the signature of the other witness is that Sarat Chandra Chattopadhyay signed the document as a scribe and not as a witness.

[22] The inevitable conclusion, therefore, is that this will was attested only by one witness Surendra Nath Saha and was not attested by two witnesses as required by law.

[23] I would, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside the order of the learned District Judge and order that the application for letters of administration be rejected. The appellant will get his costs throughout. The hearing fee in this Court is assessed at five gold mohurs.

Debaprosad Bose—Appellant v. The King. Criminal Appeal No. 144 of 1948, D/- 21st December 1948.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 297 — Charge to jury –Misdirection—Resting onus of proof wrongly on accused—Not explaining necessary elements of offence.

Where in a trial for an offence under S. 366, Penal Code, the Judge stated in his charge that the onus as regards establishing the age of the girl rested on the accused and did not indicate, while explaining the elements of the offence, the effect of the girl's leaving the protection of the guardian before she was taken away by the accused, the charge is bad for misdirection on material points.

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 361 - 'Taking'-Mean Ing-Leaving guardian's protection due to previous arrangement with accused.

The word "taking" as used in S. 361, Penal Code, does not mean a continuing or a continuous act. The "taking" which constitutes an offence is completed as soon as the girl is removed from the keeping of the lawful guardian. The mere fact that a minor leaves the protection of her guardian does not put her out of the guardian's keeping. If, however, it is proved that a minor had abandoned her guardian with no intention of returning back she cannot, thereafter, be deemed to continue in the keeping of the guardian. What will be deemed to be sufficient to constitute an abandonment of a guardian by minor girl depends on the facts of each particular case. Even where there is some evidence that the girl, at the time when she left the protection of her guardian, did not intend to come back to her father's place but the evidence further discloses that but for something which the accused consented to do and did ultimately do the minor would not have, in the natural course of events left the house of her guardian, then there would be a sufficient taking by the accused in the eye of law.

Thus, where a girl leaves her house on account of the previous arrangement with the accused and meets him in a garden from where he takes her, the accused's action amounts to taking her away from the keeping of her lawful guardian.

-for Appellant.

Nirmal Kr. Sen-lor the Crown.

R. P. Mookerjee J. — This is an appeal by Debaprosad Bose who had been found by a majority of jury guilty under S. 266, Penal Code, and accepting the said majority verdict, the Additional Sessions Judge, 24 Parganas, convicted him and sentenced to two years rigorous imprisonment.

[2] The prosecution case is that a certain tamily of Banerjees lived in the Park Circus area and subsequently shifted to Hazra Road. to a house belonging to a relation. The owner of the house occupied the second floor and the ground floor was occupied partly by Banerjee and another portion of the same floor by the accused Debaprosad Bose and his family. The two families occupying the ground floor were on friendly terms. It is alleged that taking advantage of the friendly relationship, the accused Debaprosad had enticed the youngest daughter of Banerjee. It is stated that on 10th September 1947, the daughter had left the house on the plea of going to school but instead of going there, went to Deshapriya Park nearby dn accordance with previous arrangements with the accused. From there she was taken to the Lakes and then to Kalighat and some form of marriage ceremony was alleged to have been gone through. Later on she was taken by the accused to Jogbani in the district of Parner to the house of one Dr. Dhar, a brother in law of the accused. The accused and the girl were arrested by the police at Jogbani on 14th September 1947 and were brought down to Calcutta. After investigation Debaprosad was committed to the Court of Session, charged with offence under S. 366, Penal Code. The accused pleaded not guilty but the defence as may be ascertained from the trend of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses was that the girl was above 16 years at the time of the occurrence and that further she had not been enticed away by the accused but she had voluntarily left her father's house and had married him.

[3] On behalf of the appellant it is argued that there are serious mis-directions in the Judge's address to the Jury.

(4) In the first place, the learned Judge while placing the evidence as to the age of the girl etated

"if the accused comes out with a positive version of his own it is for him to prove it. This does not necessarily mean that he himself lead the defence witnesses. The accused may prove his case from cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses or from the surrounding circumstances of the case and the failure to prove the version of his case will not relieve the prosecution of the burden of proving the guilt of the accused and the prosecution will have to succeed on the strength of his own case."

The conclusion arrived at in the first sentence quoted above that the onus is on the accused if he comes out with a positive version of his own is wholly misconceived. Though towards the end of that paragraph reference is made to the onus on the prosecution to prove the guilt, there was a clear misdirection as in the beginning as the learned Judge had rested the onus on the accused. In any view, this introduced a confusion which a lay Jury could not very well appreciate.

[5] While referring to the elements necessary for attracting the provisions of S. 366, Penal Code, the learned Judge did not clearly indicate the effect of the girl leaving her father's place with the intent not to return again and there. after meeting the accused at Deshapriya Park from where she was taken away by the accused. It is urged that the Jury was not given any indication of the legal position that to make out an offence under S. 366, Penal Code, kidnapping must be from lawful guardianship and if the girl had already left the protection of her guardian it was for consideration whether the person taking her away subsequently from another place was sufficient to make out an offence of kidnapping.

[6] There are other items in the charge which also had been commented upon but it is not necessary for our present purpose to enter into greater detail at this stage as in our opinion, the first two points made are sufficient for holding that the Judge's charge to the Jury was bad for misdirection on material points which had affected the proper trial in the Court of Session.

[7] We have therefore to consider whether on an examination of the legal position and the evidence in the case, the conviction can stand. Two points require careful consideration: (1) whether the essential conditions to prove kidnapping had been made out and (2) whether the prosecution has been able to prove that the age of the girl was less than 16 years.

[8] Under S. 361, Penal Code:

"whoever takes or entices any minor... under 16 years of age if a female.... out of the keeping of the lawful guardian of such minor... without the consent of such guardian is said to kidnap such minor or person from lawful guardianship."

[9] To attract the provisions of 8.361, there must be a positive act of the person taking away the minor from and out of the keeping of the lawful guardian. It is urged that if the girl voluntarily goes away with a man or if she leaves the protection of her guardian and then is subsequently taken away by a person from another place that person does not commit an offence of kidnapping the girl.

[10] In order to support a conviction for kidnapping a girl from lawful guardianship the ingredients to be satisfied are: (1) That the girl was under 16 years of age. (2) Such minor was in the keeping of a lawful guardian. (3) The accused took or enticed such person out of such keeping and such taking was done without the

whether the prosecution has been able to prove that the girl was under 16 years of age. It is admitted that while the girl was staying with her father she was in the keeping of a lawful guardian. The question which we have to decide is whether on the evidence the accused had taken or enticed the person out of such keeping and if so, whether the evidence is clear that that was so done without the consent of the lawful guardian.

[12] About the question whether the accused took the girl out of the keeping of a lawful guardian may now be considered. The word 'taking' as used in this section does not mean a continuing or continuous act. The 'taking' which constitutes an offence is completed as soon as the girl is removed from the keeping of the lawful guardian. (Nemai Chattoraj v. Queen-Empress, 27 Cal. 1041 at p. 1047: (4)

C. W. N. 645 F. B.), Rekha Rai v. King Emperor, 6 Pat. 471 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 159 : 28 Cr. L. J. 820) and Emperor v. Tika, 26 ALL. 197: (1 Cr. L. J. 561)). The mere fact that a minor leaves the protection of her guardian does not put her out of the guardian's keeping. If, however, it is proved that a minor had abandoned her guardian with no intention of returning back she cannot, thereafter, be deemed to continue in the keeping of the guardian. What will be deemed to be sufficient to constitute an abandonment of a guardian by a minor girl depends on the facts of each particular case. It cannot be that whenever a child, being taken to task by the guardian, leaves the guardian's house with the mental reservation that he or she will not be returning back to be under that guardian it must in the eye of law be taken to put an end to the protection of the guardian at the sweet will of the minor. If it is shown that such conduct is due to a mere petulant outburst in consequence either of a quarrel with herrelations or because of the guardian repremanding her for her conduct that will be a relevant question to be considered for deciding whether her conduct was sufficient to put an end to the ties of guardianship. Vallient v. Eleazar, 30 C. W. N. 215 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 467 : 26 Or. L. J. 977).

[13] Even where there is some evidence that the girl, at the time when she left the protection of her guardian, did not intend to come back to her father's place but the evidence further discloses that but for something which the accused consented to do and did ultimately do the minor would not have, in the natural course of events, left the house of her father then there would be a sufficient taking by the accused in the eye of law for attracting the provisions of S. 363, Penal Code: Abdul Sathar v. Emperor, 54 M. L. J. 456: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad 585: 29 Cr. L. J. 635).

stated above as applicable to the facts of the present case. The evidence as led shows that there was between the girl and the accused an arrangement from before that she would leave her father's house to meet the accused in the Park from where she would be taken away. When under this arrangement she was leaving the protection of her father, even if it be with the intention of not returning again, that will not be sufficient to put an end to the ties of guardianship. The importance and significance of the provious arrangement between the girl and guardianship. The importance and significance of the previous arrangement between the girl and the accused must not be overlooked. We have to consider the surrounding circumstances under which the incident took place and then come to a conclusion whether the girl would have left the father's house had it not been for the previous arrangement with and the readiness of the accused to take her away, though not from the doorsteps of the father's house but from some distance. On the facts of this present case, we must hold that the provious arrangement with and the promise by the accused made it possible for the girl to leave her father's place. The expression of the intention of not returning to her father's place was due to the "enticing" by the accused and she must be held to have been taken away by the accused from the keeping of a lawful guardian, and if it be found that she was below 16 on the date when she was taken the accused would be guilty of the offence charged.

[15] With regard to the question whether the girl was under 16 on the date she was taken away the evidence stands as follows: According to the mother of the girl she was about 13 and is alleged to have attained puberty, the January previous. This is supported by the father of the girl. The age mentioned in the admission form Ex. 9 when she was admitted in the Lake School for girls makes her at the time of the occurrence a little over 13 years. The mother cannot give the dates of birth of any one of her other children and the statement that this daughter had attained puberty only in January previous is falsified by the letter Br. A which shows that she had attained puberty much earlier and while the family was living in Linton Street in the Park Circus area and before they had removed to the place of occurrence. It is not possible to come to a definite conclusion about her age on the evidence of the parents them. selves as there are contradictions and there was a deliberate attempt by the parents to understate the age. The statement of the age in the admission form Ex. 9 was filled up by Ramola, a cousin of the girl, and that cousin was not a competent person to state the age; the statement by the mother that she was present at the time of her admission cannot be accepted as correct, as had she been present it would not have been Ramola but the mother who would have been required to sign the declaration form.

Office Savings Bank Account had been opened in the name of this daughter and had that Pass Book been produced in Court it could have been ascertained as to what date had been given by the father in the Post Office. Such a statement for opening an account in the Post Office is required under the Post Office Rules to be made by the guardian himself and that would have been a very important piece of evidence but that has not been produced. The birth certificates of this girl or of the other children were also either not available or not produced. The oral evidence as given by the parents is not in our opinion sufficient to prove the age of the girl being less than 16.

(17) We are, therefore, left with the evidence of the Radiologist Dr. Brojeswar P. W. 6 who took a number of skiagrams of the girl. His opinion is that the girl is between 15 and 16 and below 16. This evidence does not support the case as made by the parents that the age was near about 13. As found in the various books of medical jurisprudence Hindu girls in Bengal generally attain puberty between the ages of 12 and 14 and taking the attainment of puberty as and when Bx. A was written her age at the relevant time will be between 15 and 17.

[18] The ossification test for determining the age of a girl has been applied in different parts. of the world and various charts have been published by different authorities giving the result of the examination of a large number of cases. Ossification is a sign for determining age as is found in particular subjects when the ossification is completed. It must, however, be stated that owing to variation in climatic, dietetic, hereditary and other factors of the people of different places it is not possible to formulate a uniform standard for determination of age of the union of epiphyses for the whole of the sub-continent of India. The result of investiga. tions in Europe, America and Australia would not be of much assistance as in the case of Indians the union of epiphyses takes place 2 to 3 years in advance of the age incidence in Europe and in the case of females it is stated to be even earlier than in males.

[19] Even in India we have different tables prepared by the authorities in different provinces and even in Bengal there are at least 2 if not 3 different tables giving different results. The ossification of particular bones which takes place before 14 will not be of material assistance in determining the age of a girl who is nearer 16and even in the case of the bones of which the appearance and fusion take place near about 16. are not of much assistance as there is a variation between tables given by Dr. Galstaun and Dr. Basu. Different results are reported to have been obtained by the experts and we have not been told to what extent the data used by them were responsible for the different results. The tables appearing from pp. 30 to 33 in Modi's Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology 9th Edv. indicate the risk of fixing age in the present case only on the ossification result particularly when the age is found to be near about 16. It becomes impossible to be dogmatic that the age will be a few months below 16 or fewmonths above 16.

[20] In a criminal trial the accused must get the benefit of doubt and there can be no conviction unless it can be clearly and unequivocally stated that the age of the girl was below 16. In view of the expert evidence in this case and particularly of the absence of any authoritative table applicable to Bengali girls we must hold that the accused would have the benefit of doubt and be acquitted. We may indicate in passing that the factum of any marriage ceremony baving been at all gone through, far less being legal or sufficient in law, has not been proved.

[21] We cannot leave this case without certain observations about the provisions contained in Ss. 361 to 363, Penal Code. It is up to this Provincial Government to take up immediately the duty of carrying on investigation about appearance and fusion of the epiphyses of Bengali boys and girls so that there may be one authoritative table on which experts may depend and the Court may rely upon such tables. The question whether an offence under these provisions had been committed or not depends upon the determination of the age and sufficient data should be made available to assist the Court to administer justice.

[22] The result is that the appeal is allowed. The conviction and the sentence of the appellant are set aside and he is acquitted of the charge made against him. The appellant will be discharged from his bail bond.

While the work was in progress and before it was complete, the complainant left during the Pujah holidays of 1948 for a short while. On return he found that the opposite parties had broken open the padlocks of the three rooms under construction, removed a number of tools, some loose doorframes, bags of sand and other things kept inside the rooms and forcibly trespassed into the rooms. On the complainant asking them to vacate the rooms they abused him and threatened him with assault.

[9] The learned Magistrate has held that as the complainant was not at the time on the spot in actual physical possession of the rooms and had mere juridical possession, S. 448 cannot apply to the present case. He makes some reference to S. 530, Criminal P. O., apparently meaning S. 522, Criminal P. C., and seems to be of opinion that unless the trespass in question is achieved in conditions which would make S. 522 of the Code applicable and justify an order for restoration, then there is no criminal trespass at all.

[4] Clearly, his reasons for holding the accused not guilty are erroneous. He also has held that as the only object of the trespassers was to take possession of the rooms, and as they did not intend to intimidate, insult or annoy the complainant, no case of trespass has been made out. He has presumably some support for this view on the basis that when the trespass was made the complainant was not actually present, but he overlooks the latter part of the definition of trespass in S 441, Criminal P. C. There can be no doubt, on the complainant's case, of their intention to annoy and intimidate him when on his return he asked the trespassers to leave the premises. I have been referred to the decisions in the cases of Satish Chandra v. The King, 53 O. W. N. 402 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 107 : 50 Cr. L. J. 161), Soita Biswal V. Dochhi Stri, 12 C. W. N. 269 and Debi Prosanna Ghose v. Joy Narain, 53 C. W. N. 822. In each of these cases, there are special features which take them outside the terms of S. 441. Every trespass does not necessarily amount to a criminal trespass. These cases are instances where it has been pointed out that the circumstances did not establish criminal trespass. The reasons given here by the learned Magistrate are in no way supported, in my opinion, by any of those decisions. In fact, if they hold good, the provisions of 8. 447, Criminal P. C. would be rendered, in my opinion, almost entirely nugatory.

portions of the sections are as follows:

Section 10: "(1) In any proceeding before a Court in which a decree or order has been passed against any Indian Soldier whilst he was serving under war conditions or at any time after the 1st day of April 1925, whilst he was serving under any special conditions, the soldier may apply to the Court which passed the decree or order for an order to set aside the same, and, if the Court after giving an opportunity to the opposite party of being heard, is satisfied that the interests of justice require that the decree or order should be set aside as against the soldier, the Court shall, subject to such conditions, if any, as it thinks fit to impose, make an order accordingly.

(2) No such application shall be entertained unless it is made within two months from the expiry of the first period of thirty days after the date of the decree or order, or where the summons or notice was not duly served on the apalicant, after the date on which the applicant had knowledge of the decree or order, during no part of which the soldier was serving under special conditions:

Provided that the provisions of S. 5, Limitation Act,

1908, shall app'y to such applications."

Section 11: "In computing the period of limitation prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, or any other law for the time being in force, for any suit, appeal, or application to any Court any party to which is or has been an Indian Soldier, the time during which the soldier has been serving under war conditions since 4th August 1914, or under any special conditions since 1st April 1925, shall be excluded."

- [3] The suit was adjourned several times at the instance of the plaintiff. It was fixed several times peremptorily. The plaintiff did not appear. On 14th December his pleader said that he had no instructions. The suit was dismissed for default.
- (4) On 15th July 1917 the plaintiff made an application for setting aside the order of dis., missal.

[5] The plaintiff was a soldier serving under war conditions from 29rd May 1942 to 25th November 1946 when he was discharged.

[6] It was alleged in the petition that after his discharge he had an attack of gastritis and suffered from 7th December 1946 to 27th June 1947. But no point has been made before us on the ground of his illness.

[7] The learned Subordinate Judge made the order on 1st March 1949 allowing the application for setting aside the dismissal dated 14th December 1948. From this order the present application has been made.

- [8] The total period, the plaintiff served under war conditions, is 4 years 6 months and 3 days. The question is whether the whole of this period should be excluded in computing the period of limitation. The Court below has excluded the period. The Judge construed the words in S. 11, "the time during which the soldier has been serving under war conditions" in a literal sense.
- [9] There seems to be no justification for excluding the period prior to 14th December 1942. During this period the plaintiff was not prevented from making this application by reason of his service. I can understand exclusion of the period he was in service after the order of dismissal. How can the prior period affect the question I do not see.

[10] A too literal adherence to the words of the section would produce an adsurdity and injustice. Take for example the following case. A soldier who had been serving under war conditions for 6 years prior to an order of dismissal, is discharged a day after that. Is the soldier entitled to get exclusion of the 6 years minus a day, in computing the period of limitation? That is absurd.

[11] The Act was passed to provide for special protection of soldiers and not to grant them licence to do whatever they like. It is quite intelligible why time should not run against a soldier if he was serving under war conditions since commencement of limitation, why should the previous period be excluded?

[12] It is not in dispute that if the time before the order of dismissal is not excluded, the application is out of time.

[13] It seems to us that the construction put upon the words by the learned Judge is not correct and he has exercised a jurisdiction under a misconception of the law. In other words, he has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law.

[14] Therefore the learned Judge's order should be set aside. The petition is allowed and the Rule is made absolute with costs.

S. S. Mukherjee - for Appellants.

N. K. Sen - for the State.

Sen J.—The appellants Kalu Mandal, Yasin Mandal, Abdul Sattar Mandal and Fakir Abmed have been found guilty of committing the offence of rioting and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year. They have also been found guilty of having committed culpable homicide punishable under the first portion of s. 304, Penal Code, and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three years. The accused Golam Mandal has been found guilty of abetment of the aforesaid culpable homicide and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three years. The appellants were tried by Sri N. Chakravarty, Sessions Judge of Nadia and a jury. Against this order of conviction and the sentences the present appeal has been laid.

[2] The case for the prosecution briefly is as follows: On 11th April 1949, the appellants together with one Hasim, who is absconding, came upon the land of one Maharani Bibi and forcibly plucked cocoanuts from the trees growing thereon. Maharani Bibi and a relation of hers called Ambar, since deceased, protested. Upon this Ambar was set upon and beaten with various weapons by some of the appellants and as a result of the beating he died. Immediately after the beating Prosecution Witness 2 Shamsul Huq. went to the thana and lodged an information which was recorded in the General Diary by literate constable Prafulla Sen, Prosecution Witness 9, there being no other officer there. This General Diary entry is Ex. 2. Ambar was attended by doctors but he died. Thereupon another information was lodged at about 3 A. M. which was treated as the first information report by Ramani Mohan Bhattacharjee the officer in charge. It is Ex. 3. Thereafter the investigation started. There was a post mortem on the body of Ambar and it was found that he died as a result of the injuries received. These in short are the facts upon which the case for the prosecution depends. The defence taken is as follows: Maharani Bibi has only a very small share in the land. Eight annas of that land belonged to one Panchkari Kazi. On his death it devolved upon his sister. That sister died and her daughter inherited a portion of the land and sold her share to Hasim, son of Kalu. Hasim as I have stated before, is absconding. The appellants went on the land legitimately and they were resisted by Ambar and others. There was a fight in the course of which Kalu got an injury on the head. Broadly speaking, the defence taken may be said to consist of a plea of the right of private defence of property and person. I may state here that no evidence was adduced on behalf of the defence either as regards the occurrence or as regards the claim of Hasim to a portion of the property with respect to which the occurrence is said to have taken place.

[3] In view of the very unsatisfactory nature of the charge to the jury, we are of opinion that the order of conviction and the sentences must be set aside. We also think that having regard to the nature of this thoroughly bad charge it would serve no useful purpose to discuss the evidence in detail or to deal with the discrepancies in the evidence. We feel that after this charge it would be impossible for any jury to have a correct grasp of the evidence or of the points which they would have to decide before delivering their verdict. That being so, we think that the proper course would be to direct a retrial of the case.

[4] I wish in this connection to point out certain glaring defects in the charge. It would be tidious and it would take a very long time if I were to point out all the defects in the charge; they are far too numerous. The first point which I would impress upon the learned Judge relates to the way in which he has treated the entries made in the General Diary and in the first information report. If the learned Judge had taken some slight trouble to acquaint himself with the important provisions of the Evidence Act he would have been aware of the fact that the General Diary entry and the first information report cannot be dealt with as substantive evidence. They may be considered for the purposes of corroboration under 8. 157, Evidence Act, if all the provisions thereof are complied with. In this connection I would point out that they may be put in evidence to corroborate only the testimony of the person who gave the information incorporated in the General Diary or the first information report and not for the purpose of corroborating the evidence of any one else. They also may be considered for the purpose of contradicting the evidence of the person who gave the information incorporated in the General Diary or the first information report in accordance with the provisions of S. 145, Evidence Act.

has dealt with the General Diary entry and the first information report as if they constituted substantive evidence. He has also committed a further error in treating these entries as corroborating the evidence of witnesses who had nothing to do with the making of these entries. It is regrettable that we have had to point this out to the learned Judge on more than one occasion and we trust that he will take some pains to understand the law of evidence regarding this point. Owing to this error which in our opinion is a very serious one the jury were hopelessly misguided and the verdit of a jury, so misguided cannot possibly be supported.

[6] I would also point out to the learned Judge that when he is trying several accused persons he should tell the jury in clear terms that they should consider the case of each accused separately and independently. Further, he himself, should deal with the case of each accused sepa. rately and place before the jury the evidence, the circumstances and the contentions of the prosecution and the defence with respect to each accused separately. This has also been pointed out to this particular learned Judge more than once. He has either not been able to comprehend what has been explained to him on previous occasions or he had deliberately failed to follow these directions. In the present case we find that he makes a mere pretence of following these directions by adopting a device which does not carry out these directions. What he does is this: He heads a particular paragraph with the name of a particular accused person and then instead of dealing with the case of that particular accused person he merely says that the jury should remember what he has previously said about that particular accused person in the earlier part of his somewhat jumbled , charge. This is not the way in which the case of an accused should be dealt with separately. These are a few of the defects of the charge but they are sufficient in our opinion to vitiate the findings of the jury.

[7] We accordingly set aside the order of conviction and the sentences and send the case back for retrial according to law and in the light of the observations made above.

[8] The appellants will continue on the same bail pending the retrial.

It is usual for a Magistrate to record statements made by witnesses at test identification parades. But that does not mean that those statements are admissible in evidence. They are statements made under S. 164, Criminal P. C., to a Magistrate after investigation has commenced. They are not confessional statements and are not recorded as such. That being so, they can only be admissible to contradict a witness and not as sub-[Para 12] stantive evidence.

Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherji and Sukumar Mitra -for Appellant.

B. M. Sen-for the State.

Harries C. J.—This is an appeal by one Kanai Lal Dwary who was tried by a learned Assistant Sessions Judge and jury upon a charge of dacoity. The jury unanimously found the appellant guilty under S. 395, Penal Code, and the learned Judge agreeing with the verdict convicted the appellant under that section and sentenced him to five years' rigorous imprisonment. It is from that conviction and sentence that the present appeal has been preferred.

[2] The charge against Kanai was that he and others on 17th March 1949, committed dacoity in the house of one Durgadas Nandi at Kanchannagar. A number of dacoits are said to have broken into the house and looted cash and property to the value of Rs. 1800.

[3] At the trial the factum of dacoity was not contested and the only point at the trial was whether or not Kanai and four others who were standing their trial, were amongst the dacoits and had been satisfactorily identified by the witnesses. The only other piece of evidence against the accused was a confession by one Tej Bahadur which had been subsequently retracted.

[4] Mr. Sudhansu Mukherji who has appeared on behalf of the appellant has confined his argument to the summing up of the learned Judge with regard to the evidence against his client.

[5] The learned Judge very rightly pointed out that the retracted confession of Tej Bahadur was of little evidentiary value against the appellant Kanai. The learned Judge, I think, should have gone further than that and should have told the jury that the retracted confession of Tej Bahadur implicating Kanai was not evidence upon which the jury could convict Kanai. The implication of Kanai by Tej Bahadur was at most a circumstance which the jury could take into account by way of assuring them of the truth of other evidence. In short, the retracted confession of Tej Bahadur at most would only afford some weak corroboration of any other admissible evidence against the appellant. Merely telling the jury that the retracted con. fession was of little evidentiary value is not to my mind sufficient. The jury should be told that its evidentiary value is such that no conviction could be based upon it alone and that at most it can only be regarded as a weak corroboration of other evidence.

[6] The only other evidence against the appellant Kanai was the evidence of two witnesses-Abhoy and Jatin. Abhoy (P. W. 11) and Jatin (P. W. 10) stated that they were villagers who had recognised these two dacoits. Admittedly they did not know the appellant and their evidence of identification was sought to be corroborated by evidence relating to a test identification.

[7] Kanai who was practically a one eyed man was put up for identification and it issaid that he was identified by Abhoy and Jatin. Had the test identification been a satisfactory one there can be no question that the identification of Kanai by these two witnesses at such a parade would afford valuable corroboration of their evidence that they had recognised this appellant during the dacoity. However the evidence relating to this test identification is most unsatisfactory and it appears to me clear that as far as Kanai was concerned the test identification was a farce. The learned Judge did warn the jury about the disquieting features of this test identification parade, but in my view he did not place the matter strongly enough to the jury.

[8] The test identification parade was carried out by a Magistrate who is referred to as Radha Syam Babu in the summing up. In his evidence he stated that it had been reported to him by the police that Kanai and another accused person had been in Court for hours before the test identification and further that the two witnesses Abhoy and Jatin had also been in Court. If the accused and the witnesses had been in the same Court for some hours before the test identification parade then quite obviously the two witnesses would know that this practically one eyed man Kanai was alleged to have been in the dacoity.

[9] A test identification, when witnesses have already seen an accused person, is worth nothing at all and it appears to me, having regard to the admissions made by the learned Magistrate, that the witnesses must have seen this rather peculiar looking appellant before they were asked to identify him at the parade.

[10] As I have said the learned Judge did warn the jury about this parade. But it appears to me that his warning was neither clear nor strong enough. Having mentioned the facts that I have stated the learned Sessions Judge observed as follows:

"The witnesses came to Court between 11 a.m. and 12 noon and the identification took place at 5 p.m. You are to consider if in view of the statement of Radhashyam Babu, the Magistrate who held the test identification parade, that identifying witnesses had occasion to see the accused Kanai and Niranjan before the test identification parade. You must be satisfied on this point before you can hold that recognition in test identification parade was correct and genuire."

[11] What the learned Judge meant by saying 'you must be satisfied on this point before you can hold" etc., is difficult to say. It appears to me that the learned Judge ought to have told the jury that, if they accepted the learned Magistrate's statement that the accused and the witnesses had been in Court for hours before the test identification, then they should attach no importance whatsoever to the identification of the appellant who, as I have said, was a rather distinctive looking person, being practically one eyed. Merely telling the jury that they had to be satisfied and not making it clear what they had to be satisfied about is not to my mind a sufficient direction upon a point of this kind. The learned Judge should have made it clear that if the jury were of opinion that the witnesses had seen the accused before the identification or were in any doubt about the matter, then the evidence as to the identification at the test identification parade should be rejected altogether and the jury should further have been told that without evidence of a satisfactory test identification, their evidence of identification given in the witness box was worth little or nothing at all. It appears to me that on the facts of this case the jury should have been very carefully warned that it would be highly dangerous to accept the evidence of identification and should have been further warned that without such evidence the implication of Kanai by the retracted confession of Tej Bahadur was to all intents and purpores worthless. The failure to make the position clear with regard to the test identification is to my mind most material and may well have led to a miscarriage of justice in this case.

[12] Mr. Sudhansu Mukherji also pointed out that the Magistrate who conducted the test identification parade was allowed to give evidence as to what witnesses told him when they identified a particular suspect. It is I know usual for a Magistrate to record statements made by witnesses at test identification parades. But that does not mean that those statements are admissible in evidence. They

P. C., to a Magistrate after investigation has commenced. They are not confessional statements and are not recorded as such. That being so, they can only be admissible to contradict a witness. It is true that a statement was used to contradict one of the witnesses against Kanai, but the evidence was admitted by the learned Judge as if it was substantive evidence against the accused. The evidence should not be admitted in chief and should only be admitted for one purpose, namely, to contradict the person who is alleged to have made a statement to the Magistrate.

[13] Having regard to the failure of the learned Judge to warn the jury sufficiently of the unsatisfactory nature of the test identification parade, I think we are bound to hold that there was in this case a misdirection on material matters which vitiated the verdict.

[14] The question arises what course should the Court follow having set aside the conviction and sentence. We could of course order a new trial. But having regard to the evidence in this case I do not think any jury could be asked to convict-upon such evidence. That being so, it appears to me that the proper course is to acquit the appellant.

[15] In the result, I would allow this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and aqcuit the appellant. The appellant who is on bail need not surrender to his bail and his bail is cancelled.

[16] Bachawat J.—I agree.

Kalna Municipality — Plaintiff — Petitioner v. Province of West Bengal — Defendant — Opposite Party.

Reference No. 1 of 1949, D/- 1-3-1950, by Munsif, Kalna, In S. C. C. Suit No. 847 of 1948.

(a) Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), S. 15 and Sch II, Art. 13 — Suit for recovery of municipal taxes—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court—Municipalities—Bengal Municipal Act (XV [15] of 1932), S. 167.

A suit by a Municipality to recover arrears of taxes which are due to the Municipality by force of a statute and not by reason of any interest in imm vable property is not a suit coming within Sch. II Art. 13 when the plaintiff merely claims a money decree without claiming any charge given to it under S. 167. Bengal Municipal Act, and the Small Cause Court will have jurisdiction to entertain and decide the suit by virtue of S. 15.

[Paras 8 and 10]

Though by virtue of S. 167, Bengal Municipal Act, the Municipality has a charge on the holding in respect of which the taxes are claimed, the Municipality is entitled to recover them as a simple money-decree and is not bound to enforce its rights as a charge holder.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 7—Jurisdiction of Small Cause Court to try suit if controlled by jurisdiction to execute decree.

The mere fact that a Small Cause Court is debarred by S. 7 from executing a decree against immovable property does not mean that it is also debarred from trying the suit inasmuch as the question of jurisdiction of the Court as to execution of a decree has no relevance whatever as to the question whether the Court has jurisdiction to try the suit. [Para 11]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., S. 7 N. 5.

Bachawat J. — This is a reference by the Munsif of Kalna under O. 46, R. 6, Civil P. C. It appears that the Chairman of the Kalna Municipality claimed arrears of taxes from the Province of West Bengal and instituted a suit before the Munsif of Kalna who is invested with Small Cause Court powers. The suit was registered as Small Cause Court Suit No. 347 of 1948. The plaintiff is claiming Rs. 8-4-0 on account of arrears of taxes and he has prayed for a decree for the amount of the claim with costs and such other relief as he may be entitled to.

[2] On 27th May 1949 the suit was heard by the learned Munsif. The learned Munsif had doubts as to whether the suit was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. In that view of the matter he has made this reference. No one has appeared for either party on this reference.

[3] The jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes is conferred by S. 15, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act which reads as follows:

"(1) A Court of Small Causes shall not take cognizance of the suits specified in Sch. 2 as suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes.

(2) Subject to the exceptions specified in that schedule and to the provisions of any enactment for the time being in force, all suits of a civil nature of which the value does not exceed five hundred rupees shall be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes."

[4] Section 16 of that Act reads as follows:

"Save as expressly provided by this Act or by any other enactment for the time being in force, a sult cognizable by a Court of a Small Causes shall not be tried by any other Court having jurisdiction within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes by which the suit is triable."

does not exceed Rs. 500. It is therefore clear that unless this suit is a suit which is specified in Sch. 2 to the Act the Court of Small Causes has jurisdiction to hear and determine the suit.

[6] Questions have arisen in other High Courts as to whether any of the articles in Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, bar the jurisdiction of the Small Causes Court in hearing and determining suits relating to taxes filed by municipalities. It was urged in several cases that Art. 13 of Sch. 2, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, bars the jurisdiction of the Small Causes Court in such matters. That article bars the jurisdiction of the Small Causes Court from trying a suit respectively called malikana and hakk, or of cesses or other dues when the cesses or dues are payable to a person by reason of his interest in immovable property in an here-ditary office or in a shrine or other religious institution.

[7] In dealing with this question, Fazl Ali J. in the case of Municipal Commissioners, Ranchi v. Mt. Mungia, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Pat. 220: (139)

I. C. 104) observed as follows:

"The first point to be determined is whether a Municipality has any such 'interest in any immovable property' as is referred to in Art. 13. Mr. Shiveshwar Dayal, who appears in support of the application, contends that the Municipality has no interest in immovable property' and clinches his argument by referring to the fact that in case any of the holdings which were to be sold are acquired by the Land Acquisttion Department the Municipality could not claim any share in the proceeds of the sale or the compensation that might be payable upon such acquisition. Now although I recognise that the term 'interest' is wider than 'proprietary interest', yet having regard to the context in which the expression is used, it is in my judgment difficult to hold that the municipality has any such interest in the holdings situated within the municipal area as is contemplated by the use of the expression in Art. 13."

[8] We respectfully agree with that observation. In order that Art. 13 of Sch. 2 may apply the plaintiff must be claiming certain dues which are payable to him by reason of his interest in immovable property. It is quite clear that the taxes which are being claimed by the plaintiffs municipality here are not being claimed by reason of an interest of the municipality in the immovable property. The tax is due to the municipality by force of a statute, and not by reason of any interest of the municipality in the immovable property.

[9] The learned Munsif in his letter of reference has referred to S. 167, Bengal Municipal Act which reads as follows:

"The sum due on account of any rate under this Act from any person in respect of any holding shall, subject to the prior payment of the land revenue (if any) due to the Government or of rent (if any) due to a landlord under the Bengal Tenancy Act 1885, thereupon, be a first charge upon the said holding."

It is true that by virtue of that section the municipality has a charge on the holding in respect of which the municipality is claiming the rate. But the municipality is entitled to file a suit to recover the money due to it and to ask for a simple money decree. It is not bound to enforce its rights as a charge-holder. Whether it will be open to the municipality later on to enforce the charge by a separate suit it is not necessary for this Bench to determine. The answer to that question will depend upon the true construction of O. 2, R. 2, Civil P. O., and O. 34, R. 14 of that Code.

[10] The jurisdiction of the Court will depend upon the allegations made in the plaint. Here the only allegations made in the plaint are that a certain sum of money is due to the plaintiff municipality on account of arrears of arrears of taxes. The plaintiff is claiming a simple money decree to recover the arrears of taxes. It is to be noticed that in the plaint no reference has been made to S. 167, Bengal Municipal Act. It is quite clear that the plaintiff municipality does not intend in this suit to enforce the charge which is given to them by S. 167, Bengal Municipal Act. As the plaint stands it is a simple money claim and by reason of S. 15, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the Small Cause Court will have jurisdiction to entertain and decide the suit.

FFF00

[11] The learned Munsif in his letter of reference has also referred to s. 7, Civil P. C., which inter alia provides that so much of the body of the Code as relates to the execution of decrees against immovable property shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887. The learned Munsif seems to have been of the opinion that inasmuch as he is debarred from executing a decree against immovable property he is also debarred from entertaining and deciding the suit. In our judgment, the question of the jurisdiction of the Court as to execution of a decree has no relevance whatsoever as to the question whether the Court has jurisdiction to try the suit. The learned Munsif has not been called upon at present to execute any decree which may or may not be passed by him. The only question at present before him is whether the suit which has been filed in his Court can be proceeded with.

[12] In our judgment it is clear that the Court of Small Causes has jurisdiction to hear and determine the suit and we, therefore, direct that the Munsif do proceed with the suit before him.

(a) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 386 - Heading to section to be regarded as preamble to it - Section 386 is attracted with reference to storing in premises limited by the heading to such section-Interpretation of Statutes.

The headings prefixed to a section or a set of sections in modern statutes are regarded as preambles to those 1950 C/58 & 54 sections. It is now a settled rule that the function of preamble is to explain what is ambiguous in the enactment and it may either restrain or explain it as best suits the intention. On the plain reading of S. 386 that section is not of general application. Even if there be any doubt as to the proper effect and scope of the section, the Court has to refer to the special heading "Factories, trades and places of public resort" and it must be held that S. 386 will be attracted not with reference to storing in every premises, but only in those which are limited by the description given by the sub-heading. [Paras 4 and 5]

Calcutta 417

(b) Interpretation of Statutes - Provisions clear and unambiguous - Court has nothing to do with their reasonableness or otherwise - Two meanings possible - Reasonable intendment would be more acceptable.

If the provisions are clear and unambiguous, a Court of law has nothing to do with the reasonableness or unreasonableness of such statutory provisions, except so far as it may help it in interpreting what the legislature has said. But while interpreting a provision in a statute when two meanings are possible, and one of the interpretations is neither convenient nor reasonable, then such intendment as would make the provision reasonable and just, would be more acceptable than the other. [Para 5]

(c) Municipalities - Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 386 - Statute providing for license for carrying on trade-Consideration whether person concerred earned prolit irrelevant - Storing of grain in certain premises by Post and Telegraphs Department for benefit of employees without license -Section 386 attracted.

In taxing statutes, as under the Income-tax Act, where the making of profits makes a person liable for the tax, "trade" must always be considered in the context of earning profits. But where a statute provides for a license or a permit being taken out for carrying on a business or a trade it is neither necessary nor relevant to consider whether the persons concerned actually earn a profit or even intended to make a profit out of the trade or carried on the business from some motive or other for benefiting the public or a section thereof by selling at a loss. In enacting S. 386 the intendment of the legislature was to regulate and restrict, for the sake of health and convenience of the public, storing of particular articles meant to be utilised for trade. Where the Post and Telegraphs Department of the Government stored grains in a certain premises for the benefit of the employees of that Department without taking a license:

Held, that S. 388 was attracted. [Paras 7 and 8] (d) Municipalities - Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 386 - Crown bound by statute if expressly named or by necessary implication - Crown not named in Act and hence not bound by S. 386.

When the Crown is expressly named in a particular statute the Crown is bound thereby. If it were manifeet in the terms of the statute that it was the intention of the legislature that the Crown should be bound the result would be the same as if the Crown had been expressly named. This principle has not been limited only to provisions affacting rights to property of Crown. Hence the Crown is not affected by the provisions contained in S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act as it cannot be said that by necessary implication the Crown is bound by this section of the Act. Hence where the storing and sale are by and on behalf of the Central Government, as the Crown is not expressly named in the Calcutta Municipal Act the Grown is not bound by the provisions of S. 886 : A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. C. 84, Foll. [Paras 9, 12 and 14] N. K. Basu and Pashupati Ghose-for Petitioner. P. B. Mukherjee and N. C. Talukdar Order. — This rule was issued against an order of acquittal passed by the Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta and raises some very important questions of law.

- [2] A complaint was filed on behalf of the Corporation of Calcutta against the opposite party station inter alia that premises No. 43, Dharamtola Street, Calcutta was being used or permitted to be used as grains, flour and atta shop without taking out a license for the year 1945-46 under S. 386, Calcutta Municipal Act. Summons was accordingly issued against the opposite party. The learned Magistrate by his order dated 1st March 1948 held that the storing of grains in the premises was by the Post and Telegraphs Department of the Government for the benefit of the employees of that Department, and not for trade, and to that purpose could not be taken to be "storing" as contemplated under S. 386 (1) (a), Calcutta Municipal Act; and that the procecution was also bad in law as the relevant provisions could not bind the Crown. The Magistrate accordingly acquitted the accused of the charges.
- [3] Mr. Basu appearing on behalf of the Corporation contends that S. 886 read with Sch. 19, Calcutta Municipal Act, is attracted if any one of the different items mentioned in the Schedule are stored, irrespective of the fact whether such storing is for purposes of trade.
- [4] Chapter 26, Calcutta Municipal Act, is headed as for "Inspection and Regulation of premises, and of factories, trades and places of public resort." This chapter is sub-divided into two parts. Sections 380 to 384 are under the subheading 'Premises generally." Sections 385 to 391 are under the sub-heading "Factories, trades and places of public resort." It is contended on behalf of the Corporation that the provisions of S. 386 are to be interpreted without any reference to the sub-heading "Factories, trades and places of public resort." This contention cannot be upheld. The headings prefixed to a section or a set of sections in modern statutes are regarded as preambles to those sections. It is now a settled rule that the function of the preamble is to explain what is ambiguous in the enactment and it may either restrain or explain it as best suits the intention. In re Carlton, (1945) Ch. 372: 114 L. J. Ch. 289; citing Corporation of the City of Toronto v. Toronto Rail. way Co., (1907) A. C. 315 at p. 324: (76 L. J. P. C. 57).

[5] On an examination of S. 385 and those follow it, it is clear that each one of those section relates to either factories, trades and places of public resort. If the provisions of S. 386 are not taken to be limited and applicable only to factories, trades and places or public resort the result would be that whenever anything isstored, bowever small the quantity and for whatever purpose such storing may be made, a license will have to be taken out: Every householder must then take out a licence for keeping in his house even small quantities of articles for ordinary and daily use - an interpretation which is neither reasonable nor can be deemed to be convenient to the society at large. If the provisions are clear and unambiguous, a Court of law has nothing to do with the reasonableness or unreasonableness of such statutory provisions, except so for as it may help it in interpreting what the legislature has said. (Cooke v. Charles A. Vogeler Co., (1901) A.C. 107. But while interpret. ing a provision in a statute when two meanings, are possible, and one of the interpretations is neither convenient nor reasonable, then such intendment as would make the provision reason. able and just, would be more acceptable than the other. Coke on Littleton 97A. In our view, on the plain reading of S. 386 that section is not of general application. Even if there be any doubt as to the proper effect and scope of the section, we have to refer to the special heading "Factories, trades and places of public resort" and it must be held that S. 886 will be attracted not with reference to storing in every premises, but only in those which are limited by the description given by the sub heading.

[6] It is conceded that grains etc., in the premises are stored. But it is contended that such storing is not for purposes of trade, inasmuch as, these articles are meant for distribution amongst the employees of a particular Government Department at concession rates and such transactions, it is argued cannot be deemed to bein course of trade or business. 'Trade' in its. primary sense means the exchange of goods for goods or goods for money. Reference is made to the Municipal Commissioners of Barnagore v. Barnagore Jute Factory Ltd., 41 C. W. N. 662: (A. I. R. (24) 1937 Cal. 324) as an authority; for holding that trade must always connote. transactions with a view to earn profit only. In the case cited above S. 123, Bengal Muncipal Act (Bengal Act XV [15] of 1932) read with cl. 1 of Scb. 4 of that Act, fell to be considered. Clause 1 is in the following terms:

"Company transacting business within the Municipality for profit or as a benefit of society."

The test to be applied in that case was whether the concern transacted any business "for profit or not." This case, therefore, is no direct authority for the wider proposition that trade must always mean a transaction for profit.

[7] In Burmah Shell Oil Storage & Distributing Co. v. Hawrah Municipality, 40 C. W. N. 766 : (A. I. B. (23) 1936 Cal. 477) this Court has occasion to consider S. 175, Calcutta Municipal Act, which requires a license to be taken out by a person who carries on a profession, trade or calling indicated in Sch. VI of the Act. Jack J. observed that though "trade" under S. 175 is used in its ordinary sense viz., exchange of goods for money or goods for goods with the object of making a profit, a statutory provision for taking out a licence is intended to control the carrying on of a trade simpliciter and is not meant to be a tax on the profits. In taxing statutes, as under the Income tax Act, where the making of profits makes a person liable for the tax, "trades" must always be considered in the context of earning profits. But where a statute provides for a license or a permit being taken out for carrying on a business or a trade it is neither necessary nor relevant to consider whether the persons concerned actually earn a profit or even intended to make a profit out of the trade or carried on the business from some motive or other for benefiting the public or a section thereof by selling at a loss. The word "trade" is one of a very general application, and must always be considered along with the context in which it is used. Halsbury, Laws of England, vol. 82 pp. 303.4.

[8] In the case now before us the intendment of the Legislature was to regulate and restrict, for the sake of health and convenience of the public, storing of particular articles meant to be utilised for trade. So far as the particular provisions are concerned, it is immaterial whether the persons storing intend to or actually derive profit or not. The primary and dominant purpose of the statute is to be taken into consideration. In this view, it must be held, on the facts admitted, that the articles were stored for trade, and accordingly S. 386, Calcutta Municipal Act, is attracted unless its application is otherwise barred.

[9] It is urged on behalf of the opposite party that the storing and sale in this case or by and on behalf of the Central Government and as the Crown is not expressly named in the Calcutta Municipal Act the Crown is not bound by the provisions. Reference is in this connection made to Province of Bombay v. Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay, 78 I. A. 271: (A.I.R.

(84) 1947 P. C. 84) which overruled the judgment of the Bombay High Court reported in Province of Bombay v. Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay, I.L.B. (1944) Bom. 95 at p. 101: (A. I. R. (81) 1944 Bom. 26). In this case the responding sections of the Calcutta Municipal Act, Bengal Act III [3] of 1923 being Es. 244 and 252) attempted to lay watermains along Antop Hill Road, the property in which road belonged to Government. The test to be applied for deciding whether the Crown is bound by a statute or not, was held to be in no way different in the case of the Indian Legislature from that which has long been applied in England. It is incontrovertible that when the Crown is expressly named in a particular statute the Crown is bound thereby but difficulty arises when it has to be ascertained whether the Crown is bound by "necessary implications." The Judicial Committee also held that if it were manifest in the terms of the statute that it was the intention of the Legislature that the Crown should be bound the result would be the same as if the Crown had been expressly named.

[10] On behalf of the Bombay Municipal Corporation, it had also been contended before the Judicial Committee that whenever a statute is enacted "for the public good" the Crown, though not expressly named, must be held to be bound by its provisions and as the Act was manifestly intended to secure public welfare it must bind the Crown. Though this proposition is supported by early authority and is to be found in Bacon's Abridgement and other text books the Judicial Committee held that that view could not now be regarded as sound, except in a strictly limited sense. Reference was made to Gorton Local Board of Health v. Prison Commissioners (1904) 2 K. B. 165 (n) and the Attorney. General v. Hancock. (1940) 1 K. B. 427: (1940-1 ALL E. R. 32) as instances where the Crown was held not to be bound although the statute in question was clearly for the public benefit. Their Lordships further observed as follows:

"Their Lordships prefer to say that the apparent purpose of the statute is one element, and may be an important element, to be considered when an intention to bind the Crown is alleged. If it can be affirmed that, at the time when the statute was passed and received the royal sanction, it was apparent from its terms that its beneficient purpose must be wholly frustrated unless the Crown were bound, then it may be inferred that the Crown has agreed to be bound, Their Lordships will add that when the Court is asked to draw this inference, it must always be remembered that that, if it be the intention of the Legislature that the Crown shall be bound, nothing is easier than to say so in plain words."

The distinction made in Scottish cases, between property held jure corona and other property of the Crown, was further held as not to have been adopted in England and does not seem to their Lordships to be in accordance with a body of English authority which, where an ancient doctrine of the common law of England is in question, ought in their Lordships' opinion to prevail. The law of England and of India was held to be the same, and their Lordships could find no reason to say by necessary implication the Crown was bound by the relevant sections of the Bombay Municipal Act.

[11] Mr. Basu appearing on behalf of the petitioner Corporation contends that the case before the Judicial Committee as also the decisions the Hornsey Urban District Council v. Hennell (1902) 2 K. B. 73: (71 L. J. K B. 479) and Attorney-General v. Hancock, (1910) 1 K.B. 427 : (1940-1 ALL E. R. 32) refer to instances where the relevant statutory provisions interfered with the right to property of the Crown but in the case now before us there is no question of any interference with any right to property. The provisions under consideration require certain licenses to be taken out; these provisions, it is urged do not in any way affect rights over property or prerogative of the Crown. No doubt this aspect of the question was not argued before the Judicial Committee in the Province of Bombay v. Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay, 73 I. A. 271: (A. I. B. (34) 1947 P. C. 34). Oar attention is particularly drawn to the observations in Attorney-General v. Hancock, (1940) 1 K. B. 427 at p. 439: (1940-1 ALL E. R. 32):

"The Rule is now well written and clear that if an Act of Parliament when otherwise divest the Crown of its property, rights, interest or prerogative, it is not to be construed as applying to the Crown unless the Crown has been mentioned either expressly or by necessary implication."

It is further pointed out that the relevant provisions of the Calcutta Municipal Act which are now before us for consideration only deal with the mode or manner of carrying on a business or trade and not with the carrying on the business itself.

[12] Although this particular line of argument nowadvanced before us was not considered by the Judicial Committee, its decision, however, is in very general terms and is not in any way limited to proceedings affecting rights to property or prerogative of the Crown. The judicial Committee came to the conclusion as stated above without making any distinction between provisions affecting rights to property or otherwise. It was laid down that the law is not in any way different in the case of Indian Legis. lation from that which has long been applied in England. If we analyse the various decisions of the English Courts, it will be apparent that the principle has not been limited to provisions affecting rights to property only. One of the cases in point is Cooper v. Hawkins, (1904) 2 K. B. 164: (73 L. J. K. B. 113). The question in issue in this case was whether regulations regulating the speed of locomotives within certain areas applied to the running of a locomotive owned by the Crown and driven by a servant of the Crown or Crown service. Lord Alverstone C. J. referred to his early observations in Hornsey Urban District Council v. Hennel, (1902) 2 K. B. 73: (71 L. J. K. B. 479) and applying the same tests to the facts of the later case, held that the regulations did not affect the Crown. In Cooper v. Hawkins, (1904) 2 K. B 164 : (73 L. J. K. B. 113) (Supra) the provisions affected the mode or manner of running a locomotive and did not affect any property belonging to the Orown. The observations of Lord Alverstone C. J., and Wills J. make it abundantly clear that the Crown is not ordinarly bound by statutory provisions and the question of right to property is not a determining factor.

[13] In our view, the decision by the Judicial Committee in the Province of Bombay v. Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay, 78 I. A. 271: (A. I. R. (31) 1947 P. C. 34) must be taken to be an authority on the general question as to when the Orown is bound by statutory provisions. Decisions given by the Judicial Committee are binding on us and it is not open to this Court to go into the reasons or the absence of reasons supporting the decisions of the Judicial Committee.

[14] Had the question been res integra and had it been open to us to consider the question untrammelled by a decision of the Judicial Committee we might have considered the reasonableness and propriety of applying the principles as enunciated by the English Courts and also how far they should be applied to Indian conditions. For some years past, the position of the Crown with regard to liability and procedure has been considered by the lawyers in England as being "antiquated and absurd as contrasted with that of ordinary individuals" and reform in this respect has been considered to be long overdue. The directions given by Lord Birkenhead L. C. in 1921 and Lord Haldene L. C. in 1924, may be referred to in this connection. With the growing nationalisation of industries and the Government itself undertaking trade and commerce, the question has assumed greater im. portance. The Courts, however, are not concerned with the policy underlying such legislation or reform; we are only to apply the law as it stands. As stated already we are bound by the decision of the Judicial Committee and we must hold that the Crown is not affected by the provisions contained in S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act, as it cannot be said that by necessary implication the Orown is bound by this Section of the Act. This Rule must accordingly be discharged.

[15] On behalf of the petitioner Corporation we have been moved to grant a certificate under S. 205, Government of India Act. Section 205 refers only to cases involving substantial question of law as to the interpretation of the Government of India Act or any Order in Council made thereunder, or of the Indian Independence Act or of any Order made thereunder. Questions of law raised and decided in the appeal now before us do not touch any of the Acts or Orders referred to in S. 205 of the Act. Certificate is accordingly withheld.

(b) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 421—Order against Crown—Crown -Statute binding.

Ordinarily the Crown may not be bound by a Statute and the test is whether expressly or by necessary implication in that particular Statute the Crown has been bound. The apparent purpose of the Statute is one element, and may be an important element, to be considered when an intention to bind the Crown is alleged. If it can be affirmed that, at the time when the Statute was passed and received the royal sanction, it was apparent from its terms that its beneficient purpose must be wholly frustrated unless the Crown were bound, then it may be inferred that the Crown has agreed to be bound.

Where several maunds of whole-barley were seized from the Government Stores and the finding of the municipal Magistrate was that these were unwholesome, unfit for human consumption and also injurious to public health:

Held, that the Crown was by necessary implication to be considered as bound and the municipal Magistrate had full jurisdiction to order the destruction of the unwholesome barley. [Paras 2 and 5]

N. K. Basu and Pashupati Ghose-for Petitioner. J. M. Banerjea - for Opposite Party.

Order .- These two rules were issued at the instance of the Corporation of Calcutta in two cases in which two managers of Govt. Stores were proceeded against before the municipal Magistrate of Calcutta under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act-Act III [8] of 1923.

[2] It appears that several maunds of whole. barley were seized from these two Government Stores and the finding of the learned Magistrate, after an elaborate discussion of all the evidence, is that these were unwholesome, unfit for human consumption and also injurious to public health.) The learned Magistrate however, felt himself bound by two decisions, namely, the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of The Province of Bombay v. Municipal Corporation of the City of Bomtay, 73 I. A. 271: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. C. 34) and that of this Court in the case of The Corporation of Calcutta v. Sub. Post Master, Dharamtolla Post Office, being Cri. Revn. No. 378 of 1948, D/- 7-4-1949: (A. J. R. (37) 1950 Cal. 417), by our learned brothers Rama Prosad Mookerjee and K. C. Das Gupta JJ. The Magistrate following those two decisions held that he had no jurisdiction to order destruction by the Calcutta Corporation of these unwholesome barley which it appears he would himself have gladly otherwise ordered.

[3] Mr. Banerjea appearing on behalf of the opposite parties has put forward the argument that this Court has no jurisdiction to sit in revision over a Magistrate's order under S. 421. Calcutta Municipal Act. It appears that this point was raised by the Advocate-General of Bengal in the case of Messrs. Sir Abdulla Harun & Co. v. Corporation of Calcutta in Cri. Revn. No. 679 of 1948 : (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Oal. 36:51 Cr.L.J. 316) and there was a difference of opinion between our learned brothers Rama Prosad Mookerjee and K. C. Das Gupta JJ. Rama Prosad Mookerjee J. was of the opinion that there was no force in the contention that a proceeding under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act. is not revisable under Ss. 435 and 439, Criminal P. C. Our learned brother K. C. Das Gupta J. was of the contrary opinion. Unfortunately, as the case was decided on another point this was not placed before a third Judge; so we do not have any conclusive authority of this Court. We have therefore, paid our utmost attention to this point and we are unable to accept the argument of the learned Advocate-General adopted by Mr. Banerjea before us. We are clearly of opinion that a proceeding under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act is a proceeding before a criminal Court within the meaning of S. 495, Criminal P. C. It is obvious that under S. 435, Criminal P. C. an executive act cannot be revised by this Court. The section itself is clear and there. fore, we do not cite any authorities. The section itself says that it must be the proceeding of "a criminal Court". So, the whole question is whether, when acting under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act and like sections, the municipal Magistrate is a criminal Court or not. The Local Government which appoints the municipal Magistrate under the Municipal Act is only authorised to do so under S. 531. Whatever other powers a Magistrate acting under the Criminal Procedure Code or under any other law may have, a Magistrate appointed a municipal Magistrate under S. 531 may be appointed only "for the trial of offences against this Act," that is to say, the Calcutta Municipal Act, "and the rules and bye-laws made thereunder". It is definitely stated that such Magistrates shall be called municipal Magistrates and then provision is made for their pay, pensions, leave, salary etc., and how this is to be realised from the Calcutta Corporation. It lays down that each of such Magistrates shall have juris. diction over the whole of Calcutta. Therefore, a Municipal Magistrate can only be appointed for one purpose and one purpose alone, namely, trial of offences and where the Act imposes upon the Municipal Magistrates certain duties it must be in accordance with the purpose for which he is appointed and, therefore, all the sections in which the Municipal Magistrate is asked to do something are necessarily to be interpreted as sections dealing with cases of offences.

[4] Mr. Banerjea has drawn our attention to 8. 488 of the Act in which certain offences are made liable to penalty by way of a fine. offence is an act which is made punishable and punishment need not be only of fine or imprisonment. There may be other methods of punishment, namely, destruction, demolition Therefore, the fact that in S. 488 of the Act provision is made for punishment with fine of certain offencee does not go to show that when penalising other acts by order of destruction at the cost of the party, of demolition etc., the Municipal Magistrate is exercising any power or function outside the Calcutta Municipal Act. There is no provision for appoint. ment of a Municipal Magistrate as executive officer. As these are powers or functions exercised under the Act itself and as under the Act he can only be appointed for the trial of offences these proceedings before him are for trial of offences and therefore, when trying such offences he is a criminal Court and as he is a criminal Court, S. 435 applies and this Court has the power to call for records etc., and interfere under S. 439, Criminal P. C. ar of opinion, therefore, that there is no substance in the contention that this Court has no jurisdiction to revise an order under 8. 421 or the cognate sections by the Municipal Magistrate of Calcutta.

[5] We, therefore, now enter into the main point. The learned Magistrate in the present case unfortunately did not see the difference between the case then before our learned brothers Rama Prosad Mookerjee and K. C. Das

Gupts, JJ., namely, Corporation of Calcutta v. Sub-Post Master, Dharamtolla Post Office. Cri. Revn. No. 378 of 1948: (A.I.B. (87) 1950 cal. 417) and the present case. The law is clear since the decision of the Judicial Com. mittee in the case of the Province of Bombay v. Municipal Corporation of the City of Bombay, 73 I. A. 271: (A.I.R. (34) 1947 P. C. 34) that ordinarily the Crown may not be bound by a Statute and the test is whether expressly or by necessary implication in that particular Statute the Crown has been bound. In the particular case then before them which was a case of not taking out a trade license by the Central Government, their Lordships Rama Prosad Mookerjee and K. C. Das Gupta JJ. came to the conclusion that neither expressly nor by necessary implication could it be said that the Orown was intended to be bound by such a section of the Calcutta Municipal Act which required such a license to be taken out. The Judicial Committee decision itself lays down the criterion when it may be said that by necessary implication the Crown is made bound in a particular Statute. It may be said here that in this Statute either under 8. 421 or under other cognate sections relating to public health the Crown had not been bound. The Crown will be bound if by necessary implication it is to be held that the Crown is bound. In the Judicial Committee decision this is the test that was formulated by their Lordships:

"Their Lordships prefer to say that the apparent purpose of the Statute is one element, and may be an important element, to be considered when an intention to bind the Crown is alleged. If it can be affirmed that, at the time when the Statute was passed and received the royal sanction, it was apparent from its terms that its beneficient purpose must be wholly frustrated unless the Crown were bound, then it may, be inferred that the Crown has agreed to be bound."

These words of the Judicial Committee will clearly show the distinction between the present group of cases and the group of cases with which our learned brothers were dealing. Cases of this nature which safeguard the public health of the biggest City in the East are under the powers given to the Corporation of Calcutta to preserve the public health by destruction of diseased animals or of unwholesome food, by removal of congestion or causes thereof etc., and of other things which interfere with proper health and sanitation. This is the fundamental object of the existence of a Municipality. If in cases of this nature the Orown is left free to sell or otherwise distribute injurious food or, as Mr. Basu has very rightly said, 'poison the whole of the City of Calcutta with unwholesome, unsound barley or other food" then it cannot but be said that it will be almost useless to enact sections to prevent such act and to create a Municipal body. The entire good work of the Corporation of Calcutta can be frustrated if the Crown is guilty of such acts as have been proved in the present case before the Magis. trate, to have been done by these two Government Ration shops. According to the test laid down by the Judicial Committee we are of opinion that in the present case, and in cases of this nature, the Crown is by necessary implication also to be considered as bound. The Crown cannot evade its own responsibility to obey such laws of health which are funds. mental if a Municipality is to function properly and if the Crown violates the same it has to be made to observe such laws by means of Magisterial action. Under the circumstances we are of opinion that the Municipal Magistrate had full jurisdiction in the present case to order the destruction of the unwholesome barley.

(6) Mr. Banerjea has urged before us that his clients had many objections about the mode of seizure of the articles etc. but it appears from the judgment of the Municipal Magistrate that these points were not urged before him, It is possible that Mr. Banerjea's clients relying upon the supposed immunity from an action in such cases of the Orown might not have raised these points fully before the Court at the time of argument as not necessary.

Municipal Magistrate and remand the case back to him for decision on the other points except the points of numbolesomeness of the barley and of judisdiction which have been finally decided here and then pass such orders as he may be entitled to pass in law.

(a) Municipalities — Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 421 — Order under, for destruction —Persons affected by order, if should be heard.

A Superintendent of Police purchased from different contractors certain quantities of mustard oil for purpose of sale in a ration shop. On analysis he found it to be adulterated and, therefore, he moved the Municipal Magistrate for orders under S. 421 informing the contractors concerned of the proceedings. The contractors appeared before the Magistrate but he refused to hear them on the ground that the only person entitled to be heard under S. 421 is the person in whose possession the adulterated food is found:

Held, that in the peculiar circumstances of the case the Magistrate ought to have heard the contractors and Order.—These are three rules against orders passed by the Municipal Magistrate under 8. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act. They relate to a large quantity of mustard oil which the Superintendent of Polics, 21 Parganas, purchased from different contractors and had for sale to the members of police force under him in a ration shop. The only reason that there are three separate cases is that the total quantity of oil with the Superintendent was divided up according to the contractors from whom he had bought it. Nevertheless though this division has been made, the main point before me is an objection by the contractors that they were not allowed to be heard.

[2] The circumstances are certainly very peculiar. The Superintendent himself, after first having some analysis made by the Public Analyst. moved the Municipal Magistrate for the orders in question to be made. He himself informed the contractors of the proceedings and they duly appeared before the Magistrate The Magistrate has refused to hear them on the ground that the provisions of S3. 418, 419, 420 and 421 of the Act show that the only person entitled to be heard under S. 421 is the person in whose possession the adulterated food was found. It is almost accidental that the provisions of S. 421 apply at all in the sense that it is only because the oil was with the Superintendent for sale in ration shops and not for issue as rations (without payment) to the force that the provisions have any application. But for this ascident, probably the course that would have been followed would have been a prosecution on the complaint of the Superintendent of the contractors for selling him adulterated oil under the appropriate provisions of the Calcutta Municipal Act. Personally I think it is unfortunate that in any case this procedure was not followed in the first place. The result has been very anomalous. The proceedings were brought at the instance of the Superintendent obviously with the intimation (intention?) in some way. if possible, of protecting himself in the event of any question of his having to pay for the mustard oil to the contractors. Clearly there is no thing whatever to prevent a person in the position of the Superintendent who finds that he has noxious food in his possession, to destory it without any reference to the Magistrate for an order. The whole scheme of the sections shows that they are expected to be applied, as a result of vigilance of inspectors and as a means of enforcing destruction, on a person who happens to be found in possession. They never contemplate the person himself going to the Court for an order for some ulterior purpose. The result has been that the learned Magistrate by examining the provisions of the sections has come to the conclusion that at most the only person entitled to be heard before him is the person in whose possession the adulterated food was found deposited for the purpose of sale and he gives apt reasons pointing out the difficulties that would arise if it were held that it was necessary to trace back the history of the particular article to the various sellers and to give notice to all the various middlemen through whose hands the article might have passed before a destruction could be made. But in the present case the facts are, as I have pointed out, peculiar and different. The whole object of the order in fact is to bind, if possible, the contractors in some way, yet when they were present at the Court at the instance of the Superintendent, who acted very fairly in the matter, then the technical objection was taken and they were not allowed to be heard. The provisions of S. 421 and of the preceding sections are very vague on the question of what procedure is to be followed by the Magistrate and who is to be heard.

[3] As I read the sections, the assumption appears to be that from the time of seizure the person in whose possession the article seized is found is always present. Section 420 contemplates his giving or refusing consent and S. 421 seems to contemplate that when the food is taken before the Magistrate he again will be present. Section 421 (3) contemplates in fact his being awarded compensation on the spot in appropriate circumstances. There is, however, no specific provision for the procedure in the very peculiar circumstances of the present case. It seems to me that the only fair procedure for the Magistrate to follow was to have heard the persons really interested in the matter, namely, were divided on the basis of the oil supplied by the several contractors,—a division which was quite pointless if there were no question of the contractors being heard in the matter. It is contended in the fact that the contractors have evidence of a responsible analyst establishing that the oil is satisfactory. It seems to me that in these very peculiar circumstances the Magistrate ought to have allowed them to produce that evidence before he passed the order of destruction.

[4] Mr. Choudhury raised a preliminary objection that this Court had no power under S. 439, Criminal P. C., to interfere with the order of the Magistrate passed under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act. This question has been before this Court recently and in the case of the Corporation of Calcutta v. Bhupil Chandra Sinha, Cri. Revn. No. 723 of 1949 : (A. I B. (87) 1950 cal. 421), Chunder and Guha JJ. have held specifically that this Court has power to revise an order passed by a Municipal Magistrate under S. 421 of the Calcutta Municipal Act. In a previous case there was a difference of opinion with regard to the very same section between Mookerjee and Das Gupta JJ. Abdulla Hasoon & Co. v. Corporation of Calcutta, Cri. Revn. No. 679 of 1948 : (A. I. R. (37) 1960 Cal. 36 : 51 Cr. L. J. 346), the former holding that the Court had power of revision and the latter holding the opposite view. But as the learned Judges were agreed that the particular case had no merits, the difference was not resolved further.

[5] The point has been argued to some extent before me and the argument before me was so clearly based on an erroneous reading of the judgment of Suhrawardy J. in the case of Krishan Doyal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 54 Cal. 532: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 509 : 28 Cr. L. J. 407) and I propose to point out the error. With great respect it seems to me that Das Gupta J. in referring to this judgment was influenced by an argument based on this erroneous interpretation. In the case of Ram Gopal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 52 Cal. 962 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 1251 : 26 Cr. L. J. 1533) the matter for decision was whether the Corporation was bound to hear the opposite party before applying to the Magistrate in a proceeding under S. 363, Calcutta-Municipal Act. In that case the Advocate General also specifically took the point that the Court had no power in any view to interfere in revision with the order of the Magistrate. Sir Lancelot Sanderson, C. J. gave a clear decision that the order of the Magistrate was a judicial order made by him either in the exercise of a criminal or civil jurisdiction and that the Court had jurisdiction to revise the order of the Municiipal Magistrate. Part of the argument in the judgment is that the Municipal Magistrate in question being a Presidency Magistrate would be a criminal Court within the meaning of S. 6, Oriminal P. C. In the later case, the sole question was whether proceedings before the Magistrate were bad because the opposite party had been examined on oath. The argument was that the Code of Criminal Procedure applied to the proceedings which also related to a demolition order under S. 363 of the Act and that as the Code applied the examination of the opposite party under the provisions of S. 342 of the Code could not be on oath and therefore the proceed. ings were bad as the oath had been administered. The learned Judges dealt solely with this point and no question was raised before them as to the jurisdiction of this Court to interfere with the order of the Magistrate. The assumption clearly in the judgment is that the Court has such power to interfere and the final decision was refusal to interfere not on the ground that the Court had no power but on the ground that the proceedings in the lower Court were not vitiated by any illegality or irregularity. Therefore, there is nothing in this case to weaken in any way the decision of Sanderson C. J. in the earlier case. In course of his judgment, however, Suhrawardy J. said:

"If a party to a proceeding under Chap. XII, Criminal P. C. is not an accused person, it is hardly conceivable that a party to a proceeding under the Municipal Act relating to demolition of and unauthorised structure is an accused person and as such exempted from administration of oath. It has however been argued on the authority of the case of Ram Gopal v. Corporation of Calculta, 52 Cal. 962: A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 1251: 26 Cr. L. J. 1533) that a Municipal Magistrate in Calcutta is a Presidency Magistrate and so the Criminal Procedure Code will apply to proceedings before him in all its details. The case referred to does not lay down any such proposition. The learned Chief Justice has made some observation which is clearly an obiter and not necessary for the decision of that case, namely, that the Municipal Magistrate being a Presidency Magistrate the High Court has jurisdiction under S. 439, Criminal P. C. to revise his order." (Italics are mine).

[6] The argument before me was that the decision in the earlier case had been weakened by the later decision because in the later case it had said that the earlier remark that "the Municipal Magistrate being a Presidency Magistrate the High Court has jurisdiction under S. 439, Criminal P. C., to revise his order."

was obiter. It is patently a misreading of the passage above quoted. "Some observation" referred to is not specifically quoted in the judgment of Suhrawardy J. and the last words following the word "namely" clearly refer to the word "decision". It seems hardly necessary to labour the point, as a careful reading of the passage quoted could surely leave nobody in the slightest doubt as to the meaning of the last lines. The judgment did not and could not say that the view that this Court had power to interfere in revision with the crders of the Magistrate had been expressed merely as an obiter in the earlier case, when in fact there was a clear decision on that point in the earlier case. And in fact the decision was substantially followed in the later case by the course adopted.

[7] The result is that the Rules are made absolute, the orders of the learned Magistrate are set aside and the cases remanded for him to give the contractors an opportunity to present such evidence as they may have on the quality of the oil in question. The Corporation of Calcutta also may adduce such evidence as they desire.

The right to use a bank of a tank as a burial ground is not exercisable at all times of the year but is one exercisable on certain occasions. Hence, an order under S. 147 in respect of a dispute concerning such a right is not bad merely because the right had not been exercised within the statutory period laid down in the proviso to sub-s. Order. — This reference must be rejected. It is against an order passed under S. 147, Oriminal P. C., the dispute being about a bank of a tank used as a burial ground, in certain cases, by Hindus of neighbouring villages. A lease was taken by one of the opposite parties before the trial Magistrate of a tank and its bank, the latter being claimed by the villagers to be their burial ground. Proceedings were started under S. 145, Oriminal P. C., as there was a danger of a communal riot. There were also proceedings under S. 147, Oriminal P. O.

[9] The sole point of the reference that the last time anybody was proved to have been buried on the bank in question was more than three months before the date of the Magistrate's enquiry and therefore under S. 147 (2), as the right had not been exercised within the statutory period laid down there, the order was bad. The answer is self-evident and it is a little surprising that the learned Judge should have fallen into an error and made the reference. The logical result of his view is that the burial ground could only be kept going provided somebody was made to die at intervals of some three months. Clearly the answer is that this is not a right exercisable at all times of the year but are exercisable on certain occasions. The evidence was that on the last occasion somebody of the community died whose death was due to such a cause that custom required his burial, he was buried in this place and I presume there was ample other evidence to show that the plot in question was otherwise used as a burial ground on such occasions. The learned Judge in fact omitted to read sub-s. (2) carefully and notice how its terms applied to the present case.

[3] The reference is accordingly rejected.

Provisions of S. 80, Civil P. Section 114, Evidence Act, does not apply because it cannot possibly be presumed that a wrong addressee would immediately forward the communication to the person who by statute was bound to receive it. The addressee might or might not act and there can be no presumption under S. 114. [Para 10]

Similarly S. 106, Evidence Act, is of no help as it does not shift the onus. In this case before the plaintiffs could succeed they had to prove a valid notice. Order. — This is a petition for revision of a decree of a learned Small Cause Court Julge dismissing the petitioners' claim for damages against the Governor-General of the Dominion of India.

[2] The plaintiffs brought a suit claiming damages for the failure of the Governor-General to deliver electric switches to the value of Rs. 1300 which had been consigned for carriage by railway to Delhi. A sum of Rs. 1304 was claimed as damages. On behalf of the defendant a point was taken that no notice was served as required by 8. 80, Civil P. C. The notice was not sent to the General Manager of the East Indian Railway as required by 8. 80 of the Code, but was sent to the Secretary of the Railway Board at Delhi. Apparently the General Manager of the East Indian Railway received the notice at sometime or another, but there is no evidence at all as to when the notice reached him.

- [3] The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court held that as notice had not been served in accordance with S. 80, the suit was bound to fail and he accordingly dismissed it.
- [4] On behalf of the petitioners it has been contended that the Court should have presumed that the notice reached the General Manager eighty days before the suit as required by 8. 80. The notice was apparently dated august 1948 and the Secretary of the Railway Board acknowledged receipt, but there is nothing on the record to show when the Railway Board forwarded this notice to the General Manager of the East Indian Railway.

of this kind must be sent to the General Manager of the Railway concerned and there is no doubt that the railway concerned was the East Indian Railway as the goods were consigned to be carried by that railway from Calcutta to Delhi. Section 80, Civil P. O. is in these terms:

"No suit shall be instituted against the Government or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been delivered to or left at the office of—

- (b) in the case of a suit against the Central Government where it relates to a railway, the General Manager of that railway."
- delivered to or left at the office of the General Manager of the railway, namely, the East Indian Railway. Admittedly that was not done. Sen J. in an earlier case Dominion of India v. Sree Dedraj Bajoria, (Civil Revn. 856 of 1919), decided on 29th November 1949, that where a notice under S. 80 is addressed not to the General Manager of a railway but to some other body it is not a good notice and it is not necessary to show that the General Manager received it within the proper time.
- of S. 80, Civil P. C. must be strictly complied with. In a very recent case Govt. of the Province of Bombay v. Pestonji Ardeshir Wadia, A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 143: (76 I. A. 85) their Lordships stressed the fact that the provisions of this section must be complied with strictly.

At p. 146, Madhavan Nair J. who delivered the judgment of the Board observed:

"Their Lordships fully concur with the above view. The provisions of S. 80 of the Code are imperative and should be strictly complied with before it can be said that a notice valid in law has been served on the Government."

[8] If the provisions of S. 80 have to be strictly complied with, then clearly the plaintiff-petitioners failed to show that a valid notice under S. 80 had been served.

[9] Learned advocate for the petitioners has contended that the General Manager of the East Indian Railway should have been called upon to state when he received the notice and he relied upon 8s. 114 and 106, Evidence Act.

[10] Section 114, Evidence Act, can have no application because it cannot possibly be presumed that a wrong addressee would immediately forward the communication to the person who by statute was bound to receive it. The addressee might or might not act and there can be no presumption under S. 114.

[11] Learned advocate, however, contended that S. 106, Evidence Act, clearly applied. The facts, he contended, were entirely within the knowledge of the General Manager and he only could prove when he received the letter. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in two comparatively recent cases from Ceylon have laid down that S. 106 does not shift the onus. In this case before the plaintiff petitioners could succeed they had to prove a valid notice. Had they made out some prima facie case, then, I think, S. 106, Evidence Act would have applied and the General Manager would have been called upon to show that he did not receive the notice in time. But merely proving that a notice was sent to a person not contemplated by the statute does not raise any prima facie case, and there was, therefore, no evidence at all before the Court that the General Manager of the East Indian Railway received this notice within time. It seems to me quite clear that the suit was bound to fail and was rightly dismissed by the learned Small Cause Court Judge.

[12] It was suggested that in a case of this kind the plaintiffs had a remedy by applying to the Full Bench of the Small Cause Court and it was suggested that until they did that they could not move this Court. I do not think it is necessary to decide this question, as I am clearly of opinion that there is no merit in the application.

[13] The petition, therefore, fails and the rule is discharged with costs.

The burden of proving that the accused is a person coming within the definition of a "dealer" is on the prosecution. That involves the further consequence, that the prosecution is bound to prove not only that he deals in the purchase or sale of food grain or storing in foodgrain for sale, but also that he is not a producer. The prosecution may succeed in showing that he is a dealer even though he is a producer by further showing that the foodgrain in which he was dealing was not the foodgrain produced by himself.

That the accused was a person dealing in the sale of foodgrain or at least in the storing of foodgrain for sale can reasonably be inferred from the fact that he was found in boat in charge of 130 maunds of paddy when the boat was moving down stream.

Annotation: ('46-Man.) Evidence Act, S 114 Notes

Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherjee, Purnendu Sekhar Basu, Sukumar Mitra and Sachindra Chandra Das Gupta — for Petitioner.

Nirmal Kumar Sen, Deputy Legal Remembrancer -for the State.

Das Gupta J .- This rule is directed against an order of conviction and sentence, under 8.7 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946, passed by a Magistrate, at Arambagh, and confirmed in appeal by the Bessions Judge, Hoogbly.

[2] The prosecution case was that on 26th June 1949, 190 maunds of paddy and 4 maunds and 10 seers of rice were found in a boat mov. ing down stream near the Ghat at Chak Bashia. It is said that the accused Kalipada Nandi was in that boat. Admittedly, he had no license for taking these goods away in the boat. The charge framed against this Kalipada Nandi was that he had contravened the provisions of s. 3 (1), Bengal Food Grains Control Order, 1945, by engaging in an undertaking involving storage for sale of this paddy and rice without any license, Section 8 (1) of that Order prohibits any dealer or large producer from engaging in any undertaking which involves the purchase, sale or storage for sale in wholesale quantities of any food grain.

[3] The first question for decision, therefore, is whether, the accused was a dealer or large producer. No attempt was made by the prosecution to show that the accused is a large producer within the meaning of 8. 2 (e) of the Order which defines a large producer as a person who cultivates land the area of which is not less than 25 acres at any one time and grows thereon paddy by himself with or without the aid of members of his family or paid labourers or by adhiars, bargardars or bhagdars.

[4] Both the Courts below appear to have proceeded on the basis that the accused was a dealer. A dealer is defined in S. 2 (b) of the Order in these words:

"'dealer' means a person dealing in the purchase or sale of any foodgrain or storing any foodgrain for sale and includes any person so dealing or storing on behalf of another as a commission agent or arhatia, but does not include a producer except in so far as such producer deals in the purchase or sale of any foodgrain or stores any foodgrain other than the foodgrain which is produced by himself with or without the aid of members of his family or paid labourers or by adhiars, bargadars or bhagdars;"

[5] That the accused was a person dealing in the sale of foodgrain or at least in the storing of foodgrain for sale can reasonably be inferred from the fact that he was found in a boat in charge of 130 maunds of paddy when the boat was moving down stream.

- [6] The question remains whether it has further been proved that the accused was not a producer, or if he was a producer, the foodgrain in the sale of which he was dealing was foodgrain other than the foodgrain produced by himself. Clearly, the burden of proving that the accused is a person coming within the definition of a "dealer" is on the prosecution. That involves the further consequence, in my opinion, that the prosecution is bound to prove not only that he deals in the purchase or sale of foodgrain or storing in foodgrain for sale, but also that he is not a producer. The prosecution may succeed in showing that he is a dealer even though he is a producer by further showing that the foodgrain which he was dealing was not the foodgrain produced by himself. No attempt has been made in this case to show either that the accused is not a producer, or that if he is a producer, the goods which he was dealing with were food. grain not produced by himself.
- [7] The consequence of this, in my opinion, is that the prosecution has failed to prove that the accused is a dealer within the meaning of S. 2 (b), Food Grains Control Order, 1945.
- [8] Both the Courts below have relied on a confession said to have been made by the accused. It is said that the statement, Ex. 1, was written out by the accused when Civil Supplies Inspector, prosecution Witness No. 1, requested him to put in writing the statement he had already verbally made to him. While Prosecution Witness No. 1 denies the suggestion that the statement was copied out from a draft, the other prosecution witnesses have admitted the defence suggestion that the statement was copied out from a draft. Quite apart from the question whether it was copied out from a draft, it seems to me extremely unlikely that a statement of this nature would be volutarily made by the accused person within a few minutes after the paddy had been seized without any kind of inducement. In my judgment, there is very good reason for the suspicion that the confession which we find in Ex. 1 had been caused by inducement having reference to the charge against the accused person proceeding from the Inspector of Civil Supplies who was clearly a person in authority. In my judgment, this confession is inadmissible in view of the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act.

[9] My conclusion, therefore, is that the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioner cannot stand. I would, therefore, make this rule absolute, and set aside the order of conviction and sentence passed against the accused, as also the order of forfeiture.

Tenancy Laws — Calcutta Thika Tenancy Ordinance (West Bengal Ordinance XI [11] of 1948), Ss. 3 and 2—Surrender of existing lease with structures made by tenant—Tenant agreeing to remain as monthly tenant—Tenant, if can claim protection under Ordinance.

A lessee for a term by a deed of surrender gave upall his rights under the lease and to the structures he had made on the land in lieu of cash payment and remained on the premises as merely a thika tenant atwill (monthly tenant). Subsequently the landlord obtained a consent decree for ejectment against the tenant. In execution of the decree the tenant claimed protection under the Ordinance:

Held, that the tenant seeking the protection of the Ordinance must show that his tenancy was under one of the various systems referred to in S. 2 of the Ordinance and that he had made certain erections upon the land as such tenant. Mere description as a thika tenant was not enough. Consequently the defendant having failed to adduce any evidence on these points could not claim the protection under the Ordinance as a thika tenant.

Harries C. J. — This is an appeal from an order of Banerjee J. sitting on the Original Side dated 28th March 1949 allowing an application for execution of a decree.

[2] The respondent obtained a consent decree against the appellant on 3rd January 1946, and by that decree the defendant undertook to deliver possession within six months, execution of the decree being stayed for that time. The defendant did not vacate at the expiry of the period of six months and on 3rd December 1948, the Court made an order directing the Sheriff to deliver possession of the premises to the respondent. The Sheriff failed to deliver possession and an application was made to the Court for an order that the Sheriff of Calcutta be directed to deliver possession of the land and premises known as No. 2, Nayan Krishna Saha lane in the mode described by O. 21, R. 35, Civil P. C.

[3] The appellant resisted the application and claimed to be a thika tenant and entitled to the protection given by the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Ordinance, 1948.

[4] The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the appellant was not a thika tenant and was not entitled to protection under the Ordinance. If no protection under the Ordinance could be claimed then it was conceded that the appellant had no answer to the application for execution.

(5) It appears that the appellant's husband had been a lessee of these premises from the respondent, but on 13th December 1944, this lease was surrendered by a document of that date. It appears from the document that there was still fourteen years of the lease to run, but the lessee owed large sums of money to the landlord. As a result of an agreement entered into between the parties the lessee the appellant gave up all claims under the lease and the landlord the respondent in turn gave up certain decrees and claims which he had against the appellant. Further the respondent paid the appellant a sum of Rs. 2,000 in cash and agreed to pay a sum of Rs. 200 for the doors, windows, banms, rafters, bricks, lime, surki etc. of a structure upon the premises. The document ends with these words:

"I sign and execute this deed of surrender by giving up in your favour all my rights etc., to the said land which I now have on the basis of the said temporary lease. I shall have no further claim or demand, right, title and interest on account of the said temporary lease. From this day, I shall be regarded as merely a ticca tenant at will (monthly tenant) in respect of the said land."

The document was of course executed by the appellant.

[6] The document is in Bengali and I have merely set out a translation and there can be no doubt that the translation is accurate. The appellant was to be regarded as "Ichhadhin thika praja" and immediately following these words, the words "monthly tenant" in English appear in brackets.

[7] Learned counsel on behalf of the appellant has contended that this deed of surrender clearly created a thika tenancy within the meaning of that term as used in the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Ordinance, 1918. That being so, it is said that the appellant was protected by S. 3 of that Ordinance. That section provides:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any other law for the time being in force, no decree or order for the ejectment of a thika tenant shall be executed during the continuance in operation of this Ordinance."

[8] It was argued before Banerjee J. that this section afforded no protection where the decree for ejectment was a consent decree; but the learned Judge preferred not to rest his judgment on any such basis and I do not, therefore, propose to consider that matter any further.

[9] In the learned Judge's opinion the appellant had failed to prove that she was a thika tenant within the meaning of the term as used in the Ordinance. It is to be observed that no one but a friend gave evidence on behalf of the appellant and the evidence of that friend is to a very large extent inalmissible. However, the agreement is in writing and no evidence would be admissible to explain or add to or vary the terms of that writing.

[10] The learned Judge was of opinion that there was no force in the appellant's defence because she had failed to show that she was a person who held this tenancy under the system commonly known as "thika" "thika Masik Utbandi", "thika Masik" "thika bastu" or under any other like system.

[11] Learned counsel for the appellant has contended that it is sufficient that her tenancy is described as a thika tenancy in the agreement. But it appears to me that not all thika tenants come within this Ordinance because a thika tenant as the term is used in the Ordinance means any person, who under one of a number of systems holds land under another person, whether under a written lease or otherwise and is, or but for a special contract would be, liable to pay rent at a monthly or any other periodical rate for that land to such other person. There is no evidence in this case at all that the tenancy held by the appellant was one under any of these systems. The necessity for such evidence has been stressed in two recent cases of this Court, namely, the cases of Murari Mohan v. Prokash Chandra, 59 O.W.N. 640: (A. I. B. (87) 1950 Cal. 280 and Haran Chandra Dey v. Sm. Charu Bala Dassi, 59 O. W. N. 553 : (84 O. L. J 92).

[12] In Murari Mohan Mukherjee's case, 53 C. W. N. 640: (A. I. R. (37) 1930 Cal. 230) P. B. Mukherji J. held that a tenant holding over after the expiry of a lease cannot be treated as holding the land within the meaning of the expression "under any other like system" in S. 2 (5), Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, 1949, or S. 2 of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Ordinance, 1948. He further held that a tenant under the said section can only be called a thika tenant when it is one under any particular system as mentioned therein or under a similar system. It is a matter of proof and evidence in every case and it is essential for the tenant to establish it by evidence, the onus of proving this being upon him.

[13] In Haran Chandra Dey's case (53 C.W.N. 553: 84 C. L. J. 92) Banerjee J. held that where any particulars of a tenancy or of any system under which the tenancy is held are not known and it is not proved that the structures or any of them standing on the land are erected by the tenant, it cannot be said that the tenant is a "thika tenant" within the meaning of the Thika Tenancy Ordinance.

[14] Both these cases make it clear that the person seeking the protection of the Ordinance must show that his tenancy is under one of these various systems. There is no evidence at all as to whether this tenancy is covered by any of these systems and therefore, I think, Banerjee J. was right in holding that the Ordinance gave no protection to the appellant.

[15] Further it is clear that the appellant had not erected any structure on the land as a thika tenant.

[16] What had occurred was that the appellant or her husband whilst lessees had erected structures. In the deed of surrender the materials of these structures were actually purchased by the landlord respondent and there is nothing to suggest that after this deed of surrender any further erections were made by the appellant in her capacity as a tenant under the agreement. As pointed out by Banerjee J. in the case to which I have just made reference in order to be a thika tenant it must be established amongst other facts that the tenant has made certain erections upon the land which he had held as a thika tenancy under one of the systems. That factor is entirely absent in this case, and I do not think that the fact that the tenant had erected a structures on the land whilst a lessee, brings the case within the Ordinance particularly when the landlord has actually agreed to purchase the materials of such structure.

[17] It appears to me that what the parties contemplated in this case was an ordinary monthly tenancy. After the Bengali words the words "monthly tenancy" were written in English presumably to make the position per. fectly clear. A monthly tenant is not necessarily a thika tenant and I think that the learned Judge was right in holding that on materials before him he was compelled to hold that the appellant was a monthly tenant only and was not a thika tenant within the Ordinance. That being so, the appellant had no defence whatsoever to the respondent's application and the order of Banerjee J. cannot possibly be assailed.

[18] In the result, therefore, this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The stay order is vacated. The attorneys for the respondent will be entitled to appropriate the sum of Rs. 600 deposited with them under orders of the Court or such portion of that sum as is required to satisfy this decree for costs.

[19] Chatterjee J. — I agree.

Bengal Village Self-Government (Amendment) Act (X [10] of 1947), S. 9 (b) _ Meeting of elected members to elect new President-Person to preside at such meeting-Bengal Village Self-Government Act (V [5] of 1919), S. 101, Rules under Rr, 30-32.

Section 9 (b) which provides for the holding of a meeting of elected members of the Union Board, after removal of the nominated members, for election of new President is silent as to who is to preside at such meeting. As the situation has, however, considerable affinity with the circumstances provided for in Rr. 30-32 framed under Act V [5] of 1919, the presiding over at such meeting by the Circle Officer will not be [Paras 4 and 5] an irregularity.

Bholanath Roy and Sushil Kumar Banerjeefor Appellant.

Dr. Sen Gupta and Jani Alam-for Respondent. Judgment .- The defendant is the appellant. He was elected President of the Moregran Union Board under the provisions of S. 9 of Act X [10] of 1947 which amended the Bengal Village Self-Government Act, 1919. plaintiff's grievance is that the meeting at which the defendant was elected was presided over by a Circle Officer and not, as he contends should have been the case, by some member of the Board who was not a candidate for election. I understand the question is almost academical now because the term of the Board has expired. The plaintiff who was the previous President obtained an injunction against the defendant and the result is that he has been acting all slong as the President because according to the rules he continues until a new President is elected. However, the parties insist on fighting the matter out and I proceed to give my decision. [2] Briefly, the effect of the amending Act of 1947 was to remove all nominated members from Union Board and to provide that the truncated Board, as left, would be deemed to be the Board as from the original date of election and that they should meet and elect a new President. Unfortunately, 8. 9 (b) of the Act which provides for the holding of a meeting to elect the President is silent on the question as to who was to preside.

[3] The Rules framed under the Act provide two procedures for two different cases, the substantial difference between the two being that under one the Circle Officer is to preside and under the other, a member of the Board who is not a candidate for election as President is to preside. The Circle Officer is to preside under the provisions of R. 31 when a new election is held and after the names of the elected candidates have been published. It is to be noted that the President of the previous Board is to continue as President until the new President is elected by the new Board. In other words, although there is an existing President, he is not to preside at meetings for election of the new President. The Circle Officer is to preside. The other procedure is to provide for the case where there is no President where there is a vacancy by the death, removal etc., of a President. There the salient fact is that there is no President at all for the Board, the Vice-President acting for him. In those circumstances, R. 37 provides that Rr. 80-32 shall be followed substantially but the person to preside at the meeting for election of the new President is to be a member of the Board who is not a candidate for election. In both procedures, the meeting for the election is convened by the Circle Officer.

(4) Then we have 8. 9 of the new Act. In cl. (b) it copies to a large extent the wording of the rules, in particular, R. 37. The meeting for election of the President is to be convened by the Circle Officer, the President is to be convened by the Circle Officer, the President of the original Board is to remain President until a new President is elected. Nothing whatever is said as to who is to preside at the meeting for election of the new President. The battle between the two sides is as to what is the correct view. The correct view in the first place is that the Legislature should have specifically stated who was to preside. The circumstances do not tally strictly with either of the situations provided for in the rules and referred to above. Strictly speaking, there is not a newly elected Board though there is a sort of reconstituted Board with the nominated members removed, a re-constructed Board to elect the new President, but there is an existing President. In that sense, the situation has considerable affinity with the circumstances provided for in Rr. 30-32 for a new election which provide for the Circle Officer to preside at the meeting for election of the new President.

[5] On the other side, it is urged that it is really a case for vacancy in presidentship and therefore the provisions of S. 37 would apply. But there is to my mind, difficulty in that S. 37 clearly contemplates a state where thereis no existing President. Ordinarily, the President will preside at all meetings of the Board but where the question of election of a new President is concerned, some special provision is to be expected. It seems to me that on the law and the rules as they stand, it is very difficult to say that any irregularity was committed, no matter which system was followed. There is a definite ambiguity in the provisions of the Act. Having regard to the provisions of 8, 17C of the Act, it seems to me that the Court had no power whatever to interfere with the election that had taken place. In fact, it will be tragic if Courts do interfere in this almost casual way with such elections.

- [6] The result is that I allow the appeal. The judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court are set aside and those of the Court of first instance are restored. The appellant in this Court will have his costs throughout.
- [7] Leave to appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent has been asked for and is. refused.

under S. 3, when can be made.

The foundation for attracting the provisions contained in S. 3, is the earlier application under S. 2 of the Act. An application under S. 2 may be preferred after the passing of the preliminary decree. It is incontestable accordingly that the procedure laid down under S. 8 may be initiated after an application is made under S. 2 of the Act. The passing of a preliminary decree will not be a bar to S. 8 being attracted. The election by the defendant afforded under S. 3 need not be exercised immediately after an application under S. 2 is made and before the order for sale.

— for Respondents.

Judgment. — This appeal is on behalf of the defendants and arises out of a suit for partition of a tank.

- [2] The plaintiffs' case is that there were other lands near about the tank belonging to the parties, there had been a previous partition of those other lands, but the tank was left Ejmali. The plaintiffs claim two-third share and defendant 1 one-third share in the disputed tank.
- [3] The defence was that the watery portion of the tank could not be partitioned. Some of the other contentions raised in the plaint which are not material for the present appeal were also contested.
- [4] The learned Munsif held in favour of the plaintiffs and came to the conclusion that it was not possible to possess the tank in two separate portions. The only way of partitioning the tank was by selling it under the provisions of the Partition Act. The Court further directed that if the parties failed to settle the price of the tank amicably among themselves, a Commissioner would be appointed on the plaintiffs' petition for holding a bid amongst the parties after a valuation was fixed by the Court. The tank would then be sold amongst the parties to the suit and the sale proceeds would be divided amongst them according to their respective shares.
- [5] After the passing of this preliminary decree, the defendants filed a petition under S. 3, Partition Act on 28th september 1945, for leave to purchase the share of the plaintiffs who had asked for the sale of the tank under S. 2, Partition Act. The learned Munsif, by his order dated 30th November 1945, allowed the defendants' prayer under S. 3 (1), Partition Act. The Commissioner was thereupon directed to ascertain the value of the two-third share belonging to the plaintiffs.
- the Court of the District Judge and the only question agitated was whether the application under s. 3, Partition Act, as made by the defendants, was maintainable in law and also whether the direction given by the learned Munsif for the sale of the two-third share belonging to the plaintiffs was according to law. The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the defendants' application under s. 3, Partition Act, was not maintainable after the passing of the preliminary decree. The application was accordingly rejected.

[7] The defendants have preferred the present appeal before this Court and the only question in issue is as to the scope of S. 3, Partition Act, and the point of time when the defendants must make the application under that section.

[8] There is prima facie a broad distinction between the provisions contained in S. 2 and S. 3 read with 8. 6, Partition Act, forming practically one group and S. 4 of the same Act on the other. Section 4 applies to the case of a dwelling house, a share of which has been transferred to a stranger and there are certain conditions which must be fulfilled before S. 4 comes into operation. As explained in the case of Kshirode Chunder v. Saroda Prosad, 12 C. L. J. 525: (7 I. C. 436), the claim must relate to a dwelling house of an undivided family; secondly, some share in it must have been transferred to a stranger; and thirdly, that stranger must have sued for partition. If reference is made to the provisions contained in Ss. 2 and 3 of the Act, it will appear that one of the parties to the dispute may or may not be a stranger to the family. Even if the subject of the dispute is a dwelling house, unless there be a stranger, S. 4 will not be attracted. Section 3 contemplates a request by a party with certain qualifications for the sale of the entire property, in suit. It is significant that this section favours the smaller share-holder at the expense of the larger and the fact of a person owning a larger share is a disability under the section, since such a person is precluded from offering to buy up the interest of the party owning the smaller share.

[9] It has been repeatedly held that the application by a party to attract the provisions contained in S. 4 of the Act may be made at any stage of the proceedings. As explained in the case ot Kshirode Chunder v. Saroda Prosad, 12 C. L. J. 525 : (7 I. C. 436), the section does not provide that the application contemplated by it should be made before the passing of the preliminary decree; on the other had, it is obvious that the application cannot be made till the rights of the parties have been determined by the preliminay decree. The question whether a particular property alleged to be joint really possesses that character must be determined before the preliminary decree is made and all questions involving the title of the parties and their right to any relief within the issues are judicial in character. They must be determined by the Court and such determination is to be made ordinarily by the Court and incorporated in the preliminary decree before any partition can be made or directed. An application under S. 4 cannot therefore, be properly made before it has been declared by the preliminary decree that the plaintiff who is not a member of the family has acquired a valid title to a share thereof and is entitled to claim partition. This view has been accepted by this Court in the case of Hiramoni v. Radha Churn, 5 O. W. N. 128, and also by other Courts, Kadir v. Abdul Rahiman, 24 Mad. 639; Abdus Samad v. Abdul Razzak, 21 ALL. 403 and Bai Hirakors v. Trikamlas, 32 Bom. 103: (10 Bom. L. R. 23).

[10] An application under S. 2 of the Act can also be made after the passing of the preliminary decree. A Division Bench of this Court had held to the effect in the case of Hiramoni v. Radha Churn, 5 C. W. N. 129. It was held that the passing of a preliminary decree would not bar an application being made under S. 2 of the Act.

[11] Section 3 of the Act, in so far as it is relevant for the present appeal, is in the following terms:

"It in any case, in which the Court is requested under the last foregoing section to direct a sale, any other share-holder applies for leave to buy at a valuation the share or shares of the party or parties asking for sale, the Court shall order a valuation of the share or shares in such manner as it may think fit and offer to sale the same to such share-holder at the price so ascertained and make all necessary and proper directions in that behalf."

[12] The foundation for attracting the provisions contained in S. 3, therefore, is the earlier application under S. 2 of the Act. As already pointed out, an application under S. 2 of the Act may be preferred after the passing of the preliminary decree. It is incontestable accordingly that the procedure laid down under S. 3 may be initiated after an application is made under S. 2 of the Act. The passing of a preliminary decree will not be a bar to S. 3 being attracted.

[13] Mr. Sarkar, appearing on behalf of the respondents, however, points out that even if this principle be accepted, the election by the defendant afforded under S. 3 of the Act must be exercised immediately after an application under S. 2 of the Act is made and before the order for sale. It is contended that as the plaintiffs had, before the passing of the preliminary decree, suggested the sale of the entire property, the tank, and on such suggestion the Court had passed an order for the sale of the property, it was not competent for the defendants to make an application under S. 3 of the Act after the preliminary decree had been passed. There is no direct authority of this Court on this point. Reference may, however, be made to the case of Subbamma v. Veerayya, 61 M. L. J. 552: (A.I.B. (19) 1932 Med. 15), where the Malras High Court observed that as this section favoured the smaller share holder at the expense of the larger and as under 8. 8 of the Act, the plaintiff, although the owner of the larger share, is not entitled to get the property, the Court, should, wherever possible, strive to avoid this result. I do not see any expression used in S. 3, justifying the interpretation put by the Madras High Court on this section. It is not for the Court to enter into a discussion as to the reasonableness or otherwise of a clear and direct provision made, by which one particular party is given an advantage over the other. As indicated in the different cases, while interpreting S. 4 of the Act, the provisions of the Partition Act are to be liberally interpreted so as to apply those provisions to cases which come within the purview of those provisions. There is no reason why a similar interpretation should not be put on the provisions contained in S. 3 of the Act. I do not see any reason why before the sale actually takes place, it will not be open to the defendant to exercise the option which is given to him under S. 3 of the Act.

[14] In the case now before me, the plaintiffs had suggested that as they were not in a position to use beneficially the water of the tank, they would rather have the entire tank sold and such a direction was given. If after the expression of such a desire by the plaintiffs, and the preliminary decree is passed by the Court, the defendants make an application under s. 3 (1) of the Act, it is not only competent for the Court but the section makes it incumbent on the Court to issue the necessary orders, provided the conditions mentioned in that section are satisfied.

[15] Reference may in this connection be made to a decision of this Court in the case of Atual Chandra v. Bhusan Chandra, 41 O. L. J. 47 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 1190), where it was pointed out that S. 2 provides that whenever it appears to the Court that a division cannot reasonably or conveniently be made, the Court, if it thinks fit, on the request of any such shareholder, provided such share-holder is the owner of one moiety or upwards share, may direct the sale of the property. If such a request is made under S. 2, any other co-sharer may apply for leave to buy at a valuation the share of the party asking for sale. There is no restrictive clause in S. 3 limiting the point of time when this application must be made.

[16] The difficulty of accepting the contention raised on behalf of the plaintiffs may be further explained if we take an extreme case. The plaintiff in a particular case may contest the title of the defendants or some of them. Until the question of title is decided in the preliminary decree, there can be no question of the defendant exercising the opportunity given to him under 8. 3 of the Act in spite of the fact that in the plaint the plaintiff had suggested the gale of the entire property as it was incapable of being used in separate shares by the parties.

[17] This appeal is accordingly allowed; the judgment and decree passed by the lower appellate Court are set aside and the direction given by the learned Munsif by his order dated 30th November 1945, is restored.

[18] Each party, in the circumstances of this case, will bear the costs of this Court.

Appeal by executor-Court-lee.

An award of compensation in respect of debottar land was made in favour of K as representing the deity in his capacity as executor of the person who created the debotter. In apportionment proceedings the whole compensation was awarded to one L in his character as shebait. K appealed against this decision paying a fixed court-fee:

Held, that the court-fee payable on the appeal was ad valorem on the amount determined under S. 8 and not a fixed fee. If the appellant K was purely an executor with no personal interest in the money, the difference in the amount awarded so far as he was concerned, namely, nil and the amount claimed so far as he was concerned would also appear to be nil. But if it could be shown that he had some personal interest in the matter in any way, it might be that some value should be placed on that and that he should pay court-fee accordingly. The estimated value to the executor of the order-he sought to obtain, whatever that might be, could not be the full amount of the compensation awarded for the property: 39 Cal. 906, Rel. on; A I.R. Order. - This is a reference under S. 5, Court-fees Act, arising out of an appeal against an order in land acquisition proceedings. The property acquired was debottar property. The Collector awarded compensation of Rs. 32,175-9 in favour of the appellant Krishna Chandra Das as representing the deity in his capacity as executor to the estate of Madhusudan Das. There were three apportionment cases before the Special Land Acquisition Judge of Alipur. They were tried together and the learned Judge has directed that the entire compensation should be awarded to Lakhinarain Das representing the deity in his character as shebait. Against this Krishna Chandra Das has preferred an appeal paying the court-fee stamp of Rs. 15 on the ground that the subject.matter of the appeal cannot be possibly estimated at a money value. The stamp reporter has objected to this and has claimed an ad valorem court-fee of Rg. 1590 on the amount of compensation awarded by the Collector.

[2] The cases Trinayani Dassi v. Krishnalal De, 17 C. W. N 933: (39 Cal. 903) and Rash Berari V. Gosto Behari, 33 C. W. N. 110. (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 243) deal with a somewhat similar question to that arising in the present case. Sir George Rankin in the case of In re Ananda Lal Chakravarty, 35 C. W. N. 1103: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 346) has discussed the nature of the provisions of S. 8, Court-fees Act. The decision in the case appears to me to be quite simple. Krishna Chandra Das was awarded the money by the Collector as executor and in this appeal he claims the money as executor to the will of Mudhusudan Das who created the debottar. As executor he will have to deal with the property in the terms of the will. In passing I may say that I find it a little difficult to understand. why in a matter under the Land Acquisition Act the question of the rights of person claiming as shebaits against the executor had to be decided, neither side disputing that the property acquired was debottar. Further, it is not easy to understand why the amount of compensation is proposed to be paid in cash either to the executor or to the persons now found to be the shebaits and why the cash was not invested under S. 32, Land Acquisition Act. However that may be, so far as the appeal here is concerned, the matter is clearly to be governed by S. 8, Court-fees Act which, as pointed out by Sir George Rankin, is not itself a charging section but assumes that the fee payable in respect of any appeal relating to an award of compensation will be ad valorem and lays down the method by which the valuation is to be made on which the fee is to be calculated. It is for the party, in the first place, to say, in my opinion, what that value is and the Registrar may investigate as far as he thinks necessary. If Krishna Chandra Das is purely an executor, with no personal interest in the money, the difference in the amount awarded so far as he is concerned, namely, nil and the amount claimed so far as he is concerned would appear to be also nil. If it can be shown that he has some personal interest in the matter in any way, it may be that some value should be placed on that and that he should pay court-fee accordingly. This view, although it may not appear so at first sight, is, I think, entirely consistent with the view taken in the case in Trinayani Dassi

v. Krishnalal De, 17 C. W. N. 933: (39 Cal. 906) where the facts indeed are somewhat similar. The appellant there was an executrix to her husband's will. The money had been invested under S. 32, Land Acquisition Act, as a result of an objection by the grandsons of her husband who claimed to be shebaits. According to the will, the lady and Lal Gopal Da, the father of the opposite parties, had been appointed to be shebaits. The lady apparently objected to the order of investment and appealed claiming that the amount should be paid wholly to her. The difficulty in appreciating the exact decision in the case, I think, arises from the fact that preci. sely what was the lady's case is a little obscure-The learned Judges themselves, in fact, it seems to me, really decided her appeal for her on the matter of the application as to the court-fee payable, because they pointed out that as executrix she was in no better position than as a shebait and that she would not be able to dispose of the property other than as under the will and that hence obviously the order for investment was really a proper one. I note that after the decision of the court-fee matter the court-fees were, in fact, not paid. However that may be, the learned Judge pointed out that the fee payable was governed by S. S and not by Scb. 2, Art. 17, cl. 6. They remarked:

"In the present case, even supposing that the exact estimate cannot be given, it is, in our opinion, certainly possible to state approximately the money value of the relief claimed ...'

The learned Judges expressed no opinion as to what the value should be and the case, though relied on by the stamp reporter, is really no authority for a contention that in the present case court-fee on the full amount Rs. 32,175-9, ad valorem must be paid.

[3] The case of Rash Behari v. Gosto Behari, 89 O. W. N. 110: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 243) is of no real assistance here. There the appeal was by the reversioners against an order of payment of compensation to a purchaser from a Hindu widow. In order to protect their interest they wanted an order under S. 32, Land Acquisition Act, for investment of the money. They were not claiming any amount to be paid to them. The case was held to come not under S. 8 but Sch. 2, Arts. 7 (iii), Court-fees Act.

[4] My decision therefore is that the fee payable is ad valorem on the amount determined under S. S. Court-fees Act, in the manner I have indicated. The estimated amount of the value to the executor Krishna Chandra Das of the order he seeks to obtain, whatever that may be, cannot be the full amount of the compensation awarded for the property.

A. K. Basu, Bireswar Chatterji, B. K. Ghose, Dhiren Chakraverti and Gouri Prasad Mukherji -for Appellant. Walter Dutt and Abani Chatterji-for the State.

Das Gupta J .- The appellant was convicted by the First Special Tribunal, Calcutta, of an offence under S. 120B read with S. 161, Penal Code, and for several offences under S. 161 of the Code. He was sentenced to diffe. rent periods of imprisonment for each of these offences and also to fines, in default of payment of which, he was directed to undergo further periods of imprisonment.

[2] The prosecution case was that the appellant entered a conspiracy with one Sripati Mukherji to commit offences under S. 161, Penal Code by accepting illegal gratification from Sripati as a motive or reward for issuing contracts in favour of the Dalia Tailoring Company of which Sripati Mukherji was a contractor, and that in pursuance of the same, different sums of money, as mentioned in specific charges, were actually received by the appellant from Sripati Mukherji as illegal gratification. It is said that on paper, these payments were shown as having been made to one R. K. Roy as commission on profits, though in reality, these payments were for the appellant and were received by him.

[3] The defence was a denial of any agree. ment to receive illegal gratification and a denial that any such gratification was received.

[4] The success of the prosecution depended entirely on proving that the payments which on paper were shown to have been made to R. K. Roy were really made to the appellant. The only evidence on the record to prove this is the evidence of Sripati. It is contended on behalf of the appellant, however, that Sripati's evidence must be excluded from consideration as he did not get an opportunity of completing the cross-examination of Sripati.

- [5] It is necessary to decide first whether this contention should prevail. Sripati's examination-in-chief was concluded on 11th March 1948. There is a note on the record that on that date cross-examination was reserved. Charges were framed against him on 26th May 1948. The witness was recalled, and further examined in chief on 9th July 1948. Thereafter his cross examination commenced on 9th July 1948, but before the cross-examination could be concluded, Sripati ceased to be available for cross-examination.
- [6] The only way in which the evidence already recorded could be used as evidence in this case was by the application of the provisions of S. 33, Evidence Act. The first requirement for the application of those provisions is that the prosecution must prove that Sripati was dead, or could not be found, or is incapable of giving evidence, or is kept out of the way by the adverse party, or if his presence cannot be obtained without an amount of delay or expense which, under the circumstances of the case, the Court considers unreasonable. It is not the prosecution case that Sripati was dead, or that he could not be found, or he was kept away by the accused. It is said, however that Sripati was seriously ill, and so incapable of giving evidence; that further he was not likely to recover soon, so that his presence could not be secured without undue delay.
- [7] The strange thing, however, is that the prosecution did not make the slightest attempt to prove these allegations. Though the Tribunal asked two doctors to examine Sripsti and a report was received from these doctors, neither of the doctors gave evidence in the case, Two medical certificates from two other doctors were also put into Court by the Public Prosecutor. Neither of these doctors were, however, examined. The Public Prosecutor from his position in the Bar made statements that the witness was seriously ill and was not likely to recover soon. He was, however, also not examined. There is, in fact, not one single line in evidence in support of the story of Sripati's illness.
- [8] The Tribunal appears to have relied on the fact that the learned defence counsel in the Court below did not contest the story of Sripati's illness. The law, however, makes no provision for an admission by counsel in a criminal case. No admission by counsel can relieve the prosecution of the duty of satisfying the Court by proper evidence, that Sripati was really seriously ill. Vide the decisions in the case of Ganeshdas Nimani in Ori. Appeal

No. 70 of 1949, D/- 21-8-1249 and in the case of the Attorney General of New South Wales v. Henry Louis Bertrand, (1867) 36 L. J. P. C. 51: (L. R 1. P. C. 520).

- [9] I find that the prosecution has not proved that Sripati was ill, and that no case has been made out for the application of s. 33, Evidence Act.
- [10] I may also point out in this case that the second requirement of the proviso to the section which requires that an adverse party has had the right and opportunity to cross examine the witness has also not been fulfilled. After charge had been framed, the accused had certainly the right to cross-examine the witness. He had partial opportunity to exercise the right, but not full opportunity as the witness ceased to be available before cross-examination could be concluded.

[11] In my opinion, what this proviso requires is that the accused must have a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness.

[12] Before charge was framed, the accused had certainly the opportunity to cross-examine the witness; but at that stage, he had no right to cross-examine the witness. The reasons for the conclusion that the accused in a warrant case has no right to cross-examine the witness before charge is framed within the meaning of 8. 93, Evidence Act, were fully discussed in Appeal No. 236 of 1949, and need not be repeated here.

[18] My conclusion, therefore, is that Sripati's evidence, as recorded is not admissible under s. 33, Evidence Act, and must be excluded from consideration. On such exclusion, the position is that there is no evidence on the record at all to show either that there was an agreement between the appellant and Sripati that the appellant would receive illegal gratifications, or that, in fact, any illegal gratification was ever received by the appellant. The prosecution, has, therefore, failed in my opinion, to prove the guilt of the accused of any of the offences with which he was charged.

[14] I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the order of conviction and sentence passed by the Tribunal, and order that the accused : be acquitted of all the charges, and discharged from his bail bond.

Before it can be said that any Magistrate has taken cognizance of any offence under S. 190 (1) (a), he must not only have applied his mind to the contents of the petition, but he must have done so for the purpose of preceeding in a particular way as indicated in the subsequent provisions of the Chapter. When the Magistrate applies his mind not for the purpose of proceeding under the subsequent sections of the Chapter, but for taking action of some other kind, e. g., ordering investigation under S. 156 (3), or issuing a search warrant for the purpose of the investigation, he cannot be said to have taken cognizance of the offence.

Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherjee and Arun Kumar

Dutt No. II-for Opposite Party.

Das Gupta J. — On and February 1948, a petition of complaint was filed before the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta by one Haridas Mukherjee. On that petition of complaint, the learned Magistrate passed the following order:

"To D. C. D. D., for enquiry and report. It it is found that the Bank has ceased functioning, the enquiring officer to selze the books at once on the strength of a search warrant I should issue on his application. If the Bank is functioning he should apply to me for instructions. To 13/2."

On 9th February 1948, a report was received that the Bank had ceased functioning. On 10th February 1948, the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate ordered issue of a search warrant. A report from the police was received on 23rd March 1948. On 14th June 1948, the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate passed the following order:

"Heard learned Pleader. Let D. C. D. D., take cognizance of this case at once, and selze the books of this Bank that are necessary."

Thereafter a challan was sent up by the police under S. 408, Penal Code, against Abani Kumar Banerjee, On 7th February 1949, the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate recorded the receipt of the challan under S. 408, Penal Code, and then transferred the case to Mr. C. C. Chakravartti for disposal.

- [2] This learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate had acted illegally and that the accused Abani Kumar Banerjee was before him on the basis of illegal arrest, and accordingly order. ed him to be set at liberty; and be fixed a date for the examination of the complainant, apparently under S. 200, Criminal P. C.
- [3] It is against this order of the learned Presidency Magistrate Mr. C. C. Chakravarti, that the present Rule is directed.
- [4] The real question for decision is whether the learned Magistrate is right in his view that when a petition of a complaint was filed before the Chief Magistrate, he was bound to take cognizance under 8. 190 (1) (a), Criminal P. C. If he was so bound, he was certainly bound also to examine the complainant under 8, 200, Criminal P. C., and thereafter proceed in the ways indicated in subsequent Ss. 202, 203 and 204 of the Code. If, however, he was not so bound, the action of the learned Obief Presidency Magistrate in sending the case to the police without himself examining the complainant under S. 200, Oriminal P. C., cannot be said to be illegal as be would be entitled to order investigation by the police, under S. 166 (3), Criminal P. O.
- [5] Sen J. in the case of Samaddar v. Sures Chandra 53 O. W. N. 270 : (A. I. R. (96) 1949 Cal. 197) and in some other cases has taken the view that a Magistrate duly empowered to take cognizance is bound to take cognizance of the petition of complaint as soon as it is filed before him. The contrary view has been taken by several Division Benches of this Court of which mention need be made only of two recent decisions, viz., decision of Roxburgh and Chakravartti JJ. in Robinul Hossain v. K. K. Ram. 82 C. L. J. 222 and the decision of Harries C. J. and Das J. in Pulin Behari Ghosh v. King. 53 C. W. N. 659. In these cases, the view has been clearly expressed that when a petition of complaint is filed before a Magistrate the Magisrate may take cognizance under S. 190 (1) (a), Oriminal P. C. and proceed to examine the complaint under S. 200, and thereafter proceed according to the subsequent sections of the Code, or in the alternative, may not take cognizance and may instead send it to the police for investigation under the provisions of S. 156 (8), Oriminal P. C. I feel bound to follow these decisions.
- [6] Mr. Mukherjee has, however, tried to convince us that the view taken in these decisions mentioned above is wrong, and that we should refer the matter to the Full Bench.

[7] I have for myself no hesitation in feeling that there is nothing which would justify our referring the matter to the Full Bench. As I read S. 190, Criminal P. C., and the subsequent sections, it seems to me to be clear that a Magistrate is not bound to take cognizance of an offence, merely because a petition of complaint is filed before him. Mr. Mukherji's argument is that a Magistrate cannot possibly take any action with regard to a petition of complaint, without applying his mind to it, and taking cognizance of the offence mentioned in the complaint necessarily takes place, when the Magistrate's mind is applied to the petition. Consequently, Mr. Mukherji argues, whenever a Magistrate takes the action, say, of issuing search warrant, or asking the police to enquire and to investigate, he has taken cognizance of the case. In my judgment, this is putting a wrong connotation on the words "taking cognizance". What is "taking cognizance" has not been defined in the Criminal Procedure Code, and I have no desire now to attempt to define it. It seems to me clear, however, that before it can be said that any Magistrate has taken cognizance of any offence under 3. 190 (1) (a), Criminal P. C., he must not only have applied his mind to the contents of the petition, but he must have done so for the purpose of proceeding in a particular way as indicated in the subsequent provisions of this Chapter, - proceeding under S. 200, and thereafter sending it for enquiry and report under S. 202. When the Magistrate applies his mind not for the purpose of proceeding under the subsequent sections of this Chapter, but for taking action of some other kind, e. g., ordering investigation under S. 156 (3), or issuing a search warrant for the purpose of the investigation, he cannot be said to have taken cognizance of the offence. My conclusion, therefore, is that the learned Magistrate is wrong in thinking that the Chief Presidency Magistrate was bound to take cognizance of the case as soon as the petition of complaint was filed.

(8) Mr. Mukherjee wanted to draw our attention to the evidence of some of the witness examined before Mr. Chakravarti to show that really there was something suspicious about the whole complaint. In my judgment, it is not necessary or proper for us to go into the matter at this stage. The learned Magistrate has, in my opinion, clearly committed an error in law in treating the proceedings after the filing of the petition on 2nd February, 1948, up to 7th February 1949, as invalid, and in deciding to start proceedings anew.

(9) I would, therefore, make this Rule absolute, set aside the learned Magistrate's order directing the accused to be set at liberty, and direct that the Court should proceed with the trial of the case on the basis that the proceedings up to the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate on 7th February, 1949, ordering transfer of the case to Mr. C. C. Chakravarti are valid.

[10] We understand that the Magistrate, Mr. C. C. Chakravarti, has since been transferred. This would necessitate that the case should be tried either by the Chief Presidency Magistrate or by such other Presidency Magistrate to whom he may think fit to transfer the case.

(a) Debts laws — Bengal Money-lenders Act (X [10] of 1940), S. 36 (2) (c) — Partial restoration.

The provisions of S. 36 (2) show beyond all doubt that there was the clearest intention that partial restoration could be claimed and given. [Para 4]

It cannot be said that the whole provisions for partial restoration are nullified. The Legislature clearly has made a mistake in the provisions it has made in clause (e) in providing that the judgment-debtor is to get credit only for the value of the property restored to him and again returned to the decree-holder. It is not possible to give any other interpretation to the section than in accordance with this manifest error, but the Courts then must estimate in the best way they can what figure is to be given as the amount for which the judgment-debtor has to be credited. Judgment. — This is an appeal against a decree of the District Judge of Murshidabad decreeing a suit under S. 36 (1), Bengal Money. Lenders Act which was dismissed by the trial Court. The original decree was passed in Mortgage Suit No. 6 of 1938 of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad, final decree being passed on 23rd August 1938. The properties were sold on 15th March 1939, for Bs. 1000 only. The decree-holder was the purchaser and he took delivery of possession. There were three properties sold. There was a personal decree for the balance, Bs. 2832 odd, on 19th June.

[2] The lower appellate Court has reopened the decree and passed a decree for Rs. 2,478 plus all costs giving ten instalments from March 1946 to March 1955.

[3] Of the three properties purchased some portion is in the actual possession of the decreeholder and forms the subject matter of the prayer for restoration in the suit under S 36. As regards the rest, there were claim cases which the decreeholder lost. In one case a cosharer succeeded on an allegation that the particular property claimed fell within his allotment. As regards the other claim case the claimant was a purchaser from the mortgagor after the mortgage. The decreeholder has brought a suit to establish his rights in respect of this portion.

[4] The main point argued before me is that as the jadgment debtors' claim is for partial restoration of the property purchased and as partial restoration cannot be given, therefore the application should have been rejected. For this proposition reliance is placed on the decision in the case of Ahammad Mea v. Gunu Mia, 51 C. W. N. 922: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 105). That was a case relating to the provisions of S. 36A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, and the decision is to the effect the whole tenor of the provisions of that section shows that the intention is that the judgment debtor can only claim transfer to himself of the whole property sold. In my opinion, the decision is of no assistance as regards the present case. In fact, the provisions of S. 36 (2), Bengal Money-Lenders Act, show, in my opinion, beyond all doubt that there was the clearest intention that partial restoration could be claimed and given. The nature of the procedure provided in that section is quite different from that provided in the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act. In broad outline the provision is that the judgment debtor may have the decree against him reopened and a new decree made in accordance with the provisions of the Act and where property has been sold the Court "shall order the restoration to the judgment-debtor of such property, if any, of the judgment debtor acquired by the decree holder in consequence of the execution of the reopened decree as may be in the possession of the decree-holder on the date on which the decree was respende." (The italies are mine.)

The judgment-debtor is to be directed then to pay the new decretal amount in such number of instalments as the Court thinks fit and if he fails to pay any instalment, then the property restored to him is to be again returned to the decree holder and the judgment debtor is to be liable for the whole decretal amount less credit for the value of the property purchased by the decree-holder. Here, however, the Legislature appears to have fallen into error and made a somewhat absurd provision. It is necessary to quote the whole of sub.cl. (e):

"If in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-s. (1) the Court reogens a decree, the Court shall direct that, in default of the payment of any instalment ordered under cl. (1) the decree-holder shall be put into possession of the property referred to in cl. (c) and that the amount for which the decree-holder purchased such property in execution of the respende decree shall be set off against so much of the amount of the new decree as remains unsatisfied".

Obviously, when the operations mentioned in cl. (e) are performed, then the new position is that there is a new decree for a lesser amount; the decree holder has all the property he originally purchased in execution of the old decree (less, of course, any properties which he may have disposed of). Clearly the judgment debtor in that position ought to be given credit as against the new decree for the full value of the properties sold at the original sale, that is to say, for the full amount paid for all the properties sold at the original sale. There is no rhyme or reason or sense in providing that in that position the judgment-debtor should receive credit against the new decree for only the value of "such property" as is "referred to in cl. (c)", that is to say,

"such property, if any, of the judgment-debtor acquired by the decree holder in consequence of the execution as the reopened decree as may be in the possesion of the decree-holder on the date on which the decree was reopened".

In other words, there is no rhyme or reason why the judgment debtor in the final position should get credit against the new decree only for the value of the propperty which happened to be in the possession of the decree holder at the date of the reopening of the decree and of which restoration was given to the judgment. debtor subject to his paying the instalments and which on his failure to pay the instalments has been returned to the decree holder. In the final position the decree holder has all the benefits of the original purchase in execution of the original decree and in that position clearly in all common sense the judgment-debtor should get credit for whatever the decree-holder paid for those properties in the original sale. However, our legislators had slipped and had used the word 'such' as underlined (here italicised) above in the quotation in ol (e) instead of the word 'the' or perhaps the words "all the".

[5] Indeed it would appear that the drafts. man bad his attention so focussed on the point that he was providing for partial restoration of whatever property of the judgment-debtor might still remain with the decree-holder, that when he came to the final provisions about re restoration he provided, quite wrongly, for only a partial credit to the judgment debtor, although the decree-holder by that stage of the proceedings had received the full benefit of his original purchase.

[6] It is then sought to argue, taking advantage of the manifest error in the provision made in cl. (e), that where only partial restoration is possible because the decree-holder has already parted with some of the properties by the time the decree is re-opened, since there is difficulty in saying what is the amount for which the decree-holder purchased any portion of the properties sold in one lot, therefore the whole provisions for partial restoration are nullified. I am not prepared to accept this argument which really is one of redentir ad absurb. The Legislature clearly has made a mistake in the provision it has made in cl. (e) in providing that the judgment-debtor is to get credit only for the value of the property restored to him and again returned to the decreeholder. It is not possible to give any other interpretation to the section than in accordance with the manifest error but the Courts then must estimate in the best way they can what figure is to be given as the amount for which the judgment-debtor has to be credited. The learned District Judge has given the full credit of the purchase price of Rs. 1000. In the present case I estimate the value to be given under the terms of cl. (e) as best as I can at half this amount, B . 500.

[7] There is no provision in the decree of the lower appellate Court for an application by the decree holder for a personal decree under O. 34, B. 6. The decree must be amended to make provision for such an application to be made in the event that there is a failure in payment of the instalments and the property is again returned to the decree-holder.

[8] Lastly, I am asked to add as part of the conditions of the payment of instalments a condition that the judgment-debtor will pay the rents and cesses in due time and will file the chalans and dakhilas at least within 3 days of the last date of payment in each case, failure to comply with this condition to be a breach of justifying an order of return to the decree-holder of the property now directed to be restored to the judgment-debtor. This is a reasonable condition in the circumstances and the decree will be amended to provide such a condition.

[9] I make no order as to costs.

[10] Leave to appeal under ol. (15), Letters Patent is asked for and is refused.

Order .- This revision case at the instance of the tenant defendant arises out of an application under S. 18 read with S. 12 (1) (b), West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948, hereinafter called the Act of 1948 rescinding a decree for ejectment and recovery of arrears of rent from July 1945 to-May 1946. The decree was passed by the trial Court on 17th March 1948 and an appeal against it was dismissed on 22nd November The Act of 1948 came into force on 1st December 1948 and the application under S. 18read with S. 12 (1) (b) was filed on 10th December 1949, the tenant being still in possession of the disputed premises. In the application it was stated that all arrears of rent up to November 1948, i.e. up to filing of the application had been paid by the tenant applicant and rescission of the ejectment decree was prayed for. The learned Munsif dismissed the petition holding that by payment contemplated under S. 12 (1) (b) of the Act of 1948, the benefit of S. 18 of the same Act is not available. Nodetailed reasons were given, but purported to rely upon a decision of Banerjea J. The decision was given in Suit No. 2020 of 47 of the Original Side of this Court and an appeal against that decision was dismissed by the Chief Justice and Sinha J. on 9th August 1949.

[2] Though the learned Munsif disposed of the matter in a somewhat summary fashion, the case has been argued before me at length and all the facts have been placed before me, It appears that the landlord filed T. S. 163/47 in the 2nd Court of the Munsif of Howrah on 25th March 1947 alleging that the tenant defendant was in arrears from July 1945 to May 1946 and praying inter alia for a decree for ejectment and for recovery of arrears of rent from July 1945 to May 1946. defence inter alia was that there was no default inasmuch as the defendant deposited the arrears in question as directed by the Rent Controller. At that time the Bengal Rent Control Ordinance which came into force on 1st October 1946 was in operation and there was a provision that if the defaulter paid up the arrears of rent within 30 days from 1st october 1946, he was not liable to ejectment. In the present case, however, the arrears were deposited on 6th December 1946 and accordingly. the deposit being beyond time, the learned Munsif held that it was of no assistance to the The suit was ultimately decreed defendant. on 17th March 1918 and as pointed out before, the decree was upheld on appeal on 22nd November 1919.

[3] On behalf of the tenant defendant Mr. Heramba Chandra Guha has contended before me that his client being still admittedly in possession of the disputed premises, she is now entitled to rescission of the decree in the ejectment suit under S. 18 of the Act of 1918 in view of the circumstances of this case. His contention is briefly that whatever might have been the grounds of overruling his client's contention about not being a defaulter in the ejectment suit which was decided when the Bangal Rent Control Ordinance, 1946, was in force, the fact remains that she had deposited according to the directions of the Rent Controller the arrears claimed in the suit before its institution and accordingly under the present law there is no reason why the previous decree should not be rescinded. He has also pointed out that his client has deposited in compliance with the order of the Rant Controller all subsequent rents not sued for. According to Mr. Guha these are distinguishing features in his case and in view of them it is stronger than the cases decided by Das J. in Civil Revn. No. 277/49 and Civil Revn. No. 587/ 49 and by Banerjea J. in Suit No. 2020/47 of the Original Side of this Court.

[4] On behalf of the landlord respondent Mr. Nirmal Chandra Chakravarti has contended: (i) No interest as required by S. 12 (1) (b) of the Act of 1918 having been paid by the tenant, she is not entitled to the benefit of S. 18. (ii) Rent not having been tendered to the landlord or remitted by postal money order to the address of the landlord, deposit of rent in the Rent Controller's office was of no assistance to the tenant in view of the Explanation to 8. 12 (1) of the Act of 1948. (iii) In any case, the present application in revision under 8. 115, Civil P. C., does not lie.

[5] So far as the third objection is concerned my view is that it cannot be upheld. Assuming that the lower Court decided wrongly by dismissing the tenant's application under S. 18 of the Act, the mistake concerns jurisdiction in the circumstances of this case and as such this Court has power to interfere.

[6] As regards the first objection, I am of opinion that there is force in it. In the ejectment suit the decree of the trial Court is dated 17th March 1948. The appeal against that decree was decided on 22nd November 1948 and the decree of the trial Court merged in that appellate decree. Before the appellate decree was passed, the alleged arrears were already the subject matter of the lower Court decree and as such interest thereon at 62 p. c. was payable in terms of S. 12 (1) (b) of the Act. No such interest was paid. I am unable to uphold Mr. Guha's contention that on the facts of this case, no interest was payable. In view of non-compliance with S. 12 (1) (b), the tenant is not entitled to have the decree in the original suit rescinded or varied.

[7] In view of the above finding, it is unnecessary for me to express my opinion regarding the second objection of Mr. Chakravarty.

[8] In the result, I decline to interfere with the order passed by the lower Court rejecting the application for rescinding or varying the decree. The Rule is discharged but in view of all the circumstances no order is made asto the costs of this Rule.

Syamacharan Mitra-for Appellant. Sitaram Banerjee and Arun Kumar Dalta

Judgment.—This appeal, on behalf of defendant 1, arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for declaration of their title to the disputed land and for recovery of vacant possession after removing a temporary shed erected by the defendant thereon. Only such facts as are relevant and necessary for deciding the limited questions raised in this appeal may be shortly stated.

- [2] Under the Maharaja of Cossimbazar Nirendra and his brothers held a jama in respect of C. S. plot No. 2122 within the Ranaghat municipality. Subsequently, Nirendra became the sole owner of the leasehold right. The plaintiff's case is that on C. S. plot No. 2122 they had erected certain thatched sheds. The principal defendant was inducted as a monthly tenant of those sheds for a fruit stall. A suit for ejectment had been filed against the defendant after due service of a notice under S. 106, T. P. Act. During the pendency of the sait however there was a fire in the bazar when this particular shed was completely burnt down. Thereafter, the defendant raised another structure on the land in spite of the protest of the plaintiffs. A prayer for injunction in the suit which was then pending was refused and thereupon the said suit was withdrawn with liberty to institute a fresh suit. Under these circumstances the present suit came to be filed. The plaintiffs allege that the original shed which had been let out to the defendant baving been destroyed by fire the contract between the parties was rendered void and the plaintiffs are entitled to re enter.
- nature. It was pleaded that the land on which the structure stood had been let out by the plaintiffs to defendant and the shop room now destroyed had been constructed by the lessee. Alternatively it was stated that if it be held that the original structures had been erected by the lessors and that which had been let out was the room only the lease had not terminated on that shed being burnt down. The plaintiffs were not accordingly entitled to re enter.
- [4] Both the Courts below have held that the erected by the lessors and what had been let out was the shop room only. That the defendant was a tenant in respect of the shop room erected by the plaintiffs is a conclusion which is a finding of fact on a consideration of the evidence in the case. This question cannot be re-agitated in this appeal.

- [5] The point which requires consideration is whether on the total destruction of the shed, which had been erected by the lessors by the fire, the tenancy had come to an end.
- [6] Clause (e) of S. 108, T. P. Act provides that:
- "It by fire, any material part of the property be wholly destroyed or rendered substantially and permanently unfit, for the purposes for which it was let, the lease shall,"

in the absence of a contract or local usage to the contrary "at the option of the lessee, be void."

- [7] It is urged on behalf of the appellant that under this clause an option is given only to the lessee to determine the lesse if the conditions stated therein are satisfied. If in spite of the structures being destroyed or rendered permanently unfit, the defendant tenant elects to continue the tenancy the lessor is not entitled to compel the defendant tenant to walk out.
- [8] It is incontestable that this clause makes no reference to the rights, if any, of the lessor if the lessee, in spite of the destruction of the premises elects to pay the rent. In Kunhzen Haji v. Mayen, 17 Mad. 98: (4 M. L. J. 21), it was held that on the destruction of the coffeeplants by fire which only had been leased out and abandoned by the tenant the lessor was not entitled to claim rent after such exercise of option by the tenant. This was a case which was covered by the provisions contained in S. 103 (e), T. P. Act.
- [9] This clause does not in terms apply to the facts of the present case where the lessee neither elected to walk out even after total destruction or is willing to suspend payment of rent and to give up possession. No contract or local usage governing the case has been attempted to be proved. On behalf of the lessor, reliance is however placed on the provisions contained in S. 56, Contract Act. The relevant portion of S. 56 is in the following terms:

"A contract to do an act which after the contract is made, becomes impossible or, by reason of some event which the promisor could not prevent, unlawful, becomes void when the act becomes impossible or unlawful."

[10] The Contract Act is complementary to the Transfer of Property Act. There is no conflict between S. 56 of the former Act and S. 108 of the latter Act on the facts of the present case. We have, therefore, to examine whether S. 56, tween the parties become, after the destruction of the shed, impossible of performance? If a specific subject-matter, assumed by the parties to exist or to continue in existence, is accidentally destroyed the promiss made in the contract is discharged. (Kunjilal v. Durgaprosad, 21 O. W. N 703: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 1021), Taylor v. Cladwell, (1863) 3 B. & S 826: (32 L. J Q. B. 161) and Howell v. Couplant, (1876) 1 Q. B. D. 258: (46 L. J. Q. B 147).

Contract Act, is attracted at all.

[12] This rule is not attracted where the parties had already contemplated and provided for the particular contingency. In the present case, destruction of the room was not even contemplated by the contracting parties.

[13] Whether the doctrine of frustration applies to leases has given rise to a sharp division of opinion in the English Courts. In Cricklewood Property and Investment Trust Ltd. v. Leighton's Investment Trust Ltd., 1945 A. C. 221: (114 L. J. K. B. 110) the Judges were sharply divided.

[14] Asquith J. who had heard the case at the first instance Leighton's Investment Trust Ltd. v. Cricklewood Property and Investment Trust Ltd., (1943) K. B. 493 at p. 495; (112 L. J. K. B. 438), thought that it could not be disputed that the doctrine of frustration had no application to an ordinary lease and relied upon Matthey v. Curling, (1922) 2 A. C. 180: (91 L. J. K. B. 593)) London and Northern States V. Schlesinger, (1916) 1 K. B. 20: (85 L. J. K. B. 869), Whitehall Court Ltd. v. Ettlinger, (1920) 1 K. B. 680: (69 L. J. K. B. 126) and Swift v. Mactean, (1942) 1 K. B. 375: (111 L. J K B. 185). On appeal this view was affirmed by Mackingon L. J. in the Court of appeal (1949) K. B. 496. On appeal before the House of Lords, the case was disposed of on a different point. As to the application of the dostrine of frustration to a lease, their Lordships expressed the view that the circumstances of that particular case did not justify such application. Lord Simon L. C. and Lord Wright opined that the doctrine of frastration could be applied to a lease and at any rate Matthey v. Curling, (1922) 2 A. C. 180: (91 C. J. K. B. 593) was no authority to the contrary. Lord Russel of Killowen and Lord Goldard took the contrary view. Lord Porter expressed no view on this point.

sideration in Denman v. Brise, (1919) 1 K. B. 22. In view of the divergent opinion, as expressed by the House of Lords in the case above mentioned, the Court preferred to follow their own earlier decisions and left it for the House of Lords at the appropriate time to resolve this problem.

[16] In Denman v. Brise, (1949) 1 K. B. 22 (Supra) we have an instance where the tenant declines to withdraw but the landlord refuses the tenant's claim; the facts are to some extent, similar to those now before me but there is at the same time a difference on a very material point. A house in the occupation of the tenant was bombed out. The tenant accordingly ceased to occupy the premises but there was no evidence of abandonment or surrender of the tenancy. The landlord erected a new structure on the site and when it became fit for occupation, the tenant approached the landlord with a view to occupy it. The tenant was, however, unable to gain possession because the landlord withheld the key. The landlord thereupon purported to determine the contractual tenancy by a notice to quit. The tenant sued for possession. As there was no evidence of abandonment or surrender of the lease before the new premises had been made fit, the tenant on such completion was entitled as such to occupy it.

(17) In this state of the law in England it is a matter for consideration whether the doctrine of frustration can be applied to a lease in India.

[18] In Inder Pershad Singh v. Campbell, 7 Cal 474: (8 C. L. R. 501), a contract had been entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant under which the plaintiff agreed to cultivate indigo for the defendant for a specified number of year in certain specific lands, with respect to the portion of which the plaintiff was a subtenant only. During the continuance of the contract, the plaintiff lost possession of those lands as his immediate landlord had failed to pay the rent due from him and had in consequence been ejected by the owner. A Division Bench of this Court held that the prayer of the plaintiff to cancel the contract so far as it related to those lands which had been taken possession of by the owner be terminated (sic?) on the ground that it had become impossible of performance through no negligence on his part.

[19] Mookerjee A O. J. affirming the decision of Rankin J., in Ezekiel Abraham v. Ramjus. roy: 33 C. L. J. 151; (A. I. R. (8) 1931 Cal. 805) has explained the circumstances and conditions under which the doctrine of frustration of adventure has become a gloss on the older theory of impossibility of performance, which has been greatly developed under the guise of reading "implied terms" into contract. The rigidity of the rule that an express unconditional contract is not generally dissolved by its performance being or becoming quite impossible in fact, by reason of particular circumstances, has been relaxed, an exception had been engrafted there.

on. Whether frustration occurs or not, depends on the nature of the contract in question and on the events which have occurred in a particular case. Tentsche Overseas Trading Co. Ltd. v. Uganda Sugar Factory Ltd., A. I. R. (32) 1945 P. C. 144: (1945) 1 M. L. J. 417.

[20] Inder Pershad Singh v. Campbell, (7 Cal. 474: 8 C. L. R. 501) (Supra) is a direct bench decision of this Court in support of the proposition that the doctrine of frustration may be applied to leases.

[21] On the finding arrived at by the Courts below that it was only the room which had been let out and that the structures had been completely destroyed the subject-matter of lease is now non-existent. The contract which had been entered into between the lessor and the lessee has now become impossible of performance through no negligence on the part of the lessor. The landlord is entitled to claim that the lease of the room had come to an end by its destruction by fire.

[22] There is one other special aspect in this case. Under the lease the tenant was entitled to occupy the shed as such. On its total destruction even if it had been held that the tenant was entitled to continue to occupy the land, if he agreed to pay the rent, no right existed under the arrangement between the parties to authorise the tenant to raise a structure of his own, thus change altogether the character and nature of the tenancy. It was the use of the room only which had been permitted on payment of rent but the tenant had no right to use it as a lease of the land only on which he may have his own structures. Allowing the tenant to raise his own structures in such circumstances will lead to various complications in future. It would further lead to an anomalous position that the defendant tenant who is paying rent for the structures on the land will pay such rent for the structures which belongs to him.

[23] This appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) (d)—Government established by law—Government of majority party—Section, if has application to present Government.

Since Independence, conditions have changed and the form of Government at the Centre and in all the Provinces is now the democratic form of Government. The party commanding the majority in the Legislature is the party in power and forms the Ministry. A Government is a Government of the majority party, but that does not make it any the less a Government by law established in British India. Whilst that party maintains a majority it remains in power and whilst it is in power it is the lawful Government of the Centre or of the Provinces. Though the Government is a Government by members of the majority party, the Government as such has its existence quite apart from the party. A criticism of the Government in power in any Province is a criticism of the Government by law established in that Province, though incidentally it may be a criticism of the policy of the majority party. The fact that the form of Government at the Centre and in the Provinces has changed does not make the Press Act inapplicable. That being so it cannot be contended that S. 4 of the Press Act can have no application to Government as constituted in the present day.

—Article, how should be read.

In considering whether the matter complained of offended against S. 4 the Court should in every case consider the writing as a whole and in a fair, free and liberal spirit, not dwelling too much upon isolated passages or upon a strong word here and there, which may be qualified by the context but endeavouring to gather the general effect which the whole composition would have on the minds of the public. [Para 16]

Per Banerjee J .- It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to how an article should be read, but there is no doubt that it must be read by the Court carefully, liberally and not with a view to find fault with it. The Court must read the article as a whole, giving due weight to every part. The Court must make due allowance for all kinds of ornamental phrases or fine words or figure of speech which sometimes are permitted and which nobody seriously takes into consideration. And after making all due allowances, the Court must find out the true sense of the article. The first thing the Court has to do is not to take the words in vacuo, so to speak, and attribute to them what is called their natural or ordinary meaning. The method of construing the words is to read them as a whole and ask oneself the question : "In this context, relating to this subject-matter, what is the true meaning of the words? " If reading the article in that way, the Court thinks that it was intended to be a criticism of the policy or the administration of the Government, with a view to obtain its change or reform, the article is safe. But if, on the other hand, the Court comes to the conclusion that the article was really meant to be an attack on the Government beyond the permitted limits of criticism, the article comes within the mischief of the Act, and then no argument can be heard on the basis that the Act does not exist or what the Act should [Para 73] have been.

Though the object of the critic may be merely to obtain the alteration of the measures criticised by lawfullmeans, nevertheless, the matter may come within the mischief of the section if the criticism excites or attempts to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the Government. It was a matter of considerable difficulty to apply this section to criticism of measures of Government before India obtained Independence. But since Independence and the adoption of a democratic form of Government it is practically impossible to place a construction on S. 4 of the Press Act which will not stiffe a good deal of legitimate criticism of Government. The right to criticise is inherent in a democracy. The opposition are entitled, and indeed it is their duty in proper cases, to expose the misdeeds or acts or omission of the Government in power and this they are entitled to do with a view to winning over the electorate so that the Government in power will be thrown out and the opposition placed in power after securing a majority in an election. However, if the words in S. 4 of the Press Act are strictly applied then newspapers supporting the opposition to the Government in power are muzzled and can indulge in nothing but very mild criticism. Further, opposition newspapers might find it difficult to publish facts concerning the Government which were true because the publication of such facts might well tend to bring the Government into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against such Government.

Harries C. J .- This is a petition filed by one Benoy Kumar Chattopadhyaya praying that an order of Provincial Government No. 235 Pr. dated 24th March 1949, forfeiting a sum of Bs. 1000 deposited by the petitioner under the provisions of the Indian Press (Emergency Powers) Act, 1931, (Act XXIII [23] of 1931) be set aside.

[2] The petitioner was the publisher and printer of a bi-weekly Bengali newspaper called the "Saptaha". On 23rd December 1918, the petitioner deposited Rs. 1,000 as security as required by S. 8 of the Act. On 27th January 1949 the petitioner ceased to be the publisher and printer of the newspaper which apparently became defunct. He thereupon applied to the Presidency Magistrate for refund of the deposit which he had made. The Presidency Magistrate ordered an enquiry under S. 18 of the Act. On 24th Merch 1949, apparently before the result of the enquiry of the Presidency Magistrate had been communicated to the petitioner, the Provincial Government made an order under S. S forfeiting the security and served it on the petitioner. The petitioner thereupon filed this petition praying that the sum so deposited should be refunded to him and in accordance with the provisions of the Press Act this petition has been heard by a Bench of of three Judges.

[3] In the order dated 24th March 1949 forfeiting this security the Provincial Government alleged that the petitioner had in the issue of the paper dated 6th January 1949, published matter containing words which in the opinion of the Provincial Government were of the nature described in S. 4 (1) (d), Press Act, that is, words which tended to bring into hatred and contempt the Government established by law in the different provinces of India and to excite disaffection towards the said Government.

(4) In the notice is set out the matter said to be objectionable. It will be convenient at this stage to set out the portions of the publications to which the Government took objection:

"It is reported that R. S. S. prisoners are treated as first class prisoners. While there is this indulgent treatment on the part of the Congress Government towards the R. S. S. workers there is well-planned and ruthless oppression perpetrated by the same Government on the political prisoners . . . Under the regime of the Congress Government as many as 11 political prisoners have died in the course of the last eight months in the jail in Madras, Bombay, the U. P. and Assam . . . Among these martyrs who have died as a result of the oppresgions of the Congress Government the names of Bharadwaj, Kulakarni, Mayarath and Shankaran may be mentioned. It is reported that as a result of long detention in a solitary cell in the Hazaribagh jail Jalo Chowdbury former President of the Bibar Provincial Trade Union Congress and Federation of the workers of the Giridi State Railway went off his head. The plan of oppressions committed on the political prisoners within the jail is almost the same in all the provinces. It is like this classification of political prisoners as Class B convicts, keeping them together with ordinary convicts, refusal to give them facilities of reading and writing, pushing prisoners who are ill towards death without treatment, making no arrangement for giving allowance to their families etc. Besides these, lathi charges were also made. The benign Government are careful to see that the wives and sons of the prisoners may not get any employment for earning their livelihood On 8th December a lathi charge was made on the political prisioners in Vizagapattam Jail. No arrangement was made for the medical treatment of the prisoners who were wounded. In this Jail 140 communist prisoners are detained in a place which can accommodate only 50 prisoners. One can therefore easily understand what the situation is there 400 political prisoners are suffering great hardships. They have not been given blankets in winter. They do not get articles which they are entitled to get under the Jail Code. If they want these articles, it is reported that they are threatened and even assaulted It has been decided by the Congress Ministry in Madras that no arrangement for the treatment of men detained without trial would be made when they are ill except at their own expense.

From the time of the historic fast of Jatin Das in 1929 anti-Imperialist agitation has demanded the abolition of classification of political prisoners. Now after capturing power the Congress Government are rejecting this demand strong protests are being made in the jails against these oppressions. In different jails political prisoners are on hunger-strike and are carrying on their resistance to the oppressions of the Government when Moni Mohan Burman, a tramway worker who was arrested at night on 23rd December informed the men at Tollygunge Thana that his wife was lying seriously ill in Calcutta Homeopathic Hospital. The thana officers rang up the hospital authorities and came to know that Moni Mohan's wife had died. But they told Moni Mohan that his wife was slightly better. In Pauna Jail Ramavatar Sastri and Jwala Prasad resorted to hunger strike as a protest against mismanagement and persecution. Both of them were suffering from tuberculosis from a long time. It is reported that they were severely assaulted in their present state of health. This desperate attack has been made by the Government which is run in the interest of the bourgeoisie in the face of a crisis. As the crisis will thicken intensity of the attack will increase. It will not be wrong to think that this intense attack is only a manifestation of the increasing power of the masses against the bourgeoisie Government and against reactionary forces."

[5] It will be seen that in this article the writer criticises the Congress Government of the various Provinces in India for their treatment of political prisoners. The writer first points out that R. S. S. prisoners were being treated as first class prisoners and in an indulgent manner but what the writer describes as political priscners were dealt with in a very different manner. It is then pointed out that in course of the last eight months 11 political prisoners had actually died in jails in Madras, Bombay, U. P. and Assam and four of these prisoners alleged to have died are mentioned by name. It is also pointed out that a prisoner in the Hazaribagh Jail was driven mad as a result of long detention in a solitary cell. The writer then states what he describes as the plan of oppressions is the same in all the provinces. Political prisoners are treated as Class III convicts and are not separated from ordinary convicts. They are given no facilities for reading and writing. Prisoners who are ill are left without treatment and their deaths are thereby hastened. Complaint was made that no arrangements are made for giving allowances to the families of these political prisoners who are subjected to lathi charges. The writer then adds that the Government deliberately takes steps to make it impossible for the wives and sons of such prisoners to obtain employment and thus to maintain themselves.

charge was made on the prisoners in Vizagapattam Jail which resulted in a number being wounded. Nevertheless it is said that no arrangement whatsoever was made for the medical treatment of the prisoners so wounded. It is then complained that a large number of communist prisoners are herded together in a scommodation fit for only a third of them and in the cold whether they are given no blankets. If the prisoners complain it is said that they are threatened and even assaulted. It is then alleged that the Congress Government in Madras had actually decided that medical treatment should not be given to political prisoners who were ill except at their own expense.

there had been an agitation for the abolition of the classification of political prisoners, but now that the Congress Government were in power they had rejected this demand for differentiating between political and other prisoners. Examples are then given of what is alleged to be callous treatment of political prisoners, namely, the treatment of Moni Mohan Burman at the Tollygunge Thanz and the treatment of two political prisoners said to be suffering from tuberculosis at the Patna Jail.

(8) The contention of the Provincial Government was that this article was objectionable as it tended directly or indirectly to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in India or to excite disaffection towards the said Government.

[9] Power is given by S. 4, Press Act, to declare a security forfeited in certain cases. That section in so far as it is material is in these terms:

"(1) Whenever it appears to the provincial Government that any printing press in respect of which any security has been ordered to be deposited under S. 3 is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper, book or other document containing any words, signs or visible representations which tend, directly or indirectly.

(d) to bring into hatred or contempt His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India or the administration of justice in British India or any class or section of his Majesty's subjects in British India or to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the said Government.

the Provincial Government may, by notice in writing to the keeper of such printing press, stating or describing the words, signs or visible representations which in its opinion are of the nature described above:

(i) where security has been deposited, declare such security or any portion thereof, to be forfeited to His Majesty.... and may also declare all copies of such newspaper, book or other document wherever found. in British India to be forfeited to His Majesty....

Explanation 2.— Comments expressing disapprobation of the measures of the Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection shall not be deemed to be of the nature described in cl. (d) of this sub-section.

(2) After the expiry of ten days from the date of the Issue of a notice under sub s. (1) declaring a security, or any portion thereof, to be forfeited, the declaration made in respect of such press under S. 4, Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867, shall be deemed to be annulled."

[10] On behalf of the petitioner it has been contended that there was nothing in the article complained of which tended directly or indirectly to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in India or to excite disaffection towards such Government. Counsel on behalf of the petitioner urged that the article complained of was really a criticism of the Congress Party and not of the Government established by law in British India. Counsel contended that since India attained Independence the phrase "Government established by law in British India" was not appropriate to describe the Party Governments in power. He urged that criticism of a Party Government was nothing more than criticism of the Party namely, the Congress Party and we were asked to hold that the Government established by law in India was something different from the Congress Government now in power in the various provinces in India and in the Centre.

[11] There can be no doubt that when the Press Ast was passed in 1931, the Government established by law in British India was not a Party Government, The form of Government was bureaucratio and the executive were not in any manner responsible to the legislature. A proposal of Government could be defeated in the legislature never theless it could be enforced. An election which might. result in the defeat of the party supporting: Government in the Legislature had no real effect on the Government as the executive, as I have said, were not responsible to the Legislature.

changed and the form of the Government at the Centre and in all the provinces is now the democratic form of Government. The party commanding the majority in the Legislature is the party in power and forms the Ministry. A Government is a Government of the majority party, but that does not make it any the less a Government by law established in British India. Whilst that party maintains a majority it remains in power and whilst it is in power it is the lawful Government of the Centre or of the Provinces.

[13] Though the Government is a Government by members of the majority party, the Government as such has its existence quite apart from the party. In my view a criticism of the Government in power in any province is a criticism of the Government by law established in that province, though incidentally it may be a criticism of the policy of the majority party, It appears to me that the fact that the form of Government at the Centre and in the provinces has changed does not make this statute inapplicable. That being so, there is in my view no force in the contention of the petitioner that S. 4, Press Act, can have no application to Government as constituted in the present day.

[14] It was then contended that in considering whether the matter complained of offended against S. 4, Press Act, the article should be considered as a whole and that it should not be held to offend against that section merely because a sentence or sentences taken by themselves might offend against the provisions of that section.

[15] It appears to me that this contention is well-founded. A sentence taken out of its context might well be offensive, but when read in its context its meaning may be very different.

considered by a Special Bench of the Lahore High Court in Harkishan Singh v Emperor, A.I.R (33) 1946 Lab. 22: (47 Cr. L. J. 345 S.B.). At Page 24 Mahajan J. dealing with this contention observed:

"In my view if the leastet is considered as a whole, the effect of the language used in it does not tend, directly or indirectly, to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. It is a well-recognised principle that the Court should in every case consider the writing as a whole and in a fair, free and liberal spirit, not dwelling too much upon isolated passages or upon a strong word here and there, which may be qualified by the context but endeavouring to gather the general effect which the whole composition would have on the minds of the public."

[17] With respect I entirely agree with that view and I shall examine the writing said to offend against S. 4 of the Act in the light of those observations.

[18] There can be no doubt that the writer of this article intended severely to criticise the Congress Government in the various provinces and the article does charge these Governments with callous and indeed inhuman conduct. To say of the Government that it deliberately by its acts hastened the death of prisoners by refusing to give them medical treatment when they were ill is charging the Government with conduct almost inhuman. Suggestions of this nature are made on a number of occasions in the article. It is said, for example, that no arrangements were made for the medical treatment of prisoners wounded as the result of a lathi charge in Vizagapatam Jail and further that it was the deliberate policy of the Congress Government in Madras that no arrangements were to be made for the treatment of political prisoners detained without trial who were ill, except at their own expense. These two allegations are made in addition to the general allegation made against all Congress Governments that political prisoners were herded with ordinary convicts and refused all facilities for realing and writing and "pushed towards death" without treatment if they were ill.

[19] It is also suggested in this article that the Provincial Governments are guilty of another form of most callous and inhuman conduct, namely, taking steps to see that the relatives of prisoners are not given employment and thus allowed to starve. It was suggested that in the original Bengali this sentence really meant that the Provincial Governments saw to it that the relatives of political prisoners could obtain no Government employment. But it is clear that the words in the original meant that the Government took steps to see that the relatives of political prisoners should not get employment anywhere. It is difficult to ascribe a more callous conduct on the part of any Government.

[20] Mr. Sadhan Gupta on behalf of the petitioner however contended that if the article was taken as a whole it amounted to nothing more than a criticism of the policy of Government and that it did not tend directly or indirectly to bring into hatred and contempt Provincial Governments or to excite disaffection towards them. He urged that the case was governed by Expln. 2 to S. 4, Press Act. This article, he said, merely amounted to comment expressing disapprobation of the measures of Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means. Such comments do not bring the matter within cl. (d) of sub-s. (1) of S. 4 provided that the comments do not excite or attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the Government. It is clear therefore that though the object of the critic may be merely to obtain the alteration of the measures criticised by lawful means, nevertheless the matter may come within the mischief of the section if the criticism excites or attempts to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the Government.

[21] It was a matter of considerable difficulty to apply this section to criticism of measures of Government before India obtained Independence But it appears to me that since Independence and the adoption of a democratic form of Government it is practically impossible to place a construction on S. 4, Press Act, which will not stifle a good deal of legitimate criticism of Government. The right to criticise is inherent in a democracy. The opposition are entitled, and indeed it is their duty in proper cases, to expose the misdeeds or acts or omission of the Government in power and this they are entitled to do with a view to winning over the electorate so that the Government in power will be thrown out and the opposition placed in power after securing a majority in an election. However, if the words in S. 4. Press Act, are strictly applied then newspapers supporting the opposition to the Government in power are muzzled and can indulge in nothing but very mild criticism. Further, opposition newspapers might find it difficult to publish facts concerning the Government which were true because the publication of such facts might well tend to bring the Government into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against and Government or to excite disaffection against such Government.

[22] In England the writing of defamatory words may amount to a criminal offence if the words written are not only defamatory but might lead to a breach of the peace. Of criminal libel it has been said that "the greater the truth the greater the libel" and there is much force in this old observation. Uttering the truth may very often tend to a breach of the peace. The truer a statement is the more likely it is to excite and annoy the persons affected by such statement. Hence the old phrase "the greater the truth the greater the libel." Similarly the truer the criticism of the acts of Government, the greater is the likelibood frequently of exciting batred and contempt of Government or disaffection towards such Government. Assume a Provincial Government is guilty of some bungling or some act showing gross inefficiency in administration. Inefficiency tends to excite the contempt of efficient citizens and a criticism published in an opposition newspaper of this inefficiency of Government might well tend to excite the contempt of a very large number of citizens of that province.

[23] Assume a Provincial Government to be guilty of something worse than inefficiency, namely, nepotism or dishonesty or corruption. Such a Government would lay itself open to criticism and indeed very severe criticism would be justifiable. Nevertheless, such criticism might bring the writer within the mischief of S. 4, Press Act, because exposing Government and showing to his readers that the Government was guilty of a serious act of nepotism or an act amounting to corruption would inevitably excite the readers to hold the Government in contempt and would excite hatred and disaffection towards the Government. The truer the charge made against a Government the surer it would be to excite hatred and contempt and disaffection. If there was any doubt about the truth of a charge made against Government cautious readers might withhold their judgment, but if there was no dispute and no doubt as to the truth of the allegation made then it would inevitably excite hatred and contempt in the minds of all decentminded and honest people.

[24] That truth is wholly immaterial in considering what effect an article may have upon the minds of its readers was considered by a Special Bench of the Bombay High Court in the case of In re Pothan Joseph, 56 Bom. 172: (A.I.B. (19) 1932 Bom. 463: 33 Or.L.J. 749 (S.B.)). In that case the Bench had to consider not only S. 4, Press Act, but certain Ordinances. At p. 486 Beaumont C. J. who delivered the judgment of the Bench observed:

"The question which we have to ask ourselves is, whether articles of that nature tend to bring Government into hatred and contempt. We have no evidence as to whether the facts asserted in the articles, on which the charges, or some of the charges, are based, are true or false, and the Advocate-General has argued the case on the basis that truth is immaterial. We think in that contention he is right. There is no exception in S. 4, Press Act as amended by the Ordinance, making truth and public good an answer to a charge under the section, as in the case of exception (1) to S. 499, Penal Code, dealing with defamation. This Court is not concerned to consider the wisdom, or lack of wisdom, of a policy of suppressing criticism upon unlawful or injudicious acts of Government. We have merely to apply the law as we find it. The effect of the Ordinance seems to us to bring within S. 4, Press Act, every charge of misconduct by Government, whether such charge is well-founded or not."

[25] These observations it appears to me apply with equal force to S. 4. Press Act, and that being so, it appears to be quite immaterial whether what is stated in an article is true or not provided that the tendency of the article is to excite hatred and contempt of Government or disaffection towards Government.

[26] Further, the purpose of writing the article is also immaterial. The article may have been written to expose an inefficient, dishonest or corrupt Government with a view to the electorate throwing out such Government at the next election. But Expl. 2 to sub-s. (1) of S. 4 of the Act makes it clear that such words may well be within the mischief of the Act, though written with a perfectly innocent and lawful intention, if they have the effect of exciting the readers to hate the Government or to hold it in contempt. That being so it is in my judgment very difficult to place any construction upon these words in S. 4, Press Act, which will permit the opposition party and the newspapers supporting the opposition party to function as they are expected to function in a democracy.

[27] Attempts have been made in the past to place a construction upon these words contained in S. 4 (1) (d), Press Act. The matter was considered at length by a Special Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Mrs. Annie Besant v. Emperor, 89 Mad. 1085: (A.I.R. (5) 1918 Mad. 1210: 18 Cr. L. J. 157 S B.), in which the Bench held that "hatred" and "contempt" towards "the Government" occurring in S. 4, Press Act, may be created by articles "imputing to the Government base, dishonourable, corrupt or malicious motives in the discharge of its duties."

ment of hostility or indifference to the welfare of the people." The Bench however held that the operative or enacting portion of s. 4 (1) (d) did make the intention or motive of the writer of the articles complained of material in considering whether the words were not of the nature described in s. 4 (1). Explanation 2 thereto required that the writer must intend to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection if his writings are to be brought within cl. (d), the intention being deducible mainly from the words used.

[28] Personally, I am doubtful that the necessity of an intention to excite hatred or contempt can be inferred from Expln. 2. It seems to methat Expln. 2 makes the object of the article immaterial if the article does tend to bring the Government into hatred, contempt or disaffection. Ayling J. in his judgment in the Madras case which I have mentioned accepted the view of Strachey J. in the case of Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 Bom. 112 as to the meaning of the phrases "to bring into hatred or contempt" and "to excite disaffection." In that case Strachey J. was considering S. 124A, Penal Code, which was suspectible of an interpretation much more favourable to an accused person than Expln. 2 to S. 4 (1), Press Act. Dealing with the matter Strachey J. observed:

"A man may criticise or comment upon any measure or act of the Government, whether legislative or executive, and freely express his opinion upon it. He may discuss the Income-tax Act, the Epidemic Diseases Act, or any military expedition, or the suppression of plague or famine, or the administration of justice. He may express the strongest condemnation of such measures, and he may do so severely, and even unreasonably, perversely and unfairly. So long as he confines himself to that, he will be protected by the explanation. But if he goes beyond that, and, whether in the course of comments upon measures or not, holds up the Government itself to the hatred or contempt of his readers, as for instance, by attributing to it every sort of evil and misfortune suffered by the people, or dwelling adversely on its foreign origin and character, or imputing to it base motives, or accusing it of hostility or indifference to the welfare of the people, then he is guilty under the section, and the explanation will not save him."

[29] From this observation it will appear that it was the view of Strachey J. that whilst the measures of Government may be severely criticised, nothing can be said which holds up the Government to hatred and contempt. However, in many cases, it is quite impossible to criticise the measures of Government without criticising the Government itself. As I have already stated, the Government may be guilty of acts of nepotism, dishonesty or corruption. How can such acts be criticised without criticising the Government itself and the inevitable result of the criticism would be to excite hatred or contempt towards the Government concerned.

[30] The Federal Court in the case of Neharendu Dutt v. Emperor, A. I. B. (29) 1942 F. C. 22: (43 Cr. L. J. 504), considered S. 124A, Penal Code where words somewhat similar to S. 4 (1) (d), Press Act appear. Sir Maurice Gwyer in his judgment observed:

"Sedition is not made an offence in order to minister to the wounded vanity of Governments, but because where Government and the law ceased to be obeyed because no respect is felt any longer for them only anarchy can follow. Public disorder, or the reasonable anticipation, or likelihood of public disorder, is thus the gist of the offence. The acts or words complained of must either incite to disorder, or must be such as to satisfy reasonable men that that is their intention or tendency."

[31] In the case of Harkishan Singh v. Emperor, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Lah. 22: (47 Cr. L. J. 345 S. B.), the Special Bench came to the conclusion that S. 4 (1) (d), Press (Emergency Powers) Act, was substantially in the same terms as S. 124A, Penal Code, and dealt with the offence of sedition as described in S. 124A, Penal Code. That being so, public disorder or the reasonable anticipation or likelihood of public disorder was the gist of the offence and the acts or words complained of, to come within S. 4 (1) (d), must either incite to disorder or must be such as to satisfy reasonable men that that is their intention or tendency. This would be a workable rule now that India is a democracy. Unfortunately, however, the view expressed by Sir Maurice Gwyer as to the meaning of "sedition" in the case of Niharendu Dutt v. Emperor, A. I. B. (29) 1942 F. C. 22: (43 Cr. L. J. 504) has been expressly dissented from by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Emperor V. Sadashiv Narayan, 49 Bom. L. R. 526 : 74 I. A. 89 : (A. I. R. (84) 1947 P. C. 82 : 48 Cr. L. J. 791). That being so, the case of Harkishan Singh v. Emperor: A. I. R. (83) 1946 Lah. 22: (47 Cr. L. J. 345 S. B.) can no longer be regarded as good law and affords no workable rule of construing this section.

[32] In the present case, however, I do not find any great difficulty in applying S. 4 (1) (d), Press Act. Though the article complained of was intended as a criticism of the Provincial Governments it does in my view exceed the bounds of fair and legitimate criticism and does tend to excite hatred and contempt and disaffection towards Government and I have little doubt that it was written with that intention. To say of a Provincial Government that it did not afford to detained political prisoners sufficient amenities would I think be quite legitimate criticism. But far more is alleged against the Governments of the Provinces in this article. As I have pointed out previously, the writer charges them with conduct which I can only describe as wicked, callous and inhuman.

ALC: THE RESERVE

According to the writer they deliberately allow detained political prisoners, who are ill, to remain without treatment and thus hasten their death and deliberately withhold medical treatment from such political prisoners if they are injured by any aggressive action on the part of the prison or police authorities. If these allegations are true, they would disclose a most scandalous state of affairs and if they are not true then they amount to a wicked and malicious libel on the Provincial Governments. As I have said previously, it matters not whether the allegations are true or not and it appears to me that, whether true or not, they do tend to excite hatred and contempt towards the lawfully established Governments in the provinces. What can a decent-minded honest citizen think of a Government that would mete out such treatment to prisoners of any kind and particularly to prisoners who have been detained without trial and without being found guilty of any criminal offence? The effect of such an article would inevitably be contempt and hatred towards the Government.

charged with not only ill-treating and allowing political prisoners to die, but also with causing hardship and even starvation to the relatives of such prisoners. If this allegation is true then no article would be sufficiently strong to condemn the action of such a Government. But if the allegation is untrue then it is a wicked and damnable libel. Whether the allegation be true or false I cannot imagine that it can have any other effect than to excite in the minds of decent-minded citizens contempt and hatred for the Government concerned.

[34] That being so, I am of opinion that the words complained of do fall within the provisions of S. 4 (1) (d), Press Act and therefore the order forfeiting the deposit could rightly be made.

[86] Mr. Gupta then argued that this article constituted an attack not on the Government as by law established in Bengal but upon other Provincial Governments in particular, Madras, Bihar, U. P., and Assam. He contended that the article should be considered in the light of the surrounding circumstances and that we should hold that in the particular circumstances the article was not likely to excite the Government of Bengal to the hatred and contempt of Bengalees. He relied on the case of S. N. S. Mudaliar v. Secy. of State, 10 Rang. 165: (A. I. B (19) 1982 Rang. 69 S. B.). In that case a Tamil newspaper of small circulation contained an exhortation to its Tamil readers in Rangoon to free India from an alien Raj with the "Sword of Ahimsa" and by a campaign of passive resistance. A special Bench held that in deciding whether the words complained of fall within S. 4 (1), Press (Emergency Powers) Act the Court must have regard to the surrounding circumstances: the context in which the words appear: the persons to whom the words were addressed: the political atmosphere in which the words were delivered: and the place where they were published. The Bench further held that in the circumstances obtaining in the case, although the words complained of were clearly seditious, they did not fall within 8. 4 (1), Press Act. Page C. J. who delivered the leading judgment laid great stress on the fact that these words were contained in a Tamil newspaper with a very small circulation amongst Tamil readers in Rangoon. In his view the words, though seditious, were not likely in those circumstances to excite hatred and contempt towards the Government of India in the minds of the citizens of Rangoon and Burma.

that the article applies not only to Provincial Governments of other provinces but to Provincial Governments generally and one example of callous treatment of a detained person is said to have taken place in the Tollygunge Thana in Calcutta. It seems to me that this article was addressed to persons opposed not only to the Congress Government in Bengal but to Congress Governments generally, and the facts differ very materially from those in the Bangoon Case. This article would, to my mind, inevitably bring the Congress Governments generally into contempt in the minds of its Bengalee readers.

[37] Mr. Gupta then argued that no forfeiture could be made in this case as there had been no forfeiture within three months of the date of the declaration mentioned in sub s. (1) of S. 7 this being a declaration under S. 5, Press and Registration of Books Act, 1867. Mr. Gupta contended that the declaration was made on 23rd December 1948 and the order forfeiting deposit was not made until 24th March 1949, that is, one day beyond the three months. The original declaration was however produced before us which shows that this declaration was not made until 4th or 6th January 1949. It was actually signed on 4th January but the petitioner was not identified until 6th January and the declaration bears the signature of the Presidency Magistrate dated 6th January 1949. It is immaterial whether the declaration was made on 4th or 6th January because the order for forfeiture was made with.

in three months of that date and therefore the provisions of S. 7 sub-s. (2) of the Act do not apply and the publisher was not entitled to a refund.

[38] Lastly Mr. Gupta argued that no order for forfeiture could be made because at the time the order was actually made the petitioner had ceased to be the publisher and printer of the paper. He has relied upon the words of S. 8 (1) which gives the Provincial Government power to declare a security forfeited. The Provincial Government must give notice in writing of such intention to forfeit to the publisher of the newspaper. Mr. Gupta's argument was that at the date when the notice was served his client had ceased to be the publisher. In my view s. s (1) requires the Provincial Government to serve notice of that intention to forfeit the deposit not on the publisher of the paper at the time when the notice is served, but on the person who was the publisher at the time the offending article was written. If this were not so, it would be possible for a publisher to avoid forfeiture of a deposit by ceasing to publish immediately after writing a most scathing, unjust and seditious article. It seems to me that the publisher cannot avoid the forfeiture of his deposit by ceasing to publish after the offending article was written and before notice of the intention to forfeit the deposit was served on him. That being so, there is no force in Mr. Gupta's last contention.

[39] For these reasons I hold that the deposit in this case was rightly forfeited and the petition must therefore be dismissed. In the circumstances I would make no order as to costs.

[40] Chatterjee J.—It is difficult to reconcile S. 4, Indian Press (Emergency Powers) Act, with the working of responsible Government in free and democratic India. That section authorises a Provincial Government to forfeit the security of a Press when

"it appears to that Government that it is used for the purpose of printing or publishing any newspaper containing any words which tend to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in India or to excite dissatisfaction towards the said Government."

[41] If we adopt the judgment of Strachey J. in Queen Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak, 22 Bom. 112 at P. 135, as a guide on the interpretation of this Press Act, we have got to hold that any article or writing which excites or attempts to excite in others certain bad feelings towards the Government, comes within the mischief of the Press Act. The intention of the writer is immaterial, as also the truth of the allegations. Strachey J. said:

"The offence consists in exciting or attempting to excite in others certain bad feelings towards the Government. It is not the exciting or attempting to excite mutiny or rebellion, or any sort of actual disturbance, great or small. Whether any disturbance or outbreak was caused by these articles is absolutely immaterial. If the accused intended by the article to excite rebellion or disturbance, his act would doubtless fall within S. 124A, and would probably fall within other sections of the Penal Code. But even if he neither excited nor intended to excite any rebellion or outbreak or forcible resistance to the authority of the Government, still if he tried to excite feelings of enmity to the Government, that is sufficient to make him guilty under the section."

[42] The learned Judge was there discussing the law of sedition as codified in S. 124A, Penal Code, which then stood as follows:

"Whoever by words either spoken or intended to be read, or by signs, or by visible representation, or otherwise, excites or attempts to excite feelings of disaffection to the Government established by law in British India, shall be punished with transportation for life or for any term to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, to which fine may be added, or with fine."

[43] Therefore, the charge of Strachey J. was confined to disaffection under the old S. 124A.

[44] In 1898 as the result of the great Tilak case the present S. 124A was substituted for the old section which was in the above terms. In the present section the words "hatred or contempt" were introduced, and the word "sedition" was inserted in the marginal note. In Niharendu Dutt Majumdar's case, 1942 F.C.R. 38: (A I.R. (29) 1942 F. C. 22: 43 Or. L. J. 504), the Federal Court held that the gist of the offence of sedition is the promotion of public disorder or the reasonable anticipation or likelihood that public disorder will be promoted. The acts or words'complained of must either incite to disorder or must be such as to satisfy a reasonable man that that is their intention or tendency. But the Judicial Committee in King Emperor v. Sadashiv Narayan Bhalerao, 74 I. A. 89: (A. I. B. (31) 1947 P. C. 82 : 48 Cr. L. J. 791) held that the decision in Niharendu Dutt Majumdar's case: (A. I. R. (29) 1912 F. C. 22: 48 Cr. L. J. 504) by the Federal Court proceeded on a wrong construction of S. 124A, Penal Code, and of R. 34 (6) (e), Defence of India Rules and was inconsistent with the ratio decidendi of the Tilak case, and pointed out that there was no material distinction between R. 34 (6) (e), Defence of India Rules and S. 124A, Penal Code. The Judicial Committee has settled the law and it is not an essential ingredient of the offence that the words or acts complained of must either incite to disorder or must be such as to satisfy reasonable men that that is their tendency or intention.

[45] If we have to put the same interpretation on S. 4 (1) (d), Press Act, then the freedom of the Press in India will be gravely imperilled, if not rendered illusory. It is not very easy to draw the line between permissible criticism and publication which travels beyond the limits set by the law. The publication in any newspaper of any words which tend directly or indirectly to bring into hatred or contempt any of the Provincial or State Governments or to excite disaffection towards the said Government is punishable under that section.

[46] If the words of the Press Act are to be taken literally, opposition newspapers would come within the mischief of that section almost every day. The attention of the Legislature should be drawn to the incompatibility of the Press Act with the present democratic constitution in India. The Press has the right to discuss any grievances and it is the right and duty of the Opposition Press to do its best to overthrow the party in power by all constitutional means. Commenting on the doctrine that it is a crime" if a publication be calculated to alienate the affections of the people by bringing the Government into disesteem", Dr. Odgers said:

"If this is to be taken literally, all opposition newspapers commit such crime every day. Such a doctrine, if strictly enforced, would destroy all liberty of the press, and is moreover in conflict with more recent dicta: "The people have a right to discuss any grievance that they may have to complain of." It is clearly legitimate and constitutional to endeavour, by means of arguments addressed to the people to replace one set of ministers by another. And the precise object of such arguments is to bring the ministers now in office into disesteem, and to alienate from them the affection of the people." ("Libel and Slander", 6th Edn. p. 420).

[47] It is true that a particular political party commands the majority in every Legis. . lature in the provinces as well as at the Centre and thus it formed the ministries functioning in the country. But another party may get into power and office in a particular province in the future. Supposing that Ministry formed by that party is extremely inefficient or connives at corruption, and the Press which reflects the opposition states that the Ministry is inefficient or abets corruption and wants its immediate removal, it would be publishing matters which would tend to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law and would excite disaffection towards that Government. To have an Act on the Statute book which penalises such publication would make the working of responsible Government or any democratic con. stitution in India fraught with the gravest peril. It is no use referring to Explan. 2 to S. 4, Press Act, which runs as follows:

"Comments expressing disapprobation of the measures of the Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means without exciting or attempting to excite haired, contempt or disaffection shall not be deemed to be of the nature described in cl. (d) of this sub-section."

[48] That means the Press can criticise or comment but there must be no attempt to excite hatred or contempt or disaffection.

[49] The Indian Press Act might be made compatible with a bureaucratic or alien Government which was in existence in the old regime when the Government was not removable and was not responsible to the Legislature. But when a democratic form of Government is introduced, "Government" cannot be rigid and immutable. Responsible Government means party Government and the Government by one party may be replaced by a Government manned by another party:

"Government by free political parties is merely another name for democratic Government. Nowhere has there ever been a free Government without political parties." ("The Government of the United States," by Munro, 5th Edn. p. 113).

It is not merely the right but the duty of the opposition party to try to dislodge the party in power or the party Government in office from the affection or esteem of the people. To authorise the forfeiture of the security of a Press because its writings would excite or tend to excite hatred or contempt or disaffection towards a particular party which happens to be the dominant party in the State for the time being may tend to paralyse the Press in a democratic country and may lead to the abolition of open and public dissent and the setting up of a totalitarian regime which is inconsistent with the firmly declared objectives of India's Constitution-makers. In public opinion formed by the combined impact of universal suffrage and a free press, said Jeremy Bentham, lies the safety or representative democracy and there is good deal of pratical wisdom in Bentham's weighty utterance.

[50] The liberty of the Press connotes in England complete freedom and right of publication without censorship or restriction, unless such writing or publication tends to impair or destroy the foundations of the society. Odgers in his treatise on Libel and Slander, Edition, 6 at pages 417-18, observes as follows:

"It is sedition to speak or publish words defamatory of the Government collectively, or of their general administration, with intent to subvert the law, to produce public disorder, or to foment or promote rebellion.

There is no sedition in consuring the servants of the Crown, or in just criticism on the administration of the law or in seeking redress of grievances, or in the fair discussion of all party questions" (per Fitz Gerald J. in R. v. Sullivan. (1868) 11 Cox C C at p. 50).

"Where corrupt or malignant motives are attributed to the Ministry as a whole, and no particular person is libelled, the jury must be satisfied that the author or publisher maliciously or designedly intended to subvert our laws and constitution, and to excite rebellion or disorder. There must be a criminal intent But such an intent will be presumed, if the natural and necessary consequence of the words employed be "to excite a contempt of her Majesty's Government to bring the administration of its laws into disrepute, and thus impair their operation, to create disaffection or to disturb the public peace and tranquillity of the realm." (R. v. Collins, (1839) 9 C. & P. 456; R. v. Lovett, (1839) 9 C. & P. 462)".

[51] In England freedom of the press has broadened down from precedent to precedent. "The liberty of the press" said Dicey, "is in England simply one result of the universal predominance of the law of the land" ("Law of the Constitution", Edition. 7 p. 247). In the great case of Dean of St. Asaph, 21 st. Tr. 1043 Lord Mansfield observed that "the liberty of the press consists in printing without any previous license, subject to the consequences of the law." "The law of England" said Lord Ellenborough, "is the law of liberty". (R. v. Cobbett, 29 st. Tr. 49).

[52] It is for the Legislature or the Parliament to determine whether the law in democratic India should be brought into line with the law of seditious libel in England so as to make punishable writings maliciously and designedly intended to subvert the constitution and to excite rebellion or disorder. No writing should be penalised or brought within the mischief of any Press Act, if it seeks to overthrow by constitutional means the party in power. But words similar to those in S. 4 have received judicial interpretation of the Privy Council and that interpretation is binding upon us. We cannot follow those cases which are really based upon the observations of Gwyer C. J. in Niharendu Dutt Majumdar's case: (A. I. R. (29) 1942 F. O. 22:43 Or. L. J. 504), as that case has been expresely overruled by the Judicial Committee. So long as S. 4 is retained by the Legislature on the Statute book, it is impossible for the Courts to ignore it, although they attempt to whittle it down when a Government attempts to take action because its vanity is wounded or it becomes intolerant of strong or bitter criticism. In view of the statute as it stands, I am constrained to hold that the impugned article falls within the scope of S. 4, Press Act. It has criticised the policy of the Congress Governments in the different provinces and has attributed breaches of faith or solemn pledges given by the Congress party while out of office. It has gone further and has charged the Congress Governments with deliberately abusing or misusing their powers in order to maltreat the political prisoner and detenus. That may be true or untrue, we have nothing to do with the truth or falsity of the charges. In re Pothan Joseph, 56 Bom. 472: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Bom. 468: 33 Cr. L. J. 749 S. B.). In a sense the greater the truth, the greater is the offence. If the charges are true, then the publication, although it excites hatred or contempt, may be the duty of the press. But that is again a question with which the Courts are not concerned. The only question is: Does the article in question tend to bring the Government established by law in India into hatred or contempt? It attributes calculated and deliberate ill-treatment of the political prisoners as well as the members of their families. The motive or intention of the writer is immaterial. Therefore, I have got to hold that inasmuch as we are not concerned with the truth of these charges or the justification for these serious accusations, the writing tends to excite hatred or contempt and to excite disaffection towards the Congress Governments, that is, the Governments established by law in the provinces in India and the Provincial Government of West Bengal was legally competent to take action under S. 4, Press Act, as it did.

[53] Banerjee J.—This application must be dismissed. On behalf of the petitioner, Mr. Sadhan Gupta raised several points. They are unsound.

[54] His first point was that the article was a comment on the policy of the Congress organisation, and not of the Government. I cannot agree. There is no reference to the Congress organisation in the article. From first to last, the Government is the subject-matter of criticism.

was not the publisher on the date the security was declared to be forfeited; therefore, the forfeiture was invalid. This contention again is wrong. Section 8, Press Act, 1931, makes it abundantly clear that if the petitioner was the publisher, as undoubtedly he was on the date when the article in question was published, the security may be forfeited, if the article offends the Press Act.

s. (2) of the Act. He said that since three months had already elapsed from the date of the declaration mentioned in sub-s. (1), no order of forfeiture could be made. This argument was based an a misconception of facts. The declaration by the publisher was made or about 6th January 1949. Assuming for a moment that sub-s. (2) of s. 7 applies to this case, the security was declared to be forfeited on 24th March, that is to say, within three months.

of India Act, 1935, and said that the Government meant the Governor and his executive, and added that the article did not offend the Act as it did not criticise the policy of the Governor or his executive. This argument I was unable to follow. Section 49 only defines the executive authority of a Province and not the Government.

[58] He next argued that this paper was in circulation only in Bengal and the article was not written against the Bengal Government and, therefore, it did not offend the Act. This contention again is fallacious. The article refers to the Congress Government as a whole. The Bengal Government is as much a part of that Government as the Government of any other Province.

[59] His main contention was that this article was a comment expressing disapprobation of the jail administration of the Government or of its measures, with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the Government.

chould be a strong opposition press. If articles in question are not permitted to be published, the Government which today is the Government of the people would be deprived of one of its essential and cherished rights—namely, the right to criticise. There is no doubt that this right to freedom of discussion and "liberty of the press" are fundamental doctrines of Democracy. It is only an aspect of what is known as the "Rule of law." Yet, I do not think this is a consideration which should weigh with the Court in construing the Act.

[61] The Court is bound to give effect to the language of the Act so long as it is in existence, even though it thinks that the Act is capricious or unjust. The capriciousness or injustice of a particular result is a matter to which the Court can pay attention in deciding what is the true construction of the words used in the Act, but too much weight must not be given to those matters. It is the right of the Legislature, if it so wishes, to be capricious or unjust.

[62] Again, an argument on the hypothesis that the Act is not in existence is an argument which the Court cannot entertain. The Act is there in the Statute Book. It is incumbent on the Court to give effect to it, regardless of the consequences.

[63] But, in applying the Act, to any article appearing in a newspaper, the Court will take into consideration the public sentiment and the surrounding circumstances to find out whether the words used in the article tend, directly or indirectly, to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in the land or to excite disaffection towards it.

[64] It is beyond doubt that the Congress Government today is the Government established by the law in the Dominion of India. Our duty is to consider whether the article in question has that Government. If it has, it is within the mischief of the Act. If it has not, the order of forfeiture must be set aside. We are not at all concerned with the truth or otherwise of the allegations in the article. We are not concerned with the purpose of writing the article. All that concerns us is to see whether the words used in the article tend to bring into hatred or contempt that Government or to excite disaffection towards it.

[65] It must be noted, however, that there is great difference between 1931 and 1949. What can be said today with impunity could not be so said in 1931. What may be comments within the meaning of the explanations of S. 4 today might not have been such comments in 1931.

[66] But, albeit, the principle of construction of the Act must be the same. Though every one has a right to publish fair and candid criticism of the policy of the Government, a critic must confine himself to criticism and not make it the veil for imputing to the Government base, corrupt or malicious motives in the discharge of its duties.

[67] The Government today is a Government of the people, by the people and for the people. The Government, if it is really to be a Government of the people, must be carried on by the people according to the wishes of the people. If any particular policy or measure of the Government does not meet the approval or the wishes of the people, the Government must change the policy or the measures.

[68] The Press today must enjoy greater liberty than it enjoyed in 1931. The liberty enjoyed by the Press differs at different times and seasons. It may vary from unrestricted license to very severe restraint, according to the condition of popular sentiment. (See Dicey, Law of the Constitution, Edn. 8, p. 242).

[69] I can think of a Government which is so efficient and so popular so firmly fixed in the affection and confidence of the people that no amount of scurrilous literature can excite or tend to excite hatred or contempt towards it. Again, I can think of a Government equally efficient and equally good but functioning at a time when public sentiment is so high and so sensitive, that slightest provocation suffices to bring or tend to bring the Government into hatred or contempt.

which tends to bring into hatred or contempt any class or section of the subject of the Dominion of India falls within the mischief of the Press Act. But, what can be said today without any offence to a particular community could not be said with the same result in 1946.

when the carnage in Calcutta was going on. It follows that the psychology for the time being of the people is the context in which comments which appear in the newspapers must be read.

[71] If I am correct in saying what I have said, I can fit the 1931 Act into 1949 texture. It was not possible for the Legislature in 1931 to foresee the events of 1949. It is not within human powers to do so. Therefore, so long as the Act remains in force, it is the duty of the Judge to set to work on the constructive task of finding the effect of the article, and he must do so, not only from the language of the article but also from a consideration of the prevailing public sentiment, which is the context in which the article has to be read, and then he must supplement the written words of the Act so as to give "force and life" to the intention of the Legislature. That is the principle underlying the resolutions of the Judges and the other Barons of the Exchequer, in Heydon's case, 3 co. Rep. 76. This principle seems to be the safest guide today. Otherwise, there is bound to be a conflict between the words of the Act and the rights of the people.

[72] There can be no difference in the principle of construction of the words of the Act, whether construed in 1931 or in 1949. The difference must be in the manner in which the Act is to be applied. The Act undoubtedly permits the publication of statements meant only to show that the Government has committed errors, or to point out defects in the Government or the constitution with a view to their legal remedy or with a view to recommend alterations in the policy or measures of the government by legal means. The Act sanctions criticism on public affairs which is bona fide intended to recommend the reform of existing institutions by legal methods. Criticism is allowed that far and no further.

[73] It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to how an article should be read, but there is no doubt that it must be read by the Court carefully, liberally and not with a view to find fault with it. The Court must read the article as a whole, giving due weight to every part. The Court must make due allowance for all kinds of ornamental phrases or fine words or figure of speech which sometimes are permitted and which nobody seriously takes into consideration. And after making all due allowances, the Court must find out the true sense of the article. The first thing the Court has to do is not to take the words in vacuo, so to speak, and attribute to them what is called their natural or ordinary meaning. The method of construing the words is to read them as a whole and ask oneself the question: "In this context, relating to this subject-matter, what is the true meaning of the words?" If reading the article in that way, the Court thinks that it was intended to be a criticism of the policy or the administration of the Government, with a view to obtain its change or reform the article is safe. But if, on the other hard, the Court comes to the conclusion that the article was really meant to be an attack on the Government beyond the permitted limits of criticism, the article comes within the mischief of the Act, and then no argument can be heard on the basis that the Act does not exist or what the Act should have been.

[74] In the light of these principles, I have read the article. Reading the article as a whole, I ask myself the question, what is the true meaning of the article?

[75] I have no doubt in my own mind that the article was never intended to obtain by lawful means any change in the policy or measure of the Government or its jail administration. In my view, the words used, have the tendency to impute base, corrupt and malicious motives to the Government in discharge of its duties.

[76] We repeatedly asked Mr. Gupta to tell us how any or what reform was expected by the words, (Portion in Begali omitted). I have translated the words myself. The translation is as literal as I could make it, consistent with the spirit of the article:

"The pattern of oppression of the political prisoners within the jail is almost the same in all the provinces: that is that the political prisoners are regarded as Class III convicts, e.g., forcing them to live with ordinary convicts, refusing to give them any facility for reading, driving the ailing prisoners to death without treatment, making no arrangement for giving allowance to their wives, children and family; besides, there is of course the lathi charge etc. Added to this, the generous hearted Government has an eye in the direction (to see) that their wives and children etc., do not get any work or job in any way even to earn their daily bread."

reform or change of policy or administration was intended by the words that the Government sees that the wives and children of the political prisoners do not get any opportunity to earn their livelihood. He was unable to give any answer. I have not been able to see by what manner or means it was possible to obtain any alteration of any measure or policy of the Government or its jail administration by these remarks.

[78] The meaning of the words I have quoted above in their setting is clear. That the Government not only ill-treats the political prisoners lodged by them in jail, not only it does not provide for their treatment but it is so vindictive that it does its level best to see that the wives and children of the political prisoners do not even get the chance of earning their livelihood. Nothing can be more inhuman, more corrupt and more malicious for a Government than to adopt a policy like this towards its political prisoners.

[79] The charge is very serious against the present Government. Yet, no particulars have been given in the petition. There is not a shred of evidence to support the statement. Mr. Gupta, to our repeated questions, could not furnish any particulars. He said generally, that this statement in the newspaper had been made on information received from reliable sources. But he was unable to disclose what the reliable sources were. He further said that a newspaper is entirled to make such a statement on information. I decline to assent to such a proposition so broadly stated. Be it an individual or a corporation or a newspaper, whosoever publishes a malicious statement which is not true, does so at his risk, and must take the consequences.

[80] On the law as it is today, I am bound to hold that this statement is not a comment expressing disapprobation of the measures or policy of jail administration of the Government with a view to obtain their alteration by lawful means, but it is an imputation which excites or tends to excite hatred or contempt towards the Government established by law in the Dominion of India.

[81] Then again, there is the last sentence of the article which, from its translation as given in the paper book is this:

"This desperate attack has been made by the Government which is run in the interest of the bourgeoisie in the face of a crisis; As the crisis will thicken, intensity of the attack will increase. It will not be wrong to think that this intense attack is only a manifestation of the increasing power of the masses against the bourgeoisie Government and against reactionary forces."

These words seem to me to tend indirectly to excite disaffection towards the Government.

[82] The word 'disaffection' has been construed in Queen-Empress v. Ramchandra Narayan, 22 Bom. 152 (F.B.). It signifies political alienation or discontent, that is to say, a feeling of disloyalty to the existing Government, which tends to a disposition not to obey, but to resist and subvert the Government. The words "as the crisis will thicken, intensity of the attack will increase" suggest, (1) that there is a crisis, (2) that it will thicken, and (3) therefore the attack on the Government will also increase.

[83] Perhaps these words taken out of the article by themselves may not have that significance. But, the article has to be read as a whole as I have said before and reading in that way, I think the words have the meaning I have attributed to them.

[81] For these reasons, I hold that the Government was right in declaring the security to be forfeited.

*A. I. R. (37) 1950 Calcutta 457 [C. N. 172.] HARRIES C. J. AND BANERJEE J.

Municipal Commissioner of the Budge Budge Municipality _Applicant v. P. R. Mu-kherjee and another_Opposite Party.

Civil Rule No 563 of 1950, D/- 1-6-1950.

*(a) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 2 (k) and (s) — Dispute between Municipality and its employees.

The modern municipality carries on a huge business or undertaking and its employees are workmen and any dispute arising between the employees and the Municipality is an industrial dispute as defined in the Act.

[Para. 26]

(b) Industrial Disputes Act (1947), S. 7 (1)— Dispute between Municipality and its employees — Government of India Act (1935), Sch. VII, List III, Item 29.

Even if a dispute between the employees of a Municipality and the Municipality could not be regarded as an industrial dispute as that phrase is used in item 29 of List III, it would be clearly a labour dispute which ordinarily means a dispute between employers and employees and the Central Government could legislate concerning such a dispute, which can therefore be governed by the Industrial Disputes Act.

#(c) Industrial Disputes Act (1947)—Act, if ultra vires so far as it applies to disputes between. Municipality and its employees—Government of India Act (1935), Sch. VII, List II, Item 13.

The Industrial Disputes Act is clearly a legislation on labour and industrial disputes. The pith and substance of the enactment is therefore industrial and labour disputes and the trespass or invasion on item 13 in List II so far as it applies to disputes between a Municipality and its employees is merely incidental. The legislation can in no way be regarded as legislation on the powers of a municipality and therefore it must be held that the Industrial Disputes Act is intra vires, though it does invade to a slight extent upon item 13 in List No. II. [Para 47]

(d) Constitution of India, Art. 227 — Industrial Tribunal is such tribunal as is contemplated in Art. 227. [Para 49]

Dr. N. C. Sen Gupta with Sushil Chandra Dutt and Purnendu Sekhar Basu —for Petitioners. Sir S. M. Bose with A. C Sircar—for the State of West Bengal and the Tribunal.

Amiya Kumar Basu-for the Union.

Harries C. J.—These are two Rules which have been issued in connection with an award made by an Industrial Tribunal. An application was made for the issue of a writ of certiorars or prohibition on the adjudicator concerning an award which he had made. In the application it was prayed that a writ of certiorars should issue for removing the proceedings to this-Court and quashing the same. In the alternative it was prayed that an order, restraining the adjudicator from giving effect to the said award or from taking any steps in pursuance thereof, should be made.

[2] Another application was made for a Rule to issue under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India and in that application similar prayers were made.

[3] The application for a writ of certiorari was heard by Bachawat J. sitting on the original side. He had jurisdiction to deal with that matter, but he had no jurisdiction to deal with the application made under Art 227 of the Constitution. He therefore referred both the matters to me and I directed that both the matters should be heard by this Bench. They have accordingly been heard together.

[4] The matters arise out of a dispute between the employees of the Budge Budge Municipality and the Commissioners of the Municipality. It appears that on 12th May 1948, a so-called charter of demands was submitted by the Trades Union representing the employees of the municipality. An increase of pay was demanded and on 23rd september 1948 certain increments of pay were sanctioned by the Municipality with effect from the month of August, 1948.

[5] It seems that there were two Unions representing the interests of the employees and the Chairman of the municipality was the President of one of these Unions. The two Unions amalgamated and it is said that this displeased the Chairman of the Municipality and he severed all connection with the Union with which he was concerned.

[6] On 1st July 1949, the conservancy menials employed by the Municipality went on strike. But on the intervention of the Subdivisional Officer that strike was settled on 7th

July 1949.

[7] Two employees, P. C. Mitter, Head Clerk, and Phanindra Nath Ghose were actively concerned in the affairs of the Union which had been formed by the amalgamation of the two previous Unions and it is suggested that these two employees incurred the displeasure of the authorities controlling the Municipality. On 13th July 1949, both these employees were suspended and a charge sheet was drawn up against them. On 80th July 1949 the Labour Commissioner intervened and called a conference for 5th August 1949. Apparently this conference could not be held and was adjourned until 12th August 1949. In the meantime the Commissioners of the Municipality met and on 6th August 1949 the two employees, P. C. Mitter and Phanindra Nath Ghose were dismissed. On 8th August 1949, the Labour Commissioner again wrote to the Municipality suggesting a conference on 12th August and asked that the status quo should be maintained. However, as I have said, the two employees had been dismissed by that time. It seems that representations were made to Government concerning these dismissals, but no action was taken. Eventually the Trades Union representing the workmen applied for the setting up of an Industrial Tribunal to enquire into the dispute and in due course an adjudicator was appointed to consider the matter under the Industrial Disputes Act. On 13th February 1950, he made an award and in that award he directed the municipality to reinstate the two dismissed employees Mitter and Ghose. On 9th March 1950, the Government made an order under S. 15 (2) of the Act declaring the award to be binding and that order was published in the Gazette of that date.

[8] Dr. Naresh Sen Gupta who has appeared on behalf of the petitioners, the Municipality of Budge Budge, has contended in the first place that the Industrial Disputes Act could have no application to any dispute between the Municipality and its employees and therefore the Tribunal appointed under the Act had no jurisdiction to make an award and that the award made is void and wholly ineffectual. That being so, it is said that this Court should quash the proceedings or set aside the award under Art. 227 of the Constitution.

[9] There can be no doubt that the dispute in this case was between the employees of a Municipality and the Municipality. The argument is that such a dispute is not an industrial dispute and therefore not within the purview of the Act.

[10] Industrial Tribunals are appointed by the appropriate Government under S. 7, Industrial Disputes Act, 1947. That section provides:

(1) The appropriate Government may constitute one or more Industrial Tribunals for the adjudication of industrial disputes in accordance with the provisions of the Act.

(2) A Tribunal shall consist of such number of members as the appropriate Government thinks fit. Where the Tribunal consists of two or more members, one of them shall be appointed as the chairman.

[11] It will be seen therefore that there must exist an industrial dispute before an industrial tribunal can be appointed to adjudicate thereon.

[12] The phrase 'industrial dispute' is defined by S. 2 (k), Industrial Disputes Act, and the definition is as follows:

"'Industrial dispute' means any dispute or difference between employers and employers, or between employers and workmen, or between workmen and workmen which is connected with the employment or non-employment or the terms of employment or with the conditions of labour, of any person." [13] It will be seen that in this definition no reference whatsoever is made to the nature of the employment of the workman or the nature of the business carried on by the employers. The term 'employer' is not defined in the Act except where the term is used in relation to an industry carried on by a department of Government or by some local authority. The term 'employer, therefore must be given its ordinary grammatical meaning, namely, a person who employs someone to work or to do something for him.

[14] The term 'workman' however is defined in 8. 2 (s) of the Act in these terms :

"'Workman' means any person employed (including an apprentice) in any industry to do any skilled or unskilled, manual or clerical work for hire or reward and includes, for the purposes of any proceedings under this Act, in relation to an industrial dispute, a workman discharged during that dispute, but does not include any person employed in the naval, military or air service of the Crown."

[15] Here it is clearly stated that to be a workman the person must be employed in any 'industry' and this latter word is defined in S. 2 (j) of the Act. The definition is as follows:

"'Industry' means any business, trade, undertaking, manufacture or calling of employers and includes any calling, service, employment, handicraft, or industrial occupation or avocation of workmen."

[16] It is somewhat unfortunate that the term 'workman' is defined in terms of industry and in the definition of 'industry' reference is made to the term 'workman'. However, the definition of 'industry' is in the widest possible terms. But Dr. Sen Gapta has contended that the words business, trade, undertaking or calling of employers' must be qualified by the adjective 'industrial', and that the words 'any calling, service, employment of workmen' should also be qualified by the same adjective 'industrial'. It will be noticed that in the definition of the word 'industry' the word 'indus. trial' is used to qualify the words 'occupation or avocation of workmen'. But it is not used to qualify the words "any calling, service, employment or handicraft of workmen" and it is not used to qualify the terms "business, trade, undertaking, manufacture or calling of employers". The omission appears to be intentional and therefore any undertaking is an industry and so is any service or employment of workmen in such an undertaking. Anybody employed in an industry is a workman and it appears to me that anyone employed in an undertaking, though it is not of an industrial nature, would be a workman and that undertaking would be an industry.

[17] There are indications in the Act itself which suggest that persons employed in a public utility service are workmen, though the public utility service may be carried on not for gain.

The term 'public utility service' is defined in 8. 2 (n) of the Act and includes any system of public conservancy or sanitation. There can be no doubt that a municipality carries out such a utility service.

[18] Section 22 (2) makes it clear that in a public utility service workmen can be rare (?)

employed. That sub-section provides:

"No employer carrying on any public utility service shall lock out any of his workmen "

[19] The term 'workmen' there must mean the term as defined in the Act and the definition means persons employed in any 'industry' as that latter term is defined in the Act. If workmen can be employed in a public utility service then it appears to me that an industrial dispute could arise between such workmen and the authority carrying out such public utility service.

[20] Again the word 'strike' is defined in the Act in S. 2 (q) as meaning a cessation of work by a body of persons employed in any industry acting in combination, or a concerted refusal or a refusal under a common understanding of any number of persons who are or have been so employed to continue to work or to accept employment.

[21] From this definition, it is clear that the term 'strike' is used as something which occurs in an industry.

[22] It is quite clear from S. 22 that a strike can occur in a public utility service and therefore that service must amount to an industry because the term 'strike' only covers what occurs in an industry by reason of its definition.

(23) There are therefore clear indications in the Act that anybody carrying on a public utility service is an employer within the meaning of the Act and the employees would be workmen within the meaning of that term.

[24] Further in the proviso to S. 10 (1) of the Act it is expressly provided :

"Provided that where the dispute relates to a public utility service and a notice under S. 22 has been given, the appropriate Government shall, unless it considers that the notice has been frivolously or vexatiously given or that it would be inexpedient so to do, make a reference under this sub-section notwithstanding that any other proceedings under this Act in respect of the dispute may have commenced."

[95] In this proviso it is expressly recognised that a dispute covered by the Act may arise in a public utility service and can be adjudicated upon under the provisions of the Act.

carries on an undertaking or a series of undertakings and carries on a public utility service. The municipality exists for the purpose of administering the municipal area and for providing amenities for the citizens who of course have to provide the income for the municipality. These municipalities, for instance, have to maintain the roads and repair the same. They have to maintain sanitation and conservancy. They are responsible for lighting and for a hundred and one amenities. They can be regarded as either carrying out a huge undertaking or a series of undertakings. Reference was made to S. 108, Bengal Municipal Act, which deals with the powers of the municipalities in Bengal. A perusal of that section makes it clear that the modern municipality carries on a huge business or undertaking and it seems to me that its employees are workmen and that any dispute arising between the employees and the municipality is an industrial dispute as defined in the Act.

[27] Dr. Sen Gopta suggested that there could be no industrial dispute unless there was some undertaking carried on for profit. Some of the undertakings of a municipality may well be carried on for profit such as the running of trams or buses or such like. But it appears to me that where the draftsmen of a statute wish to make it clear that only industrial undertakings are referred to the word 'industrial' is usually added.

[28] In S. 299 (2), Government of India Act, which deals with the power to make laws authorising the compulsory acquisition of land for certain purposes the word 'undertaking' is used, but it is qualified by the words 'commercial' or 'industrial'. It was realised that the word 'undertaking' by itself does not necessarily involve the conception of industry or commerce as those terms are ordinarily understood and the draftsmen qualified the word 'undertaking' by the words 'commercial or industrial' to make it clear that what was contemplated was an undertaking of a commercial or industrial nature and not any other kind of undertaking. It may be that a municipality does not carry on a commercial or industrial undertaking in the ordinary sense of the word, but it certainly carries on an undertaking and it appears to me that where a municipality provides light or water for payment it carries on a commercial undertaking and may actually carry it on at a profit. In any event it seems to me quite clear that a Municipality carries on an undertaking or undertakings and, therefore, its employees must be regarded as being employed in industry and, therefore, the Industrial Disputes Act can apply to disputes between such employees and the municipality.

[29] Reference was made to an English decision in the case of National Association of Local Government officers v. Bolton Corporation, (1943) A. C. 166: (111 L. J. K. B. 674), in which the House of Lords expressly held that employees of the Bolton Corporation which would be similar to an Indian municipality, could have a trade dispute with the Corporation. The definition of 'trade dispute' was similar to the definition in the Indian Act of 'industrial dispute,' but the definition of 'workmen' was somewhat different. Viscount Simon dealing with the mean. ing of the phrase "trade dispute" observed at

p. 176 as follows:

"First, as to the meaning of 'trade dispute' in this connection. Having regard to its definition for present purposes, and to the wide definition of workman which has to be read into it in order to ascertain its ambit, I think that the phrase can cover a dispute as to conditions of service of officers of a municipal corporation. Mr. Turner strenuously argued that such an interpretation gives no effect to the limiting word 'trade.' The answer is that the definition of 'trade dispute' introduces no such limitation. It does not speak of disputes or differences connected with the employment or nonemployment of persons 'in trade' or 'in trade or industry,' but deliberately omits such limitation, though the limitation is to be found in the definition of 'workman' in the Trade Disputes Act, 1906. If there can be a 'trade' union to which the higher grades of officers of a municipal corporation can belong, it does not seem an impossible use of language to say that a dispute concerning their conditions of service may be a 'trade' dis-

[30] As I have already pointed out in the definition of "industrial dispute" no reference is made to industry or trade though reference is made to industry in the definition of 'workman.' The position under the Indian Act is very much the same as that stated by Lord Simon to exist under the English law and it appears to me that by the same reasoning as that adopted by Lord Simon it can be held in this country that the employees of a municipality are workmen and may have an industrial dispute with their employers.

[31] For these reasons, I am bound to hold that there is no force in the first contention put forward on behalf of the petitioners that the Industrial Disputes Act could have no application to the dispute existing in this case.

[32] It was then argued that even if the workmen of a municipality could have an industrial dispute with their employers such could not be governed by the Industrial Disputes Act. It was urged that the Industrial Disputes Act must be construed as having no application to municipalities.

[33] The Industrial Disputes Act of 1947 is a Central Act and the Central Government were empowered to legislate upon such a topic by reason of item 29 of List III of Sch. 7, Government of India Act. That item is as follows:

"Trade unions; industrial and labour disputes."

[34] There can be no doubt whatsoever that the Central Government could enact a piece of legislation like the Industrial Disputes Act.

[35] Dr. Sen Gupta, however, contended that the word 'industrial' as used in Item 29 of List III of Sch. 7 of the Act must be given its ordinary grammatical meaning and, therefore, 'industrial disputes' mentioned in the item mustbe disputes arising in 'industry' as the latter term is ordinarily understood. He contended that even if the definition given to 'industrial disputes' in the Industrial Disputes Act was wide enough to cover disputes between a municipality and its employees, nevertheless the Central Government had no right to legislate in respect of such disputes when their power was given under item 29 of List III to legislate only on 'industrial disputes' as that term is ordinarily understood.

[36] It appears to me that there is no force whatsoever in this argument, because the Central Government are competent to legislate not only on industrial but labour disputes. The item reads: "Trade unions, industrial and labour disputes". Even if a dispute between the employees of a municipality and the municipality could not be regarded as an industrial dispute as that phrase is used in item 29 of list III, it would be clearly a labour dispute which ordinarily means a dispute between employers and employees and the Central Government could legislate concerning such a dispute. It seems to me that the Central Government were compe. tent to legislate on disputes arising between employers and employees though the employers were not conducting an industry in the usual sense of that word. They could legislate in respect of all labour disputes, that is, in respect of disputes between employers and employees which are ordinarily regarded as labour disputes.

(87) Dr. San Gupta however contended that the Industrial Disputes Act in so far as it applies to disputes between a municipality and its employees is ultra vires. He relies on item 13 of List II of Sch. 7, Government of India Act. That item reads as follows:

"Local Government, that is to say, the constitution and powers of Municipal Corporations, Improvement Trusts, District Boards, mining settlement authorities and other local authorities for the purpose of local self-government or village administration."

[38] List II deals with the subjects which fall exclusively in the province of the Provincial and now the State Legislature. Dr. Sen Gupta's argument is that the Central Government could not legislate on the powers of a municipal corporation. He has argued that the provisions of the Industrial Disputes Act interfere with the powers of a Municipal Corporation and such interference is only warranted if it is the result of Provincial or State legislation and not Central Legislation.

[39] Learned advocate relied upon S. 66 (2), Bengal Municipal Act which provides as follows: "Subject to the scale of establishment approved by the Commissioners under sub-s. (1) the Chairman shall have power to appoint such persons as he may think fit and from time to time to remove such persons and appoint others in their place."

[40] Then follow provisos limiting the power to some extent.

Act the Chairman has been empowered to appoint and dismiss employees and by reason of item 13 of List II of the Sch. 7, Government of India Act there can be no interference with those powers except by the Provincial or State Legislature. The powers of a municipality, it is contended, is not a matter upon which the Central Government can legislate at all. If the Act applies, as we have held it does on its true construction, to disputes between municipalities and its employees then the Act in so far as it applies to such disputes is said to be ultra vires.

[42] What could be enacted by the Central and Provincial Legislatures in the year 1947 is dealt with by S. 100, Government of India Act and it is clear from sub-s. (3) that the Central Government could not make laws for a Province or any part thereof with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List II. There can be no doubt I think that if the Industrial Disputes Act applies to disputes between a municipality and its employees the Act does to some extent trespass on a Provincial subject, namely, the powers of a municipality. It is a trespass upon the rights of the Chairman of the municipality to appoint whomsoever he likes and to dismiss his employees in proper cases.

[43] It has been held by the Federal Court that an adjudicator under the Industrial Disputes Act has jurisdiction to order the reinstatement of workmen lawfully dismissed. In the present case the award directs the municipality to reinstate the two employees, Mitter and Ghose who were dismissed by the Chairman apparently in accordance with the rules. There is therefore a clear interference with the powers of the Chairman and of the municipality and Dr. Sen Gupta contends that the Central Legislature had no power to pass any legislation affecting the powers of a municipality.

[44] There can be no doubt that the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, is an Act dealing with the settlement of Industrial Disputes and it does not purport to be an Act dealing with the powers of a municipality. In dealing with Industrial Disputes the Act does trespass to some extent upon a Provincial subject, namely, the powers of a municipality. But such trespass would not in my view make the Central Act ultra vires. The effect of a trespass such as the one which has occurred in this case was considered by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the recent case of Prafulla Kumar v. Bank of Commerce Ltd., Khulna, 74 I. A. 28: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. O. 60). In that case their Lordships laid down that in distinguishing between the powers of the divided jurisdictions under Lists I, II and III of Sch. 7 to the Government of India Act, 1935, it is not possible to make a clean cut between the powers of the various Legislatures. They are bound to overlap from time to time and the rule which has been evolved by the Judicial Com. mittee whereby an impugned statute is exa. mined to ascertain its pith and substance or its true nature and character for the purpose of determining in which particular list the legislation falls, applies to Indian as well as to Dominion legislation. The extent of the invasion by the Provincial Legislature into subjects enumerated in the Federal List is material for the purpose of determining what is the pith and substance of the impugned Act.

[45] In that case the Bengal Money Lenders Act, 1940, was impugned and s. 30 of that Act provided that

"notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, or in any agreement, (1) no borrower shall be liable to pay after the commencement of this Act"

more than a limited sum in respect of principal and interest or more than a certain percentage of the sum advanced by way of interest; it was held that the Act was in whole intra vires the Provincial Legislature as in pith and substance it dealt with "moneylending and moneylenders", a subject-matter within the legislative competence of the Provincial Legislature under entry 27 of List II, and whether it trenched incidentally on "promissory notes" and "banking", subject-matters reserved for the Federal Legislature under entries 28 and 38 respectively of List I was not fatal to the enactment as neither of those matters was its substance.

in these words:

"Thirdly, the extent of the invasion by the Provinces into subjects enumerated in the Federal List has to be considered. No doubt it is an important matter, not as their Lordships think, because the validity of an Act can be determined by discriminating between degrees of invasion, but for the purpose of determining what is the pith and substance of the impugned Act. Its provisions may advance so far into Federal territory as to show that its true nature is not concerned with provincial matters, but the question is not, has it trespassed more or less, but is the trespass, whatever it be, such as to show that the pith and substance of the impugned Act is not moneylending but promissory notes or banking? Once that question is determined the Act falls on one or the other side of the line and can be seen as valid or invalid according to its true content. This view places the precedence accorded to the three lists in its proper perspective."

ever that the pith and substance of the Industrial Disputes Act is industrial and labour disputes. There is a slight invasion respecting a matter in List II. But is this legislation, legislation on indus. trial or labour disputes, or is it legislation on the powers of a municipality? That is the question which Lord Porter has directed the Court to ask itself. When I asked myself—is the Indus. trial Disputes Act a piece of legislation on industrial and labour disputes or a piece of legislation on municipal powers, there is only one answer that can be given. It is clearly legislation on labour and industrial disputes. The pith and substance of the enactment is therefore industrial and labour disputes and the trespass or invasion on an item in List II is merely incidental. The legislation can in no way be regarded as legislation on the powers of a municipality and therefore following the case of Prafulla Kumar Mukherjee v. Bank of Commerce Limited, Khulna, (74 I. A. 23: A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. C. 60) it must be held that the Industrial Disputes Act is intra vires, though as I have said it does invade to a slight extent upon an item in List No. II. In my judgment there is no substance in the contention that the Act in so far as it applies to municipalities must be held to be ultra vires. In the Bank of Commerce case* the Federal Court had held that the Bengal Money-Lenders Act in so far as it applied to promissory notes was ultra vires as promissory notes were a Central subject and would not be the subject of legislation by a Province. The Privy Council nevertheless held that the statute was intra vires and its provisions could be applied to promissory notes, though the latter were a Central Subject. In the same way it must be held that this Act is intra vires and does apply to disputes between municipalities and its employees.

[48] Lastly, Dr. Sen Gupta contended that this award was bad on the merits.

[49] It seems clear that an Industrial Tribunal is such a tribunal as is contemplated in Art. 227 of the Constitution. As the Supreme Court very recently held that an Industrial Tribunal is a tribunal within the meaning of that term as used in Art. 136. of the Constitution it must be held that an application can be made to this Court under Art. 227. Once it is held that the Industrial Tribunal had jurisdiction, then no relief by way of certiorari or prohibition can be granted.

[50] Dr. Sen Gupta has contended that we ought to interfere under Art. 227 of the Constitution upon the merits. But it is extremely difficult for this Court to interfere upon the merits in a matter such as this. The Industrial Tribunal is constituted to settle an industrial dispute when the parties cannot do so by conciliation and direct agreement. The Industrial Tribunal does not settle a dispute in accordance with any rules of law. It must of necessity settle the dispute in the best way to secure future peace in the industry concerned. For example, an employer is legally entitled to dismiss an employee if he gives him the proper notice or wages in lieu of notice. But this Court and the Federal Court have held that an adjudicator can well order the employers to reinstate such a man if in the view of the adjudicator such would be a fair settlement of the industrial dispute.

[51] Dr. Sen Gupta contends that there was no material upon which the adjudicator in this case would order reinstatement. I am very doubtful whether we can sit in judgment upon the views of the adjudicator. Possibly if he had conducted himself contrary to all the rules of natural justice we, might have a right to interfere. But there can be no question that in this case the adjudicator did hear the parties and has considered the relevant materials. The adjudicator in his award makes it quite clear that in his view these men have been victimised and much can be said for that view. However, it is not for us to say whether that be the right or the wrong view. It is certainly a possible view and may well be the right view. If that be so, then it appears to me that the adjudicator was fully entitled to make this award ordering reinstatement. In any event, if the adjudicator was of opinion that the only way to bring this dispute to a peaceful end would be to order reinstatement, he was in my view fully entitled to do so. On the merits I do not think we could interefere. But even if we have power to interfere I can see no ground why we should interfere.

[52] In the result, therefore, both the petitions fail. The petition for a writ of certiorari is dismissed with costs, and so is the petition filed under Art. 227 of the Constitution. The interim injunction is dissolved. The petitioners must pay the costs of the State as well as of the Union. We assess a hearing fee of ten gold mohurs to each of the contesting opposite parties. There will be one set of costs for the two applications.

[59] We grant a certificate under Art. 182 (1) of the Constitution.

Civil Rules Nos. 2027 to 2030 of 1949, D/-4th May 1950 to set aside the Orders of D. J., Burdwan, D/-21st November 1949, (a) Indian Independence (Rights, Property and Liabilities) Order (1947), Para. 9—Other financial obligations—Word 'financial' must be construed in restricted sense.

The word 'financial' in 'other financial obligations' in Para. 9 has got to be given its technical meaning which it has in connection with matters of revenue and it cannot be given the wide meaning as equivalent to any kind of pecuniary liability. It must therefore be given a restricted meaning and construed ejusdem generis with the words 'loan and guarantees' used in that paragraph.

(b) Indian Independence (Rights, Property and Liabilities) Order (1947), Para 12—'Legal proceedings with respect to property' — Meaning — Proceedings for compensation for acquired land pending at the time of partition of Bengal — Liability to pay is on successor province.

The word 'property' in the expression 'legal proceeding with respect to property' in Para 12 must be taken to include land and other kinds of properties mentioned in the previous paras. The question of compensation for acquisition of land is a question with respect to the value of land and therefore it is a legal proceeding with respect to land or with respect to property. "Legal proceeding" and "with respect to land" must be given a wide interpretation, and therefore, under Para. 12 the liability is of the successor Government which has obtained that property on partition. Where, therefore, at the time of the partition of Bengal certain proceedings for compensation for land acquired in the district of Burdwan were pending before the District Judge at Burdwan and the land has fallen within the Province of West Bengal in the partition, the liability to pay compensation is on that Province and as the State of West Bengal represents that Province under the Constitution the proceedings must continue against that State.

Purusottam Chatterjee — for Petitioners. Chandra Sekhar Sen, Sr. Govt. Pleader and Jajneswar Majumdar, Asstt. Govt. Pleader—for Opposite Party.

K. C. Chunder J .- These four revision cases arise out of the Land Acquisition proceedings in Mouza Hirapur within the sub-division of Asansol in the district of Burdwan. Notification for acquisition of land was issued on 29th April 1940. The Land Acquisition Collector gave his award on 10th February 1945 and on 1st April 1945, the Province of Bengal took possession. Then on the application of the petitioners before us the Collector made a reference under 8. 18 to the District Judge of Burdwan on the question of valuation of the land, and this gave rise to Land Acquisition case No. 9 of 1946. On 15th August 1947, the Indian Independence Act came into force and from that day the Province of Bengal was divided into two provinces of West and East Bengal. On 13th August 1949 the province of West Bengal now represented. by the State of West Bengal objected before the District Judge of Burdwan that in view of the Indian Independence Order Rights of Properties, etc., of 1947 the liability now was that of the province of East Bengal or the Eastern Pakistan and the Province of West Bengal was no longer liable to pay the compensation which may be determined for the land. By his order dated 21st November 1949 the District Judge gave effect to this contention and held that the liability was that of the province of East Bengal and not of West Bengal. The present Rules were issued on 22nd December 1949 and the new Constitution of the Republic of India came into force from 26th January 1950. The only question which arises in all these Rules is whether the liability to pay any additional compensation for the value of the land which may be determined by the District Judge was that of the West or of the East Bengal Government. Ordinarily as the land is within West Bengal and the acquisition has been wholly for the purpose of West Bengal the liability would be of that Government to pay adequate compensation as determined by the District Judge to the parties whose lands were acquired. Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen appearing on behalf of the State of Bengal has contended first that in view of S. 9, Indian Independence Order of 1947 these cases come within "other financial obligations" mentioned in this section and therefore the liability is that of the Province of East Bengal and not of West Bengal. On this point there is a decision of a Divisional Bench of this Court in the case of the Province of West Bengal v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. Ltd. (A.I.R. (37) 1950 Cal. 159), that the expression "and other financial obligations" as used in Article or Para. 9, Indian Independence Order, 1947, must be given a restricted meaning and construed ejusdem generis with the words 'loan and guarantees' used in that article. It appears that no reasons were given for this construction and it also further has been contended that this is merely an obiter dictum as it was not necessary to decide this point in that case. It was in connection with a legal proceeding respecting rent payable and the Divisional Bench pointed out that rent arose out of a contractual obligation and contractual obligation was dealt with in Article or Para. 8 and therefore under that Article the liability was that of the West Bengal Government. In view of that decision it was unnecessary really to decide about "other financial obligations".

[2] Mr. Sen's second contention is that even if it be held that Art. 9 did not apply and the liability was not of East Bengal under this Article, as no provision has been made as to which of the two successor Governments namely the East Bengal or West Bengal is to be substituted in place of the now non-existent province of Bengal, the province of West Bengal cannot be substituted in place of the previous province of Bengal and cannot be made liable. There is no question that under S. 4 of the Legal Proceedings Order the District Judge's Court at Asansol is the proper Court in which the present proceedings are to continue. Mr. Sen's contention is that Article or Para. 12 of the Indian Independence Order 1947 does not apply to the present proceedings before the District Judge and therefore there is no other provision for substitution and the petitioners before us who have obtained these Rules are not entitled to proceed against the State of West Bengal even if they cannot also proceed against East Bengal. It is to be pointed out that by the Constitution Act of 1950 the State of West Bengal is the successor to the province of West Bengal. It is also to be pointed out that in view of S. 6, General Clauses Act accrued rights and liabilities and proceedings in that connection are not affected by the repeal of Independence Act, 1947.

[3] As regards the first contention relating to the interpretation of Art. 9 of the Indian Independence Order 1947, it is clear that that Article has some reference to S. 178, Government of India Act, 1935, where the same words "loans, guarantees and other financial obligations" are also used. It would appear from the Government of India Act in the subsequent sections that obligations considered in that connection are obligations which are charged upon the revenue or which are in the nature of grants etc. The word 'financial' in 'financial obligation' has got to be given its technical meaning which it has in connection with matters of revenue and it cannot be given the wide meaning as equivalent to any kind of pecuniary liability. Further, it would appear that pecuniary liabilities arising out of different kinds of transactions have already been provided in the Act and if 'financial obligations' were not taken in a restricted technical sense, it would have been more appropriate to mention pecuniary liabilities except those already provided for in the other sections. We are therefore of opinion that ejusdem generis meaning is to be preferred in the present case and the interpretation put upon the Article previously by the Divisional Bench was the correct interpretation.

[4] The Indian Independence Order, 1947, proceeds to assign rights and liabilities between the different provinces created as a result of partition of Bengal and the Punjab and between the other Governments and in that connection it deals first with property in which connection it makes provisions for land, bank notes, coins etc. and then as regards other properties. It next goes on to deal with contractual rights and liabilities. Then it deals with liabilities which are connected with revenue matters, namely, loans, guarantees and other financial obligations and finally it deals with liabilities arising out of Tort or Wrongs done. After making these broad divisions and assigning rights and liabilities under different heads, in Art. 12 it provides for substitution in pending proceedings in connection with different kinds of rights and liabilities and again mentions all the broad heads we have pointed out. The broad head under which, it is contended by Mr. Chatterjee appearing on behalf of the petitioners, we should consider the present case is legal proceeding with respect to property." We have already pointed out that property has been taken to include land and other kinds of properties mentioned in the previous Articles. The question of compensation for acquisition of land is a question with respect to the value of land and therefore it is a legal proceeding with respect to land or with respect to property. "Lagal Proceeding" and "with respect to land" must be given a wide interpretation, and therefore under Art. 12 of the Indian Independence Order of 1947 the liability was of the successor Government which has obtained that property on partition. There can be no doubt that the lands in West Bengal in the sub-division of Asansol in the District of Burdwan have fallen within the Province of West Bengal and therefore in the present case the Province of West Bengal now represented by the State of West Bengal was to be substituted in place of the previous Province of Bengal and the District Judge was therefore not right in holding that the Land Acquisition proceedings could not continue against the Province of West Bengal.

(5) The Rules are made absolute. The Province of West Bengal in all these proceedings is to be substituted in place of the previous Province of Bengal.

[6] The petitioners will get their costs of these Rules. Leave to appeal is refused.

When the law says "neglects or refuses to maintain", it cannot but mean "neglects or refuses to maintain properly". Where, therefore, a Magistrate finds that the maintenance which had been given by the husband is inadequate he has jurisdiction to pass proper order under S. 488 (1).

The word "child" has been deliberately used to leave the Courts free to order maintenance for such sons and daughters as are unable to earn livelihood for themselves, having due regard to the class of society to which they belong and other surrounding circumstances. The fact, therefore, that the son is 17, 18 or 19 is no ground for refusing maintenance on his account.

Das Gupta J. — This reference was made by the Sessions Judge of Burdwan recommending that an order passed by the learned Magistrate, Asansol, directing payment of Rs. 60 8 0 per month and 11 Sali Bhati rice and 2 Sali of other variety of rice or its money equivalent per year to his wife Sm. Purnasashi Devi for her maintenance and the maintenance of his legitimate child by her should be set aside.

[2] Three grounds have been put forward by the learned Judge for his recommendation. The first is that as the learned Magistrate was of the view that the maintenance had been paid but the rate was inadequate, it could not in law be said that the husband had neglected or refused to maintain his wife. In my judgment, this ground cannot prevail. When the law says "neglects or refuses to maintain", it cannot; but mean "neglects or refuses to maintain properly." Suppose one rupee was paid for the maintenance of a wife for a month, that would be paying some amount of maintenance, but it would be ridiculous to suggest that that in such maintenance which would stand in the way of the operation of S. 488, Criminal P. C. In this case, the learned Magistrate found that the maintenance which had been given by the husband was inadequate. He had jurisdiction to pass proper order under S. 488 (1), Criminal P. O.

[3] The second ground is that "maintenance" includes food, clothing and lodging and it does not include cost of education. Even if the costs of education were left out, it does not seem to me that the amount ordered by the learned Magistrate in this case could be considered to be too high. But I do not see why the cost of ordinary education should not in the case of a middle class family be considered to form part of maintenance. It may be that when the case of a person of the cultivator class is being consider. ed, any education more than primary education should not be considered to form part of maintenance, but the case of middle class families is different. I am unable to agree with the learned Judge that in no case can maintenance be thought to include anything more than food, clothing and lodging.

[4] The third ground is that while S. 488, Criminal P. C. empowers the Magistrate to fix a monthly allowance for the maintenance, the learned Magistrate had acted illegally in directing annual payment of the paddy. In my opinion, the learned Judge was right in this criticism of the learned Magistrate's order. The operative portion of S. 488, Criminal P. C. is in these words:

".... order such person to make a monthly allowance for the maintenance of his wife or such child, at such monthly rate, not exceeding one hundred rupees in the whole, as such Magistrate thinks fit, and to pay the same to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs."

[5] There is no provision for an order of payment of annual allowance, or any kind of annual rayment.

[6] It was contended by Mr. Dutt on behalf of the husband that as the son on whose behalf maintenance has been asked for is aged 17 or 18 or 19, he does not come within the meaning of "child" under S. 488, Criminal P. C. If it was intended to limit the maintenance to sons or daughters upto a certain age, there seems no reason why the Legislature did not make use of explicit words to give effect to that intention. It seems to me that the word "child" has been deliberately used to leave the Courts free to order maintenance for such sons and daughters as are unable to earn livelihood for themselves, having due regard to their class of society to which they belong and other surrounding circumstances. The fact, therefore, that the son is 17 or 18 or 19 is, in my opinion, no ground for refusing maintenance on his account.

[7] In this view of the matter, I would maintain the order passed by the learned Magistrate with this modification orly that I would order payment of a lump sum money per month instead of Rs. 60-80 per month and 11 Sali Bhati rice and 2 Sals of other variety of rice or its money equivalent per year as ordered by him. On consideration of all the circumstances, it seems to me that the proper order to make is that the petitioner must pay Rs. 90 per month on account of the maintenance of his wife and child to his wife Sm. Purna Sashi Davi and I would order accordingly. This order will take effect from the date of the petition under S. 483, Criminal P. C.

Order. - This is a Rule against an order passed in appeal purporting to be made under S. 16, West Bengal Rent Control Act, 1948. The landlord brought a suit for rent on 5th May 1918. The Act in question came into force on 1st December 1948. The decision of the trial Court was made on 14th February 1948.

[2] The short point taken before me is that as the suit began before the new Act came into force the suit itself is not one under S. 16 (1) of the Act and therefore there was no appeal under S. 16 (2). The point does not appear to have been taken in the lower appellate Court. It could only be said that the suit was one covered by S. 16 (1) of the Act if it be held that the words "or tried by" in that section which says "that no suit or proceeding by a landlord against a tenant for the recovery of rent or possession of any premises which the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta is competent to try, shall be instituted or tried by any Court other than the said Court of Small Causes of Calcutta" are applicable to pending proceedings. The point was considered in the case of Amulya Ratan v. Megh Mala, 58 C. W. N. 474 but it was not necessary for it to be decided then. That case related to a proceeding which was pending in the High Court and it was pointed out by the Hon'ble the Chief Justice that if the section applied to pending proceedings one would have expected provision in that Act as to what was to happen to pending proceedings in the High Court which by the provision of S. 16 (1), if so interpreted, were put an end to. I have been referred to the case of Sadar Ali v. Dalimuddin, 56 cal. 512: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 cal. 6:0 F.B.) but that dealt with the effect of the amendment of the Letters Patent by which the right of appeal previously existing was taken away. I am of opinion that it cannot be said that S. 16 (1) of the Act in question was intended to apply to pending proceedings. Consequently S. 16 (2) does not apply. No right of appeal was given in pending cases, that is to say, in the present case.

- [3] The result is that the Bench of three Judges of the Small Cause Court had no juris diction to hear the present appeal. The plaintiff had some right under S. 38, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, and this appeal should be treated as an application thereunder and dealt with accordingly.
- (4) The order of the Bench is accordingly set aside and the case is remanded to the Small Cause Court to be treated as one under S. 28, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. There will be no order as to costs.

Sections 34 to 37 relate to a certificate which has been duly made but which is defective for some of the reasons mentioned in those sections. They have no application to a case when it is alleged that the certificate is a nullity. A suit for a declaration that the certificate was a nullity and not binding on the plaintiffs would be governed by the provisions of Art. 120, Limitation Act and not by S. 34 and would also be not barred by reason of any of the Ss. 35 to 37.

The word majority in S. 10 (5) includes unanimity. Thus where only one co-sharer appears and the rest do not, even though served with a notice, and the persons appearing is willing to take the settlement, the persons not, appearing are bound by his decision. In such a case the conduct in abstaining from appearing would indicate their willingness to abide by the decision of the majority, in this case unanimity of one person: 48 G. W. N. 730, Rel. on. Sub-section (5) to S. 10 imposes a liability on the 'interest and estate' for the revenue but it does not my that this is the only liability. Further, the arrears due constitute Government revenue and they constitute 'a. public demand' as defined in S. 3 (6), Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, read with Sch. 1 of the Act. A certificate under the last mentioned Act may be issued by the Collector for the recovery of such arrears and it may be executed in any of the ways mentioned in S. 14, i. e. by attachment or sale of any property of the certificate debtor, by his arrest or by the other methods mentioned therein. It cannot therefore be argued that the certificate debtor is not personally liable for the arrears of the revenue under 8. 10 (5). Para IOA

(h) Bengal Land Revenue Settlement Regulation (VII [7] of 1822), Ss. 10, 3 — Accreted land—Proprietors refusing settlement—Governmentfarming out land for certain period—Malikana paid to proprietors—Fresh Settlement, if can be offered after expiration of lease, to the proprietors—Payament of malikana, effect.

The fact that the accreted land is, under S. 3. Bengal Land Revenue Settlement Regulation, 1622 les out in farm or the fact that the land is taken in khas possession by the Government on the ground of the refusal of the proprietors to accept the jama fixed by Government under S. 6, Bengal Alluvian and Diluvian Act, does not take away the proprietary interest of the owners of the Asli land in the accreted land. That interest remains and all that the letting out in farm or the taking of the khas possession by the Government amounts to is that the land is managed by Government on behalf of the proprietors. The fact that Malikana is paid to proprietors on such farming out or taking of khas possession by the Government would make it quite clear that the proprietors of the Asliland have a proprietary interest in the accreted land which would render them liable to be called upon to accept or refuse a fresh settlement under S. 10 of the Regulation at the termination of the period during which the land is held either in farm or in khas. They cannot say that by their refusal to accept the settlement in the beginning they have ceased to have any interest in the accreted land. A person to whom Malikana is paid in accordance with the provisions of Regn. VII [7] of 1822 is a proprietor. (The term "malikana" explained); 9 W. R. 102; 17 All. 1 (PC) and A I.R. —for Appellants.

Jajneswar Mazumdar, A.G. Pleader; Urukramdas Chakravarty and Benoy Krishna Ghose — for Repondents (1, 3 and 2 respectively.)

Sen J. — This is an appeal by the plaintiffs whose suit has been dismissed by both the Courts below.

[2] It will be necessary to state a few facts for the proper understanding of the matter which is before us for decision. Touzi No. 399 of Mahal Nawapara of the Nadia Collectorate is owned by the plaintiffs and defendants 2-11. Defendant 1 is the State of West Bengal. It is unnecessary to state the different shares held by the plaintiffs and defendants 2 to 11 in this Touzi. There was an accretion to this Touzi and that became Touzi No. 2645 Char Nawapara which was settled temporarily, that is, for a period of 15 years with the plaintiffs and defendants 2 to 11 in accordance with the provisions of Bengal Alluvion and Diluvian Act (Act IX [9] of 1847). Just before the term was coming to an end, the Collector of Nadia addressed the proprietors of the accreted Touzi asking them to take a fresh settlement. The plaintiffs refused to take fresh settlement. Thereupon the Collector farmed out the Touzi in favour of the Chetlangia Court of Wards which is defendant 3 for a period of one year pending the Revisional Settlement. On the expiry of that year, a fresh settlement had to be made with the former owners and according to the State of West Bengal such fresh settlement was made under S. 10 (5) of the Bengal Land Revenue Settlement Regulation 1822 with the original owners. I may mention at this stage that a great deal of controversy has been raised by the plaintiffs as to whether the fresh settlement was legal, or whether it was at all binding on the plaintiffs. I shall deal with this controversy later. After this alleged fresh settle. ment, the accreted Touzi, namely, Touzi No. 2645 of Char Nawapara, fell into arrears of revenue and it was put up for sale and purchased by the State of West Bengal. The amount realised by the sale was not sufficient to meet the arrears. Thereupon, in accordance with the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act (Bengal Act III [3] of 1913) a certificate was issued for the arrears against the alleged defaulting proprietors. The plaintiffs then instituted the present suit.

- [3] The plaintiffs' case was that the certificate is null and void and unenforceable against them for various reasons. I shall state only those reasons which were pressed before this Court. They are as follows:
- (i) In accordance with the provisions of S. 10
 (4) of the aforesaid Regulation of 1822 it was incumbent upon the Collector to issue a notice as well as to promulgate a proclamation requiring the parties to whom the fresh settlement was being offered to attend and declare their agreement or non-agreement to the jama proposed to be assessed on the land. It is argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that no notice was issued, nor was there any proclamation made.
- (ii) According to the provisions of S. 10 (5) of the aforesaid Regulation, when a fresh settlement is offered if any person or parsons, summoned to appear and to express his or their agreement or disagreement, omit to attend, he or they shall be bound by the decision of the majority of those who may attend and agree or disagree to the jama. In this case, the plaintiffs point out that one person only attended, namely, defendant 3 and that there could, therefore, be no majority. In these circumstances, it is argued, the plaintiffs would not be bound by the acceptance of the settlement by defendant 3.

As a subsidiary point, it was argued that, even if the plaintiffs were bound by the decision of defendant 3, if the revenue fell into arrears, the plaintiffs' interest in the Touzi only would be liable for the arrears and the plaintiffs would not be personally liable.

(iii) The third point argued was this: After the expiration of the period of 15 years when the time came for making a fresh settlement, the plaintiffs refused to take a fresh settlement and the Collector farmed out the Touzi to defendant 3, the plaintiffs getting merely a Malikana in respect of the Touzi. By reason of this act of the Collector, the plaintiffs ceased to have any rights or liabilities as proprietors of the Touzi, and not having any joint property in the Touzi they were not liable to be asked to take fresh settlement, nor were they liable to be bound by a fresh settlement being taken by the majority of persons attending pursuant to a notice issued under S. 10 (4) of the aforesaid Regulation of 1822.

[4] These are points which have been argued before us.

[5] As stated before both the Courts below dismissed the suit. The suit was dismissed not only on the merits but also on the ground that it was barred by limitation by reason of the provisions of S. 34, Public Demands Recovery Act, and also barred by the provisions of Ss. 35, 36 and 37 of the last mentioned Act.

[6] I shall deal first with the question whether the suit is barred by limitation or otherwise by reason of the provisions of Ss. 34 to 37, Public Demands Recovery Act. In my opinion, none of the sections relied upon by the Courts below have any application. The plaintiffs' suit was for a declaration that the certificate was a nullity. The sections relied upon by the Court below relate to a certificate which has been duly made but which is defective for some of the reasons mentioned in those sections. They have no application to a case when it is alleged that the certificate is a nullity as in the present case. The suit, in my opinion, would be governed by the provisions of Art. 120, Limitation Act and is, therefore, well within time. It is also not barred by reason of any of the other provisions lof the sections above mentioned for the reasons just stated.

Courts below have found as a matter of fact that notice was served upon the plaintiffs and all the other defendants who were required to be served with notice. The learned Judge has given his reasons for coming to this conclusion and on second appeal I can find no justification for interfering with such a finding of fact. I hold, therefore, that the notice was duly served upon the plaintiffs and the others to whom re-cettlement was being offered.

I find that this point was not taken in the pleadings, nor was it argued in the trial Court. It was not taken in the grounds of appeal before the first appellate Court, nor was it argued there. In this Court in the grounds of appeal no such specific point has been taken. This is a pure question of fact and on second appeal I do not see why I should entertain such a question when it was never argued in the Courts below. I must presume that official acts were duly performed when nothing is alleged denying such performance. The first ground, therefore, fails.

[9] As regards the second ground, I am of opinion, that it is not tenable. The defendant 3 did appear and agree to the settlement. The plaintiffs and the other defendants did not trouble to attend. Their conduct, having regard to the provisions of S. 10 (5) of the aforesaid Regulation of 1822 indicated that they would be willing to be bound by the decision of the majority of the persons who did appear. Mr. Sen argued that when one person appeared there could be no majority. The same argument would hold good if two persons appeared, then also there could be no majority. Carried to its logical conclusion, if all of several persons who appeared agreed or disagreed to take a settlement, then also there would be no majority, because there would be a unanimity. This illustrates the unsoundness of the argument propounded on behalf of the plaintiffs. The word 'majority' would include unanimity. If one person appears, the decision is unanimous and therefore it would bind the others. Mr. Sen very fairly drew our attention to the decision in the case of Naresh Chandra v. Sm. Snehalata Guha, 47 C. W. N. 730, where Rau J. held that one person appearing and accepting the jama offered by the Collector bound the others by reason of the provisions of S. 10 (5) of the aforesaid Regulation. The second point, therefore, fails.

(10) The subsidiary point raised by Mr. Sen on behalf of the appellants that although their interest in the estate may be liable for the arrears of revenue they cannot be held personally liable is based on the latter part of subs. (5) of S. 10, Bengal Land Revenue Settlement Regulation, 1822. The passage he relies on is in these terms:

"And his or their interests and estate shall, unless otherwise specially allowed, be held responsible for the Government revenue and be liable to sale in the event of any arrear accruing on account of the settlement." Mr. Sen suggests that this passage indicates that the method therein mentioned is the only method open to Government to realise its dues. In my opinion there is nothing in the sub-section to justify such a view. The sub-section imposes a liability on the 'interest and estate' for the revenue but it does not say that this is the only liability. Further the arrears due constitute Government revenue and they constitute 'a public demand' as defined in S. 3 (6), Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, read with Sch. 1 of the Act. A certificate under the last mentioned Act may be issued by the Collector for the recovery of such arrears and it may be executed in any of the ways mentioned in S. 14, i.e , by attachment or sale of any property of the certificate debtor by his arrest or by the other methods mentioned therein. There is therefore no substance in this subsidiary point raised on behalf of the plaintiff.

of Mr Sen seems to be that when the plaintiffs refused to take a fresh settlement on the expiry of 15 years, they ceased to have any further interest in the accreted touzi and therefore they were not liable to be called on to take a fresh settlement under the provisions of s. 10 of the aforesaid Regulation He argued that all their interest ceased to exist in the accreted touzi and they could in no sense be held to have any proprietary right therein. In my opinion, this argument must also fail. When land is gained by gradual accession, it shall be considered to be part of the estate to which it is annexed. This is clear from the provisions of S. 4, Bengal Alluvion and Diluvian Regulation XI [11] of 1825. Thus this recreted touzi became part of the zemindary which was Touzi No. 399 of Mahal Nawapara of the Nadia Collectorate and the proprietors of the zemindary which may be called the Asli memindary became proprietors of the accreted Sauzi, subject to their paying such revenue as Government was entitled to fix for the accreted douzi. The right of Government to fix the revenue for such alluvial land is to be found in the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvian Act, 1847 (Central Act IX [9] of 1847). Section 6 provides for it. Now if the proprietors of the Aeli touzi de not agree to pay the revenue fixed, then the Government is entitled either to settle the land in farm or to take khas possession of the land and manage it. In either of these cases, the Government is bound to pay the proprietors "Malikana". This is provided for in S. 3, Bengal Land Bevenue Settlement Regulation, 1822, and an 8.5 of the same Regulation. The Government however, cannot let out the land in farm, or take khas possession of it for any term exceeding 12 years. It is quite clear from these provisions that after the expiry of the farming lease, if the land is let in farm, or after the expiry of the period for which the Government had decided to take khas possession, the Government is again bound to offer the accreted touzi to the proprietors for taking a fresh settlement on such jama as the Government fixes. If again the proprietors refuse to take settlement, the land would be let out in farm, or taken in khas possession for such period as the Government thought fit not exceeding 12 years. On the expiry of such period, there would again have to be an offer for a fresh settlement and so on. It is quite clear from the provisions of these sections that the fact that the land is let out in farm or the fact that the land is taken in khas possession by the Government on the ground of the refusal of the proprietors to accept the jama fixed by Government does not take away the proprietary interest of the owners of the Asli land in the accreted land. That interest remains and all that the letting out in farm or the taking of khas possession by the Government amounts to is that the land is managed by Government on behalf of the proprietors The fact that Malikana is paid to proprietors would make it quite clear that the proprietors of the Asli land have a proprietary interest in the accreted land which would render them liable to be called upon to accept or refuse a fresh settlement at the termination of the period dur. ing which the land is held either in farm or in khas. The term 'Malikana' has been defined in Wilson's Glossary edited by Mr. A. C. Ganguli and Mr. N. D. Basu (vide pp. 511 to 513). In one passage Malikana has been defined as "Pertaining or relating to the Malik or proprietor, as his right or due." It is also defined as "an allowance assigned to a zemindar or to a proprietary cultivator, who from some cause, as failure in paying his revenue, or declining to accede to the rate at which his lands are assessed, is set aside from the management of the estate, and the collection and payment of the revenue to Government, which offices are either transferred to another person, or taken under the management of the Government Collector." This definition clearly shows that a person to whom Malikana is paid in accordance with the provisions of Regulation VII of 1822 is a proprietor. Malikana has also been defined as an inalienable right of proprietorship.

[12] In this connection I would refer to the decision of this Court in the case of Herranund Shoo v. Ozserun, 9 W. R. 102, where it was held in a special appeal that the right to Malikana is a proprietary right constituting an interest in the land and that it is not the same as rent.

[13] I would also refer to the case of Deo Kuar v. Man Kuar, 21 I. A. 148 at p. 161: (17 ALL. 1 P. C.) where Malikana is defined as an allowance made to proprietors who have been dispossessed by Government for the reasons stated in that case. It is thus clear that Malikana is a sum which is received by a proprietor. It is true that the proprietors may not be in possession, but they are proprietors nevertheless.

[14] I would also refer to the case of Mahendra Narayan v. Abdul Gafur, 35 C. W. N. 1233 at p. 1235 : (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 49). This case was relied upon by the plaintiffs as supporting their contention. I am of opinion that it does not do so. It was observed by Suhrawardy J. at p. 1235 that Malikana is a grant of a portion of the revenue in view of the pre-existing proprietary rights. It was argued that the words pre-existing proprietary rights' meant that those rights did not exist when Malikana was granted. That is a wrong interpretation. What was meant was that Malikana is an amount which is payable because of the already existing proprietary right in the person to whom Malikana is granted. The passage does not mean that the proprietary right which had existed from before ceased to exist upon the grant of Malikana.

appearing in the judgment of this Court in the case of Soudamini Dassya v. The Secy. of State, 50 Cal. 822: (A I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 197). The passage appears at p. 838. We have read the passage and we do not think that it has any reference to the facts of the present case. The facts there were entirely different. In that case there had been an accretion to a zemindary and it was assessed to revenue, but the proprietor of the zemindary refused to take settlement with the result that the accreted lands were constituted into a new estate which was permanently settled with the holder of another zemindary That person became proprietor of the new estate which had become a separate estate independent of the old estate in all respects. In these circumstances, it was held that the Malikana paid to the original zemindars did not indicate that he had a proprietary right in the accreted lands. The settlement of the accreted lands was made under S. 1 of Act XXI [21] of 1853. The present cass is quite different. The plaintiff's received Malikana in respect of the accreted land while it was let out in farm for a period of one year to defendant 3 on the plaintiff's refusing to take re.settlement. The accreted land was not constituted into a separate estate and permanently settled with any one. No new proprietor was given the land. Thus the plaintiffs' proprietary right in the accreted land remained in them and because they had such proprietary right Malikana was paid to them. Malikana was paid to the plaintiffs under quite a different law from that under which Malikana was paid in the case of Soudamini Dassya v. The Secy. of State, 50 cal. 812 : (A I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 197) where the accreted land was created into a new permanent estate and settled with a person other than the original zemindar as proprietor.

[16] If the matter is looked at from another point of view, I think that it would be evident that the plaintiffs had a proprietary interest in the accreted Touzi. A Touzi cannot exist without a proprietor. Somebody must therefore fulfil the position of a proprietor. Obviously the holder of the farming lease is not the proprietor. If Government takes khas possession for purposes of management it cannot be the proprietor. The proprietor must necessarily be the person on whose behalf khas possession is taken or on whose behalf rent is farmed. In other words, the plaintiffs and his co-sharers must be the proprietors.

(17) I hold, therefore, that the plaintiffs held a joint interest in the accreted Touzi and that the Government was bound to offer sattlement to them and the other co-sharers in accordance with the procedure laid down in S. 10 of the Bengal Land Revenue Settlement Regulation VII (7) of 1822. The plaintiffs, therefore, are bound by the acceptance of the settlement by defendant 3 and consequently they are liable to pay the revenue for the land. That revenue not having been paid, the land was rightly put up for sale and as the sale proceeds were not sufficient, the Collector was justified in issuing a certificate against the plaintiffs.

[18] In my opinion, the Courts below were right in dismissing the suit. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs in favour of defendant respondent 1.

Das Gupta J. — This Rule was obtained by these petitioners against an order of Mr. G. Kumar, Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, convicting the petitioners under S 116/161, Penal Code, and sentencing them to rigorous imprisonment for six months, each.

[2] A preliminary point has been taken by Mr. Talukdar on behalf of the petitioners that the trial has been vitiated by the fact that the charge on which the petitioners were originally tried was altered after arguments of both sides had been heard and immediately before judgment was delivered, on 13th February 1950. The charge originally framed was in these words:

"That you, on or about the 21st day of April 1949, at Calcutta abetted the commission by one Sri Kedar Nath Sett, Civil Supply Officer, a public servant in the department of Civil Supplies, of an offence under S. 161, Penal Code, punishable with imprisonment for accepting Rs. 100, a gratification other than legal remuneration, as a motive for forb aring to do an official act, viz., to mend the adverse note Et. I made by the aforesaid officer in his inspection book which said offence was not committed in consequence of the abetment, and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 161/116. Penal Code., and within my cognizance....."

[8] From Order No. 15, dated 13th February 1950, it appears that at the time of writing judgment, it appeared to the learned Magistrate that the charge framed was not happily worded and so he altered the charge. The order continues in these words:

"As the alteration is purely a technical one, it is not likely to prejudice the accused if the case be proceeded with immediately. So, judgment will be delivered to-day at 3.30 p. m."

[4] The charge as altered reads thus :

That you, on the 21st day of April 1949, at Keventer's Milk Shop, New Market, Calcutta, abetted the commission by Sri Kedar Nath Sett, an Inspector of the Civil Supply Department, of an offence under S. 161, Penal Code, by offering him Ex. 1, a 100 rupee C/N, as illegal gratification, so that he might be induced to change his inspection report dated 24th April 1949 (Ex. 2), and thereby committed "

[5] It appears that this amended charge was read over and explained to both the accused and that they pleaded not guilty. After this plea of not guilty of the accused, it appears, without any further examination of any witness or any further argument, the learned Magistrate delivered his judgment convicting and sentencing the petitioners as stated above.

[6] In his explanation to the Rule, the learned Magistrate has said that the original charge was not at all materially altered by the newly framed charge, that only the wording of the charge was changed and as in his opinion, the accused were not likely to be prejudiced in their defence, he proceeded immediately and delivered the judgment.

[7] Section 227, Criminal P. C., authorises any Court to alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment is pronounced and provides that every such alteration or addition shall be read and explained to the accused.

[8] Section 228, Criminal P. C., provides that if the alteration or addition is such that proceeding immediately with the trial is not likely to prejudice the accused in his defence, the Court may, in its discretion, after such alteration or addition has been made, proceed with the trial as if the altered charge had been the original charge.

[9] Section 229, Criminal P. C., provides that if the altered charge is such that proceeding immediately with the trial is likely, in the opinion of the Court, to prejudice the accused or the prosecutor, the Court may direct a new trial.

[10] Section 231, Criminal P. C., provides that whenever a charge is altered or added to by the Court after the commencement of the trial, the prosecutor and the accused shall be allowed to re-call or re-summon and examine with reference to such alteration or addition any witness who may have been examined and also to call any further witness whom the Court may think to be material.

(11) It has to be noticed that while S. 227, Criminal P. C., by itself only requires that every such alteration shall be read and explained to the accused, the learned Magistrate did not merely read and explain to the accused but apparently asked them whether they were guilty and the accused said that they were not guilty of the charge as altered. This plea of guilty or not is taken under S. 255, Criminal P. C., and after this has been done, the procedure which has to be followed is laid down in S. 256 and in the subsequent sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Magistrate that no material alteration was made in the charge by the change which he did effect, but the fact remains that he did take a new plea of the accused and so in spite of the fact that he might have proceeded under S. 228, Criminal P. C., as if the altered charge was the original charge, he did not so proceed. As soon as he took a new plea of the accused to the charge, he ought to have followed the procedure as laid down in S. 256 and the subsequent sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure. In my opinion, the preliminary point taken should prevail.

[13] I would, therefore, set aside the order of convictions and sentences passed upon the accused and remand the case to the learned Magistrate for re-trial from the stage where the accused's plea was taken. The trial should be by some Magistrate other than Mr. G. Kumar.

[14] Let the petitioners continue on the same bail.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 17 - Amendment by adding new ground of relief.

The general rule is that amendment should be generously allowed unless such amendments would cause prejudice to the defendant by reason of surprise or by reason of the fact that the amended claim had become barred by limitation or similar other reasons.

[Para 8]

Where the plaintiff sues in ejectment on the ground of the termination of the tenancy by notice to quit, an additional ground of relief, namely, the non-payment of rent for three consecutive months under the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, does not alter the character of the suit and can [Para 3] be allowed.

Order .- This rule has been obtained by the defendant against an order allowing the plaintiff to amend his plaint.

[2] The facts are these. The plaintiff instituted a suit in ejectment against the defendant when the West Bongal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1949, was not in force. His suit was based on a notice to quit and the bar to the recovery of possession which had been laid down in the Oalcutta Rent Ordinance, 1916, then in force was sought to be removed by the plea that the plaintiff required the premises bona fide for his own use and cccupation. While the suit was pending, the present Act (The West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948) came into force. Section 12 (3) of the present Act lays down that if a tenant fails for three consecutive months to pay or deposit in accordance with the provisions of this Act any rent paya. ble by him in respect of any premises which has accrued due after the commencement of this Act, the interest of the tenant in such premises shall on such failure be ipso facto determined and he shall no longer be deemed to be a tenant. The plaintiff applied to amend his plaint by an averment to the effect that the defendant had failed to pay rent for three consecutive months and that by reason of the provisions of S. 12 (3) of the aforesaid Act the tenancy had terminated ipso facto. This prayer for amendment was resisted, but the Court below had allowed it.

[3] Learned advocate appearing on behalf of the petitioner contends that this amendment should not be allowed as it changes the nature of the suit and that it introduces a new cause of action and he has cited certain cases before me in support of this view. In my opinion each case must be decided upon its own particular facts. The general rule is that amendments should be generously allowed unless such amendments would cause prejudice to the defendant by reason of surprise or by reason of the fact that the amended claim had become barred by llimitation or similar other reasons. I do not wish to lay down any general principle or state any exhaustive list of conditions under which an amendment may be allowed or disallowed. I would say that in the present case the amendment does not alter the plaintiff's case at all. The plaintiff has sued in ejectment and the suit still remains a suit in ejectment. The cause of action has also not been altered. The plaintiff's cause of action in the original suit was the termination of the tenancy. The plaintiff is relying upon the same cause of action. He is only adding an additional ground in support of his case that the tenancy has ceased. In the ori:

ginal plaint his case was that the tenancy had been terminated by a notice to quit. In the present case by an amendment he wishes to add another ground upon which the tenancy has been terminated namely the ground of non-payment of rent for three consecutive months. Whether this ground can be allowed to prevail or not is a matter which will be decided in suit. I express no opinion on that point. I can, however, see no reason why the plaintiff should be prevented from stating this ground in his plaint by way of amendment. It is suggested by learned advocate for the petitioner that the suit should be fought out upon the original ground alleged in the plaint and that if the plaintiff fails, he may be entitled to file a fresh suit on the additional ground now sought to be taken by way of ameniment. I think that to accede to this prayer would be to encourage multiplicity of suits. This should be avoided wherever possible.

[4] In these circumstances I uphold the decision of the Court below and discharge this rule with costs.

[Para 17] (d) Hindu law - Succession - Dayabhaga -Degraded woman - Succession to stridhan of prostitute sister.

Under the Bengal school of Hindu law a degraded woman does not succeed to the stridhau property of her degraded sister: 25 Oal. 254, Approved.

Hiralal Chakravarty and Syamalas Bhattacharya - for Appellant. Jajneswar Majumdar - for Respondent.

G. N. Das J .- This appeal is directed against a decision of Mr. B. C. Nandy Majumdar, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court. Alipore, dated 12th November 1949, revoking the grant of letters of administration to the appellant.

- [2] The facts are not in controversy and are as follows: The appellant Charubala and Santamani were sisters. They belonged to the Kaibarta caste. They were widows and subsequently lapsed into prostitution. The said Santamani died on 15th January 1946. At the time of her death she owned and possessed premises No. 6A Nabu Roy Lane, Calcutta. On 6th april 1946 the appellant made an application for the grant of letters of administration to the estate of Santamani. This was registered as Letters of Administration case No. 51 of 1946.
- [3] Thereafter Butto Krishna Saba and Atul Krishna Saba, set up a Will alleged to have been executed by Santamani. This was registered as Letters of Administration Case No. 54 of 1946. Charu Bala filed an objection. The application was dismissed on 2nd June 1917 on the finding that the Will was a forgery. But Krishna and Atul filed an appeal to this Court. being F. A. 295 of 1917. In the meantime Letters of Administration Case No. 51 of 1946 had been stayed. This was preceded with, as a result of the dismissal of Letters of Administration Case No. 51 of 1946 and an order for the grant of letters of administration was made on 18th June 1917 and the letters of administration were issued to the appellant.
- [4] The aforesaid First Appeal No. 296 of 1947 was dismissed on 21st January 1949. In the course of the hearing (Ex. C.3) this Court directed the issue of a notice on the Senior Government Pleader so that he might appear and take note of the proceedings in view of the fact that Charubala could not be the heir of her sister and the estate may go to the Crown by escheat. Accordingly the respondent Province of Bengal claiming title to the estate of Santamani, initiated proceedings under S. 263, Succession Act, for revocation of the grant of letters of administration to the appellant on the ground that the grant had been obtained by a false suggestion that Charubala was an heir of Santamani, suppressing the fact that Santamani was a prostitute and on the further ground that the proceedings to obtain the grant were defective in substance because no citation was issued to the respondent, the latter being entitled to the estate of Santamani by way of escheat.
- [5] The appellant filed an objection on the ground that the respondent, the applicant for revocation of the grant, had no locus standi to make the application inasmuch as the appellant was an heir to the estate of Santamani, and the respondent could not take by way of escheat.

- [6] The principal issue which arose was whether the appellant succeeded to her sister Santamani.
- [7] The Court below held that the appellant was not an heir to her degraded sister Santamani and on this finding, revoked the grant. The present appeal is directed against the order revoking the grant.
- [8] Mr. Hiralal Chakravarty appearing for the appellant ultimately limited his contention to the sole ground that under the Dayabhaga law a degraded sister inherits the stridhan of her degraded sister, the parties not belonging to the twice-bora class and that accordingly the Crown could not take by way of escheat and had no locus standi to apply for revocation of the grant of letters of administration, to the appellant.
- (9) The right of the Crown to take by escheat the property of a Hindu subject, though a Brahmin, dying without heirs was firmly established in the case of the Collector of Masulipitam v. Cavely Venkata Narrainapah, 8 M. I. A. 500 at pp. 526-527: (2 W. R. 59 (P. C.)). An attempt to curtail the right of the Crown by limiting its application only to cases of entire absence of blood relations was put down by this Court in Satish Chandra v. Haridas Mitra, 88 C. W. N. 98 at p. 100: (A I.R. (21) 1934 Cal. 399).
- [10] The question, therefore, remains whether the appellant is an heir to her degraded sister Santamani under the Dayabhaga School of Hindu law.
- [11] The Assistant Government Pleader who appeared for the Province of Bengal, submitted that the point was covered by the decision in Sarnamyes Bewa v. Secy. of State, 25 Cal. 251: (2 C. W. N. 97).
- [12] Mr. Chakravarty fairly admitted that the point now raised was directly decided in that case. He however, submitted that the decision in that case proceeded on a concession made by Mr. Golap Chandra Sarkar, learned vakil appearing for the appellant.

[13] It may be conceded that the decision, if it had been based merely on the concession of the learned vakil, would not have been binding on us: Omrit Koomaree v. Luckhes Narain, 10 W.R. 76 at p. 80: (2 Beng. L. R. 28 (F.B.)).

[14] Turning however, to the decision itself, it appears that it did not proceed merely on concession of the learned wakil. Reference may be made to the following passages in the judgment:

"It is conceded, as it must be, that if the Hindu Law of the Bengal School; and that according to the law of that school the sister is no heir" (p. 255).

"Moreover it would be a strange anomaly, that though the sister is no beir to a female proprietor under the Bengal School of Hindu Law, if they remain undegraded, yet if they both lapse into prostitution, the one becomes an heir to the other, quite apart from custom" (p. 256).

[15] We are, therefore, bound by the decision and this appeal must be dismissed unless we hold that the view taken in that case is wrong and that the matter should be referred to a Full Bench.

[16] We have, therefore, to consider whether the view taken by Macleon C. J. and Banerji J. in Sarnamoyee's case, (25 Cal. 254: 2 C. W. N. 97) was wrong.

admittedly governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law. It is now settled that the mere fact that a Hindu woman has adopted the life of a prostitute does not sever the tie which connects her to her kindred by blood, and that consequently the stridhan property of a Hindu woman who has adopted the life of a prostitute passes upon her death to her heirs under the Bengal School of Hindu Law. Harilal v. Tripura Charan, 40 cal. 650 at p. 677: (19 I. C. 129).

[18] The question, therefore, is whether under the Bengal School of Hindu Law a sister is an heir to the stridhan property of her sister.

[19] I shall begin my discussion of the question by a reference to the texts of the Bengal School.

[20] Dayabhaga, Chap. IV, deals with succession to woman's property. Section 2 deals with succession of a woman's children. Section 3 then deals with the succession to the separate property of a childless woman.

(21) The author then deals with the claims of certain specified relations, and concludes as follows:

"Again, on failure of these six, it must be understood, that the succession devolves on the father-in-law, the husband's elder brother and the rest, according to their nearness of kin (the nearest sapinda being the heir)" S. 39 (Colebrooke's translation).

(22) Paragraph 42 then says: "Thus has succession to the separate property of a childless woman been explained." The enumeration of heirs in Jimutvahan's Dayabhaga thus stops with the sapindas of the woman.

[23] The same is the case with Ragbunandan's

Dayotottwa, Ch. X, S. 88.

[24] Srikrishna Tarkalankar in his Dayak. rama Sangraha Ch. II, section VI §. 11 to 13 carries the line a little forward. I may quote the translation of the said paragraphs by F. M. Wynch except in regard to an omission made in paragraph (II) which is added in italics.

Paragraph (II)

In default of all sapindas, those allied by common oblation of water, and those descended from the same patriarch in the male line, succeed in the same order as in the case of the property of males.

Paragraph (12)

Failing all these, in the case of the property of a Brahmin woman, Brahmanas inhabitants of the same village, exceedingly learned in the vedas, are entitled to the succession.

Paragraph (13).

But in the case of the property of a woman of the Chatriya and other tribes, the king is exclusively entitled to the inheritance.

[25] It may be noted in passing that para. (12) must now be held to be inapplicable in view of the decision of the Lords of the Judicial Committee in the Collector of Masulipatam v. Cavely Venkata Narrainapah, 8 M. I. A. 500: (2 W. R. 53 P. O).

[26] Srikrishna, therefore, extends the line to sakuloyas, samanodakas, and samanoprobaras of the woman's husband. How far the paragraphs quoted above extended the line also to sapindas, sakulyas, samanodakas and samanoprabaras of the father of the woman is doubtful.

[27] Texts of Brihaspati and of Katyayana, both quoted in Raghunandan's Institutes (Udbawatattam) Vol. 11, p. 72 take opposite views, the former text negatives the right while the latter recognises the same. In Jagannath Tarcapanchanan's Digest translated by H. T. Colebrooke (1874 Ed.) Vol. 11, S 513 at p. 634, after setting forth the line of succession upto the fourteen persons ascending and descending from her husband (samanodaka) it is stated as follows:

"After these, her kindred on her father's side, as far as the tenth person; after them the family of her mother; and lastly, the King takes the estate, except the property of a Brahmani woman. This brief exposition may suffice."

[28] The above are all the texts bearing on the point. I shall now deal with the opinions of the text-book writers. Commenting on Jagan. nath's Digest, Sir Goroodas Banerji in Hindu law of Marriage and Stridhan (Tagore Law Lectures 1878) 5th Edn., Lecture XI, p 500 observes:

"Considering how auxiously the Hindu law tries to prevent escheat to the Crown, and bearing in mind the other reasons stated in the last lecture, I think it may be safely affirmed, on the authority of Jaganuath, that on failure of other heirs, a woman's kinsmen on the father's and mother's side succeed to her stridhan according to the Bengal School."

[29] Shyama Charan Sarkar in Vyavastha Darpan Vol. I (:rd Edn) 255, Ss. 806-809 limits the line to husband's samanodakas and does not extend the same to the woman's sapindas.

[90] In Cowell's Hindu law (Tagore Law Lectures 1871) Lecture X the line of succession to stridhana has not been traced beyond the children.

[31] In Mayne's Hindu law, 10th Ed. S. 639 p. 761 the line of inheritance to stridhana according to Dayabhaga school is thus carried forward:

"Failing them, her busband's sokulyas and samanodakas. Lastly according to Jagannatha, the father's Kinsmen come in as heirs, and after them, the mother's kinsmen."

[32] In West, Bubler and Majid's Hindu law of Inheritance etc. 4th Ed. Book I Ch IV B. Section 7 pp. 507.508 the inclination of the authors seems to be in favour of conceding the right to the woman's own kinsmen.

[33] In Mulla's Hindu law 9th Ed. S. 155, and S. 167 p. 149, p. 151 succession to Stridhana according to Dayabhaga has bean extended to (11) Husband's Sapindas, Sakulyas, Samanodakas (12) Father's kinsmen.

[34] Travelyan's Hindu law, 2nd Ed., P. 461 takes the same view.

(95) In Golap Chandra Sarkar's Hindu law 8th Ed. Ch. XIII S 6, p. 6:6, succession to both classes of Stridhana, according to Dayabhaga, goes upto (7) Husband's Sapindas (8) Father's kinamen.

[26] The text writers who have conceded the right to a woman's blood relations (kinsmen) as regards her own stridhan property base their opinion entirely on Jagannath's Digest. The authority of Jagannath's Digest (also spoken of as Colebrook's Digest), on questions of Hindu law is well established. It ranks only next to Jimutavahana, Raghunandan and Brikrishna, Katki v. Lakpati Pujan, 20 C w. N. 19 at p. 23: (A.I. R. (2) 1915 Cal 214), Kerry Kolitari v. Moniram Kolita, 19 W.R. 367: 13 Beng L. R. 1 F.B.).

[37] The Judicial decisions in this Court have however taken a view different from that of Jagannatha. In Sarnamoyee's case, 25 Cal. 254: (2 C. W. N. 97) a Division Bench, of which Sir Gooroodas Banerji J. was a member a view contrary to that of Jagannath was taken.

[38] The view so taken was followed in other cases in this Court. Thus in Sundari Dossee v. Nemye Charan, 6 C L J. 372 the claim of a sister's daughter to inherit the stridhana of her maternal aunt was negatived. Again in Satish Chandra v. Haridas Mitra, 38 C. W. N. 98:

(A. I. R. (21) 1934 Cal 399) the right of a sister's son's son to inherit the stridhana of a woman was negatived. Thus all the decisions in this Court take a view of the law which is contrary to the opinion expressed in Jagannath's Digest and do not recognise the right of inheritance of the father's relations of a woman in respect of her stridhana.

[39] Mr. Chakravarty referred us to the case of Narayan Pundalsk v. Lakshman Daji, 51 Bom. 784: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Bom. 456) where a sister was held to be an heir to the stridhana property of a prostitute. The reasoning of Patkar J. who delivered the judgment of the Court was that the prostitute might be regarded as a lower class than the Sudras, and that as the order of succession to the estate of a deceased prostitute was not laid down in the texts, the Courts ought to act according to rules of justice, equity and good conscience. Such rules for purposes of succession might be found in Manusanhita Chap. IX. verse 187 i.e. "To the nearest sapinda the inheritance shall belong" and that as the particles of the mother's body abound in the daughters, applying the principle of analogy the sisters should be regarded as sapinda of each other and of the mother.

[40] The above line of reasoning is inapplicable to cases governed by the Dayabhaga school of law for the following reasons: (1) In determining the succession to the stridhana property of a woman, the more accepted view is that it is regulated by the doctrines of spiritual efficacy except in certain specified cases, covered by express texts, Banerjee's Hindu Law of Marriage and Stridhan (Tagore Law Lecture 1878 Edn. 5 pp. 476 477, the claim of the sister cannot be supported on this principle. (2) The texts of the Dayabhaga which deal at length with succession to the stridhana property of a woman use the word Stri which, according to the Sabdakal adruma applies equally to un. degraded and degraded relations As such the texts of the Dayabhaga would be applicable. The result would then, be that a sister would not be entitled to succeed to her sister. (3) Sir Gooroodas Banerjee in Hindu Law Marriage and Stridhana (Tagore Law Lectures 1878) Edn. 5 pp. 458 459 opined that the texts of Dayabhaga would not apply to degraded woman. This is contrary to the observations of Mookerjee J., in Hiralal's case, 40 Cal 650 at p. 677: (19 1. C. 129 F.B). Even if we adopt the view of Sir Goorcodas Banerjee, the position would be that the case of succession to the stridhana property of a degraded woman would be unprovided for in the texts. In such a contingency, the Court would be justified in applying the analogous provisions of Hindu law. Mayne on Hindu Law Edn. 10 S 634 p. 763. In this view also the sister would not be heir to her sister.

[41] It is unprofitable to discuss cases governed by other schools of Hindu law, on the ground that they are founded on theories wholly divergent from those which underlie the Bengal School of Hindu Law.

[42] Even if we assume that Jagannath's view would apply, it is problematical whether the expressions 'father's or mother's kindred include a widowed and degraded sister under the Daya-bhaga School.

[43] The foregoing discussion does not induce us to dissent from the view taken in Swarna. moyee Bewa's case, 25 Cal. 251: (2 C. W. N. 97) which has been consistently followed in Bengal for about half a century.

[44] In my opinion, a degraded woman does not inherit the stridhana property of her degraded sister, under the Bengal School of Hindu Law.

[45] The appellant was, therefore, not an heir to her sister Santamoni. Accordingly the Province of Bengal had locus standi to apply for revocation of the grant of letters of administration to the appellant. The sole contention of the appellant must accordingly be overruled.

[46] The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs. Hearing fee 5 gold mohurs.

Ordinary Original Suit No. 4044 of 1949, D/- 5-4-1950.

Houses and Rents—West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, (XVII [17] of 1950), Ss. 16 and 18 (1) — High Court in Original Side, if has seisin of pending suits.

An elementary rule of construction of statutes is to reconcile, if possible, the apparent conflict between the two sections. Applying that rule and in order to bring S. 16 into harmony with S. 18 one has to read the word "or" in S. 16 as meaning "and." Unless this is so read, S. 18 will not mean what it says; and further, the section will be entirely robbed of its content, because there is no provision in this cumbrous statute for transfer of pending suits to Courts set out in Sch. B. The High Court in its Original Side has, therefore, seisin of suits which were filed under the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, (XXXVIII [33] of 1948) and were pending when the Rent Control Act of 1950 came into force. [Para 14]

Sridhar Chatterjee - toc Plaintiff.

T. P. Das -for Defendant.

Judgment.—This is a suit for ejectment on the ground of the tenancy having been determined ipso facto by reason of default in paying rent for three successive months. The suit was filed in September 1919 when the West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act of 1948 was in force.

(2) The plaintiff let out the premises concerned to the defendant as a monthly tenant with effect from 1st November 1948 at a rent of Rs. 200 per month. The terms of the tenancy were incorporated in a document which was executed on 17th October 1948.

[3] The plaintiff's case is that the defendant was very often in arrears with his rent and that he failed to pay any rent for June, July and august 1949. It was a term of the tenancy that rent should be paid in advance on or before the 15th of the current month. The defendant having thus defaulted in raying rent for three consecutive months, the plaintiff filed the present suit on 21st September 1949.

[4] The defendant's case as pleaded is that at the time of the agreement setting out the terms of the tenancy be paid to the plaintiff Rs. 1000 as salami and Rs. 100 as pleader's fees in connection with the agreement. According to him, he was subsequently advised that the payment of a salami was illegal and that the said sum of Rs. 1000 was refundable. His case further is that when in June 1919 he threatened the plaintiff with legal proceedings to recover the said amount, the parties, agreed that the said salami and the advance deposit of Rs. 200 which the defendant had paid to the plaintiff would be set off against rent for the months of July to December 1949. Thus according to the defendant, no rent was due to the plaintiff at the date of the institution of the suit. This case is set out both in para. 8 of the defendant's affidayit sworn on 4th January 1950 and in para. 4 of his written statement. The said affidavit was used in opposition to the plaintiff's application for summary judgment under Chap. 13A, Original Side Rules.

[6] By the time the suit came up for hearing, the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act XVII [17] of 1950 had become law. In view of this legislation I have allowed an issue to be raised as to jurisdiction.

[6] The following are the issues:

(1) Has the Court jurisdiction to try this sult?

(2) Is the suit maintainable?

(3) Is the defendant in arrears in respect of rent since June 1949 or at all?

(4) To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

(His Lordship after discussing the evidence disposed of issue 3 in favour of the plaintiff and

[7-12] As to issue 2, namely, whether or not the suit is maintainable, Mr. T. P. Das's contention was that the deposit of Rs. 200 had been agreed to be held as rent for the last month of the tenancy and that therefore there was no default in paying rent for three consecutive months. On that footing, according to Mr. Das, there was default for two successive months at the date of the institution of the suit. The answer to this contention is to be found in the agreement itself which by para. 12 provides:

"This amount will be regarded as being the rent for the final month when the tenant vacates the premises as aforesaid."

proceeded:)

That being so, the defendant cannot take ad-default for three successive months. The deposit having been held as rent for the last month of occupation, the tenancy had been ipso facto determined before the institution of the suit. Issue 2 is therefore answered in the affirmative.

[13] Mr. Sridhar Chatterjee appearing on behalf of the plaintiff argued that in view of the definition of the word "tenant" in S. 2 (11) of the new Act S. 16 has no application to a suit such as this. Section 2 (11) is as follows:

"'Tenant' means any person by whom rent is, or but for a special contract would be, payable for any premises, and includes any person who is liable to be sued by the landlord for rent."

This definition is materially different to that under the old Act, by S. 2 (11) of which the word

'tenant' was defined as follows:

" 'tenant' means any person by whom, or on whose account, rent is, or but for a special contract would be, payable for any premises and includes a legal representative, as defined in the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 of the tenant and a person continuing in possession after the termination of a tenancy in his favour."

As under the new Act a tenant does not include a person continuing in possession after the termination of a tenaccy in his favour, the defendant, whose tenancy had been validly determined under the old act by reason of default is not a tenant within the meaning of S. 2 (11) of the new Act. Section 16 speaks of a suit by a landlord against a tenant in which recovery of possession is claimed. According to the new definition of the word 'tenant,' this suit can no longer be treated as a suit against a tenant, but must be regarded as a suit against a trespasser; although under the old Act, having regard to the definition of a 'tenant' the suit was a suit by a landlord against a tenant. As Mr. Chatterjee does not press for eviction, it is not necessary, in my view, to decide this point.

[14] I now turn to the consideration of the issue as to the jurisdiction of this Court to try this suit. The question for determination is what is the position of pending suits in view of the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act XVII [17] of 1950? Sec. tions 16 and 18 are the two relevant sections for the purpose. The words 'no other Court shall be competent to entertain or try such suit" in S. 16, except those Courts set out in sch. 'B,' seem to nullify the effect of the words "the tenant may apply to the trial Court within 60 days " occurring in sub s. (1) of s. 18. An elementary rule of construction of statutes is to reconcile, if possible, the apparent conflict between the two sections. Applying that rule and in order to bring S. 16 into harmony with S. 18, one has to read the word 'or" in S. 16 as meaning 'and.' The word 'or' is not always disjunctive. Here the word 'or' seems to me to be interpretative or expository of the former word

'and.' Unless this is so read, S. 18 will not mean! what it says; and further, the section will be entirely robbed of its content, because there is no provision in this cumbroas statute for transfer of pending suits to Courts set out in Sch. B. This is an obvious lacuna in this statute of dark prolixity. That being so, unless effect is given to the plain words of S. 18, there will be a complete deadlock in the practical working of the Act. For these reasons, I am clearly of opinion; that the High Court in its Original Side has seisin of all pending suits and the new Act does not take away its jurisdiction to try these suits. A pending suit such as this, is however to be disposed of in the manner expressly provided for in S 18. Sub-section (5) of S. 18 is as follows:

"(5) If at the date when this Act comes into force, a suit for ejectment of a tenant is pending whether in trial Court, or in Court of first or second appeal in which no decree for ejectment would be passed except on the ground of default in payment of arrears of rent under the provisions of the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act (XXXVIII [38] of 1948) the Court shall exercise the powers of granting relief against ejectment given by S. 14 of this Act following the provisions and procedure of that section as far as may be necessary, and for the said purpose shall make such order for amendment of pleadings, production of evidence, remand, payment of costs as may be necessary or just."

Section 14 provides for protection against eviction in certain circumstances. A reference to S3. 12, 14 and 18, which must be read together shows that the relief of absolute ejectment open to a landlord under the old Act has now been amended to one of conditional ejectment, the condition being that if within the time expressly mentioned in the statute, namely, a fortnight, the tenant pays up all arrears of rent together with interest, then he should be allowed to continue to occupy the premises as a tenant. This position is accepted by both parties. That being so, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for Rs. 2000 being arrears of rent upto the end of last month. Accordingly, I order that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff the said sum of Rs. 2000 together with interest at the statutory rate on the fifteenth day from the date of this order excluding the date of the order. The defendant must pay the costs of the suit.

[15] My attention has been drawn to the concluding portion of S. 14 which requires that the Court

"shall make an order on the tenant for paying the aggregate of the amounts (specifying in the order such aggregate sum) on or before a date fixed in the order." On the Original Side, it is not possible for any

Judge to arrive at an aggregate sum which will include the costs of the suit. Any figure that I may mention as costs can only be an arbitrary figure and must work to the prejudice of one of the parties. The absence of such an order as to costs is an advantage to the defendant who is concerned to retain his tenancy with least payment. The order as to costs must be separated from the order as to payment of arrears of rent together with interest. The defendant must, therefore, pay the costs of this suit when taxed. In default of the payment of Rs. 2000 together with interest at the statutory rate within the time mentioned, there will be a decree for possession.

V.R.B.

Order accordingly.

Shew Narayan Singh — Defendant — Peti. tioner v. Brahmanand Singh and others -Plaintiffs - Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. Case No. 1832 of 1949, D/- 2-6-1950.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, R. 3 and O. 2, R. 3-Different causes of action against different parties -Joinder of, in one suit - When allowed - A suing B on breach of contract and C, D and E for damages for tort of conspiracy with B to bring about the breach in one suit-Suit not bad for multifariousness.

A sued B for damages for breach of contract to supply certain number of bricks. Later on, A came to know that C, D and E conspired with B to bring about the breach of the contract. He therefore obtained leave to join them as defendants in the suit along with B and alleging the conspiracy, claimed the same amount of damages jointly and severally against them also. It was contended that the suit was bad for multifarlousness as two entirely different causes of action which were not common to all the defendants were joined together in one suit :

Held that the suit was properly framed and there was no misjoinder of parties or causes of action;

[Para 7] That the suit clearly fell within the provisions of O. 1, R. 3 as the cellef arose out of the act of causing breach of contract, right to relief was available against all the defendants jointly, severally or in the alternative and the same question namely breach of contract would be common to all the suits if they were separately filed;

That O. 1, R. 3 is not confined to joinder of parties only but that it also embraces joinder of causes of action against different parties, and that O. 2, R. 3 must not be interpreted so as to override or render nugatory the provisions of O. 1, R. 3. It is, therefore, permissible to join different causes of action against different defendants in one suit so long as the stipulations set out in O. 1, R. 3 are complied with; [Para 12]

That the breach of contract was the question of fact which affected all the defendants. It was therefore a common question of fact which had to be proved against all the defendants in the suit. Though it was true that even if this common question of fact was proved, an additional fact, viz., conspiracy was required to be proved if the added defendants were to be made liable, it did not matter as O. 1, R. 3 did not stipulate that all the questions of fact arising in the suit must be common. It was sufficient if one common question of fact arose: A. I. B. (5) 1918 Cal. 858, Rel. on.

[Para 15] That though the claim against B was based on the breach of a contractual right while the claim against the other defendants was based on the breach of a common law right, the right to relief was available in respect of both sets of defendants because the contractual right has been infringed. If it had not been infringed no question of tort would arise. In such a case one suit against all was permissible : A. I. R. (25) 1938 Rang. 185, Rel. on; Case law discussed. [Para 18]

Sen J. - The facts giving rise to this rule briefly are as follows: The present plaintiffs are the heirs and legal representatives of the original plaintiff Bishwanath Singh. For the sake of brevity and convenience I shall deal with this rule as if Bishwanath Singh is still alive and shall describe him as the plaintiff.

[2] The plaintiff instituted a suit in the Court of the Second Subordinate Judge, Hooghly against Ram Narain Singh for damages for breach of contract, alleging that Ram Narain Singh had entered into a contract with him agreeing to supply him with 10 lakhs of manufactured bricks in return for 250 tons of coal which the plaintiff would supply to him. The plaintiff carried out his part of the contract but Ram Narain Singh in collusion with one Bindeswari Singh removed a large number of bricks which were manufactured by Ram Narain Singh for the purposes of the contract. In spite of re. peated demands Ram Narain Singh refused to perform his part of the contract and the plaintiff claimed damages to the extent of Rs. 20,000 for breach of contract. This was the suit as originally framed. Thereafter the plaintiff applied for attachment before judgment of the bricks and at this stage he came to know that the defendant Ram Narain Singh Bindeswari Prosad Singh, Hazari Singh, Rajen Singh and Thakur Shew Narayan son of Bindeswari Prosad had conspired together and pursuant to that conspiracy, Ram Narayan Singh broke the aforesaid contract. Having obtained this knowledge the plaintiff applied to amend his plaint by alleging this conspiracy and by adding Bindeswari Singh Hazari Singh, Rajen Singh and Thakur Shew Narayan as defendants. He amended his claim by claiming Rs. 20,000 as damages against all the five defendants. The application was rejected by the Subordinate Judge. The plaintiff then moved this Court but did not make the defendants proposed to be added parties to this rule. The rule was heard ex parte and made absolute, the amendments were allow. ed and the proposed defendants were made defendants 2-5. These defendants then applied to this Court for expunging their names from the record. This Court held that they had no locus standi in the rule as they were not parties at the time when the rule was disposed of and rejected the application. This Court stated that these added defendants were not bound by the order and it was open to them to agitate the matter before the trial Court. This last order was passed by my brother Chunder. The added defendant 2 then applied before the Subordinate Judge for striking out the names of the added defendants. The learned Judge has refused the application stating that no good ground has been made out for striking out the added defendants' names. Against this order the present rule has been obtained by the defendant Thakur Shew Narayan praying that his name and those of the other added defendants be struck out.

[3] The only question which falls for decision in this rule is whether the plaintiff should be allowed to amend his plaint in the manner stated above and add the petitioner and the other three persons viz., Bindeswari, Hazari Singh and Rajen Singh as defendants in the Suit.

[4] The contention on behalf of the petitioner is that the amendment to the plaint and the aforesaid addition of parties makes the suit bad for multifariousness and that this course is not sanctioned by the provision of the Code of Civil Procedure. In developing this argument learned advocate points out that the plaintiff's claim against the defendant 1 Ram Narayan Singh is one for breach of contract whereas his claim against the others is for damages for the tort of conspiracy. These claims, he argues, are based on different causes of action which are not common as against all the defendants and therefore they cannot be united in the same suit. He refers to O. 2, R. 3 (1), Civil P. C., which is in the following terms

"Save as otherwise provided, a plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendants jointly; and any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same suit."

[5] On behalf of the plaintiff opposite party learned advocate argues that the plaintiff bases his case on one material fact viz., the breach of the contract made between him and the defendant 1 Ram Narayan Singh. This breach was brought about by all the defendants in conspiracy and therefore it was permissible to sue all the defendants for relief in one suit. He relies for this contention on the provisions of O. 1, R. 3 which is in the following terms:

"All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise."

If I must say at the outset that the judgment of the Court below is not of much assistance to us. The points raised have not been discussed and the application has been disposed of by saying that no reason had been shown why the amendment or addition of the defendants should not be allowed.

[7] In my opinion the suit is properly framed and there is no misjoinder of parties or causes of action. Before dealing with the case law on the subject I propose to consider the matter by reference to the words of the relevant provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. I have already quoted O. 1 R. 3. In my opinion this suit clearly falls within its provisions. The first point to be determined is whether the 'right to relief' claimed by the plaintiff is 'in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions.' The relief claimed by the plaintiff is damages. The damages claimed is in respect of the breach of the contract between him and Ram Narayan Singh. So far as Ram Narain Singh is concerned, the breach alone is sufficient to afford relief. As regards the other defendants in addition to the breach the plaintiff must prove that there was a conspiracy between them and Ram Narain Singh to cause the aforesaid breach. But there can be no claim for damages against any of the defendants unless there has been a breach of contract and the plaintiff claims one sum and one sum only against all the defendants, viz., compensation for this loss occasioned by the breach. Separate sums are not claimed for breach of contract and for tort. Thus the relief or damages arises out of the act of causing the breach of contract. To me it seems clear that the relief is undoubtedly "in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction" or at any rate out of "the same series of acts or transactions." The act or transaction or the series of acts or transactions is the breach of contract and its attendant circumstances, viz., the conspiracy to commit the breach. Thus one part of O. 1, R. 3 is satisfied.

[8] Next it must be established that the right to the relief must exist against all the defendants "jointly severally or in the alternative." Now the plaintiff, if he succeeds, is entitled to get damages against all the defendants jointly and severally or in the alternative. All and each of the defendants would be liable to pay damages if it is proved that the contract was broken as a result of the conspiracy alleged. If the conspiracy is not proved but the breach of contract only is proved the plaintiff would have the right to get damages in the alternative against defendant 1 Ram Narayan Singh only. Thus the right to relief is available against all the defendants jointly, severally or in the alternative.

[9] The last essential required by O. 1, R. 3 is contained in the words "where if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or facts would arise". Let us assume separate suits being brought against each of the defendants; would then a common question of fact arise? In my opinion, it certainly would. The vital question, vz., the breach of the contract would have to be proved in each and every case, O. 1, R. 3 does not stipulate that all the questions of law or fact must be common to the defendants. It is sufficient if one common question arises. I realise that the common question must be a substantial one affecting the subject-matter of the suit. In the present case the breach of contract is the very foundation of the suit. If it is not proved the whole suit would fail. This question, viz., the breach of the contract would be common to all the suits if separate suits were instituted against each of the defendants. I am of opinion, therefore, that all the requisites mentioned in O. 1, R. 3 are present in this case and that a suit like the present one his sanctioned by the provisions of O. 1, R. 3.

[10] It is argued on behalf of the petitioner that O. 1, R. 3, is merely permissive and that a suit, even if it complied technically with the provisions of the rule should not be permitted if it causes embarrassment or injustice to the parties. This is perfectly correct. The Court may in such case direct that the plaintiff should -confine his suit to particular parties on grounds of convenience or it may make suitable orders in order to protect any of the defendants from incurring unnecessary costs by directing them to appear at certain stages only of the suit where their presence was recessary, e. g., the Court may try certain issues preliminarily in the pre--sence of only defendants who are immediately concerned in the determination of those issues. In the present case, however, these considerations do not arise. It is of utmost importance to all the defendants to show that there was no breach. If they succeed in this all of them would be exempt from the plaintiff's claim. Once the breach is proved all the defendants would be involved in the issue regarding conspiracy. I realise that even if the breach of contract is proved that the added defendants would not be liable unless conspiracy is proved. In the investigation regarding whether there was a conspiracy or not all the defendants, however, would be interested. Thus it would be proper and convenient, if not necessary, for all the defendants to be present throughout the suit. In this connection I would refer to 0. 1, R. 5 which says that "It shall not be necessary that every defendant shall be interested as to all the relief claimed in any suit

This rule indicates the extent to which the law of procedure has gone to prevent multiplicity of suits. It shows that defendants may be joined even if the claims against them are different in extent or in nature so long as the provisions of O 1, R. 3 are complied with.

[11] I shall now take up for consideration the argument that O. 2, R. 3, Civil P. C. prohibits a suit of this description. It was argued that, whereas O. 1, Rr. 1 and 3 deal with joinder of parties, O. 2, R. 3 deals with joinder of different causes of action and that as the present case was one of a joinder of different causes of action O. 2, R. 3 and not O. 1, R. 3 would apply and that by reason of the provisions of O. 2, R. 3, the suit as framed was not maintainable.

[12] I shall assume for the moment that the plaintiff's cause of action against defendant 1 Ram Narain Singh is different from his cause of action against the other defendants. Read in isolation O. 2, R. 3 does not permit a suit of this description. The rule permits the joining of several causes of action in one suit against one defendant or one group of defendants jointly. It does not sarction a single suit when the cause of action against one defendant is different from the cause of action against another. But it has been held in numerous cases that O. 1, R. 3 is not confined to joinder of parties only but that it also embraces joinder of causes of action against different parties. It has been further held that O. 2, R. 3 must not be interpreted so as to override or render nugatory the provisions of O. 1, R. 3. This view was taken in the case of Ramendra Nath v. Brojendra Nath, 45 cal. 111: (A. I. R (5) 1918 Cal. 859). I am relying on this case at present for no other purpose than that of showing that although a suit as framed may not be in accordance with the provisions of O. 2, R. 3, nevertheless, it would be maintaina. ble if it complied with the provisions of O. 1. R. 3 and for the purpose of showing that O. 1, R. 3 deals not only with joinder of part'es but also with joinder of causes of action. In other words, I rely upon this case for the proposition that it is permissible to join different causes of action against different defendants in one suit so long as the stipulations set out in O. 1, R. 3 are complied with. The English cases which interpret a similar rule contained in O. 16 of the R. S. O. roles are dealt with in this case and it is, therefore, unnecessary for me to deal with the English cases on this point separately. I can do no better than reproduce the remarks of Woodroffe J. at pages 122-124:

"On the merits the question is this. The frame of the suit is admittedly not supported by O. 2, R. 3. It is then said that it is justified by O. 1, R. 3. To this it is replied firstly, that this last rule deals with parties and not joinder of causes of action, and in the alternative and on the supposition that it does deal with joinder of causes of action, the present case does not on the facts fall within the rule. Order I is headed 'parties' and O. 2 'frame of suit.' The question of parties involves that of cause of action and vice versa A person is made a party because there is a cause of action against him; and where causes of action are joined, parties are joined. In a perfectly framed Code which dealt in separate chapters with parties and causes of action, the provisions should be exactly parallel, looking at the same matter from its different aspects in a way according to which the provisions of one Order would be in conformity with the provisions of the other. So much may be conceded, and if the solution of the question were doubtful, one might have hesitated on this ground to hold that a suit might be framed under O. 1 in a manner not provided for by O. 2, which, according to its heading, specifically deals with the frame of a suit. But in the present case we have to deal with the wording of a rule, the meaning of which has been construed. There are decisions of the English Courts on rules from which our own are taken. These decisions are subjequent to the year 1896, when O. 16, R. 1 was amended. It has been held that that order deals not only with joinder of parties but also joinder of causes of action, notwithstanding that O. 16 like O. 1 is headed parties only (Compania Sansinena DeCarnes Congeladas v. Houlder Bros. & Co. Ltd., (1910) 2 K. B. 354: (79 L. J. K. B. 1094). Bullock v. London General Omnibus Co., (1907) 1 K.B. 264 at pages 271, 272 : (76 L. J. K. B. 127), Markt & Co., Ltd. v. Knight Steamship Co., Ltd., (1910) 2 K.B. 1021 at p. 1036 : (79 L. J. K. B. 939) and Times Cold Storage Co. v. Lowther and Blankley, (1911) 2 K. B. 100 at p. 107 : (80 L, J. K. B. 901).

This, notwithstanding incidental observations to a contrary effect in Thompson v. London County Council, (1899) 1 Q. B. 840 at p. 842; (68 L. J. Q. B. 625), is not disputed before us. The decisions in the Bombay High Court given in 1908 and referred to in Mt. Jankibai v. Shrinivas Ganesh, 38 Bom. 120 : (A I. R. (1) 1914 Bom. 193) do not refer to the latest English decisions. It is conceded before us that it cannot be now contended that O. 16 from which O. 1 is taken does not refer to joinder of causes of action. These decisions were on O. 16, R. 1 corresponding to O 1, R. 1 but are equally applicable to 0. 1, R. 3 which is in exactly the same terms as O. 1, B. 1 substituting the word "defendant" for "plaintiff." Indeed, in England where the rule relating to the joinder of defendants is in differing terms from that relating to joinder of plaintiffs it has been held that they should be interpreted on similar principles. It must be held then that O. 1, R. 3 does refer to joinder of causes of action"

at p. 134 observes as follows:

"The matter is one essentially of substance and not of form, as Romer L. J. observed in Frankenburg v. Great Horseless Carriage Co., (1900) 1 Q. B. 504: (69 L. J. Q. B. 147) and I am not prepared to put a narrow construction upon the provisions of Order 1. On the one hand, we have the fundamental principle that needless multiplicity of suits should be voided; on the other hand, we have the equally essential princip'e that the trial of the suit should not be embarrassed by the simultaneous investigation of totally unconnected controversies. The legislature has effected a compromise of these two principles by means of the rules embodied in Orders I and II which may possibly overlap to some extent in their application to concrete cases. It is not the function of the Court, however, to determine how far the rules are appropiate we are bound to interpret them in their natural sense and apply them to the circumstances of each case. I hold, accordingly, that O. 1, R. 1 and O. 1, R. 3 apply to questions of joinder of partles as also of causes of action, and I respectfully dissent from the contrary view adopted by Davar J. in Umabai v. Bhau Balwant, 34 Bom. 358: (3 I. C. 165) and Mt. Jankibai v. Shrinivas Ganesh, 38 Bom. 120: (4.I R. (1) 1914 Bom. 193) without examination of or reference to the later decisions in England as to the scope and meaning of the corresponding rules in that system."

[14] We are bound to follow this principle which, I would say with respect, is the correct one, there is no decision of this Court, so far as I am aware, where a contrary view has been taken of this rule as it emerged after amendments in 1908.

[15] Next it was argued on behalf of the petitioner by Mr. Sen that there is no common. question of law or fact affecting all the defendants in this suit. He contends that a common question of fact means a question of fact of such a kind that if it is decided in favour of the plaintiffs it would make all the defendants liable. He points out that if the plaintiff succeeds in proving only a breach of contract, be would not get damages against the added defendants. He would get relief against the original defendant alone. To succeed against the otherdefendants he would have to prove conspiracy as well. Thus he argues there is no single fact or group of facts which if proved would entitle him to relief against all the defendants and, that being so, it cannot be said that there is acommon question of fact. In my opinion this argument is fallacious. I would test its validity in this way. Suppose the plaintiff failed toprove a breach of contract would not the suit fail against all the defendants? It surely would. Thus the breach of contract is a question of fact; which affects all the defendants; it is therefore a common question of fact which must be proved against all the defendants in the suit. It is true that even if this common question of fact is proved an additional fact viz., conspiracy must be proved if the added defendants are to be made liable but this does not matter. Order 1, R. 3 does not stipulate that all the questions of fact arising in the suit must be common. It is sufficient if one common question of fact arises. I realise that this common question must be one which is not an inessential or trivial question upon which nothing turns. It must involve an important fact which forms the basis of the suit. The alleged breach of contract is certainly such a basicfact. The wording of the rule is quite clear on the point and any reference to case law is hardly necessary. There are however cases in whichthis question has been considered and decided which support my view. I would refer again.

STATE OF BRIDE

to the case of Ramendra Nath v. Brajendra Nath, 45 Cal. 111: (A I.R. (5) 1918 Cal. 858) where Mookerjee J. at pp. 135 and 136 makes the following observations:

"As regards the second test, it is clear that if different suits were instituted, at least one common question of fact would arise, namely, the exact nature of the act imputed to Brajendra Nath Dass, which would have to be investigated, presumably on the same evidence separately adduced in several suits. Here, again, it is important to observe that the Code does not require that all the questions of law or fact which arise should be common to all the parties. The contention of the respondents was, in fact, based upon two fallacions assumptions, namely, first, that the rules require that each of the defendants should have been concerned in all the transactions, and, secondly, that, if different suits were brought, no question would arise in which all the defendants were not interested. There is clearly no foundation whatever for either of these assumptions."

[16] I would also refer to the observations of Woodroffe J. in the same case at pp. 124-125:

"The next question then is whether the joinder in the present case is justified by that rule. It is contended that it is not, it being argued that there are different sets of transactions and no common question of law or fact. The foundation of the case, on which the rest of it depends, is the alleged fraud of B. N. Dass. If such fraud is proved the question is, did the defendants who all claim under B. N. Dass obtain any title? If the plaintiff fails to prove fraud on the part of B.N. Dass, the case fails against all the defendants. If he proves fraud, it may be that the defendant may have a different answer by way of defence; but that does not make the case any the less one of a common question of law and fact. The same act or transaction which concerns all parties is the alleged fraud of B. N. Dass, and this involves a common question of law or fact. All defendants have derived title from a person who is alleged to have obtained the goods by means of fraud. By reason of this, the possession of all is alleged to be wrongful. Whether a common question arises may be tested by seeing what the evidence will be. In the shorthand notes Chitty J., expressed the opinion that the evidence will be common and that if there were separate sults, they might be heard together with consent. In the judgment the learned Judge qualified this statement by saying that this was true up to a point. It is true so far as the plaintiff's cause of action, as based on the fraud of B.N. Dass, is concerned though there may be some facts which are particular to particular parties being offered in proof of the plaintiff's case (e. g. present possession of the goods as a result of such fraud) or by the defendants as part of their defence. The rule does not say that all questions must be com-

[17] The same view was taken by this Court in the case of Harendra Nath v. Purna Chandra 55 Cal. 164: (A.I.R. (15) 1928 Cal. 199). I would refer particularly to the passage appearing at p. 171 where Mukherjee J. quotes certain observations of the Court of appeal in Payne v. British Time Record Co. Ltd., (1921) 2 K.B. 1: (90 L. J. K. B. 445) to the following effect:

"Broadly speaking, where claims by or against different parties involve or may involve a common question of law or fact bearing sufficient importance in proportion to the rest of the action to render it desirable that the whole of the matters should be disposed of at the same time the Court will allow the joinder of plaintiffs or defendants, subject to its discretion as to how the action should be tried."

[18] The last argument on behalf of the petitioner may be stated thus. The cause of action against the original defendant is based on contract while the cause of action against the other defendants is based on tort. Causes of action so differently based cannot be joined. I am not prepared to accept this view. There is nothing in the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which supports it. As pointed out above the Code permits a joinder of different causes of action against different defendants. The fact that so far as the different defendants are concerned, their liability arises out of their different legal relationships with the plaintiff would not, in my opinion, bar this suit and drive the plaintiff to institute separate suits. Order 1, R. 3 and O. 2, R. 4 are directed towards avoiding multiplicity of litigation. What would be the result of giving effect to the view propounded? The plaintiff would first have to institute a suit, against defendant 1 alone and establish a breach of contract. If he succeeded in so doing, he would then have to institute another suit against defendant 1 and the added defendants and again establish, first, the breach of the contract because the other defendants not being parties to first suit would not be bound by any decision arrived at therein; he would also have to establish conspiracy. It may be that in the second suit the added defendants may succeed in showing that there was no breach of contract. This would lead to conflicting decision on the same issue. It is to avoid such anomalies and inconsistencies that the Code has provided that one suit is permissible. It is true that the claim against defendant 1 is based on the breach of a contractual right while the claim against the other defendants is based on the breach of a common law right, but the right to relief is available in respect of both sets of defendants because the contractual right has been infringed. If it had not been infringed no question of tort would arise. In such a case one suit against all is in my opinion permissible. This view has been taken by a Special Bench of the High Court at Rangoon in the case of P. B. Bose v. M. R. N. Chettyar Firm, A. J. R. (25) 1938 Rang. 185 at p. 188 : (1988 Rang L. R. 803 S. B.) Dunkley J. observes:

The learned Judge appears to have thought that there was a misjoinder of defendants in the original suit, and that a decree based on a breach of contract against one defendant and a decree for damages in tort against another defendant cannot be made in the same suit. With the greatest respect, this is a misconception of the law. There was no misjoinder of defendants in this case; the provisions of O. I. R. S. Civil P. C., cover the joinder of the three defendants in the suit in the Township Court. There is no reason why a decree for damages for breach of contract against one defendant and a decree for damages in tort against another defendant should not be passed in the same action; in R. T. Grant v. Australian Knitting Mills Ltd., (1936) A. C. 85: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 P. O. 34) the Privy Council made a decree against the retailer of the underwear for breach of contract and against the manufacturer of the underwear in tort."

The Privy Council decision is R. T. Grant v. Australian Knitting Mills Ltd., and it is also reported in A.I.R (23) 1936 P. C. 34. The Privy Council upheld a decision of the Australian Court awarding damages in the same suit against a retailer for breach of contract and against the manufacturer for the negligence of tort. I would refer to p. 39 of the report where the Lordship said:

"The liability of each respondent depends on a different cause of action though it is for the same damage. It is not claimed that the appellant should recover his damage twice over."

The claim against both retailer and manufacturer was upheld. This principle would apply to the present case.

[19] I would also refer to the case of Frankenburg v. Great Horselsss Carriage Co., (1900) 1 Q. B. 504 at p. 509 : (69 L. J. Q. B. 147) where the Court of Appeal refused to give effect to a similar technical objection. They said:

"In substance the shareholder had one grievance. Call it a cause of action or what you like, and in substance he has one complaint and all the persons he sues have, according to him, been guilty of conduct which gives him a right to relief in respect of that one thing which they have done, namely, the issuing of a prospectus." The position here is the same. The plaintiff has one grievance viz: that the contract has been broken and he alleges that all the defendants have joined or conspired together in causing this breach. I can see no reason why one suit against all should not be allowed.

[20] I do not propose to deal with the cases on this point before the amendment of 1908. There were two lines of thought one favouring the view propounded on behalf of the petitioner and the other in favour of the view I have taken. The one view was taken in the case of Narsingh Das v. Mangal Dubey, 5 ALL. 163: (1882 A. W. N. 202 F. B.) and the other view in Dampanaboyina Gangi v. A. Ramaswami. 25 Mad. 736: (12 M.L.J. 103). The amendment of the old law by changing the words "in respect of the same matter" into "in respect of or arising out of the same act or series of acts or transaction" have given effect to the latter view. The case-law on the question before 1908 is in my opinion of little use in determining what the law now is under the Code of 1908 and it would be unsafe and inappropriate to adopt the principles laid down in those cases to cases arising after 1908 when the Legislature amended the Oode radically on this question by the provisions of O. 1 and O. 2. We are bound by the decisions interpreting the rules contained in these new orders and these decisions I would respectfully repeat lay down the correct principles of interpretation of these rules.

[21] I hold therefore that the order of the Court below is correct. The rule must be discharged with costs.

[22] K. C. Chunder J.—The facts are very simple. (After stating the facts of the case, his Lordship proceeded as follows:) Mr. Sen appearing on behalf of the petitioners, defendants 2 to 5 contended that as there was a misjoinder of defendants and causes of action, defendants 2 to 5 should be dismissed from the suit, and we should decide the point instead of sending the case back to the Court below as all the materials are also before us.

[23] It is unnecessary for me to go into the question when joinder of parties and causes of action are allowed under O. 1 and O. 2, Civil P. C. There are various kinds of joinders and different principles have been applied in different classes of cases. The present case is one of joinder of defendants and causes of action though the plaintiff is the same. I do not want to express any opinion on the law as to misjoinder of defendants and causes of action. Such cases have already been decided by this Court and by the Judicial Committee.

[23a] I agree with the order discharging the rule solely on the special facts and circumstances of this case.

[24] In the present case the cause of action, i. e., the fact in which right to relief, and not mere relief depends against defendant 1 is only that of breach of contract. All that he is interested in is the proof that there was a contract and that the contract was broken by him without just or lawful excuse. He is not concerned at all with the cause of action against the other defendants, namely, the procurement of the breach, and not the actual breach by defendant 1, in their own interest and adverse to the interest of the plaintiff by defendants 2 to 5. In the present case defendant 1 would no doubt be entitled to say that as far as he is concerned he is not at all interested in the cause of action against the other defendants, i. e., whether they or any one else procured the breach and the joining of his case with that of the other defendants may be said by him to be harassing and vexatious to him. But in the case of defendants 2 to 5 the breach of contract by defendant 1 will also have to be proved by the plaintiff in order to get damages. That will, therefore, be a necessary question to decide in the case of all the defendants. Therefore, as far as the case of defendants 2 to 5 is concerned a joinder of their case with those of defendant 1 really does not cause any harassment or vexation to them. I have to point this out as this case is a very special and peculiar nature unlike any other case of misjoinder. Here, all the facts that will have to be proved against defendant 1 will have to be proved in the case of defendants 2 to 5 but not vice versa. Here, the person really entitled to complain of misjoinder and of barassment and vexation is defendant 1 alone. Defendant 1 was a party to the first application before the Subordinate Julge for amendment of plaint and joinder of parties which was then rejected by the Subordinate Judge. He was a party in the revision petition before this Court which revision petition was allowed ex parts against him and the joinder and the amendment of the plaint allowed. Since then he has not contested that order. The contest is by other persons, namely, defendants 2 to 4 who would not be in any way harassed and vexed by the joint trial of the claim against them with that against defendant 1, and as far as they, i. e., defendants 2 to 5, are concerned the trial of the suit will not be at all embarassed.

[25] Therefore, in view of the special and very peculiar facts of this case I am of opinion that the order previously passed allowing the amendment of the plaint and the joinder should not be disturbed and defendants 2 to 5 should not be dismissed from the suit and the suit should be allowed to proceed as it is being done now.

[26] The rule is, therefore, discharged with costs.

Tenancy laws—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 168A — Non-compliance with, by decree-holder auction-purchaser—Effect.

Where the decree-holder auction-purchaser applies for confirmation of sale without complying with the provisions of S. 168A (3) he thereby enters satisfaction, by implication of the amount which has accrued due to him for the period up to the confirmation of sale and the objection by the judgment-debtor raised after confirmation on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to confirm sale as the decree-holder had not fulfilled the imperative provisions of S. 168A must be overruled.

Judgment.—These are two appeals on behalf of the judgment-debtors arising out of orders, passed by the Subordinate Judge, Horghly, disposing of objections raised by them under S. 47, Civil P. C.

[2] The judgment-debtors hold certain Patnis under the decree-holders opposite parties. Two suits were brought by the landlord for the realisation of Patni rent which had fallen due. In September 1944, the suits were decreed: in one case for rent upto the end of 1948 B. S. and in the other upto Ashar 1849 B. S. On 12th March 1945, the landlord decree-holder purchased the Patnis for Rs. 30,000 and Rs. 25,000 respectively, which covered a portion of the amounts due under the decrees, viz., Rs. 42,639 11-9 and Rs. 53,254-10-112 respectively. On 9th April 1945, some of the judgment-debtors filed applications for setting aside the sale and immediately, thereafter, the landlord moved the Court for the appointment of a Receiver. The two matters were taken up together for hearing on 21st August 1945. After the Subordinate Judge had expressed the view that the application for setting aside the sale was not in a proper form the said petition was withdrawn. The provisions of S. 168A, Ben. Ten. Act had been in force from 8th January 1941; but on 27th August 1945, the sales were confirmed by the Court without requiring the decree-holders to satisfy the provisions contained in sub-s. (8) of S. 168A of the Act. More than 14 months later on 7th November 1946, the present applications were filed on behalf of the judgment debtors under S. 47, Civil P. C., praying for setting aside of the order dated 27th August 1945, confirming the sales. It was maintained that the Court had no jurisdiction to confirm the sales as the decree holders had not fulfilled the imperative conditions laid down in S. 168A of the Act.

[3] The decree-holders auction-purchasers contend that as the judgment-debtors had come up to the High Court in Appeal (F. M. A. 2 and 3 of 1946) against the order dated 27th August 1945, confirming the sale, and the point now raised had not been urged before this Court before the said appeals were dismissed on 4th July 1946, the judgment-debtors are not entitled to raise this question at this stage. Further the sales having been confirmed the judgment-debtors are not entitled to obtain any relief in the present proceedings.

[4] The learned Eubordinate Judge held that as the present objection had not been raised before the confirmation of sale or even in the High Court on the previous occasion he could not, after the disposal of the appeals by this Court, set aside the orders confirming the sale. But at the same time he held that the provisions of S. 168 A (1) (b) and (3), Ben. Ten. Act were mandatory and he made the following conditional order:

"As there has been no deposit or certificate with regard to the rent falling due from the date of the suit till the date of the confirmation of sales, so the decree-holder landlords will be directed to certify satisfaction of this rent within certain date. If they comply with this order of the Court the sales will remain confirmed, otherwise they will be set aside as contemplated in Amano Barmanya v. Uma Charan Das, 50 C. W. N. 803: (A I.R. (34) 1947 Cal. 330)."

[6] This Court had occasion to consider in Phani Bhusan v. Purna Chandra, 48 C. W. N. 210: (A.I.R. (31) 1914 Cal. 199) where the word 'purchaser' in cl. (b) of sub-s. (1) and in subs. (3) of S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act, was not limited to a stranger purchaser only but also included a decree-holder purchaser. The decreeholder purchaser being held to be included within that term a question arose whether such a decree-holder auction purchaser was also bound to make the deposit as under sub-s. (3) of the rent that had accrued due subsequent to the institution of the suit. B. K. Mukerji and Pal JJ. held that in such a case a cash deposit was not necessary but a certificate of payment of the dues made by the decree-holder purchaser would be deemed to be a sufficient compliance of the requirements of this sub-section. It was pointed out that neither party urged before the Court that by reason of the decree-holder himself being the purchaser and thus being made liable by cl. (b) of S. 168A (1) to himself to pay the amount of arrears subsequently accruing due, the obligation itself was discharged by the operation of law. No opinion was expressed on such a contention but the learned Judges proceeded to observe at p. 215:

"It however seems obvious if this be the contention of the decree-holder purchaser the judgment-debtor will have no possible objection to it. He is discharged of the liability all the same and that is all that he is concerned with."

[6] Amano Barmanya v. Uma Charan Das, 50 C. W. N. 803: (A.I.R. (34) 1947 Cal. 330) is an authority for the proposition that the provisions contained in sub-s. (3) of S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act, were mandatory in character which thus imposed a duty upon the Court which had to be discharged by it whenever rent sales took place after that section had come into force. The direction given in that case was to the effect that when the landlord auction-purchaser applies for the execution of a decree for subsequent rent accrued due after the rent sale, the execution Court cannot refuse to execute the decree. The Court should call upon the landlord either to deposit the amount of rent previously decreed in his favour or to enter satisfaction not of the entire decretal dues but the amount actually payable as rent. If the money is paid the judgment debtor would be entitled to with. draw the amount and pay the same towards the satisfaction of his dues under the decree for rent and the decree will be executed only for the balance of the decretal amount if there remains anything unpaid. If no cash deposit were made by the landlord but the latter certifies partial satisfaction of the decree that he was executing, acknowledging receipt of the amount that is due as rent the effect will be the same. If no payments are made the previous order confirming the sale made by the Court will be set aside and the Execution Case restored to file and proceeded with in accordance with law.

[7] Recently the point now in issue had come up for consideration in Naresh Chandra v. Bhupendra Narain Singh. Appeal from Original Order No. 138 of 1945: (A.I.R. (37) 1950 Cal. 15) and Appeals from Appellate Orders Nos. 1 and 2 of 1946, decided on 12th May 1949. I was a party to that decision and as the judgment is unreported the conclusions arrived at by us may usefully be quoted here: "When the decree-holder himself is the auction purchaser the payment of the subsequent arrears which had accrued due is to be made to himself and the said decree-holder is entitled to an order confirming sale by either paying himself or on declaring that the amount due is wiped out. When a decree-holder auction purchaser applies for the confirmation of the sale without either depositing the amount of subsequent arrears or discharging the said dues formally he must be taken to have given up his right to claim such arrears at any subsequent stage. We must be deemed to have done what he was required to do before he could get an order confirming the sale. Under the circumstances when the attention of the executing Court is drawn subsequently to the fact that the sale had already been confirmed without the decree-holder auction purchaser fulfilling the conditions laid down under S. 168A, BengalgTenancy Act, all that the executing Court need do is to record an order that the total amount of rent, cess and interest which had accrued due up to the date of confirmation is deemed to be satisfied by the decree-holder auction purchaser having applied for such confirmation and the confirmation having been made. Unless the decree-holder auction purchaser files an application entering satisfaction of the dues which had so accrued the Court is, in our opinion competent to declare the said dues as having been satisfied by implication."

We hold that the decree-holders when they applied for the confirmation of the sales they thereby entered satisfaction by implication of the amount which had accrued due to them for the period upto the date of confirmation of sale. The objection raised at this stage about the legality of the order for confirmation is, therefore, overruled.

(8) It may be further noticed that after the order was passed by the learned Subordinate Judge the decree-holders filed a petition stating that the rents falling due from the date of the institution of the suit till confirmation of sale have been wiped off.

[9] These appeals are accordingly dismissed.
In the circumstances of this case each party will Sear his respective costs in this Court.

(a) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 2 (1) (d)

-"Property"-Present disposing power.

The definition of "property" in S. 2(1)(d) appears to be modelled on S. 60(1), Civil Procedure Code. Unless the insolvent has got a present disposing power, which he may exercise for his own benefit, over a property, it will not be considered to be one coming within this definition.

*(b) Provincial Insolvency Act (1920), S. 44 (2)

Effect of discharge under — Receiver if becomes functus officio after discharge of insolvent.

A reading of the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act shows that on the adjudication of insolvency of a debtor all the properties which come under the definition of S. 2 (1) (d) of that Act come into the hands of the Court and are subject to any order that the said assets be administered and such of the creditors whose debts can be proved in the insolvency proteedings may get payments pro rata from those assets. The Court takes charge of those properties. And the insolvent after fulfilling certain conditions is allowed an absolute discharge. He is given an opportunity to begin his career without any handicap or impediment. The order of discharge is made without any direction being given about the divesting of the properties which had, under S. 28, vested in the Court or the Receiver for distribution amongst the creditors. Even, therefore, after an order for discharge under sub-s. (2) of S. 44 the Receiver in Insolvency does not become functus officio: Case law referred. [Paras 12, 18]

Order of discharge-Its effect on debt.

The effect of an order of discharge under S. 44 (2) is not to extinguish the debts of the insolvent. The only limitation imposed is that the creditors who have got debts provable under the Act can, after the order of discharge, look only to those particular assets which the insolvent was possessed of and had accordingly vested in the Court or the Receiver on the date of the filing of the application for adjudication. The claims of the creditors cannot be directed against any other property which may be acquired by the insolvent after an order of discharge is made: (1922) 1 Ch. 22; (1878) 4 Ex. D. 26, Rel. on. Judgment.—This is an appeal on behalf of defendant 2 directed against the decision of the Subordinate Judge decreeing the plaintiff's claim that the properties in suit are trust properties and that Defendant Bank be restrained from getting possession thereof or from interfering with the plaintiff's possession in any way and granting further consequential reliefs.

[2] The plaintiff's case is that premises No. 21/A/1 and 21/A/2, Satis Mukherjee Road, Calcutta, belonged to the estate of Upendra Lal Banerjee who had during his life-time executed a Deed of Family Settlement in May 1933. It is alleged that under that deed the properties in suit vested in the third son of the settlor, Dhirendranath Banerjee who is defendant 3 in the present suit and for his life only. The property had so vested subject to the rights of main. tenance and residence of the settlor's surviving daughters- and their children. Plaintiff 1 is the wife of defendant 3 and plaintiffs 2-11 are either the minor sons and daughters or the daughters and daughters' sons of the settlor. The plaintiffs allege that they have come to know that defendant 3 had been adjudged an insolvent and that defendant 1 the Official Receiver, 24-Parganas was about to sell the interest of defendant 3 in the properties in suit to defendant 2, Jubilee Bank Limited, which is the appellant before this Court. It was inter alia maintained that defendant 3 was merely a trustee, had no saleable interest in the properties and the plaintiffs having the right of beneficial enjoyment thereof defendants 1 and 2 should be restrained from so (sic). There had been a further prayer for the issue of a perpetual injunction to restrain defendant 1 from completing the same. But after the filing of the suit and when the temporary injunction was not in force the conveyance evidencing the sale was executed by defendant 1 in favour of defendant 2 on 9th June 1945.

[3] Defendant 2 alleged that the suit was a collusive one, defendant 3 was not a trustee but a full owner of the properties. The plaintiffs were not entitled in law to be maintained out of the income of the properties and that the Defendant Bank was a bona fide purchaser for value and entitled to possession. Defendant 3 supported the plaintiff company (sic).

[4] On an interpretation of the deed of Family Settlement the Munsif came to the conclusion that the settlor had intended the trust to come to an end on his death. Defendant 3 was found to have a life interest and the same was a saleable one. Further, the plaintiffs were not entitled to be maintained out of the income of the suit properties and that had no locus standi to maintain the present suit which was accordingly dismissed.

[5] On an appeal by the plaintiffs, the learned Sabordinate Judge held that defendant 3 had not an interest which was a saleable one and the transfer by the Official Receiver was neither legal nor valid. The direction contained in the deed about the maintenance and for the residence of some of the relations was not of a recommedatory nature and that thereby a charge had been created over the properties in suit in favour of those persons. He also accepted a further contention on behalf of the plaintiffs that after an absolute discharge of the insolvent defendant 3, the Official Receiver had no jurisdiction to effect the sale. This specific point though not raised in the trial Court was allowed to be agitated at the appellate stage. The Court found that the order of absolute discharge had the effect of giving a full release to the insolvent from all debts and liabilities and the authority of the Official Receiver ceased from the time of the discharge. A transfer, if any, purported to have been made after the discharge of the insolvent was without jurisdiction. The plaintiffs were found to have locus standi to maintain the suit. The suit was decreed against the Bank defendant 2, it being restrained from getting possession of the premises or from interfering with the plaintiff's possession. Defendants 4 and 5, who are tenants in a portion of the premises were restrained from paying rents to defendant 2. Hence this second appeal to this Court by the Bank, defendant 2.

[6] The arguments advanced on behalf of the purchaser Bank may be broadly divided under two heads: First, that the authority of the Official Receiver to sell the premises in question did not come to an end on the insolvent being discharged by the Court. Secondly, on an interpretation of the deed of family Settlement it ought to be held that the plaintiffs had no interest in the properties and defendant 3, had a saleable interest in those properties.

vent on his own petition. Under S. 28 (2), Provincial Insolvency Act the whole of the property of the insolvent vested in the Court or in the Receiver when appointed and was divisible amongst the creditors. Under sub s. (4) of the same section, all other properties which might devolve upon the insolvent or be subsequently acquired by him after the date of the order of aljudication and before the discharge, also vested in the Court or Receiver for the same purpose as in respect of properties which the insolvent was possessed of at the time of the application for adjudication. The order of adjudication relates back to and takes effect from the date of the presentation of the application on which the adjudication is made. It is therefore, clear that the properties which defendant 3 was possessed of at the time when the petition for adjudication was filed vested in the Court for distribution amongst the creditors.

[8] "Property" is defined for the purposes of this Act under S. 2 (1) (d) in the following terms: "Property includes any property over which or the profits of which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit".

This definition appears to be modelled on S. 60 (1), Civil P. C. Unless the insolvent has got a present disposing power, which he may exercise for his own benefit over a property it will not be considered to be one coming within this definition. As to whether the properties in suit come within the definition will be considered when we take up the second point dependent on the interpretation of the terms of the deed of Family Settlement. We proceed to consider now whether the Official Receiver was competent in law to sell, whatever interest the insolvent had after the order for final discharge.

[9] For considering the question whether the sale on 3rd March 1945 by the Official Receiver was or was not valid we shall have to refer to certain other admitted facts. On an application filed by the defendant 3 on 6th February 1941 he was finally adjudicated an insolvent on 25th April 1941 on which date the Official Receiver, 24 Parganas, was also directed to take charge of the properties as under the-Provincial Insolvency Act. On 21st July 1941, a report was submitted by the Official Receiver stating that the properties now in suit werepractically valueless and on the next day the insolvent defendant 3 was allowed by the Court to realise directly the rents which were being: paid by the tenants from a portion of the said properties. On 13th September 1941 the insolvent made an application for discharge under s. 41 of the Act. This application was not disposed of till about one year later. In the meantime, on 5th December 1941, the learned Judge held that the insolvent had no saleable interest in the properties now in suit. Creditor No. 3 having later on made an offer to purchase whateverrights the insolvent had in that property the learned Judge directed the Official Receiver to put up the properties to sale. Against this order an appeal was taken by the insolvent tothe Court of the District Judge and on 13th May 1942 the order for sale was discharged on a finding that the insolvent had no saleable interest inthose properties.

[10] The petition for discharge which had been pending from September 1941 came up for hearing in July 1942, after the Official Receiver had filed an objection to the prayer for discharge and had also submitted a further report on 19th June 1942 that the insolvent had no assets except certain properties situate at Modhupur and Gobrapur. On a consideration of the objections raised a conditional order for discharge was passed by the learned Judge on 10th July 1912. The conditions imposed were about sales of the properties at Modhupur and Gobrapur. It was anticipated that the sales of the properties at Madhupur and Gobrapur would be completed before 11th August 1942 and on this latter date an order for absolute discharge was passed. The Official Receiver, however, was directed to continue in respect of the properties of the two places mentioned above. After the order for discharge had been made an appeal was preferred by creditor No. 3 Jubilee Bank Ltd., to the High Court being S. M. A. 266 of 1942 against the order by the learned District Judge holding that the insolvent had no saleable interest in the two houses now in suit. This appeal was disposed of by a judgment delivered on 18th July 1944. It was held that the appeal which had been preferred by the debtor before the District Judge was an incompetent one as the insolvent cannot be aggrieved by the order directing the sale of his interest in the property:

"It appears that he claims to be a trustee on behalf of certain other persons and as such has an interest in the house. His appeal was filed not as an insolvent but in an ouside capacity. In that capacity he is not aggrieved by the order because it is only his personal right as insolvent that will be sold. The order of the lower appellate Court is set aside and that of the Subordinate Judge restored with this modification that the words 'the interest of the insolvent in' will be inserted between the words 'sell' and 'these'."

[11] There was no adjudication as to whether the insolvent had any saleable interest and also whether the present plaintiffs, who were not parties to those proceedings, or any other person or persons had any present right in those properties. After the passing of this order, the Official Receiver reported to the insolvency Court that he had agreed to sell to defendant 2 creditor No. 8 the interest of the insolvent in the properties now in suit for Rs. 8,050. The present suit was filed on 19th March 1945 on which date a temporary injunction restraining further steps proposed to be taken by the Official Receiver were stayed (sic). The plaintiffs' prayer for time during the hearing of the injunction matter being refused on 18th April 1945 the order issuing temporary injuction was withdrawn. The Kobala by the Official Receiver in favour of defendant 2 was executed on 9th June 1945. The order for injunction was restored on 19th June 1945.

[12] It is argued on behalf of the plaintiff respondent that under sub-s. (2) of S. 44, Pro. vincial Insolvency Act the order for absolute discharge passed on 11th August 1942 had, subject to the provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 44, the effect of releasing "the insolvent from all debts proveable under this Act." It is contended that the Official Receiver cannot function after such an order of discharge. This argument ignores the principles underlying the Bankruptcy Legislation and the purpose for which the Court takes charge of the properties of an insolvent. On a reading of the provisions of the Provincial Insel. vency or for the matter of that of similar other bankruptcy statutes all the properties which come under the definition of S. 2 (1) (d), Pro. vincial Insolvency Act come into the hards of the Court and are subject to any order that the said assets be administered and such of the creditors whose debts can be proved in the insol. vency proceedings may get payments pro rata; from those assets. The Court takes charge of those properties but a person being adjudicated an insolvent is also given a chance after he has placed in Court his entire assets for the benefit of his creditors, to start life anew. A person who acts in that manner is allowed an absolute discharge. He is given an opportunity to begin his career without any handicap or impediment. The order of discharge is made without any direction being given about the divesting of the properties which had, under S. 28. Provincial Insolvency Act, vested in the Court or the Receiver for distribution amongst the creditors.

[13] If the interpretation attempted to be placed on S. 44 (2) of the Act be accepted, we have to hold, considered with that view that the assets which had already vested in Court for distribution are also all released or alternatively that until such assets are distributed amongst the creditors no application for discharge ought to be entertained. If as a result of the order for discharge the properties previously belonging to the insolvent revert back to the latter that would not only be most inequitable but would be against the spirit of the statute.

extinguishes the debts of the inscivent. The only limitation, imposed is that the creditors who have got debts provable under the Act can, after the order of discharge, look only to those particular assets which the insolvent was possessed of and had accordingly vested in the Court or the Receiver on the date of the filing of the application for adjudication. The claims of the creditors cannot be directed against anyother property which may be acquired by the insolvent after an order of discharge is made.

[15] It has been held consistently in a long series of decisions that if at the time when the order for discharge is issued the Court or the Official Receiver has got funds realised from the properties belonging to the insolvent which had vested in the Court or Receiver after adjudication such assets are to be distributed amongst the creditors even after the order for discharge. (Rowe & Co. Ltd. v. Tan Theon Taik, 2 Rang. 643: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Rang. 105), K. P. S. P. P. Firm v. C. A. P. C. Firm 7 Rang. 126: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Rang. 168). Arjundas Kundu v. Marchia Telini, I. L. B. (1937) Cal. 127: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 434), Kriparam v. Sawana Ram, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Lah. 300: (184 I. C. 472). In Bishanchand Jagannath v. Kishonlal Sheo Singh, I. L. B. (1939) Nag 478: (A. I. R (26) 1939 Nag. 103). It was not only held that the insolvency proceedings do not terminate with the order of discharge of the insolvent but a decree-holder creditor even if he had not notice of the insolvency proceedings and was not represented in them must seek his relief for recovering his debts from the insolvency Court and out of the assets which are still in the hands of the Court or of the Receiver.

[16] The Courts have gone further and have held that it is not only competent for the Court and the Receiver to distribute the assets which were held by the Receiver or by the Court but the latter can direct the sale of properties which were still held by the Court or by the Official Receiver if there were any other proveable debts still remaining to be paid. Sukea v. Ramchandra Sankar, I. L. B. (1937) Nag. 380: (A. I. R. (24) 1937 Nag. 171), Mahangelal v. Firm Suraj Prosad Chandulal, 1938 A. L. J. 1151: (A. I. R. (26) 1939 ALL. 114). Kanshiram v. Hariram 17 Lah. 775,* Parsu Vithoba Patil v. Balaji Vishwanath Rao, I. L. R. 1944 Nag. 14: (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Nag. 28). In a recent decision in Madras High Court, Soma Sundaram Pillai v. Official Receiver, South Arcot. A. I. R. (34) 1947 Mad. 95: (230 I. C. 213) an insolvent had been discharged and subsequently the insolvent made an application in respect of debts not yet satisfied for relief under the Provincial Debt Relief Act. The Court indicated that even after a discharge order the debts then outstanding as also the properties previously vested under the Insolvency Act continue to remain under the control of the bankruptcy Court. The debts are not payable personally by such an insolvent and the properties also cannot be deemed to be properties belonging to the insolvent. Such an insolvent could not be regarded as a debtor entitled to invoke the aid of the Debt Relief Act for such debts.

of S. 44 is in terms almost similar to S. 28 (2), English Bankruptcy Act of 1944. It has been held that under this Act an order of discharge releases the bankrupt from certain debts provable in bankruptcy but its effect is not to destroy the debt as though it had never been. See in this connection In re: Ainsworth; Millington v. Ainsworth, (1922) 1 Ch. 22: (91 L. J. Ch. 51). The object of the Bankruptcy Acts has thus been explained in Jakeman v. Cook (1878) 4 Ex. D. 26: (48 L. J. Ex. 165):

"One object of the Bankruptcy Act was to enable the debtor who has given all his property for the benefit of his creditor to obtain his discharge was that he might begin the world freed from all his obligation and protected from oppression of creditors. Another object is to prevent fraud by the debtor in giving an undue preference between creditor and creditor and promising to pay after the discharge to the prejudice of the general body of creditors."

[18] The extreme contention as urged on behalf of the plaintiff that after an order for discharge under sub-s. (2) of S. 44, Provincial Insolvency Act, the Receiver in Insolvency becomes functus officio, must be overruled. It is, however, further contended that in view of the special circumstances of this case the Receiver had no jurisdiction to sell the property after the order of discharge. It is pointed out that on 21st July 1941, the Official Receiver submitted a report to Court that the properties now in suit were practically valueless and on 5th December 1941, the Court came to the conclusion that the insolvent had no saleable interest in the properties. Immediately thereafter creditor No. 3 offered to purchase whatever rights the insolvent had in this property and the trial Court directed accordingly. On appeal to the Court of District Judge, it was held on 13th May 1942, that the insolvent had no saleable interest. When this order by the District Judge was in force the order for discharge of the insolvent was passed on 10th August 1942.

charge order was passed it was on the basis that the insolvent had no saleable interest in the properties. The conditional order for discharge which had been passed was for the purpose of collecting the proceedings of two other properties. An appeal had, thereafter, been taken to this Court against the order passed by the District Judge declaring that the insolvent had no saleable interest. Henderson J. set aside the order of the District Judge and restored the direction.

^{*} This seems to be a mistake. The correct citation would be A. I. R. (24) 1937 Lah. 87. The case that is printed as 17 Lah. 775 does not deal with the question under consideration.—Ed.

with the modification that the sale will be of the interest of the insolvent in the properties in question. After this order of the High Court had reached the lower Court, the sale was arranged for on 3rd March 1915. The present suit was filed on 19th March and a temporary injunction was issued restraining the Official Receiver from executing the conveyance or to complete the transaction. This temporary injunction was withdrawn on 18th April and before it was restored on 19th June, the kobala had been executed by the Official Receiver on 9th June.

(20) In my view the order passed by this Court had the effect of reviving the authority of the Official Receiver to apply the proceedings of this property also for the benefit of the general body of creditors.

(21) The next question for consideration is whether the insolvent had any saleable interest or not, and even if he had a saleable interest whether the sale by the Official Receiver binds or affects the plaintiffs. Exhibit 1, the Deed of Family Settlement, requires a closer examination. The relevant terms are as follows:

"4th That after the death of the settlor the Trust Estate more fully described and mentioned in the Schedules 'A', 'B', 'C', 'D' and 'E' hereunder shall vest unto his wife and sons and their respective heirs in the manner and subject to the conditions, charges and uses, hereinafter stated:

(d).....The South Eastern portion of the premises No. 60A (1), Satish Mukherjee Road, Sahebbagan, Kalighat consisting of three rooms on the First floor and three rooms on the ground floor together with privies and kitchens as well as the North Eastern Block of P60A (2), Satish Mukherjee Road, Sahebbagan Kallghat consisting of three rooms on the first floor and three rooms on the ground floor together with privies and kitchess hereinafter described in the Schedule 'D' shall vest in the third son of the settlor named Dhirendra Nath Banerjee an insurance agent having not much income to be held and enjoyed by him during his natural life and on his demise during the lifetime of the settlor or thereafter the same premises shall vest in the legal heirs of the said Dhirendra Nath Banerjee absolutely for ever. He may have the option of temporarily residing in the family dwelling house No. 15, Vidyasagar Street with the Settlor's second son Debendra Nath Banerjee on his contributing the income of the property allotted to him for family expenses.

(e) The family dwelling house and premises No. 15, Vidyasagar Street in Calcutta hereinafter described in the Schedule 'E' shall subject to the following rights of residence and charges vest in the second son of the settlor named Debendra Nath Banerjee who is a Medical Practitioner having practice in that locality with a dispensary in the building to be held and enjoyed by him during his natural life and on his demise of the radius the life time of the settlor or thereafter the said premises shall vest in the legal heirs of the said Debendra Nath Banerjee absolutely and for ever. And it is hereby declared and expressed by the settlor with the consent of the said Debendra Nath Banerjee.

5th..... That after the death of the settlor his wife Breemati Sushila Debi and his four sons Jitendra Nath Banerjee, Debendra Nath Banerjee, Dhirendra Nath Banerjee and Nirendra Nath Banerjee shall support the settlor's surviving daughters and their children who may be dependent on him who may be in helpless and indigent circumstances out of the income of the properties allotted to them respectively and shall provide accommodation for them in their houses, if necestary. They shall have no claim on the properties of the settlor."

Clause 6 is the vesting clause after the death of the settlor. Such vesting is subject to certain conditions.

[22] It is quite clear from the terms of the Deed of Family Settlement that defendant 3 had a limited interest in the property in suit, subject no doubt to the rights of certain other persons. Such interest even if sold cannot affect the rights of the beneficiaries. The question whether on the facts proved the plaintiffs are dependants in helpless condition and whether they are staying in the house have been answered by the learned Subordinate Judge in favour of the plaintiffs. I do not see any reason to disturb that finding.

[23] Although I hold that the interest of Defendant 3, was saleable the plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration that their interest is not affected by the sale. The defendant bank has rightly been restrained from interfering with the plaintiff's possession of the premises in suit.

[24] The appeal is accordingly dismissed. Each party to bear its costs in this Court, Leave to appeal under cl. 15, Letters Patent has been asked for and is refused.

Companies Act (1913), S. 103 (3) — Provisional contract — Meaning — Pre-incorporation expenses — Contract Act (1872), S. 70.

The word "provisional" in S. 103 (3) means that the contract made by a Company is to be read as if it contained a provision that it shall not be binding on the Company unless and until the Company became entitled to commence business. The section applies to all the contracts of a Company whether preliminary or final or in the course of carrying on its business. The Company is not, therefore, liable for costs and expenses incurred in respect of its formation and promotion and in the case of a Company which never commenced its business, also for the expenses such as stamp and registration fees, postal and other charges and publicity and travelling expenses incurred even after incorporation: (1908) 2 Ch. 890, Rel. on. [Paras 12, 13, 15, 16]

Moreover, as the statute prohibits a Company from making a binding contract before the commencement of its business no implication of a promise to pay can be made in respect of the expenses incurred before its incorporation. The expenses of a Company which had never become entitled to commence its business cannot be said to be for its benefit and hence cannot be recovered under S. 70, Contract Act. [Para 17]

R. Chaudhury - for Official Liquidator.

Samar Sen - for Claimant.

Judgment. — This matter has come before me for settlement of the list of debts and claims.

- [2] The Company was incorparated on 5th April 1945. The Company never carried on any business nor was any commencement certificate taken. Certain applications were made for shares in the Company and a total sum of Rs. 78,760 was paid to the Company by intending shareholders. The money received from the shareholders was deposited with the Central Bank of India Ltd., Clive Street Branch, a sum of Rs. 445-14-0 has since accrued as interest on the said deposit.
- [3] As the promoters of the Company found it difficult to commence business of the Company, at a meeting held on 10th March 1947 it was resolved that the share money received from the applicants should be refunded in full to the respective applicants. It was also resolved that the Central Bank of India be requested to honour the cheques in respect of such refund by debiting the current account of the Company. The Central Bank of India, however, did not agree to pay.
- [4] On 28th April 1947, the Registrar, Joint Stock Company, issued notice under 8. 247, Companies Act, for striking out the name of the Company from the register and on 18th September 1947, the Company's name was struck off.
- [5] On 31st December 1947, a resolution was passed for voluntary winding up of the Company. The Central Bank of India, however, did not agree to pay out the money deposited in the current account of the Company in the Bank in spite of the said resolution.
- [6] On 12th March 1948, an application was made "in the matter of Trustees Act" for distribution of the money lying with the Central Bank of India amongst the share-holders. On 12th April 1948, Das J. treated the application as an application for restoration of the Company under S. 247, Companies Act, and made an order for restoration.
- [7] On 15th April 1948, an application was presented for winding up of the Company. On 10th May 1948, the winding up order was made and Mr. G. S. Mukherjee was appointed the Official Liquidator. The Liquidator advertised in the papers inviting claims against the Company. No claim was filed.

- [8] On 1st December 1948, I gave directions for filing the list of creditors and contributories.
- [9] The Liquidator has filed an affidavit and in Part 1 of Annexure "A" to the said affidavit the names of the intending share-holders who deposited money with the Company for taking shares have been set out. In Part 2 of Annexure "A" the claim of Sharda Agencies for Rs. 7913-5-3 has been set out but the claim is not accepted by the Liquidator.
- [10] An affidavit was filed, affirmed on 24th January 1949, by Sharda Agencies, a partnership firm carrying on business at 22, Canning Street claiming a sum of Rs. 7913.5.3. As the affidavit did not disclose sufficient materials, I gave directions for the filing of a further affidavit in compliance with which a fresh affidavit has been filed by Rati Lal.
- Agencies is a partnership firm and they were appointed the Managing Agents by the Articles of the Association of the Company for a period of twenty years from the date of incorporation at a monthly allowance of Rs. 2000 in addition to a commission on the annual net profits of the Company. It is claimed that the said firm paid Rs. 4008-11-3 under the directions of the Company's Directors on account of the expenses incidental to the formation of the Company. They also claim to have paid Rs. 3904-10-0 on account of expenses after its incorporation and for its management. The relevant vouchers have been annexed to the affidavit.

[12] As regards pre incorporation expenses, there can be no doubt that they are not payable by the company. It was conceded and, I think rightly, by learned counsel for the claimants that they could not claim pre incorporation expenses in the liquidation proceedings. I, therefore, hold that the Company is not liable for costs and expenses incurred in respect of its formation and promotion.

[13] Learned counsel however contended that expenses incurred by the claimants after incorporation should be allowed. They consist of a stamp and registration fees for registering the company and postal and other charges and publicity and travelling expenses. I am not quite sure whether all these expenses were made after the incorporation. Stamp and registration charges seem to me to be really presincorporation expenses. Be that as it may, I do not think the claimants are entitled to be paid for these expenses and for the following reasons:

[14] Section 103 (3), Companies Act, provides

"Any contract made by Company before the date on which it is entitled to commence business shall be provisional only and shall not be binding on the Company until that date and on that date it shall become binding."

[16] It was held in In re: "Otto" Electrical Manufacturing Co. Ltd. (1906) 2 Ch. 390: (75 L. J. Ch. 682) under the corresponding section of the English Act that the section applied to all contracts of a company, whether preliminary or final or in the course of carrying on its business.

[16] In that a case, one Mr. Jenkins bought some furniture for £240 and put it into an office which he took for the company. He claimed the money. The claim was disallowed as the Company had never become entitled to commence business. Buckley J., said as follows:

"How does he claim? Obviously in contract; he claims upon this ground that, expressly or by implication, the Company promised to pay him for the furniture if he would pay the furniture dealer for it. Of course, that is contract. The Act of parliament says that that contract is not binding on the Company, and he cannot sue here. The other claims are for moneys which he advanced to a man to come up to town when he was going to serve the Company, and other payments of a like kind. They are all claims in contract. In my judgment he cannot be heard to say that there was such a contract; the Act of Parliament forbids it."

He also observed that the word "provisional" in section means that the contract is to be read as if contained a provision that it shall not be binding on the company unless and until the Company became entitled to commence business.

the Indian Contract Act, his clients are entitled to claim expenses incurred after the incorporation of the company. I do not agree. I think that inasmuch as the company never became entitled to commence business, the expenses were not incurred for its benefit. Further, the section does not apply to persons who are incompetent to contract. It can only apply where the law can imply, from the circumstances, a promise to pay. Where the statute prohibits the Company from making a binding contract before commencement of business no implication of a promise to pay can or should be made.

[18] Mr. Sen next contended that his clients were entitled to recover registration fees and expenses inasmuch as the Company was under a statutory liability to pay them. In support of his contention, he referred me to the judgement of Buckley J. Inre: English and Colonial Produce Co. Ltd. (1906) 2 Ch. 435: (75 L. J. Ch. 831) This judgment however was overruled in In re: National Motor Mail coach Co. Ltd. (1908) 2 Ch. 515: (77 L. J. Ch. 790) where Cozens-Hardy M. R. observed as follows:

"I need hardly say that any opinion expressed by Buckley J. especially upon this branch of the law, deserves the greatest respect, but I cannot concur in the view which he took, and Mr. Eustace Smith confessed that he had not been able to find any other authority differentiating between a statutory liability and any other liability in relation to this question. There is no other ground upon which the judgment can be supported, and I know of no principle or authority on which that distinction can be maintained."

The result is that the claim of Sharda Agencies must be dismissed. I settle list by deleting the claim of Sharda Agencies.

If an application for transfer of a decree can be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution even when no execution is pending, there is no conceivable reason why it is necessary that an execution proceeding should be pending when the decree-holder makes an application for the issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. The main test of an application for execution being in accordance with law would appear to be whether it is possible for the Court to issue execution upon it, that is whether it is within the power of the Court to grant the kind of relief asked for, though in the particular case the relief may not, on the merits, be granted, for example, owing to some finding on facts, not to the nature of the application itself: A. Held, that the application, though defective was not a nullity as there is no rule requiring the decree-holder to file an inventory of movables when the judgment-debtor is in possession and hence was in accordance with law. G. N. Das J. — This is an appeal by the decree-holder against a decision of our learned brother Chunder J.

[2] The facts of the case were not fully placed before this Court. We have therefore to state those facts in some detail.

[3] On 23rd March 1942, the appellant obtained a decree in the Presidency Court of Small Causes, 4th Court, against Rati Kanta Mukherji for a sum of Rs. 1127-10-9. It appears from the order sheet which is on the record that there was an attachment before judgment on 6th March 1942 which was confirmed by the Court. On 18th June 1942, the attached properties were released from attachment and the order of that date goes on to state that the execution case was dismissed. On some date which it is not possible for us to discover from the records but prior to June 1944, the sole judgment-debtor Rati Kanta Mukherji died. He was survived by his widow and four sons, Nalini Ranjan Mukherji, Anil Krishna Mukherji, Ranjit Kumar Mukherji and Sailen Mukherji the latter two being minors. On 26th June 1944 the decree-holder made an application which purports to be one for execution of the decree passed on 23rd March 1942. In column 9 of the application which is headed as "Mode in which the assistance of the Court is required" the following statement occurs:

"I pray that the total amount of Rs. 1127-10-9together with interest on the principal sum up to date of payment and the costs of taking out this execution be realised by attachment and sale of defendant's moveable property as per annexed list and paid to me.
A notice do issue upon Nalini Ranjan Mukherjee of village Nalta, P. O. Maju, district Howrah, to show cause why his name should not be substituted in record in place of defendant Rati Kanta Mukherjee now deceased and execution be issued against him and notice be sent under registered cover. Grounds: That Nalini Ranjan Mukherjee is the son, heir and legal representative of the defendant Rati Kanta Mukherji now deceased."

On the day following the following order was recorded:

"On the plaintiff's application for substitution of the name of Nalini Ranjan Mukherji in place of defendant deceased ordered; Issue notice returnable on 1st August 1944."

The order sheet shows that the case was adjourned on 1st August 1944, 22nd August 1944, 9th September 1944, 11th November 1944 on which date it was adjourned to 2nd December 1944, when the application was dismissed for default. Some time thereafter, on 8th June 1945, an application on terms similar to that which was filed on 26th June 1944, was presented to the Small Cause Court on behalf of the decree-holder. The Court thereupon issued a notice on 13th June 1945. The case was adjourned on 7th July 1945, 4th August 1945 and then to 1st September 1945. Meanwhile, on 25th August 1945, the following order was recorded:

"On the plaintiffs' application for substitution of the names of Anil Krishna Mukherji, Ranjit Kumar Mukherji, Sailen Mukherji and Mrs. Rati Kanta Mukherji the minors represented by their mother Mrs. Rati Kanta Mukherji ordered: Issue notice returnable on 1st.

September 1945."

On 1st September 1945, it was ordered :

"Ordered that the names of the opposite parties Anil Krishna Mukherji, Ranjit Kumar Mukherji, Sailen Mukherji, the minors represented by their mother Mrs. Rati Kanta Mukherji as guardian and Mrs. Rati Kanta Mukherjee be placed on record as heirs and legal representatives of deceased defendant. No order is made as to Nalini Ranjan Mukherji."

Nothing further was done till 1st October 1945, when the following order is recorded:

"On the plaintiff's application for substitution of the name of Nalini Ranjan Mukherji in place of deceased defendant ordered: Notice do issue returnable on 24th November 1945."

On 3rd October 1945 notice was issued as prayed for. The matter was adjourned on 24th November 1945 to 1st December 1945 on which date the Court passed the following order:

"Application granted: Let the name of Nalini Ranjan Mukherji be placed on record as son, heir, legal representative of the defendant since deceased. Execution to issue."

On 12th December 1945 an application was made by the decree-holder for transfer of the decree to the Munsit's Court at Howrah on 17th Deletter No. 2736 dated 20th December 1945. The execution was thereupon started at Howrah. The judgment-debtors appeared and raised an objection to the effect that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation. The trial Court overruled the objection and directed execution to proceed. On appeal, the first appellate Court allowed the appeal and dismissed the execution case. Against this order a further appeal was taken to this Court being appeal from Appellate Order No. 197 of 1947. This appeal was heard on 11th August 1949 and the appeal was dismissed. It is the propriety of this decision which is now in question before us.

in question before us. [4] The judgment of this Court proceeds on the following grounds: (1) In case the judgmentdebtor dies after the decree and if an execution case is pending at the time, the decree holder has merely to pray to carry forward the execution case. (2) If no such execution is pending, the decree-holder is required to make an application for execution in terms of O. 21, R. 11 read with S. 50, Civil P. C. if the judgmentdebtor was dead within one year of the passing of the decree but if the death took place before one year, a further prayer has to be made under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C. As in the present case there was no proper application for execution, the steps taken by the decree holder were not in accordance with law and did not save limitation. The view of the learned Judge was that there must be an application for execution started in which a prayer should be made under O. 21, B. 22, Civil P. C. Before we deal with this question it is necessary to refer to a matter which was not placed before the Court. From the facts stated already it appears that after all the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor had been placed on the record, the Court made an order directing execution to issue and thereafter transferred the case for execution to Howrah. The heirs of the judgment debtor who were then on record did not take any steps to have the order set aside. In these circumstances, it was not open to the judgment-debtor to raise the plea of limitation. As was observed in the case of Gour Chandra v. Janardan Prasad, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 180: (68 I. C. 837), the order directing execution to issue was an order "deciding as between the parties that the execution was not barred by limitation." Such an order has been held to operate as res judicata and whether right or wrong, the order cannot be challenged in subsequent proceedings. See also the cases of Promotha Nath v. Habu Mia, 49 O. W. N. 260: (A. I. R. (82) 1945 Cal. 835), Satya Narayan v. Kalyani Prosad, 49 C. W. N. 558: (A. I. R. (82) 1945 Cal. 887). In this view, no further question arises. But as the matter has been argued at length on other points we desire to record our opinion on those points.

(5) The first point which fell to be decided before our learned brother Chunder J. was whether when a judgment-debtor dies after the decree at a time when no execution case is pend. ing against him, the proper procedure for the decree-holder is to take out an execution and pray for bringing the legal representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor on record and if the judgment-debtor had died more than one year ago to pray for issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C. The learned Judge answered the question in the affirmative. The view so taken is supported by the decision in Kuppuswami Chettiar v. Rajagopal Aiyar, 45 Mad. 462: (A. I. B. (9) 1922 Med. 79) and by some other cases of the Madras High Court. It is also supported by certain observations of Ghose J. in Amar Krishna v. Jagat Bandhu, 59 Oal. 760 atp. 771 : (A. I. B. (18) 1931 Cal. 719 F. B.), where the learned Judge incidentally observed :

"It must be remembered that a step-in-aid of execution can only be taken in the course of an execution proceeding which is pending or capable of being kept alive and there can be no step-in-aid of execution when the execution itself is already barred."

The above view however has not been taken in the cases of Sankara Nainar v. Thangamma, 45 Mad. 202 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Mad. 247), M. Kannan v. P. Avvulla Haji, 50 Mad. 403: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 288), Chathangali v. P. Kunhamu, 57 Mad. 803: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Mad. 392), Ghanayalal v. Punjab National Bank, 111 I. C. 259 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Lah. 7), Jagdeo Narain Singh v. Rani Bhubaneswari Kuer, 7 Pat. 708: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 612), Gopal Shankar v. Raising Premji, 36 Bom. L. R. 510: (A. I. R. (21) 1994 Bom. 266), Ramchandra v. Uka, 103 I. C. 279: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Nag. 308). I have not been able to discover a direct Bench decision of this Court on this point. In my view the latter class of cases which take a more liberal view of Art. 182 (5), Limitation Act, should be accepted. The article should receive a fair and liberal and not a technical construction so as to enable the decree-holder to reap the fruits of his decree. The view taken in the latter class of cases is also correct on principle. It is well settled that an application for the transfer of a decree is a step-in-aid of execution even though no application for execution is pending: Sreenath Chakravarti v. Priyanath Bando. padhya, 58 Cal. 882 at p. 841: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 cal. 312). If therefore an application for transfer of a decree can be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution even when no execution is pending, there is no conceivable reason why it is necessary that an execution proceeding should be pending when the decree-holder makes an application for the issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. O., which step he has to take before he can obtain relief by way of execution. The question whether an application for the issue of notice under O. 21, R. 22 is a step-in-sid of execution has been answered in the affirmative in the case of Gopal Chunder Manna v. Gossain Das, 25 Cal. 594: (2 C. W. N. 556 F.B.). Banerjee J. who was the referring Judge was of opinion that even if the application for execution be defective regarded as an application for execution of a decree, if the application contained a prayer for issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22 the application would still be regarded as one to take some step in aid of execution, in cases where issue of such a notice was necessary, the decree having been passed more than a year before. The view of Banerjee J. was affirmed by the Full Bench. In a later case, namely, Abdul Aziz v. Yakub Abdul Gani, 54 I. C. 433: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 166) Chitty J. was of opinion that even if there was no application for execution, a mere prayer for the issue of a notice under O. 221, R. 22 is a step-in-aid of execution. Walmsley J. agreed in the result but reserved his opinion on this point. Reference may be made to the case of Salay Chandra v. Pares Nath 35 C. L. J. 81: (A. I R (9) 1922 Cal. 44) to which our attention was drawn by Mr. Ghoss appearing for the appellant. It is necessary to set out the facts of that case. In that case, the decree was obtained on 2nd December 1912. An execution was started within three years. Nothing came out of it. On 22nd May 1917 a second application for execution was filed. The application for execution was defective in three respects namely, (1) the date of disposal of the previous application for execution was not correctly stated: (2) the sum due under the decree was wrongly calculated and (3) that col. 10 which deals with the mode of execution was not duly filled up. It, however, contained the following prayers: for substitution of the heirs of one of the decree holders: (2) for a notice on the other decree-holders under O. 21, B. 15 and (3) as one of the judgment-debtors was dead for the issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22. It was contended that this application for execution did not save limitation. This contention was overruled, Mookerjee J. observed that an application to take a step in aid of execution in order that it may be in accordance with law must pray for some relief which the Court can grant, and then proceeded to say that the three prayers which were made in the application were such as could be granted by the Court on the application then presented.

It was therefore held that the application was a step-in-aid of execution and extended the period of limitation.

[6] Before Chunder J. reliance was placed on behalf of the judgment-debtors on certain decision of the Bombay High Court, namely Mahomed Bhai v. Dawood Bhai Co., A. I. R. (25) 1938 Bom. 405 : (I. L. R. (1938) Bom. 708). The question, however, which arose for decision in that case was as regards the propriety of the application regarded as an application for execution. The application suffered from the defect that the particulars of the property to be attached under O. 21, R. 54 were not specified. The case was heard by Engineer J. The learned Judge granted an amendment of the application. Against his decision an appeal was taken under the Letters Patent which was heard by a Division Bench presided over by Beaumont C. J. In dismissing the appeal it was observed that the amendment was properly made. It was further observed that the application though defective was not a mere nullity merely because the application did not describe the property in detail. Reliance was also placed on the case of Gopal Parsharam v. Damodar Janardan, A. I. R (36) 1943 Bom. 353 : (210 J. C. 376). The question then before the Court was whether the application which prayed for rateable distribution but not against the same judgment-debtor was one in accordance with law. The question now before us did not arise in that case. Reference was also made to the case of Vallabhdas Narandas v. Kantilal G. Parekh, A. I. R. (84) 1947 Bom. 430 : (49 Bom. L. R. 420). Our attention was drawn to the observation of Kania J. to the effect that the prayer for the issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22 is not a mode of execution and is not a relief which a party asks as one awarded by the decree. It is a hurdle which the decree-holder has to cross before he can get the relief awarded by the decree. It asks the Court to extend the life of the decree. The observations do not touch the question which are now before us. On the other hand, they support the view that the prayer for the issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22 can in certain circumstances be regarded as a step-in-aid of execution of a decree. The observations were made in connection with a contention then raised that the prayer for issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22 was one which came within the purview of O. 21, R. 11 (2) (j). It was this question which was decided by the learned Judge the decision being that a prayer for issue of a notice as aforesaid was not a relief which the decree-holder can claim under O. 21, R. 11 (2) (j). The cases relied on on behalf of the judgment-debtor do not, therefore assist us in deciding the question with which we have to deal.

(7) In the present case, as already stated, the Court did act upon the applications presented on behalf of the decree-holder and the Court directed issue of the requisite notices in the proceedings which were taken by the decree-holder. For the reasons already given the conclusion follows that the proceedings on which reliance is placed on behalf of the decree-holder must be regarded as steps-in-aid of execution of the decree within Art. 182 (5), Limitation Act, and extended the life of the decree.

[8] Conceding that it is necessary that there should be an application for execution and the step which is relied on by the decree holder to extend the period of limitation, should be taken in such proceedings for execution before the same can be regarded as a step in-aid of execution, we have to consider whether in the facts of the present case the application which was filed by the decree-holder on 26th June 1914 was an application for execution of the decree in accordance with law. The meaning of the expression "in accordance with law" has been debated in many cases both here and elsewhere. Mr. Ghose, appearing for the appellant, referred us, as already stated, to the case of Saday Chandra v. Pares Nath, 35 C. L. J. 82: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 44). The observations of Mcokerjee J. are that an application, even though it be deemed so defective as not to be an application for execution, must still be regarded as an application made to the proper Court in accordance with law to take some steps-in-aid of execution. In a later case, namely, the case of Plambar Jana v. Damodar Guchait, 53 Cal. 661 : (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 1077) to which Mr. Sen appearing for the respondents drew our attention the following passage at page 673 is relevant:

"The expression in accordance with law in Art. 182 (5) should be taken to mean that the application though defective in some particulars was such upon which execution could be issued. If the omissions were such as to make it impossible for the Court to issue execution upon it, as was the case in Asgar Ali v. Trailokya Nath Ghose, 17 Cal. 631 (F.B.), where the list of properties to be attached and sold was not supplied with the application for execution, it should be held that such an application is not in accordance with law."

"The true view is that where an application for execution in substantial compliance with law is preferred to the Court, such an application will be effectual to stay the progress of limitation" whether the Court admits or rejects or returns the application or allows such application to be amended. All the cases bearing on the point were reviewed by Sen J. in the case of Gopal Parsha.

1950 C/68 & 64

ram v. Damodar Janardan, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Bom. 358; (210 I. C. 376). At page 358 the following statement of the law is made:

"The main test of an application for execution being in accordance with law would appear to be whether it is possible for the Court to issue execution upon it, that is, whether it is within the power of the Court to grant the kind of relief asked for, though in the particular case the relief may not, on the meri's, be granted, for example, owing to some finding on facts, not to the nature of the application itself."

(9) Bearing the principles so enunciated, let us see whether the prayers made in the application with which we are concerned, satisfy the test laid down above. In the present case, the mode of execution prayed for was "by attachment and sale of defendants' movables as per list". No list of movables was however filed The question is whether such an application for execution is one in accordance with law.

[10] The content of an application for execution is to be found in O. 21, R. 11 (2), Civil P. C. Clause (j) requires the statement of the mode in which the assistance of the Court is required whether (ii) by the attachment and sale, or by the sale without attachment, of any property. (i) (iii) to (v) are omitted. Rule 12 requires an inventory of movables in cases where the judgment-debtor is not in possession. In such cases, the decree-holder is required by the rule to annex to his application an inventory of his movables with a sufficient description. There is no rule requiring the decree-holder to annex such an inventory of movables when the judgment-debtor is in possession. The provisions in O. 21, Rr. 43, and 45 or O. 21A relate to the mode of execution and do not specify the material content of an application for execution. The relevant application cannot, therefore, be said to be a nul. lity. The application was no doubt a defective one which could have been amended, if reces sary, at the appropriate time, that is, after the legal representative had shown cause and further steps in execution were necessary to be taken.

referred us to the case of Abdul Rafi v. Maula Bux, 37 ALL. 527: (A. I. R. (2) 1915 ALL. 820). That case dealt with an application for execution directly coming within O. 21, R. 12, Civil P. O. It did not decide the point now before us. The case of Birdhi Chand Dhondiram v. Bade Saheb, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Bom. 52: (98 I. O. 941), to which Mr. Sen referred, merely held that O. 21, R. 12, did not apply to a case where the decree was obtained against the legal representative of the judgment-debtor. In the present application there is no express statement whether the movables to be attached were in the possession of the judgment-debtor or not. If the movables of the judgment-debtor or not. If the movables is no express statement whether the movables to be attached were in the possession of the judgment-debtor or not. If the movables is no express statement whether ables to be attached were in the possession of the judgment-debtor, there is no rule which requires the decree-holder to specify these movables. It cannot, therefore, be said that the present application is so defective as to render it to be a nullity. Under one conceivable circumstance the application would be in compliance with the provisions of 0. 21, R. 11 (2) (j). That such an application is a valid application was decided in the case of Nathmal Mathuradas v. Balkrishna Gangalisan, A. I. R. (28) 1911 Nag. 152: (194 I. C. 641).

[12] On all these grounds my conclusion is that the application filed on 26th June 1944 and steps taken by the decree-holder in that application were steps-in-aid of execution in accordance with law. Limitation was therefore saved by these proceedings.

[13] Assuming that the application which was presented on 26th June 19.4 can be regarded as a step in aid of execution, a further question has got to be considered, namely, whether the steps taken by the decree-holder in those proceedings which were directed against one of the heirs of the deceased judgment-debtor saved limitation as against the rest.

[14] This question was answered in the affirmative in the cases of Ramanuj Sewak Singh v. Hingu Lal, 3 ALL. 517 and Krishnaji Janardan v. Murrarrav, 12 Bom. 48, to which our attention was drawn on behalf of the appellants. The views taken in the above cases have been followed in later decisions. (see Rustomjee's Law of Limitation, 5th Edn., p. 1824 where the cases are collected).

nuj Sewak Singh v. Hingu Lal 3 ALL. 517, which have been followed in later decisions commend themselves to me and the application which was filed against one of the legal representatives of the deceased judgment debtor saved limitation as against the other legal representatives of the said deceased judgment debtor.

[16] My conclusion, therefore, is that the present application for execution is not barred by limitation.

[17] The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed. The judgment of this Court as also of the first appellate Court are set aside and that of the trial Court is restored. The appellant is entitled to her costs in all Courts. The hearing fee before us is assessed at three gold mohurs.

The Province of Bengal — Defendant — Appellant v. Pawn Kissen Law & Co.—Plain-tiffs—Respondents.

A. F. O. D. No. 119 of 1948, D/- 9-6:1950, against decree of Arbitrator under S. 19, Defence of India Act, Zillah 24 Pargans, D/- 16-3-1948.

Defence of India Act (1939), S. 19 (1) (e)—Power to award interest on price of land acquired—Land Acquisition Act (1894), Ss. 23, 28 and 34.

Under S. 19 (1) (e) the Arbitrator is required only to take into consideration the provisions of S. 23; Land Acquisition Act. The Arbitrator is not strictly bound by the terms of S. 23, Land Acquisition Act.

When land is acquired under the Defence of India Act the Arbitrator can award interest to the person whose land has been acquired, on the price of the land and the interest will run from the date when the land is taken possession of till the date on which the Land Acquisition Collector draws up the award and makes an offer to the person.

Jajneswar Mazumaar, Asst. Govt. Pleader

Atul Chandra Gupta and Upendra Chandra Mallik:
—for Respondents.

G. N. Das J .- This appeal is by the Province of West Bengal from a decision of Mr. R. S. Trivedi, Arbitrator, appointed under S. 19 Defence of India Act, and dated 16th March 1948. Premises No. 30 Ballygunge Park now numbered as No. 44-Ironside Road belonged at the relevant time to Pran Kissen Law & Co. On 15th November 1944 the aforesaid premises were requisitioned by the Government. The said premises were later on acquired by the Government under S 75 (A), Defence of India Rules, on 12th April 1945. Before the Collector the respondents Pran-Kiesen Law and Co., preferred a claim on 9th December 1944. The petition has been marked Ex. A In that petition the respondents claimed a sum of Rs. 2049 per month as c mpensationfor the lands on account of the requisition made by the Government. No agreement was however reached between the Government and the claimants as regards the compensation payable for the requisition of the land. Accordingly on 21st November 1946 the respondents filed a petition before the Collector for reference of the dispute to the Arbitrator under S. 19 (1) (e), Defence of India Act, hereinafter to be called the Act. In this petition the claim of the respondents in respect of the requisition was laid at Rs. 2750 per month. The price of the land was claimed at Rs. 4000 per cottab. Interest was claimed at 6 per cent. per annum. On 14th February 1947 the Land Acquisition Collector made a reference. From this reference petition it appears that possession was taken on 12th April 1945, the requisition having been made on 15th November

1944. On 21st February 1947 the reference was registered as Land Acquisition Case No. 25 of 1947. On 18th April 1947 the respondents filed their statement of claim. In that petition the respondents claimed Rs. 2750 per month for the period during which the property was under requisition and they claimed the price of the land at Rs. 4000 per cotta and the value of the boundary wall at Rs. 3750. Interest was claimed at 6 per cent. pr annum on the ground of unconscionable delay. On 15th December 1947 the Province of Bengal filed its statement. In that statement the Province of Bengal stated that the fair rent payable from 24th November 1944 to 11th April 1945 would be at the rate of Rs. 2049 per month. The value of the land acquired was stated to be at the rate of Rs 3325 per cotta, the total price being stated to be Rs. 4,86,627. The price of the boundary wall was stated to be Rs. 37co. On 14th November 1948 the Land Acquisition Collector purports to have made an award. This has been marked as Ex. 5. As the learned Arbitrator points out this was really an offer made by the Collector. On 16th March 1948 (sic) the Arbitrator made his award. The Arbitrator affirmed the Collector in so far as it concerned the compensation to be paid during the period of requisition and in respect of the acquisition of the land. He awarded interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum for a period of two years. His conclusions may be summarised as follows:

Rent at Rs. 2049 from 24th November

1944 to 11th April 1945 . 9425 ...Rs. Price of land at Rs. 3325 486627 Interest on the second item for 2 years ... 58400

Rs. 554452

He did not make an order for costs.

[2] Against the decision of the Arbitrator the Province of Bengal preferred this appeal contesting the decision in so far as it awarded interest in favour of the respondents. There was a crossobjection by the respondents. In the grounds of cross-objection the cross-objectors claimed interest at 6 per cent. per annum. They also elaimed costs before the Arbitrator. They also claimed the value of the compound wall which was refused by the Arbitrator. The memo of cross objection was valued at Rs. 26000. It has been stated before us that this sum represents interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the sum of Rs. 4,86,627 for a period of 9 months till 14th January 1948.

[3] The principal question which arises in the appeal and in the cross-objection concerns the interest, if any, payable on the price of the land. There are two subsidiary questions, viz., if interest is payable, at what rate interest is to be paid and secondly for what period.

- [4] I shall deal with the first part of the ques. tion, viz., whether interest is payable on the price of the land which was acquired. The learned Assistant Government Pleader who has appeared in support of the appeal has contended that interest is not payable at all. His argument in short is that compensation is payable under the Ast on the principle embodied in S. 19 (1) (e) of the Act. Section 19 (1) (e) merely attracts S. 23 (1), Land Acquisition Act, 1894. Section 23 (1), Land Acquisition Act. does not provide for payment of interest on the sum awarded as compensation. The payment of interest on the sum awarded under the Land Acquisition Act is provided for in 82. 23 and 34. These se2tions have not been expressly made applicable to requisitions or acquisitions under the Defence of India Rules. In support of his submission he has referred us to a decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Associated Oil Mills Ltd., Katpadi v. Provincial Government of Madras, I. L. R. (1948) Mad. 567 : (A. I. R. (35) 1943 Mad. 256).
- [5] So far as this Court is concerned there is no decision which expressly covers the point. We have, therefore, to construe S. 19 of the Act and to see whether that section debars the Arbitrator from awarding interest on the price of the land in case of acquisition. Section 293 (2), Government of India Act, 1935, lays down that any law authorising compulsory acquisition of land must provide "for the payment of com. pensation for the property acquired", and "either fix the amount of compensation or specify the price on which and the manner in which it is to be determined".
- [6] Section 19, Defence of India Act, accordingly made necessary provisions for specifying the price on which the compensation has to be awarded and the manner in which it has to be ascertained.
- [7] Section 19 (1) (a) provides for payment of compensation in terms of an agreement which may be reached between the Government and the person whose land has been acquired.
- [8] Section 19(1)(b) provides that where no such agreement can be reached, the Central Government shall appoint an Arbitrator who possesses requisite qualifications.

[9] Section 19 (1) (c) provides for the appointment of Assessors in cases requiring expert knowledge.

[10] Section 19 (1) (d) requires that the parties may submit statements of opinion as regards the fair amount of compensation to be paid.

[11] Section 19 (1) (e) then states: "the Arbitrator in making his award shall have regard to, (i) the provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 23, Land Acquisition Act, 1894 so far as the same can be made appliamble, (ii) whether the acquisition is of a permanent or manner character."

Government the power to make rules for carrying into effect the provisions of the Act.

[13] It is apparent that the fixation of the mount of compensation to be paid in case of acquisition whether permanent or temporary is matter entirely within the jurisdiction of the Arbitrator.

Tial As already pointed out the contention of the appellant is that the true intent of S. 19(1)(e) is to limit the amount of compensation payable under the Act to the amount of compensation which is payable under S. 23(1), Land Acquisition Act, 1894, so far as the same may be applicable.

[15] Section 23 (1), Land Acquisition Act, provides for payment of compensation in respect of the market value of the land, damages sustained by reason of severance or injurious affections of other properties of the person whose land has been acquired or on account of mecessary change of residence or of business or diminution of profits.

[16] It is, therefore, contended that payment of interest on the price of land acquired is not use item which can be paid under S. 19 (1) (e) of [17] The opening words of S. 19 (1) make it abundantly clear that S. 19 (1) (e) merely stated the principles which the Court has to consider in assessing the amount of compensation to be paid. Section 19 (1) (e) requires the farbitrator to have regard to the provisions of S. 23 (1), Land Acquisition Act. This requirement only implies that the provisions of Land Acquisition Act must be taken into consideration. It does not mean that the Arbitrator is strictly bound by the terms of S. 23 (1),

Land Acquisition Act. [18] Mr. Gupta appearing for the respon. dents drew our attention to the case of Ryots of Garabandho v. Zamindar of Parlakimedi, 70 I. A. 129 at p. 168: (A. I. R. (30) 2343 P. C. 164) where a similar expression which is to be found in S. 168 (2), Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, came to be discussed. In that case under 8. 164, Madras Estates Land Act. 1908, Record of Rights had to be prepared and the Revenue Officer was to settle fair and equitable rent. Section 168 provided that in zettling such rents the Collector shall presume, anless the contrary is proved, that the existing erent or rate of rent is fair and equitable and shall have regard to the provisions of the Act for determining rates of rents payable by raisats. The Board of Revenue affirmed a decision of the Revenue Officer enhancing the rent by $37\frac{1}{2}\%$ although S. 32 of the Act limited the enhancement of rent to $12\frac{1}{2}\%$. It was contended that in fixing the fair and equitable rent, due regard to the provisions of the Act has not been paid. A question, therefore, arose as to the meaning of the expression having regard to the provisions of the Act.' The Judicial Committee observed that the primary duty of the Revenue Officer was to fix a fair and equitable rent and though he may be guided by the provisions underlying Chap. XI of the Act in fixing the fair and equitable rent, he is not strictly bound by those provisions.

[19] In my opinion S. 19 (1) (e) of the Act has not taken away the power of the Arbitrator to fix the fair amount of compensation to which the owner was entitled in case of acquisition under the Defence of India Rules. In the case of Province of Bengal v. Board of Trustees of the Improvement of Calcutta, 50 C. W. N. 825:

(A. I. R. (33) 1946 cal. 416), it was stated that the principle of compensation to be paid under S. 19 (1) (e) of the Act is that the amount of compensation must be tested by the loss to the owner. We have, therefore, to find out what was the loss to the owner by reason of the acquisition of the land.

[20] The question whether in case of statutory acquisition the person whose land is acquired is entitled to interest on the price of the land is dealt with in Cripps on Compensation, Edn. 7 at p. 196. The learned author states that ordinary rules as to payment of interest on purchase money apply when lands are acquired under statutory powers. The Statute Law in this country as regards interest to be paid on purchase money is contained in S. 55 (4) (b), T. P. Act, which states that in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, interest has to be paid on the purchase money from the date on which possession has been delivered in cases where ownership has passed to the purchaser. In the case of Inglewood Pulp and Paper Co. Ltd. v. New Brunswick Electric Power Com. mission, 1928 A. C. 492 at p. 498: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 P. C. 287), it is observed as follows:

"It is now well established that on a contract for sale and purchase of land it is the practice to require the purchaser to pay interest on his purchase money from the date when he took possession: per Lord Cave L. C. in Swift & Co. v. Board of Trade, (1925) A. C. 520 at p. 532: (94 L. J. K. B. 629). The law on the point has also been extended to cases under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845....

Their Lordships see no good reason for distinguishing the present case from such cases. It is true that the expropriation under the Act in question is not effected for private gain, but for the good of the public at large, but for all that, the owner is deprived of his property in this case as much as in the other and the rule has long been accepted in the interpretation of statutes that they are not to be held to deprive individuals of property without compensation unless the intention to do so is made quite clear. The statute in the present case contains nothing which indicates such an intention. The right to receive interest takes the place of the right to retain possession and is within the rule."

[21] As I have already discussed no such contrary intention can be spelled out of S. 19 (1) (e) of the Act. The fact that S3. 28 and 34, Land Acquisition Act, were not made expressly applicable does not also indicate a contrary intention. The Act merely laid down the principles to be observed in fixing the amount of compensation to be paid.

[22] In my opinion a person whose land has been acquired under the Act is entitled to receive the full compensation for the loss of his property. The plainest principle of justice requires that the acquirer should not retain the price of the land and the use thereof without paying to the person whose land has been acquired compensation in the shape of interest on the price of the land. This is fully supported by the following observations of Lord Shaw in the case of Ratanlal Croonilal v. Municipal Commissioner for the Ci'y of Bombay, 45 I. A 233 at p. 245: (A.I.R. (5) 1918 P. C. 129) to which our attention has been drawn by Mr. Gupta appearing for the respondents. The observation runs thus:

"Their Lordships are of opinion that the right to interest depends upon the following broad and clear consideration. Unless there be something in the contract of parties which necessarily imports otherwise, the date when one party enters into possession of the property of another is the proper date from which interest on the unpaid price should run. On the one hand, the new owner has possession, use and fruits, on the other, the former owner, parting with these has interest on the price. This is sound in principle, and authority fully warrants it."

[23] The decision in Associated Oil Mills, Ltd., Karpadi v. Provincial Govt. of Madras. I.L.R. (1948) Mad. 567: (A.I.R (35) 1948 Mad. 256) cited above is distinguishable on facts. That was a case of temporary acquisition and not one of permanent acquisition. In such a case the ownership in the property does not pass. The owner merely gets compensation for the loss of income. It is no doubt true that their Lordships of the Madras High Court interpreted S. 19 (1) (e) of the Act, as limiting the power of the Arbitrator to award compensation only in accordance with the provisions of S. 23 (1), Land Acquisition Act. For reasons which we have already given we respectfully dissent from the view so taken by the Madras High Court.

[24] The learned Assistant Government Pleader also relied on the case of Keshab Chandra v. Governor General in Council, 49 C. W. N. 218: (A.I.R. (32) 1945 Cal. 294). There the question arose whether under S. 19 of the Act, the Arbitrator was justified in awarding compensa-

Blank JJ. overruled the claim on the short ground that S. 19 merely speaks of compensation for the land, the word land obviously not including 'moverbles'. This decision does not throw any light on the present question. The learned Assistant Government Pleader also referred us to the following observation of Mitter J. in the case of Pashupaty Roy v. The Province of Bengal, 52 C W. N. 732 at p. 785. (A.I.R. (35) 1948 Cal. 195):

"Clause (e) says that the provisions of S. 23 (1).
Land Acquisition Act, may only be utilized for the purpose of assessing compensation of the property."

This observation was not relevant for the purposes of the decision and has to be read in the light of the facts of that case. To me it seemsthat the observation is obiter.

[25] The aforesaid discussion leads me to the conclusion that interest on the value of the land acquired under the Defence of India Act may be awarded by the Arbitrator. The view taken by the Arbitrator in the present case awarding such interest cannot therefore be assailed.

I26] The next question is what is the rate of interest to be paid in the facts of the present case. In the petition of a claim filed by the respondents before the Land Acquisition Collector (Ex. A.) the respondents claimed rent at the net annual return at 5 per cent. The rent awarded by the Collector and the Arbitrator ascompensation is Rs. 2049 per month which works out at about 5 per cent. on the value of the land, viz. Rs. 4,86,627.

[27] In my opinion in the facts of the present case interest should be awarded at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the said sum of Rs. 4,86,627. This brings us to the question as to the period for which such interest may be paid. It is not disputed that interest will run from 12th April 1915, when the land was taken posses. sion of. The dispute is as regards the outsidelimit. In the Court below the respondents claimed interest till 14th January 1948. In the memo of cross-objection the claim for interesthas been laid at Re. 26,000. This sum, we are told, represents interest on the said sum of Re. 4,86,627. at 6 p.c.p.a. down to 14th January 1948. It appears from Ex. 5 that the Land Acquisition. Collector drew up an award on that date. The Arbitrator pointed out that the Collector made an offer on 14th January 1948. The sum award. ed by the Land Acquisition Collector in respect of the period under requisition and the price of the land after acquisition was affirmed by the Arbitrator. No appeal has been taken to this-Court in so far as these amounts are concerned. The Act does not provide for deposit in Court of the sum awarded. It the respondents had been so minded they could have obtained payment of the sum.

[28] Having regard to all these facts and circumstances interest at the rate of 5 p. c. p. a. on the term of Rs. 4,86,627 would be payable in this case. from 12th April 1945 to 14th January 1948.

[29] It remains for us to consider the question as regards the value of the boundary wall. The Arbitrator gave certain reasons for disallowing the claim of the respondents. It appears, however, that in the statement made by the Collector under 8. 19 (1) (d) the Collector stated that Rs. 3700 was the fair value of the boundary wall. The respondents accepted this figure as the value of the wall. In these circumstances there was no justification for rejecting this part of the claim. The respondents will, therefore, be entitled to the sum of Rs. 3700 as the price of the boundary wall.

[30] No interest on Rs. 3700 was claimed in argument. It is, therefore, disallowed. The respondents also did not press for costs of the Court below. This is, therefore, disallowed.

[31] It is no longer disputed before us that the shares of the partners of the firm of Pran Kissen Law & Co., are correctly set out at p. 4, Part II of the paper book. The share of Narendra Nath Law is, therefore, $\frac{1}{3}$th in the acquired land. On 16th February 1950 Narendra Nath Law filed a petition in this Court supported by the affidavit of Madhu Sudan Roy his Secretary sworn on 16th February 1950. In that petition Narendra Nath Law stated that he would receive Rs. 62,006-8.0 in full satisfaction of all his claims in respect of his $\frac{1}{3}$th share in the acquired premises, that is No. 30 Ballaygunge Park.

[32] In view of this petition the benefit of the cross-objection or of the Arbitrator's award in so far as he is concerned must be limited to the said sum of Rs. 62,006-8-0. 78th share of the compensation money as stated above that is, Rs. 4,95,830-4-19gds. 2 kara would be paid to the persons named in items 1 (b) to 1 (i) on p. 4, Part 11 of the paper book in the shares mentioned against their names. Narendra Nath Law would be entitled only to Rs. 62,006-8 0. The order of the Arbitrator would be varied accordingly.

[33] The result, therefore, is that the award in so far as the respondents other than N. N. Law are concerned should be for the following amounts:

Loss of income from 24th November 1944 to 11th April 1945 Rs. 9425 less Rs. 1178 in N. N. Law's ith share, that is, Rs.

8246-14-0.

The price of the land acquired Rs. 486,627 less Rs. 60,828-6 0 in N. N. Law's th share, i. e., Rs.

4.25,793.10.0.

Interest at 5 p. c. p. a. on the said sum of Rs. 4,86,627 less Rs. 60,828 6 0 in N. N. Law's th share i. e., Rs. 4,25,799 10-0 from 12th April 1945 to 14th January 1948 Rs.

58,547.4.19 gds. 2 kara.

Price of the wall
Rs. 3700 less Rs. 462-8-0
in N. N. Law's th share
Rs.

Total Rs. 4,95,830.4-19 gds. 2 kara.

[34] As regards the costs of the appeal and of the cross objection we direct that the appellant must pay to the cross objectors that is the persons named in items 1 (b) to 1 (i) as aforesaid costs of the appeal.

[35] There will be no order for costs in the cross-objection.

[36] The sums which I have directed to be paid to the different respondents must be paid by the end of August 1950.

[37] The appeal and the cross-objection are disposed of as above.

Civil Rule No. 1638 of 1949, D/- 14-12-1949.

Debt Laws—Bengal Money-lenders Act (X [10] of 1940), S. 34 (1) (a) and (b) — Suit for recovery of mortgage loan as money claim — Suit not framed under O. 34, Civil P. C. — Relief by way of instalments — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34.

The expression "to which the provisions of O. 34, Sch. 1. Civil P. C., 1908 apply" in S. 34 (1) (a) qualifies 'suits' and not 'loans'. This interpretation would enable the debtor to have relief by way of instalments in all cases of mortgage loans irrespective of the question whether the mortgages is seeking to enforce his security or not.

[Para 4]

Hence, although the loan is on a mortgage and the mortgagee does not enforce his security but sues for recovery of loan in the ordinary way and not by resort to the provisions of O. 34, the borrower may claim relief under S. 34 (1) (b) (i) where the claim has not been decreed or under S. 34 (1) (b) (ii) where the claim has been decreed provided the loan was a pre-Act loan Hari Prosanna Mukherjee - for Petitioners. Satya Priya Ghose — for Opposite Parties.

G. N. Das J.—This application in revision is at the instance of certain mortgagees. The mortgage loan was taken on 13th August 1932. The mortgagees instituted a suit for recovery of the sum due on the mortgage treating the claim as one for recovery of money and not as a claim for enforcement of the security. The suit was, therefore, not framed in terms of O. 34, Civil P. C. The decree was put into execution when the judgment-debtors made an application under S. 34 (1) (b) and S. 36, Bengal Money-lenders Act. The decree-holders raised certain preliminary objections to the maintainability of the application. One of the objections with which we are now concerned related to the prayer of the judgment-debtors for instalments under S 34 (1) (b), Bengal Money-lenders Act.

[2] The learned Subordinate Judge has refused to re-open the decree under S 36, Bengal Moneylenders Act, on the ground that the decree does not contravene the provisions of S. 30 of the Act. The learned Subordinate Judge has however made a preliminary order in favour of the judgment-debtors under S. 34 (1) (b) (ii), Bengal Money-lenders Act.

[3] In this rule Mr. Makherjee, appearing for the petitioners contends that S. 34 (1) (b), Bengal Money-lenders Act, has no application as the loan was one on mortgage and as such was one to which the provisions of O. 34, Civil P. C., would apply and the remedy of the judg ment-debtors was to make an application under 6. 31 (1) (a) for instalments at the time of the passing of the preliminary decree. The question, therefore, is whether s. 34 (1) (a) is attracted to the facts of this case. The material portion of S 94 (1) (a) states :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in any law for the time being in force, or in any agreement, the

Court shall

(a) in suits in respect of loans to which the provisions of O. 34, Sch. 1, Civil P. C. 1908, apply, on the application of the defendant, and after hearing the plaintiff at the time of the passing of the preliminary decree under R. 2 or R. 4 of the said Order give certain directions for passing a decree directing this amount of the decree to be payable in instalments as specified therein."

The question is whether the words "to which the provisions of O. 34, Sch. 1, Civil P. O. 1908. apply" qualify the word 'loan' or 'suit'. Literally this expression may be said to qualify the word 'loan' but having regard to the fact that the application has to be made at the time of the passing of the preliminary decree under B. 2 or R. 4 such an interpretation would make S. 31 (1) (a) inapplicable to the suits for recovery of loan due on mortgages, where the mortgages does not proceed to enforce his security under O. 34. Section 34 (1) (b) would on the petitioner's interpretation entitle the borrower in case of only unsecured loans contracted before the passing of the Act to get instalments where the lender sues merely for recovery of the loan. The interpretation suggested above would thus result in an anomaly, and leave the mortgagors at the mercy of the mortgagees.

[4] In my opinion a fair construction of S. 34 (1) (a) is to bold that the expression "to which the provisions of O. 34, 9ch. 1, Civil P C., 1908, apply" qualifies 'suits.' This is in consonance with the facts that order 34 refers to procedure in mortgage suit. When the Legislature used the expression "to which the provisions of O. 34, Soh. 1, Civil P. C. 1908, apply" they were contemplating 'suits' and not 'loan.' This interpretation would enable the debtor to have relief by way of instalments in all cases of mortgage loan irrespective of the question whether the mortgagee is seeking to enforce his security or not. The Bengal Money-lenders Act was intended to give relief to debtors. A liberal construction of S. 34 should, therefore, be put upon the expression referred to above.

[5] The conclusion, therefore, follows that, although the loan is on a mortgage and the mortgagee does not enforce his security but sues for recovery of loan in the ordinary way and not by resort to the provisions of O. 34 the borrower may claim relief under S 34 (1) (b) (i) where the claim has not been decreed or (ii) where the claim has been decreed provided the loan was a! pre Act loan. The present case, therefore, is covered by S. S4 (1) (b) (ii) of the Act.

[6] The contention raised on behalf of the petitioner must, therefore, be overruled.

[7] The Rule is accordingly discharged but there will be no order as to costs.

An order was made on 24-8-1948 under S. 41, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, against a tenant. After the coming into force of the West Bengal Act XXXVIII [38] of 1948 on 1-12-1948, the tenant applied under S. 18 of that Actalleging that he had tendered the costs of the ejectment proceedings to the landlord on 27-12-1948 and on the refusal by the landlord to accept the same deposited the amount in Court on 14-1-1949:

Held that in view of S. 12 (1) (b) the tender as alleged coupled with the deposit did not satisfy the requirements of the statute. The expression 'date of commencement of the Act' in S. 12 must in the light of S. 18, be considered to mean the date when decree or order for possession is made on an earlier date. Hence the payments or deposits contemplated by S. 12 of the Act must be made within one month of the date when the decree or order for possession is made. No relief could, therefore, be given to the tenant under S. 18 read with S. 12 of the Act.

(d) Houses and Rents — West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act

(XXXVIII [38] of 1948), S. 18-Effect of.

The effect of S. 18 of the Act is obviously to give the Act a retrospective operation for the limited purpose of rescinding or varying a decree or order for possession passed before 1st December 1948, which is the date of the commencement of the Act. To test whether the decree or order for possession is to be rescinded or varied the Act is to be deemed to be in operation when the decree or order for possession was made. The suit or proceeding for possession must also be deemed to be alive on the date when the decree or order for possession was made and it must be seen whether the Court would have made the decree or order for possession on that date if the Act was then in force. [Para 7]

The different provisions of the Act show that the Act was drafted with a view mainly to its having prospective operation. Section 18 was inserted without adequate consideration of the incongruities which would arise and has failed in its object. [Paras 11 & 13]

Diptendra Mohan Ghose-for Petitioners.

Apurba Charan Mukherjee-for Opposite Party.

Order.—This rule was obtained by the petitioners who are tenants against an order dated 1st February 1949 passed by Mr. M. Mukherji, learned Judge, Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, 6th Bench, rejecting an application under S. 18, West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Tempo. rary Provisions) Act (XXXVIII [38] of 1948).

[2] The case of the petitioners is that their predecessor was a tenant in respect of premises No. 38/4B Baghbazar Street. The landlord served a notice to quit under S. 106, T. P. Act, and started proceedings under S. 41, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act on the ground of default. The petitioners filed written statements disputing the fact that they were defaulters. On 24th August 1948 an order was made under S 41, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. It appears that the petitioners deposited the arrears up to July 1948. It is alleged that since the passing of the order under 8. 41 they are depositing rent before the Rent Controller. On 1st December 1948 the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act (XXXVIII [38] of 1948) came into force. On 7th January 1949 the petitioners made an application under S. 18 of the said Act. It is alleged by the petitioners that they tendered the costs of the ejectment proceedings to the landlord on 27th December 1948 and on the refusal by the landlord to accept the same deposited the amount in Court on 14th January 1949. On 1st February 1949 the learned Small Cause Court Judge rejected their application under S. 18 of the Act on the ground that the costs were not deposited within time. No finding was arrived at as regards the allegation of tender. The tenants moved this Court and obtained this-Rule.

[3] Mr. Diptendra Mohan Ghose appearing for the petitioners contended that the tender on 27th December 1948 followed by a deposit on 14th January 1949 was sufficient compliance with the provisions of S. 12 (1) (b) of the said Act. Mr. Apurba Charan Mukherji appearing for the opposite party contended that the aforesaid tender, even if true, was not sufficient compliance with the statute. He also contended that S. 18, West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act cannot be invoked by the petitioners. He also contended that interest on arrears of rent was not paid as required by S 12 (1) (b) of the Act.

[4] In my view of S 12 (1) (b) the tender as alleged coupled with the deposit did not satisfy the requirements of the Statute.

[5] The question as to how far S. 18, West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, hereinafter called the Act, helps the tenants, is one of some difficulty.

[6] Section 18 runs as follows:

Where any decree or order for the recovery of possession of any premises has been made, before the date of commencement of this Act but the possession of such premises has not been recovered from the tenant by the execution of such decree or order, the Court by which the decree or order was made may, if it is of opinion that the decree or order would not have been made if this Act had been in operation at the date of the making of the decree or order, rescind or vary the decree or order in such manner as the Court may think fit for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of this Act."

[7] The effect of S. 18 of the Act is obviously to give the Ac' a retrospective operation for the limited purpose of rescinding or varying a decree or order for possession passed before 1st December 1948 which is the date of the commencement of the Act To test whether the decree or order for possession is to be respind. ed or varied the Act is to be deemed to be in operation when the decree or order for possession was made. The suit or proceeding for possession must also be deemed to be alive on the date when the decres or order for possession was made and we are to see whether the Court would have made the decree or order for possession on that date if the Act was then in force. This requires a consideration of the other provisions contained in the Act.

[8] Section 11 of the Act provides that no decree or order for possession can be made if the tenant pays the full rent allowable by the Act and performs the conditions of the tenancy subject however to the qualifications stated in the proviso.

[9] Section 12 (1) then provides that the benefit of S. 11 can be availed of by the tenant if he complies with cls. (a) (b) and (c) thereof. These clauses are conjunctive as appears from the use of the word 'and' in between these clauses. The effect of Ss. 11 and 12 is that the tenant will have protection against eviction (1) if he pays rent to the full extent allowable under the Act within the prescribed period; (2) if he pays all arrears of rent to the full extent allowable under the Act "within one month of the date of the commencement of the Act" and also pays interest at the rate of 61 per cent. on the arrears of rent which is the subject of a suit or proceed. ings before a Court or of any decree or order of a Court as also such costs as the Court may award; (3) if there has been an increase of rent by the Controller he pays the increased rent within one month of the date specified by the Controller or of the date of the order of the Controller as the case may be.

[10] We have already stated that the effect of S. 18 is that the Act is to be assumed to be in operation on the date of the passing of the decree or order for possession. This necessarily connotes that the Act has commenced to operate on the said date. The expression 'date of commencement of the Act' in S. 12 must therefore be considered to mean the date when the decree or order for possession is made or an earlier date. If this is the correct position then the payments or deposits contemplated by 8, 12 of the Act must be made within one month of the aforesaid date, that is, the date when the decree or order for possession is made. It is true that this interpretation may lead to the conclusion that S. 18 would be unworkable in a large majority of cases, Mr. Panchanan Ghose who appeared in a similar case before me, contended that the Court should shrink from a construction which would render S. 18 futile. This is quite true but if the words of the statute are plain the Court has to accept the plain meaning of the words used by the Legislature. The argument ab inconvenienti is only admissible in construction where the meaning of the statute is obscure. Where the language is explicit, its consequences are for Parliament and not for the Courts to consider. (Craies on Statute Law.) Ein. 4, p. 87). To the same effect are the observations made by Jervis C. J., in the case of Abley v. Dale, (1851) 20 L. J. C. P. 233 at p. 235: (87 R. R. 637) :

"Where the words used are plain and unambiguous, Courts are bound to construe them in their ordinary sense even though it does lead to an absurdity or manifest injustice."

I am not unmindful of the rule enunciated by Lord Hobhouse in Simms v. Registrar of Probates, 1900 A. C. 323 at p. 335; (69 L. J. P. C. 51);

"Where there are two meanings each adequately satisfying the meaning (of a statute) and great harshness is produced by one of them, that has legitimate influence in inclining the mind to the other."

It is true that if the words used are ambiguous and susceptible of a narrower and wider meaning the Court would adopt the one or the other in order to give effect to the intention of the Legislature. But in the present case, as I have already stated, we have not to give the words commencement of the Act' its plain interpretation. We cannot construe the said expression in two different senses while applying S. 13 read with S. 12 of the Act.

s. 18 of the Act and to fit it in with cases which were disposed of sometime before 1st December 1948. This would appear if we refer to S. 12 (3) of the Act which lays down that if the tenant fails to pay or deposit the rent due after the commencement of the Act for three consecutive months the interest of the tenant shall ipso facto cease and he shall no longer be deemed to be a tenant. Thus in a case where the tenant fails to pay his rent for three months after the passing of the decree or order for possession and before 1st December 1948 the tenant would on the meaning to te put on the words commencement of the Act' be a trespasser and no relief can be given to him under S. 18 of the Act. The same difficulty arises in applying 8. 17 which requires the Court to decide if there is sufficient cause for proceeding with the suit or proceedings for recovery of possession. This has to be done at the first hearing of the suit or as soon as there may be thereafter. The draftsman was oblivious of the fact that the Act may operate to suits pending on the original side of this Court where there is no such procedure as the first hearing of the suit. The expression 'first hearing of the suit' is to be found in O 13, B 1 and O. 15, Civil P. C, and was explained by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Gopika Raman v. Atal Singh, 56 I. A. 119 : (A. I. B. (16) 1929 P. C. 99), to mean the framing of issues. If S. 18 has the effect of resuscitating the suit to the date when the decree or order for possession was made the expression first hearing of the suit' would be wholly inappropriate at that stage. The resume of the different provisions of the Act shows that the Act was drafted with a view mainly to its having prospective operation. Section 18 was inserted without adequate consideration of the incongruities which would arise. I quite agree with the submission of Mr. Panchanan Ghose that the avowed policy of the Act was to give the tenant who was in arrears a period of grace and to afford him an opportunity to pay. We have however to construe the Act as it is expressed and not to give it a meaning which may have been intended by the Legislature. That would be to usurp the function of the Legislature. Mr. Panchanan Ghose also relied on the decision in the case of Nanda Lal v. Suresh Chandra, 50 C. W. N. 171 : (A. I. B. (33) 1946 Cal. 113). That case however turned on the particular words of para. 100, Bengal House Rent Control Order, 1942, as amended on 6th July 1944. The inconveniences and incongruities which have been suggested above did not arise in that case. The view taken by me receives support from the Bench decision in the case of Mrs. Julie Sen v. Surjendra Mohan Roy, 49 C. W. N. 700, which turned on the interpretation of S. 11, Calcutta House Rent Control Order, 1943, which is in -similar term.

[12] I am in entire agreement with the opinion of Henderson J., in the case of Sm. Radharani Debi v. Sanat Kumar, 49 C. W. N. 617, where his Lordship referring to the analogous provisions of the Calcutta House Rent Control Order, 1943, said that it was impossible to transfer Para. 11 of the Order simpliciter. The same difficulty, in my opinion, arises in applying S. 18 of the Act simpliciter.

[13] In my opinion S. 18 of the Act has failed in its object. One feels sorry for the tenant whom the Legislature wanted to give relief against the consequences of his default but on an interpretation of the Act the conclusion follows that no relief can be given to the tenant in the facts of this case. The alleged tender and the subsequent deposits do not help the tenant.

[14] The result therefore is that this Rule is discharged but there will be no order for costs.

K.S. Rule discharged.

(a) Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 136 and 141 -Scope - Suit by a transferee from a Hindu or Muhammadan entitled to sue for possession under Art. 141 - Limitation.

Article 141 which refers to a suit by a Hindu entitled to possession of immovable property on the death of a Hindu female will not apply to a suit for possession by the purchaser from such person. Such a suit would be governed by Art. 136 under which the starting point of limitation is the date 'when the vendor is first entitled to possession'. But by reason of the combined effect of Arts. 136 and 141 a purchaser from a person contemplated by Art. 141 would be precisely in the same position as his vendor and time would begin to run against him from the date of death of the female.

(b) Limitation Act (1903), Art. 141 - Onus of proof.

All that the plaintiffs need prove to bring the case within Art. 141 is that they are Hindus or Mahomedans entitled to the estate on the termination of a limited interest of a Hindu or Mahomedan female. Once that is established they have made a prima facie case that Art. 141 applies and to take the case out of that Article the defendants must show that the time had begun to run as against the full owner and that it was actually running when the limited interest came into effect: A. -for Respondents.

Harries C. J .- This is a second appeal preferred by the defendants from concurrent de. crees of the Courts below made in favour of the plaintiffs.

[2] The suit was brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration of title to certain property and for recovery of possession of the same. It was alleged that the property originally belonged to one Panchu who died in the year 1892. On his death he left a daughter, Maya. His two sons had predeceased him. But the wives of these predeceased sons were alive at Panchu's death. The plaintiffs in their plaint alleged that Panchu was in possession of the property when he died. His daughter Maya died in the year 1943 leaving a son, Bhutnath. On 23rd October 1943 Bhutnath sold the property in dispute to the plaintiffs. They could not get possession of the property and brought this suit for a declaration of title and for possession.

(3) The defendants pleaded that Panchu, some two years before his death, had made a gift of the properties in dispute to the two widows of Panchu's two sons who predeceased him and the defendants claimed title through these two widows. A plea of limitation was also raised.

[4] Both the Courts below were of opinion that this alleged gift by Panchu in his lifetime to his two daughters in law had not been established and therefore no claim could be made by the defendants to the property through any interest which these two widows had been given in it by this alleged gift.

[6] The main contest in the Courts below was on the question of limitation. The lower appellate Court could not find one way or another as to whether Panchu was in possession of the property in dispute when he died. In the view of the lower appellate Court however it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to establish the possession of Panchu at the date of his death. In the view of the lower appellate Court once the plaintiffs had established that they were claiming the property after the termination of the interest of a Hindu female then Art. 141, Limitation Act, applied and prim facie the suit was within time, that is, within twelve years of the death of the Hindu female, the daughter Maya. On the other hand, the defendants contended that Art. 141, Limitation Act, could never come into play unless the plaintiffs showed that time had not began to run against the last full owner and before the limited interest of the Hindu female commenced. The lower appellate Court took the view that the onus of showing that Panchu was out of possession at the date of his death rested on the defendants and as they had failed to show that Panchu was out of possession at his death Art. 141 applied and consequently the suit was within limitation.

[6] Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen who has appeared on behalf of the defendants-appellants has confined his argument to this question of limitation. He has contended in the first place that Art. 141, Limitation Act, can have no application as the plaintiffs were not Hindus or Mahomedans entitled to possession of the properties in dispute on the death of a Hindu female. Admittedly the plaintiffs were purchasers from a Hindu, Bhutnath, who became entitled to the property on the death of his mother Maya. The argument is that Bhutnath possibly could rely on art. 141, Limitation Act, but no purchaser from him could. It is true that Art. 141 refers to a suit by a Hindu entitled to possession of immovable property on the death of a Hindu female and it might be that strictly Art. 141 would not cover the case of a purchaser from such a person. However the point is of no real importance by reason of art. 136 Limitation Act, which provides that the period of limitation for a suit by a purchaser at a private sale for possession of immoveable property sold, when the vendor was out of possession at the date of sale, is twelve years from the date when the vendor was first entitled to possession. If Bhut. nath could claim to come within Art 141 then it appears to me by reason of Art. 136 that purchasers from him would be in precisely the same position. Time would begin to run for Bhutnath from the date of the death of his mother Maya. That would be the date when the vendor was first entitled to possession and that, by reason of Art. 136, would be the date from which time would begin to run as against the purchaser. Tost being so, the point which has to be decided in this case is whether or not Art. 141 applies or whether the appropriate Article is Art. 142, which is the Article governing claims to possession of immovable property when plaintiff has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession.

[7] As I have said, the argument for the plaintiff was that Maya, Bhutnath's mother, was a Hindu female and was entitled to a Hindu female's interest in the property. She was not in possession at the date of her death and therefore it is said that Bhutnath had twelve years from the date of her death to bring a suit. As I have already said, the same period must be given to the plaintiffs, purchasers from Bhutnath.

[8] Oa behalf of the appellants Mr. Chandra S. kbar Sen has argued that Art. 141 can bave no application at all if Panchu was out of possession at the date of his death. The argument is that Art. 141 can only apply if time began to run for the first time against the Hundu female, the limited owner. It is argued that if time had began to run against the last full owner, namely, Panchu, it would continue to run against any limited owner who succeeded Panchu on his death and after the period of limitation not only the claim of the limited owner would be barred, but also the claims of all reversioners of the last full owner. Reliance was placed for this proposition on a decision of this Court in the case of Mohendra Nath v.

Shamsunnessa Khatun, 21 C. L. J. 157: (A.I.R. (2) 1915 Cal. 629). The material portion of the headnote of this case reads as follows:

"Article 141, Sch. 1, Limitation Act, applies only to cases when it is proved that the last full owner was in possession at the time of his death; if he himself was dispossessed and time began to run against him, the operation of the law of limitation would not be arrested by the fact that, on his death, he was succeeded by his widow, daughter or mother."

[9] Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee J., who delivered the judgment of the Bench observed at p. 164 as follows:

"The plea of limitation raised by the defendant is sought' to be met by the plaintiffs by reference to Art. 141 of Sch. 2 to the Limitation Act, 1877, which provides that a suit for possession of immovable property by a Hindu entitled to possession on the death of a Hindu female, must be brought within twelve years from the date when the female dies. As Sabitri died in 1893 and Sati in 1896, and this suit was commenced on 7th June 1907, this seems, on a superficial view, to furnish a complete answer; but on close examination, it transpires that the plaintiffs are in inextricable difficulty. It is plain that Art. 141 applies only to cases where it is proved that the last full owner was in possession at the time of his death; if he himself was dispossessed and time began to run against him, the operations of the law of lim tation would not be arrested by the fact that, on his death, he was succeeded by his widow, daughter or mother. In the words of Lord Kingsdown in Prannaih v. Rookea Begum, 7 M. L. A. 323 at 353: (4 W. R. 37 P. C.), a cause of action is not prolonged by mere transfer of the title."

[10] Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen relies on this case and the observation of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee and points out that the plaintiffs had failed to prove in this case that Panchu was in possession at the time of his death though they had pleaded that in the plaint. Mr. Sen's argument is that unless it is shown that Panchu was in possession at the date of his death Art. 141, Limitation Act, could not be relied upon by the plaintiffs. On the other hand the plaintiffs had contended that it was for the defendants to show that Panchu was not in possession when he died. According to the learned Subordinate Judge it was impossible to say whether Panchu was or was not in possession at the date of his death. That being so, Mr. Sen has argued that as the plaintiffs had failed to prove that Panchu was in possession Art. 141 would have no application.

[11] This Bench decision has been considered by Benches of this Court in subsequent cases, the first being Hemendranath v. Jnanendraprasanna, 63 Cal. 155: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 702). In that case G, a Hindu, governed by the Dayabhaga, died without issue in 1846 possessed of certain estates and leaving him surviving a widow J. Shortly afterwards J adopted B who became the full owner of the estates. In 1865, by an ekrarnama, B created a life estate in favour of his adoptive mother J B having predeceased J, on J's death in 1900, B's widow D came into possession of the estates. In 1914 D under the authorisation of her late husband, adopted the plaintiff, then a minor. By an anteadoption agreement, however, with the plaintiff's natural father, D retained possession of the estates as a life-tenant postponing the plaintiff's possession till her death in 1918. In 1930, within 12 years of D's death, the plaintiff sued for possession of certain immoveable properties belonging to G's estates alleging them to have been dispossessed after 1865 during J's life tenancy. The defendants contended that the dispossession was prior to 1865 when B was the last full owner. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendants succeeded in proving their respective contentions.

[12] It was held that prima facie the plaintiff was in time under Arts. 140 and 141, Limitation Act, and he was entitled to possession. To avoid it, the onus lay on the defendants to prove that dispossession took place when B was the last full owner, in which case the suit would be barred under Art. 142, Limitation Act.

[13] It is to be observed that in this case the Court was unable to say whether the last full owner was or was not in possession at the date of his death. The Bench held that the onus was on the defendants to show that the last full owner was not in possession and if they failed to discharge that onus art. 141, Limitation Act, applied. It is to be observed that after the last full owner there were a number of limited interests or life estates to which Arts. 140 and 141, Limitation Act, applied. The precise point arose in that case which arises in this case, namely whether it is for the plaintiffs or the defendants to show whether the last full owner was or was not in possession when the first limited interest took effect. At page 159 of the report, R. C. Mitter J. observed:

"If the defendants want to avoid the operation of these Articles they must prove the necessary facts, namely, that limitation began to run from the time when Baikuntha was the full owner, that is to say he was dispossessed when he was the full owner. Dr. Basak has urged that the onus is on the plaintiff to prove that the dispossession was after 1865 on the authority of the case of Mohendra Nath v. Shamsunnessa Khatun (21 C. L. J. 157: A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal. 629) and has laid emphasis on a sentence to be found at page 164 of the report." (I have already referred to this passage) "We do not think that the learned Judges in that case intended to decide the question of onus. In that case the last full owner, Satyakinkar Ghoshal, died in the year 1833. The defendants proved by documentary evidence that their predecessors had been in possession since 17th August 1831, at least they carried their possession to the year 1834. Mookerjee J. pointed cut that there was no Article in the Limitation Act then in force corresponding to Art. 141 of the Act of 1908, a corresponding Article being first introduced in the Limitation Act of 1871. It was also pointed out that the law in force till 1873, when the Limitation Act of 1871 came into force, was that adverse possession which extinguished the title of a female helr taking a limited estate under the Hindu law also extinguished the title of the reversioner, and that if possession of the defendants began before 1861 the title of the plaintiffs would have been extinguished before the Limitation Act of 1871 came into force and once the title was extinguished while the Limitation Act of 1859 of Regulation III of 1793 or II of 1805 was in force it could not have been revived by the introduction of Art. 111 in the Limitation Act of 1871. These facts and observations, in our judgment, considerably weaken the force of the observations made by the said learned Judge at page 164 that 'before the plaintiffs can rely on Art. 141 they must consequently prove that their predecessor, Satyakinkar Ghoshal was in possession at the time of his death on 5th November 1833'."

[14] It will be seen that in this case the learned Judges did not agree that the statement of the law made by Sri Asutosh Mookerjee in the earlier case applied to cases governed by Art. 141, Limitation Act. The learned Judges do not dissent from the earlier case, but point out that the earlier case is no authority dealing with the facts then before the Judges in the later case.

[14a] The same view was taken by another Bench of this Court in Homondra Nath v. Manmotha Nath, 43 C. W. N. 772. In that case the Bench held that when the plaintiff succeeds in making out a prima facio case under Art. 141, Limitation Act, the burden would be on the defendant to show that dispossession took place at a time when the property was in the possession of the last male holder. The facts of this case are very similar to the facts of the Bench decision in which R. C. Mitter J. delivered judgment as the litigation was between the same parties. B. K Mukherjea J. who delivered the judgment pointed out that if the Hindu plaintiffs show that their right to the property first arose on the death of a Hindu female holding a limit. ed interest, then they have established a prima facie case that Art. 141 would apply. The onus would then be thrown upon the defendants to show that dispossession occurred whilst the first full owner was holding the property and that time had begun to run before the limited inte. rest commenced.

[15] A somewhat similar point again arose for consideration in the case of Fanindra Nath v. Satya Charan, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 632: (197 I. O. 756) in which it was held that Art. 141 applies only to cases where the last full owner was in possession at the time of his death; if he himself was dispossessed and time began to run against him the operation of the law of limitation is not arrested by the fact that on his death he was succeeded by his widow.

[16] In this case the question of the onus of proof did not arise because it was expressly found that the last full owner was dispossessed and that he was out of possession when the owner of the limited interest first became entitled to possession. The Bench referred to the decision of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee to which 1 have already made reference and Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen contended that this case approves of that decision. It certainly approved of that decision in so far as in the earlier case it was held that if the last full owner was dispossessed before the person holding a limited interest became entitled to possession then time would continue to run against the limited owner. However there is nothing in this case which throws any doubt on the two other Bench decisions to which I have made reference which deal with the question of the onus of proof, It seems to me clearly established by decisions of this Court which bind this Banch that the onus of showing that the last male owner was out of possession when the limited interest took effect lies on the defendants. All that the plaintiffs need prove to bring the case within Art. 141 is that they are Hindus or Mahomedans entitled to the estate on the termination of a limited interest of a Hindu or Mahomedan female. Once that is established they have made a prima facie case that Art. 141 applies and to take the case out of that Article the defendants must show that the time had begun to run as against the full owner and that it was actually running when the limited interest came into effect. In my judgment the Bench cases clearly decide that in the present case it was for the defendants to show that Panchu was out of possession at the date of his death when his daughter Maya became entitled to the property. As they have failed to show that Art. 141 read with Art. 136, Limitation Act, applied and the plaintiffs had twelve years from the date of Maya's death to bring this suit, the suit was well within time as found by the lower Courts.

[17] Before concluding I should like to make a reference to a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Lachhan Kunwar v. Manorath Ram, 22 Cal. 445 : (22 I. A. 25 P. C.). In that case a Hindu proprietor died, leaving a widow, and also a son, who died leaving a widow, a few years after his father, whose widow, either during the son's lifetime, or on his death, took possession of the property left by the father, and remained in possession till she died, having held it for about seventeen years. This she did notwithstanding the claim of the sone' widow whose suit against her for the property was dismissed, on the ground of limitation in 1875. Before her death she trans. ferred part of the property by gift, and was said to have transferred another part by will. On a question as to the capacity in which she had taken and retained possession, it was found that she had done so absolutely and without any assertion of a right, which she had not, to a widow's estate.

[18] Suits by the reversionary heirs, whom the son's widow joined, were held barred by limitation, on the ground that the possession taken had been adverse to them. Not only was any claim through the deceased son barred, but the rights of the reversionary heirs also, the possession by the father's widow not having been shown to be that of the limited interest of a widow.

[19] Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen contended that this case was of assistance to him. But it is to be observed that in the judgment of the Board no reference whatsoever is made to Art. 141, Limitation Act. What had occurred was that a widow of a Hindu proprietor tock possession of the estate though she was not entitled to it. A right of possession was in the widow of the deceased proprietor's son. She retained posses. sion as against the son's widow for over twelve years and then was sued and the suit was dismissed on the ground of limitation. In a subsequent suit by the reversioners it was contended that the widow of the original proprietor could only acquire a title by limitation, to a limited interest, namely, the interest of a Hindu widow or female. Their Lordships however pointed out that she took possession claiming the property as hers and that the title she acquired was an absolute title by possession. Further she had been sued by the son's widow and the claim had failed and accordingly their Lordships held that the widow had acquired a right by adverse possession even against the reversioners.

[20] Mr. Sen has argued that at most she had only dispossessed a limited owner, namely, the son's widow and therefore the reversioners would have twelve years under Art. 141 to oust the trespasser after the death of the son's widow. That is not what was argued in the case and reliance was placed on the fact that as a suit had been brought by the son's widow against the original proprietor's widow who was the trespasser and that suit had been dismissed no further claim to possession could be made by the reversioners. This case does not purport to deal with Art. 141 and is no authority whatsoever against the view taken by recent Benches of this Court on the question of the onus of proof.

[21] In my view the lower appellate Court was right in holding that as the defendants had failed to show that Panchu was out of possession at the date of his death, Art. 141, Limitation Act applied and the suit was in time. That being so, this appeal must fail and I would dismiss it with costs.

Order.— Banamali Sen and Manamatha Nath Sen, sons of late Bholanath Sen, instituted in the second Court of the Munsif of Sealdah a.

suit for the declaration of a document of surrender by Rajlakshmi Dasi in favour of her sons as collusive and fraudulent. It is not disputed before me that the deed was executed at a place which is outside the jurisdiction of the Court of the Muntif of Sealdah and within the jurisdiction of the original side of the Calcutta High Court, This was, however, registered at the Sealdah Sub-Registrar's office which is within the jurisdiction of the Court of the Munsiff, Sealdah. It is stated that by this deed the mother surrendered her rights to a large sum of money awarded as compensation on the acquisition of land which was lying in deposit with the President of the Calcutta Improvement Trust Tribunal. It further appears that certain other immovable properties within the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Munsif's Court were also surrendered by this document. The question whether the Court had jurisdiction to try the suit came for consideration of the Court in connection with an application for temporary injunction. The learned Munsif was of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit as the document had been executed and fraud, if any, practised, outside the limits of his territorial jurisdiction. Accordingly he ordered the plaint to be returned to the learned advocate for presentation before the proper Court.

[2] The learned Additional District Judge who heard the appeal from this decision of the learned Munsif did not come to any conclusion himself on the question whether the Munsif had jurisdiction to entertain the suit or not, but being of opinion that the Munsif had not given proper opportunity to the parties and their lawyers to lead evidence and place law before him he set aside the order of the learned Mansif and directed that the learned Mursif would accept the plaint from the plaintiffs and have the suit restored to file and that after that he would proceed with the suit in accordance with law. He directed further that if the parties desired to have the issue of jurisdiction to be heard and decided first, they should be given that opportunity; that the parties would be given opportunities to come ready with evidence and law on the point and that after hearing evidence on the point of jurisdiction and after hearing the learned lawyers of both the parties, the learned Munsif should decide this issue regarding jurisdiction.

[3] It is for the revision of this order of the learned Additional District Judge that the present application has been filed.

[4] I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the learned Additional District Judge did not deal with the matter in the proper way. It was obviously the duty of the trial Court to come to a decision on the question of jurisdiction as soon as the matter was raised before him and I do not think that the mere fact that a formal issue bad not been framed could in any way interfere with the performance of that duty. Nor can I see why the learned Additional District Judge thought it necessary that evidence should be gone into for the decision of the question. Evidence might have been necessary if there had been a dispute as to say, either where the dccument was executed or where the document was registered or where the fraud was practised or the situation of the properties which were the subject-matter of the deed. There being apparently no dispute on these matters, I think, the learned trial Court acted rightly in proceeding to the decision of the question of jurisdiction at once. If the learned Additional District Judge is right in his opinion that the learned Munsif suddenly called on the parties to argue this question and that they were not ready with what the learned Judge calls 'Rulings' on questions of law, that could not certainly justify the learned Additional District Judge himself not deciding the matter. I can find no justification for the appellate Court to s ni back for the decision of the trial Court a question which is entirely a question of law. As a matter of fact, the learned advocate for the opposite parties has not also tried to justify this course of conduct of the learned Additional District Judge and he thinks that he should have had a decision on the question of jurisdiction in his favour.

[5] This would be sufficient ground for inter. fering with the order of the learned Additional District Judge. In deciding however, what order should be passed in revision I thought it proper to come to a decision for myself on the question whether the learned Munsif was right in his conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to try the suit.

[6] It is the common case of both sides that the Sealdah Munsif's Court would have jurisdiction to try the suit only if the cause of action could be said to have arisen wholly or in part within that jurisdiction. with the learned Munsif that part of the cause of action viz., the execution of the document and the practice of fraud arose, on the admitted case of the parties, within the jurisdiction of the Original Side of the High Court of Calcutta and outside the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Munsif's Court. If that was all the Munsif's decision would no doubt be right. There remains, how. ever, the question whether the registration of the deed of surrender should be construed to be a part of the cause of action. I notice that the learned Munsif as well as the Additional District Judge have expressed opinions that it didnot matter where the registration took place. I am unable to agree with this opinion. It seems to me clear that if the plaintiffs were to obtain any relief on their case in the plaint, they could not do so without the proof that the document was registered. Unless the deed of surrender was registered it could not be put in evidence. If it could not be put in evidence it would in reality be ineffective against the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs could not be heard to say that their rights have been infringed. The registration of the deed was thus, in my opinion, clearly a fact which if traversed the plaintiffs would have to establish before they could get any relief in the least. I hold, consequently, that the registration of the deed was a part of the cause of action and in asmuch as the registration admittedly took place in the Sealdah Sub-Registrar's office, it must be held in my opinion that part of the cause of action in this suit arose within the jurisdiction of the Scaldah Munsif's Court.

[7] This, in my opinion, is sufficient for the conclusion that the learned Munsif had territorial jurisdiction to entertain the suit, his pecuniary jurisdiction—a question which has not been raised before me and need not be discussed.

[8] A point was also sought to be made by the learned advocate for the opposite parties that even apart from the question of registration the fact that some of the properties which were covered by the deed of surrender were situated within the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Munsif's Court would also give the jurisdiction to try the suit. He has relied on a decision of this Court reported in Hadjee Ismael Hadjee Huteed v. Hadjee Mahomed Hadjee Joosub, 21 W. R. 303: (13 Beng. L. R. 91). There was a suit to set aside a release alleged to have been executed in Calcutta under fraudulent representation made by one of the defendants and for an account and administration of the estate of a deceased Mahomedan who died intestate in Bombay where he left moveable and immovable properties. The Court had to consider whether the cause of action could be said to have arisen wholly in Calcutta. Sir Richard Couch C. J. held that the cause of action could not be said to have arisen wholly in Calcutta inasmuch as though the fraudulent representation which led to the execution of the release might have been made in Calcutta and the release might have been executed here, the cause of action included also the effect of the release upon the plaintiff's share of the property and the property being in Bombay this release would have its effect in Bombay and it must be held that the cause of action arose partly in Bombay. This decision was followed in a case reported in Nittala Achayya

v. Nittala Yellamma, A. I. B. (10) 1913 Mad. 109: (72 I. C. 920).

[9] It is to be noticed that the ground of the decision that because some properties were situated in Bombay, part of the cause of action could be said to have arisen in Bombay was that the fraudulent document took effect against the plaintiff's interest in Bombay. In the present case, however, I find though the deed of surrender covers not only the properties which were acquired and for which compensation money was lying in deposit with the President of the Calcutta Improvement Trust Tribunal, but also certain properties which had not been acquired, the plaintiff was only concerned according to his plaint with the effect of this deed on the compensation money that was lying in deposit with the Calcutta Improvement Trust Tribunal. Clearly, therefore, the fraudulent document took effect against the plaint ffs' interest at the place where the money was lying in deposit i. e. in Calcutta. The principle laid down in the decision relied upon is, therefore, of no assistance to the plaintiffs in this case.

above is that the registration of the document is a part of the cause of action and the registration took place within the jurisdiction of the Sealdah Munsit's Court, the Munsif of that Court had territorial jurisdiction to try this suit and the Munsif's order returning the plaint was wrong. I, therefore, maintain the learned Additional District Judge's order setting aside that part of the Munsit's order and direct that the Munsif should proceed with the trial of the suit in accordance with law. The other part of the Judge's order is set aside.

[11] This rule is disposed of in these terms. I make no order as to costs.

V.B.B. Order accordingly.

Civil Rule No. 1683 of 1949, D/- 21-6-1950.

Constitution of India, Art. 227—Article 227 is not retrospective—Interpretation of Statutes—Retrospective operation—Vested rights.

Assuming that the High Court has been given powers of interference, by Art. 227 of the Constitution of India, with final orders, that would not entitle it to interfere with an order which was passed at a time when such power of interference did not exist. While previsions of a statute dealing merely with matters of procedure may properly, unless that construction be textually inadmissible, have retrospective effect attributed to them, provisions which touch a right in existence at the passing of the statute are not to be applied retrospectively —for Opposite Party.

Sen J. — The facts giving rise to this Rule briefly are as follows: The petitioner who is the landlord let out certain premises to the opposite party Rai Sahib Sakti Bhusan Roy sometime in March 1942 at a rental of Rs. 50 per month. An application was made under the House Rent Control Order 1943, by the landlord for fixing the rent and by consent the rent was fixed at Bs. 72 per month on 2nd November 1943. On 19th January 1944, the opposite party instituted a suit for the recovery of money paid as occupier's share of taxes stating that the sum of Bs. 72 included taxes. The trial Court dismissed the suit. The Full Bench of the Court of Small Causes decreed it. The matter came up before this Court and the matter was remanded and is still pending. On 27th April 1919, the landford applied for setting aside the consent order which was passed on 2nd November 1913, the applica. tion purporting to be made under 8. 151, Civil P. C. The application was dismissed by the Additional Rent Controller. An appeal was taken to the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes and he dismissed the appeal. Then there was an application for review on 25th August 1949 before the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes and that application was rejected. Against that order the present Rule has been obtained.

[2] In our opinion, this Rule must be discharged. It has been held by a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Indian Homeopathic Medical Association v. Kanailal Pal, 54 O. W. N. 389: (A.I.R. (37) 1950 Cal. 263) that this Court has no power of revising the orders passed by the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes in matters like these. It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that although this Court had no power to interfere before the Constitution came into force, it has now power to do so under Art. 227, Constitution Act, and we are invited to exercise that power. When the order was passed it was a final order with which this Court could not interfere. The Constitution Act was not in force then. Assuming that subsequently this Court has been given powers of interference that would not in our opinion entitle this Court to interfere with an order which was passed at a time when such power of interference did not exist. In this connection I would refer to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Delhi Oloth and General Mills Co. Ltd. v. Income-tax Commissioner, Delhi, 54 I. A. 491; (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. O. 242). The passage in 1950 C/65 & 68 which this principle has been laid down appears at page 425. This is what their Lordships said:

"The principle which their Lordships must apply in dealing with this matter has been authoritatively enunciated by the Board in the Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving, (1905) A. C. 369: (74 L. J. P. C. 77) where it is in effect laid down that, while provisions of a statute dealing merely with matter of procedure may properly, unless that construction be textually inadmissible, have retrospective effect attributed to them provisions which touch a right in existence at the passing of the statute are not to be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment."

There is nothing in Art. 227, Constitution Act, which would indicate that there was such an intendment as is sought to be attributed to Art. 227. Certainly there are no express words in the Article which would give the Court the right to interfere with a right in existence at the time of the passing of the Constitution Act.

[3] In these circumstances we are of opinion that this Rule must be discharged with costs. Certificate to appeal to the Supreme Court is granted.

Banerjee J .- This second appeal arises out of an execution proceeding instituted in the following circumstances. The decree in the suit was made on 30th June 1933. An appeal from it was dismissed on 30th January 1934. An application for execution of the decree was made on 14th August 1934. In due course sale proclamation was published on 21st July 1935. But no further step baving been taken, it was dismissed for default on 4th December 1935.

- [2] On 23rd June 1937, one Surjya Narayan Roy claiming to be an assignee of the decree filed an execution case. It was registered. On 20th August 1937 the order registering the application was cancelled and the petition was treated as an application for substitution. The decreeholder made another application which gave rise to execution Case No. 139 of 1939. This application was filed on 1st September 1939 and was dismissed for want of prosecution on 4th June 1941. In this execution case notice under O. 21, R. 22, Civil P. C., had been issued, followed by a notice under O. 21, B. 66. This applica. tion again was dismissed for non-prosecution on 4th June 1941.
- [3] Execution case No. 21 of 1943 from which this appeal arises was started on 3rd June 1943. In this execution case, after notices under O. 21, R. 22 and O. 21, R. 66, Civil P. C., the properties attached were sold. The question is whether this last execution case is out of time. It is quite clear that if the application made on 23rd June 1937 is not regarded as a step-in-aid of execution, the application which was filed on 1st September 1939, was out of time. Therefore, any order made in that application would be ineffective. Consequently, the present application would be time barred, Originally the learned Subordinate Judge in this last mentioned execution case held that it was out of time. But on appeal the District Judge remanded the matter and the learned Subordinate Judge has revised his previous opinion and held that it is not time barred. From that there was an appeal to the District Judge who has held that it is out of time. From the order of the District Judge the present appeal has been filed.
- [4] The learned advocate appearing on behalf of the appellant has taken before us one point and one point only, in support of the appeal namely that it is not open to the judgment-debtor to take the plea of limitation by reason of the fact that in the application which was started on 1st September 1939, there was an order for the issue of a notice under O. 21, R. 22. Civil P. C., followed by an order for publication of the sale proclamation under O. 21, R. 66. According to counsel, when the Court after issueof notice under O. 21, R. 22 directed sale of the properties, it came to an implied finding that the application was not barred by time, otherwise, it could not order the sale.

[5] The question before us is whether thenotice under O. 21, R. 22 was served on the judgment-debtor. If the notice was not served the judgment-debtor had no opportunity to raise the question of limitation and, therefore, no question of res judicata arises. The only evidence the judgment-debtor produced before the Courts below in proof of service of the notice was a certified copy of the suit register. There was no other evidence on this point. In the register there are entries showing that the notices were issued. But that does not mean that the notices were served. Such entries by themselves cannot prove service. It has been laid down in a Bench decision of this Court Mohauddin v. Pirthichand Lal, 19 C. W. N. 1159: (A. I. R. (2) 1915 cal. 444), where it was observed that the mere; entry in the order sheet is no proof that the notice had been served. In this case we are unable to hold that there was service.

[6] The Court issues notice under O. 21, R. 22 where the decree is more than one year old or when the decree is sought to be executed against the legal represnetative of the judgment debtor, If the person to whom notice is issued under O. 21, R. 22 does not appear or does not show cause to the satisfaction of the Court why the decree should not be executed, the Court shall order the decree to be executed (o. 21, R, 28, Civil P. C.). In this case after the issue of notice under O. 21, R. 22 when there was no appearance by the defendant, the Court wasbound to order the decree to be executed in such manner as the decree could be executed.

[7] In this case the judgment-debtor had not been served and did not appear to the notice under O. 21, R. 22 so he did not raise nor had the opportunity to raise the issue of limitation. The Court issued notice under O 21, R. 66 and directed sale of the properties as it was incumbent on it to do so. We do not see how any question of res judicata arises.

[8] Furthermore, in the case of Chatterput Singh v. Daya Chand, 28 O. L. J. 641: (A.I.B. (2) 1915 Cal. 850), it has been held that if the judgment-debtor does not appear to contest a. notice under O. 21, R. 22 he is not precluded from raising an objection when his property is attached. Assuming, in this case that the notice under order O. 21, R. 22 was served, which we do not hold is the fact the judgment-debtor can raise objection to the sale and take the point of limitation.

(9) There is another point of view from which we can come to the conclusion that the question of limitation is not res judicata. It is this: under S. 3, Limitation Act, whether or not the point of limitation is taken by the defendant or the respondent in a suit or an application, the Court is bound to notice it in disposing of the matter before it. It has been held that the principles of this section apply to execution proceedings. In this case, therefore, the Court was bound to take the point of limitation itself and dismiss the application if it was not in time. Having failed to do so, it cannot be said that the judgment debter is hit by res judicata or any principle analogous thereto.

[10] We, therefore, hold that the plea of res judicata is no bar to the judgment debtor taking the point of limitation to the application under consideration. As the application was not in time, the Court was bound to dismiss it.

[11] On these considerations we hold that the District Judge was right. The application is barred by time.

[12] The appeal, therefore, is dismissed with costs, one set two gold moburs.

The landlord will not be entitled to amend his pleadings for asserting the above, nor will he be entitled to amend them for the purpose of showing that he has some other ground for eviction of the tenant under Rent Control Act of 1948, e. g. that the landlord bona fide requires the premises for his own use.

Chandra Sekhar Sen, Rabindra Nath Choudhury and Bejoy Bhose-for Appellant.

Ajit Kumar Dutt and Kiran Bhusan Mukherji - tor Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for ejectment filed on 18th June 1946 under the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Control Order. The premises had been let in July 1942 at a rental of Rs. 32. The plaintiff based his suit on the grounds that notice had been served and that the defendant was a habitual defaulter. There was also a claim for damages for the period subsequent to the notice. The trial Court decreed the suit giving damages only up to the date of suit.

[2] There was an appeal by the defendant to the subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Alipore, and a cross objection by the plaintiff for damages from the date of suit to the date of recovery of possession. The lower appellate Court dismissed the appeal with costs and allowed the defendant's (plaintiff's?) cross objection. The defendant now appeals.

[3] For the appellant three points were argued before me (1) that as the plaintiff had instituted a proceeding for fixing a standard rent before the Rent Controller before the date of the notice of ejectment and continued it after that and during the hearing of the suit, he had waived the notice; (2) that notice had not been properly served; and (3) that the provisions of S. 18 (5) of the latest West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1950, are applicable to the case.

[4] There seems to me to be no substance in the first point. Standard rent is fixed for premises whoever may be the tenant. Again the landlord could not be sure that he would win his suit, he has not yet finally won it. He was surely entitled to protect his interest by obtaining an order from the Rent Controller as to the rent payable in case his suit failed. His proceedings in doing so could not in any sense amount to waiver of his contention that after the notice the tenant was a trespasser liable to ejectment on the ground given by him. Lastly the Rent Controller had power to make his order with retrospective effect, and in fact did so in part for a period prior to the notice. The landlord was entitled to have that established in so far as it affected the period prior to the notice when there was no question that the defendant was a tenant, without any question of waiver.

[6] As to the second point this is concluded by the findings of fact, no error of law having been committed in arriving at those findings. Four attempts to serve notice were made. The third attempt was by way of sending a registered cover with the notice, which was returned with the endorsement 'left' made by the postal peon. The fourth attempt was by attempt at personal service, no one at the premises would accept the notice, and it was stuck up. There is authority that the first, or rather third attempt, amounted to good service, but in any case the fourth attempt certainly did so. This contention therefore also fails.

[6] We have now to attempt to understand and apply S. 18 (5), West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1950 (hereafter called the 1950 Act) which runs as follows:

"18 (5). If at the date when this Act comes into force, a suit for ejectment of a tenant is panding whether intrial Court, or in Court of first or second appeal in which no decree for ejectment would be passed except on the ground of default in payment of arrears of rent under the provisions of the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, Act 38 (XXXVIII) of 1948, the Court shall exercise the powers of granting relief against ejectment given by S. 14 of this Act following the provisions and procedure of that section as far as may be necessary, and for the said purpose shall make such order for amendment of pleadings, production of evidence, remand, payment of costs as may be just."

[7] The following dates and facts are important in this case:

(1) Calcutta House Rent Control Order came into force on 23rd June 1943.

(2) Suit was filed on 18th Jane 1946.

(3) All arrears were paid by 14th September 1946.

(4) Tenant has paid or deposited rent regular.

ly in due time since then.

(5) Calcutta Rent Ordinance came into force on 1st October 1916 (later continued in force by the West Bengal Expiring Laws Act, 1948).

(6) Trial Court decreed the suit on 30th september 1947.

(7) Lower Appellate Court decreed appeal on 2nd March 1948.

(8) Appeal presented to High Court on 5th April, 1948.

(9) West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act came into force on 1st December 1948.

(10) West Bengal Rent Control Act 17 (XVII) of 1950 came into force on 31st March 1950.

[8] The suit was brought under the Calcutta House Rent Control Order, 1943. Ordinarily it would be disposed of throughout under the provisions of that Act. The decree was passed by the trial Court on 30th September 1947. In the meantime the Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1946 (hereafter called the Ordinance) had come into force on 1st October 1946. Under S. 17 of that Ordinance, it was provided that if any decree had been passed before the Ordinance came into force but possession had not been recovered the Court, if it was of opinion that the decree would not have been made if the Ordinance had been in operation at the date of the making of the decree might rescind or vary it for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of the Ordinance. There is nothing specific in the Ordinance relating to pending proceedings, unless we are to take S. 26 as covering legal proceedings; but it can hardly be suggested that relief in accordance with the provisions of the Ordinance was to be given in respect of decrees passed before it came into force, and none in cases pending when it came into force. There is sufficient provision in the Ordinance to show that the context requires some modification of the effect of S. S. Bengal General Clauses Act. The decree then must be taken to have been made under the provisions of the Ordinance.

[9] By a parity of reasoning as given above to show that the case started under the Calcutta House Rent Control Order was to be disposed of in the trial and appeal Courts under the provisions of the Ordinance, then this second appeal is to be disposed of primarily under the West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1948 (hereafter called the 1948 Act). If the tenant had complied with the provisions of S. 12 (1) (b), then no decree could be passed against him under that Act; but admittedly he has not, so a decree would now be so passed by affirmance of the decree of the lower Courts. That then brings into operation the provisions of S. 18 (5) of the 1950 Act, and a decree is to be passed accordingly.

[10] For the landlord-respondent here it is argued, (1) that the reference to S. 14 in S. 18 (5) of the 1950 Act means that he will be entitled to show that the defendant has committed a default as described in S. 12 (1) proviso (i) of that Act, (2) that for similar reasons he will be entitled to show that the tenant is not entitled to the protection of S. 12 because of the proviso to sub.s. (3) of S. 14, (3) that the reference to amendment of pleadings in S. 18 (5) shows that he will be entitled to amend his pleadings for asserting the above, (4) that he will also be entitled to amend them for the purpose of showing that he has some other ground for eviction of the tenant under the 1948 Act, e. g., that the landlord bona fide requires the premises for his own use.

[11] To dispose of these contentions, it is neceseary to consider the general structure of the previous legislation, as well as that of the 1950 Act in order to appreciate the marked difference between them. It will be sufficient probably if we refer to the Ordinance of 1946 and the Act of 1948 only as regards earlier legislation. All three enactments recognize the existence of a right to eject under the Transfer of Property Act. They then substantially take this right away by a provision which on the face of it is merely one of procedure, each enacts (8. 11 Ordinance, S. 12 of the 1948 and 1950 Act) that notwithstanding anything contrary in other Act no decree for ejectment shall be passed (with some qualification in the Ordinance, and 1918 Act). They then by way of provisos give back the right to eject in certain cases. Section 12 (4) of the Ordinance then again takes away the benefit of the provisos from the tenant unless he fulfils certain conditions, under S. 12 (4) (a) he must pay regularly by the fifteenth of the month or the contract date ; under S. 12 (4) in the case of arrears accrued before the commencement of the Ordinance he must pay them up within one month of the date of commencement of the Ordinance. Similar though slightly different provision is made in the 1948 Act in S. 12 (1) (a) and (b). The effect of these provisions is to lay down certain conditions in which a tenant can be ejected, though the form is by way of saying in what cases decrees can be passed. Prima facie when it is enacted that no decree shall be passed except in certain conditions the provision will apply to all cases, any case pending whether in trial Court or in appeal at the date the en. actment comes into force, and any case started after the commencement of the Act but the real intention can only be gathered by examining the whole enactment in question. As I have said above under the Ordinance and the 1948 Act it was clear that the provisions applied (subject to a caution to be discussed below) to pending litigation. Sections 17 and 26 of the Ordinance, and Ss. 18 and 45 of the 1948 Act make that clear.

[12] A word of caution is necessary here. Though an Act may have some retrespective, effect and apply to pending proceedings, it does not follow that every provision of the Act will bave retrospective effect. Without elaborating the point, it may be stated that examination of the various enactments shows many provisions which are clearly not to take effect before the commencement of the Act. Section 12 (3) of the Act of 1948 is one example (with respect it may be pointed out that the recently reported case of Akhil Ranjan Das v. B. N Biswas, 54 C. W. N. 586 : (A. I. R. (87) 1950 Cal. 472)) appears to overlook this fact. The distinction as regards S. 14 of the Ordinance was recognised in Abanindra Mohan v. Khazamull Sardar, 52 C. W. N. 698.

[13] When we come to the 1950 Act the case is clearly different. The root provision in S. 12 is more drastic than that in S. 11 of the Ordinance or S. 12 of the 1948 Act; there is no qualification. But there is no provision corresponding to 8. 17 of the former or S. 18 of the latter. Section 18 of the 1950 Act has a much more limited scope. Section 18 (1) deals with decrees passed before the Act came into force, S. 18 (5) with suits pending in the trial Court or in appeal. In the case of decrees passed (before the commencement of 1950 Act) under the 1948 Act on the ground of default S. 18 (1) provides that the tenant shall be relieved from ejectment provided he pays up all arrears assuming that the tenancy had continued up to the month in which an order is made under the section directing the tenant to pay that amount plus interest and costs on a date not later than forty days from the date of the order. No question arises as to applicability of any other provision of the 1950 Act to decrees passed before its commencement.

[14] Then in S. 18 (5) specific provision is made for pending cases where (but for the provision of S. 18 (5)) a decree would be passed under the 1948 Act. Section 18 (5) provides that the Court is to exercise the powers given under S. 14 of the Act. Unless the wording of the provisions clearly provides otherwise, we may take it that the provision made under S. 18 (5) is intended to achieve much the same substantial result in these pending cases as is provided (in S. 18 (1)) for cases where a decree for default had already been passed under the 1948 Act before the 1950 Act came into force. This is the same assumption as we made in regard to the 1948 Act, and the Ordinance, but the result is the opposite. Section 18 of the 1948 Act, and S. 17 of the Ordinance clearly applied the provisions of those enactments to cases where decrees were passed before their commencement, hence, (coupled with the effect of S. 45 and S. 26 respectively of those enactments) we deduced that the enactments applied to pending cases. But in the 1950 Act the intention seems clear not to apply its provisions to either type of case except in the limited respect provided in S. 18 (1) and S. 18 (5).

[15] If we turn then to S. 14 (1) we find that by applying its provisions practically the same result will be achieved as under S, 18 (1), for the Court will under S. 14 (1) calculate the amount in 'arrears' up to the date of the order mentioned thereafter, as also the amount of interest on such arrears of rent calculated at the rate of 9 and three-eighths per centum per annum from the day when the rents became arrears up to such date, together with the amount of such cost of the suit as is fairly allowable to the plaintiff landlord, and shall make an order on the tenant for paying the aggregate of the amounts (specifying in the order such aggregate sum) on or before the date fixed in the order. Under subs. (2), the date in question is to be the fifteenth day from the date of the order, excluding the date of the order.

[16] It is to be noted that under S. 18 (5) of the 1950 Act, the Court is to exercise the powers of granting relief against ejectment given by S. 14 of the Act following the provisions and procedure of that section as far as may be necessary. It does not provide that the relief is to be given against the same default as that against which S. 14 is to give relief, namely, the default created by the effect of proviso (i) to sub-3. 1 of S. 12 of the Act. The default against which relief is to be given following the provisions and procedure of S. 14, is the default under the 1948 Act which would result in the decree for ejectment under that Act.

[17] This disposes of the first three points argued for the landlord respondent set out above. If the tenant is not liable for the default created by S. 12 (2) (i), the first point is disposed of. Consequently the proviso in S. 12 (3) equally cannot apply against the tenant, for that refers to three defaults as created by S. 12 (1) (i) within a period of 18 months, and if that does not apply against the tenant, the latter proviso cannot apply.

[18] It remains to consider the fourth point urged for the landlord respondent. Is he to be allowed now to show that under the 1948 Act he could get a decree on a ground other than the ground of default. In this connection Mr. Datt laid stress on the provision in S. 18 (6) for amend. ment of pleadings. The Court is to exercise the powers of granting relief against ejectment given by S. 14 of the Act . . . , and for the said purpose is to make such order for amendment of pleadings, production of evidence, remand, payment of costs as may be necessary or just. The words "for the said purpose" suggest that the amendment is to be limited to the purpose of giving relief in a case assumed to be one to which S. 18 (5) is applicable. Mr. Dutt urges that they mean also for the purpose of showing that the case is not one to which 8. 18 (6) is applicable, i. e., for showing that there is some other ground for ejectment other than default. He contends that no amendment would apparently be necessary merely for the limited purpose of giving relief. I do not think this is strictly correct. In determining the amount payable under 8. 14 there might be some question as to amount of arrears at the date when the rent became arrears, and possibly as to subsequent payments. In a suit for ejectment for default actual arrears might not have been claimed. For example default which was made the ground for ejectment might be that provided for in 8 12 (3) of the 1948 Act, a mere case of delay in payment for three consecutive months.

[19] On the other hand, it can be argued that if another ground for ejectment does exist, it will save multiplicity of litigation to allow, with suitable orders as to costs, the landlord still to establish that ground, especially in view of the fact that the latest Act has given a new privilege to the tenant to avoid ejectment. There is however one reason why in this case I think this should not now be allowed. The ground proposed to be established is that of bona fide requirement by the landlord. If the amendment is allowed the issue will be tried under the 1948 Act since 1950 Act applies to the suit only to the limited extent laid down in S. 18 (5). But under the present law if the landlord brings his suit he must establish reasonable requirement, his rights are more restricted under the new Act. I think therefore, that he ought to establish them under the new Act. An additional reason in favour of this view, is that under S. 18 (1) in the case of decrees passed before the 1950 Act came into force, clearly the landlord would not be allowed to agitate fresh grounds to meet the tenant's claim for relief thereunder.

[20] The decree of the lower Court is therefore set aside. Order is hereby passed under S. 14 (1), West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1950, for the defendant to pay rent at Rs. 50 per month from 1st August 1945, up till the date of this order together with interest at § the per centum per annum, plus costs throughout less the amounts of costs already deposited in the Courts below, which the landlord may withdraw, the aggregate sum being Rs. 3725-13-0. The amount will be paid into this Court on or before 3th June. The case will be put up on 9th June with a report whether the amount has been paid or not, when further order will be passed. The defendant will be at liberty to withdraw the sum of Rs. 400 deposited in the trial Court on account of damages. The defendant will also be at liberty to withdraw the sum of Rs. 2000 out of the total amount deposited with the Rent Controller to the credit of the plaintiff.

[21] The amount has been paid in time, the suit is accordingly dismissed under S. 14 (3), West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1950.

[22] Leave to appeal under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent is granted.

The Act itself provides no procedure for the Court to follow in a proceeding under S. 37A (8) of that Act. The proper procedure for a Court to follow is the procedure of the Civil Procedure Code in regard to execution of decrees.

Where the judgment-debtor obtains an award and order for restoration of possession of property and applies under sub-s. The proper time for them to be heard is if and when delivery of possession is sought to be given they resist delivery when the applicant under S. 37A (8) can come in with an application under O. 21, R. 97, Civil P. Order. — This rule arises out of proceedings under s. 87A (8), Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act. The judgment-debtors obtained an award and order for restoration and applied to the Munsif, 1st Court, Baruipur, under the provisions of that sub-section. Objection was made by the present petitioners (who were opposite parties Nos. 15 and 16 in that petition) on the basis of a lease from the landlord. It is unnecessary for me to give details of the nature of the objection. The objection was overruled. The objectors were not parties to the proceedings under the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, a position which is quite in accordance with the decision in Taraprasanna Roy v. Adwaita Charan, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 329 and subsequent decisions.

[2] On behalf of the petitioners, my attention has been called to the case of Narayan Chandra v. Rash Behari, Civil Revn. C. N. 1721 of 1946 : (I. L. R. (1948) 2 Cal. 68) in which it was held by Mukherjea and Ormond JJ. that where the judgment-debtor was obstructed in endeavouring to get possession through Court under S. 37A (8) he could make an application under o. 21, R. 97, Civil P. C. The Bengall Agricultural Debtors Act itself provides no procedure for the Court to follow in a proceeding under 8. 37A (8) of that Act which has many affinities with a proceeding under S. 144, Civil P. C. The case cited amounts to a decision that the proper procedure for a Court to follow is the procedure of the Code in regard to execu. tion of decrees.

[3] The ground on which this rule was obtained was that the order of the learned Munsif directing restoration to applicants 1 to 4 and incidentally overruling the objections of opposite parties 15 and 16 was incorrect. In argument here however a different position was taken and on the basis of the case cited it was urged that the objection of the objectors should not have been dealt with by the lower Court in the proceedings under S. 37A (8).

[4] On behalf of the opposite parties, it is in turn objected that the petitioners ought not now to be allowed to change their ground.

[5] If the procedure indicated in the case cited is followed, there can be no doubt that the objectors as lessees from the landlord were not entitled to be heard at the time when the application was made under S. S7A (8). The proper time for them to be heard was if and when delivery of possession was sought to be given they resisted delivery when the applicants under S. S7A (8) could come in with an application under O. 21, R. 97, Civil P. C. as laid down in that case, or in the event that the objectors were dispossessed they could come in under O. 21, R. 100. Even if the present order stands, in my opinion, they could still come before the Court in the manner above indicated and take the objection that the decision in the order of the learned Munsif so far as it affected the objectors, opposite parties 15 and 16 was without jurisdiction; in other words, that the decision was not res judicata. In that view of the matter, it is not necessary for me to decide whether the decision overruling the objection is right or wrong. It is sufficient if I make it clear that so far as the present petitioners are concerned, it is without jurisdiction and the matter of their rights and position still remains open to be decided, if at all, in proceedings under 0. 21, R. 97 or R. 100 as the case may be.

[6] The result is that the present rule is discharged. I make no order as to costs.

The auction-purchaser is a necessary party to an application for setting aside a sale. The auction-purchaser is not a person claiming through the decree-holder. Before any extension of time can be given under S. 18 of the Limitation Act in an application for setting aside a sale under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, it must be proved that the auction-purchaser was either guilty of the fraud or an accessory to the fraud that prevented the judgment-debtor from knowing of the Apurba Dhan Mukherji and Chandra Narayan. Laik-for Petitioner.

Heramba Chandra Guha -for Opposite Party 1.

Das Gupta J.—The applicant before us purchased at auction an occupancy raivati holding in execution of a rent decree. The sale was held on 13th March 1946. On 25th April 1946, an application was filed by one Kachimannessa Bibi claiming to have purchased the interest of the judgment-debtors, for setting aside the sale under the provisions of S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act. This application was dismissed by the Court on 13th December 1947. On 5th January 1948, the auction-purchaser the petitioner before us filed an application for confirmation of the sale. The sale was ultimately confirmed on 27th March 1948. On 27th June 1948, an application was filed by two of the 17 judgment debtors who are Panch Kari Santra and Satya Bala Dasi, opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2, under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, for setting aside the sale on the ground of fraud and irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale. The learned Munsif allowed the application and the learned District Judge has dismissed the appeal that was filed by the present petitioner against that decision. The learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that the decree-holder was guilty of fraud inasmuch as he mentioned the value of the holding at Rs. 10 only in the sale proclamation and further that he fraudulently suppressed the sale proclamation and other notices. He also came to the conclusion that the auctionpurchaser was also guilty of fraud and that consequently the applicants under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, were entitled to the benefit of S. 18, Limitation Act, and so, the application though filed long after six months after the date of the sale, was not barred by limitation.

[2] The first question agitated before us is whether the learned District Judge acted irregularly and illegally in the exercise of his jurisdiction in coming to the conclusion that the auction purchaser was also guilty of fraud. The learned District Judge appears to have based his decision in this matter on two facts, first, that the auction purchaser has benefited by the fraud on the part of the decree-holder inasmuch as therewas paucity of the bidders because of the grossunder valuation in the sale proclamation and the auction-purchaser was thus able to have the land for an inadequate price. The other ground on which the learned District Judge relied was that the auction purchaser did not apply for delivery of possession for two years after the date of the sale.

[3] It has been pointed out to us by Mr. Mukherji on behalf of the petitioner that the learned District Judge misread the evidence, inasmuch as he omitted to notice that the sale was confirmed as late as 21st February 1948 so that the delay of the auction purchaser was not 2 years but only one month. I am myself unable to agree that the mere fact that the auctionpurchaser makes delay in applying for delivery of possession can be any ground for thinking that he is acting fraudulently with a view to prevent the judgment-debtors from knowing about the sale. But even if such delay can justify any conclusion as regards fraud, it is abundantly clear that there was no such delay as the learned District Judge seems to have wrongly thought. From the facts pointed out above it appears that though the sale was actually held on 13th March 1946 the application under 8. 174 (3) filed by Kachimannessa was not disposed of till 13th December 1947. It was only after that application was disposed of that the auction-purchaser could take any steps for getting the sale confirmed. That he did, as we have seen, on 5th January 1948 and the sale was confirmed on 21st February 1948 and be put his application for delivery of possession on 27th March 1948. There was therefore, as already stated above, no appreciable delay on his part.

[4] In my judgment the omission to look into the record in the case is a gross irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction and the learned Judge's decision based upon a faulty reading or rather a non-reading of the record that the auction purchaser was guilty of fraud cannot be

the evidence and has tried to convince us that quite apart from this question of delay in applying for delivery of possession there was other evidence which would justify such a conclusion. Of the two items of evidence pointed out one was that the auction purchaser was present at the time when the sale proclamation was served when the decree-holder was also present; the other was that in Court he has given false evidence as regards the service of the sale proclamation.

namely that the auction-purchaser was present at the time of the service of the sale proclamation where the decree holder was also present and also that the auction-purchaser has given false evidence in the present proceedings I am unable to see how these can even remotely justify a conclusion that he was guilty of any fraud by which he intended to or managed to prevent the judgment debtors from knowing of the sale.

[7] My unhesitating conclusion is that there is no evidence on the record to show that the auction-purchaser was guilty of any fraud in connection with the sale or that by any fraudulent conduct on his part the judgment-debtors were prevented from knowing the date of the sale.

(8) If therefore it is necessary before the applicant under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, can get the benefit of S. 18, Limitation Act, in the present application that the auction purchaser must be shown to have been guilty of fraud or to have been accessory to the fraud, it must be held that the applicants could not get the benefit of the S. 18 and the application filed on 27th June 1948, was barred by limitation.

[9] It has, however, been contended by Mr. Guha for the opposite party that it is not really necessary in law that the auction purchaser should be shown to be guilty of any fraud in order that the extension of time under S. 18, Limitation Act, can be given.

[10] The relevant portion of S. 13, Limitation

Act, runs as follows :

"Where any person having a right to institute a suit or make an application has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right the time limited for instituting a suit or making an application:

(a) against the person guilty of the fraud or acces-

sory thereto, or

(b) sgainst any person claiming through him, otherwise than in good faith and for a valuable consideration, shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby "

[11] Here, the application was made against the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser. As against the decree-holder, on the finding with which we find no reason to interfere that he was guilty of fraud and by that fraud, namely, the suppression of processes he had kept the applicants from the knowledge of the sale, it must be held that the application is within time if we accept that the judgment-debtors first came to know of the fraud at the time when the auction-purchaser went to take delivery of possession.

[12] What however is the position of the application as against the auction-purchaser? In order that the applicants may succeed, the application must be made in time as against him also unless he be considered to be an unnecessary party. It is not within the period of six months allowed by S. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act. Obviously the applicant can succeed only if they can get the benefit of S. 18, Limitation Act. The words of the section as already mentioned above, give a special rule of computation against two kinds of persons: a person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto or a person claiming through such other person guilty of fraud otherwise than in good faith and for valuable consideration, when such fraud bas kept the plaintiff or the applicant from knowledge of this right to sue. It is difficult to see from the words of the section how the application against a person who is neither guilty of the fraud nor accessory thereto, nor is a person claiming through such other person can attract the provisions of S. 18.

- [13] If the auction-purchaser is not a necessary party to an application for setting aside the sale under 8. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, no question of limitation would arise at all, and the application would not fail, because such unnecessary party comes on the record beyond the period of limitation.
- [14] The question therefore is whether the auction-purchaser is a necessary party to an application for setting aside a sale.
- [15] Section 174 (3) does not in words state as to who should be made a party. In S. 174A, there is a provision that no order setting aside a sale shall be made, unless notice of the application had been given to all persons affected thereby. Whatever view may be taken as regards the stage where such notice is to be given, there can be no doubt, in my opinion, that an application for setting aside the sale cannot be considered at all unless the person against whom the relief is primarily claimed has been made a party and received notice. The relief asked for is that a sale be set aside. The one person who will suffer if this relief is granted, is the auctionpurchaser. If anybody therefore is a necessary party the auction purchaser, in my opinion, the most necessary party, the decree-holder being the other party who, in my opinion, should also be brought on the record.
- [16] The necessary conclusion which in my opinion cannot be escaped, unless we are to add certain things to S. 18, Limitation Act, or to ignore some of the words actually used therein, is that the extension of time under S. 18, Limitation Act cannot be made in an application for setting aside a sale, as against the auction purchaser unless he is guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto. It need hardly he mentioned that the auction-purchaser is not a person claiming through the decree-holder.
- two decisions of this Court, one in the case of Kedar Hura v. Asutosh Roy, 44 C. L. J. 565 and the other in Mahipati Haldar v. Atul Krishna, 53 C. W. N. 587: (A. I. R (36) 1949 Cal. 212). In the case of Kedar Hura: (44 C. L J. 565), B. B. Ghose J. sitting singly was of the opinion that the fraud by which the judgment-debtor is kept from the knowledge of his right to apply for setting aside the sale must be the fraud only of the decree-holder and it is not necessary either to allege or to prove fraud on the part of the auction purchaser. A similar conclusion was reached by Mukherjea, J., sitting singly, in the case of Mahipati Haldar: (53 C. W. N. 587: A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 212) quoted above. I find that in both these cases the learned Judges expressed their opinion that the auction purchaser was not a necessary party in an application for setting aside the sale. In fact B. B. Ghose J. refused to rely on the previous decision in the case of Purna Ch. Mondal v. Anukul Biswas, 36 Cal. 654: (2 L. O. 844) in the view that under the old Code in which the decision in Purna Chandra's case: (36 Cal. 654: 2 I. C. 814) was given the auction purchaser was a necessary party in an application for setting aside the sale. Mukherjea J. also appears to be of the same opinion and says that the application for setting aside the sale is directed primarily against the decree-holder at whose instance or for whose benefit the sale was held. If I could see my way to agree with these eminent Judges in this view that the auction purchaser is not a necessary party, I would have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the question of limitation does not arise at all, as regards the auction-purchaser. As stated however I am unable to agree that the auction purchaser is not a necessary party and in my view he is the most necessary party in a case where the sale at which he purchased is sought to be set aside.

is that if fraud on the part of the auction purchaser is held to be necessary to be proved for an extension of time under S. 18, Limitation Act, the judgment-debtor would have absolutely no remedy where by the fraud of the decree-holder the judgment debtor is totally kept out of the knowledge of the sale and the property has been sold for a nominal price, but the auction purchaser is not party to the fraud, or accessory thereto.

[19] With great respect, I think that this is not a reason why a different interpretation should be put on S. 18, Limitation Act. If the section is properly interpreted, it does not provide the judgment-debtor with any remedy in the cases as mentioned by Mukherjea J. The question of giving the remedy is in the hands of the Legislature. Of course, if there was any ambiguity in the language used, it would have been reasonable and possible to put the interpretation which would give the judgment-debtor a remedy. I am unable to detect any such ambiguity.

[20] I am therefore unable to accept the reasoning which found favour with the two learned Judges in the cases of Kedar Hura v. Asutosh Roy: (44 C. L. J. 565) and Mahipati Haldar;

[21] It may be mentioned here that in a number of other cases Judges sitting singly have in this Court decided that fraud on the part of the auction purchaser is necessary to be proved in an application for setting aside a sale before extension of time under S. 18, Limitation Act can be given. Mention may be made of the decisions in the cases of Majahar Ali v. Mafijaddi Sardar, 166 I. C. 127: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 706), Saila Bala v. Atul Krishna: 82 C. L. J. 9: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 63) and Jagiswar Das v. Deb Narain, 46 O. W. N. 403.

[22] My conclusion is that before any extension of time can be given under 8. 18, Limitation Act, in an application for setting aside a sale under 8. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, it must be proved that the auction-purchaser was either guilty of the fraud or accessory to the fraud, that prevented the judgment-debtor from knowing of the sale.

[23] The result is that the application made by the present opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2 must be held to be barred by limitation and must therefore fail. Accordingly I would set aside the order passed by the learned Courts below and order that the application under 8. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs.

[24] G. N. Das J.—I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

Order accordingly.

Abdul Motalib - Accused - Petitioner v. The State.

Criminal Revn. No. 260 of 1950, D/- 21-6-1950.

Penal Code (1860), S. 405 - Applicability to Mahomedan co-owners.

The proposition of law that S. 405 does not apply to partners as they are joint owners or co.owners of the partnership property, that is to say, of the common stock, does not apply to the case of Mahomedan co-owner of whom it cannot be said that he is co-owner of the whole of the stock. The position of a Mahomedan co-owner is that he has a specific share in the property.

[Para 5]

(It was, however, found that the accused was not a partner but an employee and was guilty under S. 406.)

Annotation: ('46-Man) Penal Code, S. 405 N. 19.

Debabrata Mukherji and Sambhu Nath Banerji (Sr.)-for Petitioner.

Lahiri J.— This rule is directed against the conviction of the petitioner under 8, 406, Penal Code and an order that he be released on probation of good conduct on executing a bond for Rs. 2,000 with two sureties of Rs. 1,000 each for a period of one year, from the date of the order.

- [2] The prosecution case is that one Hazi Gura Mia used to carry on a business in confectionary and bakery in the town of Darjee. ling. He died on 5th September 1946 leaving his confectionary and bakery shop and consider. able assets. The prosecution case is that after the death of Guru Mia his widow inherited the assets and used to carry on the confectionary and bakery business. According to the practice followed by this business, the officer in charge of the bakery business used to hold in his hands the sale proceeds of the bakery shop and at the beginning of the next month he used to deposit the said sale proceeds in the account of the firm itself. On 1st September 1949, the petitioner who was in charge of the bakery business was entrusted with a sum of Rs. 478 as representing the sale proceeds of the previous month for the purpose of crediting the same in the account of the firm but the petitioner instead of crediting the said amount in the account of the firm credited it in his own private account in the bank of Jaylall Narsingdass. On these allegations, the petitioner was placed on his trial under S. 406, Penal Code.
- [3] The defence was that after the death of Gura Mia the petitioner inherited part of his assets and became a co-owner of the business and the petitioner was in charge of the management of the shop and the bakery as one of the proprietors. The petitioner further denied that there was any entrustment with him of the sum of Rs. 478 on 1st September 1949 as alleged by the prosecution and upon these facts the petitioner pleaded that he was not guilty.
- [4] The Courts below have overruled the defence and convicted and sentenced the petitioner as stated above.
- [5] On behalf of the petitioner, Mr. Mukherji appearing in support of the rule has argued that the conviction and sentence are not sustainable because a co-owner cannot be convicted of an offence under S. 406, Penal Code, and he relied upon the decision in Bhupendra Nath v. Giridhari Lal, 37 C. W. N. 982: (AIR (20) 1933 Cal. 582: 34 Cr.L.J. 958) in support of this proposition. This is a case which relates to the position of partners in a partnership business. Mr. Mukherji has relied upon a passage at p. 988 where the learned Judges make the following observation:

Partners are joint owners or co-owners of the partnership property, that is to say, of the common stock. Each partner is co-owner of the whole of this common stock, though he receives or pays a share only in profits and losses arising therefrom and though his share in the partnership property is only the value of his original contribution, increased or diminished by his share of profit or loss."

In our judgment, this proposition of law which was laid down with regard to the position of partners does not apply to the case of a Maho. medan co-owner of whom it cannot be said that he is a co-owner of the whole of the stock. The position of a Mahomedan co-owner is that he has a specific share in the property, which lis left by the deceased and it is quite clear upon the evidence in this case and also upon the admission of the petitioner that he was an employee of the bakery business left by the deceased Gura Mia. If as an employee the petitioner was entrusted with a specific sum of money and if instead of crediting the said sum in the account of the firm he deposited it in his own private account, we think that the petitioner is guilty of the offence under S. 406, Penal Code.

[6] Mr. Mukherji next contended that the prosecution did not produce the account books of the bakery business to prove that the sum of Rs. 478 was entrusted to the petitioner on 1st September 1949. On this point, it is true that the prosecution did not produce the account books but the prosecution examined a number of witnesses to prove that the amount was actually handed over to the petitioner. Both the Courts below have believed the oral evidence which was adduced by the prosecution on this point. The witnesses for the prosecution who proved the handing over of the amount to the petitioner are P. Ws. Nos. 3, 4 and 5. If the evidence of these witnesses be believed there can be no doubt that the petitioner was actually entrusted with the sum of Rs. 478 on 1st September 1949. On these facts, there can be no doubt that the prosecution has satisfactorily proved the entrustment.

[7] Upon the findings arrived at by the Courts below and upon the evidence adduced in this case it is impossible to interfere with the order of conviction and sentence in this case. The rule is accordingly discharged.

Civil Rules Nos. 1203 and 1206 of 1949, D/- 6th December 1949, against order of District Judge, Bankura, D/- 4th May 1949.

(a) Debt Laws—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936), Ss. 2 (8) and 37A (5) and (7) and Rr. 145 and 146 — "Debt" in S. 37A (5)—Meaning of—Definition of "debt" in S. 2, if applies.

Where there is a dispute as to the amount of a debt stated by the applicant in his application, the Board may informally decide the matter and when it does consider the matter it must consider It in the light of R. 146. When it is considering what is the amount of the debt in an application under S. 37A, it must consider what the term 'debt' means in S. 37A, sub-s. (5). The word "debt" in sub-s. (5) of S. 37A cannot mean what is stated in the definition of that word in S. 2. There is another definition of the word "debt" in subs. (7) of S. 37A. Applying this definition it is quite clear that the amount excluded in the definition as being barred by limitation must be included in ascertaining the amount of the debt. The debt is the amount of the decree, in execution of which the property was sold together with certain other charges. [Paras 10 and 11]

Where, therefore, a decretal amount was over Rs. 31,000 but out of this Rs. 20,000 was barred by limitation at the date of the application by the debtor to the Board:

Held, that the amount of the decree was the amount of the debt for the purposes of S. 37A (5) and such amount being over Rs. 25,000 the Board had no jurisdiction to deal with the application by reason of R. 146 (2).

[Para 11]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes-Definition.

The definition given is normally to be taken to apply wherever that word occurs in the statute. The definition, however, will not apply if the word appears in a subject or context which makes the application of the definition impossible and repugnant to the meaning of the context in which the word is found. [Para 7]

Chandra Sekhar Sen and Sailendra Nath Banerjee -- for Petitioners.

Phanindra Nath Das -for Opposite Party.

Harries C. J.—These two applications are for revision of orders made by a learned District Judge in revision under S. 40A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act.

[2] The decree-holders opposite parties had obtained against the petitioners or their predecessors a mortgage decree for Rs. 20,100 in mortgage Suit No. 75 of 1925 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bankura. By the decree the petitioners were jointly and severally liable. The decree provided that in default of payment by Bhadra 1335 B. S., interest would run at 9. annas per cent. per mensum until realisation. A preliminary decree was obtained on 3rd August 1927, which was made final on 22nd September 1928. In the year 1935, the decree-holders executed the decree for recovery of Rs. 31,584 which was the sum then due on the mortgage after adding the interest which had accrued to the decretal amount and execution costs. The mortgaged properties were put up for sale and purchased by the decree-dolders for Rs. 10,000 on 16th March 1936, and the sale was confirmed on 22nd July 1936 possession being delivered on 1st and 2nd May 1937.

[3] In the year 1942, the petitioners who were the mortgagors filed two separate applications under S. 37A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, in which they alleged that the total debt due from both sets of patitioners was Rs. 10,000 and that each set of patitioners owed only Rs. 5000.

(4) The Board came to the conclusion that the debt which was the subject-matter of each of these applications was Bs. 31,584 and held that under Rr. 146 and 147 the Board had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter. There were appeals to the appellate Officer which were dismissed, and applications in revision to the District Judge under S. 40A of the Act were also dismissed.

[6] Mr. Chandra Sekhar Sen on behalf of the petitioners has contended that the amount of the debt which was the subject-matter of the application under ·S. 37A of the Act was Rs. 10,000. He has referred to the definition of the word 'debt' in S. 2, sub-s. (8) (v) which is in these terms:

"'Debt' includes all liabilities incurred prior to the first day of January 1940 of a debtor in cash or in kind, secured or unsecured, whether payable under a decree or order of a civil Court or otherwise, and whether payable presently or in future, but does not include the following.....any amount a suit or application for the recovery of which is barred by limitation, or which is otherwise irrecoverable under the law."

[6] Mr. Sen's argument is that the balance of the decretal amount which was over Rs. 25 000 was irrecoverable when this application under S. 37A was made. He pointed out that the sale was confirmed on 22nd July 1936 and possession actually given on 1st and 2nd May 1937. The decree-holders could apply within three years from the date of the confirmation of the sale for a simple money decree for the balance of Rs. 25,000 odd, but they did not do so. After three years admittedly an application for a simple money decree would be barred by limitation. That being so, Mr. Sen has contended that by reason of the definition, to which I have referred, the amount irrecoverable as being barred by limitation cannot be included in the amount of the debt. The debt, therefore, would be the sum of Rs. 31,594 less Rs. 21,594 which was the amount irrecoverable as being barred by limitation. The total debt was, therefore, only Rs. 10,000 and as there were two sets of mortgagors each could claim that they were only bound to pay half the amount. That being so, Mr. Sen urged that the debt was correctly stated in each application as Bs. 5000.

[7] It is to be observed that the definition S. 2 in which the definition of the word 'debt' occurs opens with these words: "In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context." The definition given is normally to be taken to apply wherever that word occurs in the statute. The definition however will not apply if the word appears in a subject or context which makes the application of the definition impossible and repugnant to the meaning of the context in which the word is found.

(8) The duty of the Board in connection with jurisdiction while dealing with applications made under the Act is dealt with by Rr. 144, 145 and 146 etc. Rule 144 reads as follows:

"The maximum amount of the sum total of all debts due from a debtor which can be dealt with under the provisions of the Act shall be Rs. 50,000;

Provided that with the previous sanction in writing of the Collector, a Board may deal with an application if the sum total of all debts due from the debtor exceeds Rs. 5000 but does not exceed Rs. 25,000."

Rule 145 is in these terms:

"If there is any doubt or dispute as to the amount of any debt, the Board shall in accordance with the principles of S. 18 and R. 50 or sub s. (7) of S. 37A and Rr. 77D to 77F, as the case may be and as far as the same may be applicable, informally decide for the purpose of R. 144 the amount of such debt."

Rule 146 provides:

"(1) If the sum total of all debts mentioned by the debtor in his application under S. 8 or S. 37A or statement of debt under sub-s. (1) of S. 13 exceeds Rs. 5000 but does not exceed Rs. 25,000 the Board shall forward the application to the Collector for sanction under the proviso to R. 144 before passing any order upon it under sub-s. (2) of S. 13 or under S. 18 or sub-s. (7) of S. 37A. (2) If the amount so mentioned by the debtor exceeds Rs. 25,000 the Board shall not entertain the application."

(9) Mr. Sen has contended that what really matters in R. 146 is the sum total of the debts mentioned by the debtor and it matters not what the real debt is if the debtor stated the debts to be below Rs. 5000. In other words, Mr. Sen has urged that the debtor can give the Board jurisdiction by understanding his debts. The words used in R. 146 are not very happy, but I think it is clear from Rr. 144 and 145 what is really meant. The words "if the sum total of all debts mentioned by the debtor in his application etc., mean if the actual amount of the debts of the debtor exceeds Rs. 5000 or Rs. 25,000 as the case may be, then certain consequences follow.

[10] It seems to me quite clear from R. 145 that where there is a dispute as to the amount of a debt stated by the applicant in his application, the Board may informally decide the matter and when it does consider the matter it must consider it in the light of R. 146. When it is considering what is the amount of the debt in an application under S. 87A it must consider what the term 'debt' means in S. 37A sub-s. 5. Mr. Sen's argument is that 'debt' must mean in S. 37A. sub-s. 5 what it means in other portions of the Act. In other words, the definition of the word 'debt' in S. 2 must be applied to the word 'debt' in S. 87A, sub-s. 5. I have pointed out however that in the definition section it is expressly stated that the definition given will not apply if there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, and I think it is clear that the word 'debt' in sub-s. (5) of S. 37A cannot mean what is stated in the definition of that word in S. 2. In short, there is another definition of the word 'debt' in sub-s. (7) of S. 37A of the Act. This sub-section reads:

"For the purposes of an award made under sub-s. (5)
(a) the debt shall be deemed to be (i) the amount of the decree or certificate in execution of which the property was sold together with all costs of such execution including the cost of delivery of possession or the property to the decree-holder calculated in the manner prescribed."

[11] Applying this definition it is quite clear that the amount excluded in the definition as being barred by limitation must be included in ascertaining the amount of the debt. The debt is the amount of the decree, in execution of which the property was sold together with certain other charges. The amount of the decree in this case was over Rs. 31,000 and that is the amount of the debt for the purposes of Sub-s. (5) of S. 37A. The amount being over Rs. 25,000, it is clear that the Board had no jurisdiction to deal with the application by reason of sub-r. (2) of B. 146. That being so the Board properly rejected the application and the views of the Appellate Officer and of the learned District Judge cannot be assailed.

[12] Mr. Sen did not really contend that each group of patitioners was only liable for half the decretal amount, namely, Rs. 15,500 odd. He conceded that each of the groups was liable for Rs. 31,000 odd.

[13] For the reasons which I have given both these petitions fail and the Rules are discharged with costs.

In a case where the Court comes to the conclusion that time is not the essence of the contract for the purchase of immovable property, the failure by the plaintiff to fulfil the condition of paying a portion of the purchase-money required of him under the contract within the stipulated period will not ipso facto, disentitle him to get a decree for specific performance.

In the circumstances of a particular case the Court has to enquire whether the delay which has taken place is properly explained by the plaintiff. The mere fact that there has been some delay is not sufficient to put him out of Court.

[Paras 3, 5]

The question whether the lapse of time destroys the plaintiff's right has also to be considered with reference to other attendant circumstances. If the plaintiff has been in substantial possession of the benefits under the contract and is in effect claiming the completion of the legal estate, delay will not, if properly explained, affect his right to obtain specific performance. [Para 6]

This principle, however, is subject to a proviso. If the fact that the plaintiff has been in possession is used in extenuation of the delay which has taken place in filing the suit for specific performance, such possession must, in order to have that effect, be a possession under the contract and such that the vendor must know or be taken to know that the purchaser claims to be in possession under the contract. [Para 7]

The provisions contained in S. 55, T. P. Act, read with Ss. 51 and 52, Contract Act, are not inconsistent with the principle stated above. [Para 8a]

Judgment.—The plaintiff appellant filed a suit for the specific performance of a contract, the terms of which are contained in a compromise petition which had been filed in an earlier suit between the parties. The plaintiff had paid either the whole or a substantial portion of the consideration money for a certain property under the terms agreed upon, and the plaintiff was required to pay an additional amount of Rs. 28 within one month from the date of the compromise, namely, 18th November 1943, and the defendants were required to execute the conveyance according to the agreement. The plaintiff's case was that after the compromise had been entered into, he had attempted to pay the money and to get the conveyance, but without success. Hence, the present suit for specific performance of the contract and for getting a conveyance from the defendants. It may be stated further that out of the properties which were to be conveyed under that agreement, possession of one of them had been delivered to the plaintiff already. The plaintiff continued in possession of that plot and is still continuing in possession thereof. Delivery of possession is also prayed for in respect of the property of which delivery of possession had not been given. The defence in the main was that the allegation of tender as made by the plaintiff was not true. The payment not having been made within the stipulated period of one month, the contract was neither operative nor enforceable. It is not necessary for our present purpose to refer to other points which had been raised in the pleadings.

[2] The learned Munsif decreed the plaintiff's suit holding in favour of the plaintiff on all the material points. On an appeal being taken by the defendants to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, the suit was dismissed. It has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that (1) time was not the essence of this contract; (2) the plaintiff has not proved that he was all along ready and willing to fulfil his part of the contract; and (3) the plaintiff did not pay the money as stipulated in the contract. On these findings, the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. Hence this appeal by the plaintiff to this Court.

[3] The short question for decision in the present appeal is whether in a case where the Court comes to the conclusion that time is not the essence of the contract, the failure by the plaintiff to fulfil the condition required of him under the contract within the stipulated period will ipso facto, disentitle him to get a decree for specific performance.

[4] It is now well settled that a plaintiff who seeks specific performance of a contract has to show first that he has performed or been ready and willing to perform the terms of the contract on his part to be then performed and secondly that he is ready and willing to do all matters and things on his part thereafter to be done. If there is a default on his part in either of these two respects, that furnishes a ground upon which the plaintiff's claim may be resisted. Manik Chandra v. Abhoy Charan, 24 C. L. J. 90: (A. I. B. (4) 1917 Cal. 283).

[5] If it is found that time is not the essence of the contract then the non-fulfilment of the condition within the time fixed is not by itself destructive of the claim for specific performance. In the circumstances of a particular case the Court has to enquire whether the delay which has taken place is properly explained by the plaintiff. The mere fact that there has been some delay is not sufficient to put him out of Court. Reference may in this connection be made to the observations of the Judicial Committee in the case of Meenakshi Naidoo v. Subramanıya Sastri, 14 I. A. 160 : (11 Mad. 26 P.C.) Their Lordships pointed out the circumstances under which lapse of time and delay are most material for determining the rights of the plaintiff to obtain specific performance in the following terms:

"Where it would be practically unjust to give a remedy either because the party has by his conduct done that which might clearly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it; where by his conduct and neglect he has, though perhaps not waived that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted; in either of these cases lapse of time and delay are most material."

[6] The question whether the lapse of time destroys the plaintiff's right has also to be considered with reference to other attendant circum. stances. If the plaintiff has been in substantial possession of the benefits under the contract and is in effect claiming the completion of the legal estate, delay will not, if properly explained, affect his right to obtain specific rerformance. In the case of Clarke v. Moore, 1 Jo. & Lat. 723: (7 Ir. Eq. R. 515), the Lord Chancellor had explained that the circumstances under which the fact of the plaintiff being in possession materially affected and assisted the plaintiff in obtaining specific performance even though such prayer was made after lapse of time. This view has been accepted in the case of Arjuna Mudaliar v. Lakshmi Ammal, (1948) 2 M. L. J. 271 : (A. I. B. (36) 1949 Mad. 265), where a Division Bench of the Madras High Court observed that mere delay does not by itself preclude the plaintiff from obtaining specific performance if his suit is otherwise in time. The delay must be such that it may be properly inferred that the plaintiff has abandoned his right, or on account of the delay there must have been such a change of circumstances that the grant of specific performance would prejudice the defendant as from long delay alone, without anything further an abandonment of rights would be presumed. Reference may in this connection be also made to Ss. 473 and 474 of 31 Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition, pp. 404 to 405.

[7] This principle, however, is subject to a proviso. If the fact that the plaintiff has been in possession is used in extenuation of the delay which has taken place in filing the suit for specific performance, such possession must, in order to have that effect, be a possession under the contract and such that the vendor must know or be taken to know that the purchaser claims to be in possession under the contract. Mills v. Haywood. (1877) 6 Ch. D. 196.

[8] In the present case, it is an admitted fact that the plaintiff is in possession and had been in possession. It is, however, stated that the plaintiff had been in possession from before the compromise which had been filed in the earlier suit. What has been the nature of the possession from after the filing of the compromise has neither been enquired into by either of the Court nor any finding arrived at. If the proposition, as enunciated above, be given effect to there has to be a further enquiry as to the nature of the possession by the plaintiff from after the filing of the compromise in the earlier suit to ascertain whether the conditions laid down in the case of Mills v. Haywood, (1877) 6 Ch. D. 196, are satisfied.

[8a] To the application of this principle an objection has, however, been raised on behalf of the respondents. It is contended that S. 55, T. P. Act read with 8s. 51 and 52, Contract Act provides the law which is applicable in the present case and the principle as stated above is inconsistent with the same. Reliance is placed upon sub-s. (3) of S. 55, T. P. Act, which provides that where the whole of the purchase-money has been paid to the seller he is also bound to deliver to the buyer all documents of title relating to the property which are in the seller's possession or power. This sub-section is not attracted on the facts of the present case. Reference is also made to cl. (d) of sub-s. (1) of S. 55, T. P. Act. Material portion of the section is in the following terms:

"In the absence of a contract to the contrary, the buyer and the seller of immovable property respectively are subject to the liabilities and rights mentioned in the Rules next following, or such of them as are applicable to the property sold....

(1) (d) on payment or tender of the amount due in respect of the price to execute a proper conveyance of the property when the buyer tenders it to him for execution at a proper time and place."

There is no question that these provisions are apposite but they do not in my view in any way contradict or run counter to the propositions to which I have made reference in the earlier part of this judgment. It is only on payment or tender of the amount due by the buyer that the seller is to execute the document. The whole question in this case is whether such payment or tender by the buyer has been at a proper time and place. In determining that question, the Court has to consider whether the lapse of time from the date of the contract to the date of payment is properly explained or not and whether the dealy that has taken place is excusable, or not.

[9] Similarly, the provisions contained in Ss. 51 and 52, Contract Act do not in any way affect the application of the principles. Section 51 simply provides that a promisor is not bound to perform his part of the contract unless the reciprocal promisee is ready and willing to perform the same. I shall deal with another part of the objection raised by the respondents as to the frame of the suit and the existence of the cause of action on the date the suit was filed. Section 52, Contract Act also provides for the order in which the reciprocal promises by the respective parties are to be performed. This section also does not in any way affect the application of the principles stated already.

[10] Lastly, it is contended on behalf of the respondents that the plaintiff had not, even on the date that the suit was filed, been ready or had actually deposited Bs. 28 which under the contract he was required to pay within a month of the filing of the compromise. The learned Munsif points out, and I think rightly, that although the deposit had not been made on the date that the suit had been filed, there are sufficient indications in the plaint to show the desire and readiness of the plaintiff on that day to fulfil his part of the contract. The cause of action is to be determined with reference to the pleadings and not the subsequent finding which may be reached by the Court. That there was a cause of action on which the suit had been filed by the plaintiff is beyond question. The deposit which had actually been made by the plaintiff was on 8th January 1946, two months before the suit had been disposed of and within three years of the filing of the compromise in November 1943. Even if the suit had been filed on 8th January 1946, or be deemed to have been filed on this latter date, such a suit will still be within time and there can be no objection to the prayer as made in the plaint being allowed if otherwise the plaintiff is within time, or if the relief has not otherwise become barred. That the plaintiff had a cause of action on the date the suit was filed cannot, therefore, be controverted.

[11] The plaintiff is entitled to relief provided it can be shown that the possession which he had exercised over a substantial portion of the property in suit was under the contract. This fact has not been enquired into, as I have already stated.

[12] The result, therefore, is that the appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the Court of appeal below are set aside and the case is remitted to that Court for a decision on the point as to what was the nature and character of the possession which had been exercised by the plaintiff in respect of Dag No. 564 and particularly whether that possession was a possession under the contract and such that the vendor must know or be taken to know that the plaintiff claimed to be in possession under the contract. If the answer be in the affirmative, the plaintiff is entitled to a decree in the present suit. If it is found against the plaintiff the suit will have to be dismissed. As this specific point had not been raised or considered in the form in which it has been done in this Court, both the parties will be entitled to lead evidence on this point only. Costs of this Court will abide the result.

Panchanan Chakravarti — Defendant— Petitioner v. Harisatya Bhattacharyya and another —Plaintifis — Opposite Party.

Civil Rule No. 845 of 1949, D/ 13-12-1949, against order of Addl. Munsel, Howrah, D/- 28-2-1949.

(a) Houses and Rents - West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, (XXXVIII [38] of 1948), Ss 18 and 12 (1) (b) -Benetit under S. 18 - Date of commencement of Act.

The deposit of arrears due within one month from 1st December 1948, cannot be considered to be compliance with the provisions of S. 12 (1) (b), regulring a deposit of arrears within a month from the date of the commencement of the Act, if and when, for getting the benefit of S. 18 the Court has to make the as-umption that the Act was in force on the date before 1st December 1948, on which the decree was passed. Once the assumption is made, as has to be made before any benefit under S 18 of the Act can be given, that the Act was in force on the previous date on which the decree was passed, it is necessarily to be assumed that for the purpose of considering S. 12 (1) (b) of the Act that the Act commenced at least on the date on which the decree was passed and consequently before the requirements of S 12 (1) (b) of the deposit could be satisfied the deposits had to be made within a month from this assumed date of commencement of the Act, in other words, within one month from the date of the decree.

The question whether there has been a proper compliance with the requirements of S 12 (1)(b) of the Act which could have stood in the way of the Court paseing a decree for ejectment if the assumption had been made that the Act was in force on the date the decree was actually passed cannot, however, arise if there are in fact, no arrears outstanding on the date of the decree. [Para 5]

The mere fact that all rents due had been deposited would not however prevent these amounts being in arrears. If they have been deposited in accordance with law or if, even if not deposited in accordance with law, such amount has been appropriated by the landlord, then and then only, it has to be held that no amount was in arrears. [Paras 7 & 9]

(b) Interpretation of Statutes - Retrospective operation.

Ranjit Kumar Banerjee and Jnanendra Mohan De -for Petitioner.

Hemendra Chandra Sen and Dwijendra Nath Das — for Opposite Party.

Das Gupta J.—The question in this case is whether the petitioner is entitled to have the benefit of S. 18, West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act, 1948, for the purpose of rescission or variation of a decree for ejectment passed against him in Title Suit No. 125 of 1948 in the Court of the Additional Munsif, Howrah. The petitioner was a tenant under the opposite party with respect to a portion of holding No. 6, Kailash Basu 4th Bye Lane, Ramkrishnapur, at a monthly rental of Rs. 15-8-0 only. The suit 1950 C/67 & 68 for ejectment was instituted on 20th September 1917 on the allegation that the tenancy had been terminated by a notice to quit served in accordance with law. There was also a claim for Bs. 10 8 0 said to be the outstanding due on account of rent and a claim for mesne profits. It was said that the tenant had defaulted in payment of rent prior to the date of suit and so was no; entitled to get the benefit of the Calcatta Rent Ordinance, 1946, which was then in force. The Court accepted the story of default, found that the tenancy had been properly terminated and gave the plaintiff a decree for ejectment of the defendant petitioner. The decree was passed on 7th September 1948. On 22nd December 1948, the petitioner filed an application before the Court praying for a resoission of the decree for ejectment. It was stated therein that during the pendency of the suit the petitioner had been regularly depositing the due rent every month in the Rent Controller's Court in accordance with the provisions of law and that in fact, rent due up to the month of October 1948 had been deposited in the Rent Controller's Court. It was further stated that the rent for the month of November 1948 and for the month of December up to the date of petition together with costs had also been put in by him on that date, namely 22nd December 1948. He claimed that this was a sufficient compliance with the provisions of s. 12 (1)(b), West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act and so in view of the provisions of S. 18 of the Act he was liable to have the decree rescinded.

[2] In the objection which was filed by the present opposite party it was merely stated that the petitioner was not entitled to have the decree rescinded; but nothing was said about the petitioner's statement in the petition as regards the deposit of rent in accordance with law in the Rent Controller's Court up to the month of october 1918.

[3] The learned Munsiff dismissed this application on two grounds. His first ground was that the deposit had not been made in accordance with law inasmuch as it had been made in Court which is not provided for in the Act. His second ground was that in any case there could not be any application of S. 18 of the Act to the facts of this case inasmuch as "the post-Act deposit cannot have any retrospective effect so as to relate back and undo the pre-Act defaulting status and cure this initial vice of default which has in fact been adjudged by the Court and consequent on which the decree in question had to be passed."

[4] The difficulties which arise in the application of S. 18, West Bengal Premises Rent Control Act 1948 have been considered in several cases by this Court. Vide Federation Bank of India Ltd. v. Hanutmal Boid, A. F. O. O. No. 36 of 1949: (54 C. W N. 604), Sm. Nagendra Bala Hore v. Dakshina Kali Mata, Civil Revn. No. 277 of 1949: (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Cal. 503) Sachindra Biswas v. Phanindra Nath Bagchi, Civil Revn. No. 708 of 1949 and Bepin Behary Dey v. Girindra Kumar Kar, Civil Revn No. 1066 of 1949. In all these cases it was held that the deposit of arrears due, within one month from 1st December 1948, cannot be considered to be compliance with the provisions of S. 12 (1) (b) requiring a deposit of arrears within a month from the date of the commencement of the Act if and when, for getting the benefit of S. 18 the Court has to make the assumption that the Act was in force on the date before 1st December 1948 on which the decree was passed. It was pointed out that once the assumption is made, as has to be made before any benefit under S. 18 of the Act can be given, that the Act was in force on the previous date on which the decree was passed, it is necessarily to be assumed that for the purpose of considering S. 12 (1) (b) of the Act, that the Act commenced at least on the date on which the decree was passed and consequently before the requirements of S. 12 (1) (b) of deposit could be satisfied the deposits had to be made within a month from this assumed date of commencement of the Act, in other words, within one month from the date of the decree. In all the above cases arrears were admittedly outstanding and they were put in not within a month from the date of the decree but within a month from 1st December 1948. The argument that for the purpose of seeing whether the requirements of 8. 12 (1) (b) had been complied with, the date of the commencement of the Act should be taken to be 1st December 1948, though at the same time the Court would have to assume that the Act was in operation on the date on which the decree was actually passed, was negatived.

[5] I feel myself bound by the decisions and I respectfully agree with them. The question whether there has been a proper compliance with the requirements of S. 12 (1) (b) of the Act which could have stood in the way of the Court passing a decree for ejectment if the assumption had been made that the Act was in force on the date the decree was actually passed cannot however arise if there are, in fact, no arrears outstanding on the date of the decree. If there are no such arrears, the difficulty in the way of the tenant that he cannot be entitled to the benefit of S. 11 unless he has deposited arrears within a certain time does not arise. In the present case if the statement made by the petitioner in the application under S. 18 of the Act is correct, then obviously there were no arrears on 7th September 1948 when the decree was passed. It may be mentioned here that on the date the suit was filed there was clearly no amount in arrears. The plaintiff himself stated in the plaint that the rent for August 1947 and from the 1st to 19th September 1948 had not been paid, but admitted that out of that amount Rs. 15-8-0 had been deposited and he claimed Rs. 10-8-0 only as the amount in arrears. It was contended by Mr. Sen before us that in fact the amount in deposit had not been withdrawn by his client. I fail to see how, when by his statement the plaintiff gives credit to the tenant for the sum of Rs. 15-8-0 said to have been deposited in the Rent Controller's Court, it can still be said that this amount was in arrears. He had clearly appropriated this amount and the only amount which according to him remained due was the amount of Rs. 10-8-0. But as that was for the part of the month of September 1947 and the rent for that month would not become an arrear until 15th October 1947 in the absence of any contract to the contrary which has not been established in this case, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that on the date the suit was instituted no amount was in arrears.

[6] The question for consideration here however is not whether any amount was in arrears at the date the suit was filed but whether any amount was in arrears "before the commencement of the Act", that is, before 7th September 1948 which for the purpose of S. 18 should, in my: opinion, be assumed in this case to be the date of the commence. ment of the Act. All Acts have ordinarily only prospective operation and they can have retrospective operation only when there is special provision for that. The result of the provisions of S. 18 would be that in considering an application under S. 18 the Court would have to consider that the Act was in force on the date the decree was passed which in the present case is on 7th September 1949. There is no justification for carrying the Act further back in the present case and consequently the Act must be considered to have commenced on 7th September 1948.

(7) As already stated the petitioner's case is that all rents up to October 1948 had been paid by him by deposit in the Rent Controller's Court. The mere fact that they had been deposited would not however prevent these amounts being in arrears. If they have been deposited in accordance with law or, even if not deposited in accordance with law, such amount has been appropriated by the landlord, then and then only, it has to be held that no amount was in arrears.

Court below from this point of view. What was considered there was whether the amounts for November and December 1948 had been deposited in accordance with law. It was not understood that what the Court had to consider in the circumstances of this case under 8, 18 was whether on 7th September 1948 there were any arrears and whether those arrears had been deposited in accordance with law, and that the Court was not concerned with the question of the arrears for Ostober or November or December 1948, in deciding whether relief under 8, 18 could be given.

(9) As I have stated, it must be held that no amount was in arrears on the date the suit was filed. Before a proper decision can be made of the application under S. 18 it is therefore necessary to ascertain whether there were any arrears on 7th September 1918 with regard to the rent for the period—September 1917 to July 1918. If the rent for these months had been deposited in accordance with law then in force, that is the Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1916, this would not be in arrears. Again, if even though they were not deposited in accordance with law the landlord had appropriated any portion of the rent deposited, such rent as had been appropriated must be held to be not in arrears.

[10] It is necessary therefore that this case should be remanded to the Court below for a decision in accordance with law after giving both parties an opportunity to adduce evidence whether any rent for the period-september 1947 to July 1948-was in arrears on 7th September 1948. If no such amount was in arrears the decree for ejectment should be rescinded on such terms as regards payment of rent for the subsequent period as the Court may think fit. If any such amount was in arrears the application under 8, 18 should be rejected, as there is no case made that any such amount if in arrears, have been paid within a month from 7th September 1948. I would therefore set aside the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and remand the case for disposal in accordance with the above direction.

[11] The Rule is disposed of in these terms. There will be no order as to costs.

(a) Debt laws—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] or 1936), S. 40 —Appeal against order of Board — Who can file.

Where in an application under S. 37A, the landlord contends that she has transferred the property to one A, who is not a party to the proceeding, before 20th December 1939 but the Board finds that no such transfer was effected before that date, A has no locus stands to prefer an appeal against the decision of the Board.

[Para 3]

(b) Debt laws—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936), S. 37 (i) (b) and (iii)—Application under S. 37A—Conditions to be complied with—Any other person—Meaning.

An application under S. 37A is entertainable if any of the conditions contained in S. 37A (1) (c) (i) (to (iii) is complied with.

In order to comply with the condition in S. 37A (1) (b) (iii) it is not enough that the sale is held before the commencement of the Act of 1940. The applicant must also show that the case was of a debt for arrears of rent in respect of which he was liable jointly with some other persons. The expression any other person' clearly means some person other than the applicant. Where therefore the petitioners clearly state that they are not liable jointly for any debt with any other person, the condition in S 37A (1) (b) (iii) is not complied with and the application is not maintainable. [Para 6]

Sambhu Nath Banerjee (Sr.) — for Petitioners. Sarat Chandra Janah (in 1705) and Arun Kumar Janah (in 1706) — for Opposite Party.

Sen J. — These two rules arise out of proceedings before the Debt Settlement Board. The first Rule 1705 of 1949 arises out of an order passed in revision under S. 40A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act by the learned District Judge.

[2] The facts are these: The petitioners were applicants under S. 37A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act. They impleaded one Chitramoyee Devi as the landlord. She pleaded that she had transferred the property to one Bhutnath Patra before 20th December 1939, and that therefore no relief could be obtained by the petitioners. The Board held that there was no transfer before that date. Bhutnath Patra appealed although he was not a party to the proceedings and the Appellate Officer dismissed the appeal. Against that order Bhutnath Patra moved the District Judge and the appeal was allowed.

[8] It is contended on behalf of the petitioners that Bhutnath Patra had no locus standi to prefer the appeal and therefore the order allowing Bhutnath's appeal should be set aside. We are of opinion that there is no answer to this contention and the order passed by the District Judge in so far it allowed Bhutnath Patra's appeal must be set aside. The rule is accord.

ingly made absolute. There will be no order for costs.

(4) The second Rule 1706 of 1949 arises out of the same proceedings before the Debt Settlement Board. The contention of the landlord was that the petition was not maintainable by reason of the fact that the provision of S. 37A (1) (b) (i), Bengal Agricultural Debtors (Amendment) Act 1940 was not complied with. Section 37A (1) (b)

(i) is in the following terms:

"37A. (1) When any immovable property of any person has been sold after the twelfth day of August 1935, in execution of a decree of a civil Court or a certificate under the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act, 1913, relating to a debt. other than a certificate for the recovery of any amount payable under an award, such person or his heir, executor or administrator may, notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in any other law for the time being in force or in agreement, apply for relief under this Section, if the following conditions are fulfilled, namely, (b) if the sale was held—

(i) before an appointment was made under sub-s. (2) of S. 3 in relation to the Board established for the local area within which such person ordinarily resided at the time of the sale."

(5) It was pointed out that the sale was not held before the appointment mentioned in S. 37A (1) (b) (i). The answer of the tenant was that although the sale was not so held nevertheless the application was maintainable inasmuch as it complied with the provision of S. 37A (1) (b) (iii) that is to say, in as much as the sale was held before the commencement of the Bengal Agricultural Debtors (Amendment) Act, 1940. It was argued that if any of the conditions contained in S. 37A (1) (b) (i) to (iii) was complied with the applications would be entertainable.

[6] This contention has not found favour with the Courts below. We agree that if any of the conditions contained in S. 37A (1) (b) (i)-(iii) are complied with the applications would be entertainable but we are of opinion that the condition laid down in S. 37A (1) (b) (iii) has not been complied with. It is true that the sale was held before the commencement of Bengal Agricultural Debtors (Amendment) Act, 1940, but that is not enough. The applicant under S. 37A in order to get the benefit of S. 87A (1) (b) (iii), must show that the case was of a debt for arrears of rent in respect of which the applicant was liable jointly with some other persons. The words of S. 37A (1) (b) (iii), Bengal Agricultural Debtors (Amendment) Act, 1940, are as follows:

(iii) Before the commencement of the Bengal Agricultural Debtors (Amendment) Act, 1940, in the case of a debt for arrears of rent in respect of which such person was liable jointly with any other person."

In the present case the petitioners have made a joint petition that they are not liable jointly for any debt with any other person. The words 'any other person' clearly mean some person other than the petitioner or petitioners. In these circumstances we are of the opinion that the application is not maintainable.

[7] The Rule is accordingly discharged with costs.

Heramba Chandra Guha and Narendra Nath Banerjee-for Appellant. Apurba Charan Mukherjee-for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff and arises out of Title Suit No. 20 of 1944. The plaintiff had brought the suit on the plea that the defendant had taken settlement of the tank in suit for three years from Agrahayan 1846 B S. to Jaista 1849 B. S. after executing a kabuliyat. After the expiry of the lease the defendant had continued in possession, though the plaintiff had not assented to such possession. The defendant, according to the plaintiff is a trespasser and the prayer is for an ejectment from the demised property. The defence raised various points but the one material for the purpose of the present appeal is that the tenant had paid rent up to 1850 B.S. and that there had been a further agreement by the landlord accepting fresh tenancy after the expiry of the lease in Jaistha, 1849 B. S.

[2] Both the Courts below have dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal on behalf of the plaintiff. The learned Subordinate Judge has on a consideration of the evidence—oral and documentary—arrived at a finding of fact that Rxs. B.20 and B.21 being dakhilas issued by and on behalf of the plaintiff were genuine and that the plaintiff by acceptance of rent up to 1350 B.S., as evidenced by those dakhilas, permitted the defendant to hold over. This decision is by itself sufficient to dispose of the suit as framed. It is not the case on behalf of the plaintiff that she had given notice terminating the tenancy when the tenant was holding over after the expiry of the lease in 1349 B.S. In this view the suit has to be dismissed and the appeal also dismissed.

[3] The learned Subordinate Judge has gone into other questions as well which are not necessary for the disposal of the suit. What the nature of the tenancy is after the expiry of the lease in Jai.ta, 1349 B.S. need not be examined in the present suit. It is also not necessary to consider what is the legal effect of the lease evidenced by Ex. E in the case. These are questions which may arise hereafter when steps are taken, if any, to terminate the tenancy which the defendant has got by holding over and the findings arrived at, except on the question that there was acceptance of rent by the plaintiff up to 1350 B.S., are therefore set aside as being unnecessary.

[4] The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

[5] There will be no order for costs.

[6] S. A. No. 2087/45: This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff and arises out of Title Suit No. 21 of 1944. The plaintiff's case is that the defendant had taken settlement of the suit land under a lease which expired in Asar, 1849 B.S. and that even after the expiry of the lease when the defendant continued to be in possession, he is a trespasser and is liable to be ejected therefrom. The defence raised certain questions as to the real person with whom the lease had been executed but the real point raised and which is pertinent in the appeal now before me was that after the expiry of the period of the lease in Asar, 1348 B.S. the plain. tiff had agreed to grant a mourashi right and that in pursuance of that agreement he had been holding over and certain payments were also made. A further plea was raised as under the provisions of the Bengal Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act which was then in force. The Courts below held that the prayer for ejectment, though otherwise valid, the defendant could not be ejected as ejectment was barred under 8. 8. Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy Act which was then in force. Direction was given that execution of the decree for delivery of possession would be stayed during the pendency of the Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy . (Temporary Provisions) Act if the rent due together with costs were deposited in Court within 30 days from the date of the decree. The deposit was made within the time fixed by the Court. On appeal by the plaintiff before the learned Subordinate Judge the order for stay as made by the trial Court was maintained and the appeal was dismissed. Hence this appeal by the plaintiff.

[7] Daring the pendency of the appeal in this Court the Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy (Temporary Provisions) Act has been superseded by the West Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy Act (Act XX [20] of 1949). Although the order for stay as issued by the Courts below was to be effective during the period the Non-agricultural Tenancy Act was in force, we have to consider now whether the plaintiff's prayer for ejectment is maintainable under the provisions of the West Bengal Nonagricultural Tenancy Act. Under 8. 88. West Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy Act. the provisions of this Act would be attracted in all suits, appeals and proceedings in respect of non-agricultural tenancies which were pending at the date of the commencement of the Act. This Act came into force on 15th May 1949. The judgment and decree passed by the lower appellate Court must therefore be set aside and the appeal sent back for re-hearing according to law. It will be for the learned Subordinate Judge to consider whether the provisions of the new Act are applicable and if so, whether the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for ejectment as prayed for. All the points raised in the Court of appeal below will also be considered again during the re-haring of the appeal.

[8] The appeal is accordingly allowed and the case sent back to the Court of appeal below for rehearing according to the directions given above.

(9) Costs incurred by the parties in this Court will abide the result.

There is a further prayer that it may be declared that a certain decree and the proceedings in execution thereof are not binding against her on the ground that though she had not attained majority before the relevant time she was described in those proceedings as sui juris.

[2] The undisputed facts may be shortly stated. Some of the defendants and predecessors in interest of some others had brought a euit (T. S. No. 87 of 1940) against the plaintiff and the pro-forma defendants claiming partition of the properties described in Schedule Ka to the plaint. The suit was decreed ex parte on 10th September 1940 and in execution of the decree for costs defendants 1 to 8 had put up to sale the property described in Schedule Kha to the plaint, which was alleged to have been in the exclusive possession of the plaintiff. It is further stated that the property in suit was purchased by defendant 1 in the benami of defendant 9. It is contended that the plaintiff was a minor both when the decree in T. S. No. 87 of 1940 was passed as also when the decree was put into execution. The plaintiff had originally brought T. S. No. 19 of 1942 on grounds similar to those as in the present suit but she having failed to take necessary steps in time the plaint was rejected by the Court. The present suit was filed thereafter. The plaintiff claims that she is not bound by the decree passed in T. S. No. 87 of 1940 and the sale in execution of the said decree does not affect her title to the property. The defence is that defendant 9 was a bona fide purchaser for value, the plaintiff had attained majority before the passing of the decree in T. S. No. 87 of 1940, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief in the present suit.

[3] The learned Munsif found in favour of the defendant and held that the plaintiff was not a minor when the decree in question had been passed. The suit was accordingly dismissed. On appeal by the plaintiff the learned Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff was a minor when the decree in T. S. No. 87 of 1940 was passed. The decree was a nullity and the plaintiff's title to the Kha schedule properties have not been affected by the subsequent sale in execution of the said decree. Defendant 9 has come up on appeal to this Court. The only point urged on behalf of the appellant is that the decision by the Court of appeal below on the question of the minority of the plaintiff is based upon inadmissible evidence.

[4] To prove that the plaintiff was a minor at the relevant time she did not examine herself or her mother. Her husband had been examined and reliance was placed upon the three following documents: (1) A certified copy of the order sheet, recording the appointment of a guardian of the plaintiff, in the Act VIII case wherein it is recorded that the plaintiff was 5 years old in 1928, (Ex.-1A); (2) a certified copy of another order in the same Act VIII case recording that the plaintiff would attain majority on 18th September 1941 (Ex. 1B); and (3) the petition filed in course of the guardianship proceedings by Abdul Barik Midya on 8th June 1926 for being appointed guardian of the person and property of plaintiff (Ex. 3 in the case).

[5] The question whether the above papers, marked as exhibits, are admissible in evidence to prove the age of the plaintiff must be determined with reference solely to the provisions of the Evidence Act. Lekraj Koer v. Mahapal Singh, 7 I. A. 63: (5 Cal 744 P. C.), Emperor v. Panchu Das, 47 Cal. 671: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 500 21 Cr. L. J. 849 F. B)

[6] Items 1 and 2 (Exs. 1A and 1B) are certified copies of the order sheet of the guardianship proceedings. If either of these two papers be admissible in evidence to prove the age of the plaintiff it would show conclusively the date upto which the plaintiff had continued to be a minor.

[7] A certificate of guardianship issued by the Court has been held not to be admissible in evidence under S. 35, Evidence Act to prove the minority of a person. Such certificate is neither a book nor a register nor a record kept by any officer in accordance with any law. It is a certificate, as it professes to be, and is a document issued to a person giving that person and only to him a particular kind of authority. Petheram C. J held in Satish Chunder v. Mohendro Lal, 17 Cal 849, that the certificate cannot be regarded as evidence of minority under S. 35, Evidence Act Edge O. J. followed this decision in Gunjra Kuar v. Ablock Pandey, 18 ALL. 478: (1896) A. W. N. 158). The same view has been expressed in later cases also by Rampini and Mookerjee JJ. in Hemchandra v Bhaba Prosad, 2 C. L. J. 69n and by Mookerjee and Chotzner JJ. in Hara Kumar V. Jogendra Krishna, 88 C. L. J. 186 (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 526).

[8] It has next to be considered whether, even though the certificate may not be admissible under S. 35 the certified copies of the orders passed by the Court in the guardianship proceedings are admissible under some or other provisions of the Act. The orders passed in the guardianship proceedings cannot be treated as a judgment in rem as in the case of a grant made under the Succession Act: Hemangini Debi v. Saratsundari, 34 O. L. J. 457: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 292). Even though an order is not a judgment in rem or inter partes it may be admissible only to prove that such an order had in fact been made but not to prove its contents. Ram Parkash v. Anand Das, 48 I. A. 78: (A. I. B. (3) 1916 P. O. 256), Ram Banjan v. Ram Narain, 22 I. A. 60 (22 Cal 538 P. C.), Dinomoni v. Brojomohins, 29 I. A. 24: (29 Cal. 187 P C.). The certified copies of the orders are not, therefore, available even as being judgments to prove the age of the plaintiff.

[9] In Kishorilal v. Adhar Chandra, 76 C. L. J. 61: (A. I. B. (29) 1942 Cal. 438), reliance was placed on Sadique Ali Khan v. Joy Kishori, 47 C. L. J. 628: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 P. C. 152), a decision of the Judicial Committee in support of the contention that an application for appointment of a guardian made by the father as well as the certificate of guardianship granted by the Judge had been admitted in evidence and relied upon. B. K. Mukherjea J., observed (at p. 65):

"It is not clear from the report as to whether the father who applied for guardianship was alive or dead at the time when the suit was brought and we also do not know whether he was also examined as a witness in the case. The only thing that appears from the judgment is that these papers were used as evidence without any objection by either side. We cannot certainly rely upon this decision as an authority for the proposition that the application in the guardianship proceeding or an order passed on the same as admissible in all circumstances to prove the age of minority and in our opinion the decisions in Harakumar De v. Jogendra Krishna, 38 C. L. J. 186: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 526) and Prohlad Chandra v. Ram Saran, 38 C. L. J. 213: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 420) are quite correct."

The Privy Council decision above mentioned was an appeal from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh dated 27th May 1925. The judgment appealed from is reported as Joy Kishori v. Ali Ahmad Khan, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Oudh 487 : (89 I. C. 108). From the statement of facts appearing in this report it will be noticed that Kassim Ali Khan, the father and Raisunnessa, the mother, of the minor mortgagors were both of them, dead. The application filed by the father for being appointed guardian of the minors will clearly, under the circumstances, be admissible There were other pieces of evidence also in the case in support of the contention that the mortgagors were at the relevant time minors It is true that neither was any objection raised before nor was the question of the admissibility of the guardianship certificate considered by the Judicial Committee. This decision cannot as already observed by B K. Mukherjea J. be considered to be an authority for the proposition that such documents are admissible under all circumstances.

[10] The last item (Ex. 3) has now to be considered. The original record of the guardianship case had been called for and the petition filed by Abdul Barik Mondal was marked as an exhibit, it having been proved by the plaintiff's husband without any objection. Abdul Barik, who made the statement in the petition, has not been examined in this case. The statement appearing in this petition about the date of birth is in substance a statement by a person who made the application. The recital of the date of birth in the application for appointment of a guardian is not by itself admissible in evidence upon mere production of the document but may be rendered admissible under certain circumstances: Krishna Mangul Saha v. Akbar Jumma Khan, 9 C. L. B. 213, Dhanmull V. Ramchunder, 24 Cal. 265 : (1 C. W. N. 270), Ram Chandra v. Jogeswar, 20 Cal. 758, Monindra v. Ram Krishna, 19 C. W. N. 646: (A I. R (3) 1916 Cal. 529), Mohammad Syedol Ariffin v. Yeoh, 48 I. A. 256 : (A. J. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 242). If however the conditions recited in 8 32 (5). Evidence Act, are satisfied that is, a person who had made this statement had spe. cial means or knowledge of the relationship and he is now dead or cannot be found such statement in the petition will be admissible Further, the statement made in the application may be used under S 155, Evidence Act, to impeach the credit of the person who made the statement while he is being examined as a witness in the case. Prohlad v. Ramsaran, 38 C. L. J. 213: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 420). The statement in the application may also as being the former statement as to a fact be admissible under S. 157, Evidence Act to corroborate the later testimony of the witness; Harchand v. Dewan Singh, 1929 A L. J 615 : A. I. R. (16) 1929 ALL. 550., Abdul Barik who had filed the petition had not been examined though he was still alive. It, however, appears from the evidence that Abdul Barik is not now on good terms with the plaintiff. As he has not been examined the source of his knowledge about the age of the plaintiff and also whether he was a proper wit-· ness to prove her age could not be investigated.

(11) As already observed the petition Ex. 3 was marked without any objection and the plaintiff was under a misapprehension that no further evidence was necessary in view of the clear statement contained in those documents. The original of the guardianship proceedings had been sent for and after comparison the certified copies were made exhibits without any objection from either side. The question is whether the parties should be given an opportunity for adducing evidence for letting in the statement contained in Ex. 3. I think the proper way of disposing of this case would be to set aside the judgment of the lower appellate Court and to send the case back in order that the appeal may be re-heard. The plaintiff will be given an opportunity to prove the statement made in the petition Ex. 3 as a statement made by Abdul Barik and also whether the latter had any special knowledge of the date of birth of the plaintiff. The defendant will be at liberty to adduce any evidence in rebuttal thereof.

[12] It is not for me to express any opinion at this stage as to evidentiary value of the recital, as to the age of the plaintiff in the guardianship application. There are other pieces of evidence in the case which also will have to be considered along with the additional evidence which will be recorded by the Court below. The case is to be disposed of after taking into consideration the entire evidence in the record both before and after remand. The Court of appeal below will come to a decision as to whether in fact the plaintiff was or was not a minor on the material date. The result, therefore, is that the appeal is allowed and the case remitted to the lower appellate Court for disposal according to the directions given above. There will be no order for costs in this Court. Further costs will be in the discretion of the said Court.

V.S.B. Case remanded.

- G. N Das J. This rule was obtained by the defendants againt the decision of Mr. Subodh Chandra Mukherjee, learned Subordinate Judge, 1st Additional Court, Alipur, District 24 Parganas; whereby he decreed the suit filed by the plaintiff for setting aside the election of Ward No. V of Naihati Municipality.
- [2] The relevant facts are that Basudeo Paul Opposite Party No. 1 filed his nomination paper as a candidate from Ward V for the impending election of the Naihati Municipality. The nomination paper was rejected by the Chairman of the Municipality; an appeal to the District Magistrate was dismissed. The election then took place and petitioner No. 1 was declared elected from the general seat in Ward V and Petitioner No. 2 was declared elected from the reserved seat. The opposite party No. 1 then brought the present suit being Title Suit No. 82 of 1946 in the Court of the District Judge, Alipur for a declaration that the rejection of his nomination paper by the Election Authorities of the Naihati Municipality is illegal and ultra vires and that the result of the election has been materially affected thereby and that the said election is fit to be set aside.
- (3) The suit was contested by petitioner No. 1 and opposite party No. 4, the Chairman of the Commissioners of the Naihati Municipality.

[4] The suit was heard by the learned Subordinate Judge, 1st Additional Court and was decreed.

[5] Against the said decree, the petitioners moved this Court under S 115, Civil P. C. 1908, V [5] of 1908, (hereinafter called the Code) and obtained the present rule.

[6] Mr. Apurbadhan Mukherji learned advocate for the Opposite Party No. 1 raised a preliminary objection that this Court has no power to revise the decision complained of in view of the provisions of 8. 39B (inserted by 8 13, Bengal Municipal (Amendment) Act XI (11) of 1936) and 8. 43 Bengal Municipal Act XV [15] B. C. of 1932 Reliance was placed on the decisions in Bon Behary v. Makhan Lal, I. L. R. (1938) 2 Cal. 69: (42 C. W. N. 282: A I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 768) and Radhanath Saha v. Hari Mohan Saha, 42 C. W. N. 647: (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 465)

[7] Mr. Pareshnath Mukherjee, learned advocate appearing for the petitioners conceded that the decisions did lay down the proposition that the powers of this Court to interfere with the decision of the District Judge have been taken away by Ss. 39B and 49 of the Act; but contend. ed that even though the original Act of 1932 and the amending Act of 1936 were passed with the previous sanction of the Governor-General under sub-s. (3) of S. 80A, Government of India Act, then in force the sections are ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature on the following grounds: (1) Because the said sections affected the jurisdiction conferred on this Court under S. 115 Civil P. C., 1908 and S. 106, Government of India Act, 1915 and S. 223, Government of India Act, 1935; (2) because the sections affected the jurisdiction of this Court conferred by Ol. (18), Letters Patent.

[8] It was submitted that the points so raised were not urged in the cases referred to and required our consideration.

[9] It was submitted that a substantial question of interpretation of the Government of India Act, 1935 arose in the case. We, accordingly, directed a notice to be served on the Advocate-General, Bengal in accordance with the provisions of O. 27A of the Code which was added by Act XXIII [28] of 1942.

[10] Mr. Sen, the learned Senior Government Pleader has appeared in pursuance of the notice. We are indebted to him as also to the learned advocates appearing in the case for contributing their help to a somewhat difficult investigation and thus to enable us to resolve the problems falling to be determined in this case.

[11] The first ground has been amplified by Mr. Pareshnath Mukherjee in the following manner: (a) The old Courts of Sudder Dewany Adalat and Supreme Court had jurisdiction to revise decisions of Provincial Courts; such jurisdiction was preserved by S. 9, High Courts Act 1861 (24 and 25 Vict. Cap. 104) hereinafter called the Charter Act and was later vested in the High Court, the successor of the Supreme Court and the Sudder Dewani Adalat. The High Court also became vested with powers of revision by 8. 15 of the Charter Act and by certain statutes of the Indian Legislature. Such powers were confirm. el and reiterated by Ss. 106 and 107, Government of India Act, 1915 and by Se. 223 and 224 Government of India Act, 1935. Section 43, Bengal Municipal Act, 1932 or S 39B of the said Act are both Acts of the Provincial Legislature and even though assent of the Governor General had been obtained under S. 80A (3), Government of India Act, 1915, as amended in 1919, the said sections would be ultra vires of the Provincial Legislature; by reason of S. 80A (4), Government of India Act, because the said St. 39B and 43 affected the powers of revision of the High Court to interfere with the orders of the Election Court which is a Court subordinate to the High Court.

[12] We have, therefore, to consider how and when the High Court or its predecessor Courts acquired revisional powers.

[13] This involves in the first place an inquiry into the setting up of Courts of Justice in British India.

[14] So far as the East 'India Company's settlement was concerned, a Mayor's Court was established in 1726. The Court administered English Law and had a limited local jurisdiction.

of the Dewany of the then provinces of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa. This necessitated the administration of Civil and Revenue Justice by the Company. In 1772 Provincial Courts were set up for the purpose. These were manned by European officers who decided causes with the help of Kazis, Maulvies, Muftis and Pandits. Appeals lay from these Courts to the Sudder Dewany Adalat which was composed of the Governor-General and members of his Council till 1801 when Civilian Judges came to be appointed.

[16] We are not concerned with the administration of criminal justice, which may be gathered from the preamble to Regulation IX [9] of 1793; appeal from the decisions of subordinate Oriminal Courts lay to the Sudder Nizamat Adalat.

[17] In 1773, the Regulating Act (13 George III Cap. 63) authorised the setting up of a Supreme Court as a Court of Record, Oyer and Terminer, in place of the Mayor's Court which was to be abolished.

[18] On 26th March 1774, the Charter of the Supreme Court was issued by King George III. In consequence of certain disputes between the Judges and the Executive an Act of Settlement (21 George III Cap. 70) was passed in 1781 This was the position at the end of the eighteenth century. It is not necessary to trace the later development of the provincial Courts which is set forth in Chaps. VIII and IX of Cowell's History and Constitution of Courts and Legislative Authority in India, Edn. 6.

[19] In 1857 the Sepoys' Mutiny broke out. The suppression of the Mutiny synchronised with the Royal Proclamation by Her Most Exalted and Gracious Majesty, Queen Victoria. In 1858, the Government of India Act (21 and 22 Vict. Cap. 106) was enacted, whereby all powers of the East India Company over the territories then in the possession of the Company ceased to be vested in the Company and became vested in the British Crown.

[20] The first Code of Civil Procedure was passed in the year 1859, being Act VIII [8] of 1859. The Act did not confer on the Courts any power of revision. Section 4 provided that "the judgments of the Civil Courts shall not be subject to revision, otherwise than by those Courts, under the rules contained in this Act, applicable to reviews of judgment, and by the constituted Courts of appellate jurisdiction."

[21] On 6th August 1861, the High Courts Act (24 and 25 Vict., Cap. 104) known as the Charter Act was passed. This Act envisaged the establishment of High Courts under a Royal Charter. The requisite Letters Patent was issued on 14th May 1862, and the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal was set up in the same year, superseding the old Sudder Courts and the Supreme Court.

[22] The amended Letters Patent dated 28th December 1865 repealed the former Letters Patent of 1862 and re-established the said High Court. By virtue of S. 106, Government of India Act, 1915 and S. 223, Government of India Act 1935, these Letters Patent are still in force.

[23] Before we proceed to consider the effect of the Charter Act and of the Letters Patent, let us summarise in brief, the salient laws which were applicable to the Sudder Court and the Provincial Courts before the year 1862.

[24] In the Presidency Town of Calcutta the Supreme Court was governed by its own practice, rules and orders and the provisions of Act XVII [17] of 1852 and Act VI [6] of 1864.

[25] Outside the Presidency Towns, the Provincial Courts were guided by the Acts and Regulations which may be found in the schedule to Act X [10] of 1861, and the Civil Procedure Code, Act VIII [8] of 1859.

[26] The above resume shews that before 1861, the Courts in the province had neither any statutory power of revision, nor any inherent powers of revision which are the creation of separate and distinct legislation.

[27] Mr. Pareshnath Mukerji contended that the high prerogative writs of Mandamus, Certiorari, Quo Warranto which used to be issued by Supreme Courts are really instances of the exercise of revisional powers. He relied on the following passage in Annie Besant v. Advocate-General of Madras, 46 I. A. 176 at p. 190: (A.I.B. (6) 1919 P. C. 31: 20 Cr. L. J. 593).

"But their Lordships are not disposed to think that the provisions of S. 435, Criminal P. C. and S. 115, Civil P. C. of 1908 are exhaustive. Their Lordships can imagine cases though rare ones, which may not fall under either of the sections. For such cases their Lordships do not think that the powers of the High Courts which inherited the ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts to issue writs of certiorari can be said to have been taken away."

[28] At p. 191, however, their Lordships observe:

"However that might be according to English law, where there is no revision procedure as in India, their Lordships see no reason for narrowing the express words of the Indian Act."

[29] It is difficult to draw any certain conclusion from the passage relied on.

(30) In Blackstone's commentaries p. 110, the peculiar business of the Court of the King's Bench is stated to be "to superintend all inferior tribunals, and therein to enforce the due exercise of those judicial and ministerial powers with which the Crown or Legislature has invested them, and this not only by restraining their excesses but also by quickening their negligence and obviating their denial of justice."

[31] In Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath, 7 Bom. 341 F. B., West J. at pages 359-360 observed:

"A superintending and visitatorial jurisdiction has been exercised from ancient times by the Queen's Bench and the Court of Chancery. The powers of the former Courts have been executed through the writs of certiforari of mandamus, and prohibition."

[32] It may be suggested that the Supreme Court which inherited the powers of the Courts of Kings Bench, got the aforesaid revisional powers

[33] In Hamid Hassain v. Banwarilal, 51 C. w. N. 716 at p 723, : (A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. O. 90), the power of the Supreme Court was held to be restricted to the original jurisdiction of the High Court, to be exercised over persons who reside or hold office within the said jurisdiction.

[34] In Field's 'Regulations of the Bengal Code' S. 203 at page 145, the learned author says that "the Sudder Dewani Adalat as constituted in 1793 exercised no original civil jurisdiction, being a Court of appeal and superintendence."

(35) But so far as the Sudder Court is concerned, we do not find any recorded instance of exercise of such powers.

ordinary Jurisdiction' Cb. 1 S. 1 says that 'the revisional jurisdiction of the High Courts in India over Courts subordinate to itself, or over cases decided in subordinate Courts, may be said to have had its origin in the similar jurisdiction exercised by the High Courts in England under the King's prerogative, and administered generally on the Crown side."

[37] It is true that every Court of superior jurisdiction possesses inherent powers for preventing injustice in certain cases; but there is no authority for the proposition that in the exercise of such inherent powers, Court can extend its appellate jurisdiction or increase its revisional authority over other Courts.

passage occurs :

"Ontside the statutory provisions no High Court has any inherent powers of revision over the subordinate Courts within its jurisdiction, such for example as the Court of King's Bench in England has for centuries exercised over Courts inferior to itself; and if there have been during recent years tentative efforts on the part of one or two High Courts to assert such powers, they have now been decisively negatived by sub-s. (2) of S. 224 of the Act of 1935."

[39] We have, therefore, to trace the statutory provisions on the point.

[40] On 28th August 1861, Act XXIII [29] of 1861 was enacted. Section 35 of the Act for the first time expressly conferred on the Sudder Court powers of revision in cases where a subordinate Court in cases coming before it on appeal, exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, provided no appeal lay from its decision.

[41] Section 15 of the Charter Act conferred on the High Courts to be established under the Act, powers of superintendence over all Courts subject to its appellate jurisdiction.

(42) When the High Court of Calcutta was established, it inherited the aforesaid power of Sudder Court and Supreme Court and the power of revision conferred on the Sudder Court by S. 35 of Act XXIII [23] of 1861 and S. 15 of the Charter Act, by virtue of S. 9 of the latter Act which reads as follows:

"The High Court shall have and exercise all such criminal, civil, admiralty, vice-admiraly, testamentary and intestate original and appellate jurisdiction and all such powers and authority for end in relation to administration of justice in the Presidency for which it is established as Her Majesty, by such Letters Patent may grant and direct, and subject and without prejudice to the legislative powers in relation to the matters aforesaid of the Governor-General of India in Council, the High Court to be established in the Presidency shall have and exercise all jurisdiction and every power and authority whatsoever in any manner vested in any of the Courts in the same Presidency abolished under the Act, at the time of the abolition of such last mentioned Courts."

diction by a Court could be revised by the High Court under 8. 15 of the Charter Act, was decided by the Privy Council in Nilmoney Singh Deo v. Taranath Musherji, 9 1. A. 174: (9 Cal. 295 P. C.). The Calcutta High Court has construed the said section as authorising this Court to correct also irregular or improper exercise of jurisdiction, Sardhari v. Hukum Chand, 41 Cal. 876: (A. I. B. (1) 1914 Cal. 607), Gobinda Mohan Das v. Kunjabshary Das, 14 C. W. N. 147: (4 I. C. 361). But the powers so conferred are to be resorted to in cases of an unusual character, to prevent gross injustice being perpetrated.

[45] Section 622 of Act X [10] of 1877 gave express powers to the High Court to revise decisions of subtrdinate Courts in cases of unwarranted failure to exercise jurisdiction, or erroneous assumption of jurisdiction by those Courts i. e., in cases similar to those now covered by 8. 115 (1) cls. (a), (b) of the Code.

[46] Section 42 of Act XII [12] of 1879 further enlarged the revisional powers of the High Court by extending the same to cases where the subordinate Court "acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity." The position therefore was that in 1879 the revisional powers of the High Court were brought into a line with the powers now exercised by the High Court under 8.115 of the Code.

[47] Section 622, Civil P. C., 1882 (Act XIV [14] of 1882) merely embodied the said powers of revision conferred by S. 622 of Act X [10] of 1877 and S 92 of Act XII [12] of 1879. Section 622 was re-enacted, on repeal of the said Act XIV [14] of 1882 as S. 115, Civil P. C., 1908 (Act V [6] of 1908).

[48] The Government of India Act, 1915, consolidated the enactments relating to the Government of India Act and the Charter Act and repealed all the preceding Indian Council Acts.

[49] Section 106 (1), of the Act, provided that "the several High Courts are Courts of record, and have such jurisdiction, original and appellate including admiralty jurisdiction in respect of offences committed on the high seas, and all such powers, and authority over or in relation to administration of justice, as are vested by the Letters Patent, and subject to the provisions of any such Letters Patent, all such jurisdiction, powers and authority as are vested in these Courts respectively at the commencement of this Act."

[60] Section 107 then provided that:
"each of the High Courts has superintendence over all Courts for the time being, subject to its appellate jurisdiction, and may do any of the following things, that is to say:

(a) to (e) omitted."

[51] It is well settled that the right of superintendence conferred on the High Courts by 8. 107 included not only superintendence on the administrative points but also superintendence on the judicial side and that the section empowered the High Court to correct any error in a decision of a Court subject to its appellate jurisdiction, even in cases where S. 115, Civil P. C., may not apply, in order to prevent injustice from being done to the parties: Balkrishna Hari v. Emperor, 57 Bom. 93: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Bom 1: 34 Cr. L. J. 199 S. B.) Firm Ganeshdas Shankar Lal v. Firm Ashanand Radhe Sham, A.I R (20) 1930 Lah. 259: (144 I. O. 515), Lalta Devi v. Balkıshan Chopra, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Lah. 327: (146 I. C. 258), Blumnath v. Jagan Nath, A.I.R. (12) 1925 Pat. 674: (89 I. C. 814), In the matter of Kadhori, 42 ALL. 26: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 ALL. 46: 20 Cr. L. J. 615).

[52] We have to consider the question whether the Election Court is subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. In Nara Narayan v. Aghore Chandra, 39 C. W. N. 971, it was held by Henderson and Khundkar JJ. that the District Judge, performing the duties under the Municipal Act did not shed his character as a Court and his order was subject to the superintendence of the High Court under s. 107, Government of India Act, 1935. The point whether the Provincial Legislature could take away the power of superintendence vested in the High Court under S. 107, Government of India Act, 1915 was conceded. No opinion was expressed on the question whether the Provincial Legislature with the sanction of the Governor General could exclude the revisional powers of the High Court under 8. 115 of the Code. Henderson J. was of the opinion that the Election Court was not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court but concurred with Khundkar J. in holding that the power of superintendence of the High Court under S. 107, Government of India Act was exercisable because the District Judge as an Election Court functioned not as a persona designata but as a Court, subject to the superintendence by the High Court.

[53] Three classes of cases may arise in considering the question whether a tribunal is subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court. It is sufficient to deal with some of these cases. If the subordinate Court is one from which an appeal lies to the High Court, though in certain specified cases, then the Court is subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court, and that is sufficient to attract the power of superintendence conferred on the High Court;

even though no direct appeal lies to the High Court; Balkrishna Hari v. Emperor, 57 Bom. 93: (A.I.R. (20) 1933 Bom. 1: 34 Or.L.J. 199 S. B.). The position was held to be the same if the link between the subordinate Court and the High Court was established through another tribunal from whose decision an appeal lies to the High Court in some cases. Re Allen Bros & Co. v. Bando & Co., 26 O. W. N. 845: (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 169). The power of superintendence has also been exercised "in cases which are not subject to appeal but the superintendence is over the Court and its exercise is not confined to cases, where a right of appeal lies to the High Court" per Dawson Miller C. J. in Sheonandan Prasad Singh v. Emperor, 3 Pat. L. J. 581 at p. 587: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Pat. 103 F. B.).

when the Bengal Municipal Act was passed the High Court would have had power to interfere with a decision of the District Judge exercising special jurisdiction in election disputes under the Act, either under s. 115, Civil P C., 1908 or S. 107, Government of India Act, 1915.

[55] The question whether 8. 39B which made the decision or order of the Judge under 8. 38, 39 or 39A final took away the powers of revision under 8. 115 of the Code has given rise to a divergence of judicial opinion. An affirmative answer was given in Bonbehary v. Makhan Lal, I. L. B. (1938) 2 Cal. 69: 42 C. W. N. 282: (A.I.R. (25) 1938 Cal. 768), Radhanath v. Harimohan, 42 C. W. N. 647: (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 465). A negative answer was given in Phanindra Bhusan v. Sanat Kumar, 40 C. W. N. 124: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 773) the word 'final' being construed only to mean "not subject to appeal."

[56] It was not disputed before us that S. 42, Bengal Municipal Act 1932 did in fact purport to take away the powers of revision of this Court. The question is whether the Provincial legislature which passed the Bengal Municipal Act 1932 could do so, even with the sanction of the Governor General under S. 80A (8), Government of India Act, 1915.

[57] The powers of the Provincial Legislature in 1932 are to be found in S. 80A, Government of India Act. which was inserted by Part I of Sch. II, Government of India Act 1919 (9 & 10 Geo. V, Cap. 101). The relevant portion of S. 80A is as follows:

(1) The local Legislature of any province has power, subject to the provisions of this Act, to make laws for the peace and good government of the territories for the time being constituting that province.

(2) The local Legislature of any province may, subject to the provisions of the sub-section next following, repeal or alter as to that province any law made either before or after the commencement of the Act by any, authority in British India other than the local legislature. ,

- (3) The local Legislature of any province may not without the previous sanction of the Governor General make or take into consideration any law
 - (a) to (d) -omitted.

(e) regulating any central subject, or

(f) regulating any provincial subject which has been declared by rules under this Act to be either in whole or in part subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature in respect of any matter to which such declaration applies, or

(g) oralited,

(h) altering or repealing the provisions of any law which having been made before the commencement of the Government of India Act, 1919, by any authority in British India other than that local legislature, is declared by rules under this Act to be a law which cannot be repealed or altered by the local legislature without previous sanction, or

(i) and proviso omitted,

- (4) The local legislature of any province has no power to make any law affecting any Act of Parliament.
- [58] Section 45A, Government of India Act, 1915 which was also inserted by Part I of Sch. II, Government of India Act 1919 reads as follows:

(1) Provision may be made by rules under this Act:

(a) For the classification of subjects, in relation to the functions of Government in central and provincial subjects, for the purpose of distinguishing the functions of local Governments and local legislature, from the function of the Governor-General in Council and the Indian Legislature.

(b) (c) (d) & (2) (3) -omitted.

- (4) The expressions 'central subjects' and 'provincial subjects' as used in this Act mean subjects so classified under the rules,
- [69] The rules referred to in S. 80A (3), (f) (h) and framed under SS. 45A and 129A are known as Devolution Rules. The material Devolution Rules may be now referred to.

Rule (3) classification of subjects as Central or Provincial as per lists set out in Schedule I.

Schedule I, Part I -Central subjects

(41) Legislation in regard to any provincial subject; in so far as such subject is in Part II of this Schedule stated to be subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature and any power relating to such subject reserved by legislation to the Governor-General-in-Council,

Part II —Provincial subjects, (1) Local Self-Government, etc.

- (17) Administration of Justice including constitution, power, maintenance, and organisation of Courts of Civil and Criminal jurisdiction within the Province, subject to legislation by the Indian Legislature as regards High Courts, Chief Court and Courts of the Judicial Commissioners and any Courts of Criminal jurisdiction
- [60] As the Devolution Rules were passed in accordance with S. 129A, their validity is not open to question Section 80A is so worded as to lead to the conclusion that the general powers of legislation within a province conferred on the local legislature by sub-s. (1) is subject to the restrictions in sub-s. (2) which in its turn is subject to sub-s. (8) and finally by sub-s. (4). Section 80A (3) ols. (e), (f) and (g) use the word

"regulate" while cl. (h) uses the word "repeal". The word "regulate" is, therefore, used in the restricted sense of "control by legislation", see Punyendra Narain v. Jogendra Narain, 64 C. L. J. 212: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 593). Rule 80A (3) (f) (h), and Item 41 Part I Sch. A and Item 17, Part II, Sch. A (which are complementary to each other) when applied to a provincial subject (e. g. Municipality) mean that the local legislature is authorised to legislate in regard to jurisdiction of Courts set up by it even though it may affect the jurisdiction, power and authority of the High Court not vested in it by a previous Act of Parliament.

[61] This is substantially the view taken by Lort Williams, Nasim Ali and R. C. Mitter JJ., in Nar Sing Das v. Chogemull, 48 C. W. N. 613: (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Cal. 435 F B), respectively at pages 623, 627, 634-635.

[62] The learned Senior Government Pleader contended that the effect of S. 84, Government of India Act 1915 was not considered by the Special Bench and submitted that S. 84 (1) (a) and (2) had the effect of validating a provincial legislation even if it affected a parliamentary statute. In my opinion, this does not follow from the sub-section referred to. These sub-sections merely refer to encroachments made upon a central subject or a reserved subject or on the royal prerogative as distinct from an Act of Parliament.

[63] It follows from the above discussion that S. 115 of the Code which is an Act of the Indian Legislature, could have been infringed upon by the Provincial legislature viz., Ss. 39B and 43, Bengal Municipal Act. The latter Act could not, however, affect the power of the High Court under S. 107, Government of India Act. This power could be exercised in spite of Ss. 39B and 43, Bengal Municipal Act. We have next to consider whether the effect of the above conclusion is to render 6s. 89B and 48 ultra vires and wholly void or to make them void to the extent of the repugnancy. That the latter is the true effect of the repugnancy follows from the following provision in S. 84, Government of India Act 1915 which was inserted by S 2 (2), Government of India Amendment Act 1916 (6 & 7 Geo. V CBD. 37).

"A law made by any authority in British India and repugnant to any provision of this or any other Act of Parliament shall, to the extent of that repugnancy but not otherwise, be void."

[64] The whole of the Government of India Act, 1915 (including S. 107) was repealed by S. 321, Government of India Act, 1936. The latter Act, however, contains a similar section viz. S. 224. It differs from the old S. 107 in some respects. The power to transfer suits and appeals to the High Court as contained in S. 107 (b) has been deleted and a new sub-section viz. S. 224 (2) has been added. The new sub-section reads:

"Nothing in this section shall be construed as giving to a High Court any jurisdiction to question any judgment of any inferior Court which is not otherwise subject to appeal or revision."

The marginal note to S. 224 is "administrative functions of High Courts." This has been substituted for "powers of High Court with respect to Subordinate Courts" which occurred in the old S. 107. These changes show that the section is confined to the administrative functions of High Courts and does not give the High Courts any right of judicial interference.

[65] This view is supported by the decisions In re Adiraju Somanna, A. I. R. (25) 1998 Mad. 634: (I. L. R. (1938) Mad. 988), Amar Singh v. Secretary of State, A. I. R. (25) 1938 Lab. 442: (178 I. C. 292), Dattatraya v Registrar Cooperative Society, C. P. & Berar, Nagpur, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Nag. 282: (I. L. R. (1941) Nag. 397), Bhutnath v. Dasarathi Das, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Pat. 544: (42 Cr. L. J. 546), Muljee Sicka & Co. v. Municipal Commissioner, Bombay, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Bom. 471: (187 I. C. 8), Pashupati Bhartiv. Secretary of State, A. I. R. (25) 1938 F. C. 1 at p. 3 (I. L. R. (1989) Kar. F.O. 1).

[66] In a recent decision, Kavasji Pestonji v. Rustomji Sorabji, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Bom. 42: (50 Bom. L. R. 450), Chagla C. J. and Tendolkar J. held that the prohibition under sub-s. (2) of S. 224 only refers to those judgments of an inferior Court which are not otherwise subject to appeal or revision to the High Court, and that the High Court has still the power of judicial interference in respect of judgments not otherwise subject to appeal or revision. With great respect to the learned Judges, I am of opinion that the above view is based on a misinterpretation of sub-s. (2). Sub-section (2) was intended to provide against a possible argument that the High Court's power to exercise its power of superintendence in appeal or revision conferred otherwise than under the old S. 107, had been taken away by the new S. 224. In my opinion the Legislature did not, by a negative provision in 8. 224 (2), intend to confer a general power of judicial superintendence in cases not otherwise subject to appeal or revision. The effect of S. 224 of the Act is to take away that power of judicial interference with decisions of Subordinate Courts which was vested in the High Courts under S. 107, Government of India Act, 1915.

[67] From what I have said already, after the enactment of the Government of India Act, 1935, the only powers of revision which were vested in the High Courts, were to be found in B. 224 of the Act of 1935 and S. 115 of the Code. See Pashupati Bharati v. Secretary of State, A. I. R. (25) 1938 F. C. 1 at p. 3: (I. L. R. (1939), Kar. F. C. 1). I have alredy held that S. 224 of the Act of 1935 did not confer on the High Court power of revision in judicial matters. In regard to such matters, S. 115 of the Code was thus the only provision which gave the High Court powers of revision. The repugnancy, therefore, did not exist at the time when the petition for revision, was filed in this Court in 1948. Section 43, Bengal Municipal Act, 1932 is, therefore, of full validity now and bars the powers! of this Court to interfere with the order complained of, under S. 115, Civil P. C., 1908.

[68] Mr. Pareshnath Mukherji sought to wriggle out of the position by submitting that 8. 228, Government of India Act, 1935, has preserved the old powers of the High Court conferred by 8. 9. Charter Act and 8. 107, Government of India Act, 1915. This argument is not sustainable because the powers so conferred were taken away as a result of the repeal of the said sections respectively by the Government of India Act, 1915, and the Government of India Act, 1915, and the Government of India Act, 1935. This is also supported by the decision of the Federal Court in Pashupati Bharati v. Secretary of State, A. I. R. (25) 1938 F. O. 1 at p. 3: (I. L. R. (1939) Kar. F. C. 1) already referred to.

[69] The second branch of the contention of Mr. Pareshnath Mukherji is that 8s. 39B and 48, Bengal Municipal Act, 1932 are ultra vires because they affect cl. 13 of the Letters Patent. Clause 13 runs as follows:

"And we do further order, that the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall have power to remove, and to try and determine, as a Court of extraordinary original jurisdiction, any suit being or falling within the jurisdiction of any Court whether within or without the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, subject to its superintendence when the said High Court shall think proper to do so, either on the agreement of the parties to that effect or for purposes of justice, the reasons for so doing being recorded on the proceedings of the said High Court."

Municipal Act constituted the District Judge as an exclusive forum to decide election disputes under the Act and thereby took away the then power of the High Court under the said clause to remove the proceedings to its extraordinary original jurisdiction. It is doubtful whether the proceedings before the District Judge can be regarded as suits within cl. 13 but even if we assume that the proceedings before the District Judge are suits within that clause, S. 43, Bengal Municipal Act, 1932 would be void only to the extent of the repugnancy, for reasons I have already given. Section 43 would still operate to bar the revisional powers of this Court.

[71] For the foregoing reasons I am of opinion that the High Court has no power to interfere in revision with the order complained of. The preliminary objection, therefore, succeeds. In the above view, I express no opinion on the merits of the case. The rule is accordingly discharged with costs. Hearing fee 3 gold mohurs to the opposite party No. 1. Public Safety—West Bengal Security Act (XIX [19] of 1950), S. 21 (1) and (4)—Order under S. 21 (1)—Satisfaction of authority—Nature.

No order can be made under S. 21 (1. unless there is satisfaction of authority that the person is actually doing or is about to do or is likely to do an act falling within S. 2 (9). It is not enough to say that the authority was satisfied that an order of externment is necessary with a view to preventing a person from doing a subversive act. Unless there is first a satisfaction upon the point that the person is doing or is about to do or is likely to do a subversive act an order made with a view to preventing a person from doing a subversive act is not one made under S. 21 (1). and there can be no conviction under S. 21 (4) for disobeying that order.

[Paras 8, 9]

Sudhansu Sekhar Mukherjee and Jagadindra Nath Bhattacharjee-for Petitioner.

Harries C. J. — This is a petition for revieion of an order made by a learned Presidency Magistrate convicting the petitioner under S. 21 (4), West Bengal Sourity Act, 1950 and sentencing him to simple imprisonment for one month and five days.

[2] The petitioner was served with an externment order under S. 21 (1) (a), West Bengal Security Act, 1950 forbidding him to remain within the town of Calcutta. The order was served on him on 5th april 1950 and he was given 24 hours' time to leave the Calcutta area. According to the prosecution the petitioner was found at his residence at 5/1 Kashinath Bose Lane, Calcutta on 7th April 1950 and accordingly it was alleged that he had contravened the order externing him from the city of Calcutta. The order appears to have been signed by the Commissioner of Police and the service of the order was duly proved. The evidence that the petitioner was in Calcutta on 7th April 1950 was accepted and it has not been challenged.

[3] The petitioner filed a written statement in which he stated that he was a firm believer in Gandhian ideals and had striven for communal unity throughout his life and that it was unthinkable that he should take part in any subversive activity. He did admit that he had criticised strongly the inefficiency and corruption of the Relief and Rehabilitation Department of the Government. He further stated that the externment order was arbitrary and mala fide and that as a Satyagrahi he owed it to himself not to submit to the order. In short the petitioner admitted that he had refused to comply with the order.

[4] The question arises whether or not the petitioner's failure to leave Calcutta within 24 hours of the date of this order constituted an offence. The charge was that he had committed an offence under 8. 21 (4), West Bengal Security Act and that sub-section is in these terms:

"If any person contravenes any order made under this section he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years, or with fine or with both."

(5) It will be seen that what is made an offence is a contravention of any order made under the section. If the order contravened is not made under s. 21 then there can be no conviction under S. 21 (4).

[6] Section 21 (1), West Bengal Security Act

"The State Government, if satisfied with respect to any particular person that he is doing or is about to do or is likely to do any subversive act, may, with a view to preventing him from doing such act, make an order—

(a) directing that, except in so far as he may be permitted by the provisions of the order, or by such authority or person as may be specified therein, he shall not be in any such area or place in West Bengal as may be specified in the order.

[7] The order made by the Commissioner of Police is said to have been made under this sub-section. But in my view the order served upon the petitioner cannot be said to be an order made under S. 21 (1) (a), West Bengal Security Act. The order dated 5th April 1950 reads as follows:

"Whereas having considered the materials against the person known as Sri Amrita Lai Chatterji son of Sri Kunja Behari of village Solok, P. S. Wazirpur, district Barisal and of 5/1 Kasinath Bose Lane, Calcutta, I am satisfied that with a view to preventing the said person from doing any subversive act, it is necessary to make the following order:

That the said person shall not remain in any place lying in the jurisdiction of the town of Calcutta as defined in S. 8, Calcutta Police Act, 1866 (Bengal Act IV [4] of 1866) and also its suburbs as defined.....and if he is in any such area at the time of the service of this order, he shall leave the area within 24 hours of the service of the order.

Failure to comply with this order without any lawful excuse would render him liable to prosecution."

[8] Section 21 (1), West Bengal Security Act. 1950 empowers the Government or any person authorised on behalf of Government to make an externment order externing any particular person if the authority making the order is satisfied that such person is doing or is about to do or is likely to do any subversive act. "Subversive act" is defined earlier in the Act in S. 2 (9). Before an order can be made, therefore there must be satisfaction that the person is actually doing or is about to do or is likely to do an act falling within S. 2 (9) of the Act. Unless there is satisfaction on this matter no order can be made. All that the order of 5th April 1950 states is that the authority making the order was satisfied that with a view to preventing the petitioner from doing any subversive act it was necessary to extern him. The order does not state that the authority was satisfied that the petitioner was doing a subsersive act or was about to do a subversive act. Further it does not even say that it was likely that the petitioner would do a subversive act. As I have said, unless there was satisfaction on these matters no order could have been made, and it is not enough to say that the authority was satisfied that an order was necessary with a view to preventing a person from doing a subversive act. There must first be a satisfaction upon the point that the person is doing or is about to do or is likely to do a subversive act. Unless there is satisfaction on that matter an order made with a view to preventing a person from doing a subversive act is not within the section. Unless that was so externment orders could have been served on the most innocent people by merely stating that there was satisfaction that with a view to preventing that person from doing a subversive act it was necessary to extern him. Before an externment order can be made not only must the authority be satisfied that a person should be prevented from doing a subervsive act, but the authority must be satisfied that such person was doing or was about to do or likely to do such an act. If a person is not doing or about or likely to do an act then there is no need to extern him with a view to preventing him from doing an act. It is only persons who are doing or are about to do or are likely to do an act that need be prevented from doing such an act. It appears to me that before an order can come within S. 21 (1) (a), the authority's satisfaction that the person against whom the order is made is doing or is about to do or is likely to do an act must be stated. Without a recital of that satisfaction the order is not in my view in accordance with the Act.

[9] As the order is not an order made under S. 21 (1) (a) the petitioner could not be convicted for not obeying that order under sub. s. (4) of that section. As I have already pointed out before there can be a conviction it must be shown that the order is one made under the Act.

[10] A point was raised before the learned Presidency Magistrate on S. 36 (1) of the Act which provides that no order made in exercise of any power conferred by or under this Act shall purport and effect of this sub-section because I have held that the order made in this case was not made in exercise of any power conferred by or under the Act and, therefore, S. 36 (1) can have no application whatever be the true meaning of that section. As the point does not arise I prefer at this stage to express no opinion upon the validity or the meaning of this sub-section. Further I prefer to express no opinion at present on the validity or otherwise of the other sections of this Act.

[12] For the reasons which I have given I am satisfied that the petitioner was not guilty of any offence and, therefore, his conviction must be set aside. The petition is, therefore, allowed, the conviction and sentence are set aside and the petitioner is acquitted. The petitioner need not surrender to his bail and his bail bond is discharged.

[13] The Rule is accordingly made absolute.

[4] We may quote S. 9A (1):

"No suit or proceeding by a landlord against a tenant in possession of a house for eviction of such tenant therefrom in which any of the grounds specified in ol. (c) of the proviso to sub-para. (1) of Para. 9 has been taken as a ground for such eviction shall be entertained by any Court, or, where any such suit or proceeding by a landlord is pending in any Court, on 22nd May 1944, no decree or order for the recovery of possession of the house in respect of which such suit or proceeding is pending shall be made by such Court on any of the grounds specified in the said of. (c) unless the landlord has been permitted by the Controller by an order in writing under sub-para. (3) to institute such suit or proceeding or to prosecute the suit or proceeding so pending, as the case may be, and has produced before such Court proof that such permission has been granted."

(5) The important words are "in which any of the grounds specified in cl. (c) of the proviso to sub-para (1) of para 9 has been taken as a ground for such eviction shall be entertained by any Court "

Section 9B contains very similar words with suitable adjustments to refer to the case of default.

[6] In this case then, the suit was one in which both the grounds in cl. (c) of the proviso to sub-para. (1) of Para. 9 were taken as "a ground for eviction" and the ground of default was also taken as 'ground for such eviction.' On the plain reading of the section, the suit could not be entertained.

[7] It is true, there was yet a third ground and it is urged that the section should be interpreted merely to mean that the suit might proceed on that third ground for which no permission was necessary. In the case of Jyotindra Nath v. Sm. Tara Dassi Ghose, (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Cal. 213), where the facts were similar to those in the present case, I accepted this letter contention. But I am clearly of opinion that on that occasion there was an error, and I overlooked the precise and clear wording of S. 9A. My sympathies are with the plaintiff who has wasted years in this litigation, but I find, on considering the exact wording of the section, that quite impossible it is to say that another interpretation can be given to the words used than Ithat if a suit is brought on several grounds and one of the grounds is "a ground" which requires, the permission of the Controller, then the whole suit cannot be entertained. Had the provisions of the section been followed in the first place, all the troubles of the plaintiff would have been avoided But the mere fact that this was not done cannot make us now give an interpretation to the section which it cannot possibly bear.

[8] In the case cited I agreed with the view expressed in the case of Tarini Gupta v. Manmatha Nath, 53 C.W.N. 855: (A.I.R. (36) 1949 Cal. 674). The fact that the case, as it were, survived and was contested and dealt with under first the Ordinance and then later the Act of 1948 cannot get over the initial defect that at the time it was filed it could not be entertained. Subsequent enactments could not have the effect of curing this initial defect. That view I still think is correct.

[9] The result is that the Rule must be made absolute and the plaint in the suit will be returned under O. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C. I make no order as to costs.

Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 1 - Contempt of Court, what amounts to Where after the trying Magistrate had rejected an application under S. 495, Criminal P. O. and directed prosecution to be continued by Court Inspector, the Judicial Secretary of the State Government, instead of instructing the Court Inspector to apply under S. 494 for leave to withdraw from the prosecution, wrote a letter to the Addl. District Magistrate telling him to order the Court Inspector to retire and to inform the trying Magistrate accordingly, the letter tends to interfere with the due course of justice and amounts to contempt of Court. for Opposite Party. Harries C. J. - Notice was given to the opposite party who is the Judicial Secretary and Legal Remembrancer of the Government of the State of West Bengal to show cause why he should not be found guilty of contempt of Court and punished. This Court had been moved to issue such a Rule on the ground that the Judicial Secretary and Legal Remembrancer in his official capacity had written a letter dated 7th July 1950, to the Additional District Magistrate of 24 Parganas which, it was said, was a deliberate attempt to interfere with the due course of justice. The learned Advocate-General has appeared on behalf of the opposite party and Mr. A. K. Basu has appeared on behalf of the petitioners who moved the Court.

Gorak Singh have been charged with the offence of murder. It is said that they murdered one Subodh Kumar Sarkar. It seems that there was a prolonged enquiry into the causes of the death of this man, Subodh Kumar Sarkar and at first the authorities declined to take cognizance of a complaint made by the deceased man's widow. Later, apparently cognizance was taken and the matter came before the Sub-Divisional Officer, Alipore, in his judicial capacity to conduct the preliminary enquiry.

[9] It seems that the complainant, the widow of the deceased man, was apprehensive that the usual prosecuting authorities would not prosecute this case with vigour and an application was made on her behalf to the Court under S. 495, Criminal P. C., for permission for the prosecution to be carried on by herself through an advocate. The learned Sub-Divisional Officer considered this application on its merits and rejected it. He directed that the prosecution should be continued by the Court Inspector, who is of course the person who normally carries on prosecution in respect of serious offence on behalf of the State.

[4] It appears that the complainant, the widow of the deceased man, was diseatisfied with this order and submitted a representation to Government. I should have thought that the Government would have realised that they could take no action because there was a judicial order made by the Sub-Divisional Officer and until that order was varied or reversed by a superior criminal Court the order would have to be carried out. The Judicial Secretary and Legal Remembrancer however took action as a result of this representation made by the widow and on 7th July he wrote the following letter to Shri Manindra Kumar Sen, Additional District Magistrate, Alipore, who was of course the immediate superior of the Sub-Divisional Officer who was conducting the judicial enquiry in respect of this murder charge. The letter which the Judicial Secretary wrote is the subject-matter of this petition and it will be convenient to set out the letter in its entirety. It reads as follows : "Dear Sj. Sen,

In the texmaco Firing Case against the Manager Ramlal Rajghoria and the Durwan Gorakh Singh pending before the S.D.O., Alipore, the complainant has submitted a representation against the order of the S.D.O. directing a public prosecutor or a Court Inspector to take charge of the case. As the Government are not at present interested in the prosecution and the prosecution is being carried at the instance of a private party. Government desire that no Public Prosecutor or Court Inspector should appear at this stage and that if one has already appeared under the order of the S.D.O. he should be directed to retire. I am directed to request you that the S.D.O. and the Public Prosecutor or Court Inspector, if any appearing in the case, may be informed accordingly."

That is in these terms; "Seen. Show Court Inspector at once and bring it back to me."
There is a further endorsement: "Seen" which is signed by the Court Inspector.

[6] In the petition upon which this Rule was issued, it was suggested that this letter amounted to a contempt of Court because it interfered or tended to interfere with the due course of or the administration of justice. It was suggested that by this letter the Sub-Divisional Officer was instructed by the opposite party to take a course contrary to that ordered by him earlier in a.

judgment which he had delivered.

[7] As I have said the letter was not addressed to the Sub-Divisional Officer who was hearing the case, but to the Additional District Magistrate. The Judicial Secretary could of course express his views to the Additional District Magistrate without committing contempt. of Court, but unfortunately the Additional District Magistrate to whom the letter was addressed was directed to inform the Sub-Divisional Officer of the views of Government and the only rea-on for asking the Additional District Magistrate to inform the Sub Divisional Officer was to warn him that Government were not prosecuting and that the Court Inspector should therefore not be asked to conduct the prosecution and be permitted to withdraw or retire.

[8] Prosecution for serious offences are normally carried on by officers of the State, but the Magistrate conducting an enquiry may grant permission to some other party to conduct the prosecution. The matter is dealt with in 8. 495. Oriminal P. C. which is in these terms:

"(1) Any Magistrate inquiring into or trying any case may permit the prosecution to be conducted by any person other than an officer of police below the rank to be prescribed by the State Government in this behalf but no person, other than the Advocate General, Standing Counsel, Government Solicitor, Public Prosecutor or other officer generally or specially empowered by the State Government in this behalf, shall be entitled to do so without such permission.

(2) Any such officer shall have the like power of withdrawing from the prosecution as is provided by 8. 494, and the provisions of that section shall apply to any withdrawal by such officer.

(3) Any person conducting the prosecution may do

(4) Any officer of police shall not be permitted toconduct the prosecution if he has taken any part in the investigation into the offence with respect to which the accused is being prosecuted,"

[9] As I have said earlier, the deceased man's widow upon whose complaint the enquiry proosedings were based applied under this section for permission to conduct the prosecution. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate considered that application on its merits and for reasons, which I need not now discuss, rejected he application. He further directed the Court Inspector who is normally placed in charge of prosecutions to appear on behalf of the prosecution and to conduct the case. It was an order made by the Sub-Divisional Officer in his judicial capacity and that being so, it was an order that could only be challenged by proceeding by way of revision. In fact a petition for revision of this order has already been filed in this Court.

[10] It seems quite clear that this order direcing the Court Inspector to conduct the prosecution was not viewed with favour by the Government and therefore the Judicial Secretary wrote the letter complained of.

[11] There can be no doubt that the State Government have control over their officers who prosecute offences and the Judicial Secretary could undoubtedly have instructed the Court Inspector to apply to withdraw from these proceedings. He could not direct the Court Inspector to withdraw because of the provisions of S. 494, Criminal P. C. That section is in these terms:

"Any public prosecutor may, with the consent of the Court, in cases tried by jury before the return of the verdict, and in other cases before the judgment is prononneed, withdraw from the prosecution of any person either generally or in respect of any one or more of the offences for which he is tried; and upon such withdrawal,

(a) if it is made before a charge has been framed, the accused shall be discharged in respect of such offence or offences;

(b) if it is made after a charge has been framed, or when under this Code no charge is required, he shall be acquitted in respect of such offence or offences."

(12) It will be remembered that sub-s (2) of 8. 495 makes the provisions of 8. 494 applicable to cases falling within 8, 495. The Court Inspector was directed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under 8. 495 to appear for and conduct the prosecution. That being so, he could only retire from the case by obtaining the consent or leave of the Court under S. 494 of the Code.

[13] The Judicial Secretary could, as I have said, have instructed the Court Inspector to apply for leave to withdraw or retire. But what he did was to tell the Additional District Magistrate to order the Court Inspector to retire and to inform the Sub-Divisional Officer accordingly. In other words, the Additional District Magistrate was told to inform the Sub-Divisional Officer that in the view of the State Government the Court Inspector should withdraw from the case. In effect it was an intimation to the Sub-Divisional Officer that he should permit the Court Inspector to withdraw as the State Government did not wish to be concerned in the prosecution or in the words of the Judicial Secretary the Government were not at that moment interested in the prosecution.

[14] In my view, this letter tended to interfere with the due course of justice and would undoubtedly have interfered with the due course of justice unless steps had been taken to obtain this Rule. The letter had been forwarded by the Additional District Magistrate to the Sub-Divisional Officer for compliance and I have not the slightest doubt that the Judicial Sccretary intended that this letter should be forwarded immediately for compliance. In other words, the Judicial Secretary intended that the Sub-Divisional Officer should at the instance of Government permit the Court Inspector to withdraw or retire from the case and it would require a very strong Sub-Divisional Officer to act contrary to the suggestions in that letter. It would be extremely difficult for the Sub-Divisional Officer to refuse to allow the Court Inspector to withdraw from the case once he had seen this letter which was sent to the Additional District Magistrate and which undoubtedly the Sub-Divisional Officer was intended to see. To tell the Sub-Divisional Officer that he, must allow the Court Inspector to withdraw or retire from the case is in my judgment a serious interference with the due course of justice. An application could have been made under S. 494, Oriminal P. C., for permission to retire and the Sub Divisional Officer would have had to consider such an application on its merits. Had such an application been made, as it would undoubtedly have been made by the Court Inspector, after this letter was written the Sub-Divisional Officer would have had no alternative but to accede to that request. Section 494, Oriminal P. C., contemplates a Magistrate considering such an application on its merits. But an attempt was undoubtedly made in this case to influence the Sub-Divisional Officer before the application was made to him. In my judgment that is a serious contempt of Court as the letter undoubtedly tended seriously to interfere with the due course of justice. It was for the Sub Divisional Officer and for the Sub-Divsional Officer only to decide whether he should permit the Court Inspector whom he had directed to appear to withdraw from the case. The matter was a judicial matter and any attempt to interfere with the learned Magie. trate's independence and discretion is undoubtedly an interference with the due course of justice. That being so, we must hold that addressing this letter with the intention that the recipient should show it to the Sub-Divi. sional Officer amounted to contempt of Court and, accordingly, I would hold the opposite party guilty of contempt of Court.

[15] The Judicial Secretary and Legal Remembrancer of the State Government has filed an affidavit in which he admits that the deceased man's widow had represented to him that the prosecution of the petitioners would not be conducted properly by the State. Having regard to that view, the Judicial Secretary says that he was of opinion that as the prosecution had been started by a private party it should have been left to that party to conduct the prosecution and the letter now complained of was written to give effect to that intention. In short, the Judicial Secretary frankly admits that he intended to influence the Sub-Divisional Officer to permit the widow to carry on this prosecution contrary to the Judicial order already made by the Sub-Divisional Officer The Judicial Secretary then goes on to say that he thought the order of the Sub. Divisional Officer appointing a Public Prosecutor for the case was purely an executive order. But surely that is a grave mistake. The Sub-Divisional Officer had made that order not in his capacity as an executive Magistrate, but in his capacity as a judicial officer conducting a preliminary enquiry required by the Code in a murder case. Judicial Officers sitting in Court do not normally make executive orders. An order such as this, I think, was clearly an order made by the Magistrate in his judicial capacity and if the Judicial Secretary or the State Government had any complaint to make, they could have brought that order to the notice of this Court by way of revision.

[16] The Judicial Secretary then says that if this Court thinks the letter was not a proper one, he was prepared to withdraw it and express his regret for having written it. There is no apology in the affidavit, but the learned Advocate-General who has appeared on behalf of the opposite party has tendered an apology on his behalf. It is not a question whether or not the Judicial Secretary is prepared to withdraw this letter, if we think that it is a letter that should not have been written. The letter should never have been written and this is a case where, I think, a franker apology should have been made in the affidavit. However, a frank and full apology was made by the Advocate-General on behalf of the Judicial Secretary.

[17] I do not think that the Judicial Secretary intended to do anything more than to give effect to the representation which the deceased man's widow had made to him. I do not think that he ever intended to stifle this prosecution because if I had come to that conclusion I should have taken a very serious view of the matter and a far more serious view than I take of it now. What the Judicial Secretary intended was that the widow should be permitted to conduct the prosecution through an advocate as she felt that justice would not be done to the case if the prosecution remained in the hands of the officers of the State. I can well understand that point of view, but unfortunately the Judicial Secretary took a course which cannot be justified. As there was no motive to stifle this prosecution, we can take a far less serious view of the offence. Having regard to the attitude taken by the Judicial Secretary in frankly confessing that he was at fault, I think the ends of justice would be met by finding the opposite party guilty of contempt of Court and directing that he pay the costs of these proceedings, which we assess at Rs. 200.

[18] Let the affidavit filed in Court to day be kept on the record.

(b) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 12 -Liability to indemnify -Onus of proof on contractor.

Where compensation is claimed by a workman against the principal instead of against the contractor, his immediate employer, it is not for the contractor to prove that the work which he contracted to do was not ordinarily the kind of work performed by the principal. The onus rests in the first place upon the workman to prove that the work done by the contractor under the contract was work which ordinarily formed the whole or part of the principal's business and on establishing that fact, a right of indemnity would arise.

Anno. Workmen's Comp. Act, S. 12 N. 3.

Jitendra Nath Ghose-for Appellant. Phanindra Kumar Sanyal and Amiya Bikash Dutt-for Respondents.

Harries C. J .- This is an appeal by a contractor who was made liable to indemnify the respondent No. 1 who had been made liable to pay compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act.

Baksh, a Painter Mistri, sustained injury as the result of an accidental fall from scaffolding, whilst he was painting a factory shed which formed part of the premises occupied by respondent No. 1 as their place of business. It appears that the workman's left knee was injured and an operation became necessary and some bones or pieces of bone were extracted. There was evidence that the incapacity which resulted from this accident amounted to fifty per cent.

[3] Ezad Baksh was employed as a painter by the appellant who was opposite party No. 2. That seems to be clear. He however did not claim compensation against his immediate employer, but claimed it against the National Sheet and Metal Works Ltd., opposite party No. 1 who had employed opposite party No. 2 as a contractor to do the painting work to their factory shed.

[4] It seems to have been conceded that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment and therefore the applicant was entitled to compensation which was assessed at Rs. 1,470 and no point has been taken as to the correctness of this amount.

(5) The only question which was agitated in the Court below was whether or not the contractor, opposite party No. 2, was liable to indemnify opposite party No. 1, whose shed was being painted.

[6] The Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation held that the case came within S. 12 (2), Workmen's Compensation Act and that the appellant, opposite party No. 9, was liable to indemnify opposite party No. 1, the respondent National Sheet and Metal Works Ltd.

[7] The right of indemnity arises under subs.
 (2) of S. 12, if the case falls within sub-s. (1) of S. 12. That sub-section is in these terms:

"Where any person (hereinafter in this section referred to as the principal) in the course of or for the purposes of his trade or business contracts with any other person (hereinafter in this section referred to as the contractor) for the execution by or under the contractor of the whole or any part of any work which is ordinarily part of the trade of business of the principal, the principal shall be liable to pay to any Workman employed in the execution of the work any compensation which he would have been liable to pay if that Workman had been immediately employed by him and where compensation is claimed from the principal, this Act shall apply as if references to the principal were substituted for references to the employer except that the amount of compensation shall be calculated with reference to the wages of the Workman under the employer by whom he is immediately employed."

(8) It will be seen that this sub-section gives the workman in certain circumstances a right to recover compensation not from his immediate employer but from a person who had employed the workman's employer to carry out certain work. Normally, a workman can only recover compensation from his employer, but this subsection is an exception and gives the workman a right to proceed against the person who has entered into a contract with the workman's immediate employer by which the latter was to do certain work. If the workman has a right to recover from the person who has employed the workman's employer to do certain work then sub-s. (2) comes into play and the person who is known as the principal who has employed the contractor can recover from the contractor by way of indemnity. The question of indemnify. ing however only arises if the case falls within sub.s. (1).

[9] To bring the case within sub-s. (1) it must be shown that the person known as the principal has in the course of or for the purposes of his trade or business contracted with another person for the execution by the contractor of certain work and further that the work which the contractor has undertaken to perform is work which is ordinarily part of the trade or business of the principal. In other words, the section contemplates a person subcontracting for work which he himself normally does and which is part of his business. For example, if A engages a contractor B to paint his house and B enters into a contract with o by which the latter is to do the work for B, a workman of c who is injured can recover from B as the case clearly falls within the section because B had in the course and for the purpose of his business entered into a contract with o by which o was to perform work which ordinarily formed part of the work or trade or business carried on by B. However, if the subjest-matter of the contract is not work ordinarily or normally carried on by the principal then 9. 12 can have no application at all.

[10] An example of a case which does not fall within sub-s. (1) of S. 12 is the case of Rabia v. Agent, G I. P. Rly., 53 Bom. 203: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Bom. 179). In that case the G. I. P. Railway entered into a contract with a company under which the latter was to construct a transmission line to carry electric power to various sub-stations on the railway. The deceased was employed by the contractors as a fitter whose work was to assist in the erection of steel towers to carry the overhead cable. These towers were not erected on the railway track, but on land adjacent thereto. While carrying materials from the Store near a Station to the site of the work he was knocked down by a train and killed. The mother as a dependant of the deceased applied for compensation from the G. I. P. Railway under S. 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Act. The Commissioner referred the matter to the High Court under S. 27 of the Act. A Bench of the High Court beld that the setting up of an overhead electric cable for the purpose of transmitting electrical power to the railway was not ordinarily part of the trade or business of the principal, namely, the G. I. P. Railway.

[11] It is to be observed that the G. I. P. Railway were actually engaged in carrying out this work and had employed contractors to effect that purpose. Nevertheless, the Court held that the G. I. P. Railway was not liable because the work which the contractors had contracted to do was not work which ordinarily was part of the trade or business of the railway. The Bench pointed out that the trade or business of the railway consists in carrying persons and goods and that erecting power stations or transmission lines is not ordinarily a part of their business and therefore where they had contracted with another to do that work, the workman working under the contractor could not recover compensation from the railway.

is that if a person substitutes another for himself to do that which is his own business he ought not to escape the liability which would have been imposed upon him if he had done it himself towards the workman employed in the business. On the other hand, where a person enters into a contract with another by which that other does work which ordinarily forms no part of the principal's business then there is no reason at all why the principal should be made liable for compensation for an accident received by a workman in the contractor's employment.

[13] In the present case, the workman offered no evidence at all as to the nature of the work of the National Sheet and Metal Works Ltd. It was not suggested that painting work ordinarily formed the whole or part of their business and indeed the name "National Sheet and Meral Works Ltd." does not suggest a company which was engaged ordinarily in painting work Learned advocate for the appellant states that the National Sheet and Metal Works Ltd., make buckets and such like. But there is no evidence as to the precise nature of their employment. It must be remembered that the National Sheet and Metal Works Ltd. applied to the Court to add the appellant as a party and claimed the right of indemnity against the appellant. It was not for the appellant to prove that the work which he contracted to do was not ordinarily Ithe kind of work performed by the National Sheet and Metal Works Ltd. The onus rested in the first place upon the workman to prove that the work done by the appellant under the contract was work which ordinarily formed the whole or part of the National Sheet and Metal Works Ltd's business. That fact having been established, a right of indemnity would arise. But it appears to me that the Court could not possibly hold in this case that S. 12 applied at all.

[14] The Commissioner in his judgment disposes of the point in a somewhat summary manner. He obverves in his judgment as follows:

"Opposite party No. 2 admits that he accepted a contract for painting the factory shed, but at a later stage his pleader files a petition to the effect that the contract was not in the course of or for the purpose of opposite party No. 1's trade or business as laid down in S. 12(1) of the Act."

The learned Commissioner then proceeds:

"This is not only a brain wave after five months of meditation, but a wrong interpretation as well. A factory shed is constructed certainly for the purposes of the owner's business. The contract was clearly as contemplated under S. 12 (1)."

[15] In order to come within S. 12 (1) the workman, as I have stated, must prove two things. Firstly, that the principal in the course of and for the purposes of his trade or business entered into a contract with the contractor and secondly, that the work, the subject-matter of the contract with the contractor, was work which ordinarily formed the whole or part of the trade or business of the principal. The learned Commissioner has only considered whether this contract was made in course of or for the purposes of the principal's trade or business. Quite obviously, it was because making arrangements for painting part of the factory premises is obviously an act in the course of the business of the factory owner. What the learned Commissioner failed to consider was whether the subject-matter of the contract, namely, painting a shed, could be described as ordinarily forming part of the principal's trade or business. There is no suggestion that painting a shed or anything else formed any part of the trade or business of the National Sheet and Metal Works Limited and that being so, the contract which they gave to the appellant to do painting work could not give the workman a right to recover compensation as against the National Sheet and Metal Works Limited That being so, no question could arise of the right to claim an indemnity against the appellant.

and Metal Works Limited, they seem to have assumed that they were liable as principals and claimed an indemnity against the appellant. The Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation finds that the National Sheet and Metal Works

Limited were liable. He states:

"Where the compensation is claimed from the principal and the principal is liable under this session, he shall be entitled to be indemnified by the contractor. In this instance the principal is opposite part No. 1. He is liable to pay Bs. 1470 with costs and pleader's fee to applicant. He is entitled to be indemnified by the contractor, opposite party No. 2."

express finding that the respondents, the National Sheet and Metal Works Limited, were primarily liable and an order was made against the appellant to indemnify them to the extent of Rs. 1470. In my judgment no question of indemnity could ever arise in this case because the case did not fall within S. 12 (1) and therefore no order could be made against the appellant under sub-s. (2) of that section to indemnify any one.

[18] That being so, this appeal must be allowed and the order of the learned Commissioner directing the appellant to indemnify the National Sheet and Metal Works Ltd. is set aside.

[19] Learned Advocate for the National Sheet and Metal Works Limited contended that the Court below was wrong in holding that the National Sheet and Metal Works Limited were liable as principals to the workman. The Commissioner I think was clearly wrong in arriving at the finding he did. But unfortunately for the National Sheet and Metal Works Limited they had not challenged that finding. Indeed they accepted the position that they were liable throughout the proceedings and only claimed that they were entitled to an indemnity. It is quite impossible to interfere with the order for compensation made by the Commissioner against the respondents, the National Sheet and Metal Works Limited. As no appeal was preferred from that order we cannot interfere. However, as I have said the order making the appellant liable to indemnify the National Sheet and Metal Works Ltd. must be set aside as S. 12 has no application whatsoever to the case.

[20] The appeal of S. M. Ghose, the contractor, therefore succeeds and the order relating to indemnity is set aside. The appellant is entitled to the costs of the proceedings as against the respondent, the National Sheet and Metal Works Limited, in this Court and in the Court below. The hearing-fee in this Court is assessed at three gold modurs.

A. C. Sen and B. N. Das Gupta - for Applicant. Dr. S. K. Gupta and J. C. Pal - for Respondent.

Harries C. J. — This is a Reference made by the Appellate Tribunal, Bombay Bench, under S. 66 (1), Income-tax Act stating a case upon the following question:

"Whether in the circumstances of the case and having regard to the fact that the applicant company is 'Resident in British India,' S. 42 has been validly invoked."

pany having its head office at Calcutta and a factory at Okara in British India where cloth was manufactured. The cloth so manufactured was sold by the assessee on a wholesale basis both within and without British India. During the year of account, the assessee had three selling offices in certain Indian States. The goods so d at these centres were sent out from the factory at a profit margin of 9 per cent. on cost.

(3) The Income tax Officer dealing with the assessment for the relevant year came to the conclusion that on the facts which I have set out the provisions of 8. 42, Income tax Act, were applicable and he made an allocation of profits under S. 42 (3) on the basis that 50 per cent. of the profit made on sales effected in Indian States outside British India was attributable to the business operations carried on in British India. (It is to be observed that there is a serious misprint in line 24 at page 1 of the paper-book. "Sales effected outside British India" should read, "Sales effected outside British India.")

(4) The assessee appealed to the Appellate Assistant Commissioner, but the appeal was dismissed and a urther appeal was preferred to the Tribunal. Before the Tribunal it was argued that s. 42 (3). Income tax Act, had no application to the case as that section applied only to "non-residents" Further it was contended that if the section did apply the proportion of profits allocated to the manufacture in India was too great. The Appellate Tribunal, however dismissed the appeal holding that s. 42 (3) had been correctly applied by the Income tax authorities. The Tribunal were asked to state a case on two points. First, whether s. 42, Income tax Act, applied to residents or not, and secondly, that if it did what proportion should have been attributed to operations in India in this case.

[5] The Appellate Tribunal was of opinion that the proportion to be applied to operations in India was a pure question of fact and refused to state a case on that point. The Tribunal, however, was of opinion that the question whether S. 42, Income-tax Act, applied to residents, was an important question of law and therefore stated the question which I have set out.

[6] The only point this Court has to decide is whether S. 42, Income-tax Act, has any application to residents in India and was therefore properly applied in the present case.

[7] Section 42, sub s. (1), is in these terms:

"All income, profits or gains accruing or arising whether directly or indirectly, through or from any business connection in British India, or through or from any property in British India, or through or from any asset or source of income in British India, or through or from any money lent at interest and brought into British India in cash or in kind, shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India, and where the person entitled to the income, profits or gains is no: resident in British India, shall be chargeable to income tax either in his name or in the name of his agent, and in the latter case such agent shall be deemed to be, for all the purposes of this Act, the assesses in respect of such income tax."

(8) Then follow three provisos. The first proviso deals with persons who are not resident in British India, and the second deals with cases where an agent is assessed. The third proviso deals with the amount recoverable.

[9] Sub-s (2) of 8. 42 deals with a case where a person not resident or not ordinarily resident in British India carries on business with a person resident in British India.

[10] Sub.s. (3) of S. 42 is in these terms:

"In the case of a business of which all the operations are not carried out in British India, the profits and gains of the business deemed under this section to accrue or arise in British India shall be only such profits and gains as are reasonably attributable to that part of the operations carried out in British India."

[11] It was urged before the Income tax authorities and the Appellate Tribunal that 8. 42 could not possibly apply to residents of British India and in support of that contention the case of Commissioner of Income tax, Bombay v. Western India Life Insurance Co. Ltd., (1945) 13 I. T. B. 405: (A. I. R. (33) 1946 Bom. 185) was relied upon. This was a decision of a Bench of the Bombay High Court consisting of Kania and Chagla JJ. as they then were. The facts of the case were as follows. The assessee, an insurance company, resident in British India, claimed that under the third proviso to S. 4 (1), Income tax Act, 1922, it was entitled to an exemption of Rs. 4,500 from its foreign income, being interest on securities with a bank in London not brought into British India. The income-tax authorities held that as the incomecould be described as deemed to accrue or ariseto the assessee within British India by reason of S. 42, the income fell under S. 4 (1) (b) (i) and not under S. 4 (1) (b) (ii) and therefore proviso 3 to S 4 (1) did not apply. The Bench however held that S. 42 did not apply to the case, that the income should be considered asfalling under S. 4 (1) (b) (ii) and not under B. 4 (1) (b) (i) and that therefore the assessee was entitled to the deduction of Rs. 4,500 under proviso 3 to S. 4 (1).

[12] There can be no doubt that both the learned Judges dealt with the applicability of S. 42 and both came to the conclusion that S. 42 applied only to non-residents.

[13] This decision was upheld on appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Commissioner of Income tax. Bombay v. Western India Life Insurance Co. Ltd., (1949) 17 I.T.R. 125: (A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 97) Dealing with this aspect of the case however Lord Oaksey who delivered the judgment of the Board observed at page 128:

The question which now arises was not argued in the High Court, the judgments of the learned Judges being based upon the construction of S. 42 of the Act which they held only applied to non-residents and had no application to the present case in which the income in question had clearly accrued to the company outside British India. Their Lordships agree with the High Court that S. 42 has no application but express no opinion upon the question whether the section refers only to non-residents."

Council expressed no opinion as to the correctness of the decision in the Commissioner of Income tax v. Western India Life Insurance Co. Ltd. (1945) 13 I. T. B. 405: (A. I. R. (98) 1946. Bom. 185) as to the meaning and ambit of S. 42, nevertheless the matter was decided by the two-learned Judges and their view is entitled to the greatest respect in this Court.

[15] On behalf of the income-tax authorities, Dr. Gupta has contended that this Bombay Bench decision does not lay down good law and he has put forward a number of reasons why we should not follow that decision.

[16] The marginal note of 8. 42, Income tax. Act, still read "Non-residents" after the amendment in 1939 and some weight appears to have been attached to that fact by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court. However, a marginal note is no part of a statute and should not be used to explain the meaning of a section. In the case of Nixon v. Attorney-General (1980) 1 Ch. 566 (99 L. J. Ch. 259), Lord Hanworth M. R. at p 593 deals with this matter in these words:

"One further point was taken upon this Act of 1859, with which it is necessary to deal. The marginal notes of S. 3 refer to 'existing rights' and of S. 12 to 'right.' It was contended that these catch words could be used to explain the meaning of sections against which they appear. For my part, I cannot allow this. As explained by Baggailay L. J. in Attorney-General v. Great Eastern Ry. Co., (1879) 11 Ch. D. 449 at p. 461, marginal notes are not a part of an Act of Parliament. The Houses of Parliament have nothing to do with them and I agree with the learned Lord Justices in that case—Bramwell, James, and Baggailay—that the Courts cannot look at them. Their imperfections, spoken of by Bramwell L. J., are illustrated by the note to S. 9 of this Act."

[17] It appears to me therefore that the marginal note cannot assist the Court in arriving at the true meaning of this section. In any event, S. 12 of Act XXII [22] of 1917 provides that the marginal note to S. 12 should be deleted and the words "Income deemed to accrue or arise in British India" be substituted in place thereof.

[18] However, it is clear that originally part of this section did apply only to non-residents and the opening words of S. 12 before it was amended in 1939 were "In the case of any person residing out of British India." Had those words remained it would have been clear that sub-s. (1) had no application to residents. But by the amendment in 1939 the words "in the case of any person residing out of British India" were eliminated from the statute and new words were substituted. Sub-section (1) now opens with the words:

In the opening part of the sub-section as amended there is now nothing to suggest that the sub-section was intended to apply only to non-residents. Further, it appears to me that in the latter portion of sub-s. (1) there are words which clearly show that the sub-section applies both to residents and non-residents. After dealing with what income, profits or gains shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India, the sub-section then provides "and where the person entitled to the income, profits or gains is not resident in British India," the income, profits or gains shall be chargeable to income tax in a certain manner.

(19) It appears to me that the inclusion of these words, which were added by the amending Act of 1939, makes it clear that the sub-section applies both to residents and non residents and it is applied to them in a different manner. Further, the first proviso I think makes it clear that the sub-section was applicable to both residents and non-residents, because the first proviso deals with the cases of persons entitled to income, profits or gains who were not resident in British India. A proviso to a sub-section or al section is, as a rule in the nature of an exception and I cannot understand the necessity for the wording of this proviso if sub.s. (1) applied only to non-residents. If, on the other hand, sub-s. (1) of S. 42 applied to both residents and non-residents, then the form in which the first proviso is found was necessary where a distinction was to be drawn between the liability of the two classes.

[20] This argument was addressed to the Bombay High Court. But Kania J., was of the view that when sub-s. (1) is read as whole the reasonable construction to give to it was that it applied to non-residents only. Speaking for myself I find it difficult so to construe sub-s. (1) of s. 42. With very great respect to the learned Judge it appears to me that the sub-section as amended in 1939 clearly on the face of it applies to both residents and non-residents.

[21] The matter however does not rest there because sub-s. (2) only applies to persons not resident or not ordinarily resident in British India, but it is to be observed that the subsection opens with those very words:

"Where a person not resident or not ordinarily resident in British India, carries on business with a person resident in British India, and it appears to the incometax officer etc."

There it is clear that the sub section applies only to non-residents and if it was necessary so to make it clear in sub-s. (2) it appears to me that it was equally necessary to make it clear in sub-s. (1) if that sub-section was intended only to apply to non-residents. It seems to me that it was more necessary than ever to make the position clear with regard to sub-s. (1) because words which strictly limited the operation of that sub-section to non-residents had been deleted by the amendment and general words put in statute in the place of them.

[92] Sub-section (3) of S. 12 is in the widest terms and there is nothing whatsoever in that sub-section to suggest that its operation is confined to non-residents. Sub-section (3) merely deals with the case of a business of which all the operations are not carried out in British India and there is nothing to suggest that business must be the business of a non-resident. In fact to hold that sub s. (3) applied only to non-residents if the sub-section stood alone would be actually to do violence to the language of the sub-section. However, the argument is, and that appears to have been the view of the Bombay High Court, that as sub-s (3) is part of a section which deals with non-residents only it must be construed as also dealing with non-residents and not with residents. However, in my view, only one sub-section of S. 42 is confined to non-residents and that is sub-s (2). Sub-sections (1) and (3) in my opinion are so framed that it must be held that they cover both residents and non residents.

[23] Dr. Gupta also pointed out that S. 14
(2) (c), Income-tax Act, made it clear that S. 42 did apply to residents as well as non-residents.
Section 14 (2) (3), Income-tax Act, is as follows:

"(2) The tax shall not be payable by an assessee.

(c) in respect of any income, profits or gains accruing or arising to him within an Indian State, unless such income, profits or gains are received or deemed to be received in or are brought into British India in the previous year by or on behalf of the assessee or are assessable under S. 42."

(c) clearly covers residents and exempts such residents in respect of income, profits or gains accruing or arising to them within an Indian State unless the case falls within certain provisions and one of those provisions is that the income, profits or gains are assessable under S. 42.

[25] It appears to me that S. 14 (2) (c), Income-tax Act, could not have been drafted in the way it has if S. 42 (3) had no application to residents. It appears to me clear from S. 14 (2) (c) that the framers of the Act clearly intended S. 42 (3) to be applicable to residents as well as to non residents.

Judges who decided the Bombay case, I find myself unable to follow that case and I am bound to hold that 8. 42 (3) does apply to residents as well as non-residents and therefore it could be properly applied in this case in assessing the profits of the assessee. This was a case where all the operations of the assessee were not carried out in British India and therefore the profits and gains of the business assessable in British India could be calculated as on such profits and gains as were reasonably attributable to that part of the operations carried on in British India.

[27] That being so, the question submitted to the Court must be answered in the affirmative.

(28) The Commissioner of Income-tax is entitled to his costs of this reference. Certified for two counsel.

[29] Chatterjee J. — Learned advocate for the assessee, Mr. A. C. Sen, has asked us to follow the judgment of Kania and Chagla JJ. in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Western India Life Assurance Co Ltd., (1945) 13 I.T.R. 405: (A.I.R. (33) 1946 Bom. 185). The judgment is an authority for the proposition that S. 42 only applies to non-residents. With great respect I beg to differ.

[30] There are three grounds which compel me to differ from the view taken by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court.

[31] The first point is the history of the section itself. Originally S. 42 referred only to persons residing out of British India, that is, to non-residents, but in 1939 the section was amended. It is significant that sub-s. (1) of S. 42 as it stands starts with the words:

"All income, profits or gains accruing or arising whether directly or indirectly, through or from any business connection in British India etc."

These are comprehensive words which are not confined to non-residents. Kania J. has taken the view that the latter part of that sub-section should be read along with the first part and it should be read as being limited to non-residents. But the latter part of the sub-section itself, namely, the words

"And where the person entitled to the income, profits or gains is not resident in British India" seem to indicate that the former part of the section refers also to persons other than those who are non-residents.

[82] The next point is the first proviso to S. 42 (1) which was inserted in 1939. It starts with the words:

"Provided that where the person entitled to the income, profits or gains is not resident in British India".

These words imply that sub-s. (1) has a more extensive operation than the proviso itself. The effect of a proviso, according to the ordinary rules of construction, is to qualify something already enacted which but for the proviso would be within it: Oraies on Statute Law, 4th Edn. p. 196. A proviso excepts out of the earlier part of a section something which but for it would have been within the enacting part: Halsbury's Laws of England, Halsham Edition, Vol. 31, p. 484; The M. & S. M. Rly. Co. Ltd. v. Bezwada Municipality, 1944-2 M. L. J. 25: (A.I.R. (31) 1944 P. C. 71).

phasize is the wording of S. 14 (2) (c). The last words in the said cl. (c) cannot be consistent with the view that S. 42 is inapplicable to a resident. The effect of S. 14 (2) (c) is that tax shall be payable in respect of income, profits or gains accruing or arising to an assessee within the Indian State when such income, profits or gains (a) are received in British India, or (b) are deemed to be received in British India, or (c) are brought into British India, or (d) are assessable under S. 42. That clearly negatives the view that S. 42 which is in Obap. VB deals with exceptional cases, wholly outside the purview of Chap. III dealing with taxable income and providing for certain exemptions in S. 14.

[31] Mr. Sen concedes that S. 14 is applicable to a resident. Therefore, the only way that a harmonious construction can be put on this statute so as to make S. 14 consistent with S. 42 is to hold that S. 42 is not limited in its application to a non-resident. Otherwise reference to S. 42 would be wholly out of place in S. 14.

[35] With the greatest respect to Kania J., it seems that undue emphasis has been laid on the marginal note in S. 42, "Non-residents". His Lordship pointed out that it should be noted that while amending S. 42 the Legislature had still retained the marginal note "Non-resident" against that section and according to him S. 42 (c) should also be restricted to a non-resident. I should here refer to the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Thakurain Balraj Kunwar v. Jagatpal Singh, 31 I. A. 132: (26 ALL. 893 P. C.). Delivering the judgment of the Board, Lord Macnaughten observed as follows:

"It is well-settled that marginal notes to the sections of an Act of Parliament cannot be referred to for the purpose of construing the Act. The contrary opinion originated in a mistake, and it has been exploded long ago. There seems to be no reason for giving the marginal notes in an Indian statute any greater authority than the marginal notes in an English Act of Parliament."

[36] In any event the marginal note, even if it can be regarded as having been inserted in an Act with the assent or authority of the legislature, cannot control or supersede the plain meaning of the words of a section and are of little aid in the construction of statute.

[37] Sub.s. (3) of S. 42 provides for the apportionment of the profits and gains of a business and the portion deemed to accrue or arise in British India is liable to tax. This sub-section would become inapplicable to residents, if we accept the contention put forward by the assesses. There is no other provision in the Act, so far as we can make out, providing for apportionment of profits in case of a resident whose operations are partly outside British India. I asked Mr. Sen, who has considerable experience in these matters, to point out if there is any provision in the Act under which that relief can be given in such a case to an assessee who is a resident. Mr. Sen could not point to any, and it seems that there is no section providing for such relief. In an appropriate case, S. 42 (8) may be invoked in the case of a resident and the revenue authorities were justified in applying S. 42 (3) in assessing the profits of the assessee in this case where part of its operations was carried on outside British India.

apply to both residents and non-residents. Any other construction would lead to the anomalous results. It is to be observed that S. 4, Income-Tax Act, is expressly made "subject to the provisions of this Act" which include S. 42. It is to be noted, however, that the marginal note to S. 42 has been changed by Act, XXII [22] of 1947. By S. 12 of that Act for the marginal heading "Non-residents" the following has been substituted—"Income deemed to accrue or arise within British India". It was obviously done to alter the marginal note which was somewhat misleading.

[89] I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the question should be answered in the affirmative and that the respondent should be awarded the costs of this reference.

Judgment.—In this appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs, the particular question which arises for decision is whether under O. 21. R 100, Civil P. C., dispossession referred to therein must be in course of the execution proceedings or may be a subsequent event.

[2] The plaintiffs brought the present suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration of their eight annas share in a particular sub-tenure held by them under the Patnidar. The plaintiffs' predecessor Gostha and pro forma defendant 5 Kedar after purchasing the eight annas share in the Patni sued Satish Adhikary who was then the owner of the sub-tenure in suit. That suit was decreed and in execution of this decree Gostha and Kedar became the auction-purchasers, the sale having taken place on 15th February 1924, and possession was delivered on 24th May 1924 The plaintiffs claimed in the present proceedings as the heirs of Gostha Kedar who was the owner of the remaining eight annas share of the sub-tenure had borrowed money from defendant 3 Narendra and the latter obtained a decree for the realisation of the said amount. Defendant 3 purchased the entire sub-tenure on 16th August 1935 on the allegation that the entire sub-tenure belonged to Kedar alone Defendant 3 obtained delivery of possession under O. 21, R. 95, Civil P. C., on 19th May 1936. Six months later the plaintiffs' predecessor Gostha filed an application under 0.21, R. 100 of the Code in respect of this half share in the sub-tenure which belonged to him on the allegation that he had been dispossessed by defendant 3 on 6th November 1936, that is, long after the possession is alleged to have been delivered to defendant 3 in execution of the decree That application was finally disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge holding, (1) that on the allegation made by the petitioner that dispossession by the auction-purchaser was subsequent to the delivery of possession in execution of the decree, the provisions of O. 21 R. 100 of the Code were not attracted Accordingly, the application was not maintainable; (2) that there was no reliable evidence to show that dispossession had taken place on 6th November 1936, as alleged by the petitioner and not on 19th May 1936, as evidenced by the writ of delivery of possession; and (3) that the petitioner had failed to show that he was in possession of any portion of the disputed properties on his own account. The application was accordingly dismissed. No suit as contemplated under O. 21, R. 103 of the Code was brought by Gosta or after him by his successorin-interest within one year of 5th April 1937, that is, the date of disposal of the application purporting to have been under O. 21, B. 100 of the Code. The plaintiffs' case is that they are entit. led to bring this separate suit as they did in December 1941, as the application, which had been filed purporting to be under O. 21, R. 100 of the Code, was held to be not maintainable. In the present plaint, however, the date of dispossession as given is 29th Magh 1845 B. S. corres. ponding to 12th February 1939 and neither 19th May 1936, the date of the delivery of possession under O. 21 R. 95 of the Code to the defendant, nor 6th November 1936, as had been alleged in the application filed by Gostha under O. 21, R 100 of the Code. The plaintiffs contend that the present suit is not only maintainable in law but is not barred by limitation, as they have come within 12 years of the date of their dispossession.

- [3] Defendant 3, who was the purchaser in the money execution case in 1935 and had obtained delivery of possession in May 1936, conveyed the property to defendant 2. Defendant 1 is the wife of defendant 2. During the pendency of the suit, the zemindar Halwashiya had sued defendant 1 and the heirs of defendant 3 for rent of the subtenure without impleading the plaintiffs as parties and in execution of the decree the entire sub-tenure was purchased by defendant 4, Surendra on 18th August 1943. The plaintiffs alleged that they continued to be in possession until 12th February 1939, when the defendant dispossessed them.
- [4] The principal defence is that the suit is barred by limitation. The learned Munsif over-ruled the objection raised by the defendant and decreed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held otherwise and the suit was dismissed. Hence this second appeal on behalf of the plaintiffs.
- [5] The first question which arises for decision is whether an application made by Gostha in 1936 having been dismissed and no suit having been brought within one year from the date of dismissal, the present suit is barred under Art. 11-A, Limitation Act. On behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants, it is contended that the application which purported to be under O. 21, R. 100 of the Code was not maintainable in law and, therefore, there is no scope for the application under the provisions contained in Art. 11-A, Limitation Act. The ground upon which the application under O. 21, B. 100 of the Code is sought to be avoided is that on Gostha's own showing the alleged dispossession was not in course of the execution proceedings but much later thereafter. Under R. 100 no application is maintainable unless dispossession takes place as a direct result of the execution proceedings.
- [6] Mr. Janah appearing on behalf of the defendant, on the other hand, contends that under R. 100 there is no reference to dispossession being limited to one in course of the execution proceedings. The terms as contained in R. 100 are very general and the application of the rule ought not to be limited by practically introducing words which are not to be found there. If the provisions contained in R. 100 were to be interpreted as standing by themselves, there is room for argument, as contended for by the defendant. Rule 100, however, cannot stand by itself. Whether the suit is barred by limitation or not has to be decided on Art 11. A, Limitation Act. Acticle 11-A of the Act is in the following terms:

"By a person against whom an order has been made under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, upon an application by the holder of a decree for the possession of immovable property or by the purchaser of such property sold in execution of a decree, complaining of resistance or obstruction to the delivery of possession thereof, or upon an application by any person dispossessed of such property in the delivery of possession thereof to the decree-holder or purchaser, to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property comprised in the order."

[7] As observed by Chatterjee and Pearson JJ. in Nirode Borani Dasi v. Manindra Narayan, 26 C. W. N. 853: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 229), and also in some other decisions, the provisions contained in R 100 of the Code have to be interpreted and taken along with the provisions contained in Art. 11-A. Limitation Act:

"But although the article does not refer to any section, the order must be an order under O 21, R. 103.
That rule expressly refers to Rr. 98, 99 and 101 and these rules provide for investigation into a petition of objection. The right of suit is given by R 103 only when there is any order under R. 98, 99 or 101, and Art. 11 A merely provides for limitation applicable to such suits." (at p. 858).

[8] Without any reference to any decided case on the point if we are to decide the point in issue on the provisions contained in Art. 11-A, Limitation Act read with R. 100 of O. 21 of the Code, I do not think that there can be any doubt that dispossession referred to is one which takes place in course of the execution proceedings. The words "to the delivery of possession thereof" as appearing in Art. 11-A put the matter beyond the shadow of any doubt.

(9) Reference has, however, been made to a decision by Guha J. in the case of Rajendra Kishore v. Asir Ulla, 65 C L. J. 416 : (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 192), where there are observations which support the contention, as urged by the defendant. It appears that in the civil revision case, which was before this Court, Guha J. was satisfied that the Court ought not to interfere in that case even if the decision moved against were erroneous, as there was a more comprehensive remedy open to the petitioner to establish his title to the property as against the person in whose favour the order had been made in a summary proceeding arising out of execution of a decree. The learned Judge, however, had also considered the merits of the case, although the rule might have been discharged on the view as indicated above. The opinion expressed on the merits was mere obiter. It was held that what . was contemplated under O. 21, R. 100 of the Code was a case of dispossession by a decree. holder of a person in possession other than the judgment-debtor and the only question the Court has to consider is whether the disposeession was by a decree-holder or auction-purchaser as such and not whether the dispossession took place during or after the [disposal of any execution case started at the instance of the decree.

holder or auction-purchaser. With great respect, I would differ from the view expressed by Guha J.

[10] In the case of Satya Narain v. Jinsi Sah, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Pat. 553: (117 I. C. 634), a Division Bench of the Patna High Court came to the conclusion that "Article 11 A would only apply if it is established that the plaintiffs are actually dispossessed of the property in course of the delivery of possession."

If there is no allegation that as a matter of fact the plaintiff has been dispossessed in the course of the delivery possession, the application must be thrown out on the ground that the same is not maintainable in law.

[10a] This view finds favour from the observations of Rankin C. J. so far as the particular case is concerned in the case of Kiron Sosi. Dasi v Official Assignee of Calcutta. 36 C.W.N. 965: (A. I R. (20) 1983 Cal. 246). At page 972 it is observed that "The question in this suit is whether an application having been made to Mr. Justice Greaves on 12th April 1923, by Khanna saying that In spite of repeated demands Kiron Soshi was unwilling to give him possession the dismissal of that application means that Khana had one year only within which to bring his suit. In my judgment, that is not so. Khanna's application was not an application within R. 97, the order was not an order within R. 99 and this suit is not within R. 103, there having been no execution proceeding or no order made by the Court at any time directing that Khanna should be put into possession of the property on the strength of the sale certificate. The application may have been dismissed for this very reason."

In the case now before me white dealing with the application filed by Gostha the learned Subordinate Judge had, as a matter of fact, come to the conclusion that that application was not maintainable in law, as the dispossession alleged was not in course of execution but subsequent to the alleged delivery of possession in course of the execution case. This is a much stronger one on the facts than the one which was before Rankin C. J. referred to above.

[11] Reference may in this connection be made to the case of Biswesswar Banerjee v. Naba Ku. mar, 70 C. L. J. 111: (a. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 16) In that case the plaintiff had brought a suit for recovery of possession of the land beyond one year of the date of the order under R. 100 of O. 21 of the Code. The defendant pleaded that the suit was barred under Art. 11A, Limitation Act. Henderson J.'s view was that it was competent for the plaintiff to prove in this suit that there was no dispossession of the predecessor of the defendant and consequently there was no foundation for an order under O. 21, R. 100 If it held that there was no valid order under R. 100, Art. 11-A, Limitation Act will not apply and in this view the suit was held not to be barred by limitation. The decision as above was also made on the view that the finding, which might have been arrived at in a proceeding under O, 21, R. 100, did not, in the circumstances as stated above, operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit. Reference was made to the case of Muthiah Chetti v. Palaniappa Chetti, 55 I. A. 256 A. I. R. (15) 1928 P. C. 139). Although the special facts which gave rise to the observations were different from those which appear in the present case, the general observation and the principle referred to by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee are apposite:

"The point to be considered is:—is the appellant a person against whom an order as just described has been made? The Board is of opinion that the answer is in the negative. By Art. 11, Limitation Act, already quoted, he must be a person against whom an order has been made under the Civil Procedure Code on a claim preferred to, or an objection made to the attachment of, property attached in execution.' The case thus comes to be narrowed down to whether it is a necessity of the order here specified that the property to which a claim is made, or to the attachment of which there is an objection, must be property which had been de facto attached.

It would seem to be so by the words, and by the very nature of the case, for the only property referred to is 'property attached in execution'. Unless there has been an attachment, there can be no order made on an objection lodged to it, nor can any claim be made to the property so attached; and without such an order, there is no terminus a quo for the running of limitation, and with this the limitation itself is non-existent. The first head of Art. 11, in the opinion of their Lordships, can on its words mean nothing else."

As observed by the Judicial Committee the special point in issue in that case was that although there had been an order for attachment, that order had not been given effect to. There was no dispossession therefore as there had been no attachment in execution. In the case of dispossession also, it must be in course of execution.

[12] On a reading of the provisions contained in B. 100 of O 21 of the Code and Art. 11-A, Limitation Act the only conclusion to which one may arrive at is that dispossesion must be in course of execution. But I may as well indicate that the wider interpretation attempted to be put on R. 100 taken by itself by the learned advocate for the defendant cannot be supported if reference is made to the position occupied as also its context in which it appears. Order 21 of the Code deals with execution of decrees and orders. The rules appearing under this Order are sub-divided under different subheadings. All the different sub-headings deal with one or different possible stages and the adverse circumstances which may occur in course of execution. After making provisions in Rr. 41 to 57 for attachment of property Rr. 58 to 63A of the Code are introduced to regulate investigation of claims and objections. The next three sub-headings deal either with sale jointly or with sale of movable or immovable properties. These cover Rr. 64 to 96. Rules 97 to 103 are the concluding rules of the Order under the sub. heading "Resistance to delivery of possession to decree-holder or purchaser." Bearing in mind that the proceedings contemplated under these ru'es are to be initiated in and to be dealt with by the executing Court, we may consider the implication of the different rules appearing under these sub-headings. Rules 97 to 99 unmistakably refer to resistance or obstruction in course of execution. If possession is delivered and there is subsequent dispossession, such subsequent happening would not be interpreted to invest the executing Court with jurisdiction to deal summarily with various questions of conflicting title as will ordinarily arise in such cases. The provisions contained in this order are for the expeditious disposal of the execution proceedings. They do not contemplate to provide for a particular procedure not arising out of execution proceedings but outside the same. From this point of view also I hold that R. 100 cannot be interpreted to be attracted in cases where dispossession is alleged in course of execution but subsequent thereto.

ordinate Judge, while dealing with the application by Gostha purporting to be under R. 100 of O 21, himself pointed out that the application was not maintainable in law. In that view the application was dismissed although there are observations dealing with some of the points touching the merits of the case. If an application is held not to be an application maintainable under R. 100 of O. 21 of the Code, Art. 11-A, Limitation Act, will not be attracted. I therefore hold that the present suit is not barred by limitation

[14] A decision on this point however does not dispose of the whole case. It is open to the parties to adduce evidence in the present case to prove when dispossession took place. If it is found that dispossession had, as a matter of fact, taken place in course of execution, that is, on 19th May 1936, when possession is alleged to have been delivered under O. 21, R. 95 of the Code, in spite of the fact that a contrary allegation is made by the plaintiff, the suit must be dismissed and after the decision of the claim case no suit as contemplated under S. 103 was brought within one year and it is not open to the Court at this stage to decide the question of title

Court at this stage to decide the question of title which ought to have been raised at that stage or within one year of such dispossession.

[15] If on the other hand, the final Court of fact comes to the conclusion that dispossession was not as alleged by the defendant but subsequent thereto either as alleged by the plaintiff or on any other date subsequent to the delivery of possession which took place on 19th May 1936, the plaintiffs' suit has to be decreed, as the title of the plaintiffs has not been destroyed by lapse of time.

[16] There is no finding by the Court of appeal below as to the date on which the plaintiffs were dispossessed. This matter must therefore go back to the Court of appeal below for a decision on this question of fact. If it is found in favour of the defendant the suit is to be dismissed; on a contrary view the plaintiffs' suit will have to be decreed.

[17] The appeal is accordingly allowed and the case remanded to the Court of appeal below for a decision on the question of fact referred to above and for the final disposal of the suit according to the directions given above. The learned Subordinate Judge will proceed on the evidence already on the record. There will be no order for costs in this Court.

G. N. Das J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against a decision of Mr. B. Mookerjee, Additional Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Alipore, District 24 Parganas, dated 29th November 1944, dismissing their suit for possession and mesne profits.

[2] The plaintiffs' case is that the disputed property and other properties belonged to their father George Adolphus, Robertson. The latter was at all material times, living separate from his wife Olivia by whom he had several children. He had by one Mrs. Adeline Maude Bredee, a widow, two daughters viz., the plaintiffs.

[3] On 4th July 1892, Mr. Robertson executed a will. The will inter alia provided that Mrs. Bredse would be entitled to the disputed property for her life and the remainder would go to the plaintiffs. Mrs. Bredee and the testator's two brothers William Cecil Robertson and Edwin Robertson were appointed executors.

[4] On 12th January 1894, a son named George Nathaniel Robertson was born of Mrs. Bredee by the testator.

[5] On 11th June 1898, the testator executed a codicil modifying several dispositions made in the will. The effect was that as regards the disputed property, it was to devolve on Mrs. Bredee for her life and the remainder was to go to the plaintiffs and the said George Nathaniel Robertson in certain contingencies.

[6] Mr. William Cecil Robertson, one of the executors, having died, one Joseph Leslie was appointed an executor in his place.

[7] The testator died on 80th August 1898. Mr. Edwin Robertson did not join in the application for probate of the will and the codicil which was filed by Mrs. Bredes and Mr Joseph Leslie on 13th September 1898 in the Original Side of this Court. Probate was granted on 13th November 1898.

[8] Joseph Leslie died on 27th May 1901. On 9th August 1201, Mrs. Bredes for self and as excutrix to the estate of George Adolphus Robertson, mortgaged the disputed property to one Narendranath Mookerjee to secure an advance of Rs. 6,000 with interest at 9 per cent. per annum with quarterly rests for the alleged purpose of paying off debts incurred for effecting thorough repairs and making substantial additions and alterations in the disputed property.

[9] On 3rd December 1901, Mrs. Bredee for self and as executrix raised a sum of Rs. 1,000 from the said Narendranath Mookerjee on a further charge of the disputed property, on similar conditions and for the same purpose. On 7th august 1903, Mrs Bredee for self and as executrix released the equity of redemption in the said property in favour of the said Narendranath Mookerjee for a consideration of Rs. 3,168 only.

[10] On 8th April 1904, the said George Nathaniel Robertson died. On 22nd January 1934, the said Narendranath Mookerjee took a loan from the defendant on a mortgage by deposit of the title deeds of the disputed property and of other properties. The said Narendranath Mookerjee instituted a suit being Suit No. 169 of 1935 for redemption of the said mortgage in the Original Side of this Court.

[11] Pursuant to a preliminary and a final decree in the said suit, the disputed property and certain other properties were sold by the Registrar of this Court on 11th May 1938 and the defendant was declared the purchaser; the sale was confirmed and on 27th september 1938 a sale certificate was issued in favour of the defendant; the defendant took possession through Court and is in possession.

[12 Mrs. Bredee died on 13th september 1941; and in terms of the will and the codicil, the plaintiffs have become entitled to the disputed property.

[13] The plaintiffs further alleged that prior to 9th august 1901, the estate had been fully administered and that no money was required for purposes of administration at the date of the mortgage in favour of the said Narendranath Mookerji or at any later date; that at the material dates, Mrs. Bredee was in possession as legatee and not as executrix, and the said Narendranath Mookerjee had notice, actual or constructive, of these facts; that accordingly no title except that of Mrs. Bredee as legatee passed to the said Narendranath Mookerji and to the defendant.

[14] The plaintiffs prayed for recovery of possession, mesne profits and certain incidental

[15] The defendant filed a written statement and pleaded inter alia that the estate of George Adolphus Robertson had not been fully administered at the material dates, and that Mrs.

Bredee was at the time, in possession as executrix, that the mortgage, further charge, and release were bons fide documents, the moneys raised thereby were required for administrative purposes; that the executrix was not guilty of any breach of trust and the said Narendranath Mookerji had no notice, actual or constructive, of any fraud or breach of trust, that the title to the disputed property validly passed to the said Narendranath Mookerjee and subsequently to the plaintiff; that the heir of the said Narendranath Mookerji was necessary party; that the plaintiffs knew about their rights and did not assert the same at the date of the transactions and their claim is barred by estoppel, waiver and acquiescence.

[16] The following issues were framed for trial.

1. Is the suit maintainable? 2. Is the suit bad for non-joinder of parties ? 3. Is the suit barred by estoppel, waiver and acquiescence ? 4. Is the suit properly valued for court-fee? 5. Was the estate of the testator fully administered prior to August, 1901? Was Adeline Maude Bredee then in possession of the property as executrix, or a mere legatee ? 6. Did the said Adeline Maude Bredee mortgage and sell the property as executrix? Was she entitled to do so? Are such transactions binding on the legatees? Are their interests affected thereby? 7. Were the transactions for lawful consideration? This issue was deleted by order dated 23rd November 1944. 7. Was Narendra aware of the said transaction as alleged in the plaint? 8. Was Narendra's title to the property absolute and complete? 9. Are plaintiffs legatees under the will and are they entitled to maintain this cause against the defendant? 10. What damage, it any, is plaintiff entitled to and what relief, if any, is plaintiff entitled to?

[17] By order No. 34 dated 28th April 1943, issue No. 4, was decided in favour of the plaintiffs. The finding on the issue has not been contested on behalf of the respondents in this appeal.

[18] Issues Nos. (1), (2), (9) were decided in plaintiffs' favour. The findings on these issues have not also been challenged on behalf of the respondents in this appeal.

[19] The findings on issues (3), (5), (6), (7), (8), (10) were in favour of the respondents. In the result, the suit was dismissed with costs. The plaintiffs have preferred this appeal.

pressed the following points: (1) That the administration of the estate of Robertson was complete before the date of the mortgage and of the later transactions and that at these dates Mrs. Bredee could not act as executrix but only as a legatee. (2) Assuming that the administration was not complete and Mrs. Bredee could act as executrix virtue of ficii she has no right to transfer more than her life estate for the purposes mentioned in the documents. (3) That the purposes recited in the documents were illusory.

Judge that Narendra had no notice, actual or constructive, of any extravagance or waste on the part of Mrs. Bredee or that Narendra advanced money to her believing the recitals to be drue were not disputed before us.

[22] It is not disputed that the effect of the will (Ex. 4) and the codicil Bz. 5, was (1) to bequeath the household furniture, gold and jewellery and other moveables in the Lilloon house and a sum of Bs. 100 to the testator's wife Olivia Laure Robertson and sum of Rs. 100 each to a son and 2 daughters born of her and a further sum of Rs. 1000 to another daughter born of her, should she remain a spinster up to the time of the testator' death but to be reduced. to Rs. 600 in case she marries; (2) a life estate in 19 and 20 Canal Street to Mrs. Bredee with a remainder absolutely to his illegitimate children, viz, the plaintiffs and a son named George Nathaniel Robertson; (3) the rest and residue of the testator's estate, of what nature or kind soever, including lands and houses, (if any) company's papers, moneys in the testator's possession at the time of his death and moneys that shall or may be due and payable to him and all the household farniture; jewellery, moneys, and other moveable properties that shall or may be in the house in which Mr. Bredee may be residing, absolutely to her.

[23] On 13th November 1898, probate of the will and codicil was granted by this Court. The list of assets annexed to the petition for probate shows that the estate was valued at Rs. 87,458 as? 5 pies 6 only, and included large sums due to the testator at his death. No debts due by the test tator were mentioned. Paragraph (5) of the plaint states that the testator had no debts. Paragraph (9) of the written statement does not specifically traverse the allegation. But in para. (6) there is a general denial of all allegations in the plaint which are not expressly admitted? There is no evidence that the testator had no debts. The list of assets filed shows that a large sum was due to the testator from various people! Paragraph (6) of the plaint and para. (10) of the written statement would show that Bs. 6500 was received from the purchaser Mr. Al P. Houghton and it is likely that the sum was received about With January 1899 when the conveyance was exed cated. There is no evidence whether the other sums due from the persons named in the petition for probate were realised and if so, when! No inventory or account which was required to be filed under S. 817, Succession Act, by the exel outrix, has been produced.

fairly large sum. The pecuniary legacies which would be payable under the will and the codion 1950 0/71 & 72 might come up to Rs. 1900. The residuary estate was given to Mrs. Bredee. The executor Mr. Leslie and the executrix Mrs. Bredee were not, however, obliged to spend all the receipts towards meeting the testamentary expenses and the peouniary legacies. Mrs. Bredee required moneys for maintaining herself and her infant children: In these circumstances, it is difficult to draw the inference that the estate was fully administered before the date of the mortgage and further charge.

Timmis; Nixon v. Smith (1902) I ch. 176; (71 L. J. Ch. 118) to the effect that "There was no apparent obstacle in winding up the estate in a reasonable time, and I must assume that the executors did their duty" has no application to the facts of the present case. In the case of John Agabog Vertanus v. James Golder Robinson, 54 I.A. 276; (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 151) on which reliance was placed by Mr. Gupta, the transactions which were in question took place long after the death of the testator and it was apparent that the administration must have been completed long ago.

[26] The first contention raised on behalf of the appellant must therefore be overruled.

[27] It follows that Mrs. Bredee could not be said to have no duty to perform as executrix and that she could act as such virtule official the relevant dates.

[28] The second contention proceeds on the above assumption. What is contended for, is that the purposes mentioned in the relevant documents were not administrative purposes, and a transfer for such purposes was in excess of the powers of the executrix and could not pass the title to the estate.

[29] The first document is the mortgage bond Ex. A dated 9th August 1901. It recites the purchase of 19 and 20 Canal Street by the testator on 19th September 1897, the title of Mrs. Bredes and of her illegitimate children including the plaintiffs to the disputed property, under the will and the colicil, the grant of probate by the High Court on 13th November 1898 and the sale of 20 Canal Street, and of part of 19 Canal Street to A. P. Houghton in January 1899 for the coneideration mentioned, and the death of the con executor Joseph Leslie on 27th May 1901 without leaving any funds for the administration of the estate. The deed then proceeds to state that the house and premises No. 19 Canal Street! "was in a very bad state of repairs and was about to dome down unless necessary repairs were given to it." And that the mortgagor as exe. ontrix incorred debis to alarge extent for the putpose of thoroughly repairing the said premises and for making substantial additions and alterations thereto." The deed then goes on to state that as the debts have become pressing, and there was no money in the hands of Mrs. Bredee the executrix, the latter applied as such executrix to the mortgagee "for a loan to her as such executrix of the sum of Rupees six thousand upon security of the said house and premises No. 19 Canal Street" and "the said mortgagor for herself and as personal representative" of the said deceased testator, granted, conveyed, transferred and assigned to the mortgagee, his heirs, representatives and assigns the said house and premises No. 19, Canal Street, on the terms and conditions mentioned, the due date of payment was fixed for 9th August 1903. The recital of consideration shews cash payment of the same.

[30] The deed of further charge, Ex. O, followed about 3 months later and is dated 3rd December 1901. It incorporates similar recitals and states that the loan taken under the deed of mortgage, Ex. B, proved insufficient to pay the debts incurred by Mrs. Bredee for the purposes recited in Ex. B. The consideration is recited to have been paid in cash.

[31] The deed of release of the equity of redemption by Mrs. Bredee, Ex. B, is dated 7th August 1903. It contains recitals similar to those in the mortgage deed Ex. A, the consideration is Rs. 10.937.0-5, being the sum total of Rs. 7769.0-5, due on the mortgage and further charge, Rs. 1668 being the amount of principal and interest due on a promissory note dated 28th April 1902 executed by Mrs. Bredee, and Rs. 1500 in cash,

[32] The learned Subordinate Judge held that the recitals in the deeds of mortgage and further charge had not been shown to be untrue. As regards the deed of release the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that the plaintiff had not shewn that the sum of Rs. 1000 borrowed on a pronote was not taken for purposes other than administration. The learned Subordinate Judge held that all these transactions were entered into in due course of administration of the estate and were binding on the plaintiffs and their interests were affected thereby.

[33] In order to deal with the contentions raised on behalf of the appellant, we have to consider the extent of the power of disposal enjoyed by an executor at the relevant dates. The law was at that date, contained in S. 269, Succession Act (X [10] of 1865). The section, practically corresponds to S. 307 of the present Succession Act, XXXIX [39] of 1925. In the present case, the will and codicil do not impose any restriction on the powers of the executors. The Act gives the executor powers at least as extensive as those enjoyed by executor in England before 1926: Gitarani De v. Narendra Krishna De, 60 Cal. 394: (A.I.R.(20) 1933 Cal. 429).

[34] The principle why executors are vested with such large powers was stated by Lord Thurlow in Scott v. Tyler, 2 Dick 725:

"It is of great consequence that no rule should be laid down here which may impede executors in their administration or render their disposition of the testator's effects unsafe or uncertain to the purchaser, his title is complete by sale and delivery what becomes of the price is of no concern to him."

[35] The alience from an executor who is acting as such has a right to infer that the latter is acting fairly. The fact that the alienation does not purport to be made for administrative purposes does not affect his title. The alience is not bound to see to the application of the money The immunity is however lost when the alience has notice, actual or constructive, of the title of other persons and of the fact that the executor is acting in breach of trust, or the alienation is made for purposes which the executor has no power to do in the course of the administration, Watkins v. Cheek, (1825) 2 Sim. & St. 199: (25 R. R 181). In Roper on Legacies (4th Edn), p. 447, it is stated that the power of the executor does not extend to authorise him to sell or pledge the testator's assets with a creditor of his own, so as to prevent the persons interested in the testative will from following them, for the law seems to say, as declared by Lord Ken. yon "Let the executors do their duty and let the authority cease when injustice begins."

[36] The extent of the executor's (alience's?) duty to inquire came up for consideration in the case of Sunil Kumar Kerr v. Sisir Kumar, 67 I. A. 102: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 P. C. 80) where the facts were shortly these; one Thakurdas Kerr carried on business as book-sellers and publishers under the name and style of R. Cambray & Co. He executed a will appointing his two sons as executors and directing them to carry on the business. The executors proved the will after the testator's death. They later raised money on a mortgage. The mortgage bond did not show that the money was in fact required for a new business to be started at Madras. The mortgagees sued upon the mortgage and obtained a final decree. Some of the sons of the executors brought a suit for construction of the will, for administration and for declaration that the mortgage decree was not binding on the estate as the mortgage was taken for starting a new business. The decree of dismissal of the suit was main. tained by the Privy Council, their Lordships. observing that the transferee was not bound toinquire beyond the will, on the ground that much of the usefulness of the statutory power conferred by S. 807 on executors would be nullified if an extended duty of inquiry was imposed on parties dealing with executors. ET S ITID GREE

[37] Tested in the light of the above principles the question which arises with regard to the mortgage and the further charge is whether the expenses of repairs and improvements are administrative purposes for which executors can charge the estate.

[38] As already stated the transactions in question took place before the present Succession Act (XXXIX [33] of 1925) came into force and are governed by the Indian Succession Act X [10] of 1865. In the latter Act there was no section corresponding to S. 308 of Act XXXIX [39] of 1925 which defines the general powers of administration possessed by executors.

[39] The expenses incurred were for thorough repairs and substantial additions and alterations. The property was bequeathed to the executrix Mrs. Bredee for life with a remainder to the plaintiffs. Mr. Gapta first contends that in the absence of a covenant to repair contained in a will or a deed of transfer the liability to pay for the same rests as between the tenant for life and the remainderman in the formar and the same rule applies to the case of improvements made by the life tenant. This may be conceded, Rowley v. Ginnever, (1897) 2 Ch. 503, Re Balke's settled Estate, (1928) 2 Ob. 128: (92 L. J. Ob. 829).

[40] The further contention of Mr. Gapta that in administration of the estate, the executor has to follow the above rule and cannot burden the remainder in any circumstances, cannot however, be accepted.

[41] An executor represents the estate and has, in ordinary course of management, power to effect necessary repairs and to effect improvements which are reasonable and proper. For such purposes, he can charge the estate.

[42] In Marguis of Bute v. Rydar, (1881) 27 Cb. D. 196 where the trustees under the will of the plaintiff's father employed a large annual surplus of income to the payment of improvements it was observed that:

'If they, the trustees, bad raised the money by sale or mortgage, they would have charged the corpus of the estate, that they were at libety to charge the estate cannot be disputed, but there is clear authority for holding that in no case can the exercise by the trustees of their discretion affect the rights of the parties inter se."

[43] The above case has been followed in Ouchterlony v. Ouchterlony, 11 Mad. 860.

[44] In Williams on Executors Edn. 12 Vol. I part III, Book I, p. 582, the law is thus stated:

"Personal representatives may for purposes of administration or during a minority of any beneficiary or the subsistence of any life estate or until the period of distribution arises, effect certain authorised improvements upon any land vested in them as such."

[45-46] In this state of the law, it is difficult to say that the alience Narendra Nath Mukherji was not entitled to advance the morey for the purposes recited.

[47] There is nothing on the record to shew that the alience had any notice of the fact that the repairs or improvements were unnecessary or that the sums alleged to be required for the purpose were inflated. The burden rests upon the person impeaching the validity of the trans. action to prove that the alience had notice of the facts Corser v. Cartwright, (1876) 7 H. L. 731 : (45 L. J. Ch. 605). The plaintiffs have failed to discharge the burden in the present case. The mortgage and the deed of further charge are therefore binding on the plaintiff.

[48] Coming to the deed of release Ex. B, a part of the consideration consists of the dues on a promissory note. There is no evidence as to purpose of the loan. The alience was entitled to assume that it was duly incurred. Both as regards this sum and the additional cash consideration, the alience could trust the person whom the testator had trusted and appointed as executrix. There is nothing to suggest that at the time the alience had any notice that the money was borrowed for improper purposes.

[49] If the moneys as aforesaid had not been the subject of the deed of release, different considerations might have arisen. In that case, the lender who could have only stood in the shoes of the executor and rely on the latter's indemnity, would be required to prove that the loan was taken for administrative purposes or benefited the estate; Manindra Ohindra v. Sudhir Krishna, 59 Cal. 216: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 182). The position here is different, as the executrix acting as such executed a deed of release for consideration as recited in the deed of release. Geetaranee v. Narendra Krishna De. 60 Cal. 394 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Oal. 429).

[50] We accordingly hold that the deed of release is also binding on the estate and passed the title of the plaintiff.

[61] Mr. Gupta also contended, as a subsidiary point that the assent of the executors to the plaintiff's legacy must be presumed from the fact that in the deed of mortgage, the executrix purported also to mortgage her life estate.

[62] Reference was made to 83. 832, 333, 836, Succession Act, and it was urged that assent of the executors to the legacies should be inferred.

[53] This question was not specifically put in issue. In Sunil Kumar v. Sisir Kumar, 67 I. A. 102 : (A. I. R. (97) 1940 P. O. 80), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee were of opinion that the question of assent was one of fact, and did not allow the point to be raised at that stage. The assent required by the Act may be given in fact or may be inferred, the inference being made where the executor has so acted as to involve as a matter of necessary inference, his having done so. The mere fact that an executor who is also a devisee, includes porperty of his own in the security or gives security for an originally unsecured advance is not sufficient to rebut the ordinary presumption that the money had been raised for administrative purposes. Barrow v. Griffith, (1864) 11 Jnr. (N. S.) 6: (147 R. R. 783); Miles v. Durnford, (1852) 2 Ds. G. M. & G. 641 : (21 L. J. Oh. 667).

[54] It is, therefore, not permissible to conclude from the bare fact that the executrix purported also to convey his life estate, that the assent had been given to the plaintiff's legacies. This contention is also overruled.

[55] The third contention that the resitals are illusory remains to be discussed.

[56] In the plaint, the plaintiff alleged that Mrs. Bredee had a joint business in horses with one Inglis Harvey. The allegation was denied in the written statement. The alleged deel of partnership is not signed by Mrs. Bredee and is undated. The only evidence is that of plaintiff 1 who was at the time about 13 years old. The transaction took place about 40 years ago. Plaintiff 1 is an interested witness. Corrobora. tive evidence could have been produced but has not been produced. On the evidence of plaintiff 1, the business continued till 1939. Persons who carried on the business or who were customers or neighbours could have been examined. The quick march of events affords room for suspicion. But on the evidence as a whole, the conclusion does not follow that the moneys were borrowed for the alleged horse business. The plaintiffs and their mother were on the plaintiff's evidence on good terms. The payment of consideration on the disputed transactions was not 100 May 1881 (10) challenged.

[57] The burden lay on the plaintiff to disprove the falsity of the recitals made in the old documents. In our opinion, the third contention must also be negatived. The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

[58] In the facts and circumstances of the case, we direct that the parties do bear their own costs in this appeal.

Where the Munsiff in relation to a proceeding under O. 9, R. 9 passes the following order: "That the Misc. case be allowed on contest provisionally. The petitioners to pay Rs. 35 to the opposite party No. 1 by 10th February 1950, upon which the suit will be restored to file. In default, the Miso. case shall stand dismissed," the order in question is not a complete final order. The order is, as it were, in two parts with a condition, and so long as the actual order of dismissal has not operated (i. e., before the expiry of the time), the Court has still seisin of the case and has jurisdiction to extend the time under S. 148. [Paras 1 & 5]

Jagdish Ch. Ghoss — for Petitioner. Prasun Ch. Ghose - for Opposite Party.

Order. — This is a rule against an order of the Munsiff of Asansol in relation to a proceed. ing under O. 9, R. 9, Civil P. C. On 30th January 1950, he passed the following order:

"That the miscellaneous case be allowed on contest provisionally. The petitioners to pay Rs. 35 to the opposite party No. 1 by 10th February 1950 upon which the suit will be restored to file. In default, the miscellaneous case shall stand dismissed."

[2] Oa 10th February the petitioner in the miscellaneous case asked for further time to deposit the amount of Rs. 35. This was refused, the order being, "the petitioner must pay the money to day failing which the miscellaneous case stands dismissed. The petition is rejected." Later on, on the same day the petitioner filed another petition asking for one day's time only to deposit the money. The order is, "Heard pleader. The prayer is considered and time is allowed. 11th February 1950 for depositing the amount failing which the miscellaneous case shall stand dismissed," in other words, after hearing the parties the Munsiff finally granted one day's extra time. He had seisin of the case and, in fact, the parties were present and were heard on the question.

[3] The petitioner here relies on the decision of Edgley J. in the case of Muhammad Asraf Ali v. Nabijan Bili, 43 0. W. N. 417 : (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Cal. 581) for a contention that the order of 80th January here was a final order and could not be altered by the learned Munsiff except by way of formal review. It is to be noted that in the case considered by Edgley J. the facts were that the application for extension of time was made after the time had expired. It is true that some of the reasonings of the learned Judge in support of his order would also cover a case such as the present were the application for extension of time was made before the expiry of the order. [4] In my opinion, however, it is clear from the order of 30th January that it was in part of a provisional nature as the learned Munsiff himself expressed it. I do not think it can be said that he had entirely by his order divested himself of the power given under S. 148, Civil P. C., to alter the form of his provisional order, that is to say, to extend the time. On 10th February he first passed the order saying that the amount must be paid within that day and then finally allowed a day, each time repeating that on failure of deposit the suit will stand dismissed.

[5] Once the period has expired and the order of dismissal has operated, then, clearly it can be said that whatever may be provided in S. 148, Oivil P. O, after the suit has actually been dismissed the Court has no jurisdiction to alter the order of dismissal except by way of formal review. With great respect, I think it is going a little too far to say that orders in the form of the order passed by the Munsiff here on 30th January are complete final orders. The orders are, as it were, in two parts with a condition and, in my opinion, so long as the actual order of dismissal has not operated, the Court has still seisin of the case and has still jurisdiction to make use of the powers given under S. 148, to extend the time. No case has been cited before me in which it has been held that an application for extension of time made within time cannot be allowed.

- [6] The result is that this rule is discharged. I make no order as to costs.
- [7] I am asked to point out that the point raised in Para. 5 of the petition to this Court has not been agitated here and is still open.

Criminal P. C., (1898), Ss. 161, 162 and 418-Trial by jury-Record of statement jointly during investigation_Effect.

The police may not record any statement at all but if they chose to record any statement as important or necessary they are not to do so in a 'boiled form' but separately under each such witness so that the defence may use it in accordance with 8. 162 of the Code. Where, therefore, the statements of the witnesses were recorded in a joint form and not separately and no copy of them could be supplied to defence under S. 162, the conviction was set aside. Chunder J. — This is an appeal against the conviction of the three appellants under 8. 304, Part II read with S. 34, Penal Code, and a sentence of eight years' rigorous imprisonment and further of the appellant Balabbadra Sow under S. 323, Penal Code, with rigorous imprisonment for three months, the sentences to run concurrently in his case. The verdict of the jury was unanimous and was accepted by the Additional Sessione Judge of Midnapore.

[2] One Mahadeb Pal is said to have been attacked by the three appellants and others and such injuries were inflicted as subsequently resulted in his death. A first information report was made to the thana by a chowkidar which was entered in the general diary. Subsequently, another local man Janmanjay gave a further information and it appears that this was not rightly allowed to go in evidence in view of S. 162, Criminal P. C, as the police had already started investigation. It further appears that when the Sub-Inspector came to the locality none of the witnesses who are alleged to have been eye. witnesses made any statement to him regarding any of these persons and it further appears that subsequently an explanation was asked for and obtained from them by the Sub Inspector. It appears that following the usual practice of a most objectionable nature these statements were taken down in what is called the "boiled" form. There is absolutely no justification for this sort of statements being recorded together. It has been made clear by the amendment of S. 161, Criminal P. C., that the police may not record any statement at all but if they choose to record any statement as important or necessary they are not to do so in a boiled form but separately under each such witness so that the defence may use it in accordance with S. 162 of the Code. This has been repeatedly pointed out by this Court and is still being pointed out without, it appears, much effect. There is absolutely no justification for floating the Legislature and the Courte by the police authorities. The evidence of the Sub-Inspector Santosh Kumar Munshi, Prosecution Witness No. 15, is that he has done this under instructions received from his superior officers. Nothing can be more astounding than this and one cannot but too severely condemn such instructions being given contrary to the letter and the spirit of the Code. It further appears that as these statements were said to have been in a boiled form and as it was considered that the defence would not be entitled to such statements, proper materials could not be placed before the Judge and the jury. In view of the order we are going to pass it will not be at all proper for us to express any opinion on the merits of the case and so we refrain from doing so.

(8) We think it is necessary in the interests, of justice that this case should go back and copies of all the so called "boiled" statements of the witnesses should be supplied to the defence from the Police Diary and the case should be retried under S. 304, Penal Obde.

- [4] The question of bail of the accused persons will be at the discretion of the Sessions Judge.
- [5] The appeal is allowed. The conviction and the sentences are set aside and the case is sent back for retrial in the light of the observations made above.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 17—Suit for possession against certain person — Amendment seeking some other person to be brought on record as being in possession.

Ordinarily, when a suit is brought against certain persons, for obtaining possession of certain lands said to be in possession of such persons and it is later found that another person is in possession of some of the properties, it is necessary and proper that such person should be brought on the record. It will, however, be unreasonable to grant such a prayer for bringing him on the record if at the time the prayer is made, the relief as against him is barred by limitation.

It is not correct to say that because a suit has been brought by a party under the provisions of O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C. nothing else except the relief which is mentioned in R. 103 can be included in such a suit. Thus a prayer for redemption and possession of the property mortgaged can be included in such a suit. Where such a suit as originally instituted is brought within one year from the date of the order under O. 21, R. 101, but the prayer for amendment, whereby a person, who after the institution of suit obtains possession of the property in suit, is sought to be brought on record is made at a time when the period of one year is already passed, the relief against such person is not barred by limitation and consequently, the amendment should be [Paras 8 and 10] allowed.

Order. — This rule is directed against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad rejecting an application for amendment of a plaint. As originally filed on 28th

August 1915, the plaint asked for a declaration of title to certain properties and for redemption of mortgage as regards certain other properties and for delivery of khas possession of all these properties. For an appreciation of the nature of the alteration sought to be made by the amendment which was prayed for but rejected, it is recessary to mention certain facts which led up to this present litigation.

[2] All the properties in suit belonged originally to two persons, Eakub and Ebrahim. On 20th March 1923 they executed a karbarnama charging the properties of schedule kha of the plaint which included four items out of the kx schedule properties, in favour of opposite party 1 and the predecessor of the opposite parties 2 to 5. On 28th June 1926, one of these persons viz., Ebrahim executed a mortgage bond in favour of the present petitioner's son in respect of six items of the ka properties which included two out of the four items mentioned in schedule kha. On 9th March 1931, Eakub executed another mortgage bond in favour of the petitioner in respect of four items of properties of which two were covered by the karbarnama bond in favour of the opposite parties. On 26th April 1933, the opposite party 1 and the predecessor of opposite parties 2 to 5 brought a suit to enforce the mortgage created by the karbarnama against the mortgagors without impleading the puisne mortgagees. They obtained a decree and in execution of the decree for sale purchased the properties covered by the karbarnama. The entire decretal dues were however not satisfied by the sale and they applied for and obtained a personal decree against the mortgagors and in execution of the same purchased on 4th July 1942 the properties not covered by the karbarnama. On this date, viz., 4th July 1942, there were pending before the Court two suits, one by the petitioner, the other by his son to enforce the mortgages given by Eakub and Ebrahim. Both the suits were brought in the year 1933. The final decrees were obtained on 21st April 1943. In execution of these final decrees the petitioner purchased the properties which had been mortgaged by the two mortgages of 28th June 1926 and 9th March 1931. The petitioner thereafter obtained possession of these properties which he had purchased, which included some of the properties of which the opposite parteis had obtained possession in execution of the mortgage decree obtained by them. The opposite party 1 filed an application under O. 21, R. 100, Civil P. C. alleging that he was in possession when on 25th August 1944, he was dispossessed by delivery of possession, and applied to be put into possession. This application succeeded and an order was passed on 27th March 1945, to the effect that the opposite party must be put in possession of these properties.

[3] It was this success of the opposite party 1 which compelled the present petitioner to come to the Court and filed the suit, as already mentioned, on 28th August 1945. In that suit, as already mentioned, he, in addition to his prayer for declaration of his right, also made a prayer for redemption of the mortgage. In the meantime the original owners of the properties, Eakub and Ebrahim, filed applications under 8. 37A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, for setting aside the sale and for restoration of possession of the properties that were purchased by the opposite parties in execution of the original mortgage decree and the subsequent personal decree. This application succeeded and an order for restoration of possession in favour of Eakub and Ebrahim has been passed. It has been stated before us that the order in favour of Eakub and Ebrahim was later set aside by the District Judge acting under S. 40A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act, and that an application against the District Judge's order is now pending in this Court.

[4] The petitioner bases his claim to add Eakub and Ebrahim as defendants in his suit on this fact that they have been restored to possession. Obviously, his prayer for possession as against the opposite parties becomes infructuous if these opposite parties had in the meantime been relieved of their possession. It is in these circumstances that the petitioner made the application for amendment of the plaint. Therein he has stated these facts as regards restoration of possession in favour of Eakub and Ebrahim and has prayed that to avoid future trouble, these persons viz., Eakub and Ebrahim should also be added as defendants in the suit, and a prayer be added that the plaintiffs get khas possession of the land on eviction of the defendants from all the suit lands.

[6] There can be no doubt as regards the necessity from the plainthes point of view of adding these persons who had obtained possession of some of the lands and asking for relief against them. The point which the Court has to consider in deciding whether to grant or reject an application for amendment of this nature is whether the nature of the suit is substantially changed by this amendment. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the nature of the suit will certainly be changed if the prayer for amendment of the plaint be allowed. Unfortunately he has not given his reasons for this conclusion. He has also mentioned that the suit had become more than one year old at the time this application was moved and that he was not inclined to entertain the prayer at such a late stage. Accordingly he rejected the prayer for amendment.

[6] Ordinarily, when a suit is brought against certain persons, A, B and O for obtaining possession of certain lands said to be in possession of such persons and it is later found that another person D is in possession of some of the properties, it is necessary and proper that D should be brought on the record. It will however be unreasonable to grant such a prayer for bringing D on the record if at the time the prayer is made, the relief as against D is barred by limitation.

[7] Mr. Bhattacharjya on behalf of the opposite party contends that this being a suit under the provisions of o. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C., has to be brought within one year from the date of the order under R. 101. The suit, as originally instituted, was brought within this date. But the prayer for amendment is made at a time when the period of one year has already passed. His contention is that the plaintiff's relief as against Eakub and Ebrahim is barred by limitation.

(8) I do not think that it is correct to say that because a suit has been brought by a party under the provisions of O. 21, R. 103, Civil P. C. nothing else except the relief which is mentioned in B. 103 can be included in such a suit. In the present case, as already mentioned, a prayer for redemption has been asked for though clearly relief for redemption is not one of the matters referred to in R. 103. If Eakub and Ebrahim had been the persons in whose favour the order under O. 21, R. 100 had been passed, I would have agreed with the learned advocate for the opposite party that the suit as against them should also be brought within the period of one year. I am unable to see that the prayer as against them is of the nature contemplated in R. 103 of O. 21, Civil P. C., and consequently I cannot agree that the relief as against these persons is barred by limitation on account of the suit not being brought within one year after the order was passed in favour of certain other persons under R. 101 of O. 21, Civil P. O.

[9] Mr. Bhattacharjya contends that the very fact that the relief now sought for is not of the nature contemplated in R. 103, justifies a conclusion that the nature of the suit will be altered substantially if these persons are added as parties and relief sought against them. With this we are unable to agree. The relief which the plaintiff has sought is substantially for delivery of possession to him of certain lands on declaration of his title. The fact that some persons other than the original defendants are now found to be in possession of certain of the lands has necessitated the addition of such other persons in the category of defendants and the seeking of relief for recovery of possession as against them. To refuse this amendment and to drive the plaintiff to have recourse to the Courts by a separate suit will be, in my opinion, to encourage unnecessary multiplication of suits against which the Courts have always set their faces.

we are of opinion that there will be no such substantial alteration of the nature of the suit by the amendment which will justify the Court in rejecting the prayer for amendment. Accordingly we set aside the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge and order that the plaint be amended as sought for.

(11) The rule is accordingly made absolute but there will be no order as to costs.

(b) Arbitration Act (1940), S. 34 (1)—Action in relation to contract—Suit wholly based on tort—Stay, if can be granted.

An action is not to be considered to be in relation to and in connection with a contract merely because it is shown that if there had never been any contract there would not have been any cause of action. What the Court is to look into is what the substance of the plaint is but not how the claim is framed. If the cause of action on which the claim is based is an independent one which does not arise on the contract or is in relation to the contract, it is idle to suggest that merely because at some earlier stage there was contract and, not giving the history of the case, some reference has to be made to a previous contract, it cannot be said in every such case that it is in some way or other related to the contract. [Para 6]

Whether in a case the dispute arises out of the contract or is in relation to the contract or not must depend on the particular facts of each case. [Para 7]

Thus where the cause of action in a sult for damages for wrongful conversion of goods is based wholly upon tort and tort alone which has got no connection direct or indirect with the contract which provides for reference to arbitration of any dispute arising out of or in any way relating to the contract and the reference to the contract is only a link in the story to show how the goods came to be in the possession of the defendants and the claim is not based in any way or related to the contract itself, the suit cannot be stayed under S 34. [Para 7]

R. P. Mookherjee J. — This is an application in revision against an order of the learned Judge, Presidency Small Cause Court, Calcutta, staying a suit under S. 31, Arbitration Act. [2] The plaintiff's case as made in the plaint is that the defendant company had entered into a contract with the plaintiff on 28th February 1945, for the purchase of a certain quantity of inte at Rs. 16-14-0 per maund. Against the said contract the plaintiff had delivered some quantity of jute out of which the defendant company had rejected 28 bales on 14th May 1946 and called upon the plaintiff to remove the same from the defendant's custody. After the receipt of the aforesaid letter, the plaintiff repeatedly attempted to obtain delivery of the said 28 bales of jutebut on some pretext or other the bales were not delivered. Ultimately, on 29th October 1946, the plaintiff wrote to the defendant company again requesting it to return the said bales. The defendant company had not delivered the bales. The plaintiff accordingly filed the present suit to recover from the defendant company the value of the said bales at the market rate of Rs. 84 per maund as ruling on or about 80th October 1946, when the defendant refused to deliver "asdamages for wrongful conversion of the goodsas per bill submitted to them." Before filing the written statement, the defendant made an application under 8. 84, Arbitration Act, and relied upon the following provision as contained in the contract between the parties:

relating to this contract or to its construction or fulfilment or payment between the parties hereto and whether arising before or after the date of expiration of this contract will be referred to the arbitration of twopersons, one to be appointed by each party."

Before the learned Judge, it was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the present claim was neither one arising out of or in any way relating to the contract but the learned Judge held that the dispute which gave rise to the suit was one entirely relating to the contract in which the arbitration clause appears. In this view, he allowed the defendant's prayer and stayed the suit sine die. It is against this order that the present rule has been obtained.

[3] On behalf of the defendant opposite party, it is contended that the order passed by the learned Judge is in the exercise of a discretion allowed under 5. 84. Arbitration Act, and this Court ought not to interfere in the exercise of that discretion by the Court below. No doubt the making of an order staying proceedings is a matter!

largely in the discretion of the Court, but when a strong case is made not only has the Court of appeal or the Court sitting in revision jurisdiction to interfere but ought to do so. In the present case, only if it can be shown, as is contended by the plaintiff, that the dispute is not one which arises out of or is in any way related to the contract then it must be held that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to stay the suit under S. 84, Arbitration Act. It is therefore necessary to ascertain whether the arbitration clause is really attracted on the pleadings of the present case.

[4] If we examine the facts of the present case, it will appear that when the quantity of jute was delivered, by the plaintiff to the defendant that, act was in the performance of the terms of the contract. The rejection of a portion of the quantity so delivered as not being of the required quality was also without doubt in relation to the contract itself. After the plaintiff had been requested to take delivery of the rejected jute, that quantity of jute from that moment belonged to the plaintiff and the defendant had no right whatever to retain possession of that quartity of jute. If the defendant does not deliver the jute which he was bound to do after the jute had been rejected, the cause of action which arises is not based upon any provision in the contract at all but on the alleged act of the defendant in retaining possession of goods which the defendant had not right to do,

[5] The cause of action as laid in the plaint is stated to have arisen on 29th October 1946 when the defendant is alleged to have wrongfully refused to return the said bales. The cause of action is not laid on the rejection of the jute far less on the delivery which had been effected previously under the contract itself. No provisions contained in the contract are required to be interpreted or even referred to and the Court is not required, on the plaint as filed, to consider any of the terms contained in the contract.

relation to and in connection with a contract merely because it is shown that if there had never been any contract there would not have been any cause of action, there would never have been any wrongful refusal of returning the bales had not there been an earlier rejection of the bales under the contract. Vide observations by Pickford L. J. in Monroe v. Bognor Urban District Council, (1916) 8 K. B. 167: (84 L. J. K. B. 1091) relied upon by this Court, in Johnsmill Parasrdm v. Louis Drefus and Co., Ltd., 52 c. w. N. 187: (A. I. B. (36) 1949 cal. 179). What the Court is to look into its what the substance of the plaint is but not how the claim is framed. If the cause of action on which the claim is based is an independent one which does not arise on the contract or is in relation to the contract, it is idle to suggest that merely because at some earlier stage there was a contract and, not giving the history of the case, some reference has to be made to a previous contract, it cannot be said in every such case that it is in some way or other related to the contract. Reliance however was placed by the learned advocate on behalf of the opposite party on Woolf v. Collis Removal Service, (1948) 1 K. B. 11. As observed by Lord Asjuith, the breach in this particular case on which the cause of action was based was principally one of neglect in the performance of the contract itself. Under the contract, a party was bound to take due care of the different items of furniture and if such articles bad been removed to an undesirable place and no proper care had been taken during the period the goods were so stored there, it is the failure of the party to take due care of those articles which they were bound to do under the contract. In this view of the reading of the contract, the Court of appeal came to the conclusion that even though the suit was technically framed in tort there is a sufficiently close connection between the claim as made and the transaction as under the contract to bring the claim within the arbitration clause. It was further observed that claims which were entirely unrelated to the transaction covered by the contract would no doubt be excluded. The claim in that case was held to be one which came within the arbitration clause as having arisen though not directly but at least indirectly under the contract. . 1 . 1 1.1 . 2 1 1 :

of the contract or is in relation to the contract or not must depend on the particular facts of each case. The facts of the case now before us however do not make it possible to attract the special reasons given by the Court of appeal in Woolf v. Collis Removal Service. (1948-1 K. B. 11) (supra). The cause of action in this case is based wholly upon tort and tort alone which has got no connection direct or indirect with the contract itself. As indicated already, the reference to the contract is only a link in the story to show how the goods came to be in the possession of the defendants and the claim is not based in any way or related to the contract itself.

with costs and the order for stay as directed by the Judge must be vacated.

(b) Income tax Act (1922), Ss. 10 (2) (xv) and 12A - Payments out of commission to other parties -Payments constituting expenditure laid out for managing agency business - Conditions prescribed in S. 12A, if should be satisfied.

Section 10 is a general enactment with regard to all businesses. Section 12A makes certain specific enactment with regard to a special kind of business the managing agency of a company. Hence the special or particular enactment should be operative and should be considered as an exception to the general rule. Therefore, S. 10 (2) (xv) and S. 12A should be read together and the proper construction is that if the managing agents of a company claim that they should not be made liable to pay taxes on the total amount of the managing agency commission, then they must satisfy the conditions prescribed In S. 12A although it may be that the payments made to the other parties constituted expenditure actually laid out or made wholly for the purpose of the managing agency business or solely for the purpose of earning the managing [Para 12] agency commission.

It is not always correct to say that a payment the making of which is conditional on profits being earned cannot properly be described as an expenditure incurred for the purpose of earning such profits. Section 12A was introduced in order to remove all doubts on this point. Further the section has been introduced to safeguard the revenues of the country and in order to avoid possible evasion of the tax by some kind of profit [Paras 16 and 18] sharing arrangement.

for Applicant.

Dr. S. K. Gupta and J. C. Pal-for Respondent.

Chatterjee J .- The question referred to this Court by the appellate tribunal is as follows:

"Whether in the facts and circumstances of the case the tribunal was right in holding that the non-compliance by the assessee with the provision of S. 12A disentitled him from claiming the deduction of Rs. 32,685 in question and is assessable under the provision of S. 10 of the same Act."

[2] The applicant is the managing agent of Radha Krishna Sugar Mills Ltd. Its income is mainly from the managing agency commission which it received from the mill. The Radha Krishna Sugar Mills Ltd., was floated by a number of persons: Radha Krishna Jajharia who was karta of a joint Hindu family, Gobardhandas the Shroff and Joy Doyal Kasaria. It is stated that there was an agreement between these parties to share the managing agency commission payable by the Radha Krishna Sugar Mills Ltd. Later on, both Joy Doyal and Gobardhandas assigned their respective shares of the managing agency commission to Bhartia & Co. and Rai Bahadur Mangturam Tapuria. During the year of account, payments were made to the parties in terms of the agreement and they amounted to Rs. 32,685 and the details are set out in the statement of case.

[3] The payments were no doubt made by the managing agents out of the commission which the company received from the mills and they were proved by vouchers. But no declaration showing the proportion in which the commission was shared under S. 12A, Income.tax Act, was filed before the Income-tax Officer. It is further stated that the parties concerned were approached by the applicant to make the required declaration, but they refused to do so on various grounds. What those grounds are it is not stated. However, no declaration was filed before the taxing authorities and the Income tax Officer refused to apportion the payments amongst the parties for separate assessments.

[4] On appeal the Assistant Commissioner upheld the decision of the Income-tax Officer and the tribunal has also taken the same view. However, the Commissioner of Income-tax did not oppose a reference to this Court and that is why the question aforesaid was referred to us for our opinion.

[5] Section 12A, Income-tax Act, was introduced in the year 1939 after the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Tata Hydro Electric Agencies, Ltd., Bombay v. Commissioner of Income tax, Bombay Presidency & Aden, 64 I. A. 215; (1937) 5 I. T. R. 202; (A. I. B. (24) 1937 P. C. 189). That S. 12A is in the following terms:

"Where a managing agent of a company is liable under an agreement made for adequate consideration to share managing agency comission with a third party or parties, the said agent and the said party or parties shall file a declaration showing the proportion in which such commission is shared between them, and on proof to the satisfaction of the Income-tax Officer of the facts contained in such declaration such agent and each such party shall be chargeable only on the share to which such agent or party is entitled under the agreement."

[6] Section 12A was introduced partly to counteract the decision of the Judicial Committee in Tata Hydro Electric case, 64 I. A. 215:
(A. I. R. (24) 1937 P. C. 139), and also to remove doubts with reference to the application of 8. 10 (2) (xv), Income-tax Act. It is often difficult to determine whether a particular payment represented by a share of profits has been made in order to earn such profits or whether it was really a distribution of the profits. (Sundaram's Law of Income-tax' 6th Edn. p. 723).

[7] The wording of S. 12a shows that it is only applicable to the managing agents of companies. There are certain conditions clearly prescribed by that S. (1) there must be an agreement to share the commission with a third party or parties; (2) that agreement must be for adequate consideration; (3) the managing agent must file a declaration showing the details of such profit-sharing; and (4) the Income tax Officer must be satisfied as to the facts contained in that declaration.

[8] Having regard to the clear language of that section there is no escape from the conclusion that the submission of a declaration as specified in that section is a condition precedent to the managing agents claiming that they are chargeable only on the share to which they are entitled under the particular agreement.

[9] Learned counsel appearing for the assesses has drawn our attention to S. 10 (2) (xv), Income.tax Act. Section 10 deals with the profits or gains of business, profession or vocation and sub.s. (2) specifies certain allowances which have got to be taken into account in computing such profits or gains. Under sub-cl. (15) an allowance permissible in respect of 'any expenditure (not being in the nature of capital expenditure or personal expenses of the assessee) laid out or expended wholly and exclusively for the purpose of such business, profession or vocation.

[10] Mr. Kar contends that if we take the submission of a declaration as a condition precedent to his clients getting relief under S. 12A be can still apart from that section get the identical relief by virtue of sub-cl. (15) of S. 10 (2).

[11] I must, however, point out that there is no finding of the tribunal that the expenditure in question was laid out or expended wholly or exclusively for the purpose of the managing agency business. In the absence of such finding it is impossible for us to entertain the point. But Mr. Kar contends that having regard to the finding by the tribunal that the payments were made by the managing agents out of the managing agency commission to the four persons named therein and that they were proved by youchers, we ought to infer that his clients satisfied the conditions prescribed in sub.cl. (15). Difficulty often exists in deciding whether a particular payment or expenditure is allowable for the purpose of income-tax.

[12] In my view, S. 10 (2) (xv) and S. 12A should be read together and the proper construction is that if the managing agent of a company claim that they should not be made liable to pay taxes on the total amount of the managing agency commission, then they must satisfy the conditions prescribed in S. 12A, although it may be that the payments made to the other parties constituted expenditure actually laid out or made wholly for the purpose of the managing agency business or solely for the purpose of earning the managing agency commission. In my opinion the two sections can be reconciled. Section 10 is a general enactment with regard to all businesses. Section 12A makes certain specific enactment with regard to a special kind of business the managing agency of a company. Hence the special or particular enactment should be operative and should be considered as an exception to the general rule.

[13] In Muthu Chettiar v. Meenakshisundaram Ayyar, 47 O. L. J. 183: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 P. C. 35) Lord Atkinson pointed cut that every part of a document should be brought into action in order to collect from the whole one uniform and consistent sense. His Lordship cited a judgment of Lord Ellenborough wherein it was observed that the intention of the parties should be collected from the whole context of the instrument so as to make one entire and consistent construction of the whole document. The same principle is applicable to the construction of a statute. A statute should be read as a whole, and it is an established rule that con. struction should be made of all the parts together, and not of one part or section only by itself. Each section should be brought into play and that construction should be put which does not make one section repugnant to another.

[14] Mr. Kar has referred us to a number of cases including Commissioner of Income tax, Bombay v. Tata Sons Ltd., A. I. R. (26) 1939 Bom. 283 : (1939-7 I. T. R. 195 : 183 I. C. 780). In that case the assessees who were the managing agents of a company were entitled to receive a commission based on profits with a certain salary per year not depending upon profits. In a certain year the company was urgently in need of funds and therefore, they procured a loan from a third person in order to finance the company. An agreement in respect of the pay. ment of that loan was entered into between the company, the assessee and the lender and it was provided that the assessee should give and assign to the lender a certain share in the commission which the former might be entitled to receive from the company.

[15] The question arose as to whether in assessing the income of the assessee the amount of commission paid to the lender should be omitted. Beaumont C. J., and Rangnekar J. held that the agreement between the assessee, the company and the lender operated as an assignment of the share of the income which the assessee was entitled to receive from the company. Therefore, that part of the assessee's income which was assigned to the lender no longer formed part of the assessee's income and could not therefore be assessed as such. In any event, the payment of share of commission to the lender was, in a commercial sense, an expenditure incurred solely for the purpose of earning profits or gains in the conduct of the agency business and, therefore, it should be excluded in computing the assessee's income as the managing agent of the company. In his judgment, the learned Chief Justice referred to Pondicherry Ry. Co. Ltd. v. Income-tax Commissioner, 58 I A. 239 : (A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 165) as also the case of Tata Hydro-Electric Agencies, 64 I. A. 215: (A. I. R. (24) 1937 P. C. 139) and the later case of the Judicial Committee, India Radio and Cable Communications Co. Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency and Aden, I. L. R. 1937 Bom. 591: 1937.5 I.T.R. 270: (A. I. R. (24) 1937 P. C. 189). edi bidi bevissoo saw

[16] The significant fact is that this case dealt with assessment of income tax during the period prior to 1939 when S. 12A was not on the statute book. Managing agents who are paid commission on the profits of a company often enter into agreements with third parties who lend them moneys or render some other services promising to give the latter a certain proportion of the commission. The Bombay High Court had held in the case of Tata Hydro-Electric Agencies Ltd. v. Commissioner of Income tax, Bombay, 1935-4 I.T.R. 92 and in Commr. of Income.tax, Bombay v. Macdonald & Co., 1931-3 I.T.R. 459 : (A I.B. (22) 1935 Bom. 197) that the managing agents were not entitled to deduct in computing their income the share of the commission which was paid to the other parties on the ground that the sums paid to such third parties represented portions of the profits and were not really expenditure for earning profits. The Judicial Committee in the Tata Hydro-Electric case, 64 I.A. 215 : (A.I.R. (24) 1937 P.C. 189) pointed out that this principle was not applicable to such cases. In the Tata case the commission paid by the managing agents was held to be not a profit or gain but it was an item or factor in the computation of the assessee's profits or gains. It is not always correct to say that a payment the making of which is conditional on profits being earned cannot properly be described as an expenditure incurred for the purpose of earning such profits. See The Indian Radio Case, 1937-5 I.T.R. 270: (A.I.R. (24) 1937 P.C. 189). Section 12A was introduced in order to remove all doubts on this point and the section provides the means by which each of the recipients of the managing agency commission may be charged only on the share which he actually received and, if he fulfils the conditions mentioned in that section, he may claim separate assessment on his individual share.

[17] Learned counsel for the assessee has urged that even if he does not fulfil the conditions prescribed by S. 12A he can still ignore the same and come under S. 10 (2) (xv). To put that construction would be to make S. 12A illusory. That section applies to the managing agents of a company in every case where there is an agreement for sharing the managing agency commission. If such an agreement for sharing of commission brings the assessee under S. 10 (2) (xv) the statute now says that if an an assessee wants to be charged only for the amount he has actually received out of the total managing agency commission, then he must file a declaration and prove the facts stated in the declaration to the satisfaction of the taxing authorities.

[18] Dr. Gupta has drawn our attention to a printed form of declaration to be made under the provisions of S. 12A, Income tax Act, 1927, in respect of managing agency commission. That seems to be in accord with what is prescribed in S. 12A and it has got to be signed by the managing agents as well by the person or persons sharing the managing agency commission. This section has been introduced to safeguard the revenues of the country and in order to avoid possible evasion of the tax by some kind of profit sharing arrangement. If the agreement is bona fide, there ought not to be any difficulty in getting such declaration signed by all the parties.

(19) Whether a particular agreement brings an assessee within cl. (15) of S. 10 (2) will depend upon the facts of each case. But if there is an agreement whereby the remuneration of a managing agent of a company is being shared by some other parties, then the managing agent should fulfil the conditions prescribed in S. 12A in order to get relief or deduction under the statute.

[20] Therefore the answer to the question formulated in the statement of case must be in the affirmative. The tribunal was right in holding that the non-compliance with the provisions of 8. 12A disentitled the assessee from claiming the deduction asked for.

(21) The Income tax authorities are entitled to their costs of this reference. Certified for two counsel.

Superintendent and Legal Affairs, on behalf of the State of West Bengal — Appellant v. Kunjalal Gadia—Respondent

Govt. Appeal No. 4 of 1950, D/- 25th July 1950.

(a) Bengal Foodgrains Control Order (1945), Cls. 2 (c), 3 (1) and 10 (1) — Powdered rice if foodgrain—Possession of, without permit or licence.

Powdered rice is not 'foodgrain' within the meaning of the word in Cl. 2 (c) of the Order, and, therefore, possession of large quantity of powdered rice without a permit or licence is not contrary to the Order and, therefore, not an offence under S. 7, Essential Supplies Act, 1946, unless it is established that the accused ground the rice into powder because his possession before the grinding would be possession of husked rice.

(b) Bengal Foodgrains Control Order (1945), Cl. 2 (c) — 'By-product' if means only product.

The Court must presume that words used in a statute or an order made under a statute are used in their ordinary sense, and it is very rarely a Court will hold that a word in a statute is used as meaning something entirely different from its ordinary grammatical meaning. The word 'by-product' in Ci. 2 (c) cannot be construed as product only because by-product is a secondary product produced incidentally in the course of the production of some other commodity which is the primary object of the process or manufacture.

Paras 13 and 16]

N. K. Sen-for Appellant. S. S. Mukherji with Kishore Prosad Mookerji

Harries C.J.—This is an appeal preferred by the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs on behalf of the State of West Bengal from an order of a learned Sessions Judge allowing an appeal from a learned Magistrate of the 1st Class who had convicted the respondent of an offence under S. 7. Essential Supplies Act, read with the Bengal Foodgrains Control Order, 1945. The appellants contend that the view of the learned Sessions Judge as to the meaning of the word 'foodgrain' in the Bengal Foodgrains Control Order, 1945, is erroneous and, therefore, the order of acquittal should be set aside.

(2) The facts of the case can be very shortly stated as follows: In the very early morning of 29th April 1949, the respondent and others were seen loading a lorry in the village of Borhat near the town of Burdwan. A constable interfered and eventually the produce which was being loaded on to the lorry was seized and it is said that a very large quantity of rice flour and broken rice was taken possession of by the authorities. The respondent and others were then prosecuted in the Court of a learned Magis. trate for an offence of being in possession or storing 111 mds. 15 srs. of rice without a permit or license as required by the Bengal Foodgrains Control Order, 1945, and in particular Ol. 3 (1) and cl. 10 (1) of that order. Being in possession of this large quantity of rice without a permit was held by the learned Magistrate to be con. trary to the order and, therefore, an offence under S. 7, Essential Supplies Act, 1946, had been committed. The respondent was accordingly convicted under that section and sentenced to six months rigorous imprisonment. The rice seized was ordered to be forfeited or confiscated.

[3] The respondent preferred an appeal to the Court of the Sessions Judge who held that what was seized by the police was not 'rice' as that terms is used in the Bangal Foodgrains Control Order, 1945. That being so, the order in the opinion of the Sessions Judge did not apply and, therefore, no offence under s. 7. Essential Supplies Act, had been committed. The learned Sessions Judge, therefore, allowed the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and acquitted the respondent. It is from that order that the present appeal has been preferred.

brancer, on behalf of the State has contended that the view of the learned Sessions Judge was of opinion that what the witnesses described as powdered rice was not foodgrain within the Bengal Foodgrains Control Order and therefore no permit was required for its possession. Mr. Sen has contended that powdered rice is clearly rice and therefore this large quantity could not be validly possessed without a permit.

[5] "Foodgrain" is defined in ol. 2 (c), Bengal Foodgrains Control Order, 1945, in the following terms :

"Foodgrain means any of the commodities specified in Sch. 1 to this Order or any bye-product thereof, and includes any other commodity which the Provincial Government may from time to time declare, by notification in the Official Gazette, to be a commodity to which this order applies."

[6] Schedule 1 to the Order sets out six commodities which fall within the term "food.

grain" and they are:

"(1) Rice in the busk (paddy), (2) Rice busked, (3) Wheat and Wheat Products (including Atta. Maida, Soji, Bawa and Bran). (4) Rahar, (5) Masur, (6) Gram, any variety, including Mung."

[7] It will be seen that a distinction appears to have been drawn between rice and wheat.

Both wheat and wheat products are foodgrain, but only rice in the husk and rice husked are foodgrain. Rice products are not included in the term "foodgrain". That seems to have been deliberate.

(sl Mr. Sen has contended that what was seized in this lorry which was being loaded at the instance of the respondent was rice husked. But it is clear from the evidence that what was seized was rice which had been processed, that is, rice which had been powdered deliberately and not accidentally. The most important witness on this aspect of the case is Amulya Bhattacharji, who was an Assistant Sub Inspector of Police attached to the Burdwan police station. He describes what was seized as a truck load of powdered rice.24 bags containing powdered rice looking like flour and 27 bags containing powdered rice looking like suji. His description makes it clear that all the produce which was seized was powdered rice, though some of it had been reduced to a finer powder than the remainder. The Sub-Inspector uses the terms "powdered rice," that is, rice which has been powdered and indeed it seems to have been conceded throughout these proceedings in the Courts below that the rice was rice which had been deliberately powdered and some of it reduced to a fine powder and the remainder to a rougher powder.

[9] The question arises whether this rice powder can be regarded as 'foodgrain' as that term is used in the Bengal Foodgrains Control Order. The suggestion is that it is husked rice, but clearly that is not so. What is said to be foodgrain is either unbusked or busked rice. Unhusked rice is of course paddy. Nobody can suggest that this powdered rice can be described as paddy. Husked rice is rice grain after the outer covering has been removed. The term 'husked rice' is used to mean the grains of rice from which the outer covering has been removed and the grain in many cases polished. The term 'husked rice' cannot in my view be appropriately used to describe a powder whether of a fine or of a rougher texture. Husked rice can only mean rice grain from which the outer covering or coverings have been removed.

[10] I think it could be truly said that powdered rice is a rice product because it is produced from rice by the simple process of grinding. The schedule, as I have said, includes in the term 'foodgrain' not only wheat but wheat products and the schedules shows that Atta and Suji are wheat products within the meaning of that Order. Atta and Suji are really grains of wheat ground and powdered down and if Atta and Suji cannot be regarded as wheat, but only as wheat products, it appears to me to follow that this powdered rice could not be regarded as husked rice but only as a rice product. Unfortunately however, rice products are not included in the word 'foodgrain' and as I have said earlier it would appear that the omission is deliberate. That being so, it is I think quite impossible to hold that what was seized was husked rice and therefore covered by the order.

[11] Mr. Sen then contended that if what was seized could not be described as husked rice it could be described as a by-product of rice. As I have said earlier the term 'foodgrain' as used in the Order means not only the commodities specified in Sch. 1, but any by-products of those commodities. Mr. Sen has contended that powdered rice can be rightly regarded as a by-product of husked rice.

[12] The word "by-product" is a common English word and is defined in Murray's English Dictionary as "a secondary product; a substance of more or less value obtained in the course of a specific process, though not its primary object." If what is obtained in a process is the primary object it is a product. If what is obtained is subsidiary to the commodity which is the primary object of the process, then what is obtained is a by-product. For example, coal tar is obtained in the manufacture of coal gas; the primary object of the activities of a gas works company is the production of coal gas for lighting and heating. But in producing the coal gas large quantities of coal tar are produced. It is produced incidentally to the manufacture of the main object of the enterprise; and that being so, it is known as a by-product. Similarly, in the manufacture of petrol from crude oil a number of other very useful commodities are produced. Their production is subsidiary to the main objectof the process, namely, the production of petrol and that being so, they are rightly referred to as by-products.

[13] Can it be said that powdered rice, whether the powder be of a very fine or a rougher texture, is a by product of husked rice? This powdered rice is not produced incidentally in the production or manufacture of something else. It is produced by grinding grains of husked rice. It could, I think, well be described as a product of rice, but it could not be described as a by-product; that is, as a secondary product produced in the course of the production of some other commodity which is the primary object of the process or manufacture. It seems to me quite clear that the word 'by product' is quite inappropriate to describe what is only rice powdered or crushed and reduced into the form of fine or rougher flour.

[14] Mr. Sen has pointed out that 'by product' is used in a very wide sense. On 1st February 1950, an amendment of the definition of the word 'foodgrain' in the Bengal Foodgrains Control Order, 1945, was notified in the gazette. The notification is in these terms:

"In cl. (c) of Para 2 of the said order after the words 'any by-product thereof' insert the words and brackets (excepting muri and chira)".

[15] The effect of this amendment was to exclude muri and chira from the meaning of the word "by-product" and Mr. Sen has rightly pointed out that neither muri nor chira complies with the definition of the word "by-product". Muri is nothing more than fried or baked rice and chira is rice crushed and fried. Neither muri nor chira is produced incidentally in the course of the production of some primary commodity. Muri and chira are made by frying or crushing and frying rice. They may well be products of rice or husked rice, but they can never be regarded as by-products. It seems to me quite clear that whoever drafted this amendment had not a clear idea of the dictionary meaning, and indeed, the ordinary accepted meaning of the word "by-product." Nobody ordinarily would describe muri and chira as byproducts of rice; nevertheless in the amendment the suggestion is that they are. Mr. Sen has contended that as the draftsman of this amand. ment appeared to think that muri and chira were by-products of rice, we ought to hold that what was meant in ol. (c) of Para. 2, Bengal Foodgrains Control Order, 1945, was not a byproduct but a product. In short, we ought to read the definition of 'foodgrain' as meaning "any of the commodities specified in Sch. 1 to this order or any products thereof."

[16] The Court must presume that words used in a statute or an order made under a statute are used in their ordinary sense, and it is very racely a Court will hold that a word in a statute is used as meaning something entirely different from its ordinary grammatical meaning. We should be very loath to construe the word 'byproduct' as meaning only 'product'. But it seems to me that the order itself makes it quite impossible for any Court to construe the word 'by-product' as meaning 'product' only. As I have said earlier, the commodities specified in Sch. 1 as being 'foodgrain' are not only rice but wheat and wheat products. It is therefore clear that wheat products are treated as something entirely different from by-products of wheat. If the word 'by-product' in cl. 2 (c) of the Order simply meant products, then the words "and wheat products (icoluding Atta, Maida, Suji Raws and Bran)" would have found no place in sob, 1 of the order. The draftsman of the order clearly drew a sharp distinction between products and by products and we cannot give the word 'by product' in the order a different meaning because it appears to have been misunderstood by the draftsman of the amendment. In my view by products are something quite different from products and whatever we regard powdered rice to be, we can never regard it as a by-product of rice. To be a by-product of rice it would have to be produced, incidentally to the manufacture of some other commodity, from rice, the manufacture of which other commodity was the primary object of the process. In my view this powdered rice cannot be regarded as a by-product of either husked or unhusked rice.

[17] As this powdered rice is neither unhusked or husked rice nor a by product of either of them the commodity does not come within the definition of the word 'foodgrain' in ol. 2 (c) of the Bengal Foodgrains Control Order, 1945, and therefore no permit for possession of the large quantity seized was necessary. The view of the learned Sessions Judge that no offence was committed was right and therefore the appeal must fail.

[18] It was suggested by my learned brother in argument that the respondent could be convicted if it was established that he ground the rice into powder because his possession before the grinding would be possession of husked rice; unfortunately, however, there is no evidence upon which we could hold that he produced the rice powder. There was evidence that there was some machinery on the respondents premises but no evidence that it was machinery for grinding rice. Further no one spoke to grinding operations by the respondent. That being so, we cannot hold that the respondent was in possession of husked rice before grinding.

[19] I appreciate that the view that we are bound to take is technical. There seems to be no reason at all why powdered rice which is food just as much as husked rice should not come within the order. However, the order creates criminal offences and before a man can be convicted it must be clearly shown that his conduct amounts to an offence under the statute or order under which he is prosecuted. As, by what would appear to be an error of drafting, the order was not drafted in such a manner as to cover pow. dered rice, the possession of the same cannot be an offence. That being so, the respondent could not be convicted. The remedy lies in an amendment of the definition of the word 'foodgrain' in Sch. 1, but with that we are not concerned.

[20] In the result this appeal is dismissed and the order of acquittal is confirmed. The powdered rice seized must be returned to the respondent forthwith.

[21] The respondent will be discharged from his bail and his bail bond is cancelled.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 3, R. 4 - Appointment of another lawyer without discharging previous lawyer-Duty of Court.

Before the Court grants the leave to discharge a lawyer the Court is entitled to make suitable provisions for the payment of the sums due to the outgoing pleader in respect of the service rendered by him and in respect of the costs incurred by him on behalf of his client. It is not open to a client as a subterfuge to engage another lawyer without formally discharging the previous lawyer and without arranging for payment of the sums due to him. [Para 6]

Hence where a person in whose favour an award of compensation in land acquisition proceedings has been made, engages another lawyer for withdrawing the compensation money from the Court without terminating the services of his previous lawyer, the Court may allow the new lawyer to withdraw the same provided a sufficient portion thereof is retained in Court in order to cover the claim for costs which the previous lawyer may establish against the client. Order .- This Rule was obtained by the petitioner against an order of the President of the Tribunal refusing the application of the petitioner for withdrawal of the money lying before him through another alvocate. The facts as they appear on record are very unfortunate.

[2] Mr. Shome was engaged by the petitioner as an advocate in connection with an acquisi. tion case pending before the Collector. A certain sum was awarded by the Collector and a refe. rence was filed through Mr. Shome. The reference succeeded in part. Thereafter it appears disputes arose between Mr. Shome and the petitioner as regards the payment of the sums due to Mr. Shome as his fees for the work done by him in the acquisition case and in the reference case. The petitioner engaged another lawyer to withdraw the compensation money awarded to bim which was lying before the President of the Tribunal. Mr. Shome made an application for payment to him of the sums which he claimed take to recover the sums due to him from the on account of his fees and costs. This application was rejected by the President of the Tribupal by his order dated 7th January 1919. Mr. Shomet has not moved this Court in revision against the order of the President of the Tribunal red fusing his prayer for payment of the sums due to him out of the money lying with the President. The petitioner, as we have said, has moved this Court in revision.

[3] Mr. Sen, appearing for the petitioner, raises two points: in the first place, he contends that the service of Mr. Shome came to an end with the disposal of the reference case and as such he is no longer the advocate entitled to appear on behalf of the petitioner, aidica at itula

[4] It is not necessary to express any fical opinion on this point. It seems to us that prima facie Mr. Shome did not cease to be the advocate entitled to act on behalf of the petitioner the moment the reference case was disposed of.

[5] The second contention raised by Mr. San is that even if Mr. Shome is still the advocate entitled to appear on behalf of the petitioner, there is no bar to the petitioner engaging another lawyer for withdrawing the money lying before the President of the Tribunal." ed lo gair sem

[6] Mr. Ghosb, appearing on behalf of the opposite party, has referred us to two decisions, one in the case of Radhika Debi v. Ramasray Prosad, 9 Pat. 865 : (A. I. B (18) 1931 Pat. 197), and the other in Pankaj Kumar v. Sudhir Kumar, 37 C. W. N. 998: (a. I. B. (21) 1934 Cal. 58). It is true that before the Court grants the leave to discharge a lawyer under O. 3, R. 4, Oivil P. O., the Court is entitled to make suitable provisions for the payment of the sums due to the outgoing pleader in respect of the service rendered by him and in respect of the costs incurred by him on behalf of his client. We also agree with Mr. Ghosh that as a subterfuge the petitioner cannot engage another lawyer without formally discharging the previous law. yer and without arranging for payment of the sums due to him. The sum alleged to be due to Mr. Shome on his bill submitted to the petitioner amounts to Rs. 1,324. Mr. Ghosh further states that certain additional costs have been incurred by Mr. Guosh for contesting certain proceedings consequent on the application for withdrawal of the money through another lawyer. The propriety of the bill, or of the additional expenses so incurred is a matter which has to be decided in appropriate proceedings. We think the rights of Mr. Shome will be amply safeguarded if we direct that out of the compensation money lying with the president, a sum of R. 1,700 be retained in Court till the disposal of the legal proseeding which the opposite party may be advised to petitioner. These proceedings should be filed within three months from date. If no such proceedings are filed, the sum of Rs. 1700 will also be paid out to the petitioner. The balance of the compensation money which is lying with the President may be allowed to be withdrawn by the lawyer which the petitioner has already engaged or some other lawyer which the petitioner may choose to engage, provided be has the required authority to withdraw such money.

[7] The rule is disposed of on the aforesaid

terms.

[8] There will be no order as to costs.

K.S. Order accordingly.

Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction Matter No.31 of

(a) Industrial Disputes Act (XIV [14] of 1947), S. 19 (3) and (4)-Award -Modification of -Power of Tribunal - Modification giving retrospective nullitication-Validity.

An award under the Industrial Disputes Act, 1947, passed on 25-5-1948 and in force for one year, declared enter alia that a certain rate of dearness allowance would come into force from January 1947. By a subsequent award dated 20-5-1949 the previous award was modified by declaring this term inoperative. In an application to set aside the latter award it was contended that the modification did not affect the interests of the workers as the original award had ceased to be effective after 25-5-1949 :

Held that the contention was not right as it overlooked the fact that though the award of 15-8-1948, had become ineffective by the passing of time, the rights flowing therefrom had not been wiped out. The award directed payment of certain dearness allowance which, if not paid, created a debt in favour of the workmen, and it was a binding debt, which could be enforced by a civil sult and that the penalty clause in the Act did not par such a suit.

That the second award was invalid as the Tribunal proposed not only to modify a part of the award but to give it a retrospective nullification, which was beyond the jurisdiction of the Tribunal conferred on it by S. 19 (3) Proviso. [Paras 9 and 12]

Order.-This is an application for a writ of certiorari to bring up an award made by an Industrial Tribunal on 20.5.1949, to this Court for having it quashed.

[2] There are various prayers in the petition which it is not necessary to state. 1950 Cal./78

- (3) There was a long standing dispute between respondent 2 and its workmen which was referred for adjudication to respondent 1 under the Industrial Disputes Act, who made an award on 15.5.1948. The Government by its order dated 25.5.1948, declared it to be binding on the parties for one year from the date of the order.
- [4] By the award, the Tribunal directed, inter alia, that the workmen should be paid dearness allowance at a certain rate and that "the new scale of dearness allowance would come into force from January 1917 . . . "
- [5] By a subsequent order dated 10-10-1948, the local Government in exercise of the powers conferred on it by the proviso of 8. 19 (3) referred the award to respondent 1 who was constituted a Tribupal, for a decision in respect of matters referred to in the proviso.

[6] The order is as follows : "Government of West Bengal Commerce, Labour & Industries Department Labour.

No. 2762 Lab. dated 10-8-1949.

ORDER

Whereas an industria: dispute arose between Messrs. Atlas Works Ltd., of 119-A Ripon St., Calcutta and their workmen represented by the Bengal General Engineering and Metal Factory Workers Union, 14 Motisil St., Calcutta and on a reference of the said dispute to a Tribunal, an award was made thereon by the said Tribunal which was published in the Carcutta Gaz-tte dated 3-6-1948 under Order No. 1680 Lab., dated 25-5-1948.

And whereas on a representation made by the said Messrs. Atlas Works Ltd of 119-A Ripon Street, Calcutta, the Provincial Government considers that there have been material changes in the circumstances on which the said award was based.

And whereas it is expedient that the said award should be referred to a Tribunal constituted under the Industrial Disputes Act 1947.

Now, therefore, in exercise of the power conferred by the proviso to sub s. (3) of 19 of the aid Act the Governor is pleased to appoint Sri P. R. Mukerjes, Additional District Judge, to be the Tribunal for decision in respect of matters referred to in the said

[7] The Tribunal so constituted framed certain issues.

[8] It was contended on behalf of the Union which represented the workmen before the Tribunal that it had no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the issues. The tribunal did not give effect to this contention, with the result that an application was made to this Court for a writ of certiorari for bringing up the records of the proceedings before the tribunal to this Court and for quashing the same. I dismissed the application on the ground that it was premature. The Tribunal then decided the issues and on 20.5.1949 mad an award in these words :

"Terms regarding the amount of dearness allowance and the payment of the same with retrospective effect as per award dated 15-5-1948 shall cease to be in operation and the award is amended and modified accordingly."

This is the award which is sought to be set aside.

[9] On behalf of the respondent, it was contended that the award of 15.5-1948 had ceased to be effective after 25-5-1949 and, therefore, the modification of the award made by the award of 20.5.1949 could not affect the interest of the petitioner. Therefore, this Court should not make an order which is of no benefit to the petitioner. This contention, I do not think, is right. It overlooks the fact that though the award of 15.5-1948 had become ineffective by the passing of time, the rights flowing therefrom have not been wiped out. The award directed payment of certain dearness allowance which, if not paid, created a debt in favour of the workmen, and it was a binding debt. The award binds the parties in the same way, as if the terms were agreed between them. In my view, the payment of this debt can be enforced by a civil suit. It is a fallacy to say that the penalty clause in the Act bars such a suit. See Couch v. Steel, (1854) 3 El. & Bl. 402 : (23 L.J Q.B. 121), Simmond's case, (1921) 1 K.B. 616: (90 L.J.K.B. 609) and Standard Vacuum Oil Co. v. Avelino D'Souza, 1946 Labour Gazette 331). The petitioners, therefore, are entitled to make the application.

nal in making the award of 20.5 1949 has acted in excess of its jurisdiction. The tribunal has only a limited jurisdiction under S. 19 (3) proviso, viz., to decide whether there has been a material change in the circumstances, in which the award in the said paragraph referred to was made, and to decide whether or not the award should by reason of such change cease to be in operation before the expiry of the period so fixed and to determine the period of operation of the award. That is the only thing the Tribunal can do and nothing else. An award can be modified only under S. 15. Sub-section (4) of that section says :

"Save as provided in the proviso to sub s. (3) of S. 19 an award declared to be binding under that section shall not be called in question in any manner."

The award in the proviso referred to is the entire award as the presence of the word "the" indicates, the award which was declared to be binding on the parties.

it was suggested on behalf of the respondent that the award means any part of the award. That submission is wrong, as is clear from the word 'the' before 'award' in the proviso.

only to modify a part of the award but to give it a retrospective nullification, which, I think, i beyond the jurisdiction of the tribunal.

[13] I, therefore, set aside the award and direct defendant 2 to pay the cost of this application. The rule is made absolute to that extent.

Section 383 does not make any provision for partial revocation of a succession certificate but provides for revocation of the certificate in its entirely.

Where a succession certificate is granted to several persons jointly and one of the grantees dies, the survivors cannot give proper discharge. The grantees of a certificate of succession have no estate in them. They are authorised only to collect the debt and to do nothing more. There cannot be any question of survivorship as in the case of executors or administrators. There must necessarily have to be a fresh certificate to empower the survivors to collect the debt and give the discharge.

Order.— I regret I cannot accede to the prayer of the petitioner. I know what the refusal means. The applicant will have to make an application for a fresh certificate of succession Even though it is to collect the debt for which a certificate had already been taken and the duty paid, the duty prescribed by the Courtfees Act must be again paid: In re, Saroje Bachini, 20 C. W. N. 1125 at p. 1128: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal. 380). This means further depletion of a loan fund. The debt for which the certificate was taken is a small one

[2] I wish I could grant the prayer. If the point involved were a technical one, I would have ignored it, and granted the prayer.

- (3) But, in my view, the point is not a technical one at all. It is one of substance. It touches the jurisdiction of the Court.
- [4] The fact may be said in two or three sentences. The certificate was granted to several persons jointly. One of them has died. The survivors ask that the name of the deceased be deleted in the certificate, so that they may act on it Counsel calls it a 'partial revocation' of the certificate.
- [40] Has the Court jurisdiction to do what is asked for ? In order to do that, the Court must amend the order on which the certificate was issued. The order has been drawn up and completed. Can the Court amend the order now? Section 153, Civil P. C. gives power to Court to amend judgment, decrees or orders only in specific cases. If the decree or order sought to be amended does not come within S. 152, the Court can correct the errors only under the review section; or under the inherent power of the Court to amend or vary its own decree or order so as to carry out its own meaning. But the amendment asked for is not within the rules mentioned above. It follows therefore that I cannot amend the order. How can I then amend the certificate?
- (5) I felt great doubt in the matter when the application was first moved. I asked counsel under what section he was making the application and whether he had any authority for it. Counsel on that day asked for time to consider the matter, I gave him time. Next day he referred me to a judgment reported in Sharif un-nisa V. Masoom Ali, 42 ALL. 317: (A.I.B. (7) 1920 ALL. 189); counsel relies on a passage at p. 352. The passage is:

"We are of opinion that if a . . . certificate has once been granted in respect of the entire debt, and it becomes apparent to the Court that circumstances have sub-equently changed so as to bring into operation cl. (d) or (s), or both, of S. 18 of Act VII [7] of 1889, it is open to the Court to pass orders having the effect of a partial revocation of the succession certificate once granted, or to modify the terms of that grant in such manner as the interest of justice may seem to require."

[6] Section 18 of Act VII (7) of 1889 has been replaced by 8, 389 of the Act of 1925. There is no difference in the wording of the two sections. On the authority of that case, it was contended on behalf of the applicant that S. 883 (d) authorised the Court to grant the prayer, I was not satisfied. So, I requested the learned standing counsel to appear as amicus curia and argue the case. He was good enough to do so. He placed the opposite view in an argument brief and lucid. I am grateful for the assistance.

[7] The Standing Counsel referred me to a passage in Tristraw and Coot's Probate Practice, £dn. 19, p. 327. The passage is this:

"Alteration in a grant has been allowed where the error was in the surname, christian name, address, status, date of death or place of death of the deceased." That passage indicates what errors the Court can amend in a succession certificate. I do not suggest that the English practice must be followed in preference to our rule or practice

(if any). [8] First as to our rules. The relevant rule is R. 21 Ohap. XXXV of the Original Side Rules. That rule provides for amendment of a certificate, so as to extend its effect throughout British India. That rule does not meet the point in hand.

[9] Turning to the sections of the Succession Act, the material sections are Ss. 370 to 390, Part 10 of the Act. These sections replace the Succession Certificate Act (Act VII [7] of 1889). There has been no material change in the phraseology of the sections, relating to the matter and consideration.

[10] The Act of 1925 is a consolidating Act. It does not profess to amend or alter the provisions of the Act consolidated. Prima facie therefore, the same effect ought to be given to its provisions as was given to those of the Act for which it was substituted Mitchell v. Simpson, (1890) 25 Q. B. D. 189: (59 L. J. Q. B. 955). I make this observation, as I shall refer to certain decisions on the Act of 1889.

[11] I now proceed to examine the relevant sections. Section 870 places restriction on grant of certificates. Section 371 defines which Court has jurisdiction to grant certificates. Section 372 prescribes what particulars are to be given in the application for a certificate. Section 373 lays down the procedure on the application. Section 374 provides for the content of a certificate. It reade:

"Where the District Judge grants a certificate, he shall therein specify the debt and securities set forth in the application for the certificate, and may thereby empower the person, to whom the certificate is granted," to do the things specified in that section. Section 976 makes provision for extension of a certificate to any debt or security, not originally specified therein. Section 377 speaks of forms of the certificate and the extended certificate. The forms are rather important. I take a specimen form. It is addressed to the person to whom the certificate is granted.

"To A. B.

Whereas this certificate is accordingly granted to you and . . . empowers you to collect those debts (debts specified in the application)."

[12] I have underlined (here italioised) the word 'you' to emphasise that the grant is made to named person or persons and he is or they are the only person or persons who is or are empowered by the Court to collect the debt, etc.

[13] Section 378 empowers the Court to amend a certificare. That section is:

"Where a District Judge has not conferred on the holder of a certificate any power with respect to a security specified in the certificate, or has only empowered him to receive interest or dividends on, or to negotiate or transfer, the security, the Judge may, on application made by petition and on cause shown to his satisfaction amend the certificate by conferring any of the powers mentioned in S. 374 or by substituting any one for any other of those powers."

[14] The most important section for our purpose is S 3-3 That section deals with revocation of certificate. That section is:

"A certificate granted under this part may be revoked for any of the following causes, namely:

(a) that the proceedings to obtain the certificate were defective in sub-tance;

(b) that the certificate was obtained fraudulently by the making of a false suggestion, or by the concealment from the Court of something material to the case;

(c) that the certificate was obtained by means of an untrue all egation of a fact essential in point of law to justify the grant thereof, though such allegation was made in gnorance or inadvertently,

(d) that the certificate has become useless and inoperative through circumstances;

(e) that a decree or order made by a competent Court in a suit or other proceeding with respect to effects comprising debt or securities specified in the certificate renders it proper that the certificate should be revoked."

- [15] I have said in an earlier part of the judgment that counsel relies on sub-s. (d). Section 383 provides for revocation of a certificate. It does not make any provision for what counsel calls a partial revocation. It is clear that subses. (a), (b) (c) and (e) provide for revocation of the certificate in its entirety e.g., if a certificate is obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, etc. These sub-clauses strike at the root. Having regard to its setting, I do not think sub-s. (d) permits revocation of a different nature.
- revocation of "a certificate granted (d) that the certificate becomes useless and inoperative through circumstances." I have underlined (here italicised) the words a and the. The revocation is to be of the certificate which was granted. It is not a partial revocation. The whole certificate may be revoked if at all but not partially. Section 383 does not permit 'partial revocation'.
- [17] The words of sub-s. (d) have been judicially interpreted. I shall consider only three important decisions. They are decisions on the old Act, but the Act of 1925 being a consolidating Act, as I have said before, these decisions are applicable to the 1925 Act.
- [18] Construing the words "becomes useless and inoperative," it was held that the words imply the discovery of something which, if known at the date of the grant, would have been a good ground of refusing it. Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Sakwarbai, 26 Bom. 792 (4 Bom. L. R. 637), Gour Chandra v. Sarat Sundari, 40 cal. 50: (15 I. C 44). This Calcutta case follows the Bombay case, a judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. These decisions say that the discovery must be of something which existed at the time of the grant but was not known then; e.g. the discovery of a later will or codicil; or discovery that the will was forged, or that the alleged testator is still living.

[19] Gour Chandra v. Sarat Sundari, 40 Cal. 50: (15 I. C. 44) is a decision on Expln. (4) to S. 50, Probate and Administration Act (Act V [5] of 1881) which is reproduced in S. 268 (d). Succession Act, 1925. Clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) of Ss. 263 and 383 respectively are identical. Therefore, Gour Chandra v. Sarat Sundari, 40 Cal. 50: (15 I. O. 44) is an authority for the construction of S. 383 (d) of the Act of 1926.

[20] These decisions, however, have not been followed in Surendra v. Amrita, 47 Cal. 115:
(A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 584). That is a judgment of a Bench presided over by Sir Ashutosh Mukherjee and Walmsley JJ. After a review of a large number of cases including the Bombay, the Calcutta and the Allahabad cases, I have cited above, their Lordships observed at p. 123:

"We must consequently take it as settled law that the circumstances which make the grant useless and inoperative and thus 'justify revocation may have come into existence after the original grant was made."

According to Surendra v. Amrita, 47 Cal. 115:

(A.I.R. (7) 1920 Cal. 584) an event which happens subsequent to the grant may affect the original grant itself.

[21] That then being the principle, the question is whether the death of one of the donees is an event which comes within sub-s (d) of s. 383.

[22] In cases of probate or letters of administration, there are specific sections making provision for the death of one of the granters where the grant is made to several persons jointly. But, there is no such provision in the sections relating to the grant of a succession certificate. There being no express provision, can such a provision be implied?

[23] The donees of a certificate of succession have no estate in them. They are authorised only to collect the debt and to .do nothing more. There cannot be any question of survivorship, as in the case of executors or administrators, (see Ss. 811 and 312, Succession Act).

[24] Take an illustration: if A, B, C, are collectively given the power to collect a debt and give discharge, it is only reasonable to think that no two of them, or no one of them can give the proper discharge. That is common sense. The reason of the thing is this: that the Court has not given to the two or to the one, the power.

[26] It follows, therefore, that on the death of one of the grantees of a succession certificates the other two cannot give proper discharge. There must necessarily have to be a fresh certificate to empower the survivors to collect the debts and give the discharge.

[26] I may refer to an observation in the case of Sukumar v. Parbati I. L. R. (1941) 2 Cal 311; (A. I. R. 1941 Cal. 663):

"Where a certificate granted to two or more persons has become inoperative on account of the death of one of the grantees therexi-ting certificate should be revoked before any fresh certificate is granted."

The point under consideration did not specifically arise in that case, but the observation I have quoted above is of B. K. Mukberji J. which is entitled to great respect. I respectfully agree with it. That is the law.

[27] The only thing that now remains for me is to consider the Allahabad judgment on which counsel for the applicant's so much relied. If the facts are analysed, it will be seen that the judgment does not support counsel's contention. The facts of the case are these: A Muhammadan lady died leaving as her beirs her husband (H), a daughter (D) and a brother (B). The shares inherited by them were, respectively, one fourth, one-half and one-fourth. A sum of Rs. 25,000 was alleged to bave been due to the lady on account of her dower. After her death, B applied for a succession certificate in respect of the dower. D was a minor, and was made a party to the proceedings for the certificate and the notice issued to her was accepted by H, her father. No objection was raised on the score of h's interest in the matter being adverse to that of D. A certificate was granted to B for the entire amount. On the strength of that certificate B brought a suit against H for the recovery of his own share only of the dower debt, and got a decree accordingly. D then applied for either the revocation of the certificate which was granted to B and the granting of a certificate to D for her share of the debt, or, in the alternative, for the addition of her name to that of B in the certificate which had been granted to B. The trial Court was of opinion that there was no ground on which the certificate granted to B could be revoked and that the said certificate being extant, no further certificate could be granted. It was also of opinion that there was no provision of law by which the name of D could be inserted in the original certificate. It, therefore, dismissed the application of D.

[28] From this order there was an appeal to the High Court. The larned Judges remarked at p. 381: "We think that the Court below could have revoked the certificate granted to Hussain Ali, or at least have revoked the same in part, on more than one ground. In the first place the proceedings which took place when Hussain Ali obtained his certificate were seriously defective in substance within the meaning of cl. (a) of S. 18 of Act VII (7) of 1889. Mt. Sherif un Nissa was at the time a minor, and her father, whose interest in this matter was obviously opposed to here, he being the debtor whose liability it was sought to enforce by means of the application, was allowed to accept service of notice on her behalf."

It will be observed that the original proceeding was defective in substance because there was no proper notice to a person who was vitally interested in the grant.

[29] The last portion of that judgment is instructive:

"We revoke the certificate granted in favour of Hussain Ali to the extent of half of the sum specified in the said certificate, namely, to the extent of Rs. 12,500 and we direct that a certificate for the realisation of this amount, as a debt alleged to be due from Hussain Ali to Mt. Keifayat Fatima, be granted in favour of the appellant Mt. Sharif-un Nissa. (D)."

What happened in that case is this: B had already obtained his decree for his share of the debt. Further certificate to him or to anybody else on his behalf was unnecessary. The debtor (the husband of the lady who died) was a creditor to the extent of a fourth share. Therefore, there was merger of the two interests. The only outstanding debt was the debt for Rs. 12,000 to D. What did the learned Judges do? They granted a new certificate to D to enable her to realise her Rs. 12,500. It was really a new grant and I consider on the fact of the case that the old grant was revoked. But if this case means that under the Succession Act there can be a partial revocation by the death of one of the donees, I respectfully differ the judgment.

[30] As I said, the debt is a small one. If the particulars of S. 372 were in the petition, I would have on this application ordered a new certificate to issue in favour of the applicant.

But the particulars are not there.

[31] I cannot allow an amendment of the petition. There is no doubt that, where the defect is a minor one, for example, in the name of the person whose estate is in question, and the petitioner takes up the correct position by putting in another petition, an order may be made—small error like this may be corrected—Sukumar Deb v. Parbati Bala, I. L. R. (1941) 2 Cal. 311: (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 663).

[32] In this case, the defect is not of that nature I do not think, I can allow amendment of the petition.

[33] I must, therefore, dismiss the application.

G.M.J. Application a ismissed.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 47, 104 and O. 21, R. 92—Compromise of proceedings under O. 21, R. 90—Subsequent application by decree-holder purchaser to confirm sale in terms of compromise—Order on, if open to second appeal.

F. Where a proceeding for setting aside a sale is compromised and subsequently the decree-holder purchaser applies under S. 47 for declaration that the sale stands good in terms of the solenama which the judgment-debtor has failed to carry out, the order refusing to confirm the sale passed on such application will not come within the purview of O. 21, R. 92 inasmuch as it cannot be said that the judgment-debtor's application under O. 21, R. 90 has either been allowed or disallowed. The order would fall under S. 47 and is unaffected by the provisions of S. 104 and therefore, would be open to second appeal.

(b) Contract Act (1872), S. 55 — Time when essence of contract—Intention.

The mere insertion of a term in a contract that a certain act shall be done whithin a particular period would not necessarily indicate that time was of the essence of the contract. The intention to make time an essence of the contract must be expressed in unmistakable language.

This intention must be deduced from the words of the contract, from the surrounding circumstances at the time that the contract was entered into and from the subject-matter of the contract: [Para 7]

Held on construction of solenama that time was of essence of contract to pay sanja paddy and rent within stipulated time. [Para 8]

Ram Krishna Pal — for Appellant; Panchanan Pal — for Respondents.

Judgment .- This is a second appeal by one of the decree-holders and it arises in the following circumstances. The appellant obtained a decree and in execution of it put certain property to sale. The sale was held on 31-10-1938. In the year 1945 the judgment-debtors made an application under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. for setting aside the sale on the usual grounds. That application was disposed of upon compromise on 15-12-1945. By the terms of the compro. mise the judgment-debtors were to deposit either in Court or amicably with the knowledge of the Court the sum of Rs. 260 within the month of February 1946, the sum of Rs. 245 within the month of February 1947 and the sum of Rs. 245 within the month of February 1948 and also to deposit the sanja paddy and cash rent for the years 1353 and 1354 B. S. within the month of Chaitra of those years respectively. Upon this being done the sale would be set aside. The judgment debtors were

(to be?) put in possession of the auction sold property as licensees until the solenama was carried out. There was a further clause that if the judgment debtors failed to pay any of the kist money or failed to pay the sanja paddy and cash rent in terms of the provisions of the solenama, then the sale would stand good. There was a footnote to the solenama to this effect, namely, that if any money in respect of the three first mentioned kists which were payable under the solenama were paid and if the sale were not set aside the decree holders would be entitled to withdraw the same and would not be liable to refund the money which would be forfeited. There is another provision in the footnote which need not be set out as it is not relevant for the purpose of this appeal. The judgment debtors paid the first of the two kists within time but failed to pay the sanja paddy and cash rent in time. Thereupon the decree holers made an application purporting to be one under S. 47, Civil P. C., claiming that as the terms of the solenama had not been fulfilled there should be a declaration that the sale stands good. The judgment-debtors opposed this application and the only ground taken by them which is pressed before this Court is that time was not of the essence of the contract so far as the payment of the sanja paddy and cash rent is concerned and therefore the failure of the judgment debtors to pay the sanja paddy and cash rent within time did not entitle the decree-holders to the relief prayed for.

[2] Both the Courts below have held in favour of the judgment-debtors and have refused to grant the prayer of the decree-holders. Against this decision the present appeal has been filed by one of the decree-holders.

of the respondents that no second appeal lies. The argument was this: The application of the decree holders was virtually an application for confirming the sale made in accordance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 92, Civil P. O. The Court has refused to confirm the sale. Against such an order of refusal an appeal lies in accordance with the provisions of O. 43 R. 1 (i) of the Code. Section 104, Civil P. C., prohibits a second appeal from such an appellate order. It was argued that although the application was instituted as one being under S. 47 of the Code, it was really an application made under O. 21, R. 92.

[4] On behalf of the appellant it was contended that this was not an application which fell within the purview of O. 21, R. 92 of the Code but it was an application for a declaration by the executing Court that in accordance with the terms of the solenama the sale stood good. Such an application was not contemplated by 0. 21, B. 92 It related to a matter of execution and was between the parties to the suit. It therefore fell within the purview of S. 47, Civil P. C. and a second appeal would therefore lie.

[5] There can be no question that the application relates to questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed. There can also be no question that the application relates to the execution of that decree. It thus comes within the purview of S. 47, sub. s. (1). A second appeal would therefore lie from the decision in a proceeding upon the application unless there is some prohibition in the Code which would bar a second appeal. Now, an application by a judgment debtor against a decree-bolder for setting aside a sale in execution would come undoubtedly under the provisions of S. 47 of the Code and if there were no other provisions, a decision upon such an application by which the sale was either set aside or confirmed would be subject to two appeals, but 8. 104, Civil P. C., in my opinion, would make a decision on such application subject to one appeal only. I refer to S. 104 sub-s. (1) (i) and sub-s. (2). If those sub-sections are read, it will be seen that they provide that an appeal shall lie from an order made under the rules from which an appeal is expressly allowed by rules and that no second appeal shall lie from an appellate order passed in an appeal under S. 104. Now, if an application under O. 21, R. 90 is allowed, then the Court in accordance with the provisions of O. 21, R. 92 shall set aside the sale. If it is disallowed, it shall make the sale absolute. An order passed under O. 21, R. 92 is appealable as an order by virtue of O. 43, R. 1 (j). It is thus an order which is described in 8. 104 (1) (i) namely, an order made under rules from which an appeal is expressly allowed by rules. That being so, by virtue of sub-s. (2) of S. 104 of the Code no second appeal lies against an order on appeal. It does not matter how the application is instituted. What must be ascertained is the substance of the application. The question which therefore arises in this preliminary objection is whether the order passed in favour of the decree. holders is an order under O. 21, R. 92. If it does not come within that rule, then the preliminary objection must fail because it would then be an order under S. 47 which has the force of a decree and which is not governed by the provisions of 8. 104 which deals with appeals from orders made under the rules of the Code. It is contended that the order comes within either sub-r. (1) or sub-r. (2) of O. 21, R. 92. The subrules are as follows :

"(1) Where no application is made under R. 89, R. 90 or R. 91, or where such application is made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute. (2) Where such application is made and allowed, and where, in the case of an application under R. 89, the deposit required by that rule is made within thirty days from the date of sale, the Court shall make an order setting aside the sale; Provided that no order shall be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby."

If sub-r. (1) is to apply there must be a disallowance of the application under O 21, R. 90. In the present case the application under O. 21, B. 90 was not disallowed. The case, therefore, does not fall within the ambit of sub r. (1). Under sub-r. (2) the application under O. 21, R. 90 must have been allowed. In the present case that application was not allowed. Subrule (2) therefore will not apply. What happened in the present case has not been contemplated by O. 21, R. 92. In the present case the order was passed not according to the provisions of o. 21, R. 22 but in terms of a solenama and the decree-holders have applied not to enforce any rights which they alleged that they have acquired under the provisions of O. 21, B. 92 but they have applied under S. 47 for relief on the ground that the terms of the solenama have not been carried out by the judgment-debtors. The order therefore in my opinion is one under S. 47 of the Code which is unaffected by the provisions of S. 104 That being so I hold that a second appeal does lie and disallow the preliminary objection.

[6] The next point for consideration is whether the Courts below were right in refusing to grant the relief prayed for by the decree-holders.

[7] Learned advocate on behalf of the respondents argued that the terms of the solenama clearly showed that so far as the payment of the sanja paddy and cash rent was concerned time was not of the essence of the contract and therefore the relief prayed for by the decree. holders should not be granted. He referred me to the well-known decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Jamshed Khodaram v. Burjorji Dhunjibhai, 48 I. A. 26 (A. I. B. (2) 1915 P. C. 83) where the provisions of S. 55, Contract Act, were interpreted. He also referred me to a decision of this Court in the case of Mahadeo Prosad v. Narain Chandra, 24 O. W N. 330 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal 651) where the decision of the Judicial Committee was noticed. The rights of the parties to the solenama must be decided in accordance with the provisions of s. 55, Contract Act, and that section says that if a party to a contract promises to do a certain thing at or before the specified time and fails to do such thing, the contract becomes voidable at the option of the promises if the intention of the parties was that time should be of the essence of the contract. It further says that if it was not the intention of the parties that time should be of the essence of the contract, the contract does not become voidable by the failure to do such thing at or before the specified time but the promisee would be entitled to compensation from the promisor for any loss occasioned to him by such failure. It is clear from this section, apart from any case law, that the intention of the parties is what matters. This intention must be deduced from the words of the contract, from the surrounding circumstances at the time that the contract was entered into and from the subject-matter of the contract The Judicial Committee says nothing more than this. What the Judicial Committee says is that the mere insertion of a term in a contract that a certain act shall be done within a particular period would not necessarily indicate that time was of the essence of the contract. The intention to make time an essence of the contract must be expressed in unmistakable language. The question is whether in this case such an intention is expressed in unmistakable language.

[8] I find that the learned lower appellate Court has come to its conclusion upon an entirely erroneous interpretation of the terms of the contract. It has stated the terms of the contract incorrectly and thereafter it has come to the conclusion that the payment of the sanja paddy and cash rent within time was not an essential term of the contract. I have set out at the inception of the judgment what the terms of the solenama are. The learned Judgs says this:

"On going through the terms of the solenama, I find that the solenama would be liable to be rescinded only if the judgment-debtors failed to pay the three kist moneys within the time appointed. But no such condition was attached to the payment of the sanja paddy and cash rent. "I am satisfied that the solenama does not provide that the non-payment of the sanja paddy and cash rent by the dates fixed would carry with it the consequences of rescission of the solenama, as it does in the case of the three kist moneys."

In my opinion this is an entirely erroneous construction of the solenama. The provisions in the contract regarding the payment of the three sums of Rs. 260, Rs. 245 and Rs. 245 which are termed the 'kist money' and the payment of sanja paddy and cash rent for the years 1353 and 1354 B.S. are in the same terms. There is no difference made in the solenama as to the consequences which would follow from the nonpayment of these two respective amounts within time. The solenama clearly says in the last portion of the second paragraph that if the judgment-debtors failed to pay the kist money or the sanja paddy and cash rent in accordance with the terms of the solenama, then the sale would stand good. There is no differentiation made between the kist money and the sanja paddy and cash rent. The terms of the solenama have been entirely misconstrued. Had the terms been correctly stated and had the learned Judge after a correct statement of the terms drawn his conclusion regarding the intention that would have been a different matter. But here I find that the learned Judge has misstated the terms of the solenama. His conclusions therefore are not based upon the terms of the solenam: as they are, but upon the terms which are incorrectly stated. Be that as it may, what I have to decide is whether the solenama evidences an intention in express terms that time shall be of the essence of the contract. I am unable to see how such an intention could be more expressly stated. The sale was held many years before the solenama was entered into and it is obvious that the decree-holders were insisting upon something being done promptly. From the surrounding circumstances as also from the terms of the contract I am of opinion that the intention of the parties was to make time the essence of the contract not only with respect to the payment of the kists but also with respect to the payment of the sanja paddy and cash rent.

[9] In these circumstances I set aside the order passed by the learned District Judge and grant the application of the decree holders with costs throughout.

K.S.

Appeal allowed.

A. I. R. (37) 1950 Dacca 1 (C. N. 1.) AKRAM C. J.

Gagan Chandra Nama Sarkar—Plaintiff
— Appellant v. Sm. Goljan Bibi and others
— Defendants — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1706 of 1943, Decided on 5th July 1949, against decree of Dist. Judge, Noakhali, D/- 15th May 1943.

Tenancy Laws—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), Sch. 3, Art. 3—Limitation under, applies to mortgagee from tenant also—Suit for possession by mortgagee auction-purchaser after 2 years of his ouster by landlord is barred—Plea of limitation is mixed question of fact and law — No prejudice is caused to plaintiff when facts are admitted — Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 100 and 101—Limitation Act (1908), Art. 144.

A, who was an occupancy raigat under landlord B mortgaged his holding to C, who instituted a suit on his mortgage in 1931, got a decree and in its execution purchased the land on 24th November 1934. Possession was delivered symbolically to C on 12th July 1935. In the meanwhile B got a rent decree against A in 1930 and in execution thereof B purchased the land at auction on 22nd November 1931, taking possession of it in June 1932. D got a lease of the same land from B on 14th December 1935 and was in possession since that date. In 1942 C brought a suit for possession of the land as mortgagee auction-purchaser basing his cause of action on the fact that when he wanted to take actual possession he was foiled by A and D. The trial Court decreed the suit but the first appellate Court held it to be barred by limitation under Art. 8 of Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act. C appealed :

Held that the plea of limitation was a mixed question of fact and law and plaintiff C could not be held to have been prejudiced by the permission to raise it for the first time in appeal as on his own case, C was never in possession and D was in possession from 14th December 1935, the date of the kabuliyat to D by landlord B which had amounted to an ouster of C by landlord B: A. I. R. (23) 1926 Cal. 299 and A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 611, Ref. [Para 8]

Held further that the principle that the dispossession of the mortgages having commenced after the date of the mortgage time should not run against him is a correct principle where the Limitation Act has to be applied but Art. 3 being a special provision of limitation enacted for the benefit of the landlord the general principle.

ple stated above cannot be held to be applicable in a case like this: A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 311, Rel. on.

Judgment. — This appeal by the plaintiff arises out of a suit for the recovery of khas possession of the plaint lands on declaration of plaintiff's title thereto as decree-holder auction-purchaser in mortgage execution case No. 194 of 1934.

[2] Briefly stated the plaintiff's case was that defendant 1, who was an occupancy raiyat under the Maharaja of Tippera, mortgaged his holding to the plaintiff; that as the mortgage dues were not paid, the plaintiff instituted mortgage Suit No. 280 of 1931, got a decree and in execution thereof purchased the suit land on 24th November 1984; that he then took delivery of symbolical possession through the Court on 12th July 1935, but in the meanwhile defendant 1 in collusion with the officers of the landlord suffered a rent decree to be passed against himself in a rent suit in 1930 and in execution of that decree got the properties in suit sold at auction on 22nd November 1931; that the landlord purchased the said properties and took possession thereof sometime in June 1932; that defendant 1 obtained a benami settlement of the said land from the landlord in the name of defendant 8 on 14th December 1935 and again had the same sold in the benami of his wife, defendant 2, and after that created a mortgage in favour of defen. dants 4 and 5; that all the transactions from the settlement taken by defendant 8 to the mortgage in favour of defendants 4 and 5 were all manipulated by defendant 1 and were frau. dulent and collusive transactions; that in fact possession of the land in dispute had remained with defendant 3 throughout inspite of the sale under the rent decree aforesaid; that no notice for annulment of the mortgage incumbrance under S. 167, Ben. Ten. Act was served upon the plaintiff and, consequently, his right to the suit land purchased at the auction sale on 24th November 1934 had remained intact and he was entitled to khas possession of the same, that when he wanted to take actual possession on 31st July 1936 he was foiled by the defendants.

[3] Defendants 2 and 3 alone contested the suit. They decided all the material allegations of the plaintiff and averred that the plaintiff's interest in the suit land ceased to exist after the rent sale on 22nd November 1931 long before the mortgage sale on 24th November 1934; that the settlement of the suit land by the landlord with defendant 3 was a bona fide settlement and was not benami for defendant 1; that the subsequent transactions thereafter were also valid and bona fide.

[4] The real question seems to me to be whether the plaintiff's claim to the suit land by right of auction purchase in the mortgage sale should prevail over the defendant's settlement obtained from the landlord, who had purchased the said land at a prior rent sale.

the view that the mortgagee auction-purchaser was entitled to have possession of the properties in the absence of any annulment of the mortgagee's interest by notice under S. 167, Ben. Ten. Act: Bidhuranjan Sarkar v. Soleman Pramanik, 45 C. W. N. 883: (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 613), and that the rent sale was subject to the mortgage sale in view of S. 52, T P. Act.

[6] Defendants 2 and 3 thereupon appealed and the lower appellate Court reversed the decision of the trial Court and dismissed the suit, holding inter alia that this case was governed by the special law of limitation i. e., Art 3, sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act and as more than two years had elapsed between the date of possession by the landlord (June 1932) or at any rate by defendant 3 (14th December 1935) and the date of suit by the plaintiff (24th January 1942), plaintiff's claim was barred by limitation.

preferred the present appeal. It has been urged before me by the learned advocate for the appellant that the landlord purchaser, at a rent sale, is bound to follow the provisions of S. 167, Ben. Ten. Act, if he is desirous of annulling the incumbrances; that in case he fails to do so, the holding purchased by him remains subject to the mortgage and Sital Chandra v. Parbati Charan, 35 C. L. J. 1: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 32), is relied upon in support, it is further urged that the plaintiff mortgagee auction purchaser was entitled to claim recovery of posses. sion from the defendants as the purchase by the landlord had taken place during the pendency of the mortgage execution case and was thus affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. However, whatever that may be, it seems to me that on the plaintiff's own case and the findings arrived at by the Court of appeal below the plaintiff cannot succeed, as the suit was instituted in 1942 and the plaintiff's case was that he had never been in possession, and that defendant 3 or defendant 1 was in possession of the land since 14th December 1935. Regarding this aspect of the case in the course of his judgment the learned Judge in the Court below has observed as follows:

"That possession must have ousted the plaintiff. It is idle for the plaintiff to say that he chose to allow his tenancy to remain fallow, and that therefore he was not in possession. His cause of action did not arise in July 1986 when he went to take possession; it arose on the date of the lease to defendant 3. He was then put out of possession in consequence of the act of the landlord and of the new tenant, defendant 3, inducted upon the land."

[8] It is, however, argued that no point of special limitation was taken before the Court of appeal below; that no issue was framed upon it and no evidence was adduced in respect of it; that it was a mixed question of fact and law and should not have been allowed to be raised for the first time before the lower appellate Court. But it has been pointed out by the learned Judge in the Court below that the plaintiff is not in the least prejudiced on that account, the plaintiff's case being that he had never been in possession and that defendant 8 was in possession from the date of the kabuliyat namely 14th December 1935. The only question, therefore, that can arise on the above admitted facts would be whether in the above circumstances the possession by defendant 3 amounted to dispossession by the landlord. On the facts and circumstances of this case, I do not think that the learned Judge in the Court of appeal below fell into any error in inferring ouster by the landlord on the basis of his settlement with defendant 3 aforesaid. Reference here may be made to the decisions in the cases of Sheikh Alam v. Atul Chandra, 40 C. W. N. 173 : (A.I.B. (23) 1936 Cal. 299) and Shashi Kanta v. Nayjan Bewa, 46 C.W.N. 938: (A I.R. (29) 1942 Cal. 611).

[9] I am not impressed with the argument that although the case of defendant 1, mortgagor may be governed by art. 3, Sch. 3, Ben. Ten. Act, the case of his mortgages the plaintiff falls under the general law of limitation under art. 144, Limitation Act. Reference in this connection may be made to the decision in the case of Mohim Chandra v. Kanai Lal,

33 C. W. N. 1085: (A.I.R. (17) 1930 Cal. 311), where in a similar circumstance it was observed "that the principle that the dispossession of the mortgagee having commenced after the date of the mortgage time should not run against him is a correct principle where the Limitation Act has to be applied but Art. 3 is a special provision of limitation enacted for the benefit of the landlord and the general principle stated above cannot be held to be applicable in a case like this. If it is allowed to prevail, the result will be that a tenant out of possession is unable to recover possession of a holding from the landlord after the lapse of two years; but his mortgagee is entitled to do so within 12 years of dispossession."

[10] In my opinion the contentions put forward by the learned Advocate for the appellant fail and I, accordingly, dismiss this appeal; but I make no order as to costs.

[11] The cross-objection is not pressed by the learned advocate for the respondents and is also dismissed without costs.

D.R.R. Appeal dismissed.

The Crown v. Jatindra Mohan Roy -

Criminal Ref. Nos. 1 and 2 of 1947, Decided on 8th July 1949.

(a) Legal Practitioners Act (1879), Ss. 13, 14 — Legal practitioner charged with criminal offence— Reference before launching prosecution and obtaining conviction is not incompetent.

Where a legal practitioner is charged with a criminal offence, a reference under the Act is not incompetent because there has been no previous criminal trial and conviction in respect of the charges formulated in that reference: Case law referred. [Para 9]

(b) Legal Practitioners Act (1879), Ss. 13 (f) and 14 — "Any other reasonable cause" in S. 13 (f) — Meaning — Words are not confined to misconduct in professional capacity — Muktear held guilty of misconduct.

The words "any other reasonable cause" in S. 13, ol. (f) are not confined to misconduct of which a practitioner is guilty in his professional capacity but embrace all causes which may afford reasonable grounds for his suspension or dismissal. Section 13 (f), therefore, will cover the case of a Muktear charged with a criminal offence, though the offence complained of was not committed in his professional capacity: 29 Cal. 890 (F.B.) and A.I.B. (4) 1917 Cal. 428, Rel. on. [Para 10]

J, a senior Muktear, stood surety in an abduction case for the abducted woman, a Hindu widow, and took her in his custody. She was removed from place to place until she came to live with M, a Muslim clerk of J's son and there sold her property for a nominal price. The sale proceeds were withdrawn from the bank within a few months after they were deposited. J gave no explanation as to how she came to live with M and as to his position in the sale transaction:

Held that apart from being a surety, when the widow escaped from his control, as a respectable member of the Bar, J should not have remained net over all that happened at M's house and the was nothing to show that he took any steps to trace her out or that he made any complaint against anybody in respect of her. So, on the facts and circumstances of the case, the conduct of J was not what was expected of a member of the profession to which he belonged. So, he was guilty of misconduct and was liable for action under S. 14. [Para 17]

Advocate-General - for the Crown.

Priyanath Bhattacherjee - for Opposite Party.

Amin Ahmed J.—This is a reference under S. 14 (b), Legal Practitioners Act by the Subdivisional Magistrate of Gaibandha through the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge of Rangpur against one Babu Jatindra Mohan Ray, a Muktear practising in the Criminal Courts of Gaibandha Sub-Division in the District of Rangpur. The Sub-divisional Magistrate of Gaibandha has recommended disciplinary action against him and the District Magistrate and the Sessions Judge have endorsed his views. The material facts as stated in the report are as follows:

[2] In Baisak 1353, Jashoda Dashya filed a complaint under 8s. 147, 343 and 366, Penal Code, against one Ghataram Das and others, being Case No. 410 of 1946 alleging, inter alia, that Kanakprova who was the widow of her late brother, was abducted by the accused. A search warrant was issued, Kanakprova was recovered by her cousin one Bolai with the assistance of the Home Guards and was produced before the Court on 3rd July 1946, when the opposite party Jatindra Mohan Ray (and hereafter we shall call him only "Jatin Babu") stood surety for her and it was arranged, lest she was abducted again if she were taken to her relation's house, that she would stay in Jatin Babu's house and her relations would bear all her expenses. On 1st August 1946 when Ghatram, the principal accused of this case, surrendered in Court, Babu Sailendra Mohan Ray, son of Jatin Babu stood surety for him and had him released on bail. After one month Kanakprova was removed to the house of one Bejoy Govind Nag and after her stay there for a few days, she was removed to the house of one Miajan Sarkar, who was then the registered clerk of Jatin Babu's son, Sailendra Mohan Ray. As the relations of Kanasprova could not interview her there the villagers suspected foul play, held a sailis over the matter and reported it to the President of the Hindu Mahasabha. When the latter enquired of Kanakprova and her whereabouts from Jatin Babu, he denied that Kanakprova was staying in the house of Miajan and said that she was living in a Brahmin family at Ballanjhar. Further, under instructions of Jatin Babu, Miajan negotiated the sale of her movable and immovable properties, her corrugated iron sheet hut was sold while she was staying at Jatin

Babu's house, the receipt of which was written by Miajan on the dictation of Jatin Babu and Sailendra Mohan Ray was an attesting witness to the document thereof; rents were realised on her account, remissions were granted over receipts written by Miajan and while she was in the custody of Jatin Babu she was made to sell property worth about Rs. 10,000 for Rs. 4000 out of which only Rs. 3000 was deposited in the bank in the name of a minor son of Miajan and that also were all withdrawn from the bank within a few months after they were deposited and this transaction was hastened as the final report of the Case No. 410 of 1946 filed by the police was accepted on 8th October 1946 and the accused were all discharged on that date. Lest Kanakprova's relations knew the result of the case the sale of this immovable property for Rs. 4000 was effected on 12th october 1946, i. e., on the reopening date of the criminal Courts and it was on the representation of Jatin Babu to Guna Mohan Das that Kanakprova wanted to sell her property in order to get some cash money and that Jatin Babu would see that Kanakprova was married well, that the vendee Guna Babu was satisfied about the bona fides of the transaction and actually bought the property as he did.

[3] On 17th October 1946, Balai Chandra Sarkar a maternal cousin of Kanakprova, filed a complaint before the Sub-divisional Magistrate, Gaibandha, alleging that she was insane and that her uncle in law one Kali Charan Das was after her properties and had her abducted. On this, although an abduction case being case No. 916 of 1946 was started, ultimately the Police submitted a final report to the effect that no case had been made out against the accused.

[4] On 8th January 1947, on behalf of the Hindu Public of Gaibandha the present petition was filed against Jatin Babu, Sailendra Mohan and Miajan alleging, among other things, that both Jatin Babu and Sailen Babu

"had ruined this Hindu widow by allowing her to be kept under the custody of the said Miajan Sarkar knowing fully well what sort of man Miajan Sarkar is."

On this petition, on 14th February 1947, the present proceedings were drawn up by the Subdivisional Magistrate of Gaibandha against Jatin Babu the opposite party in this case and he framed the following charges against him and called upon him to answer them:

"Whereas it has been brought to my notice by some members of the public that Babu Jatindra Mohan Ray, a Muktear, ordinarily practising at Gaibaudha in the criminal Courts stood surety for the abducted woman Kanak Prova Dasya, a Hindu widow for Rs. 200 on 3rd July 1946 in connection with G. R. Case No. 410 of 1946. Emperor v. Ghata Ram Das and others, under S3. 366/342, Penal Code, and took her to his house where Kanak Prova used to bring necessary food stuff and money from her house for her maintenance;

Kanakprova Dasya allowed to stay in the house of Babu Jatindra Mohan Roy Muktear for about a month and thereafter she was shifted to a house near the Gaibandha Thana where she had been for only about a fortnight, when Babu Jatindra Mohan Roy Muktear, allowed Miajan Sarkar—clerk of his son Babu Sailendra Mohan Roy Muktear to remove the said Kanakprova to the house of Miajan Sarkar. The Vice President of the Local Hindu Mahasabba Babu Nishi Kanta Sarkar, B. L., the relations of Kanak Prova and her people inspite of their repeated requests could not know the whereabouts of Kanak Prova either from Jatin Babu, his son Sailen Babu or the clerk Miajan Sarkar and Babu Jatindra Mohan Roy Muktear began to negotiate with some persons to sell all the properties of Kanak Prova worth about Rs. 10,000 giving out that the sale proceeds would be deposited in a bank and Kanak Prova would be settled in the town of Gaibandha and she would be given in marriage with any Hindu bridegroom. Holding out such hopes and keeping Kanak Prova concealed in the house of Miajan Sarkar beyond the reach of her relatives and any legal advice, she was sent with Miajan Sarkar to Rangpur on 12th October 1946 and she was induced to sell all her properties at a nominal price of Rs. 4000. Thereafter the money and Kanak Prova could not be traced. But a petition having been filed by Balai Sarkar-a cousin of Kanak Prova -it was given out that Kanak Prova embraced Islam and Nikamarried Miajan Sarkar; it is reported that at the time of giving shelter to Kanak Prova, Jatin Babu assured her to look upon her as his daughter and to create confidence in her, Miajan Sarkar called her mother but after the above incident Babu Jatindra Mohan Roy Muktear did not take any action against Miajan Sarkar, moreover he has still been retained as a registered clerk under Jatin Babu's son Sailen Babu who live in the same house and in same mess, by concealing his antecedents."

[5] On 4th March 1947 pending the enquiry, with the sanction of the District Magistrate Jatin Babu was suspended by the Sub-divisional Magistrate from practising but on 24th March 1947, after hearing the arguments of the lawyer for Jatin Babu this order was vacated. After making the enquiry, at the time of submitting the proceedings to this Court, the Sub-divisional Magistrate, on 16th July 1947, with the sanction of the District Magistrate suspended Jatin Babu again from practice pending enquiry by this Court.

[6] The learned Advocate-General appears in support of this reference and Mr. Bhattacherjee appears for Jatin Babu against this reference.

for the opposite party has taken a preliminary objection that his reference is incompetent as the offences complained of are criminal offences and so, his client should not be tried summarily under the Legal Practitioners Act but he should be tried by a criminal Court and, if found guilty, then and then only proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act may be taken against his client. In support of his argument, he has relied on the following cases: In re Mukhtear of Bargarah reported in A.I.R. (30) 1943 Pat. 52: (44 Cr. L. J. 323 S. B.). This is a decision of a Special Bench of the Patna High Court. In this case Harries C. J. said :

"When the charge brought against a legal practitioner amounts to an allegation of the commission of a serious crime, the proper procedure to follow is to launch a prosecution for that crime and, if a conviction is obtained, to institute proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act."

Mr. Bhattacherjee has also cited the decisions of the Calcutta High Court: the case of Chandi Charan, reported in 24 C. W. N. 755 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal £65; 21 Cr. L. J. 691), case of In the matter of Rajendra Kumar Dutt, reported in 30 C. W. N. 186 : (A. I. R. (18) 1926 Cal. 502 : 27 Cr. L. J. 701) and the case of In the matter of Satish Chandra, reported in 31 C. W. N. 554: A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 536: 29 Cr. L. J. 665). It is contended that in all these cases, it has been held that the correct procedure in those cases where a practitioner is charged with criminal offences is to institute criminal prosecution first. We may mention that even in the above case of Rajendra Kumar Dutta, (30 C. W. N. 186 : A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 502 : 27 Cr. L. J. 701) and Satish Chandra Singha, (31 C. W. N. 554: A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 536: 29 Cr. L. J. 665), the case of In the matter Chandi Charan, reported in 24 C. W. N. 755 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 565 : 21 Cr. L. J. 691) was referred to with approval. In the latter case at p. 762, Mukherjee J., observed:

"It is not necessary to lay down an inflexible rule that there must in every case be a trial and conviction for criminal misconduct before disbarment will be ordered. That should be the ordinary rule when the misconduct alleged has no direct connection with the conduct of the pleader in his practical and immediate relation to the Court. On the other hand, when the misconduct attributed indicates unfitness to discharge professional duties, a criminal conviction may not always be a prerequisite to the adoption of disciplinary measures; and indeed, notwithstanding acquittal on the criminal charges, disciplinary measures may be successfully taken as in the case of In the matter of the Second Grade Pleaders, reported in 34 Mad. 29: (6 I. C 313). The test to be applied in each case is, whether the person concerned will be prejudiced by the adoption of summary procedure for the investigation of what is in reality a grave criminal charge."

[8] It will thus appear even from the decision of the Calcutta High Court that there is no such hard and fast rule that proceedings under the Legal Practitioners Act must follow only a conviction in criminal Court. Besides, as urged by the learned Advocate General far from there being any such invariable rule, it will appear from the wording of S. 14, Legal Practitioners Act itself, that S. 14 gives the High Court very wide discretion in regard to the exercise of disciplinary authority. In support of this, the learned Advocate General has cited the case of In re S. B. Sarbadhicary, reported in 84 I. A. 41: (5 Or, L J. 57 P. C.), where their Lord. ships of the Judicial Committee held that in a case of libel and contempt of the High Court Judges, the High Court had "reasonable cause", in suspending the practitioner.

[9] The learned Advocate General has also cited a series of cases where proceedings taken under the Legal Practitioners Act before conviction not only in ordinary cases of charges of criminal offences but also in cases of charges of grave criminal offences were approved by Courts. The cases are: In the matter of a Pleader, reported in 20 C. W. N. 1069: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal. 609: 18 Cr. L. J. 42), In the matter of Rasik Lall, 20 C. W. N. 1284: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal 428: 18 Cr. L. J. 420), District Judge, Kistna v. Hanumanulu, 39 Mad. 1045: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 Mad. 1144: 17 Cr. L. J. 38 F. B.), P. a first grade Pleader, Markapur, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Mad. 630: (44 Cr. L. J. 17 S. B.), In the matter of R. S. Pleader, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Pat. 249: (36 Cr. L. J. 1023 S. B.), K., a Muktear of Aurangabad, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Pat. 337: (38 Cr. L. J. 916 S.B.), In the matter of U, an Advocate, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Rang. 142: (1939 Rang. L. R. 213 S. B.); In re Hari Prosunno, reported in 21 C. W. N. 516: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 196: 18 Cr. L. J. 465) and Re Second Grade Pleader, reported in 51 Mad. 798: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 918: 29 Cr. L. J. 783 F. B.). In the above case of a Pleader reported in 20 C. W. N. 1069 : (A. I. B. (4) 1917 Cal. 609: 18 Cr. L. J. 42), their Lordships Teunon and Chaudhuri JJ. held that tampering with Court's records was a serious matter and suspended the pleader for 3 months. In the above case of Hari Prosunno, reported in 21 C. W. N. 516 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 196 : 18 Cr. L. J. 465), his Lordship Woodroffe J. held that when a Muktear was found to have received a sum of money from a person against whom some police case was pending for the purpose of bribing the police and acted as a go between, his action furnished reasonable cause for punishment under S. 13, cl. (f), Legal Practitioners Act. In the above case of a second grade Pleader, reported in 51 Mad. 798: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Mad. 918: 29 Cr. L. J. 783 F. B.), in support of an ap. plication for a transfer of a criminal case pend. ing before a Magistrate, the pleader in question swore to an affidavit that he witnessed the Magistrate receiving a bribe from the accused. In this Full Bench case in which the sanad of the pleader was withheld for certain period Sir . Murray Coutts Trotter, C. J. observed as follows:

"We wish to make it clear to the profession, if it does not already realise it, that it is a misconduct for a professional man not only to make charges which he knows to be false but charges which he must know he has no reasonable prospect of substantiating."

So, we are unable to uphold the preliminary objection of Mr. Bhattacherjee that this reference is in competent inasmuch as there has been no previous criminal trial and conviction in respect of the charges formulated in this reference.

[10] The next point urged by Mr. Bhattacherjee is that this case does not come under cl (f) of S. 13, Legal Practitioners Act, i. e., it is not covered by the words therein, viz. "for any other reasonable cause." It is too late in the day to argue this and if any authority need be cited we may refer to the case of Le Mesurier v. Wajid Hossain, reported in 29 Cal 890, Full Bench decision in which Hill J. as early as 1902 dealt with this point at length and referred to a large number of English and Indian cases. It was held in that case that the words "any other reasonable cause" in S. 13, cl. (f), Legal Practitioners Act, are not confined to misconduct of which a practitioner is guilty in his professional capacity but embrace all causes which may afford reasonable grounds for his suspension or dismissal. In this case Hill J. also observed:

"The moral defect is the same whether there has or has not been a conviction, the difference lying only in the machinery employed in establishing it. In Ecgland, I may observe in the case of an attorney, the fact that an indictment might be, but has not been preferred, is no reason for the Court to stay its hand, if the fact of misconduct is brought before it? W. H. B. reported in (1882) 50 L. J. 165) and see In re Hill, reported in (1868) 3 Q B 543. And in this country, if the law be as I conceive it to be, I think the same view would be taken. See the case of In the matter of Gholab Khan, reported in 7 Beng. L. R. 179: (16 W. R. Cr. 15) It appears to me also a strong authority for saying that the Court will act on proof of facts from which a moral defect of character may be implied, although they amount to a criminal offence for which the offender has not been convicted and have no connection with his professional avocations."

The case of Rasik Loll Nag, reported in 20 C.W.N. 1284: (A I.R. (4) 1917 Cal. 428: 18 Cr. L.J. 420), may also be referred to in this connection. So, in our opinion, there is no doubt that s.13 (f) covers the present case and there is no substance in Mr. Bhattacherjee's argument that as the offences complained of were not committed by his client in his professional capacity, he is not hit by S. 13 (f), Legal Practitioners Act.

[11] The learned Advocate General argues that from the facts and circumstances of the case it is established that the conduct of Jatin Babu is not that of a honourable member of the Legal Profession to which he belongs. He suggests that Jatin Babu took Kanakprova under his care on 3rd July 1946 and had her removed first to the house of Nag and thence to the house of Miajan and his motive in doing so must be to share the sale proceeds of the property of Kanakprova with Miajan and this is apparent from the fact that he was screening Miajan although he knew where Kanakprova was living at different times and he misled people as to her whereabouts and discouraged interviews with her. For this he relies on the evidence of P. W. 1 Balai, P. W. 3 Maniruddin Sarkar, P. W. 4 Jaki Mamud Sarkar, P. W. 8 Shamshuddin Sarkar and P. W. 11 Nishi Kanta Sarkar, P. W. 19 Ramani Mohan Sarkar. Balai is the cousin of Kanakprova. We cannot rely very much on Balai's evidence as it was Balai who made a complaint before the present Magistrate and his complaint was not only dismissed but he was asked to show cause why he should not pay compensation for filing a false and frivolous complaint. P. W. 3, Maniruddin, Ex-Tabsildar of Kanakprova, says:

"On another occasion I was not allowed to see her by Miajan. On hearing this I went to Jatin Babu and stated what Miajan had done. Jatin Babu told me that Kanakprova did not like to see any of us."

P. W. 4 another Tabsildar of Kanakprova says "I enquired of Jatin Babu who said that Kanakprova would not see us any more." P. W. 8 states that when he went with Bolai to enquire of Jatin Babu as to the whereabouts of Kanakprova, he was told by him that she was kept in the house of a Brahmin where there were other widows and she was happy there and eventually even Bolai was not allowed to interview Kanakprova. The evidence of P. W. 11, President of Hindu Mahasabha, who is a B. L. pleader practising in Munsiff's Court seems to be most damaging. He says:

"Towards the end of Sraban, Jatin Babu told me that he was feeling it inconvenient to keep Kanakprova in his house as he has young sons and the woman was good looking I got a report from Sukhan Banarjee, Secretary of the Organisation that Rishi Mohan Dey was willing to accommodate her. After 3 or 4 days Jatin Babu informed that he had made arrangement to keep the woman in the house of one of his relations, Bejoy Govinda Nag and the organisation need not think over it. By the middle of Bhadra Mobarak Sarkar, a pleader's clerk and Sukhan Babu informed me that the woman was living in the house of Miajan Sarkar. On the morning following I met Jatin Babu in his house and told him what I had heard but he stated that it could not be He further stated that Miajan was like his own son. I met Jatin Babu in Court who told me that what I had heard was not true. Mobarak made a false statement and that the woman was kept in a Brahmin family at Ballnighar (in the house of Sarkar Chakravaorty). I believed Jatin Babu and did not make any further enquiry about it."

But P. W. 18, Govind Kumar Roy, a teacher of H. E. School states that there is no Brahmin family at Ballnighar except their family. If the evidence of these witnesses is accepted and there is no reason why their evidence should not be accepted and why they should all tell a lie, there is no doubt that whatever the motive may be it was at the instance or with the connivance of Jatin Babu that Kanak Prova was removed from place to place and that ultimately she came to live with Miajan.

[12] Now, as to the disposal of her properties both movable and immovable. It is the evidence of P. W. 1, Balai and P. W. 3, Maniruddin that for her maintenance the corrugated iron sheet but was sold at Rs. 210 while she was living at Jatin Babu's house and, in our opinion, Jatin Babu cannot be blamed for it in any way.

[13] But, as to the sale of her immovable property, it is argued that, although Kanakprova was not in need of any money at the time, on account of the influence of Jatin Babu Kanakprova was made to sell her property worth ten or twelve thousand rupees for Rs. 4000, and not only it was sold at less than its proper price but it was sold in hot haste as soon as the final report was submitted by the Police. According to the evidence of P. W. 17, Babu Hira Lal Chatterjee, Court A. S. I., the final report of the case in question was submitted by the police on 25th September 1946 and it was accepted and the accused were discharged on 8th October 1946. Except the evidence of P. W. 1, Balai and P. W. 3 Maniruddin that the property in question may be worth 10 or 12 thousand, there is no other evidence as to the real and exact value of the property. It is proved that the said property was purchased by P. W. 9, Guna Mohan Das, the then President of Hindu Mahasabha for Rs. 4000 and the document thereof was registered on 12th October 1946, i. e., on the re-opening date of criminal Courts after the puja vacation, not at Gaibandha but at Rangpur registration office. The most important witness of this transaction is P. W. 9, the vendee of the property, Guno Mohan Das who is an M.A.B.L. pleader practising at Gaibandha. He says:

"About 15 or 20 days before the execution of the Kabala I had discussion about the purchase with Jatin Babu. Jatin Babu stated the reason for sale to be that Kanakprova would not be able to reside any more in her own place and that she would be given in marriage at Gaibandha. Many people will be agreeable to marry her if she had any money. Jatin Babu stated that money would be kept in a bank. I withdrew the consideration money from my deposits in Hazordi Bank. At the time of the withdrawal, I told Atul Babu, the Manager of the Bank that if he would approach Jatin Babu he might get the money again in deposit I had previous talk with Jatin Babu who stated that he looked upon Miajan as his own son and that he trusted him She was selling the property as she was put to various trouble on account of the property "Sampatti amar kal haiase, shei janya biori karitechhi."

Again in re-examination, he says: "My bona fides regarding the execution of the Kabala arose from my discussion with Jatin Babu." From the evidence of this witness, it appears as if both Jatin Babu and he were doing things out of the best of intention. Jatin Babu gave out that he wanted to get Kanakprova married with the cash money after the sale of her property and Guno Mohan Babu helped her to sell her property.

[14] But, the evidence of other witnesses as to what happened afterwards does not support this view for P. W. 10 Babu Atul Chandra Roy, local agent of Hazordi Bank corroborates P. W. 9 Guno Mohan Babu when he states that Guno Mohan withdrew Rs. 3900 by an overdraft and advised him to approach Jatin Babu so that he might get the money deposited by Jatin Babu after the sale and he actually approached Jatin Babu and the latter assured him with the deposit. But instead of depositing any money in the said Bank as promised, the evidence of P. W. 5 an employee of local Das Bank is that on 15th October 1946 Miajan Sarkar opened an account in the Das Bank Ex. 2 in the name of his minor son Aminul Haque. According to this account only Rs. 3000 was deposited and by 30th January 1947, the entire amount except a balance of Rs. 10-15 6 was withdrawn. So, it is suggested that but for the instigation or connivance of Jatin Babu all this could not happen. Points are also made of the facts that to start with in the very abduction case in which Jatin Babu filed the complaint and stood for surety for Kanakprova his son Sailendra stood surety for the principal accused 1 Ghatu Sarkar that his son Sailendra's clerk Miajan was also working for Jatin Babu and most of the exhibits viz. Ex. 6 bail bond of Kanakprova dated 3rd July 1946, Ex. 3 receipt of Rs. 96 dated 14th August 1946 given by Kanakprova to her tenant, Ex. 1 a receipt of Rs. 210 dated 19th July 1946 given by Kanakprova to the vendee of the hut were all written by Miajan Sarkar and that even her younger brother who was staying with her was sent away as it appears from the evidence of her tenant Ruhini Kanta who says:

"Misjan came to the station with Anath, the minor brother of Kanakprova and asked me to take him to Naldanga to his sister's house I took the boy to Naldanga."

Some witnesses have said that they heard that Kanak prova became a Muslim and Miajan has married her but hearsay evidence is no evidence and the learned Adovcate General has frankly conceded that there is nothing to prove that she has become a Muslim or that she is married to Miajan but he urges that on the above evidence and circumstances taken as a whole one cannot but say that Jatin Babu's conduct is not that of an honourable member of the profession and it calls for disciplinary action on our part.

[15] Jatin Babu cannot escape from the fact that from the date, i. e., 3rd July 1946 he stood surety for Kanakprova till 10th october 1946 when the final report was accepted and accused were discharged. Jatin Babu was the surety and according to his undertaking he was bound to produce her before Court whenever he was called upon to do so, and so, he cannot be heard to say that he did not know the whereabouts of Kanakprova or he did not know how and when she went to the house of Miajan Sarkar. It is too much to say that all that P. W. 9 Guno Mohan Babu and P. W. 11 Nishi Kanta Sarkar who are respectable and leading pleaders of Gaibandha said are untrue. It is also curious that Jatin Babu has not only kept himself out of the witness-box but even in his written statement he has chosen not to give any explanation as to how Kanakprova who admittedly was staying with him to start with and for whom he stood surety escaped from his house and managed to land herself in the house of Miajan Sarkar and there sell her property. In this enquiry, we are somewhat handicapped as neither the prosecution nor the defence has examined Kanakprova or Miajan. Evidence of P. W. 15 and Ex. 5, deposition of Miajan Sarkar in the case filed against Mubarak Sarkar and others sought to be relied upon by the prosecution are not, in our opinion, admissible in evidence. It seems to us that both the prosecution and the opposite party fought shy of examining Kanakprova and Miajan. At least to clarify matters further the Court should have examined them as court witnesses. The learned Advocate.General contends that the prosecution did not examine them as they were under the influence of Jatin Babu and to give the lie direct to the prosecution case, the defence could have called either or both of them in order to demolish the prosecution case. In any case, in our opinion, in the interest of justice, the Court should have examined Kanakprova.

[16] Mr. Bhattacherjee has argued that as soon as the Hindu community of Gaibandha came to hear of the disposal of property by Kanakprova and her living in the house of Miajan, there was a great sensation in the town as a result of which the present petition under the Legal Practitioners Act was filed and his client was made a scape goat on mere suspicion. In this connection he relied on the case of Anandalwan v. Judges of High Court of Judicature, Madras, reported in 34 C. W. N. 534 : (A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 144 : 31 Cr. L. J. 489). In this case their Lordships of the Privy Council observed that charges of professional misconduct must be clearly proved and should not be inferred from mere ground of suspicion, however reasonable, or what may be mere error of judgment or indiscretion. The enquiry in a serious case of professional misconduct should proceed on formulated charges and the evidence should be carefully taken and judged according to the ordinary standard of proof. This case only says that the enquiry should be according to charges and the evidence should be taken and assessed according to ordinary standard of proof. But, in the present case evidence has been led in support of the charges and certain facts and circumstances have been proved according to ordinary standard of proof and so, the above case of Anandalwan, (34 C. W. N. 534: A. I. R. (17) 1930 P. C. 144: 31 Cr. L. J. 489) has no application to the present case.

[17] It is true that P. W. 11 Nishi Kanta Sarkar, the President of Hindu Mahasabha, says that one of the reasons for the proceedings in question is the sensation in the town caused by the fact that Kanakprova sold her property. P. W. 14 who filed the petition before the

S. D. O. against Jatin Babu also says:

"I cannot name particularly who gave me the date of the disposal of the property. That was a talk everywhere in the town. Because the woman was converted to Islam led us to file the petition before S. D. O. another factor was that all her properties were robbed." It seems to us that undoubtedly there was a sensation as soon as the public started talking that a Hindu widow had not only become a Muslim but also married a Muslim and was also deprived of all her property. So, it is all the more difficult to understand this complacency of Jatin Babu who stood surety for Kanakprova. Although on the date the sale took place, he was no longer the surety according to P. W. 9, negotiation took place 15 or 20 days before that and but for the representation of Jatin Babu he would not have been induced to buy the property as he did. It is curious that inspite of such representation Jatin Babu failed to take charge of at least of the sale proceeds. It may well be that the money was deposited in the bank or spent according to the wishes of Kanakprova but it was for Jatin Babu to explain his position in the transaction. But he has not done this. Jatin Babu is a very senior Mukhtear. Apart from being a surety, when Kanakprova escaped from his control, as a respectable mem. ber of the Bar, he should not have remained quiet over all that happened at Miajan's house and there is nothing to show that he took any steps to trace her out or that he made any complaint against anybody in respect of her. So, on the facts and circumstances of the case, it appears to us that the conduct of Jatin Babu was not what is expected of a member of the profession to which he belongs. So, we find that he is guilty of misconduct and is liable for action under S. 14, Legal Practitioners Act. But, as he has been under suspension for nearly 2 years by now and he is nearly 69 years old, we consider that he has been sufficiently punished.

[18] So, we accept this reference but in view of the above circumstances, we only confirm the period of suspension already undergone by him and take no other disciplinary action against him.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 82 — Right of contribution—Right not available against mortgages or auction-purchaser.

Section 82 applies to mortgagors inter se and gives one mortgagor a right to have the other's property contribute to the discharge of the mortgage debt. This right cannot be availed of against the mortgages or the auction-purchaser: A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 251

(FB), Rel. on.

Properties X and Y were mortgaged to A and then property Y was mortgaged to B. B sued on his mortgage and purchased property Y in execution of his decree. In the meanwhile A brought a suit on his mortgage impleading B and obtained a decree for sale. Property X was sold in execution of that decree and was purchased by B whose actual possession was resisted by C who claimed to have purchased X in execution of his money decree while A's mortgage suit was pending. C claimed right of contribution under S. 82, T. P. Act against B. It was held that there could be no claim for contribution against B who was an auction-purchaser.

Properties X and Y were mortgaged to A and then property Y was mortgaged to B. B obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage and purchased property Y in execution. Akram C. J.—This appeal by defendants 1 and 5 arises out of a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's title to the suit lands and for khas possession of the same.

[2] The plaintiff's case was that one Madhab Chandra Nath borrowed Rs. 600 from a person called Dina Bandhu Nath on 1st January 1930, by executing a mortgage bond in his favour, which comprised two plots of lands the homestead Plot No. 1 and the nal lands Plot No. 2 of the mortgage bond. Later on the said Madhab Chandra Nath again borrowed another sum of

Rs. 300 by mortgaging only Plot No. 1 (namely, the homestead) of the previous bond to the plaintiff sometime in September 1930. Dina Bandhu Nath then brought mortgage Suit No. 351 of 1936 impleading the plaintiff also in the suit and on obtaining a mortgage decree applied for the execution of the same, in execution Case No. 107 of 1937. In the meanwhile, however, the plaintiff obtained a mortgage decree upon his own mortgage bond of September 1930 and in execution thereof purchased the homestead (i.e. the aforesaid Plot No. 1) on 22nd September 1937. Having done so, he applied ostensibly under S. 81, T. P. Act, and secured an order for the sale of the nal land only (i.e., Plot No. 2 aforesaid) in the first instance in execution Case No. 107 of 1937. The nal land only (i.e., Plot No. 2) was thereupon brought to sale in the execution case aforesaid, and the same was purchased by the plaintiff on 18th September 1939 for Rs. 1162 odd, and delivery of possession was taken by the plaintiff on 10th March 19:0, but when the plaintiff went to take actual poesession he was resisted by defendants 1 and 5 on the ground that on 23rd March 1937 defendant 1 had purchased the nal land i.e., Plot No. 2 for a sum of Rs. 40 in execution of a money decree in Small Cause Court Suit No. 310 of 1936 and obtained possession of the same and that defendant 5 hai subsequently purchased the said plot from defendant 1.

[3] The main defence was: (1) the order of marshalling under S. SI, T. P. Act, was without jurisdiction and consequently the plaintiff acquired no title by his auction purchase in execution case No 107 of 1937; (2) that in any event the plaintiff could not recover possession of the suit lands without payment to the defendants a sum of Rs. 934 under S. S2, T. P. Act, by way of contribution. Both the Courts below decreed the plaintiff's suit. The defendants thereupon preferred the present appeal.

[4] Once again the defendants appellants have urged before us the same contentions mentioned above. It seems to me however that the appellants in this case have entirely misunder. stood the situation and missonoeived their position. No doubt it is true that S SI, T. P. Act, has no application to the facts of this case; but neither has S. 82. In my opinion no question either of marshalling or of contribution arises. Dina Bandhu Nath was clearly entitled to execute his decree against any of the mortgaged properties he liked, there was but one single mortgage in existence at the time, and the equity of redemption, we may take it, was in defendant 1 who had made his purchase under the money decree while the mortgage suit was pending; there was no other mortgage which existed for the application of S. 81 or S. 82, T. P. Act. I cannot see how there could be any marshalling or any claim for contribution as against the auction-purchaser of execution case No. 107 of 1937, in those circumstances. Section 82, T. P. Act

"applies to mortgagors inter se and gives one mortgagor a right to have the other's property contribute to the discharge of the mortgage debt", as was observed in the case of Umar Ali v. Asmat Ali reported in 58 Cal. 1167. at p. 1177: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 251 F B.). This right in my opinion cannot be availed of against the mortgagee or the auction purchaser. I, accordingly, agree with the conclusion arrived at by the Court of appeal below, although I am unable to agree with it in the reasonings given in support of its conclusions.

[5] The appeal is, therefore, dismissed but without costs. The cross objection by the plaintiff is also dismissed but without costs.

Amin Ahmed J. — This appeal on behalf of defendants 1 and 4 arises out of a suit for partition of certain ejmali wakf properties. The facts may be briefly stated as follows: One Fazil Bhuia who was the owner of the properties in suit, by two wakfnamas dated 26th Sravan 1321 B. S., corresponding to 11th August 1914, and 2nd Sravan 1326 B. S., corresponding to 18th July 1919, respectively, made wakf of his 2/3rd interest in certain properties covered by a tenure called mirash Dengari Kaibarta. According to these two deeds Fazil Bhuia made himself mutwalli during his life time, and after his death the plaintiff was to be mutwalli of the wakf properties. The deeds also empowered the plaintiff to nominate his successor and also indicated the class of persons from whom the plaintiff was to nominate his successor. Fazil Bhuia died in 1327 B. S. corresponding to 1920, leaving three sons, namely, one Wasil Bhuia, the plaintiff (mutwalli) who is also defendant 2 (in personal capacity), one Abdus Sobhan Bhuia, defendant 1 appellant, and one Ishaque Bhuia defendant 3 and also one Abdul Ali Bhuia, his grand son by pre-deceased son, who is defendant 4. After the death of Fazil Bhuia, all the four defendants and also the plaintiff executed a wakfnama dated 20th Kartick 1328 B. S. corresponding to 16th November 1921 which is Ex. A, by means of which they amicably disposed of the remaining 1/3rd share of the properties of late Fazil Bhuia left over after the wakfnamas of Fazil Bhuia, according to which all the four defendants were to be joint mutwallis in respect of all the properties of Fazil Bhuia, and if one of these 4 joint mutwallis died his survivors or his survivor would be the mutwalli.

[2] The plaintiff's case is that the executants of the deed of 1328 B. S. had never intended to dedicate these properties to God; that they all along treated their shares as their personal property that under the wakfnamas of the plaintiff's father the plaintiff had no power to make defendants 1, 3 and 4 his co-mutwallis and, therefore, the wakfnama of 1328 B. S. was void; further that because the joint possession of all the properties in suit is inconvenient and is a source of trouble among the relations, the plaintiff demanded the partition of the 2/8rd share of the ejmali property of late Fazil Bhuia as made wakf of by the late wakif, Fazil Bhuia by the two wakinamas dated 1321 B. S. and 1326 B. S. but as the defendants did not agree to such a partition the present suit has been filed. Defendant 3 did not contest the suit. Defendants 1 and 4 contested the plaintiff's claim for partition and at the trial various issues were raised, one of them being, whether the present suit was maintainable by the plaintiff as sole mutwalli. Both the Courts below have held that the wakfnama of 1328 B. S. was not a valid and operative document and that the plaintiff was entitled to institute the present suit as the sole mutwalli of the wakt properties. Hence the present second appeal.

[3] Mr. Birendra Kumar De, the learned advocate for the defendants appellants has argued before us that the Courts below ought to have held that inasmuch as the other defendants are the three co-mutwallis of the plaintiff according to the wakfnama of 1328 B. S., the plaintiff alone was not competent to file the present suit-for partition. It is true that the plaintiff himself along with the other defendants is a party to the wakfnama of 1828 B. S. by means of which the number of mutwallis was amicably increased to four and the parties acted on this wakfnama for a number of years; but the question is whether the Mahomedan law allows such alteration of the number and personnel of mutwallis in violation of the original wakfnamas of 1321 B. S. and 1326 B. S. made by the wakif, Fazil Bhuia. It may be that according to Fazil Bhiua's wakinamas plaintiff was empowered to nominate his successor; but he was not empowered to appoint co-mutwallis. The nomination of his successor is quite different from appointing comutwallis. According to the wakif the plaintiff was the sole mutwalli and he did not empower the plaintiff to add to the number of mutwallis; nor did he anywhere in his wakfnama stated that after his death the plaintiff could appoint three persons as co-mutwallis. So this deed of wakf of 1928 B. S. is clearly contrary to the intention of the wakif. Apart from this, it is now a settled law that even a wakif, after he has created a wakf and made provision for the appointment of mutwalli has no power to alter the arrangement and remove the mutwalli appointed by him, unless he reserves such powers at the time he creates the wakf; vide the case of Siddig Ahmed v. Sayed Ahmed, 49 C W. N. 311 : (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Cal. 418). So much less can a successor of the wakif, in this case, the plaintiff mutwalli and his heirs, do the same.

[4] It has also been held that a mutwalli has no power to transfer his office to another person, unless such power is expressly conferred upon him by the wakif but he may appoint a deputy to assist him in the management of the wakif property; vide the case of Salimullah v. Abdul Khair, 87 Cal. 263: (8 I. O. 419). In the present case the persons appointed by the wakinama of 1828 B. B. are not appointed as deputies to assist the plaintiff mutwalli, but are admittedly appointed co-mutwallis which the plaintiff mutwalli had no right to do according to the wakinamas of his father. The result, therefore, is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

(5) The question of the substitution of the eldest son of late Wasin Bhuia alone instead of all his heirs need not be gone into in this appeal. We therefore, pass no order on the application in this connection.

Pal -for Appellants.

Hemendra Kumar Das and Tarapada Kumar Pal — for Respondents.

Amin Ahmed J. — This appeal by defendants 29 and 30 arises out of a suit for recovery of possession on declaration of the plaintiff's title thereto. The suit relates to 5 plots of lands but the plaintiff claims only plots No. 1, 3, 4 and 5 and not plot No. 2.

[2] The plaintiff's case inter alia is that the suit lands appertain to taluk No. 25059/834. In 1924 a separate account No. 9 was opened by one Abdullah and others. On 24th September 1929, on account of non-payment of arrears of revenue, under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation 1886, the separate account was sold and it was purchased by defendant 28. The sale was confirmed on 3rd December 1929 and, on 28th August 1931, he was given possession through Court. On 22nd October 1938, the plain. tiff purchased the said separate account from defendant 28 with arrears of mesne profits. As the defendants have kept the plaintiff and his vendors out of possession, the present suit has been instituted.

[8] The suit is mainly contested by defendants 29 and 30. Their case inter alia is that the suit lands appertain to taluk No. 25060/335. One Najiba Banu was originally the owner and was in possession of the disputed plots Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5 as appertaining to taluk No. 25060/ 385. In the year 1838 the suit lands were taken settlement of from Najiba Banu by one Bhikai alias Mahammad Safi, the maternal grand-father of Abdullah who is said to have opened the separate account No. 9. In the year 1866, the interest of Najiba devolved one Sultan Khan and in the year 1890 Sultan Khan opened a separate account No. 1 in respect of the disputed land as appertaining to taluk No. 25060/335, so according to these defendants in all the transactions the suit lands have been treated as appertaining to taluk No. 25060/335 and in separate account No. 1 when it came to be opened; that if the thak papers show that the lands appertain to taluk No. 25059/334 they must be incorrect and that separate account No. 9 was fraudulently and collusively opened.

[4] Both the Courts below held that the suit lands appertained to taluk No. 25059/334 separate account No. 9 standing in the name of Abdullah and others, that the separate account No. 9 was not fraudulently and collusively opened, that Abdullah or his predecessors were not in possession of plots 1, 3, 4 and 5 and that plot No. 2 was in possession of Abdullah and others who opened the separate account No. 9.

[5] Mr. Sen Gupta appearing for the appellants has argued that in as much as the plots Nos. 1, 3, 4 and 5 were in adverse possession of the defendants appellants' predecessors since 1838, in 1924 when separate account was opened by Abdullah and others the latter had no proprietary interest or title, so, under S. 65 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1826 Abdullah and others should not have been allowed by the Deputy Commissioner to open a separate account and, therefore, opening a separate account at the instance of a person without title followed by a revenue sale of such separate account cannot affect the interest of the defendants.appellants who acquired good and valid title on account of adverse possession for more than 12 years. Mr. Sen Gupta's answer as to not raising any objection at the time the notice under S. 65 in respect of the opening of a separate account was served is that as his clients were not recorded proprietors, they did not raise any objection as the objection could not be heard or gone into by the Deputy Commissioner under S. 65. This may be so. But it was open to his clients to file a suit under Art. 14, Limitation Act against the order of the Deputy Commissioner opening a separate account within one year of the said order and that was not done. But Mr. Sen Gupta points out that as Abdullah and others who opened the separate account No. 9 had no title the purchaser of the separate account at the revenue sale has no title either. This argument is not tenable for more than one reason. Although the defendant-appellants were not recorded proprietors, on their own showing they were in possession of the plots in question. So, according to S. 63 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation they were bound to pay the Government revenue. Section 63 of the said Regulation runs:

"Land revenue payable in respect of any estate shall be due jointly and severally from all persons who have been in possession of the estate or any part of it during any portion of the agricultural year in respect of which the revenue is payable."

Section 67 of the said Regulation runs:

'Land revenue not paid on the date when it falls due shall be deemed to be an arrear and every person liable for it shall be deemed to be a defaulter."

According to this section the defendants being in possession were defaulters. Further, Mr. Sen Gupta claims for his clients more than possession that is title by adverse possession long before the date of the revenue sale. The effect of this adverse possession of the defen. dant.appellants was to constitute them joint proprietors of the taluk in question; with the acquisition of that right they also incurred the corresponding liability, namely, to pay Government revenue. They were, therefore, in the position of defaulting proprietors whose interest was wiped out by the revenue sale. So by their default to pay the arrears of revenue, at the revenue sale, the purchaser got the right, title and interest of the defaulting defendant appellants free from all encumbrances. Vide the case of Mohim Chandra v. Pyari Lal, 44 Cal. 412: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal. 213) Section 70 of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation runs:

"Property sold under S. 70 shall be sold free of all incumbrances previously created thereon by any other person than the purchaser,"

Vide the case of Aftar Ali v. Brojendra Kishore, 24 C. L. J. 60: (a. I. B. (4) 1917 Cal. 326), and also the case of Jitendra Kumar v. Mohendra Chandra, 24 C.L.J. 62: (A.I.R. (4) 1917 Cal. 199).

[6] In the result this appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 47, R. 1—Application under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885) to set aside sale—Application allowed on condition of petitioner's depositing certain dues by certain date or upon failure, sale to stand confirmed—Petitioner not having knowledge of order—Relief against forfeiture—Court can grant relief upon merits by extending time.

An application under S. 174 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, for setting aside sale, was allowed upon condition that the petitioner should deposit costs and other dues by certain date, upon failure of which the sale was to stand confirmed. The order was passed in the chamber without the knowledge of the petitioner and without reference to his lawyer. The petitioner was a poor cultivator and lived nearly 35 miles away from the town wherein the Court was situated and the petitioner had no intimation from the pleader of the order passed by the Court:

[Para 2]

Held that the Court had power to grant relief against forfeiture, upon a proper application being made to it. The right of torfeiture in such cases was not beyond the scope of the application of the principle of equitable relief, and an application under O. 47. R. 1, Civil P. Order.—On an application under S. 174, cl. (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, by the judgment-debtor Misc. Case No. 165 of 1946 came to be started. This was disposed of on 22nd April 1947 when the following order was passed:

"Miscellaneous Case be allowed on contest with cost and pleader's fee at Rs. 4 on the condition of petitioner's depositing decretal dues with cost of execution by 30th April 1847. On the petitioner's making the deposit the sale will be set aside. If the petitioner fails to make the deposit within the time allowed Misc. Case shall stand dismissed and the sale will remain confirmed."

On the said date, however, namely 80th April 1947 an application was filed by the petitioner for extension of time. This application, was rejected on 1st May 1947 on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction to extend the time fixed for payment by its order dated 22nd April 1947. Another application for review under 0.47, R. 1, Civil P. C., was thereupon made on 10th May 1947. This application also was rejected on 27th September 1947 on the ground that the application under 8. 174 (3) had been finally disposed of already and the application under 0.47, Civil P. C., was, therefore, incompetent.

1950 Dacca/2b & 3a

In that view of the matter the other points in respect of the said application and the merits thereof were not gone into. It is against this order that the judgment-debtor, the applicant for review obtained the present rule.

(2) In the petition here, upon which the rule was issued, it has been stated that the order dated 22nd April 1947 was passed in the Chamber. without the knowledge of the petitioner and without reference to his lawyer; that the petitioner was a poor cultivator and lived nearly 35 miles away from the town of Comilla, wherein the Court was situated, that the petitioner had no intimation by the pleader of the order passed by the Court; that the petitioner had deposited the amount in the treasury on 12th May 1947 where the said amount was still lying. It is now urged by the learned Advocate for the petitioner that the view taken by the Court below that the application for review of the order dated 22nd April 1947 was incompetent and could not be entertained cannot be supported, and the decisions in the cases of Mahammad Asrafali v. Nabijan Bibi, 430. W. N 417: (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Cal, 591) and Girish Chandra Das v. Annadamanı Dasi, 43 C. W. N. 553: (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Cal. 309) are relied upon in support.

[3] It seems to me that the contention put forward by the learned advocate for the petitioner is well founded and that the Court in a case of this nature has authority to grant relief against forfeiture upon a proper application being made to it. The right of forfeiture in such cases is in my opinion, not beyond the scope of the application of the principle of equitable relief. In my view, the application under O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C., is not, therefore, incompetent and the Court ought to have considered whether on the merite the application should have been allowed and the petitioner given a reasonable time within which to make the payment. I accordingly set aside the decision of the learned Munsif and send back the case to be disposed of on the merits in accordance with law.

Birendra Kumar De - for Appellants. Tapendra Kumar Pal - for Respondent 1.

Judgment.—This appeal by the plaintiffs is against the decision of the Subordinate Judge of Jessore dated 24th December 1943 in a suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 2225-15-9 from the defendants and in the heading of the plaint it has been stated to be account Suit No. 16 of 1942 but from the prayer in the plaint it is clear that it is a simple suit for recovery of the sum mentioned above.

[2] The plaintiffs' case is a simple one. According to them, late Babu Jnanada Sankar Das Gupta, predecessor of the defendants, was appointed as law agent of the plaintiffs at Gopalganj in the district of Faridpur on 2nd January 1926. Jnanada Babu was also the pleader for the plaintiffs' estate at Gopalganj. Jnanada Babu acted as law agent till his death on 12th Magh 1345 B. S., corresponding to 26th January 1939. The duties of Jnanada Babu included the looking after all litigations on behalf of the plaintiffs' estate, sending the money realised to Sadar at Hatbaria, despatching a copy of the Rokor every month and submitting accounts from time to time. Jnanada Babu rendered accounts partially for the year 1339 B. S., but did not render any accounts from the year 1340 B. S. After his death, the plaintiffs could not get all the papers, but from the papers received by them, they laid the claim in the present suit at Rs. 2225-15-9 after deducting the amount that was due to Jnanada Babu, on account of his bills. The plaintiffs allege that Jnanada Babu by his neglect of duty, mal-feasance and non-feasance, has caused loss to the plaintiffs' estate and the defendants, who are his heirs, are bound to compensate for the loss to the extent of the assets left by Jnanada Babu in their hands. This suit has been instituted on 26th January 1942 as 25th January 1942 was a Sunday.

[3] Defendant 2 filed a written statement in the suit but did not appear at the trial. The other defendants 1 and 8 to 7 contested the suit by filing a written statement. The defendants contend that the suit is not maintainable as it is virtually a suit for accounts and that it is barred by limitation. The defendants further contend that the plaintiffs have withheld necessary papers and so the suit was not maintainable. The defendants denied that Jnanada Babu was guilty of neglect of duty, misappropriation, etc., and contended that if all the papers were produced, it would be found that the plaintiff's estate was indebted to Jnanada Babu.

[4] The learned Munsif, Sadar Jessore, held that it was not an account suit at all but a suit for recovery of a specified sum of money and so the suit was maintainable and that the suit was brought within 3 years of the death of Jnanada Babu, so was within time and Art. 115, Limitation Act applied to the case; and that the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover a sum of Rs. 1069-8-5 and corresponding costs from out of the assets of Jnanada Sankar Das Gupta in the hands of the defendants and the plaintiffs' suit was decreed in part. There was an appeal by the defendants and cross-objection by the plaintiffs in the Court of the District Judge of Jessore and the Learned Subordinate Judge of Jessore, who has heard the same, in a judgment which is remarkable for its lucidity, had held that the plaintiffs will be entitled to a decree for Rs. 752-4-5 only, but the learned Subordinate Judge has held that Art. 62, Limitation Act, applies to the case and as regards the claim under "Muktear Sherista" it is governed by that article and is barred because it is the common ground of both parties that all those moneys were received prior to 7th Aswin 1345 B. S. corresponding to 24th September 1938, which was clearly beyond 3 years of the institution of the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge has fur. ther held that as regards the claim of the plaintiff under "account Sherista" that is also barred by limitation on the facts because the date of demand for account and refusal is beyond three years of the suit and is, therefore, barred by limitation, either under Art. 62 or 89, Limitation Act and Art. 115. Limitation Act is not at all applicable. The learned Subordinate Judge has found also that there is no substance in the cross objection of the plaintiffs because in his view it is also barred by limitation under Art. 62, Limitation Act, and in the result he has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit in entirety.

[5] The plaintiffs are the appellants here and their learned advocate Mr. B. K. De made it quite clear at the opening that his clients would be satisfied with a decree for Rs. 752-4-5 only as found by the learned Subordinate Judge and he contended that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in his decision on the question of limitation and according to Mr. De the article applicable to the case was either art. 115 or Art. 120, Limitation Act. Mr. De in support of his argument referred to the case of Kumeda Charan Bala v. Ashutosh Chattopadhya, 17 C. W. N. 5: (16 I.C. 742) and incidentally to the case of Bindraban Behari v. Jamuna Kunwar. 25 ALL. 55: (1902 A. W. N. 191). Mr. Tapendra Kumar Pal for defendants respondents raised two contentions in supporting the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, firstly, that the present suit was not maintainable and secondly, that the suit was barred by limitation either under Art. 62 or 89, Limitation Act, and he cited before me the cases of Ramhari Kapali v. Rohini Kanta, 35 C. L. J. 320: (A.I.B. (9) 1922 Cal. 499) and Rameswar Singh v. Narendranath Das, A.I.B. (10) 1923 Pat. 259: 71 I. C. 916.

[6] Let me first consider the second contention of the learned advocate for the respondent as to the maintainability of the suit. The learned advocate says that the suit has been described in the cause title as an account suit and is in essence a suit for accounts against the legal representatives of a deceased agent, hence it is not maintainable.

[7] It is not disputed that Jnanada was an agent and he was liable for accounts. Section 213, Contract Act, provides that an agent is bound to render account to his principal on demand and this duty will be enforced by following in the hands of the agent the properties representing the money for which he ought to have accounted. and the liability to account is irrespective of any express contract to that effect. It is well settled on principle that the liability of an agent is personal and the deceased agent's legal representatives cannot be required to render accounts in the same sense in which the agent himself might have been called upon to do. The reason seems to me that the legal representatives of the deceased cannot be required to discharge the duty to explain matters of which they have no personal knowledge and they cannot assist the principal in the investigation of the management of his estate of which they are wholly ignorant and they cannot be asked to do that which does not lie within their power and they should not be required to do something which is impossible. The rights and remedies of the principal against the agent and on the death of the agent against his representatives are not identical and this is supported by the view taken by Wilson J. in Lawless v. Calcutta L. & S. Co., 7 cal. 627. A suit for account will lie if the defendant is under an obligation to account and an obligation to account arises only (i) if the person upon whom the obligation is sought to be imposed must have received some kind of property not belonging to himself, (ii) that the person seeking to impose the liability must be the owner or must have some title to that property as would enable him to recover it, (iii) that the defendant must have received the property in his possession and control and (iv) there must be fiduciary relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant. Now the legal representative of an agent does not stand in a fiduciary relationship. So a suit for account is not maintainable. Monmothanath Bose v. Basanta Kumar Bose Mullick, 22 ALL, 332: (1900 A. W. N. 98) is a case by a ward for accounts against bis guardian during his guardiansbip. Kumeda Charan Bala v. Ashutosh Chattopadhya, 17 C. W. N. 5:16 C. L. J. 282: (16 I. O. 742), is a suit by principal against legal representatives of an agent, Nobin Chandra v. Chandra Mathab, 44 Cal. 1: (A. I. B. (3) 1916 P. C. 148) and Bir Bikram Kishore v. Jadab Chandra, 40. C. W. N. 245: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 cal. 817), are suits by principal's legal representative against the agent. and Srish Chandra v. Supprovat Chandra, 44 C. W. N. 304 : (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 337), and Amiya Krishna v. Debendra Lal, 46 C. W. N. 865, the former is a suit against a trustee and the latter by a cotrustee against legal representative of his cotrustee.

[8] Then the question arises what is the remedy of the principal against the representatives of the agent. It is not at all tenable that the estate of the agent, who has not tendered accounts to his principal, escapes all liability in the bands of his representatives. It is equally well-settled that the remedy of principal in a case of this description is to sue the representatives of the agent for any losses he may have suffered by reason of the negligence, misconduct, misfeasance or mal-feasance of his agent; in other words, the suit is not one for accounts strictly so-called but a suit for money payable by the representatives of the agent out of his assets in their hands. The contention that the liability is personal and has expired, on the death of the agent is not well founded. A suit for recovery of the money misappropriated by a trustee or agent will lie against the legal representatives of the agent and in such a suit the decree will be against the assets of the deceased agent or trustee. A suit for recovery of a specified sum of money, however, does not assume the character of a suit for accounts merely because in the determination of the question in controversy accounts may have to be examined. The sole foundation for a suit for account is the obligation to account and where that does not exist, the suit for money cannot be regarded as a suit for accounts. Kshetranath Banerjee v. Kalidasi Dasi, 27 C. L. J. 96: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 1037). The law is well settled now that a case of this description is maintainable by the principal against the agent's legal representatives. Bindraban Bahari v. Jamuna Kumar, 25 ALL. 55: (1902 A. W. N. 191); Kumeda Charan Bala v. Ashutosh Chattopadhya, 17 C. W. N. 5: 16 C. L. J. 282 Sashi Sekhareswar Roy v. Hajirannessa Bibi, 28 C. L. J. 492: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 276); Bameswar Singh Bahadur v. Narendra Nath Das, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 259: 71 I. C. 916 and Sree Amiya Krishna v. Debendra Lal, 46 C. W. N. 865.

[9] In the light of these principles the plaint in this case has to be examined. I may say at the outset that both the Courts below have come to the right conclusion that the present suit is not a suit for accounts but one for recovery of money against the legal representatives of the agent Jnanada Babu. The plaint consists of 10 paras and the first prayer is for a decree for a sum of Rs. 2225-15-9 only with costs and the second prayer is for general or other relief. The plaint states how the sum claimed in the suit has been arrived at. So on a reading of the plaint one comes to the only conclusion that it is a suit for recovery of money and not for accounts. It is true that the suit has been described at the heading as an account suit and this appears to me, as has been pointed out by the trial Court, that it is a mistake which has been committed by the office of that Court. In construing the plaint, I must look to the substance and not to the form. I hold that this is not an account suit at all but a suit for recovery of money. So the first branch of argument of Mr. Pal on his second contention fails. As regards the second branch of the argument of Mr. Pal on his second contention, I have already pointed out the law on the subject and the principle governing a case like the present one instituted by the principal against the legal representatives of his agent and I hold that this suit for recovery of a specified sum of money against the representatives of the deceased agent and for a decree to recover the said sum from out of the assets of the agent Jnanada Babu in the hands of the defendants is maintainable. So the second branch of the second contention of Mr. Pal is not well-founded and is without any substance.

[10] The main question, which has been seriously argued by the learned advocates of both parties, is the question of limitation. In the facts of this case and in view of the findings, I am clearly of opinion, that the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived at a right conclusion, and I am unable to give effect to the contention of Mr. B. K. De for appellants and I hold that Mr. Tapendra Kumar Pal, advocate for the respondent, is right in his contention that the suit is governed by Art. 62, Limitation Act. I may point out at the beginning that there has been divergence of judicial opinion in different and same High Courts on the point whether in a case like the present, Art. 62 or 89 will apply or as contended by Mr. De Art. 115 or 120, Limitation Act will apply. In determining this question of limitation, one will have to keep in view the definition of "defendant" in the Limitation Act which is in S. 2 (4) and it is in the following terms :- " 'Defencant' includes any person from or through whom a defendant derives his liability to be sued." I shall have to keep in view also the language in Arts. 62, 89, 115 and 120, Limitation Act, which are as follows:

Article 62:

For money payable Three by the defendant to years, received. the plaintiff for money received by the defendant for the plaintiff's use.

When the money is

Article 89:

By a principal Three moveable property received by the latter and not accounted for.

When the account is against his agent for years, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused or, where no such demand is made, when the agency terminates.

Article 115:

For compensation Three contract, express or implied, not in writing registered and herein specially provided for.

When the contract for the breach of any years, is broken, or (where there are successive breaches) when breach in respect of which the suit is instituted occurs, or (where the breach is continuing) when it ceases.

Article 120 :

Suit for which no Six When the right to period of limitation is years. sue accrues. provided elsewhere in this schedule.

[11] To decide the point of limitation, I shall bave to recapitulate certain facts. Juanada Babu, predecessor of the defendants, was the law agent of the plaintiffs from 2nd January 1926 till his death on 12th Magh 1845 B. S. corresponding to 26th January 1939. It is also an admitted fact that Juanada Babu rendered accounts to the plaintiff partially for the year 1839 B. S., and the present suit was for recovery of a sum of Rs. 2,225-15-9 from the defendants, the heirs and legal representatives of Juanada Babu. The present suit has been filed on 26th January 1942 as 25th January 1942 was a Sunday. It is common ground between the parties and also found by the learned Subordinate Judge that all the money that is claimed by the plaintiffs under the Muktear Sheresta was received by Jnanada Babu prior to 7th aswin 1845 B. S. corresponding to 24th September 1938. The learned Subordinate Judge says as follows:

"It is in evidence in this case that demands were made from Juanada Babu during his life time for a sum of Rs. 2,226 entered in the rokar Ex. 2Z (17). There can, therefore, be no doubt that the cause of action arose with effect from the date of this demand, which was made prior to the death of Jnanada Babu. Even if it was made one day before the death of Juanada Babu, the suit would be barred. I found that the disregard made by Jnanada Babu of the demand amounted to his refusal. I find therefore, that the plaintiffs' claim under the account Sherista is also barred by limitation. In this case the breach occurred at the time when the demand was made and the demand was not satisfied."

[12] The contention of Mr. De for the appellant is that Art. 115 applies as held in the case of Kumeda Charan v. Ashutosh Chattopadhya, 17 C. W. N. 5: 16 Or. L. J. 282 or Art. 120 ap. plies as held in Brindraban Behari v. Jamuna Kunwar, 25 ALL. 55: (1902 A. W. N. 191). The reason of Mr De is that the cause of action arose on the death of Juanada Babu on 26th January 1939 and this is a suit within 8 years from that date, so Art. 115 applies and the plaintiffs' claim is not barred by limitation. In that respect Mr. De is in a serious difficulty because it has been found by the Court of fact that there was demand and refusal during the lifetime of Jnanada Babu and so plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation. It is correct on principle as has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Harinath Chatterjee v. Mothoor Mohun, 20 I. A. 183: (21 Cal. 8 P. O.) and Khumlal v. Gobind Krishna, 88 I. A. 87: (33 ALL. 856 P. C.) that the intention of the law of limitation is not to give a right where there is not one, but to interpose a bar, after a certain period, to a suit to enforce an existing right. It is equally settled that when a cause of action accrues and limitation once commences to flow it will not cease to flow. Here, in the present case, the finding is that there has been a demand on 24th September 1938 and there was refusal during the lifetime of Juanada Babu and if that refusal was even one day before his death the suit would be barred even under Art. 115, Limitation Act. The only other argument of Mr. De is that Art. 120, Limitation Act, applies. But I do not find any reason how this article is applicable when there are other articles governing a case like this. Mr. De's other branch of argument is that Art. 89 does not apply as the suit is not against the agent but against his representatives. But I cannot uphold this contention. The cause of action here began not on the death of the agent on 26th January 1989 but on 24th September 1938 when there was demand and refusal, as found by the lower appellate Court and that finding is binding on me in second appeal, hence in any view the suit is beyond three years. The case of Bindraban Behari v. Jamuna Kunwar, 25 ALL. 55: (1902 A. W. N. 191), is cited. That was a suit by the plaintiff against the sons of a pleader, who collected plaintiff's money. There it was argued that Art. 62 or Art. 89 applied but that contention of the plaintiff was overruled on the ground that the suit was not against the pleader but as against the pleader's representative, and the right to sue did not accrue when the money was received by the pleader but when it was received by the son and on the death of the pleader, and as the suit was within six years of the receipt of money by the father it was in time. This case in my opinion has not been correctly decided and in no way can Art. 120 be applicable as there are other articles in the Act, applicable to that class of cases. In that case the definition of 'defendant' in S. 2 (4), Limitation Act, has been overlooked. According to the definition the defendant includes any person from or through whom a defendant derives his liability to be sued. To the similar effect is also the decision of Rao Girraj Singh v. Rani Raghutir Kunwar, 31 ALL. 429: (2 I. C. 118), and that was a suit against the sons and grandsons of the agent and it was held that Art. 120 applied. There also the definition of defendant in S. 2 (4), Limitation Act, was overlooked. The case of Bindraban Behari v. Jamuna Kunwar, 25 ALL. 55: (1902 A. W. N. 191), has been dissented from in Parthasarthi Appa Rao v. Subba Rao, 50 Mad. 249: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 157) and in Ramhari Kapali v. Rohini Kanta, 35 C. L. J. 330:(A.I.B. (9) 1922 Cal, 499) and the case of Rao Girraj Singh v. Rani Raghubir Kunwar, 31 ALL. 429: (2 I. C. 118), has been dissented from in the case of Deorao Zolba v. Laxman-Singh, I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 470 : (A. I. B. (30) 1943 Nag. 227) and I respectfully agree with the aforesaid decisions of the Calcutta, Madras and Nagpur High Courts. The decision of the Calcutta, Madras and Nagpur High Courts seems to be in accordance with well-established principles.

[13] Now if the principal sues his agent during latters' life-time after the termination of the agency, or when the accounts are demanded and refused and the defendant agent dies during the pendency of that litigation, then the suit could be continued against the legal representatives. The next position is where the agent dies after the termination of the agency or where there is a demand and refusal in the agent's life-time. In that event the cause of action will accrue during agent's life-time and limitation once having commenced to run will not cease to run by reason of the death of the agent. In that event, the agent's representatives can be sued after his death because the cause of action cannot alter by reason of the agent having died. The third position is where the agency terminates on the death of the agent. I find no reason why the rule should be different in this case. Again when the case is looked at the other way round, there is no doubt as to what the law is because as has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Nobin Chandra v. Chandra Malhab, 44 Cal. 1: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. U. 148) and Bir Bikram Kishore V. Jadab Chandra, 40 C. W. N. 245: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 817), where it has been held that the suit by the principal's legal representatives is governed by Art. 89, Limitation Act. Though it is a converse case, to the present one, the principle appears to me to apply. The cases where art. 89 has been applied as against the legal representatives of the agent are numerous and I may mention Parthasarathi Appa Rao v. Subba Rao, 50 Mad. 249: (A. I B. (14) 1927 Mad. 157), where reasons given in the case of Kumeda Charan v. Ashutosh Chattopadhya, 17 C. W. N. 5:16 C. L. J. 282, have been considered and have not been followed. The decision in the case of Parthasarathi Appa Rao v. Subba Rao, 50 Mad. 249: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 157), has been followed in the case of Bir Bikram Kishore v. Jadav Chandra, 40 C. W. N. 245 : (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 817), where it has been held that art. 89, Limitation Act, applies to a suit for accounts brought by the principal against his agent as also to a suit brought by the legal representative of the principal against his agent. That Art. 89 applies to suit by a principal against the legal representatives of the agent has also been held in the case of Deorao Zolba v. Laxmansingh Bania, I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 470: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Nag. 227), Mt. Piari v. Kashi Prasad, 23 Luck, 65 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 Oudh 51) and Rameswar Singh v. Narendranath Das, A. I. B. (10) 1923 Pat. 259: 71 I. C. 916. I respectfully agree with the aforesaid decision and do not agree with the decision in Kumeda Chandra Bala v. Ashutosh Chattopadhya, 17 C. W N. 5: 16 C. L. J. 282 for the reason that case overlooks the definition of 'defendant' in S. 2 (4), Limitation Act. Moreover, as I have said that in the present suit the cause of action arose before the death of Jnsnada Babu and so the present suit filed on 26th January 1942 is clearly barred by three years rule of limitation in Art. 89, Limitation Act. In this connection I may refer to a passage in Brindaban Behari v. Jamuna Kunwar. 25 ALL. 55 at p. 55 : (1902 A. W. N. 191), where it has been held that a fresh cause of action arose upon the death of the father, that the suit against the sons would not fall under Art. 89, Limitation Act, because the suit was not against the agent but against his legal representative. With all respect, I must dissent from the view and it can be pointed out that the Limitation Act classifies suits according to their 'description' and that a suit of the description referred to in Art. 89 may be brought against the legal representative of the agent as well as against the agent bimself. The case of Kumeda Charan Bala v. Ashutosh, 17 O. W. N. 5: (16 I. C. 742), is based on the case reported in Bindraban v. Jamuna Kunwar, 25 ALL. 55: (1902 A. W. N. 191), and as I dissent from that decision, I respectfully also disagree with the decision in Kumeda Charan Bala v. Ashutosh, 17 C. W. N. 5 : (16 L. 0.742), cited above.

[14] Then only one other question remains, namely, whether Art. 89 applies to this case or Art. 62 applies. My answer is that Art. 62 applies because the suit here is one for recovery of money only from the legal representatives and in this view I am supported by the decision of Ramhari Kapıli v. Rohini Kanta, 35 C. L. J. 380 : (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 499) and the case of Rameswar Singh v. Narendra Nath Das, A. I. B. (10) 1923 Pat. 259 :71 I. C. 916 and respectfully following the said decisions I hold that the present suit is governed by Art. 62, Limitation Act, and in that view I find that the present suit of the plaintiffs is clearly barred by limitation.

[15] As the only contention of Mr. De for the appellants fails, the result is that this appeal is dismissed. In the circumstances of this case I direct that the parties will bear their own costs upto this Court. Leave asked for and is refused.

Sashi Bhusan Das - Petitioner v. The Crown.

Cri. Miso. Case No. 47 of 1949, D/- 2-12-1949.

Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 498 - Sessions Judge directing that accused was to remain on bail as before - Magistrate avoiding or circumventing order -Contempt -Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 1.

Where a Sessions Judge directs that the accused was to remain on ball as before, the Magistrate is not justified in enhancing the bail or in demanding a fresh bail bond, to do so is to avoid or circumvent the order of the superior Court which amounts to a contempt of Court. [Paras 2, 5 and 7]

R. C. Talukar - for Petitioner; S. Afsal, Deputy L egal Remembrancer _ for the Crown.

Ellis J. - In this matter the Court was moved by Babu Sashi Bhusan Das, a pleader, ordinarily practising in Gaibandha in the district of Rangpur, who appeared in person. He filed a petition which, stripped of all its offensive irrelevancies, charged 2 Magistrates of Gaibandha -Mr. M. A. Muttalib, Sub-divisional Magistrate, and Mr. R. A. Khan a Lawyer Magistrate of Gaibandha, with contempt of the Sessions Court at Rangpur. On his petition a Rule was issued on each of the Magietrates to show cause why proceedings should not be taken against them for contempt of Court. The relevant records were called for.

[2] We propose to deal first of all with the case of the Sub-divisional Magistrate, Mr. M. A. Muttalib, and the relevant record in his case is Ori. Case No. 1039 of 1948 which was instituted on a complaint filed on 18-10-1948. The complainant was one Surendra Nath Chakrabarty, and on his complaint and after his examination on solemn affirmation Mr. M. A. Muttalib issued warrants of arrest under 8. 406, Penal Code, against 3 persons, Jagabandhu Saha, Jagat Behari Saha and Nikunja Behari Saha. On 20 10-1948, Jagabandhu Saha and Nikunja Behari Saha both appeared in the Court of the District Magistrate and, in the absence on tour of the District Magistrate, Mr. F. Azim acting on his behalf directed that they were to appear before the S. D. O., Gaibandha on 16-11-1948 furnishing bail of Rs. 300 each. On 25-10-1948, Jagat Hari appeared before the District Magistrate and the order in his case was :

"Let him appear before S. D. O., Gaibandha on 16-11-1948. He may give bail of Rs. 300. Send papers to the S. D. O."

On 26-10-1948, Jagat Behari appeared before Mr Muttalib who recorded the following order: "Seen the order of the learned D. M. Accused Jagat Behari may appear on 16-11-1948 on a bail of Rs. 300."

As is not unusual in cases under S. 406, Penal Code, the petitioners moved the Sessions Judge to have the proceedings against them quashed. It appears that one of them, Jagat Behari was acting on behalf of the others. The learned Sessions Judge on 11-12-1948 passed an order declining to make a reference to this Court and directing that the petitioner was to remain on bail as before as granted by the D. M. In spite of this order, on 15-1-1949 when the accused again appeared before Mr. Muttalib, the Sub. divisional Magistrate, he stepped up the bail from Rs. 300 to Rs. 5000, and called upon the accused to find bail to that amount.

[8] At first the learned Magistrate showed cause in a written petition in which he argued with sophistic equivocation, unworthy of one in his position, that the words "on bail as before" did not mean "on the same amount of bail as before" and so he was justified in enhancing the bail from Rs. 300 to Rs. 5000. Subsequently, better thoughts prevailed and the learned Magistrate admitted his error and tendered an unconditional apology.

[4] The next case is the case of Mr. R. A. Khan, Lawyer Magistrate of Gaibandha. The case in which he is concerned is G. R. Case No. 827 of 1948 pending in this Court. The accused in that case one Khichiruddin was before the S. D. O. Mr. Muttalib in custody on 12-12-1948. A bail petition was moved and the learned Sub-divisional Magistrate directed that pending a further report from the investigating officer the accused could be released on bail of Rs. 100. On the next date, 15-12-1948 a charge-sheet was received against Khichiruddin under S. 379, Penal Code, and Mr. Muttalib transferred the case to Mr. R. A. Khan, Lawyer Magistrate for disposal. When the case went before this Magistrate, he was obviously firmly of opinion that the accused should not be allowed bail, rejected a petition asking for him to be enlarged on bail and sent him to hajat. The Magistrate was clearly annoyed when the accused went to the Sessions Judge and obtained from the Sessions Judge an order releasing him on bail on certain conditions. The Magistrate's irritation is to be seen in his order of 6-6-1949, in which he comments on the fact that accused was a pickpocket having a previous conviction, and that though his Court did not grant bail to the accused, the learned Sessions Judge had granted bail. The learned Magistrate would do well in his orders to avoid any criticism, either express or implied, of his superior Court.

[5] This, however, is not the worst. The accused once more moved the learned Sessions Judge and obtained from the Sessions Judge on 2-7-1949 an order upsetting the order of the Magistrate cancelling bail. The order of the learned Sessions Judge is in the following language:

"I do not consider in the circumstances stated that the bail should be cancelled. The petitioner will continue on the same bail as before"

This order is dated 2-7-1949. Two days later when the case came up befor Mr. R. A. Khan again, he recorded the following order:

"Seen the order of the learned Court of Session. The accused will continue on the same bail as before. The accused, therefore, may find a fresh bail bond of the same amount and nature as before — in default to hajat to the date fixed."

It only needs to be added that the fresh bail bond was at first rejected on the ground that the surety was unfit, and the Magistrate told the Court Sub-Inspector to take necessary steps to move the Sessions Judge to have the bail cancelled.

[6] Mr. R. A. Khan submitted an explanation of his conduct. After matching the petitioner in his offensive irrelevancies, the Magistrate argues on his own behalf that the words "in the same bail as before" do not mean "on the same bail bond as before," and therefore, he was entitled to demand, and if he thought fit to reject another bail bond. We can only describe this argument as a piece of pettifogging chicanery unworthy of any Magistrate. Mr. Khan had subsequently second and better thoughts and submitted an unqualified apology.

[7] In these circumstances we accept the apologies and discharge the Rules with an expression of our grave disapproval of the conduct of the two Magistrates concerned. We trust that in future these Magistrates will loyally carry out the orders of their superior Court and not seek either to avoid or circumvent them.

[8] Let a copy of this judgment be sent to the Chief Secretary to the Government of East Bengal with the observation that in our opinion it is undesirable that the two Magistrates concerned shall remain in the same district as the Sessions Judge whose orders they have flouted.

[9] Espahani J.—I agree.
